Of course, all of this is moot if the Sheriff is not based on a real person -- and he almost certainly is not; see the note on Stanza 15.

And yet, there is another interesting point: In the early stages of the Hundred Years' War, the English feared French raids, and set up local defence systems. The local sheriffs were responsible for this (Hewitt, p. 5). Most of the sites places under defence were on the English south coast (Hewitt, p. 6) or East Anglia (Hewitt, p. 3). But there was also a warning issued in Holderness (Hewitt, p. 6). Could some side effect of this have been what caused Robin or John to turn against the sheriff?

I do have to mention one minor conceit of my own. It is well-documented that one of the seminal visions which led J.R.R. Tolkien to produce The Lord of the Rings and his other works. In a glade in Roos, he saw his wife dancing, and it gave him the vision of the tale of Beren and Luthien
(Shippey, p. 244; Pearce, p. 205, quotes Tolkien's own description of the event), the most beloved of all the tales of Middle-Earth to its author. Roos happens to be very close to Holderness. Is it possible that this spot inspired two of the three greatest myth-cycles of English history? (Those of Robin Hood and Tolkien's Middle-Earth; obviously the origin of Arthur was elsewhere.)

 Stanza 149/Line 595  "Reynold Greenleaf." Later on, in stanza 293, we meet a Reynold who is a member of Robin's band. Why, then, does Little John borrow his name? This is never explained. My personal conjecture is that some lost list said that Reynold was part of Robin's band (Child prints an item from Ravenscroft which might somehow be related), but no tale existed of him, so the creators of two of the component poems of the "Gest" included him in the band in difference guises, and the compiler of the "Gest" never straightened it out. But this is only conjecture. Knight/Ohlgren suggest on p. 182 that there was a ballad of Reynold serving the sheriff, which the compiler of the "Gest" took over and, presumably, transferred to Little John, leaving a few inconsistencies such as this one. Clawson, p. 64, attributes this suggestion to Fricke and thinks this may not have been a Robin Hood ballad but just a ballad of someone infiltrating the household of an enemy.

Cawthorne, p. 163, offers a third suggestion, which is quite interesting: That "Reynold Greenleaf" was rhyming cant for "thief." But has rhyming cant been shown to exist in the North at this time? Pollard, p. 175, notes the fascinating fact that a man named "Greneleff" was accused of acting like Robin Hood in 1503. Knight/Matheson, p. 188, mentions the same fellow, although dating it to 1502 (and reprinting the relevant chronicle entry). But this is surely too late to have influenced the "Gest" -- perhaps Greenleaf took his name based on the same forgotten legend as the one which the Gest's author was using? Dobson and Taylor, in fact, suggest on p. 4 that he took the name from the "Gest," and Ohlgren is open to the possibility.

 Stanza 149/Line 596  "When I am at home." This is one of the few instances of a line where we might see northern dialect influence: "dame" in the second line should rhyme with "hame," not "home."

The verse reminds me a little of "The Great Silkie of Sule Skerry" [Child 113], which involves, in a sense, another example of a man incognito, but that song is probably much more recent than the "Gest."

 Stanza 150/Line 600  The Sheriff of Nottingham offers Little John "Twenty marke (20 marks) to thy fee." A mark is two-thirds of a pound, so this is thirteen and a third pounds per year. Recall that, in the reign of Edward III, a knight's fee was forty pounds, or sixty marks, a year! (See note on Stanza 45.)

Holt1, p. 122, cites an instance of a household yeoman (valet) earning two pounds a year. Hunter said that valets at the court of Edward II received three pence a day (Child, p. 55; cf. Holt1, pp. 122-123); this was also the wage of a foot archer in Edward III's wars (Hewitt, p. 36). This is 1095 pence per year, or not quite seven pounds. Seward, p. 269, says that "minor gentry, merchants, yeomen, and important artisans" could expect to earn from 15 to 20 pounds in 1436; a plowman made only 4 pounds per year. But this is after substantial inflation, plus a major increase in wages for the lower classes following the Black Death (a plowman before the plague earned between 10 shillings and a pound per year).

Hence to offer a servant twenty marks, in the period before 1350, was to offer a fee far above the prevailing rate (and, of course, is even more absurd if we go back to the period of Richard and John). Wages rose dramatically, and rents fell, after the Black Death (Pollard, p. 20; Kelly.J, pp. 205-206), but the amount still seems excessive even by post-plague standards. (Unless, by some wild chance, the source of this is Scottish, and the reference is to Scottish marks, which were only a fraction of English. But then the amount seems too small.)

The likeliest explanation is an anachronism; at some time in the history of the poem, the pay was adjusted to a fifteenth century rate. But if we assume the reading is old, we note that twenty marks is roughly what a man-at-arms was paid to serve in the foreign armies of Edward III (Ormrod, p. 141, states a man-at-arms as earning a shilling a day; Hewitt, p. 34, says that a man-at-arms earned 6 pence a day -- which happens to work out to almost exactly 20 marks in a year). Could the Sheriff of Nottingham be recruiting soldiers? If so, nothing comes of it, since John's brief service is all served in England. Bottom line: such a large fee would imply a date after the reign of Edward I -- ideally, one after the Black Death, when wages rose.

 Stanzas 151-1522/Lines 601-606  "The sherif gate Litell John Twelue monethes of the knight." Could it really be that simple? Would the sheriff, who presumably was the sheriff who was present when the knight and Little John repaid the abbot, not have seen what was going on? Would he hire John under those circumstances -- and would the knight be in position to consent so freely? On the face of it, we might suspect that a stanza or two is missing here.
Of course, there is another possibility, if we assume that Little John was in fact the knight's watchdog (see the note to Stanza 80). The knight might have desired to be rid of his shadow -- or John might have been satisfied that the knight was honest, and they could have agreed that he could go on to other activities.

For "courtesy" see the note on Stanza 2.

 Stanza 152/Line 608  The Sheriff gives John a "gode hors." Edward III began to use mounted archers in 1330 (Chandler/Beckett, p. 19), and used them regularly on his campaigns in France -- this was one of the secrets of his success: He mounted not only the knights but the soldiers who would fight as infantry. This let his army move much faster than one which combined horsemen and infantry. If in fact the Sheriff is recruiting John for an expedition (see note on Stanza 150), he would indeed need a horse.

 Stanza 155/Line 618  The sheriff goes hunting -- seemingly in the forest, and seemingly for a hart (see note on Stanza 185). This is curious, since on its face this appears to be a violation of the forest laws against taking venison. It is true that the King sometimes granted exceptions -- but these were very limited. Young, p. 133, reports that in the final ten years of Henry III's reign (i.e. 1262-1272), that king granted rights in Sherwood Forest to take ten harts and three hinds of red deer and 61 bucks and 12 does of fallow deer. The restrictions under Edward I were even stiffer; from 1272-1287 he granted only one hart, 61 bucks, and 43 does. Does this mean that the sheriff was violating the law with his hunt?

 Stanza 156/Line 624  There is uncertainty about the text here (see textual note), but no question that a cranky Little John demands to be fed. This demand begins the quarrel which eventually causes Little John to fight, and then recruit, the cook.

 Stanza 159/Line 633  For courtesy, which the butler does not show, see the note on Stanza 2.

 Stanza 163/Line 650  Clawson, pp. 69-70. speculates on why the cook (as opposed to the butler or other household servant) becomes the hero in this part of the saga. He mentions a parallel to the story of Hereward, and also that there were other tales of heroic cooks, although he cites no examples that seem likely to be well-known to English audiences. Cooks are commonly mentioned in folk song and lore (because sailors and cowboys and such were so dependent on their skills), but these mentions are generally much more recent than the "Gest."

 Stanza 164/Line 654  It is not certain whether the last word of this line should be "hyne" or "hynde"; see the textual note. Knight/Ohlgren gloss "shrewed hynde" as "cursed servant" and do not even note the variant.

There is the faint possibility that "hynde/hinde" should be read as "hind," the female red deer, but this is extremely unlikely. The word intended is probably hyne/hine, a Middle English word not found in Chaucer but fairly common in other thirteenth and fourteenth century texts. It goes back probably to Old English hine, from hiwan, household, or higa, member of the household. The exact sense varies slightly; Sisam interprets it as servant/laborer; Emerson, p. 384, offers servant/domestic; Turville-Petre, p. 236, servant/farm-worker; Sands, p. 385, servant; Langland/KnottFowler, p. 274, peasant/servant; Langland/Schmidt, servant/thing of low worth. Thus the sense might be of a peasant who wasn't up to his job.

Every one of these sources spells it "hyne" or "hine," without a d, but Emerson notes that "hynde" was a dialect version of the word. Thus the usage might tell us a little about the point of origin of the various texts, but this is far from sure.

 Stanza 168/ Lines 669-672  Little John and the cook fight for as long as it takes to walk two miles (probably about 40 minutes, although it might be anything between half an hour and an hour depending on the burdens the walkers carried), then "maintained" the fight for an hour. This is a quite exceptional period to be actually engaged in swordplay -- most medieval battles lasted only a couple of hours, usually with pauses. Supposedly the Battle of Evesham in 1265, which Baldwin would have us believe involved Robin, lasted two hours (Burne, p. 170). The Battle of Crecy in 1347, the greatest of Edward III's battles, technically lasted about six hours (Seward, p. 66), but it involved almost no hand-to-hand contact. Ross-War, pp. 123-125, says that the battle of Barnet in 1471, which began at sunrise, was over before the morning mist burned off, and many of the soldiers were not engaged for large parts of the battle. Thus for two men to fight hand-to-hand for nearly two hours is an astounding feat. It is surprising that we do not hear more of the cook in the rest of the "Gest," given his prowess. It seems evident that this scene floated in from another tale, which presumably ended with the cook joining the band; there was nothing more to say about him.

Clawson, p. 66, does point out that many of the "Robin Hood meets his match" type ballads involve extended fights of this type -- another indication that this tale came from an earlier source.

 Stanzas 170-171/Lines 679-682  "Two times in the yere thy clothing chaunged shuld be; And eyer yeare.. Twenty merke to thy fe." In other words, Little John offers the cook, whom he has been battling, twenty marks a year and two changes of livery. For the high fee of twenty marks, see the note on stanza 150; for the idea of livery, the note on stanzas 70-72. In stanza 420, we see Robin expecting to have two changes of clothing per year from the King.

 Stanza 174/ Line 695  The comment that the locks were of "good steel" is likely to be misunderstood by moderns. Carbon steels were known at this time, and sometimes someone would turn up an iron deposit with enough nickel or cobalt in it to make a fairly good steel -- but generally medieval steels were not as strong (or as corrosion-resistant) as modern steels. Plus, locks were generally rather primitive. Yes, they had keys, but the keys were not very fancy. Much of the security of medieval locks came from all the leaves and decoration which made it hard to even operate the things. These often produced weak points. It was a lot easier to smash even the best medieval lock than the modern equivalents.

 Stanza 176/Lines 704, 706  There is an interesting textual variant here (see textual note), but the correct reading is almost certainly that Little John and the cook took "Three hundred pounde and more" to Robin Hood "Under the grene wode hore," that is, "under the green wood hoar."

"Hore," modern "hoar," is the root word of "hoarfrost," and refers to a grey or white color. Hence, by implication, it means "old." Gummere, p. 317, claims it was a common word for a forest. Did Robin meet the sheriff under an old tree or under a grey tree? If the latter, it implies that the tree is without leaves, which in turn implies that the season is winter, or at least that it is early enough in spring that the leaves have not budded.

This despite the fact that Pollard, p. 57, says that the "Gest" takes place in "perpetual early summer"; Baldwin, p. 33, agrees, and speculates that the band must have scattered in winter. I would not consider this decisive (see the notes to Stanza 29 and 32-33; also the faint hint in Stanza 91 that it might be April) -- but it is hard to believe that the sheriff would go so far afield in winter. So the word probably means "old" in this context. There are living trees associated with Robin Hood (e.g. Holt prints a photo of the "Major Oak" in Sherwood), but any tree ancient enough to be considered old at the time of the composition of the "Gest" is almost certainly dead by now. Although Robin's tree is probably gone, there does seem to have been a "trystel tree," mentioned in stanzas 274, 286, 298, 387, 412, in the "Monk" (Stanza 37) and "Guy of Gisborne" and also, apparently, in Henry VIII's 1515 pageant (Pollard, pp. 52-53). Pollard on p. 53 claims that this requires that Robin be understood as an outlawed forester, but this strikes me as going beyond the data -- surely any band of outlaws will have a series of recognized meeting places!

There is the interesting question of just what "trystel" means. fg changed "trystel-tre" to "trustey tree," which is banal but perhaps possible. The word itself is rare, and (given the lack of Middle English spelling conventions) could be from several roots. Is it from "traist," "confidence" (Emerson, p. 450, compare Turville-Petre, p. 257, "traistis," "trust"); "trist," "appointed place, rendezvous" (Emerson, p. 451), whence our "tryst" (a word which we often think of as having sexual connotations, but which simply means a meeting place where secret things happen); or "tryste," "trust" (Emerson, p. 452)="truste," "trust" or "loyalty" (Dickins/Wilson, p. 315)? The essential meaning, however, is clear: A safe place to meet.

 Stanza 181/Line 361  Although the third fit is all about Little John and the sheriff, Clawson, p. 70, points out that it has two parts (which we might call "Little John in the Sheriff's Household" and "Little John Traps the Sheriff or some such), and that these two are not directly linked in any way. Clawson considers these two originally to have been independent stories, and this the dividing point (the latter being almost incontestible of the former assertion is true).

 Stanza 185/Lines 737-738  "a ryght fayre harte, His coloure is of grene." A green hart? And the sheriff bought this tale? (And from a deserter?) The problem was sufficient that Allingham, without manuscript evidence, proposed emending "of grene" to "full shene" (cf. Gummere, p. 317). But, of course, John is referring obliquely to Robin Hood, while trying to lure the Sheriff with the sight of a wonder; the "sixty... tyndes" -- that is, sixty tines, or forks in the antlers -- of the next verse are also intended to make the beast seem wondrous.

Might the green hart be a hint of another link to "Sir Gawain and the Green Knight?" (Again, probably not; Tolkien/Gordon, p. x, believe the green knight came from the legend of the green man, whereas here, based on stanza 188, Robin is the green hart. Still, it's interesting to see this use of the color green.)

Child, p. 53, notes that a disguised Fulk FitzWarren lured King John into a trap using a tale of a long-horned stag. Clawson, p. 74, points out other similarities to this tale, e.g. Fulk brings in his men to trap the king. Evidently Little John wanted to go that tale one better. There is a difference in the tales, however, as we see from Cawthorne, p. 113. In the Fulk version, Fulk disguises himself as a peasant -- a charcoal-burner (itself an illegal occupation within the bounds of a forest unless one had a warrant from the king; Young, p. 110). In the "Gest," John is incognito but does not use a new disguise.
The great hart -- that is, a buck with very large antlers -- was always the most desired trophy for a hunter; Pollard, p. 63, notes that they were becoming hard to find in the Middle Ages. (This, in fact, has happened again in the United States. In the Midwest, white-tailed deer ar so common as to be pests -- but because the rules favor hunting bucks over does, the population never goes down -- yet there are almost no large-antlered bucks left. The old males have been killed off, and the young ones are fathering the children.)

Clawson, p. 72, observes that we do find, in "Robin Hood and the Butcher" [Child 122], Robin himself, in disguise, offering to take the Sheriff to see his horned animals, which turn out to be deer. But the parallels are not close; in the "Gest," it is John, not Robin, who undertakes the deception, and John promises deer, not cattle. And the "Butcher" is widely felt to be a variation on the "Potter" andway, and is more recent than the "Gest."

See also the note on stanza 155 about the sheriff's right to hunt in the forest.

Stanzas 187-188/Lines 741-746  Little John professes to be afraid of the deer in the wood, and the sheriff insists on seeing them. Note that the sheriff, whatever the reasons for his dispute with Robin (reasons which we are never told), does not lack courage.

Stanzas 188-189/Lines 751-756  The capture of the sheriff. Note that Robin also captures the Sheriff in the "Potter" (Holt1, p. 34)

Stanza 191/Lines 762-764  Knight, p. 23, points out that the trick of having the Sheriff eat from his own silver also occurs in the Forresters version of "Robin Hood and the Sheriff," i.e. "Robin Hood and the Golden Arrow" [Child 152].

Stanza 192/Line 767  Robin grants the Sheriff his life "for the love of Little John." This is an interesting change from Stanza 15, where Robin gives specific orders against the Sheriff and John seemingly makes no objection. Could this be a different sheriff? This would likely be an indication of a late date, after it became the norm to change sheriffs regularly.

We see a similar situation in the "Potter," where again the sheriff is captured but spared. There, however, Robin spares the sheriff for the sake of his wife (Holt1, p. 34) rather than for the sake of Little John.

Stanza 202/Lines 805-806  Robin makes the Sheriff swear by his "bright brand," i.e. sword. Swearing by the sword is a well-attested phenomenon; known e.g. from Malory (e.g. when Lancelot defeats three knights who are attacking Sir Kay, he makes them swear on their swords to submit to the judgment of the court; Book VI, chapter xi; Malory/Rhys, p. 169).

Some have suggested that the oath on the sword goes back all the way to the time when great men had swords with names and histories. Pickering, p. 281, claims that "an oath made on a sword was once considered as binding as one made on a Bible." Normally, of course, we would expect a devout Christian like Robin to prefer an oath on the Bible -- but remember that Robin lived in a Catholic England in the era before printing. Even if Robin was literate (unlikely), Bibles were rare, and a complete New Testament (which required hundred of sheets of expensive parchment and months of scribal labor) would generally cost more than a sword. And Bibles were rarely seen outside religious foundations; even if they had been cheap, the Catholic Church didn't like lay people to read the Bible, or to see it translated into the vernacular. So a sword was surely his best bet for an oath.

Gummere, p. 317, observes that an oath upon the sword was still common lore in Shakespeare's day; see Hamlet, Act I, scene v, (lines 147-150 in RiversideShakespeare). Wimberly, p. 94, mentions three instances of swearing by or on swords in versions of other ballads: "Queen Eleanor's Confession" [Child 156], "The Bonnie House o Airlie" [Child 199], and "The Gypsy Laddie" [Child 200], although the motif is not present in all versions of any of those ballads. Note that when Robin kills the sheriff, it is with this same bright brand (Stanza 348). Robin then calls him untrue (Stanza 349). In stanza 305, however, Little John calls it a "browne swerde." In the final line of the stanza, Robin declares that the Sheriff shall swear not to harm him "by water ne by lande." Is this a hint that Robin is also a pirate? If so, the hint is not picked up -- although there was a Scottish ship Robin Hood. It's conceivable that this wandered in from the legend of Eustace the Monk, who was a pirate, or some other such story. Odds are, however, that this is simply an oath that rhymes well.

Stanza 204/Line 813  The sheriff swears an oath of friendship -- considered a very strong vow, at least unless one was a a king engaging in international diplomacy. (Some things never change....) For a possible consequence of this oath, see the note on Stanza 287.

Stanza 204/Lines 815-186  The text says that the sheriff was "as full of grene wode As ever was hepe of stone" -- he was as full of (fed up with) the Greenwood as was a "hepe" of stone. Knight/Ohlgren interpret "hepe" as "hip," a fruit, so the sheriff was as full as a fruit is with its seed (a suggestion going back to Ritson; cf. Dobson/Taylor, p. 93). But the ordinary meaning of "hepe" is "heap," just as you would expect, with a secondary meaning of "crowd, group, host." The more likely reading is that the sheriff was as full of the greenwood as a heap is full of stones.

Stanza 205/Line 819 Althouth we tend to think of Robin leading "merry men," there aren't many references to the merry men in the "Gest"; they are usually young men, yeomen, or Robin's meine. We do see "mery men" again in Stanzas 281, 316, 382, and the a text of 340; also his "mery meyne" in Stanza 262, and "mery yonge men" in 287.

Stanza 206/Lines 823-824 Robin fears that the Virgin is "wrothe with me, For she sent me nat my pay" (or so most editors; see the textual note).

Knight/Ohlgren, p. 159, say that "commercial interests" are invading Robin and his band, but this does not follow. Robin accepted the Virgin as surety on his loan to the knight; her failure to pay is thus a theological, not a monetary, issue. Robin uses the identical words in Stanza 235. Of course, all will turn out well....

Given the emphasis on the Virgin Mary in this section, I am tempted to suggest that Robin's meeting with the knight, and the repayment, might both have happened on one of the Mariological feast days. Davies, p. 349, lists these as:

- 2 February -- the Purification of the Blessed Virgin (Candlemass)
- 25 March -- the Annunciation
- 8 September -- the Birthday of the Blessed Virgin ("a very old feast," although the reason for the date is not known)

Of these, 8 September seems the most logical, since the weather in the day would still be fine, but it would be getting chilly at night, explaining the sheriff's uncomfortable night in stanza 200. It would also help explain Robin's three masses in Stanza 8.

I emphasize that this is purest speculation. There are no indications in the text that the events took place on a feast day.

Stanza 207/Lines 825-828 For the running account of Mary sending Robin his payment via the monk of St. Mary's Abbey, see the note on stanza 214.

Stanza 208 (and following) / Lines 209 (and following) Clawson, pp. 9-13, prints parallel texts of (most of) stanzas 17-44 with stanzas 208-251. The similarities between the two are too significant to be regarded as coincidence; clearly the poet designed them to be parallel. The more noteworthy similarities will be pointed up in the notes below.

Clawson, p. 15, follows Fricke in suggesting that one of these tales was originally an independent ballad, which was taken over by the author of the "Gest" and then duplicated. But on p. 16, he allows the possibility of two source ballads. As supporting evidence, Clawson points out on p. 16 that the story of Eustace the Monk has two versions of the tale of Eustace taking a traveller, one in which the victim tells the truth and is spared, while in the other, the man Eustace captures lies and is robbed. But, as Clawson points out, these incidents are told in very different ways; they cannot be seen as the direct inspiration of the "Gest's" account.

Clawson's considered suggestion, on p. 17, is that the tale of Robin and the Knight originally existed in a short (ballad?) version in which Robin captured the knight and then, being generous, paid off the Knight's debt. The difficulty with this suggestion is that we have no evidence, in any extant source prior to Ritson, of this theme of Robin giving to the poor.

Stanza 209/Lines 832-833 "Sayles"and "Watlynge-Street." See note on stanza 18.

Stanza 212/Lines 845-848 Note the precise parallel in stanza 20 to the language about seeking a victim. The parallel extends to the first line of stanza 213 (but see the next note)

Stanza 213/Line 850 In the parallel in stanza 21, instead of observing the highway, John and his men observe a "derne [secret] strete." See the note on stanza 21. See also the tale of "Schimpf und Ernst," about the robbing of a monk to pay another man's debt; this is summarized in the notes to stanza 65.

Stanza 213/Line 852 Here again we see men riding palfreys, as in Stanzas 75-77. Of course, monks were not fighters, so it is less surprising to see them riding a type of horse usually associated with a woman.

Stanza 213/Line 851 Child, p. 53, notes that the "black monks" are Benedictines -- possibly significant, because the Benedictines were "the richest and most worldly" order of monks (Pollard, p. 131). And, yes, St. Mary's was a Benedictine house (Pollard, p. 124). I note in addition that Edward I, his wife Eleanor of Castile, and Edward II had Dominican confessors; Phillips, p. 65. On p. 73 Phillips tells of a Dominican priory founded by Edward. Phillips, p. 507, notes that the London Dominicans were so close to Edward II that, when London turned against the King, the monks felt it necessary to flee. After Edward's deposition, many Dominicans seem to have been involved in trying to bring him back (Phillips, p. 545). So it's possible that the Dominicans were the pro-Edward friars, which might make the Benedictines the allies of the anti-Edward party. But this is an extremely long stretch. The Benedictines were well established in Yorkshire -- the first Benedictine monasteries in England may well have been those founded at Ripon and Hexham, by Wilfred of York in the late seventh century (Oxford Companion, p. 95).

It is ironic to note that Eustace the Monk, considered to be a source of the "Gest," was a Benedictine (Cawthorne, p. 121), meaning that Robin was attacking a member of the order to which the hero of one of the source legends belonged.

It probably isn't very significant in the way Robin treats these monks, but I will note that Duns Scotus, the pioneer of extreme Mariolatry (see the note on Stanza 10) was associated with the Franciscans (WalkerEtAl, p. 349).

Ohlgren/Matheson, p. 166, notes as an apparent inconsistency the fact that we see two monks here, but after this, only one monk is mentioned. Of course, the junior monk might have fled with the guards, but we have no indication of this. Clawson, p. 19, cites several instances of the number shifting, and thinks(pp. 19024) the references to two monks represents a survival of an older ballad: In this ballad, Robin had robbed two monks; the compiler of the "Gest" took this ballad and mixed it up with elements taken from the tale of Robin and the Knight, producing a confused amalgam. It is a noteworthy point, particularly given other signs that the "Gest" is composite, but beyond proof.

 Stanza 214/Lines 853-856  This stanza is the first clear part of a running gag which occupies most of the fourth fit: That this monk of St. Mary's Abbey (stanza 233) has brought the payment of the loan for which the knight offered the Virgin Mary as guarantor. The monk of course would not see it this way, but in in stanza 207, John had told Robin he was sure the knight would pay; in this stanza, John suggests that the monk is bringing it; in stanza 236, John firmly states that "this monke it hath brought"; in 242 Robin agrees that the monk has brought it; and in 248 John counts the monk's money and finds that it is twice what the knight owes; "Our Lady hath doubled your cast." This causes Robin to affirm, in 249-250, that Mary is the truest woman and best security he has found. In 271, the knight shows up to pay the debt, and Robin refuses the gift, because Our Lady brought the payment.

 Stanza 215/Line 858  In Child's text, Little John tells his subordinates to "frese your bowes of ewe (yew)." There are several possible variants, but this is the most likely reading. What it means is another question; see the discussion in the textual notes.

 Stanza 216/Lines 861-862  The monk's company has seven "somers" -- i.e. sumpters, pack horses. Sumpters generally were not fast but could carry large burdens for a long time. At least two and probably three would be required to carry the eight hundred pounds of silver (stanza 247). That leaves four to carry the baggage of the company -- which would be substantial for a company of 52 guards, two monks, and two servants. This presumably would be mostly food, plus perhaps some spare arrows or such; the soldiers would carry their own clothing and weapons. Unless the company has carts (which are not mentioned), this means that they carried food for only about three days -- evidence that they would need money to buy food along the way.

 Stanza 219/Line 873  John orders, "Abyde, chorle monke." This is less an insult than it sounds today -- "churl" derives from Old English "ceorl," who was simply a peasant farmer. In Chaucer, e.g., it means both "common man"and "boor," but the former meaning is more common, in the opinion of Chaucer/Benson, p. 1228 (under "cherl"). But one thing is certain: it means a person at the bottom of the social scale. Many monks, especially senior monks, were in fact younger sons of aristocrats whose families had purchased them a comfortable position. By calling the lead monk a churl, John (who is said in Stanza 3 to be a yeoman) appears at minimum to be asserting superior social status. A modern equivalent might be something like, "Hold it right there, low--life." John will use "chorle" again, with stronger force, in Stanza 227.

 Stanza 222/Line 887  Note that Little John here calls Robin a "Yeoman of the Forest." This might, of course, mean simply "a yeoman who lives in the forest." But it was also an office in the Edwardian period; see the note on Stanza 1.

 Stanza 223/Line 889  Child's text says that Much had a"bolte" ready. There is a variant here (see the textual note); probably because the usage is imprecise; Ritson noted that a "bolte" from a bow was usually used to shoot birds (Gummere, p. 318); also, of course, crossbows fired bolts and longbows arrows. The text is probably correct, however, since an arrow could casually be called a bolt.

 Stanza 224/Line 895  The word "grome" appears twice in the "Gest," here and in Stanza 4. The meaning in stanza 4 is uncertain; here, it clearly means "groom." "Groom" was the lowest of three levels of servants in noble households in the late fifteenth century, the two above it being squire and yeomen (Dobson/Taylor, pp. 34-35; Pollard, p. 37; observe that "groom" was the only one which was never an independent social rank).

 Stanza 226/Lines 901-904  For Robin Hood and his hood, see the note to Stanza 29. Here, as there, the hood is simply used as a demonstration of courtesy (for which see Stanza 2): Robin is mannered enough to take off his hood. But in contrast to the well-mannered knight of Stanza 29, the monk has not the courtesy to remove his hood in response to Robin's gesture. He will call Robin uncourteous in stanza 256.

 Stanza 227/Line 905  For John's use of the word "chorle," see the note on stanza 219.

 Stanza 229/Line 915  Could Robin really have fed and supplied seven score men in Barnsdale? This is an astonishing number of outlaws -- but the poet will give this number several times (stanzas 288, 342, 389, 416, 448, and by implication in 342, where the reference is to seven score of bows, implying a similar number of bowmen). Possibly the number is derived from the tale of Gamelyn, where Gamelyn encounters seven score men in the forest when he and his brother's steward Adam flee there (Cawthorne, p. 171).

Ohlgren, on p. 154 of Ohlgren/Matheson, suggests instead that 140 is the approximate number of members of a guild at the time. This fits his suggestion that the poem is aimed at the guilds. Pollard, pp. 93-94, discusses outlaw bands in the fifteenth century and notes that large bands did not hold together -- men would join and leave in short order. Probably it is just a matter of the poet exaggerating again. But if we take it seriously, the time is obvious: The Scots wars of Edward II, when raiders and robbers were everywhere. At minimum, it must be before the Black Death; if it were after, there would be enough land available that there would be no need for hundreds of men to go off and be outlaws.

It is interesting that none of the references to this large band are in the section of the "Gest" devoted to Robin, the Knight, and St. Mary's abbey; all might derive from the other tales used by the author of the "Gest." In the take of Robin and the Knight, there are hints that Robin's only followers are Little John, Scarlock, and Much (see the notes on Stanzas 4 and 17).

 Stanza 230/Line 918  There is disagreement as to the meaning of "raye." Ritson suggested undyed cloth; Gummere, p. 318, prefers Halliwell's explanation "striped cloth," which is also accepted by Knight/Ohlgren. We might also consider the possibility of emending to something like "scarlet and rych arraye."

 Stanza 231/Line 921  For Robin's custom of washing before dinner, see the note on Stanza 32.

 Stanza 233/Line 932  The "Hye Selerer," or High Cellarer, was present when the knight went to St. Mary's (see the note to Stanza 93). This makes Stanza 239 particularly interesting.

 Stanza 235/Lines 939-940  These lines are the same as those at the end of Stanza 206; see the note there.

 Stanza 236/Lines 943-944  For the running account of Mary sending Robin his payment via the monk of St. Mary's Abbey, see the note on stanza 214.

 Stanza 237/Line 947  "A lytell money" -- clearly a joke; 400 pounds was a lot of money. See the note on Stanza 49.

 Stanza 239/Lines 955-956  The cellarer denies having heard of Robin's loan guaranteed by the Virgin Mary. Formally and legally, he is absolutely correct; he was not a witness to the meeting between Robin and the knight. But we know from Stanza 93 that the cellarer of St. Mary's was present when the knight paid the abbot. Unless a new cellarer has been appointed in the last year (possible, but unlikely, particularly in a story as well-worked-out as this), he should know about the loan to the knight. To give him his due, he might have no particular reason to recall that that little fiasco happened exactly a year before. But recall that Little John was serving as the knight's yeoman in Fit 2. Might not the cellarer have recognized him? (At least in fiction.)

 Stanza 240/Lines 959-960  "For Gode is holde a ryghtwys man" -- perhaps an echo of the Nicene Crede ("one Lord Jesus Christ, who for us men and for our salvation came down from the heavens and was made flesh of the Holy Spirit and the Virgin Mary, and became man") or even John 1:14 ("and the word became flesh and dwelt among us"). The righteousness of God is a very common theme in Paul (see, e.g. Romans 3:25-26). The righteousness of Mary ("his dame") is not explicitly stated in the New Testament, but is vaguely hinted at in the creeds.

The text of these lines is rather messed up; see the textual note.

 Stanza 242/Lines 965-966  For the running account of Mary sending Robin his payment via the monk of St. Mary's Abbey, see the note on stanza 214.

 Stanza 243/Line 969  As in Stanza 37, Robin asks his guest to tell how much money he is carrying; see the note on that stanza.

 Stanza 243/Line 971  The monk claims, falsely, to have only "twenty marke" -- 20 marks, or 13 and a third pounds sterling, or 3200 pence. This is, by interesting coincidence, the amount the Sheriff offered Little John in Stanza 150, and which Little John offered the cook (stanza 171). It is a significant sum, which would surely have been enough to take the Monk to London had he travelled with a small company.

But the monk had 52 men in his company (stanza 216), and he did not have enough horses to supply their needs for more than a few days (stanza 216 again). If we assume he is paying each one three pence a day (a suitable rate, and one which would allow them to buy their own food), that's 156 pence per day for the whole company. Even if we assume no expenses other than paying the company, that means that the entire 20 marks would be used up in 21 days. In practice, he would presumably have other expenses -- if nothing else, his own food and lodging, which we can assume would cost more than the guards'. Even if we assume that the monk was very cheap about such things (which would explain why most of the men abandoned him so easily), in practice 20 marks probably would not maintain the company for more than about ten days. To bring so many from Yorkshire to London (stanza 253) really calls for a budget of more than 20 marks; he just doesn't have enough reserve. So he stands convicted by implication from the start.

 Stanza 247/lines 985-986  Little John spreads his mantle "As he had done before" -- in stanza 42, when he counted the knight's money.

 Stanza 247/Line 988  The monk allegedly carried "eyght [hondred] pounde" -- 800 pounds. For this extremely high total, see the note on stanza 49. See also the textual note.

 Stanza 248/Lines 991-992  For the running account of Mary sending Robin his payment via the monk of St. Mary's Abbey, see the note on stanza 214. Here John jokes that the monk is true -- true not in his statement (Stanza 243) that he had twenty marks, but true in his delivery of Robin's pay.

Compare this to the factually accurate statement in Stanza 43 that the knight is "trewe inowre" because he had only the handful of change that he said he had.

Although I doubt that the poet was thinking of this, there is an interesting analogy to the account of Joseph in Egypt in Genesis 40. In that tale, Pharaoh's baker and butler are imprisoned for having displeased Pharaoh, and Joseph interprets their dreams, telling both that Pharaoh will "lift up your head." As John says the knight is true because he is true and the monk is true in a completely different sense, so Joseph tells the butler that Pharaoh will lift up his head and restore him (Genesis 40:13), but he will lift up the baker's head and hang him (Genesis 40:19).

In the final line of the stanza, b says the Virgin Mary has doubled Robin's "cast," fg read "cost."
This probably doesn't really mean "cost," since such usage is primarily modern, but even if it did, the reading of b is preferable -- Robin gambled on the knight's honesty (or on the Virgin's, if you will), as he might gamble on dice -- and he has been repaid double, as he might in gambling on dice.

 Stanza 251/Lines 1003-1004  Robin here promises to be "a friend" to the Virgin "yf she haue nede." Arguably she calls in this promise in stanza 336, where the knight's wife asks Robin for help
"For Our dere Ladyes sake."

 Stanza 252/Line 1005  Note that here Robin says that he will provide silver, but not gold, if the Virgin needs it. See the note on Stanza 49; it is somewhat curious to see silver promised here but gold paid out there.

 Stanza 253/Lines 1009-1012  Apparently the monk is being sent to London to try to get the King to deal with the Knight and give his lands to the abbot. (Something that formally should be done by Parliament with a bill of Pains and Penalties, but that's too complicated to put in a ballad.)
This is obviously similar to a portion of the plot of the "Monk," which also involves St. Mary's. Here, as there, the monk is intercepted -- in each case, by John and Much. But here there is no rescue, just a preemptive strike.

That the monk's action is a legal one is proved by the word "mote" in the second line of the stanza.
"Mote," or "moot" as we would usually spell it (think of "Entmoot," Tolkien fans), is a term
"constantly associated with law," according to Gummere, p. 318.

Clawson, pp. 21-22, thinks that stanzas 253-254 contradict each other somewhat, and are out of place after stanza 252. He would move 253-257 to a location around stanza 232. Clawson's arrangement makes sense, and could possibly have arisen if the common ancestor of our prints had an arrangement of five stanza per page and became disarranged, but I do not think the disorder enough to justify such a drastic change.

 Stanza 256/Line 1021  The text of this line is troublesome and probably damaged (see textual note); the sense is probably that Robin asks what, or how much money, the monk is carrying on another horse.

 Stanza 256/Line 1024  "That were no curteysye." For the importance of courtesy, see the note on Stanza 2; for Robin's courtesy to the Monk, see Stanza 226.

 Stanza 257/Lines 1026-1027  Could Shakespeare have known this little bit of casuistry?
Compare Falstaff's justification of his less-than-honourable ways: "Why, Hal, 'tis my vocation, Hal, 'tis no sin for a man to labor in his vocation" (1 Henry IV, I.ii, lines 104-105 in RiversideShakespeare).

 Stanzas 259-260/Lines 1035-1040  The monk has enough self-possession enough to try a little irony:, saying in effect, "The food is cheaper in Blythe and Doncaster." Robin, not to be outdone, in effect praises the abbot for sending such a profitable victim.

 Stanza 259/Line 1036  "Blith or...Dankestre", i.e. Blythe or Doncaster, for which see the note to Stanza 28. In this case, since we are absolutely certain the monk is going to London (stanza 253), this is strong evidence that the scene is Barnsdale, not Sherwood. This reinforces the sense that the knight was heading south in stanza 28.

 Stanza 263/Line 1049  Is this the palfrey Robin gave the knight in Stanza 77? We cannot say.

 Stanza 263/Line 1051  For courtesy see the note on Stanza 2. The knight again shows courtesy in 270.

 Stanza 265/Lines 1059-1060  Robin, having pretended that the monk was bringing the knight's money, perhaps continues the pretense here -- since Robin has been paid, the knight has no necessary reason to show up.

 Stanza 266/Line 1063  For the difficult problem of the "hye iustice" see the note on Stanza 93. Here, however, there is no textual variant.

 Stanza 268/Line 1069  There are very many problems with the text of this verse; several lines are probably missing. See the textual mote. Kittredge suggests that "a grefe" should be read as "a-grefe," in other words, don't take a grievance, don't hold a grudge.

 Stanza 270/Line 1079  Twenty marks of interest. See note on stanza 121.

 Stanza 271/Lines 1081-1084  For the story of Mary's repayment of the knight's loan, see the note on Stanza 214. This particular passage is reminiscent of the story of Joseph and his brothers in Genesis 42-44. Josph's brothers, jealous of the fact that he was his father's favorite, sold him into Egypt. There Joseph became the vizier. When famine hit Canaan, the brothers had to go down to Egypt for food. They brought money, but Joseph (who knew them although they did not recognize him) played a trick on them, causing the money to be placed in their sacks of grain. The famine was long, and eventually they were forced to come to Egypt again. When they came, they tried to explain, and Joseph declared (Genesis 43:23) "your God and the God of your father must have put treasure in your sacks for you; I received your money." (After some additional testing of his brothers, Joseph finally concluded that they had reformed, and all lived happily every after, but that has no parallel in this tale).

 Stanza 272/Lines 1085-1086  Note that Robin, in these lines, refuses to commit usury by accepting more than what he is owed. Admittedly he took the payment from the wrong source -- but he does not collect more than his due. It is a peculiar form of honesty, but considering the behavior of modern bankers (with their careful scheduling of payments to generate overdraft fees, and their concealment of loan terms), perhaps we ought not criticise.

 Stanza 274/Line 1096  For Robin's "trystel tre(e)" see the note on Stanza 176.

 Stanza 275/Lines 1102  There is a variant here, probably caused by the fact that "tresure" does not appear to rhyme with "me." " But "treasure" is doubtless to be pronounced "treasury."

 Stanzas 280-281/Lines 1117-1124  Although the copies all place the end of the fourth fit after stanza 280, internal evidence clearly indicates that the fits should be divided after stanza 281 (observe the use of the "lifth and listen" formula at the beginning of 282). Of course, it is a genuine question whether the fits are authorial or editorial. The latter strikes me as more probable, in which case the fits have no authority anyway. My guess would be that the fits were marked by the editor who produced the first printed edition, and all the later printers followed that first edition -- and the editor marked "Fifth Fytte" in the margin of the source manuscript alongside stanza 281, meaning it to follow 281, but the compositor set it before.

 Stanza 282/Lines 1125-1126  Observe the parallel to the first stanza, which also begins "Lyth and listin, gentilmen," and to stanzas 144 and 317. For notes on this introductory formula, see the notes to stanza 1.

 Stanza 282/Lines 1125-1128  In Fit 5, as in Fit 3, the Sheriff of Nottingham is Robin's chief opponent, and there is no indication that a new sheriff has been appointed. But the Sheriff of Fit 3 is a relatively incompetent figure of fun. The Sheriff of Fit 5 comes close to destroying Robin (Holt1, p. 25). In Stanza 15, Robin had warned against the Sheriff; one suspects the warning was against the Sheriff of Fit 5, not the one of Fit 3. For more about the status of sheriffs, and why the new sheriff might have been closer to the king than the old, see the notes on Stanza 15. This is the second archery contest of the "Gest"; for the first, see the note to Stanzas 145-146. Robin and his men will stage their own in stanza 397. But this one is different; it is supposed to bring in all the best archers of the North. Given that Robin's men in Stanza 301 almost fall victim to an ambush, this raises the possibility that the contest was intended to lure Robin into a trap. We see this made explicit in the Forrester's version of "Robin Hood and the Golden Arrow" [Child 152] (Knight, p. 23).

 Stanza 285/Lines 1137-1140  The golden arrow as a prize for an archery contest. This strikes me as a rather strange prize; in a time when life was relatively short and people were poor, mementos like this were not popular; in the absence of another prize, the winner would probably have to melt it down. Nor would it be an effective arrow, since the gold would blunt and the silver break. Nonetheless the idea seems to have inspired "Robin Hood and the Golden Arrow" [Child 152].

Estimating the value of the arrow is difficult, because we don't have its dimensions. It probably wasn't a full "cloth yard." A reasonable assumption is that it would be the length of a war arrow -- about 28 inches (Featherstone, p. 65), or 70 centimeters. The shaft, by implication, had a diameter of about .3 inches, or .75 cm. The point would be a pyramid 2 inches (Featherstone, p. 66), or 5 cm., long and with sides about 75 cm. So the golden arrowhead would have a volume of about 1 cubic centimeter. Add perhaps 50% for the golden feathers and we get 1.5 cc. The density of gold is 19 grams per cubic centimeter. So the weight of gold is 28.5 grams -- a hair over one ounce; the difference is well within our margin of error, which is on the order of 50% even assuming we've guessed the right kind of point for the arrow.

The volume of silver is a little more than 30 cubic centimeters. The density of silver is 10.5 grams per cubic centimeter. So the total mass of silver is about 325 grams, or 11.5 ounces. So the total value, in silver equivalent, is about 30 oz. of silver. That's about 2.5 pounds sterling. It's a substantial sum to a yeoman, but one a royal official could probably afford. This makes rather more financial sense than many of the figures in the "Gest."

Stanzas 287-288/Lines 1145, 1151  "Yonge men" may be an archaism, the root form of "yeomen." (Or not; the point is disputed.) For yeomen note on Stanza 1. **

Stanza 287/Lines 1147-1148  Robin decides to participate in the Nottingham archery contest, declaring he "wyll wete [test] the shryues fayth, Trewe and yf he be." Ohlgren, p. 282, interprets this to mean that Robin will test whether the sheriff is true to the oath he swore in stanza 204 to be Robin's friend. This raises questions -- for starters, after that embarrassment, would the Sheriff still be sheriff?

But there is another point. The spelling in this line is not "sherif," as in (for instance) stanzas 204 and 205, nor "sheryfe," as in stanza 282. Terminal e in middle English was often an optional syllable, for rhyme or meter, and i and y were really the same letter, so "sherif" and "sheryfe" were genuine variants. But "shryues"? That's about as close to "shrewere," "rogue" (Dickins/Wilson, p. 306) as to "sherif"; also consider "shryn," "shrine" -- perhaps Robin made a pilgrimage and made some sort of conditional vow and wanted to see the effects?

It's just a feeling, but I suspect textual corruption here. Even if "shryues" means "sherif," there is the possibility that Robin is not testing the Sheriff's oath of friendship but his promise to give the prize to the best archer no matter who it be -- that is, will he give the award to one of Robin's men? As it turns out, he will not -- a hint, it seems to me, that in fact it is a new sheriff.

Note however that in stanzas 296-298, Robin complains that the sheriff is untrue. These lines give us another, very vague, parallel to the story of David and Saul., this time to 1 Samuel 20. By this time Saul is so jealous of David that he wants David dead. He had tried to have David killed by demanding that he kill a hundred Philistines as a bride-price for his daughter Michal -- but David, instead of dying, produced the hundred Philistine foreskins (the Hebrew text of 1 Samuel 18:27 in fact says that David killed two hundred, although the Greek says only one hundred). In 1 Samuel 19, Saul tries to take David in his bed, but David escapes.

In 1 Samuel 20, David and his friend Jonathan, Saul's son, agree to test Saul. David will be absent from Saul's monthly banquet. Saul will ask where he is. Jonathan will explain that he has gone to a family sacrifice, and has asked Jonathan for permission to do so. If Saul accepts the explanation, then David and Jonathan will know that David is safe; if Saul does not accept the explanation, then David must flee.

As it turns out, in 1 Samuel 20:30, Saul refuses Jonathan's explanation and even reviles Jonathan's mother, Saul's own wife. Thus David tested Saul just as Robin tests the Sheriff, and just as Saul failed the test, so too does the Sheriff. And, in the end, Saul's lack of faith probably cost him his life (although it is not David who kills him), and certainly the Sheriff's lack of faith results in Robin killing him.

 Stanza 298/Line 1151  For Robin's seven score followers, see the note on Stanza 229.

 Stanza 292/Line 1166  There is a variant here, over which outlaws hit the target, and whether they sliced or clave it; see the textual note. Knight/Ohlgren suggest, p. 161, that stanza 292 refers to a sort of "tiebreak" between Robin and Gilbert, the winners of the preliminary round, but the description of the contest is too brief for us to really assess what happened.

 Stanza 292/Lines 1167-1168  "Gylberte With the whyte hande." Until this point, the only outlaws given any real mention are Little John, Much the Miller's Son, and Scarlock, and John is... the only one who has done much of anything. We have no background on Gilbert of the White Hand. (We do note that fg call him Gilbert of the "lylly white" hand.) As mentioned above, there was a 1501 mention of Gilbert by Gavin Douglas, but it tells us nothing except that he was associated with Robin by that year.

Is there any possibility that the name "Gilbert" was traditionally used for foresters? Young, p. 49, mentions a case in the time of Henry II when four knights were tried for killing a group of men including Gilbert the forester. But I know of no other foresters named Gilbert.

It is probably coincidence, but we find an instance in the reign Edward II of the bishop-elect of Durham and two cardinals being robbed by outlaws in the north of England (Hutchison, p. 88) -- a situation quite similar to "Robin Hood and the Bishop of Hereford" [Child 144] as well as to portions of the "Gest." Prestwich3, p. 103, and McNamee, p. 84, say that the crime was committed by Gilbert de Middleton in 1317 -- exactly halfway into the reign of Edward II (and, astonishingly, exactly the time we would have expected Robin to have robbed the Monk if the knight had been talking of going on crusade in 1316). Phillips, p. 299, says that Middleton was one of Edward's household knights, as was one of his fellow robbers, Sir John de Liburn.

Apparently all of this involved a local resident, John d'Eure, acknowledged a debt of 100 marks to John de Sapy, the keeper of the temporalities of Durham, an agreement overseen by the Prior of Durham. This debt was only supposed to be paid if Louis de Beaumont was consecrated as Bishop of Durham (Philips, p. 300). It's not the story of Robin, the Knight, and the Abbot, but it's surprisingly close.

According to Phillips, p. 299, the two cardinals were quickly released, but Bishop Louis of Durham, along with his brother Henry de Beaumont, were held for more than a month. The result was a political crisis, with Edward and the Earl of Lancaster each suspecting the other.

All this causes us to ask, Could "Gilbert de Middleton" have become "Gilbert of the White Hand"? To be sure, Gilbert de Middleton's story does not end happily. He was captured in 1318, taken to London, tried, and executed (Phillips, p. 302).

As a really, really wild additional stretch, I'm going to mention the existence of a royal yeoman listed as "Robert le Ewer." The description on p. 437 of Phillips is astonishing: "One chronicler even described him as 'the prince of thieves'.... He appears to have served in the Scottish campaign but in September 1322 left the king secretly without permission and headed for his home county of Hampshire, where he allegedly acted like a Robin Hood, distributing the good of executed contrairants to the poor as alms for their souls."

As an alternate explanation for the name "white hand," Baldwin, p. 66, notes that Robert Earl of Leicester (1168-1190) was known as "Blanchemains," French for "White Hand." There is no reason to think Gilbert related to the Beaumonts of Leicester, however. Baldwin suggests that the name may have arisen because Earl Robert had vitiligo, which causes a sort of localized albinism. But if we are getting speculative, we can wonder if there might not be a reason why Gilbert did not have a tan on his hands -- perhaps he had been a clerk or some such.

Some versions of the Tristam legend refer to "Isuelt of the White Hand" (CHEL1, p. 310), but I strongly doubt this is related.

 Stanza 293/Line 1170  Reynold. For Little John's use of the name Reynold Greenleaf, see the notes to Stanza 149. This is the only time in the "Gest" that Reynold is mentioned as an archer separate from Little John. (Although we do find Reynold listed among Robin's men in the list in the Winchester parliamentary roll of 1432; see the note on Stanza 4/Line 14). Scholars often treat this as a sign of inconsistency, and it surely is, but I wonder if, in the source, Little John did not compete under the name Reynold, and the compiler of the "Gest" failed to notice this.

 Stanza 295/Line 1179  For courtesy see the note on Stanza 2.

 Stanzas 296-298/Lines 1181-1192  For Robin's decision to test the value of the Sheriff's oath, see the note on Stanza 287. For the oath itself, see Stanza 204.

The first line of stanza 296, "They cried out on Robyn Hode," is interesting. Who is doing the crying? The townsfolk of Nottingham? This is the suggestion of Knight/Ohlgren, p. 162, which obviously implies that Robin was not as popular with the townsfolk as some would have us think. It would also explain their fear of Robin and his men in Stanza 428. If it does mean the townsfolk, of course, it relieves the Sheriff of some of his guilt. But see the note on Stanza 301.

 Stanza 298/Line 1190  For Robin's "trystel tre(e)" see the note on Stanza 176.

 Stanza 301/Line 1201  The fact that an ambush has been laid in would seem to imply that the whole shooting contest was a trap -- not a legitimate contest but a way of luring Robin from the greenwood (see also the note on Stanza 282). This would seem to contradict the passage in stanza 296 implying that the townsfolk, not the sheriff, initiated the attack on Robin.

 Stanza 302/Lines 1205-1206  Little John's injury in the knee is similar to an event in the tale of Fulk FitzWarren, where Fulk is wounded in the leg (Baldwin, p. 37); also similar is the fact that both find shelter with a friendly knight. Note however that in the tale of Fulk it is the hero himself, not his chief lieutenant, who is wounded. There is also a somewhat similar instance where Fulk's brother is wounded (Cawthorne, p. 115). Clawson, pp. 81-83, also notes a parallel in the story of William Wallace -- in which Wallace in fact executes the man, but another where Wallace rescues a man by carrying him on his back.

 Stanzas 303-305/Lines 1209-1220  The instances of an injured man pleading not to fall into the hands of an enemy are of course very old. Child, p. 54, has an eastern analogy involving one Giptakis, but completely ignores the 3000 year old appeal of Saul of Israel, wounded by the Philistines on Gilboa, that his armor-bearer kill him rather than letting the Philistines capture him. This tale is told in 1 Samuel 31 -- the immediate follow-up to the raid on Ziklag., for which see Stanzas 338-339. There is, of course, the difference that there was no one to rescue Saul, who (when his armor-bearer could not bring himself to do the dead) fell on his own sword.

 Stanza 305/Lines1217-1220  Little John, if taken by the sheriff, would be tried and surely convicted -- and sentenced to death by torture. Very likely drawing and quartering -- castration, half-hanging, and evisceration, with his dead body cut into parts which would be displayed outside the gates of local towns. Given the sheriff's reasons to dislike John, we can hardly doubt that the punishment would be even more severe than usual. Little wonder that he begged for a quick, clean death!

It is interesting to see John call Robin's blade a "browne swerde"; elsewhere (Stanzas 202, 348) it is a "bright bronde."

 Stanza 309/Lines 1233-1236  Robin and his men come to a castle, which we learn in the next stanza belongs to Sir Richard at the Lee. This stanza describes it as a "fair castle, a little within the wood," walled, and with a double ditch.

This isn't much of a description -- after the Norman Conquest, the Normans studded England with what were called motte-and-bailey castles (Douglas, p. 216, who notes that this was one of the chief methods by which the Normans beat the English), which consisted of a ditch enclosing a palisade (wall), with the dirt used in digging the ditch carried inside to build a hill. Later, many of these had the palisade walls rebuilt in stone, but still, it would be hard to find a castle that didn't have a wall and ditch, and the addition of a second ditch was a cheap additional precaution.

Nonetheless Baldwin, p. 170, makes this description one of the keys to his identification of Sir Richard in the ballad with the historical Richard Foliot and his castle of Fenwick. Clawson, p. 84, notes that the Sheriff probably could not expect to have enough men to overwhelm Robin and his seven score men, which is probably true. On this bases, Clawson (who regards this fit as an expansion of a ballad of Robin escaping the Sheriff) thinks the business with the castle an expansion. On the other hand, there is no guarantee that the original of this story assumed that Robin had so many followers.

 Stanza 310/Line 1238  "Syr Rychard at the Lee," or Sir Richard at Lee, as it is usually modernized. Note that, although Sir Richard is linked with the knight of the first four fits, this is the first time he is named -- an indication, presumably, of the composite nature of the "Gest." The poet has combined two tales, and claimed the knight of one is the knight of the other. Nonetheless the tale hints that they are distinct -- Sir Richard is close at hand when Robin and his men flee the Sheriff of Nottingham, which implies that he lived near Barnsdale or Sherwood. But the knight of stanza 126 lives in Verysdale, believed to be in Lancashire.

This is not as strong an objection as it sounds. We know from stanza 49 that the knight has land worth 400 pounds. The value of an ordinary manor would be measured in the tens of pounds in the fourteenth century. The knight almost certainly has at least three manors, and six to ten is a better bet. So there is no reason why he should not have manors in both Lancashire and south Yorkshire -- or, if we accept "Ayredale" for "Verysdale" in stanza 126, then he could have manors in north and south Yorkshire.

The real issue is the use of the name "Richard at Lee." One suggestion is that the name is derived from a Lord Mayor of London in Edward IV's time, Richard Lee (Öhlgren/Matheson, p. 134). This possibility cannot be ruled out, but neither is there really anything to commend it.

Clawson's hypothesis (p. 101) regarding the origin of the "Gest" involves a very large number of sources, and he suggests that the compiler inserted the name here from a portion of one of the sources he used later on. But why, then, not introduce it in the first fit as well?

It is interesting to note that, in "The Noble Fisherman, or, Robin Hood's Preferment" [Child 148], Robin takes service with a fisherman under the name "Simon over the Lee" (stanza 7 in Child's text) -- the name "Simon" likely being suggested by the fact that Simon Peter was a fisherman, and became a fisher of men (Matthew 4:18-19 and parallels). It is even more interesting to observe that, in the Forresters Manuscript version of this ballad, which in this case seems to preserve an earlier form, Robin becomes "Simon of the Lee," (Knight, p. xvi), exactly paralleling the form in the "g" print of the "Gest." This late ballad would seem to imply that Robin was taking the knight's title. Ohlgren/Matheson, p. 167, has a rather far-out suggestion for the use of the name at this point, based on the existence of the "other" Munday Robin Hood play, "Metropolis Coronata, The Triumphes of Ancient Drapery." Ohlgren mentions this piece and dates it to 1615. Then Ohlgren makes one of his flying leaps into quicksand. On p. 168, Ohlgren makes the observation that the fact that the "Metropolis Coronata" was written for a Lord Mayor means that the Robin Hood story was thus freely adapted to the situations of specific persons. Because this happened once, Ohlgren, p. 169, speculates that the "Gest" might have been written for the London Mayor Sir Richard Lee, made Lord Mayor in 1460 and 1469 -- although not knighted until 1471. This would make a lot more sense if Sir Richard's name had been used throughout, rather than only in the latter half of the "Gest," and if the name had been "Richard Lee," not "Richard at the Lee," and if he had been a knight at the time Ohlgren would have us believe the "Gest" was performed. Ohlgren, p. 169, explains the concealment of the Knight's name by analogy to Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, where Sir Bertilak is not named until the end. This hypothesis of course suffers from the substantial problem that Gawain could not be allowed to know that Bertilak is the Green Knight, whereas there is no reason to hide the Knight's name.

 Stanza 312/Line 1246  For courtesy see the note on Stanza 2.  Stanza 313/Line 1251  For Child's reading "proud[e]" see the note on Stanza 282.  Stanza 315/Lines 1258-1259  Saint Quentin was an early martyr, slain in Gaul. His dates are unknown, but it was early enough that he was in conflict with Roman authorities (DictSaints, p. 206). He was not well-known in England; his cult was centered in France. He was not the patron saint of anything in particular. It is curious to find Sir Richard invoking him, unless he was a family saint dating back to the time before the Conquest. This is a strong argument against the idea that Robin Hood was a pro-Saxon rebel; he would not in that case be friends with a guy swearing by Norman saints. Knight/Ohlgren, p. 162, suggest that Sir Richard swears by Saint Quentin because he is promising to spare Robin from Quentin's fate. Alternately, we might suggest that the day is October 31, Quentin's feast day. The "forty days" of the next line (in Child's text; see the textual note) was the traditional annual period of feudal military service. It might also be an allusion to something such as the forty days and forty nights of rain during Noah's Flood in Genesis 7:4, etc., or the forty days Moses was on the mountain in Exodus 24:18, or the forty days Jesus fasted in the wilderness in Matt. 4:2, etc. The most likely explanation, however, is to the traditional right of sanctuary in a church: a wrongdoer was allowed protection there for forty days before being expelled into exile or civil custody (Lyon, p. 160). Hence the knight would seem to be offering Robin the same sanctuary that he would get from a church. If the correct reading is, as I believe, "twelve days," there is no obvious source for the reading. Perhaps the twelve days of Christmas/Epiphany? But there is no hint of this in the text.  Stanza 316/Line 1261  Gummere, p. 318, interprets "Bordes were layde" to mean that tables were set up by laying boards on trestles, although one might also understand this as meaning that the sideboards were filled (laden).

Last updated in version 2.6
File: C117G

Gest of Robyn Hode, A [Child 117] --- Part 09

DESCRIPTION: Continuation of the notes to "A Gest of Robyn Hode" [Child 117]. Entry continues in "A Gest of Robyn Hode" [Child 117] --- Part 10 (File Number C117I). This entry contains notes on Fits VI-VIII of the "Gest."

Last updated in version 2.6

NOTES [16105 words]:  Stanza 317-318/Lines 1265-1272  Here again we have the "Lyth and listin, gentilmen" formula of stanzas 1, 144, and 282. For notes on this introductory formula, see the notes to stanza 1. These stanzas, however, contain several additional curious readings (see the textual notes). As they currently stand, Stanza 317 ends in mid-sentence. This is unusual although not entirely unknown in the "Gest." Observe also that, as it is written, we learn that the "proude shyref... full cam to the hye shyref." This on its face implies TWO sheriffs. Possibly the poet is simply using "hye" to refer to any senior
This might be an appeal to Robin's known love for the Virgin -- but it also recalls his promise in Stanza 336/Line 1343. Note that knight's wife invokes the Virgin Mary in asking Robin for help. The Knight just didn't think the Sheriff would watch him that closely.

Compiler has shifted sources. However, this does not really fit his source-critical analysis. Probably goes hawking in public when he knew the Sheriff would be after him. He thinks this indicates that the Sheriff's decision to bind him hand and foot (stanza 333) is certainly improper behavior toward a member of the gentry who, as far as we can tell, has not been outlawed. Although the King had said in stanza 325 that he would take Robin Hood, that is not by itself a jury finding -- and Magna Carta had guaranteed the right to trial by jury long before Edward I took the throne.

The intent of the last line of 331 is not entirely clear (due in part to a textual variant), but if we are to understand that the sheriff let the hawk(s) fly loose, it means that he has done the knight monetary damage in addition to arresting him.

Clawson, p. 89, points out an inconsistency here: That the knight should have known better than to go hawking in public when he knew the Sheriff would be after him. He thinks this indicates that the compiler has shifted sources. However, this does not really fit his source-critical analysis. Probably the Knight just didn't think the Sheriff would watch him that closely.

Stanza 336/Line 1343  Note that knight's wife invokes the Virgin Mary in asking Robin for help. This might be an appeal to Robin's known love for the Virgin -- but it also recalls his promise in

---

The intent of the last line of 331 is not entirely clear (due in part to a textual variant), but if we are to understand that the sheriff let the hawk(s) fly loose, it means that he has done the knight monetary damage in addition to arresting him.

Clawson, p. 89, points out an inconsistency here: That the knight should have known better than to go hawking in public when he knew the Sheriff would be after him. He thinks this indicates that the compiler has shifted sources. However, this does not really fit his source-critical analysis. Probably the Knight just didn't think the Sheriff would watch him that closely.

Stanza 336/Line 1343  Note that knight's wife invokes the Virgin Mary in asking Robin for help. This might be an appeal to Robin's known love for the Virgin -- but it also recalls his promise in

---

The intent of the last line of 331 is not entirely clear (due in part to a textual variant), but if we are to understand that the sheriff let the hawk(s) fly loose, it means that he has done the knight monetary damage in addition to arresting him.

Clawson, p. 89, points out an inconsistency here: That the knight should have known better than to go hawking in public when he knew the Sheriff would be after him. He thinks this indicates that the compiler has shifted sources. However, this does not really fit his source-critical analysis. Probably the Knight just didn't think the Sheriff would watch him that closely.

Stanza 336/Line 1343  Note that knight's wife invoke the Virgin Mary in asking Robin for help. This might be an appeal to Robin's known love for the Virgin -- but it also recalls his promise in Stanza 251: the if Mary has "nede to Robyn Hode," he will be her friend.

Stanzas 338-339/Lines 1352-1353 These lines are missing in all the early prints, making this one of the most important defects in the "Gest"; see the textual notes.

There is a hint at the career of David here. David, after Saul tried to murder him, entered the service of the Philistines. The Philistines were preparing the climax campaign against Saul which ended in the Battle of Mount Gilboa (for which see the note to Stanzas 303-305). David and his company (supposedly 600 men) were preparing to serve on the Philistine side against Israel. But a majority of the Philistine leaders did not want an Israelite serving in their army at the great battle; they feared he would turn on them. They sent David to his home in Ziklag (1 Samuel 29).

When David got home, he found that Amelekites had raided Ziklag, and taken the wives, children, and relatives of David's soldiers prisoner (1 Samuel 30:1-2). David, frightened of his own men (who were brigands, after all), asked an oracle whether he should pursue them, and was told "Pursue, for you shall surely overtake and shall surely rescue" (1 Samuel 30:9). And, indeed, even as Saul was being killed at Gilboa (very conveniently for David), David overtook the raiders and rescued his wives and his followers' families.

Stanza 342/Line 1366 For Robin's seven score followers, see the note on Stanza 229.

Stanza 345/Lines 1379-1380 Note that Robin here asks the Sheriff for tidings of the king. This is perhaps an indication that Robin, despite being an outlaw, is still devoted to the King. We will see many more such indications in the seventh fit, where Robin honors the monk who comes from the king.

Stanza 346/Lines 1381-1382 Robin says that he has not moved this fast on foot in seven years. Probably this is just a conventional statement -- but it is interesting that it was seven years from 1316, which for various reasons seems to be roughly the time the knight went into debt, to 1323 when Edward II made his trip to the north.

Stanzas 347-348/Lines 1385-1392 Why did not Robin's arrow kill the sheriff itself? Although improvements in plate armor meant that a longbow could no longer piece armor at long range by the mid-1400s (Reid, p. 353), the two were within speaking range, and an arrow fired at that range could still pierce armor. Probably the sheriff was dead and Robin simply made sure. But there is also a symbolic element: in Stanza 202, the sheriff swore on Robin's "bright brand"; since he broke the oath, the bright brand is used to execute him.

Pollard, pp. 107-108, sees a symbolic element to the whole episode of the sheriff: Killing the corrupt official is one half of restoring true justice (the other half being the receipt of the King's pardon). He adds that there was an "inextricable link between violence and the law in fifteenth century society." This is unquestionably true -- one of the major causes and side effects of the Wars of the Roses was that nobles settled their differences in battle rather than in the courts -- but it was hardly held up as ideal. And fifteenth century, which opened with the overthrow of Richard II and also saw the overthrows of Henry VI (twice), Edward IV (temporarily), and Richard III, was a period when the king's power to grant pardon and justice was hardly taken seriously -- a man pardoned by one king could expect to be subject to severe persecution by the next. In any case, Pollard's case is based on a fifteenth century date.

The cutting off of the head really sounds more like the Robin Hood of "Guy of Gisborne" than the Robin of the rest of the "Gest," however -- and surely he would not have been so crude to a man who supposedly was the husband of the Sheriff's wife of the Potter. Note that Robin accuses the sheriff's body of falsehood in the next stanza.

Child gives the last line of stanza 348 as "With his bright[e] bronde." "Brighte" is the reading of bdfg; a has "bright." In stanza 202, both a and b read "bright." We must at least allow for the possibility that the copyist of a assimilated this verse to that. "Brighte" is also better metrically. Although Knight/Ohlgren, p. 163, prefer to read "bright," the case for "brighte" appears slightly better.

Note that this isn't the only time in the early ballads that Robin kills the Sheriff. He does so also in "Guy of Gisborn" (cf. Holt1, pp. 32-33). Does this mean that there were several traditions of how Robin killed the sheriff, or that there were none and that different sources came up with different means? We cannot really say.

Stanza 351/Line 1402 In this stanza Robin cuts... something... in two to free the knight. It may have been his "hoode" or his bonds; see the textual note. Perhaps the the guards could have tied the knight's hood over his eyes to prevent him from seeing. Also, "hode" sometimes seems to be used to refer to the head, or the contents of the hood, but this hardly helps. In practical terms, of course, it does not matter; what counts is that Robin cut the knight free.

If the original reading was "hoode," it is interesting to see that it is spelled with a double o, while Robin's name is spelled "Hode," with only one o.
Stanza 352/Lines 1405-1406 Robin bids the knight to abandon his horse (the horse Robin gave him?) and run with the outlaws. For residents of an actual forest, this is always good advice -- but it makes less sense if Robin inhabits open land that is only nominally forest (which was the case for much of Barnsdale).

This may be a dating hint, since it was not until the reign of Edward III that archers were mounted. So it makes sense, if we are in the reign of Edward II or earlier, for archers to be unmounted. On the other hand, this seems to contradict the situation in Stanza 152, where the Sheriff offers John a horse.

Stanza 353/Line 1411 For this "appeal to Caesar," see the note on stanza 321. Clawson, p. 113, makes an interesting point here: unlike almost all stories of penitents being helped by the King, Robin does not make a direct appeal, even though Robin in this verse strongly implies that he is seeking pardon. Robin will not leave the greenwood, which he loves, to go to the King. So the King must come to Robin. Clawson implies that a large part of this section is rewriting designed to turn a story of a normal appeal to the King into a case of the King coming to the suppliant.

Stanza 353/Line 1412 "Edwarde, our comly kynge." Although there have been references to the King before this (stanzas 319, 321, 322, 325, 326, 345), this is the first one which gives him a name -- and it isn't William, Henry, Richard, or John; it's Edward.

There were six Kings Edward in English history before the first certain reference to Robin Hood as a figure of folklore: Edward the Elder (reigned c. 899-925), Edward the Martyr (c. 973-978), Edward the Confessor (1042-1066), Edward I (1272-1307), Edward II (1307-1327), and Edward III (1327-1377). There was another Edward, Edward IV (reigned 1461-1470 and 1461-1483) who lived before the "Gest" was published, and in some ways he fits the ballad -- but the piece would almost certainly have had to have been rewritten to refer to him, and this would likely have taken place in Tudor times. Not likely when Henry VII was trying to make a claim that he was the legitimate King (which he simply wasn't).

We can instantly reject the first three Edwards (the Elder, the Martyr, and the Confessor), because they lived before the Norman Conquest. The very fact that Our Hero is named "Robin" -- diminutive of "Robert" -- proves that he must be post-Conquest. "Robert" is Franko-Norman; William the Conqueror's father was named Robert, as was his eldest son. Checking multiple histories, I can find no pre-Conquest Englishmen named Robert; the index in Swanton lists 16 men named Robert -- and only one lived in England pre-conquest, and he was Robert Archbishop of Canterbury, and seems to have been an import from France (this was the period when Edward the Confessor was favoring Normans over Englishmen). Barlow-Rufus, p. 164, notes that Robert was, after William, the most common name among post-Conquest Norman office-holders.

The introduction discusses the matter of which Edward is meant. The only help we have in this verse is the fact that this Edward is called "comely." (A description also used for the king in line 331 of the "Monk," although this does not necessarily imply dependence; it was probably conventional). Keen, p. 143, reminds us that Edward IV (reigned 1461-1470 and 1471-1483) was, in his prime, considered the handsomest man in Europe (cf. Ohlgren/Matheson, p. 150, which attributes the observation to Knight, not Keen). Knight/Ohlgren, p. 163, and Pollard, p. 200, point out that Edward III was called "our cumly King" in Laurence Minot's Poem IV; Ohlgren is convinced (and Pollard, p. 201, seems to accept the argument) that this means the "Gest" is about Edward III. This even though Ohlgren admits (Ohlgren/Matheson, p. 147) that there is "no direct evidence" that the author of the "Gest" knew Minot. Nor was Minot popular; only one copy of his works survived (British Library, MS. Cotton Galba IX, according to CHEL1, p. 356). Although the author of the "Gest" would have had access to Minot if anyone did; Minot's verse shows signs of northern dialect and he seems to have known a lot about Yorkshire (CHEL1, p. 357).

Ohlgren then goes on (Ohlgren/Matheson, p. 148) to suggest that the allusions, originally to Edward III, were then adapted to Edward IV.

The argument is however neutral; Edward I, Edward II, and Edward III were all tall and majestic, if not quite so handsome as Edward IV. The chronicles call Edward II "Fair of body and great of strength" and "Of a well proportioned and handsome person" (Doherty, p. 35). The anonymous author of the Life of Edward II, in speaking of the new King Edward III, hoped that he would have the traits of his ancestors: The energy of Henry II, the bravery of Richard I, the long life and reign of Henry III, the wisdom of Edward I -- and the good looks of Edward II (Ormrod, p. 47). In any case the phrase "comely king" is probably just a customary description.

There is another problem with making Edward IV the King of the "Gest," and that is that there is no hint in the "Gest" of the context of the Wars of the Roses. This even though the greatest of the battles in the Wars (indeed, believed to be the biggest battle ever fought in Britain) was the 1461 Battle of Towton (Reid, pp. 410-412). The preliminaries included two fights at Ferrybridge (Wagner, p. 272), which is right in the middle of Robin Hood country and might even be where the Knight saw the wrestling (see note on Stanza 126). The Towton battlefield itself is just a little north of there, between Ferrybridge and Tadcaster on the river Cock (see map on p. 428 of Reid). There was also a battle at Wakefield (see the map on p. 317 of Wagner). And, in 1469, Edward IV planned to gather his armies at Doncaster, although he never made it there (Castor, p. 203). The conclusion is inevitable: If Robin Hood lived in Barnsdale in the reign of Edward IV, there would surely be some mention of these events. (To be sure, it's different if Robin lived in Sherwood.)

Plus, before we can say that the "Gest" refers to Edward IV, we have to prove that its current form comes from the reign of Edward IV. This has been asserted but not demonstrated.

 Stanza 354/Lines 1413-1414  It is extremely unlikely that the King would come all the way to Nottingham simply to deal with an outlaw band and a disobedient knight. Edward I, it is true, spent some time chasing after William Wallace, but that is almost the only instance. Presumably he had other business. Unfortunately, Nottingham was a place English kings visited fairly often -- it was roughly the northern limit of their usual circuit. So this by itself is not a dating hint -- although there are several hints in the following stanzas.

 Stanzas 357-358/Lines 1425-1427  "Lancasshyre... Plomton Parke... He fauled many of his dere." In other words, the King went to a hunting reserve in Lancashire, called Plompton Park, but was upset to find it almost devoid of deer. (A common problem, apparently; by the fifteenth century, red deer were nearly gone throughout the south and midlands, according to Pollard, p. 60, and presumably even the fallow deer were badly threatened in some places.) It is interesting to note that Plompton Park is also mentioned in "King Edward the Fourth and a Tanner of Tamworth," stanza 38 -- Child's version of the family of ballads referred to above as "King Edward and the Hermit." Knight/Ohlgren, p. 164, point out that Plompton/Plumpton is also mentioned in The Noble Fisherman, or, Robin Hood's Preferment" [Child 148] (stanza 13) -- Simon in that song wishes he were hunting deer in the park. It is not clear whether there is literary dependence.

Several locations have been proposed for "Plumpton Park"; Holt lists them on p. 101. His own preference is for Plompton Wood in Lancashire, near the forest of Myrescough. Child, pp. 54-55, mentions a couple of possibilities, listing first Camden's suggestion of a location on the bank of the Petterel in Cumbria east of Inglewood; this was also Ritson's preferred site (Knight/Ohlgren, p. 164). Dobson/Taylor, p. 105, prefer Hunter's suggestion of Plompton Park near Knaresborough in Yorkshire (about halfway between York and Harrowgate), a choice also mentioned, rather disapprovingly, by Child, and with strong approval by Baldwin, p. 23. I note that the Plumpton family was still based in the West Riding of Yorkshire in the reign of Edward IV (Ross-Edward, p. 200). Knight/Ohlgren, p. 164 are convinced it is in Inglewood Forest, where there was a Plumpton Hay. But it hardly matters which one is meant. It is a northern forest which has been hunted out, and Robin Hood is thought to be to blame.

Holt1, p. 156 quotes a document describing "great destruction of the game" in the lands which had formerly belonged to Thomas of Lancaster, which is extremely interesting in connection to Edward II's northern trip of 1322-1323, although it does ot tell us which Plompton is involved. It is certain that there was a Plompton Park in existence from a very early date; we know that Geoffrey de Neville in 1279-1281 was repairing a paling and hiring men to guard a park and lawn within in (Young, p. 115). This Plompton was in Inglewood (Young, p. 116). There is a summary of the forest laws in Knight/Ohlgren, pp. 164-165, and much detail (naturally) in Young, who notes on p. 3. that "the royal forest of first of all an area in which a special kind of law --the forest law -- applied." On pp. 28-29, Young lists twelve major points of the laws as enforced by Henry II. Several of these are of great significance to the Robin Hood legend, including #2, that no one should have bows, arrows, or dogs in the royal forest; #3, that wood could not be taken from the forests; #4-#7, assuring that foresters guarded the forest; #7, charging the foresters with guarding venison (game) and vert (trees and habitat); and #8, that a forester was responsible for any unexplained destruction in the forest (making the forester responsible for suppressing people like Robin)

The forest laws before the Norman Conquest were relatively mild, but William the Conqueror started putting lands into royal forests, eventually including about a quarter of England (Young, p. 5), meaning that much "forest" was not woodland but merely land designated for the King's purposes. The primary purpose of the laws was to preserve trees and game where they existed. They also brought in some revenue from the farming out of the office of forester (Young, p. 14; on p. 52, Young mentions a case of a man paying 900 marks=600 pounds to become forester of Cumbria!), so Robin's band might be costing the King money as well as game. The punishments for violating the laws varied over time, at least in practice if not officially; item #30 or so in the lengthy list of proofs that Richard I was not Robin's king comes in the fact that Richard ordered poachers of the deer to be blinded and castrated. Only in the period of the Magna Carta were these penalties relaxed --the forest charter of 1217 declared that no one would be executed or mutilated for violation of the forest laws (Young, p. 67).

Even before that, fines were a more typical punishment, and even those were often forgiven (Young, p. 30) -- but even a fine could destroy a serf. And the fines could be huge -- one year, forest eyres brought in 12,000 pounds, although between 1000 and 2000 was more typical (Young, p. 39). Even these often were kept on the books for decades because they went unpaid (Young, p. 40). A man who failed to pay could, under the later forest laws, be imprisoned for a year and a day and then exiled (Young, p. 68).

There is another footnote: "Park," like "Forest," was an officially designated area. The forest laws applied, but with some modifications (Young, p. 45). The custodians of a park were not foresters but, logically, parkers. A park was fenced to keep the game within (or without), and one of the tasks of the parker was to maintain the fence -- a park could be seized by the king if the enclosure was not tight (Young, p. 96). I gain the impression that parks were much more closely controlled than forests, so for Robin to be raiding a park was a significant accomplishment.

This hunting episode is by far the strongest dating hint in the "Gest." Almost all kings of England hunted deer, but they rarely went as far as Lancashire to do it; it was too long a trip, and the north of England too unsettled and uncomfortable.

As it turns out, all three Edwards spent time in the north of England -- but Edward I and Edward III were fighting the Scots, not hunting. Of the kings of England in this period, we know that Richard I liked hunting -- indeed, we know that his one approach to Sherwood Forest was to hunt there (Gillingham, p. 242). John's son Henry III was "indifferent to hunting" (Baldwin, p. 114).

In 1852, Joseph Hunter (probably the first quality Robin Hood scholar, and the one who, according to Holt1, p. 179, restored the "Gest" to its rightful place in the legend) showed that the only King Edward who made a progress to northern England which resembled that of the "Gest" was Edward II, who visited Lancashire, Yorkshire, and Nottingham in 1323 (Holt1, p. 45). This was in the aftermath of one of the myriad baronial conflicts of Edward II's reign. He had finally managed to defeat and execute his long-time enemy the Earl of Lancaster (Hutchison, p. 114), and spent a period of months in the north of England trying to deal with the aftermath of the baronial conflict and with Scotland. While this was going on, he naturally spent time hunting and otherwise amusing himself.

Phillips, p. 73, says that Edward II had only an "occasional" interest in hunting, but most of his other biographers seem to think he was very keen for the hunt; his huntsman wrote the first English hunting manual (Hutchison, p. 10), and Edward himself spent great sums upon related activities, importing horses from Lombardy and buying a dead earl's entire stud and delighting in hounds (Doherty, p. 28). We also know that, in a conflict over forest laws, he gave in but reserved the right to hunt in the lands which he allowed to be disafforested (Young, p. 144). Even his wife Isabella is said to have engaged in hunting (Doherty, p. 176). Whereas Prestwich1, p. 115, thinks that Edward I was more interested in falconry (compare Powicke, p. 228).

In any case, even if Edward himself did not hunt, he would need a steady supply of meat for his table --and for the pet lion he kept (Phillips, p. 93). So he would be concerned if a forest had been hunted out even if he did not intend to hunt it himself. Plus parks reportedly brought in income as well as game (Young, p. 96; Barber, p. 39 notes that in the reign of Edward III, bad park management resulted in a shortfall of no less than a thousand pounds), so a hunted-out park might cost the treasury much-needed income.

To be sure, Child, p. 55, tartly comments, "Hunter, who could have identified Pigromitus and Quinapallus, if he had given his mind to it, sees in this passage, and in what precedes it of King Edward's trip to Nottingham, a plausible semblence of historical reality. Edward II, as may be shown from Rymer's Foedera, made a progress in the counties of York, Lancaster, and Nottingham, in the latter part of the year 1323. He was in Yorkshire in August and September, in Lancashire in October, at Nottingham November 9-23." (He also visited Nottingham in March/April, Baldwin, p. 57. Baldwin, like Child, does not think Edward's visit the source of the legend, but notes that many were made outlaws in Edward II's time, and thinks the visit might have led to tales of outlawry which contributed to the legend; Baldwin, pp. 58-59.) Child is surely correct in thinking that Hunter wrang much more out of the historical data than is justified -- as Holt1, p. 47, points out, Hunter's argument was circular in that he started with the "Gest," found some people who might just possibly have been those mentioned in the "Gest," and then used the "Gest" to try to prove what he had assumed. But Holt1, p. 56, concedes that Child did "less than justice to Hunter's case" -- and I agree. "If" the "Gest" is to be linked to any actual historical events, this is the key date. The King Edward of these stanzas is Edward II. Our only hesitation about this conclusion is that the "Gest" is composite, or not intended to be based on history. This could be an isolated fragment associated with Edward II, with other parts of the piece deriving from other contexts.

 Stanza 359/Lines 1433-1434  Wild rages were characteristic of all the Plantagenets (except the feeble-minded Henry VI and the forgiving Edward IV and Richard III), and are no key to dating. On p. 94 of McLynn, for instance, we find reports of both Henry II and John biting their fingers when in a rage. Edward I was supposed to have once torn out his son's hair in anger (Phillips, p. 120, who doubts that it actually happened. More significant is the fact that people were willing to believe that it happened.)

There are hints, too, that Edward II's rages grew worse after his triumph over Lancaster in 1322. In 1323, he ordered the execution of Andrew de Harclay, who had won the Battle of Boroughbridge in 1322 which gave Edward the win over Lancaster. After Boroughbridge, Edward made Harclay Earl of Carlisle. When word came that Harclay was negotiating with the Scots -- something fairly necessary in his position, although Harclay did go a little far in proposing a draft treaty -- Edward not only had him executed but also degraded from both earldom and knighthood (Phillips, pp. 432-433). A few weeks later, he sent a councilor to prison for disagreeing with him (Phillips, p. 435). The picture we get, in the 1323 period, is of a man who had lost all patience with opposition, even friendly opposition.

But we note that, although Edward vows a particular punishment (confiscation of lands) for the knight, he does not promise anything in particular for Robin. No doubt the implication was clear: Robin would suffer a traitor's death. This of course did not happen. But note the blow the king inflicts upon Robin in stanza 408. If called out to fulfill a vow to punish Robin, the King could say he had done so -- with his own hand!

 Stanza 363/Lines 1449-1452  The king is warned that no one will be able to safely occupy the Knight's land because of Robin Hood. This is similar to the situation in Stanza 117 in which the Justice warns the Abbot of the danger of simply confiscating the Knight's lands.

 Stanza 364/Lines 1453-1454  The warning to the king continues: The person who occupies the knight's land will lose "the best ball in his hode." Knight/Ohlgren, p. 165, suggest that this is a reference to ancient games which use a human head as a ball. I personally doubt this. It is true that there are many accounts of warriors collecting heads as trophies, and the Grimm Brothers story "The Boy Who Set Out to Learn What Fear Was" has a tale of spirits playing ninepins using skulls for balls, and there are various accounts of men being executed after losing some sort of game -- but I do not know of any real uses in British history of a head or skull for a ball. Neither would suit the purpose at all well; the human head is neither round enough to roll well nor consistent enough in its components to bounce well.

I note that Wimberly, who has much discussion of heads and bones in ballad folklore, never mentions this idea. Gummere, p. 319, explains the phrase as "a jocose expression of old standing" -- but offers no evidence or parallel citation.

I'm reminded a bit of the drawing of lots by pulling colored balls from a hood. But I can see no reason why that would apply here.

The line is in any case over-long. Perhaps we should emend to something like "At honde of Robyn Hode" or similar.

 Stanza 365/Lines 1457-1458  These lines line reports that the King's stay specifically in Nottingham lasted half a year. This doesn't fit any of the Edwards -- although Edward II was in Nottingham in early 1323 (March or April), and again from November 9-23 (Baldwin, pp. 55, 57), which makes about half a year from the time he first arrived to the time he finally left the area. He never stayed in one place for any length of time, however In any case, the King couldn't visit Plumpoton Park if he never left Nottingham.

The king's base in Nottingham may be genuine history (Edward II did spend time there), or the author may have placed him there because the story is associated with Sherwood -- but it is interesting to note that Nottingham, until the time of Edward I's northern wars, was generally as far north as a Plantagenet king would go on his regular travels (Mortimer, p. 17).

If we absolutely have to find a fit for spending a long spell continuously in Nottingham, it was probably Richard III in the period shortly before his death. With his wife and his son dead, and Henry Tudor about to invade, Richard chose Nottingham as the "castle of his care," and stayed there for much of 1485 until Henry Tudor finally landed.

 Stanza 367/Line 1465  A forester suggests the king's next act. If had been is a forester in Barnsdale or Sherwood, he might well know Robin (recall that in Stanza 14, Robin told John, Much, and Scarlock not to harm a yeoman who walked “the grene wode shawe,” which probably means a forester). Could the whole situation be a set-up?

 Stanza 368/Line 1470 "Gete you monkes wede," i.e. "disguise yourself as a monk." The motif of a king in disguise is rather common in folklore; we find it in "King Estmere" [Child 60] and in "King William and the Keeper," and in the Robin Hood cycle it occurs also in "The King’s Disguise, and Friendship with Robin Hood" [Child 151], plus there were many later tales of James V of Scotland doing this sort of thing. In "Queen Eleanor's Confession" [Child 156], we even find the King and a companion disguised as clergymen, although for a rather different purpose. Indeed, Pollard, p. 201, reminds us that Shakespeare used the gimmick in "Measure for Measure." Clawson, p. 107, points out evidence gathered by Kittredge that people in the late fourteenth century believed that Edward III had visited people in disguise.

It didn't happen often in reality -- certainly there is no hint that the haughty Edward III went incognito. Interestingly, we do find Richard I trying to disguise himself to cross central Europe on his way home from the Crusade (Gillingham, p. 223). But this did not happen in England, or any land the Plantagenets ruled -- and the disguise was a failure anyway; Richard was taken prisoner and was not released until he had paid a huge ransom. Like most of Richard’s ideas that didn’t involve fighting, it was a really dumb thing to do. Bonnie Prince Charlie also disguised himself, on his voyage to Skye, but that was long after the "Gest."

One account of the life of Henry VI says that he often dressed as a "townsman" or a "farmer" (Wolffe, p. 10), and it is certain that he was often in disguise in the early 1460s when he had been overthrown and was trying to avoid capture. But the 1460s are a late date for the composition of the "Geste," and in any case Henry at this time had no power, and would not date reveal himself so openly -- and was not forceful enough to play the role of the king in the "Gest."

There is an account of Edward II in disguise reported from about the 1360s, which cannot be true but which might have fostered the idea of the concealed King: In about 1305, when Edward II and his father Edward I were quarrelling, Edward I was supposedly riding along a muddy, dangerous road in winter -- and Edward II, in disguise, came out and led his father's horse through the mud, so that his father did not fall (Phillips, p. 603).

Plus Edward II reportedly liked hanging around with monks and friars (Philipps, p. 602). The idea of dressing as a monk would probably appeal to him.

The idea of adopting a cleric's disguise would be particularly good in 1323, because Edward II had ordered them to gather, separately from parliament, early in that year. He summoned them to Lincoln to discuss a war subsidy (Phillips, p. 432). Thus Robin and his men, in that year, might have been keeping a particularly close watch for high church officials.

Also, there were several tales of Edward II having escaped his execution in 1327 and wandering around Europe. The probability of this is exceptionally low, but the stories usually describe him in the guise of a hermit of some sort (Phillips, pp. 582-592, 612, who doesn't believe it; Doherty, pp. 185-215, who takes one version seriously without being absolutely convinced). The story is in fact extremely implausible -- but it might have influenced the idea of Edward II disguising himself as a monk.

There is also an interesting tale from 1234, in the reign of Henry III: The King was going to visit Windsor Forest, and an outlaw named Richard Siward was attacking travellers in the area. If I understand the tale told on p. 105 of Young, it seems that only the King's presence kept Siward from attacking his party. Siward was not pardoned, however; attempts were made to take him as he moved toward Wales.

 Stanza 368-369/Lines 1471-1476  The King is told to go from an abbey to Nottingham. This is pretty typical of what happened when Kings stayed in the north. They often stayed in abbeys, which were usually much wealthier than anything else in the vicinity and used to taking in guests. Also, the King could not stay in one place for very long; no place in the north had food and other supplies enough to provide for the king and all his entourage for more than a few days.

The idea that the King wandered about in the north fits far better with the history of Edward II (see Stanza 365) than the idea of him staying in one place for all that time.

 Stanza 369/Line 1473  The forester offers to be the king's ledes-man, i.e. guide, leader, but emendations to this line have been proposed; see the textual note.

 Stanza 373/Line 1490  "Forsooth as I you say," This phrase occurs here, in Stanza 375, in and in stanza 424, but nowhere before this (although there are a few other uses of "forsooth"). This is a curious pattern of occurrences which may indicate the use of a source.

 Stanza 373/Line 1491  The king is said to have sung as he rode. Sadly, this is not much help with identification. There was a famous early story about Richard I making himself known to his minstrel Blondel by a song he sang (Gillingham, p. 224, although he notes that it can hardly be true). As late as the reign of Richard III, probably the last king to die before the "Gest" was printed, we find bishops complaining that the King was too interested in music and dance (Ross-Richard, pp. 141-142). But we know that Edward II was interested enough in music to send a courtier to the Welsh marches to learn the crwth (Phillips, p. 37), and Hutchison, p. 10, reports that "he was to be a keen patron of musicians and minstrels." Given that he was also fond of "theatricals," it would be no surprise to find him a singer as well as a hearer of music.

 Stanza 373/Line 1492  Since the "monks" wear grey, not black, they are not portraying themselves as Benedictines -- incidentally meaning that they are not from St. Mary's. Nor are they Cisterians, the white monks.

 Stanza 375/Line 1500  "For this line see the note on stanza 373.

 Stanza 377/Lines 1505-1507  Here Robin in effect admits to living by poaching, despite claiming to be a yeoman of the forest. But see the note on Stanzas 32-33.

 Stanza 378/Line 1512  There is a textual variant in the spelling of the word "saynt"; it is possible that this is a difference between the meanint "saint" and "saintly," but we really cannot tell. There is no well-known saint named "Charity"; the idea here seems to be "for holy charity."

 Stanza 379/Lines 1501-1504, etc.  Note that the King and Robin speak to each other, seemingly in English, certainly without a translator. This implies a King who speaks English. William the Conqueror could not, nor could most of the kings between William I and Henry III. Richard I certainly could not (OxfordCompanion, p. 802. As Gillingham points out on p. 24, Richard had almost no English blood -- only one of his great-grandparents, Edith the wife of Henry I, could be considered English. The rest were all Normans or French or other "foreigners," Gillingham, p. 33, says Richard could write songs in Norman French and Provençal, and crack jokes in Latin -- but never mentions English. Markale declares on p. 57 that "never has an English king been so French").

The situation changed in the century after that. It is universally agreed that English was the first language of all kings from Henry VI (ascended 1422) on. Henry IV (1399-1413) is often said to be the earliest English King whose first language was English (Burrow/Turville-Petre, p. 17), Richard II (1377-1399) was clearly also fluent, having been able to casually converse with Wat Tyler's rebels while still in his early teens (Saul, p. 68ff.). Edward III certainly knew English, and Edward I spoke it as a second language (Prestwich1, p. 6); so it is not unreasonable to assume Edward II did also; Hutchison, p. 9, thinks he did. So does Phillips, p. 60, although he finds no English documents at all among Edward II's letters; over 90% were in French, with the rest in Latin.

 Stanza 380/Lines 1517-1518  A subtle and artful statement, this: It gives the strong impression of being a statement by a clergyman, and yet it is basically the truth: The King has been in Nottingham in the company of the king. He is the head of the King's company, but he has been with it.... And a good King should not lie.

 Stanza 381/Line 1524  The text here is uncertain (see textual note). Child's text "I wolde vouch it safe on the" means that, if the king/abbot had a hundred pounds, he would trust it to Robin Hood. The reading of b is, however, "I vouch it half on the," that is, he would turn half over to Robin if his budget were in better shape.

 Stanza 382/Lines 1525-1528  This should be Robin's cue to search the King's party (see the note on Stanza 28), yet he fails to do so. Is this another hint that this is a set-up?

 Stanza 384/Lines 1533-1536  "The greteth Edwarde." For King Edward see note to stanza 353. Actual instances of a King inviting an outlaw to meet him are not unknown -- it happen a lot in Scotland -- but many monarchs could not be trusted to keep their safe conduct. The royal seal was of course the means of validating official documents -- many of the early Norman and Plantagenet kings could not read or sign their names, and even if they could, the commoners could not read it. Thus developed the custom of sealing official documents. The King might have as many as three seals, and always had two, the Great Seal and the Privy Seal. The Great Seal was generally kept by the Chancellor, who from the time of Edward I was housed at Chancery, often away from the court (Lyon, p. 69). Hence the Privy Seal, kept by the keeper of the Privy Seal, but which tended to move with the King (unless, as was common, he used a third seal to move the privy seal). A complication in the case of Edward II was that he had lost the privy seal at Bannockburn (Phillips, pp. 233-234) -- and, astonishingly, managed to misplace it again a decade later, during his time in the north (although, that time, it was found after a few days; Phillips, p. 320).

The song of course does not make it clear whether the seal was the great or the privy seal. Given the situation, the privy seal seems more likely. But we cannot be sure; the usage of the seals varied (Jolliffe, p. 278); indeed, if we knew which seal was involved, it would be a dating hint. We also see the use of the King's seal in the "Monk" (Holt, p. 29), although there it is not addressed to the outlaws.
Knight/Ohlgren, p. 166, claims that the seal itself was revered. Too much weight probably should not be given to this; the English monarchy had not yet developed, for instance, the Tudor habit of calling the monarch "Your Majesty." The King was not a near-divine being -- as witness the fact that Edward II, and later his great-grandson Richard II, would be deposed....

Stanza 385/Lines 1537-1540 This is a crux (see the textual note). The last word of 385.1 may be "tarpe" or "targe" or possibly "seale" -- the latter the easiest word, but then the other readings would not have arisen. The actual text of b says that the king showed his broad "tarpe." There seems to be no such word in Middle English. Child's suggestion is "targe." The normal meaning of "targe" is "shield." A shield would not bear a seal. A shield might well show the King's colors, to help identify him in battle, but in that case he would not give it to a monk.

Knight/Ohlgren, p. 166, note that the OED lists "targe" as a word for the privy seal in the Edwardian period, based perhaps on the use of a shield in the seal at the time; and Dobson/Taylor, p. 107, also gloss "targe" as "seal."

This raises two difficulties. First, the seals of the Edwards did not contain shields -- all were quite similar, with the King mounted and wearing armor on one side, and enthroned on the other. The exchequer seal did have a shield -- but the exchequer seal isn't going to cause anyone to get all excited. Plus the use of "targe" for "seal" was obscure even at that time, and probably effectively vanished by the time the "Gest" was written. The only justification for assuming the targe is a seal, rather than a shield, is that Robin refers to the seal in the next stanza.

Robin for "curtesy" then gets down on one knee at the sight of whatever-it-is. This, if nothing else, demonstrates his respect for the king.

Stanza 387/Line 1548 For Robin's "trystel tre(e)" see the note on Stanza 176.

Stanza 389/Line 1555 For Robin's seven score followers, see the note on Stanza 229.

Stanza 390/Line 1560 "Saynt Austyn." This is usually stated to be Augustine of Canterbury, who converted Britain to Catholicism, not the more famous Augustine of Hippo. I am not absolutely convinced, however. The Dominicans (who first came to England in 1221; Powicke, p. 24) followed the rule of Augustine of Hippo (Oxford Companion, p. 301). And Edward II seems to have been fond of the Dominicans (see note to Stanza 213). Might he have picked up this oath from his Dominican confessor? In any case, this cannot he be regarded as an indication of date. Augustine was sent to Kent by Pope Gregory the Great in 597 (Benet, p. 967).

There is a passage in one of Gower's French works (Mirour de l'omme) mentioning Saint Augustine and an unknown "Robyn" in consecutive lines (20886-20887, as given in Mustanoja, p. 64). I doubt that this is significant, however.

Stanza 391/Lines 1563-1564 The king observes that Robin's men are "more at his byddynge" than are the King's own. This again hints at a date in the reign of Edward II. Nobody crossed Edward I -- at least not for long! Edward III had more trouble with his subordinates, especially about taxes, but his soldiers were quite obedient. Whereas orrders from Edward II were quite regularly ignored.

Discipline was not a widely-stressed virtue at this time. Reid, p. 32, notes that we have absolutely no records of soldiers training as a body. They learned their weapons, of course, but they do not seem to have practiced unit maneuvers -- certainly not at a scale larger than the company. So if Robin had his men firmly in hand, he really did have unusual control over his forces.

Stanza 397-398/Lines 1585-1589 About an archery contest in which Robin's men shoot at garlands at great distance. This is another indication that Robin's weapon must be the longbow, not a short bow. For another indication, and supporting evidence, see stanza 132.

Stanza 402/Lines 1606, 1608 The rhyme here, in all the prints, is spare... sore. It seems likely that the poet intended the rhymes to be pronounces "spare... sair." This is perhaps a hint of northern origin -- and of editing by a non-northern typesetter.

Stanza 405/Lines 1619-1620 Robin has had each man who loses pay off to his master -- presumably, for others in the competition, another archer who wins a head-to-head contest. But here he treats the king/abbot as his master, for no obvious reason. Is this another hint that Robin actually already knew it was the King?

Stanza 406/Lines 1621-1622 Many religious orders rejected shedding blood, with the interesting effect that we see fighting churchmen inventing weapons such as the mace and the war hammer so they could kill without letting blood. Probably most would not absolutely reject the striking of blows. It's a good bit of disguise, though.

Stanza 408/Lines 1629-1630 The strength of the disguised king falls Robin. All three Edwards were tall and strong (as was Edward IV later on), but Edward II in particular seems to have had a reputation for exception physical strength. Barbour, the author of the Bruce -- obviously no fan of Edward -- wrote that he was "the strongest man of any that you could find in any country" (Phillips, p. 83), although this was written half a century after Edward's reign. When he was overtaken by the enemy at Bannockburn, every blow he struck was said to have felled its victim (Phillips, p. 233); his strength was regarded as being responsible for his escape. We also read in "Adam Davy's Dreams about Edward II (written probably early in that king's reign) that Edward was a "kni(3)t of mychel mi(3)ht" (Emerson, p. 227, although CHEL1, p. 356, says that we do not know why Davy wrote; there might be an element of flattery).

The king in stanzas 359-360 had been very angry with Robin Hood, without, it seems promising him any particular punishment (he said he would take the knight's lands, but merely wished to see Robin). If he vowed punishment for Robin, he could at least technically use this blow as a basis for saying he had fulfilled the vow. Fulfilled it with his own hand, in fact.

 Stanza 411/Lines 1643-1644  "Now I know you well" -- somehow, Robin and Sir Richard recognize the King. Possibly Sir Richard had met him -- but Robin? Was it just by the strength of the King's arm (this is the explanation of Baldwin, p. 24, but is surely inadequate) Or by his face on his seal? Robin saw the seal, but seals are not very detailed. The only likely way for ordinary people to know the king (unless he wore a crown or the like) was coin portraits. This argues for one of the Edwards rather than an earlier King (see note on Stanza 49), and the later the better; it argues very strongly indeed against Richard I and John, who made so little change to the old molds that their coins still used the name of Henry II (OxfordCompanion, p. 224).

 Stanza 412/Lines 1645-1648  Note that Child had two versions of the first two lines of this stanza (see the textual note). In his original edition, he printed 'Mercy then, Robyn,' sayd our kynge, 'Vnder your trystyll-tre,' In a correction (volume V., p. 297 in the Dover edition) he amended this to following: 'Mercy,' then said Robyn to our kynge, 'Vnder this trystyll-tre.' The former reading, however, is very much to be preferred. Does the reading really mean what it says? Did the King expect that Robin would attack him if he became known? It sounds like it. Hunter hypothesized that Robin was one of Lancaster's rebels against Edward II. But here we again see evidence that Robin was not a rebel against a king, but an outlaw of some other sort. Under what context might we find a man who does not consider himself a rebel, but who is regarded as a rebel by the King? It is reasonable to assume that Robin was opposed to one of the King's retainers -- or, in the case of Edward II, one of that king's traitorous vassals. I find myself wondering if Robin might have been one of the followers of Adam Banaster, one of Lancaster's vassals who rebelled against his lord. (Prestwich3, p. 92; Prestwich3, p. 96 refers to a period of "virtual civil war" in Lancashire).

Hicks, p. 48, is even more harsh, declaring, 'Lancaster's misuse of his power reflects 'the repulsive nature of the man. A generous almsgiver and pious benefactor, perhaps more than conventionally devout', he was also sexually immoral, quarrelsome, selfish and vindictive. He was rapacious to his tenants, maintained his retainers beyond the legitimate bounds of lordship, and seized what he wanted in defiance of right and the law. He readily resorted to brutality, violence, in his Thorpe Waterville dispute with Pembroke, his suppression of Adam Banaster's rebellion, his feud with Warenne, Sir Gilbert Middleton's kidnapping of two cardinals, and when wasting Damory's lands." What would "you" do if he had been your overlord?

There is in fact a printed item (I hesitate to call it a song, or even a poem; it makes most doggerel look good) called "Robin Hood and the Duke of Lancaster: A Ballad," set to the tune of "The Abbot of Canterbury," which purports to treat of a quarrel between Robin and the Duke of Lancaster. It is printed in Dobson/Taylor (pp. 191-194), and there are several copies in the Bodleian collection (Douce Prints a.49(1), G. Pamph. 1665(8), Johnson c.74; reprinted on p. 398 of GutchII). It apparently was printed in 1727 (GutchII, p. 397). But it is almost beyond belief that it represents an actual tradition; it claims to have taken place in the year 1202, when John was King -- but there was no Duke of Lancaster in 1202; there were no Dukes in England at all (Edward III created the first English dukes, beginning by making his son Edward the Duke of Cornwall in 1337; Barber, p. 20). So you don't have to look up that piece. And, believe me, you don't want to. Gutch suggests that it is a satire about a courtier who wanted a job as a royal forester, presumably in the reign of George I or George II; Dobson/Taylor, p. 192, are even more specific, declaring it to refer to Lord Lechmere, Chancellor of the Duchy of Lancaster in the reign of George I.

 Stanza 412-Line 1646  For Robin's "trystel tre(e)" see the note on Stanza 176.

 Stanza 413/Lines 1651-1652  Here Robin formally asks the King's pardon, for himself and his men -- yet we still do not learn what his crime was!

It is interesting to note that, although Edward II seems rarely to have given out pardons as King, when Isabella and her rebels seemed to be in danger of taking over the country, Edward is reported to have given pardon to more than a hundred outlaws if they would join his forces (Phillips, p. 505 n. 307). This did not take place during Edward's northern excursion, but it might have figured into the legend somehow.

 Stanza 414/Lines 1654-1655  The king here tells a truth, although an ironic one: He intended to have Robin and his men leave the woods by taking them prisoner; instead he chooses to induce them to leave the woods by pardoning them.

For the effects of the offer of pardon and a place at the court, see the note to Stanza 435. For conditional pardons, see the note on Stanza 439.

 Stanza 416/Lines 1661-1664  Robin promises to come to court to be the King's servant (parallel, in a small way, to John and Much becoming yeomen of the crown in the "Monk"; cf. Holt1, p. 29). But he also promises to bring at least some of his men. To me, this seems to imply either that Robin wants pardon for all his men, or that he is promising to bring them all to be the King's soldiers (or bodyguards? If the year is 1323, Edward II might well have wanted a loyal bodyguard). Knight/Ohlgren, p. 166, say however that "The idea of Robin holding an alternative lordship, with his own retinue, is clear." What is not clear is what is meant by an "alternative lordship." Certainly Robin, if were gentrified, would want to keep a retinue, but there is no hint whatsoever that he is being offered any sort of title -- merely a position.

For Robin's seven score followers, see the note on Stanza 229. In this verse we see Robin with "seven score and three" followers. Probably this is just poetry, but it might be that the three are Little John, Scarlock, and Much, and the seven score are all the other unnamed archers who exist mostly to supply "alarums and excursions."

 Stanza 417/Lines 1665-1668  Baldwin, p. 41, follows Pollard in pointing out that no outlaw could dictate the conditions of his own pardon. This is true in the sense that it was up to the King to grant the pardon and set the conditions. On the other hand, outlaws could decide whether to take the pardon -- and so could negotiate what it would take for them to give up their rebellion. I would consider this to be a warning by Robin to the King -- and, as it turns out, it was a warning Edward would have been wise to heed.

 Stanza 421/Lines 1681-1684 Knight/Ohlgren, p. 167, says that the King's wearing green livery "acknowledges forest values." It also gets the king out of dirty (sweaty? flea-infested?) garments, so he might simply have wanted to change clothes. Nonetheless it does seem symbolic -- a symbol much more likely from Edward II than either his father or son; see the note on Stanza 424.

 Stanza 422/Line 1685  "Lyncolne grene," or Lincoln Green, and Kendall Green, were famous colours in the middle ages -- probably because greens were hard to make (Finlay, p. 275). There were few good dyes at the time -- and none at all that allowed cloth to be dyed green in one step. Paintings typically used copper compounds for greens -- but these were not good dyes. Green cloth was made by mixing the blue of woad (indigo, or modern FD&C blue dye #2) with any of several organic yellows. Supposedly Lincoln Green used a yellow dye called "weld" (Finlay, p. 276) -- usually applying the dyes serially. Incidentally, weld fades faster than indigo, so if by chance you come across a piece of green cloth from that era, it will now appear blue (Finlay, p. 276). Why Lincoln Green? Gummere, p. 319, quotes someone (Ritson?) as explaining that it was good at letting the outlaws hide from the deer. Neither Ritson nor Gummere could know it, but this is rather unlikely. Deer do not see as we do. Human vision is trichromatic -- red, green, and blue. But trichromatic vision, among non-marsupial mammals, is exclusive to primates (Dawkins, pp. 146-150). Deer, and all the other mammals of English forests, have dichromatic vision -- green and blue sensors only. We do know that dichromats can see through various forms of camouflage which fool trichromats (Dawkins, p. 151), and there are certainly concealment schemes which will fool a dichromat and not a trichromat. Without knowing the exact shade of green, we can’t say just how a deer or rabbit would perceive a man in Lincoln Green, but based on the way it was made, I don’t think it would be ideal camouflage. Brown or black would be better.

Others argue that Lincon Green was camouflage against human intruders. This makes some sense. Lincoln Green is a little too olive to be ideal forest coloration -- but there was no good leaf green available.

Finlay, p. 276, suggests instead that Robin dressed his men Lincoln Green "to show off," because green cloth was expensive due to the need for multiple dying steps. However, the evidence is that Lincoln Green was not that expensive -- certainly not when compared with, say, scarlet red based on kermes. The Welsh soldiers in Edward III's wars, for instance, were clothed in white and green (Hewitt, p. 39) -- and it is certain that no one would have spent much on clothing the Welsh!

Nonetheless, Kendall Green is a good symbolic color for outlaws, because Kent was famously considered a rebellious county (Cawthorne, p. 78) -- e.g. most of Wat Tyler's rebels came from there. This is probably somewhat exaggerated; Kentish rebels tended to be noticed more often in London because rebels in Kent could reach the city far more easily than those in, say, Lincolnshire. But Kent did have fewer villeins and more free men (OxfordComp, p. 959), so the people probably were somewhat more rowdy.

Wimberly, p. 178, says that green "is a fairy color and of ill omen," but points out that it is one of the most common colors of clothing in the ballads. Despite all those attempts to link Robin with the Green Man or the like, I doubt that the color has any mystical significance.

For more on cloth offered by Robin, see the notes on Stanzas 70-72.

 Stanza 424/Line 1694  "For this line see the note on stanza 373.

 Stanza 424/Line 1695  The plucke-buffet, believed to be a contest in which the players exchange blows as forfeits, is attested in many forms. The extreme form is the beheading game of "Sir Gawain and the Green Knight." It also occurs in the tale of "The Turk and Gawain," found in the Percy folio, although we cannot tell the exact details because the folio is so damaged at this point (Tolkien/Gordon, p. xix). It also features in two other Gawain romances, the related "Syre Gawene and the Carle of Carlyle" and "The Carle off Carlile" (Lacy, p 154), although the latter of these is almost certainly later than the "Gest" and the former may be.

As a sport, it is sometimes known as an "Irish Stand-Down." Child, in his notes on this stanza (page 55) mentions a romance in which Richard the Lion-Hearted himself engaged in this game, but this is one of those stories (like Richard killing a lion with his bare hands by tearing out its heart -- and then eating it raw; Gillingham, pp. 7-8) which is demonstrably false.

Knight/Ohlgren, p. 167, seem to think that the contest between Robin and the King was also more serious than some casual shooting with the bow, followed by a blow to the loser, but they offer no reason for this hypothesis.

More interesting is the question of whether any English king would engage in such a contest with his subjects.

Holt1, p. 61, argues that the legend of the King being reconciled with Robin is derived from Fulk, or Hereward, or maybe (who knows?) Alfred and the Cakes (an idea going back at least to Clawson, p. 104, who on p. 105 mentions a similar story told of Henry II), all involving an incognito king. This is of course a common theme of folklore (see the note on stanza 368) but the fact that the motif is legendary does not preclude a reconciliation between King and outlaws -- several rebellions ended that way, because it was easier for the King to befriend the rebel than run him down!

This motif does however argue against a date in the reigns of Richard I or Edward I -- they were strong grudge-holders. Prestwich1, p. 202, says explicitly, "Clemency towards his enemy was not in Edward [I]'s character." What's more, Edward I had a strong streak of violence when crossed (Prestwich1, p. 3); he just wasn't the sort to go off and negotiate with rebels.

There is an actual recorded instance of Edward I accidentally ending up in single combat with an enemy because a ditch cut Edward off from his supporters, and Edward did formally forgive the other man -- "but there is no evidence that he was ever regarded with any special favor" (Prestwich1, p. 56, although Baldwin, p. 146, says that "There is nothing to substantiate Nicholas Trivet's story" of this encounter, and Pollard, p. 196, flatly declares it fiction. Clawson, pp. 107-108, points to the tale of John the Reeve, in the Percy Folio, in which Edward I is separated from his followers, but this is not the same tale).

Baldwin, p. 95, has a good summary when he says that "Edward [I] was respected b his barons, but he was a man of violent temper far removed from the jovial and understanding 'King Edward' of the ballads."

Richard I was, if anything, worse; he was aloof and generally lacked the common touch; according to Kelly.A, p. 173, "Richard was less affable in crowds than Henry [II], more selective in his friendships, and less accessible to general company. He lacked the charm that attracted a large personal following... He often ruffled his peers with an overweening brusqueness."

He was such a snob that, when he heard a hawk shriek in a commoner's house, he went in and attacked the owners (even though they were not his subjects) -- and was forced to take to his heels when they fought back (McLynn, p. 144). During the conquest of Cyprus, he insulted the island's inhabitants by shaving off the men's beards just because they were ruled by his enemy (McLynn, p. 157). At Acre, he demeaned the Duke of Austria so badly that he left the crusade -- and Leopold of Austria was a "duke", almost as high on the social scale as Richard himself. Richard didn't have subjects; he had two kinds of slaves, the chained and the unchained. The notion of him even talking to a commoner, other than one of his soldiers, is absurd.

Henry II had a way with common people, and was relatively accessible to them -- Dahmus, pp. 148-150 -- but even if we can accept such an early date for Robin, Henry was another grudge-holder.

Henry III, according to Baldwin, p. 118, "was often tempermental but he did not bear grudges."

By contrast, Edward II had a strange interest in common tasks and men, according to Hutchison, pp. 148-149 -- he liked woodworking and metalwork, kept company with craftsmen, and worked at thatching. A story tells of him engaged in hedging and ditching when he might have been at mass (Prestwich3, p. 80), and there are records of him ordering plaster so that he might build walls (Prestwich3, p. 81). Phillips, p. 13, quotes his best contemporary biographer as saying, "If he had practiced the use of arms, he would have exceeded the prowess of King Richard. Physically this would have been inevitable, for he was tall and strong, a handsome man with a fine figure.... If only he had given to arms the attention that he expended on rustic pursuits...." After Bannockburn, a member of his household declared that the king could not win battles if he "appl[ied] himself to making ditches and digging and other improper occupations" (Phillips, p. 15).

Even Hutchison, almost his only defender, admits on p. 2 his "rather odd personality." Although most instances of him engaging in a form of common labor are attested by only one source, Phillips, p. 72, mentions four source attesting his love for ordinary men's work, and the reports of him spending time rowing are well-attested. Phillips goes on to note that Edward II "enjoyed the near-presence of the low-born," and mentions an instance in 1325 of sailors and carpenters eating in the royal chamber.

What's more, Edward II liked games, including gambling games, and did not insist upon winning (Phillips, p. 75). This fits the stanza's indication that Robin out-shot the king and so was entitled to beat up his monarch. (Possibly the King felt this to be safer than to have his half dozen men fight all of Robin's band.) The wonder is that the King decided to participate, having seen Robin's prowess. He was probably a good archer with a hunting bow, but a longbow was a different matter. And where Edward I, for instance, tended to look down his nose even at the higher nobility, Edward II displayed very little snobbishness. In Edward I's last years, there was a quarrel between the King and his son over the size and expense of the Prince's household. According to Phillips, p. 99 and note 131, there were four men the Prince really wanted to keep around him. Two were of gentle blood -- Piers Gaveston and Gilbert de Clare -- but the other two were yeomen. Jolliffe, pp. 369-370, declares that "like several of our more incompetent kings, Edward II was inclined to advance popular principles" -- meaning, in this case, the principles of ordinary people rather than the high nobility; Edward increased the role of the commons in parliament (presumably to reduce the power of the barons).

It is true that Edward II was a man who never changed his mind, and he certainly held grudges. His best early biographer wrote in the Life of Edward II that, in 1322 when Edward finally seemed to have defeated his enemies, "the earl of Lancaster once cut off Piers Gaveston's head, and now by the king's command the earl of Lancaster had lost his head" (quoted by Phillips, p. 409). But Edward's grudges were very specific and pointed. A man who had not directly offended him or joined his enemies was forgivable. (To be sure, Hunter thought that the original Robin Hood served the Earl of Lancaster, and that this was why he needed the King's pardon. But the subtle hints in the "Gest" all point to an outlaw who was loyal to the King all along, as several mentions in the "Gest" demonstrate; Mark Ormrod also apparently pointed this out in an unpublished paper; Pollard, p. 253 n. 58.)

If ever there had been a king likely to meet with outlaws, it was Edward II. Doherty, pp. 23-24, explains this oddity based on the way his father neglected him: "Left to his own devices, bereft of a father and a mother-figure, the young Edward naturally looked for friendship from others, whether they were ditchers, rowers, sailors or boatmen." Doherty, p. 26, also thinks that Edward II had "a desperate yearning to be liked."

Edward's willingness to hang around with common people became so proverbial that, according to pp. 60-61 of Doherty, a pretender actually showed up during this reign claiming to be the real King Edward; he had been swapped with a peasant boy after a nurse had allowed him to be injured and was afraid to reveal the truth. The "proof" of this was that Edward showed tastes such as only a peasant would have, and thus must be an imposter. Naturally this pretender was executed (as was his cat, which obviously was innocent), but the whole story shows what Edward's reputation was like.

The only other Plantagenet I can imagine hanging around with common folks was John. However, we have already read, in stanzas 403-409, tells of an Irish stand-down between Robin and the King, in which the King gives Robin a blow which floors him. The Plantagenets were mostly very tall -- Edward I was called "Longshanks," and when his skeleton was measured, he was found to have been 6'2" (Prestwich, p. 567). Edward III is said to have been 6'3". Richard is said to have been tall, well-built, and with unusually long arms and legs (McLynn, p. 24). The only exceptions were Henry II, who was of average height, and John, who at 5'5" was perhaps the shortest Plantagenet known to us (Warren-John, p. 31). Henry II was strong despite his height. But John does not seem to have been a mighty man.

To be sure, the last King Edward to live before the publication of the "Gest," Edward IV, was so open to commoners that he became the hero of "King Edward the Fourth and a Tanner of Tamworth" [Child 273]. Edward IV's brother Richard III seems to have tried -- seemingly for the first time -- to actually build a government out of men who were not members of the nobility; Cheetham, pp. 161-162. But both of these are almost certainly too late. In connection with the King's fist-fight with Robin, see the note on Stanzas 429-430 regarding Edward II's fondness for horseplay and practical jokes.

 Stanza 428/Lines 1709-1712  Upon seeing what appears to be a mass invasion by Robin Hood's men, the people of Nottingham are very afraid (though without reason, as it turns out). This may very well connect with their hostility to him in Stanzas 296.

 Stanzas 429-430/Lines 1713-1717  The king laughs at the rout of the townsfolk, as people try by any means possible to flee the coming of Robin Hood. This too fits well with what we know of Edward II, who seems to have been fond of practical jokes and rough humor (Doherty, pp. 50-51). One can imagine him staging this little scene to see how the folk of Nottingham would respond; indeed. Mersey, p. 188, calls this "a jest on the king's part." For another instance of his fondness for low games and roughhousing, see the note on Stanzas 429-430.

Knight/Ohlgren, p. 167, compare this to the story of "Robin Hood's Progress to Nottingham" [Child139], in which the people of Nottingham also fear and attack the outlaw. They see this as a contrast between "forest and urban values," but "Robin Hood's Progress to Nottingham" is a later writing and not a source for the "Gest." And while there doubtless is a contrast between town and outlaw morals, the fear of the people of Nottingham more likely derives from the fact that Robin has already had two conflicts with them, one at the time of the archery contest when they attacked him and once when Robin attacked and killed the sheriff.

 Stanza 433/Line 1731  It is interesting to observe that Robin, who in Stanza 68 had been able to lend 400 pounds, apparently has only 100 pounds at his disposal here. (For more on the value of this money, see the notes to Stanzas 49 and 120). In stanza 150 we see the sheriff offer Little John 20 marks per year; in Stanzas 170-171, Little John offers the cook 20 marks per year to join Robin's band. Since 100 pounds is 150 marks, Robin's 100 pounds would pay only seven men for a full year at their old wage. If he truly had seven score men (Stanza 416), he could have paid them only one mark each -- or enough for three weeks at their old rate. See also the note on Stanza 435.

The implication, obviously, is that either Robin left much of his money behind, or that he had lost it in the interval between his intervention on the knight's behalf and the time he met the king. (Or, of course, that this section is from another source with more reasonable ideas of what money was worth.) It seems more likely that Robin's fortune would have declined; traffic would have learned to avoid Barnsdale if Robin became a truly successful robber (note the fear of him shown by the people of Nottingham in Stanza 428), plus his band probably grew in that time, meaning that he had to pay more in wages.

One wonders if Robin might not have accepted the King's offer because he was going broke. Holt, p. 118, makes the interesting observation that, by the time the "Gest" was probably written, "local society fell, in descending order, into knights, squires, gentlemen, yeomen and husbandmen.... Only the first two, knight and squire, had distinguishing qualifications. The gentleman, particularly, was sometimes simply he who claimed to be a gentleman, or lives like a gentleman, perhaps especially one who got into debt like a gentleman." That certainly sounds like Robin's behavior.

 Stanza 434/Lines 1733-1736  Gummere, commenting on Robin's prodigality, says on p. 319,
"This liberal expenditure was the proper thing for knights and men of rank...." But his chief expense was likely just paying his men. In stanza 52, we perhaps saw a hint of the Tale of the Prodigal Son. This too may have been influenced by that tale (in chapter 15 of Luke); the Prodigal takes his inheritance, spends it on loose living, and then has to go home in disgrace.

It is interesting, although perhaps not very relevant, to note that Grafton declared that Robin went to the greenwood because of excess generosity (Knight, p. 1; Knight/Ohlgren, p. 28).

Stanza 435/Line 1737 After a year at the King's court (literally fifteen months, but the author is always adding threes to things), Robin has used up his resources. This is not really unusual. The King's senior officers often did not enjoy actual payment for their work; rather, the King granted them some sort of compensation. A cleric would get a certain number of "livings"; a secular lord would be given an office or the rent from sundry manors. We note that the King's offer of a place at his court (stanzas 414-415) contained no such offer. Perhaps Robin assumed one would be forthcoming (see stanza 420, where he seems to accept the King's livery); perhaps he did not realize the need for such a grant; perhaps the King simply did not live up to his promise. This would fit well with either Edward I, who was notably stingy with pay for his officials, or with Edward II after his victories of 1322-1323 -- Phillips, p. 421, reports that in this period "Like the archetypal miser Edward [II] not only gathered every penny he could but was remarkably loath to spend any more than he had to." One almost wonders if he mightn't have brought Robin to court to try to get a hand on Robin's treasure.

As mentioned in the notes on Stanza 433, Robin's 100 pounds would pay only seven men for a full year at their old wage -- little wonder they deserted. Even if he paid only the three pence a day expected by valets (see the note on Stanza 150), that would allow him to maintain only about twenty men for a year.

Stanza 436/Line 1742 There is a variant here which perhaps affects Robin's feelings about watching the archers; see the textual note.

Stanza 437/Lines 1745-1748 Robin, in the King's service, recalls being a successful archer. Clearly he is not spending much time practicing with his bow at this time. This, it seems to me, is exceptionally strong evidence that this is not happening during the reign of Edward III. That king won his victories with the bow, and would not put the best Bowman in England out to pasture! One wonders if Robin might not have been disappointed with the court in other ways. This was the period when Edward's favorites the Elder and Younger Hugh Despensers were dominating -- and corrupting -- the government. (For more on them, see the notes on Stanza 93, or on "Hugh Spencer's Feats in France" [Child 158].) It was a period when no one's money or land was safe if the Despensers wanted it. Phillips, p. 448, notes that Edward II was deeply if indirectly involved in their extortion -- it couldn't have happened without his consent. But the attitude at this time seems always to have been "It's not the King, it's his evil counselors." Robin could have been -- would have been! -- disgusted by the Despensers, and might not have blamed the King. But he would doubtless wish to get away.

Stanza 439/Lines 1753-1756 Robin determines to leave the King's service. This is an interesting decision if he had taken the King's pardon, because most pardons in the Edwardian period were conditional: "Though a few pardons were granted in advance, for the great majority of men indicted of murder or other serious felonies, charters of pardon were withheld till the [military] services had been performed and attested by the leaders in whose companies the men had served. Even then the pardons were frequently subject to further conditions" (Hewitt, p. 29). For a man hired as a soldier, Hewitt (p. 30) lists four typical conditions of a pardon, of which Robin arguably violates three: He must put up surety for his behavior (which Robin, one he is broke, can no longer do); that he be available for service to the King for up to a year at a time (Robin initially fulfills this, then violates it -- and since most of his men deserted him before he himself quit the court [Stanzas 433-435], they would have violated it immediately upon desertion), and that he stay in the King's service while still in the vicinity of the conflict (which, if the King is Edward II and the conflict is that resulting in Edward's overthrow, he failed to do). Thus Robin, in all likelihood, violates the conditions of his pardon.

Pollard, p. 206, sees this as a sort of analogy: He believes that the King is Edward III, considered responsible for restoring justice -- but even this ideal king could not restore justice enough to satisfy Robin.

The difficulties with this hypothesis are myriad: First is the internal inconsistency -- if Pollard is going to claim that the "Gest" is set in the reign of Edward III because Edward III is a paragon of justice, then he can't really have it both ways. Nor is there any hint of this sort of analogy anywhere else in the "Gest." Plus Robin doesn't complain of injustice; he complains of being broke and of not being used as an archer.

In any case, Robin had to leave the King's service. Since the "Gest" and the "Death" tell the same general story, the story of Robin's death almost certainly existed before the "Gest" was composed. So Robin had to be in the greenwood in order to die. That means he had to leave the court.
Stanza 440/Line 1759 Robin (claims to have) founded a chapel to Mary Magdalene. Given his piety, his ill management of his money, and his magnanimity, it seems not unlikely that Robin would have endowed a chapel -- it was a common thing to do in this period, when the prayers of the faithful were thought to shorten one's time in purgatory. The dedication to St. Mary Magdalene is interesting -- the first genuinely appropriate mention of a saint in the "Gest." Robin would naturally have wanted a female saint, and Mary Magdalene was the saint of penitents (Benet, p. 975). We have another faint parallel to the story of David here, although in the case of David and Saul, David was already in trouble with the King, whereas Robin is merely dissatisfied. David (thought Jonathan) tells Saul that he must go home for a family religious celebration. Having left the court, he flees and becomes an outlaw. The core of this story is in 1 Samuel, chapter 20.
Stanza 442/Line 1767 "Barefote and wolwarde" -- i.e. barefoot and with wool next to the skin. Walking barefoot was the standard token of a pilgrimage or penitent -- e.g. when Raymond of Toulouse set out to lead the Christian army on the last stage of the journey to Jerusalem in the First Crusade, he walked barefoot (Runciman1, p. 261). When Jane Shore was forced to do penance for her adultery with Edward IV, "on a Sunday, wearing nothing but her kirtle, she was led barefoot through the streets, a taper in her hand" (Jenkins, p. 166). Wearing wool next to the skin -- i.e. presumably a hair shirt -- is an even stronger sign of penitence; a hair shirt irritated the skin, and also held lice, so it was painful -- and it could be worn under other garments so that one could suffer a penance without parading one's piety before men. Becket, for instance, was said to have been wearing a hairshirt when he died (Oxford Companion, p. 90).
Gummere, p. 120, notes a similar reference in Piers Plowman (B.xviii.1 in Skeat's edition): "Wooleward and weet-shoed went I forth after," which Langland/Schmidt, p. 306 (which spells the third word "weetshoed"), glosses as "With my skin toward the wool [i.e. with no shirt toward my cloak] and with wet feet [with feet shod with wet rather than with wet shoes]." Gummere also finds such a penance in v. 3512f. of "The Pricke of Conscience" by Hampole (that is, Richard Rolle, died 1349, known as the "Hermit of Hampole"); Benet, p. 941 -- although, according to Sisam, pp. 36-37, his authorship of "The Pricke of Conscience" has been strongly questioned. NewCentury, p. 940, calls the "Pricke" the most popular poem of the fourteenth century but notes that there is no evidence that Rolle wrote it).
As Knight/Ohlgren emphasize on p. 168, this is a sign of penance, not poverty.
Stanza 445/Lines 1777-1780 As Robin arrives in the greenwood "on a merry morning," he hears the birds singing. Pollard, p. 72, notes this as an invocation of the legend of the merry greenwood. It does seem to indicate that Robin returned to the forest in late spring or summer.
Stanza 448/Line 1791 For Robin's seven score followers, see the note on Stanza 229.
Stanza 450/Line 1798 Robin spent "Twenty yere and two" in the greenwood after leaving the King. This would seem as if it might be a dating hint -- but it isn't much of one. Edward I reigned 35 years (1272-1307), Edward III reigned for fifty (give or take a few months; his official reign was 1327-1377), and Edward IV, from first to last, reigned just about exactly 22 (1461-1483, although with a hiatus in 1470-1471). Only Edward II fell short of this total -- he reigned twenty years, 1307-1327.
Thus Edward I or Edward III might be meant, or the number might be a later adjustment to the reign of Edward IV. But there is another intriguing possibility, which gives us a prefect chronological dovetail.
The "Gest" says that Robin served the King for about fifteen months, then returned to the greenwood for 22 years before being killed by the prieress at Kirklees. In that time he presumably assembled a new band, who on his death would need a new leader or job. If the King is Edward II, and the year he met Robin is 1322/1323, then one year plus 22 years later is in the period 1345-1346 -- just in time for Robin's excellent archers to win the Battle of Crecy in 1346! The problem, of course, is that Robin stayed in the greenwood all that time "For all drede of Edwarde our Kinge." If this is read as meaning Edward was king for 22 years and more, Edward II cannot be meant. On the gripping hand, if the 1346 date be accepted, would it not make sense for Edward III to pardon the underlings if their leader was now dead?
Stanzas 451-455/Lines 1801-1820 These five stanzas summarize, or rather hint at, the tale of betrayal which is the theme of "Robin Hood's Death" [Child 120]. Dependence on the same legend (although not on the same actual text) seems sure. Is this an indication of how the author of the "Gest" used his other materials? Probably not; it seems likely that he made fuller use of earlier sources for the cycle of the knight and the abbott, e.g.
The tale of Robin's end as told in the fuller versions of the "Death" has one more parallel to the tale of Fulk FitzWarin, in that Fulk, in one of his innumerable conflicts with King John, finds himself in a fight. Sir Ber[n]ard de Blois attacks him from behind; Fulk spins around and kills him -- nearly cuts him in half, in fact (Cawthorne, p. 145). This is much like what happens with Red Roger in the "Death." But Fulk, unlike Robin, survives (although so severely wounded that he falls into a coma and has to be taken from the field; Cawthorne, p. 146).

It does appear that Munday, in rewriting the legend, knew some relative of the story in the "Gest" but not the full tale in the "Death." Robin is poisoned, not bled to death, by his uncle, the prior of York, and a "Sir Doncaster" (Cawthorne, p. 80; and see the Cast of Characters on p. 303 of Knight/Ohlgren).

Although the "Gest" does not tell the tale of the last arrow found in the "Death," that account is another indication of a date in the reign of Henry III or later. Robin, in his weakness, needs help to fire the last shot. But if his bow were a crossbow, as it would have been in the time of Richard I, then one person could crank it for him and even a dying man could aim and fire it. The last arrow can only have come from a longbow.

Child in his notes on the "Death" suggests a parallel to "Sheath and Knife" [Child 16], where the girl asks her brother to shoot her and bury her at a spot she chooses. It seems to me, however, that this in fact reverses the motifs. In "Sheathe and Knife," she chooses the spot, and the bow is relatively incidental (perhaps he uses the arrow so that he does not have to slay her with his own hand). In the "Death," the bow and arrow is essential and the spot trivial. If anything, the analogy is to something such as "John Henry" [Laws I1], who dies with his hammer in his hand.

 Stanzas 451, 454/Lines 1803, 1815  The place where Robin Hood was killed is somewhat uncertain. Child prints "Kyrkesly" in stana 451, "Kyrke[s]ly" in 454; for the evidence, see the textual note. In the "A" (Percy folio) text of the "Death," it is "Churchles" or "Churchleeles" ("church Lees" A.1.3, "Churchleeles" A.11.3, "Churchlee" A.11.4, "church lees" A.12.1 Churchlee A.24.4), aligning "Church-Lee" with the more northern words for the same thing, "Kirk-Lee." The broadside versions of the "Death" (Child's "B") give "Kirkly" or "Kirkly-Hall" ("Kirkly-hall" broadside title, "Kirkly" B.3.1, "Kirkly-hall" B.4.1, "Kirkly" B.12.1, "Kirkly-hall" B.12.3, "Kirkly-hall" B.14.3, "Kirkleyeys" B.19.4; also "Kirkleys" and "Kirkley Monastery" in the end matter to B.b), which is also the reading of the Davis text from Virginia. The retelling of this tale in "Robin Hood and the Valiant Knight" [Child 153] has a tail note which reads "Birkslay," perhaps derived from the reading "Bircklies" of Grafton (for which see below).

The region of Kirklees on modern maps is south and somewhat west of Leeds, northeast of Manchester, and west of Wakefield. Knight/Ohlgren, p. 168, following Child, point specifically to the priory of Kirklees in west Yorkshire. According to Holt, pp. 87-88, it is twenty miles west of Barnsdale (far enough west that some might even have thought it to be in Lancashire, which has also been suggested as its location). Or, perhaps, it really is a generic name, "the Lee of the [unnamed] Kirk."

There is also a Kirkby not far north of modern Liverpool (one of quite a few Kirbys scattered about England), but it is rather far west of Robin Hood's usual haunts. The "Gest" merely says that the prioress of Kirklees "nye was of hys kinne," i.e. a close relative, but stanza 10 of Child's "A" text of the "Death" calls him his aunt's daughter, i.e. first cousin, and in the "B" text of the "Death" he refers to her as his cousin in stanza 2, and she calls him cousin in stanza 5. Davis's text of the death also has him murdered by his cousin, although it is not said that she is the prioress.

In Grafton's Chronicle of 1569, which we met in the introduction, we find the first dated mention of the claim that Robin was bled to death (Knight/Ohlgren, p. 29). Grafton lists the place as "Bircklies," which I do not find on any map of England (there is a "Birtley" in the Newcastle area, but that's pretty far from Robin's haunts). Knight/Ohlgren suggest that "Bircklies" is a misreading of "Kircklies," which seems likely. Grafton's account does seem to confirm the antiquity of the details in the "Death," although he adds the curious statement that the prioress of the place set up a memorial stone for Robin, "wherein the names of Robert Hood, William of Goldesborough and others were graven" (Knight/Ohlgren, p. 29).

Grafton's explanation for why she set up the stone was so that travellers would no longer fear being robbed by Robin (Baldwin, pp. 74-75). Of course, were that the actual reason, she might well have set up the stone withouthe possessing Robin's actual body.

Drayton also knew the story that Robin died at Kirkley (Gummere, p. 322). Hunter suggested that the Prioress of Kirklees was one Elizabeth Staynton, possibly related to the Hoods of Wakefield (Cawthorne, p. 49). But the few details we have about Staynton do not really support the legend of Robin -- e.g. Baldwin, p. 74, says that she was indeed a nun at Kirklees in 1344 (which fits brilliantly with the reconstruction we gave above), but there is no evidence that she was the prioress.

Pollard, p. 120, suggests that the fact Robin is killed by a prioress is significant -- that it is the last token of the conflict between Robin and the church; he compares on p. 121 Chaucer's monk who "loved venerye." And we certainly are told in stanza 452 that the prioress loved Sir Roger, implying unchastity, and in 455 that he lay by her. This is not quite proof that she betrayed her vows (they might have been friends, and she might have allowed him to stay in hiding at the nunnery), but it is a strong indication.
The caution is that the parallel in the "Death" does not show the theme infidelity at all clearly. The prioress's unchastity might be in the missing sections of the Percy version, but Robin's anticlericalism is not evident. That the Catholic hierarchy was corrupt in the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries is obvious -- Chaucer's Pardoner is even better proof than his Monk, and "Pierce the Ploughman's Crede" has much to say about the degraded nature of various friars (Barr, p. 6). But condemnation of the Church does not seem to be an essential part of the Robin Hood legend although it is a major theme of the "Gest."
 Stanza 452/Line 1806  "Donkesley" is the reading of the prints, but two stanzas later we read
"Doncaster," which is a real place; Knight/Ohlgren, p. 168, suggest that Donkesly is a mistaken conflation of "Kirklees" and "Doncaster."
It is interesting to note that that, of the nine characters in the "Gest" to be given a personal name (Robin Hood, Little John, King Edward, Scarlock/Scathelock, Much the Miller's Son, Gilbert of the White Hand, Reynold, Sir Richard, and Roger of Doncaster), only Roger of Doncaster is Robin's enemy. All his other enemies -- the Sheriff, the Abbot of St. Mary's and his associates, the Prioress of Kirklees -- are given titles only. Unfortunately, the name doesn't help, since we have too few details about Roger of Doncaster to offer a secure identification.
Cawthorne, pp. 202-204, mentions several Rogers who are possibilities. There was a Roger of Doncaster at Wakefield in service to the earl Warenne, although this is rather early. There is a Roger son of William of Doncaster who was given eight acres of land at Crigglestone (now a parish in Wakefield) in 1327. Cawthorne on p. 203 sums up the case for one Roger of Doncaster (identified by Hunter) who fits well in the reign of Edward II: "In 1306, he was sent by the Archbishop of York to be priest at the church in Ruddington near Nottingham. According to the records, he was still the parish priest there in 1328.... What's more, Roger the chaplain also seems to have been a knight -- and a knight with a chequered sexual history. In June 1309, a 'Sir Roger de Doncastria' was charged with adultery with Agnes, the wife of Philip de Pavely."
Throw in the fact that, as a chaplain, Roger would have easier access than most to a nunery, and the fact that there were "scandalous" rumours that the nuns of Kirklees in Yorkshire in 1315 (Cawthorne, p. 203), and we have a surprisingly good fit.
But it is by no means clear that all these mentions in fact describe one man; Holt, p. 61, declares that they in fact refer to at least two distinct Rogers.
 Stanza 454/Lines 1809-1812  This verse raises the question, Why was it the concern of the Prioress and Sir Roger of Doncaster to kill Robin? Why not the authorities? One possibility is that there was a reward, another is that Sir Roger was a local under-sheriff or the like. Or maybe he had been robbed by Robin. But I suspect it is a theme we also see in the Jesse James story: "He said there was no man with the law in his hand Who could take Jesse James when alive." Or catch Robin Hood while alive -- note that we saw this in Stanza 365, etc., that no outsider could catch Robin Hood.
 Stanza 455/Line 1818  This is the most explicit indication of the prioress's unchastity; see the note on Stanza 452. It is, however, just possible that the statement that Sir Roger lay by the prioress means that he lay in wait.
 Stanza 456/Lines 1823-1824  "For he was a good outlawe, And dyde pore men moch god."
Pollard, pp. 192-193, compares this with the final stanzas of "The Outlaw's Song of Trailbaston," for which see the note on stanza 15.
The last line of the next-to-last stanza of the "Outlaw's Song" is rendered "Nor a thief out of malice to do people harm" on p. 10 of Ohlgren, and "Nor was I wicked robber to do people harm" on p.
192 of Pollard; this is the line Pollard thinks parallels the "Gest." It seems clear, however, that there is no literary dependence between the two.
Last updated in version 2.6
File: C117H

Gest of Robyn Hode, A [Child 117] --- Part 10

DESCRIPTION: This concludes the notes to "A Gest of Robyn Hode" [Child 117]. This contains the textual notes.
NOTES [10037 words]: As mentioned in the Introduction, there are very many variants among the prints of the "Gest," and some places where the text has been entirely lost. Many scholars have worked on the text, but none of the editions can be considered the last word. Indeed, I think a great deal of additional work needs to be done. This section summarizes most of the major variants, with occasional commentary on why one reading or another might be preferred. I have of course added my own observations where relevant.

The prints are referred to by Child's sigla, a b c d e f g (plus pq for the two fragments found since his time). For discussion of these copies, see the section "The Text of the Gest." As in the notes on the content of the "Gest," references are to Child's stanza numbers and Knight/Ohlgren's line numbers.

 Stanza 4/Line 13  "Scarlock." There is a variant in the spelling; the a text calls him "Scarlock," while b and f use "Scathelock," which g simplifies to "Scathlock." The fragment d has "Scathelocke" in stanza 293, which is perhaps as close as we can come to a "tiebreaker." We find other names in the later ballads, e.g. the first line of "Robin Hood and the Prince of Aragon" [Child 129] calls him "Will Scadlock."

"Guy of Gisborne," stanza 13, refers to "Scarlett"; the "Monk" has "Wyll Scathloke" in stanza 63, and the Percy text of the "Death" has "Will Scarlett" in stanza 2. The parliamentary roll for Winchester in 1432 has the gag line "Robyn, hode, Inne, Grenewode, Stode, Godeman, was, hee, lytel Joon, Muchette Millerson, Scathelock, Reynoldn" (Holt1, p. 69; cf. Cawthorne, p. 58).

The Forresters manuscript version of "Robin Hood's Delight" [Child 136] corrects the "Scarlock" of the broadsides to "Scathlock," which Knight, p. xvii, declares the more traditional form. There is also an instance in the Forresters book where a later hand has corrected "Will Stutley" to "Will Scathlock" in the title of the ballad "Robin Hood Rescuing Will Stutly" [Child 141] (Knight, pp. xxvi, 92), but the manuscript also has "Scarlett" and (once) "Scarett."

There is no obvious reason, based on internal evidence, to prefer either "Scarlock" or "Scathelock." Neither of the latter two, we should point out, appears to be attested as an earlier form of the word scarlet. If one has to choose a reading, "Scarlock" is perhaps the best, since this is the middle reading; both "Scarlet" and "Scathelock" can be derived from it by a single phoneme change. But this is a weak basis for a decision.

The modern preference for "Scarlet" may be the result of Shakespeare, that great distorter of history, who in 2 Henry IV, V.iii, line 103 in Riverside Shakespeare, has Silence sing "And Robin Hood, Scarlet, and John." (This is one of three instances of Shakespeare mentioning Robin Hood, according to Cawthorne, pp. 80-81; none of the mentions are substantial enough to tell us anything.)

 Stanza 4/Line 14  "Much the Miller's Son." In this first instance of his name, there is variation in the prints on whose son Much was; a calls him a "milser's" son, f and g a "mylner's" son. The first is obviously an error (recall that the typesetter of a didn't have much English, and in Textura fonts, an s looked like an f or even an l); the second might refer to a milliner, but obviously millers were far more common than milliners -- although note Much complaining about John's willingness to give away extra cloth in stanza 73. Still, "miller" seems to be the usual reading in the other instances; it is probably safe to print "miller" here.

 Stanza 7/Line 25  The line that begins Stanza 7 is lacking in all texts; Child prints it as a lacuna. Knight/Ohlgren offer as their line 25 the conjecture "Here shal come a lord or sire." They claim that this is similar to lines in other early ballads. The only merit that I can see to the line is that it rhymes with the third line of the stanza -- but the first and third lines do not normally rhyme in the "Gest."

Dobson and Taylor's conjecture is "Till that I have som bolde baron," which is rather better but doesn't seem to fit Robin's preoccupations. I doubt we can conjecture the original, but my thought (arrived at without seeing Dobson/Taylor) is, "We shall wait (i.e. await) som bold abbot."

 Stanza 7/Line 27  Child emended the third line of the stanza to read "Or som knyght or [som] squyer," a reading not attested in this form in any of the manuscripts; a omits "som" before "squyer," while bfg read "some." Knight/Ohlgren omit the word.

 Stanza 39 (also 41, 42)/Lines 155, 163, 168  There is a textual variant here regarding the number of shillings. Child in 39.3 and 42.3=Knight/Ohlgren line 155, 163 read "ten." The reading of a is xx, i.e. "twenty": bc have x., i.e. "ten" in both places. Obviously either reading is an easy error for the other. Child, followed by Knight/Ohlgren, read "ten shillings" on the basis of Stanza 42, where the knight is found to have wealth totalling half a pound. The reading "ten" also scans better. But I could make a case for "twenty"; it would be easy to understand the knight claiming to have twenty shillings; even in his poverty, he would want to round things up....

 Stanza 49/Lines 194, 196  Child's text follows the prints in reading the final word of the line as...
"knowe.") This does not rhyme with "spende" in the final line of the stanza, and Knight/Ohlgren (without adding a note or explanation) emend the text to read "wende." This is a possible emendation, but not sure; we might as well emend the final line of the stanza to end (for instance) "goe." However, it is much more likely that the correction should be to a form of the verb "to ken," i.e. to know. Probably it should be "kende," although "kent" or "kennit" are also reasonable.

 Stanza 50/Lines 198-199  The second line of this stanza does not rhyme with the fourth, and the third line does. This defect occurs in all extant copies of the verse (abcfg). Child's conjecture is that we should swap the second and third lines, although it is possible that we should rewrite the final line to end in a word that rhymes with "wife" (e.g. "lyfe").

 Stanza 53/Line 209  Child's text, in line 53.1, says "He slewe a knyght of Lancaster;" so too Knight/Ohlgren. "Lancaster" is the reading of a. In bf we find "Lancastshire," which g cleans up as "Lancashire." c has "Lancaseshshire." Child followed a presumably on the grounds that he always followed a. But the reading which best explains the others is surely "Lancastshire," as in b; anyone confronted with this reading would either convert it to "Lancashire" (as g did, and as c did indirectly) or simplify it to "Lancaster."

 Stanzas 53-54/Lines 212-213  Child prints these lines as "My godes both sette and solde / My londes both sette to wede, Robyn." In these lines, a reads both...both; b reads both... both; c reads bothe...bothe; f reads both...both, g reads both... be. Knight/Ohlgren, p. 153, argue that "both" makes no sense in the second instance, and so adopt "beth" ("be" or "will be") -- and then proceed to emend the first instance to read "beth" also, without manuscript support. But, as any ballad student knows, it is not uncommon for short words to be included in a text for reasons of smoothness. "Both" should surely be allowed in stanza 53, and is the better (although not certain) reading in 54 as well.

 Stanza 62/Lines 245, 246  There is a single/plural difference in both these lines; a has frende...borowe, bf(g) have frendes...borowes. Since the change happens in both lines, it is unlikely to be an accidental omission/deletion; one simply must decide between a and b. Similarly with wolde/wyll in the second line of the stanza (and also dyed on/dyed on a in the fourth line. This stanza shows clear evidence of recensional work, although it is not obvious in which direction it went). The only clue I can think of is that "none" in the third line is a considered to be singular and might have attracted the rest to it. This is extremely weak.

 Stanza 68/Lines 271-272  The counting out of the loan. Child's text reads that John counted it "by eight and twenty score," Knight/Ohlgren offer "by eightene and two score." None of the prints actually expresses it this way; a reads xxviii score, i.e. 28 score; bfg read with variants "eighteen and twenty score." "Twenty score" of pounds is of course 400 pounds, but then why the 8/18? Gummere, p. 315, suggests that John was paying out "20 score and more," and indeed he showed such generosity with cloth in stanzas 72-73. But a 40% overpayment? Hard to believe -- and not stated at all clearly; even saying "twenty score and eight" would make the surplus more obvious. It is worth noting that 400 pounds is 600 marks, or 30 score of marks; possibly the 28 was supposed to refer to marks rather than pounds. But the best explanation is probably to start from b, accepting the Knight/Ohlgren emendation but reading it as eighteen-and-two score, i.e. twenty score. Or perhaps emend the line to read something like "by counting twenty score." And don't ask why the poet put it in such a confusing way!

 Stanza 69/Line 273  Text a reads "sayde Much," but b has "sayde lytell Much," followed by f and g (which uses the modern spelling "little"). We find "little Much" in stanzas 73 and 77 without variant. The meter works better with "little" than without. Child included "lytell" in [square brackets] as dubious; Knight/Ohlgren print it without indication of doubt although they mention the variant in their notes. Given that short words are more typically dropped than added by scribes, "lytell Much" seems the better reading. See also the note on Stanza 4.

 Stanza 70/Line 277  a and b both read "To helpe his body therin." This reading is difficult enough that Child conjectured that the original should be "lappe," i.e. wrap (a reading found in fg); the noun "lappe" is found in Chaucer (e.g.) for a fold or hem or pocket (Chaucer/Benson, p. 1262), and the verb lappyn, fold, enclose, cover, swath occurs in several of the poems in Turville-Petre (cf. p. 238). Whether the emendation is solid enough to go against the testimony of both a and b must be left for the reader; all the recent editions have followed Child.

 Stanza 75/Line 298  The text of a has Little John speak "To gentill Robyn Hode"; bfg have John direct his speech "All unto Robyn Hode." Since Robin was not, at the time the "Gest" was written, considered to be of the gentry, we must suspect that "gentill" is the original text and bfg corrected what appeared to be an error of meaning.

 Stanza 76/Line 304  All the editions follow Child in reading "God graunt that he [the knight] be true." But b has "leve" for "graunt." "Leve" is shorthand for "believe," i.e. "trust." This is difficult enough that fg emend it to "lende." But, while difficult, it is not impossible. It is easy to see how "leve" could be replaced by "graunt," difficult to see how the reverse could come about. "Leve" appears the better reading. I might also conjecture that the original was "give," which would be the middle reading if attested.  Stanza 78/Line 310  The a and b texts both have Little John suggest giving the knight a "clere" pair of spurs. Child and Knight/Ohlgren both change this to "clene" on the basis of f and g. But this surely is an emendation by f. Either we should let the reading stand or we should emend to something more meaningful -- perhaps "dere," i.e. costly. Or, perhaps, "clere" means something like "free and clear."

 Stanza 87/Line 345  All the extant texts (bfg) omit the first line of this stanza. Child suggested duplicating it from the previous stanza, on the ground that it might have fallen out because the two lines have the same ending (homoioteleuton). This reasonable emendation is adopted by the more recent editors but is beyond proof.  Stanza 88/Lines 351-352  The last two lines of stanza 88 make nonsense and are likely corrupt, but the prints generally agree on the nonsense text (apart from a minor correction in g, "lay it downe" for "lay downe" in 88.4, a reading followed by Gummere), and no good emendation has been suggested; the best I can think of is "he will come anon."

 Stanza 89/Line 354  Corruption is probable in stanza 88; it is almost certain in the second line of 89 (the two problems are most likely related). b reads "In Englunde he is ryght." Child and Dobson/Taylor both follow fg in reading instead "In Englunde is his ryght." This is, however, an utterly obvious conjecture with no real claim to originality. Knight/Ohlgren emend by omitting the words and reading the line "In Englunde ryght" and then use this for a complex argument. I am not convinced by either emendation, and doubt we can draw any sure conclusion based on the line.  Stanza 91/Line 362  The abbott swears by "Saint Richard." Knight/Ohlgren emend this to "Saint Rychere" for purposes of maintaining the rhyme (Knight/Ohlgren, p. 155), a saint's name also used in "Gamelyn" but not otherwise known. There is little justification for the emendation; there are many instances of bad rhymes in the "Gest," and to replace an unlikely saint with a non-existent saint is not an improvement. A second possibility is to emend the text more thoroughly, possibly to "Saint Cuthbert," who was a famous Northumbrian saint (the Venerable Bede wrote a life of him, and Douglas, p. 219, calls all England north of the Tees "St. Cuthbert's Land") and whose name rhymes fairly well (particularly if it were written, say, "Saint Cuthbere"). Chaucer, in the Reeve's Tale, has northerners still swearing by "Seynt Cutberd" (Chaucer/Benson, p. 81, line 4127; Pollard, p. 69). I also note that the previous line has a reference to the Abbot's beard, which rhymes well with "Saint Richard"; perhaps what we have is two stanzas badly shortened down to one. One other possibility (and I emphasize that all of these are just speculations) is that the original was some variant (probably anglicized) on "Saint Roch," or "St. Rochur" (the Latin form of the name, which is obviously very similar in sound to "Richard"), which a copyist converted to "Saint Richard" because Roch is such an un-English name. Roch, or Rocco, or Roque (c. 1295-1327) was a Frenchman famous for his ability to treat the plague and the patron saint of invalids (DictSaints, p. 213). He was also famous for an association with dogs because, in one tale, a dog fed him while he himself suffered plague (Benet, p. 977), Could the abbot, like Friar Tuck in a later form of the Robin Hood legend, have been a keeper of dogs? Alternately, could the day of the knight's visit have been August 16, Saint Roch's day? It is true that Roch was not canonized until after the death of Edward II, and hence after the likely date of this incident, but Roch was well known during the plague years of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries (and largely forgotten after that); it would be a much more likely name at the time the "Gest" was written than at any time before or since. I also am tempted by "Saint Robert," referring to Saint Robert of Knaresborough; see the explanatory note. In the end, though, the reading "Saint Richard" is not nonsensical enough to justify emendation. I am sore tempted by "Saint Rochur," but am content to leave it in the margin.  Stanza 93/Line 371  Child's text reads "The [hye] iustye of Englonde"; Dobson/Taylor and Knight/Ohlgren omit "hye" (the former without so much as a footnote), making it the "iustice of Englonde." This is one of the more significant textual problems of the "Gest." The only witnesses are bfg. b omits the word "hye", which is found in f (g modernizes the spelling to "high"). Ordinarily, of course, a reading supported only by fg would not be considered. Presumably Child includes the word because it makes no sense to refer to one man as "the justice of England"; also, the phrase "hye iustice" is found without variants in stanza 266. Possibly "high" is just a word the poet uses to fill a syllable before an office? In Stanza 318, he refers to the "hye shyref," and that office doesn't exist either. But why "high"? Probably we should follow b and read "justice," not "high justice."
Another possibility, which I have not seen elsewhere, is to emend "Englonde" rather than "iustice." All our problems would disappear if the text read something like "the iustice of the foreste" -- we know exactly what office that was!

 Stanza 98/Line 389  A line is missing here in all three extant witnesses (bfg). Child conjectured the text "They put on their symple wedes" based on the third line of the previous stanza. Child's emendation is probably the best we can do, but the probability is high that more than one line is damaged; the previous stanza does not fit with what has gone before. Instead of inserting a line here, an alternate proposal might be to omit the last three lines of stanza 97 and combine it with the last three lines of 98, or something similar. So possible readings would be something like

Than bespake that gentyll knyght
And with him Lytell Johnn,
The porter was redy hymselfe,
And welcomed them euerychone.
(emending the second line), or

Than arrived that gentyll knyght
They came to the gates anone;
The porter was redy hymselfe,
And welcomed them euerychone.
(emending the first line).

 Stanza 113/Line 450  Child and Knight/Ohlgren print this line as "And vylaynesly hym gan call." This is Child's conjecture to rhyme with the last word of the stanza ("hall"); acde are all defective here, fg omit the line, and b -- which is thus our only witness -- reads "And vylaynesly hym gan loke." The word "loke" is probably an error repeated from the previous line, meaning that Child's conjecture is reasonable, but it would be possible to emend the last line, "Spede the out of my hall!" -- if we could find an acceptable substitute for "hall" that rhymes with "loke."

 Stanza 128/Line 511  Child reads "Ne had be his kyndeness" following a; bfg read "had not be." Dobson/Taylor, p. 88, read "he" for "be," without showing any indication that this is not the reading of a. Although both readings make sense, this is perhaps a typesetting error.

 Stanza 132/Line 527  The arrows had silver on them -- somewhere. b reads "I nocked all with whyte silver," that is "Nocked all with white silver"; fg read "And nocked the(y) were with whyte silver" -- but a has "Worksed all with whyte silver." The nock was a groove in the back of an arrow into which the bowstring was placed. This was a weak point of an arrow, and a truly well-made arrow might have a metal cap there.

The reading of bfg implies that this cap was made of silver, which, as Knight/Ohlgren confess on p. 156, was "unusually lavish." So lavish as to be silly, since silver was not as structurally strong as iron. The arrows could just as well have been "worked" with silver, as in a, which might mean that the shaft or the point had silver tracings. Child and Knight/Ohlgren, who usually follow a slavishly, here adopt the reading of b (except for reading Inocked, one word, instead of I nocked, two words), but certainly a strong case could be made for "worked" -- the reading accepted by Dobson/Taylor, p. 88. A silver nock, after all, will not be very visible under the feathers!

 Stanza 133/Line 529 An escort of "a hundred men": so bfg; a is defective for the number.

 Stanza 135/Line 537  This line is surely corrupt. Child gives it in full as "But as he went at a brydge ther was a wrastelyng," which is too long and rather nonsensical. This is the reading of b; a is defective, and f and g appear to be attempts to correct the reading of b. Child suggests "at Wentbrydge" as an emendation for "Went at a brydge"; Knight/Ohlgren accept this into the text. This seems logical, since the place near Barnsdale where Watling Street crosses the Went is called, unsurprisingly, "Wentbridge." And Wentbridge ("Went-breg") is mentioned in stanza 6 of the "Potter." But there is no actual textual support for Child's emendation.

Dobson/Taylor, p. 88, do not print "Wentbridge," adopting the reading of b but suggesting it is a play on or allusion to "Wentbridge" -- although they admit on p. 21 that the allusion is vague. My personal suspicion is that what we have is a case of three lines being lost. The text "But as he went at a brydge ther was a wrastelyng" is actually two lines, with the final two lines of that stanza, and the first line of the next stanza, missing.

 Stanza 138/Line 551  This line is disturbed, although the reason for the disturbance is not clear. a reads "And for he was ferre and frembde bested," followed by Child and the other editions; there are a few variants in the other copies, of which the only significant one is that b(fg) read "frend" for "frembde." This hardly helps. The likely meaning is something like "And he was far from home and friendless," but the line may be corrupt.

 Stanza 140/Line 558  A hundred men followed the knight. But how? bfg say they followed him (in) fear; a simply says they followed him. Neither of these readings rhymes with "companye" at the end of the stanza. Child emended to read that they followed him "free," and most editors have followed this. It is a good emendation, although it is just possibly that we should emend the final line, e.g. change "companye" to something like "knyght dere."

 Stanza 147/Line 588  There is much uncertainty in the prints; a reads "That ever yet saw I," which (since the line is to rhyme with "tre(e)") is possible only if "I" is pronounced "ee." b reads "That yet saw I me," which is a proper rhyme but is short a syllable. fg read "That yet I did see," which both scans and rhymes, but is a rather modern formation.

Child proposes to emend the line to "That ever yet saw I me," a rather otiose reflexive but one which also occurs in stanzas 100 and 184 (Knight/Ohlgren, p. 157). This is probably the best emendation, given the existence of the parallels, but it should be emphasized that this is a conjecture. Another conjecture would be to read "That ever saw I me," or we perhaps "That ever yet saw my ee" (eye).

And it is possible that a's reading is original. Unlikely as it seems, Child has to make the very same emendation in stanza 169, where he gives the last line as "That eyer yit saw I me," to rhyme with "lewte." The fact that the same emendation has to be made twice is an indication that perhaps the text is correct in both cases (which perhaps means that we should indeed read "I" as "ee." Could this be the result of a residual northernism?)

 Stanza 156/Line 624  A rough line for a rough demand: a reads "Give me my dinner, said Little John," while b offers "Give me to dine, said Little John" (fg have "Give me meat" for "Give me to dine"). Knight/Ohlgren mention the smoother emendation "Give me my dinner soon," which is also better poetry, but admit that there is no reason to question the text.

 Stanza 157/Line 628  Child follows a in reading "My dyner gif me." bfg read, with spelling variations, "My dyner gif thou me." Knight/Ohlgren accept the longer version on metrical grounds, but we could just as well emend to "My dyner gif to me."

 Stanza 160/Lines 637-640  The number of variants in the texts of this verse is astonishing. Such variation is often an indication of a damaged and conjecturally restored text, although there is no particular reason to reject Child's text. The most serious variant is in the first line of the stanza, where a says that Little John gave the butler a "tap" while bfg says John gave him a "rap." There is really no grounds for preferring either reading. Similarly, in the third line, a says that the butler would not feel such a blow in a hundred years, while bfg have a hundred winter(s). Interestingly, these two variants occur at the end of the two longest lines of the stanza. Could it be that the manuscript which was the last common ancestor of a and b was damaged for the right-hand edge of this verse?

 Stanza 163/Line 650  Child gives the line as "The while that he wolde," rhyming with "bolde" at the end of the stanza. But a reads "The while that he wol be," and b has "The while he wolde." Child's reading is from fg. Knight/Ohlgren label Child's reading an emendation, which it is not, quite, but this line is quite uncertain and it and the final line of the stanza must both be considered doubtful. Dobson/Taylor, p. 91, follow a.

 Stanza 164/Line 654  Both a and b read this line as "Thou arte a shrewede hynde," which would usually be decisive, but fg read the last word as "hyne," and Child thinks this may be correct.

 Stanza 165/Line 659  Child gives the text of this line as "'I make myn auowe to God,' sayde Lytell John," on the basis of a (except that a, in one of its frequent typographical inversions, reads "anowe" for "avowe"). bfg, however, omit "to God," and Gummere also leaves out the words. Gummere's text is frequently erratic, but there is much to be said for the short reading in this case; the words "to God" might have floated in from the many uses of the phrase "auowe to God" (158.3, 164.1, 187.1, 190.1, 343.1, 346.1). The shorter text is also an easier read.

 Stanza 169/Line 675  Child gives the text as "That euer yit sawe I [me]." to rhyme with "lewte" (loyalty) two lines earlier. But a reads "That euer yit saw I." For discussion of the emendation "saw I me," see the note on Stanza 147, where Child made the same emendation. Here, however, "saw I me" is supported by bfg, which have divergent readings in stanza 147. Dobson/Taylor, p. 91, follow a in part but split "sawe" into two words and omit I, yielding "ever yit sa we" -- clever, but an emendation at a place where bfg have a perfectly good reading.

 Stanza 176/Line 701  Child reads "Also [they] toke the gode pens" (=pence). "They" is omitted by a; bfg include it. Knight/Ohlgren, p. 158, call the word "not grammatically essential" but follow Child's lead. Given the ineptitude of a, I would incline to include the word; a probably dropped it accidentally.

 Stanza 176/Lines 704, 706  The variant here is complex. a says that Little John and the cook took "Three hundred pounde and more" to Robin Hood "Under the grene wode hore," that is, "under the green wood hoar." fg have a different rhyme: The robbers took "Three hundred pounds and three" to Robin "under the green wood tree," b has the unlikely reading "three hundred pounde and more... under the green wode tre."
Ordinarily, we might prefer the reading of b as best explaining the others: a corrected "tree" to "hore," and fg corrected "more" to "three." In this case, however, it is pretty clear that b mistakenly printed "green wode tre" (a common catchphrase) for "green wode hore" (rather obscure), and that f desperately emended the second line to make it match the fourth. Although it is interesting that, in stanza 179, we are told that John and the cook did in fact bring three hundred pounds and three.

 Stanza 179/Line 714  Child emends the line to "And sendeth the here by me" and offers as a conjecture "sent the" for "sendeth the," citing stanza 384 as a place where the text uses the form "sent." ab read "sende the"; f gives the line as "And he hath send the here by me," which g modernizes as "sent thee..." Child's emendation was intended to make the verb tense match the preceding line. Knight/Ohlgren reject the emendation as unneeded. It should be noted that, although the issue in the prints is whether there reading should be "th" or "thth," in the original manuscript it might have been a single or double letter thorn. Copying two copies of a letter as one, or vice versa, is a very common error.

 Stanza 183/Line 731  Knight/Ohlgren emend Child's "shryef," of uncertain meaning but found in all texts, to "shyref," sheriff.

 Stanzas 186/Line 741  Child reads "Their tyndes" (antlers, from the root for "tine"), with af; b reads "His tynde." Child's reading points to the antlers of the entire herd of deer John is describing; b's refers presumably to the green hart (i.e. Robin Hood) at their head. Knight/Ohlgren follow Child without even adding a note. It is awkward to see the antlers referred to in the singular, but if they were spoken of as singular, it would invite correction. There is much to be said for the "b" reading.

 Stanzas 187/Line 763  Child's text says the Sheriff was served "well." This is the reading of a: bfg omit. Knight/Ohlgren follow Child, but the meter is better with "well" than without; it is perhaps an addition for smoothness.

 Stanzas 192/Line 768  According to a, Robin says that "I graunt" the sheriff his life; in bfg, the verb is a passive, "is graunted." Is a passive more likely to be converted to an active or vice versa? I'd think the former.

 Stanzas 193/Line 771  Child's text says Roin "commaunde[d]" Little John. a reads "commaunde"; b has "commanded"; f "commaunded," g "commanded." Knight/Ohlgren follow Child in using the past tense "commaunded," but the present tense is surely the more difficult reading; the text of a is probably preferable.

 Stanzas 194/Line 775  Child gives the line as "And to[ke] hym a grene mantel." "Toke" is the reading of bf (g has "tooke"); a has "to." Knight/Ohlgren accept the reading of bfg, but it is hard to imagine why anyone would have changed "toke" to "to," while the reverse change is quite plausible. The shorter reading is probably to be preferred.

 Stanzas 201/Line 803  Child prints the last three words of this line as "the best[e] frende." a reads "thy best frende"; bfg read "the best frende." "Beste" improves the meter, but probably not enough to justify the emendation (although someone reading the line aloud might well say "beste"). Knight/Ohlgren follow a and read "thy best"; I would follow b and read "the best." Admittedly the reading of a is less smooth, but this is just the sort of error that is typical of a, and any poet good enough to compile the "Gest" could see that "the" would sound better than "thy."

 Stanzas 203/Line 810  Child has "By nyght or [by] day"; Knight/Ohlgren omit the second occurrence of "by." "By day" is the reading of bf; g has "else by day"; a has simply "day" without "by." The reading of a gives us an extremely short line; the reading of b is still short and gives us two unstressed syllables. I would follow Child and include "by" on the grounds that no editor would add just that one word; someone playing with the text would add two syllables, as did.

 Stanzas 206/Lines 823-824  Robin fears that the Virgin is "wrothe with me, For she sent me nat my pay." For "pay" a reads "pray," but no editor has accepted this -- although it would be interesting to read it as "prey," meaning that Robin has not had enough victims to rob. But "pay" makes better sense in light of what follows.

 Stanzas 209/Line 835  Child's text reads "And wayte after some vnketh (unknown) gest." Child's reading is a conjecture; b reads "And wayte after such vnketh gest," while fg have minor variants on "And looke for some strange gest." Knight/Ohlgren, p. 159, reject Child's emendation on the grounds that the reading of b makes sense, if rather forced sense; Dobson/Taylor, p. 94, also accept the reading of b. An alternate emendation would be "And wayte after such an vnketh gest." See also the next note; this section shows the signs of having been very corrupt and badly corrected.

 Stanzas 210/Lines 838-840  The a text is defective here, and b does not rhyme (it gives the verse as "Whether he be messengere, Or a man that myrthes can, Or yf he be a pore man, Of my gode he shall haue some"). Child reverses the last two lines, omitting the "or" before "yf he be." This is a reasonable conjecture, but there may be deeper damage -- if we could emend the second line of the stanza to rhyme with "some," the structure would be more logical. Possibly emend the second line to something like "a man of myrthe and song" -- a weak rhyme, but it produces an orderly stanza. Knight/Ohlgren accept Child's conjecture; Dobson/Taylor do not.

 Stanza 213/Line 849  The text of bf reads "But as he loked in Bernysdale." For "he" g reads "they," which is also the reading of the parallel in stanza 21, and Child accepts this emendation, printing [t]he[y]. The plural accords with the plurals in stanza 212 and in the third line of this stanza, and Knight/Ohlgren accept it. But g is derived from bf; the change is clearly editorial. The reading "he" is clearly the earliest preserved, and probably should be preferred.

 Stanza 214/Line 856  Child prints the line "That [these] monkes haue brought our pay." The reading of b is "That monkes haue brought our pay." Child's reading follows fg. Knight/Ohlgren, p. 159, propose instead that the scribe of the ancestor of b misread the text; they emend to "The monkes." Another possible emendation would be to read "These monkes" without "That." Another possibility is to read "That the monk" (singular). The problem is, all of these conjectures are reasonable, but none is significantly better than the others. In all likelihood one of them is correct, but it might be best to follow b simply because we don't know which one.

 Stanza 215/Line 858  In Child's text, Little John tells his subordinates to "fresse your bowes of ewe (yew)." "Fresse" is the verb of b, although it says "our bowes" rather than "your bowes." fg reads "bend we our" -- almost certainly indicating that their exemplar read "fresse our" and they did not understand it. Child suggests as emendations "dress" (i.e. "prepare") or "leese" (i.e. "loose.") Dobson/Taylor, p. 94, suggest but do not adopt the emendation "free," i.e. "prepare." Knight/Ohlgren accept the emendation "dress" (spelling it "drese"). Either emendation is possible; neither strikes me as very compelling.

"Fresse" could be either of two Middle English words: the verb to freeze (freseth, from Old English freosan; Dickens/Wilson, p. 270; also Sisam under "fresse") or the noun "fresse/fresse," "danger" (so Sisam under "fresse") or "harm" (Turville-Petre, p. 231). Obviously a verb is required. And "fresse" in Middle English would not carry the modern sense "hold still" conveyed by the command "Freeze!" I would be inclined to print "fresse" with a notation that the text is corrupt, inviting a better conjecture than those proposed so far. Perhaps we should read "fresse" as a noun (with the sense "You're in trouble!") and add a verb, along the lines of "And fresse! See our bowes of ewe...." Gummere, Dobson/Taylor, and Knight/Ohlgren are agreed in reading "our bowes" for Child's emendation "your bowes."

 Stanza 216/Line 861  In Child's text, the monk had 52 men, with [men] in brackets as questionable. b omits 'men' (and writes 53 as lii); the word "men" is found in f, while g has "man." a is defective here. Knight/Ohlgren think "men" can be omitted, and I incline to agree.

 Stanza 218/Line 870  In b, John tells his companions (Much and Scarlock) to make "all you prese to stonde" -- that is, to make the approaching press (crowd) to halt. In f(g), John orders "you yonder preste to stonde." "Preste" means "priest" (and is so spelled in g). In the variant "you" versus "you yonder," Child emends to "yon," which is logical. The more significant variant is between "press" and "priest" -- a change of only one letter. All editors appear to read "prese" with b, which is of course the best text, but either reading is possible.

 Stanza 223/Line 888  The text of b says that Much had a "bolte" ready. Probably because crossbows fired bolts and longbows arrows, f (followed, of course, by g) amends the line to read "bowe," but since an arrow could casually be called a bolt; there is no need to emend.

 Stanza 240/Lines 959-960  For "rightwys man," i.e. "righteous man." b reads "ryghtwyysman," i.e. perhaps "right wise man"; f in fact reads "ryght wise man." The reading "dame" is a conjecture based on fg; b reads either "name" (so Child) or "ame" (so Knight/Ohlgren. This disagreement is not as large as it sounds, since an overbar could sometimes indicate a letter n).

 Stanza 247/Line 988  The monk allegedly carried "eyght [hondred] pounde" -- 800 pounds. So Child's text, anyway: b omits the word "hundred"; f and g read "hundreth." But since Robin and John claim that the monk paid back twice the 400 pounds borrowed by the knight, the meaning is hardly in doubt.

 Stanza 249/Line 994  Child's text is "Monke, what tolde I the," parsed as a question, "Monk, what told I thee?" This is the reading of b. However, fgp read "that" instead of "what." If parsed as a declarative statement, "Monk, that told I thee" -- Robin is declaring to the monk that he told the monk how true Mary is. Given that it is supported by p, and that it is probably the slightly more difficult reading, "that" should probably be preferred to "what."

 Stanza 256/Line 1021  The text of b, "How moch is in yonder other corser?" sayd Robyn," has caused problems since the time of f, which amends Robin's quote to read, "And what is on the other corser?" g goes beyond even that and produces "And what is in the other coffer?" Kittredge suggested emending "corser" to "forcer," another word for "coffer," and Clawson, p. 22, approves of the emendation.

I am not convinced. The line is certainly too long, and far from clear, but, so far, no convincing emendation has been proposed; perhaps we should mark it as having a primitive error. In performance, we should probably give the line as something like "How much is on the other courser?" (omitting "said Robin," which is not needed).

I do wonder a little about Robin referring to a baggage horse as a "courser." Perhaps it was a particularly poor-looking nag (used perhaps for disguise?), and Robin was being ironic?

 Stanza 262/Line 1048  According to Knight/Ohlgren, p. 160, the text of bfg reads "And all they mery meyne," although Child's text prints "And all his mery meyne," and none of his collations show a variant here. The meyne is clearly Robin's, based on the previous line, so Child's emendation (?) "his" makes sense -- but Knight/Ohlgren suggest that "they" ("thy?") is an error for "the." Knight/Ohlgren's argument is reasonable, but the reading of the prints should probably be checked.

 Stanza 268/Line 1069  "But take not a grefe,' sayde the knyght, 'That I haue been so longe..."

This is the text printed by Child, on the evidence of b. f prints it as two lines --both of them metrically correct -- making up the line count by combining the last two lines of 270. The line as given by b is patently too long, as the compositor of f recognized. Knight/Ohlgren seek to emend by taking out "sayde the knyght." That emendation is required is clear, but this leaves a line still too long, and there is no reason for this. I very strongly suspect that what we have is not a case of one line that is too long but of three missing lines. We may also see evidence of this in the first line of 270, which like the first line of 268 is badly overburdened. The original reading was perhaps something like this:

268. 'But take not a grefe,' sayde the knyght,
That I have been so long.
For as I came to grene wode
I stopped to rite a wrong. (Or "I met a yeman strong", or some such).

268A. "For as I passed Wyresbridg
I came by wrastelyng...."

And so forth. We of course cannot recreate the missing lines, and so perhaps it is best to retain Child's version, but we should certainly mark this as corrupt.

 Stanza 271/Line 1083  Child has the line refer to the "[hye] selerer," b omits the word "hye"; it is found in f (which spells it "high") and g ("hie"). Knight/Ohlgren omit, and I agree. Child perhaps adds the word under the influence of stanza 233.

 Stanza 275/Line 1102  The text of b here reads "And go to my treasure," which is to rhyme to "me." This confused the publishers of fg, who could not see how "treasure" rhymed with "me." They therefore changed it to the feeble "My wyll done that it be." But "treasure" is doubtless to be pronounced "treasury."

 Stanza 282/Line 1127  This marks the first of several instances (also stanza 291/line 1163, stanza 300/line 1199, stanza 313/line 1251) where Child prints a text which refers to the "proude sheryf." In each case, the primary text (b) prints "proud" rather than "proude." Both "proud" and "proude" are found in the "Gest" -- but, in Middle English, both forms are correct, and interchangeable; the one which is metrically better is perhaps to be preferred. This is certainly "proude sheriff," since otherwise we have back-to-back stressed syllables. On the other hand, all the instances cited are the third line of a stanza, which is probably the part of the text where the meter is least important. Someone reading the text might well pronounce the word "proude," but it is an open question what we should print.

 Stanza 283/Line 1131  Child prints the line "And [he] that shoteth allther best." Of the prints, fg read "they" instead of "he" (and read the verb as "shote"/"shoote" and have "all ther" for "allther"); b has no pronoun. Knight/Ohlgren would follow b. It is likely that the line is corrupt.

 Stanza 289/Line 1158  Child makes the last word of the line "hevede," i.e. "heve," to rhyme with "desceyued," "deceived," at the end of the stanza. The text of b, however, is simply "hede." The form "heve" is based on a legitimate early English form, but does not occur, e.g., in the "Gest." While there may be corruption in this verse (note the number of variants in this and the next two stanzas), Knight/Ohlgren are probably right to follow b.

 Stanza 291/Line 1163  For Child's reading "proude[e]" see the textual note on Stanza 282.

 Stanza 291/Line 1164  Child gives the last line of the stanza as "All by the but [as] he stode." The word "as" is found in d but omitted by b. Both meanings are sensible; the reading without "as" is better metrically. It is unfortunate that d is so short that we cannot firmly assess its text. Short words like "as" are easily lost, and I can see no reason to add it, since the longer reading damages the meter. Knight/Ohlgren omit "as." I incline to think Child was right to include it.

 Stanza 292/Line 1166  Child makes the text to read that, during the archery contest, "alway he [Robin] slist the wnd," meaning that his arrows always touched the wand holding the target. However, instead of "he," b reads "they," as does d, which however reads "clyft" (cleft) for "slist" (sliced, slit); f has "he' but changes "slist" to "clefte"; g reads "he claue" (="clave"). Presumably the b text means that either all Robin's archers sliced the wand or, more likely, all his arrows did so. This is unclear enough that fg changed it, and Child for some reason went along.

 Stanza 300/Line 1199  For Child's reading "proud[e]" see the textual note on Stanza 282.

 Stanza 303/Line 1210  Child gives the second line of the stanza as "If euer thou loue[dst] me," but bd gives the verb as "louest." f reads "loues," g reads "loued." The reading of f is impossible; that of g a clear correction. Knight/Ohlgren think, and I agree, that we should read "louest"; the syntax here is complex enough that we need not expect exact verb concord.

 Stanza 305/Line 1220  For "No lyfe on me be lefte," the reading of b (d?), fg read, with minor variants "That after I eate no bread." This is so obviously feeble that it is clear their archetype worked from a copy where the last line of the stanza is illegible or has been torn away. We see another instance of this in stanza 400, where two lines were illegible.

 Stanza 310/Line 1238  For "Syr Rychard at the Lee," or Sir Richard at Lee, as it is usually modernized, g reads "Sir Richard of the Lee."

 Stanza 312/Line 1245  Child's reading is "And moche [I] thank the of thy confort." b omits "I"; f rephrases as "And moche I do the thankes (sic.; g reads "thanke") for thy confort." Knight/Ohlgren, p. 162, accepts Child's emendation, although we note that none of the prints contains Child's reading.

 Stanza 315/Lines 1259  Child reads "forty" days based on the reading xl of a, but b reads "twelue," and fg also support the reading "twelve" although they rewrite other parts of the line. d is defective. I personally incline to prefer the reading "twelve"; there are just too many Biblical uses of the phrase "forty days," plus forty days was the standard period of sanctuary in a church (Lyon, p. 166). A scribe might naturally think of forty days when thinking of the knight giving sanctuary. And the two are easily confused in a lot of scripts, since forty is "xl" and twelve is "xii."

 Stanza 317-318/Lines 1265-1272  There are several curious textual features in these verses. Stanza 317 ends in mid-sentence. This is unusual although not entirely unknown in the "Gest." The next few lines imply the existence of two sheriffs. There is no evidence of textual corruption in the prints; abd all agree on the essential words. fg make a minor change to 317, but it does not resolve the problem. Emendation seems required.

To make 317 end on a full sentence, several emendations are possible. The simplest would be to change "Howe" at the beginning of the third line to "Of" or similar. Alternately, the first word of the fourth line could be emended from "And" to "Called" or "Brought."

In 318, the simplest emendation would be to omit "to" from the first line; in that case, "hye shyref" becomes simply a synonym for "proude shyref."

 Stanza 330/Lines 1317  The text of Child, following ad, says that Robin wishes to see and take (i.e. capture) the Sheriff. But bfg say that Robin wishes to see and take (i.e. rescue) the knight. Both readings have substantial merit. Since there is no real reason to prefer one over the other, we should probably follow ad over b.

 Stanza 338/Line 1392  Child gives this line as "With his bright[e] bronde." "Brighte" is the reading of bdfg; a has "bright." In stanza 202, both a and b read "bright." We must at least allow for the possibility that the copyist of a assimilated this verse to that. "Brighte" is also better metrically. Although Knight/Ohlgren, p. 163, prefer to read "bright," the case for "brighte" appears slightly better.

 Stanza 349/Line 1395  The a text, which had several lacunae prior to this point, ends after the third line of this stanza and is lacking for the rest of the poem. The d text, which began with stanza 280, ends with stanza 350. Thus for stanza 351 to the end of the poem, except for the few dozen lines of e, we have essentially only one witness, the b text and its inferior relatives fg.

 Stanza 351/Line 1402  In this stanza Robin cuts... something... in two to free the knight. What was it? b says his "hoode," which is accepted by Dobson/Taylor, p. 104. Child emends this to "bonde," which certainly Robin must have cut at some point and is in any case a better rhyme. The reading "bonde" is accepted by Knight/Ohlgren; they note on p. 163 that in stanza 332 the knight was merely bound hand and foot, not hooded. Nonetheless the b reading could have been correct; the guards could have tied the knight's hood over his eyes to prevent him from seeing.

 Stanza 357/Line 1425  Child's text reads "All the passe of Lancashire," on the basis of b. Gummere, p. 319, explains "passe" as meaning limits, bounds, extant -- i.e. the whole region. This is not the usual meaning of "passe," however. The most suitable meaning in Chaucer, according to Chaucer/Benson p. 1276, is "pace," which is also the meaning that Sisam gives for "pas." Turville-Petrie, p. 245, might suggest "road" as a meaning. None of the noun forms is common, although "pas(s)(e)" is a common verb.

For "passe" fg read "compasse," which Knight/Ohlgren, p. 164, accept; they argue that "passe" makes no sense and suggest that "compasse" is original because of its complexity. But a reading of fg is really no more than a conjecture. We might just as well conjecture "parke" (or "parkes"), which fits the context.

For that matter, Lancashire is surrounded by the Pennines to the east and by other hills to the north and south. These are not high hills, but they are rough enough that travellers tended to use the passes between the peaks (it was considered an amazing accomplishment when William the Conqueror managed to take an army through the Pennines in winter; Douglas, p. 221). Or it might be a mis-reading of "pathes." I would incline to leave the reading alone and let it suggest all these meanings, but if we are going to emend, we should emend to "parke."

 Stanza 361/Line 1442  Child says that the King offers a charter which he seals "[with] my honde"; the word "with" is omitted by b although found in fg. Knight/Ohlgren, p. 165, argue that it can be omitted in accord with Middle English usage. An instrumental without a preposition is a very early form, and would tend to push the poem's date earlier, plus the line scans better with "with." Short words are easily lost by scribes. On purely internal grounds, the reading with "with" might be better, but the external evidence is so strong that we might probably omit the word.

 Stanza 369/Line 1473  The forester offers to be the king's ledes-man, i.e. guide, leader, in bf (g spells it "lodesman"), but Knight/Ohlgren emend this to "bedesman" (a "beads-man," hence "one who prays" or uses the rosary; Langland/Schmidt, p. 516.) Knight/Ohlgen, p. 137, would extend it to mean "one who leads in prayer." They argue (p. 165) that "ledesman" is an assimilation to the previous stanza and that "bedesman" heightens the sense of disguise. It is a clever emendation, and is certainly possible, but "bedesman" is a rare word and the line as given makes sense and emendation is not required.

 Stanza 371/Line 1481  Child reads the line "hastely" on the basis of f (g has "hastily"), but b reads "hastily." which Knight/Ohlgren consider to be correct.

 Stanza 371/Line 1484  Child has this line read "And hasted them thyder blyve," i.e. "hastened them there swiftly." but b has "blyth," not "blyve," and f and g also have "blythe," although with different spellings. It might be argued that hasted...blyve is a more reasonable combination (although it is also redundant) -- but the reading of b is perfectly sensible. Although Knight/Ohlgren and Dobson/Taylor follow this emendation without comment, I really don't think there are sufficient grounds for changing the text.

 Stanza 377/Line 1508  The line Child prints here, "Other shyft haue not wee," is lacking in b; he takes it from fg. b instead repeats the text of the second line of the stanza, "Vnder the grene-wode tre." Knight/Ohlgren, p. 166, accept that the poet meant to repeat the line, but this seems highly dubious -- he could surely have produced some sort of variant. The fourth line is probably lost forever; we must either conjecture it or accept the fg reading (which is itself probably a conjecture because the composer of f, unlike Knight/Ohlgren, felt a different line was needed). An alternate emendation might be something like "My mynie and me" or "My mery men and me."

 Stanza 378/Line 1512  Child emends b's reading "saynt charity" to "saynte charyte"; Knight/Ohlgren accept the reading of b. Child's reading perhaps makes it more clear that the reference is not to a particular saint -- the "Gest" seems to prefer the spelling "Saynt" for a saint (stanzas 84, 91, 315, 390).

 Stanza 381/Line 1524  Child's text is "I wolde vouch it safe on the." The reading of b is, however, "I vouch it half on the." This confused f enough that it converted it to "I would give it to thee." Knight/Ohlgren, p. 166, argues that the text of b is sensible enough to be retained. The reading of b is indeed strange and possibly corrupt, but Child's emendation does not explain how it came to be corrupt; it is probably better to retain the reading of b until someone proposes a better reading.
Stanza 385/Lines 1537-1540 The reading of the first line is a crux. The text of b says that the king showed his broad "tarpe." There seems to be no such word in Middle English. Certainly it confused the compositors of fg, who change it to "seale." Child, who was more facile with an emendation, instead proposed "targe," followed by most modern editors -- but this is not a great help. A reading such as "charter" or "letter" would fit better, but it is harder to explain the error of b in that case. A possible suggestion would be to emend the second line of 385, replacing "sone" with "seale." Then the "targe" becomes a letter showing the king's shield (so it can be seen at a distance) and sealed with his seal (for detailed examination). This would explain a lot -- if only it weren't pure conjecture.

Stanza 400/Lines 1597-1598 For Child's text, in which Robin tells outlaws who miss the rose garden that, in addition to losing their gear, "And bere a buffet on his hede, I-wys right all bare,'" f and g read "A good buffet on his head bare, For that shal be his fine," which does not even rhyme with the last word of the stanza. Here again it is clear that the copy used by the compositor of f was defective, and he made up two lines, and g followed. We see a similar instance of a lost line in stanza 305.

Stanza 401/Line 1604 The text of b reads "the good whyte hande'; fg have "lilly" for "good." Child however prints simply "the whyte hande" -- a reading which is metrical if one pronounces "whyte" as two syllables but which might well be an assimilation to stanza 292. Dobson/Taylor follow b, but both Knight/Ohlgren and Gummere accept Child's emendation -- Knight/Ohlgren don't even comment on it!

Stanza 409/Lines 1635-1636 Child reads these lines "Thus our kynge and Robyn Hode, Togeder gan they mete," the latter to rhyme with "shete." This is a sufficiently incompetent line that I rather suspect corruption in the prints.

Stanza 412/Lines 1645-1646 Note that Child had two versions of these two lines. In his original edition, he follows b and printed 'Mercy then, Robyn,' sayd our kynge, 'Vnder your trystyll-tre,' In a correction (volume V., p. 297 in the Dover edition) he amended this to follow fg: 'Mercy,' then said Robyn to our kynge, 'Vnder this trystyll-tre.' If the reading of fg were in a, we might perhaps consider it. But a reading of fg against b has no value -- clearly the transcriber of f was bothered by this reading, presumably because it made the King show fear, and corrected it to an easier reading, in order to make it appear that Robin, not the King, is asking mercy. Child was right the first time, and Dobson/Taylor and Knight/Ohlgren both follow the text of b.

Stanzas 412-414/Lines 1645-1656 It appears that the exemplar used by f was very badly damaged for stanzas 412-414; about half the text of these stanzas is rewritten, usually very badly, as is typical of f when it cannot read its exemplar. And, as usual, g follows f with some stylistic improvements. The most noteworthy change is that described in the previous note, but there are some other smaller alterations.

Stanza 417/Line 1666 In the second line of the stanza, Child prints the text as "I wyll come agayne full soone," but b omits "wyll" (found in fg). Knight/Ohlgren point out that the verb "will" is not needed; we should probably omit.

Stanza 421/Lines 1683-1684 The last two lines of this verse have invited many emendations. The text of b is And euyry knyght had so, yyws Another had full sone. Child emends "had so, yyws" to "also, i-wys,' meaning that, like the king, each of the knights soon was wearing a green garment. Knight/Ohlgren, p. 167, suggest instead replacing "Another had" in the final line with "Another hode" -- in other words, saying that the knights soon had new hoods. Both emendations are clever, and both eliminate the problem of the redundant use of "had." Neither reading is compelling, however. Child's reading implies less change of meaning; Knight/Ohlgren's requires a smaller change in the text. But an even smaller change would be to alter the second "had" to "hat." All one can really do is pick one, or even leave the text alone, and perhaps mark a primitive error.

Stanza 423/Line 1689 The text of b here is "Theyr bowes bente, and forth they went." Child emends this to "They bente theyr bowes, and forth they went," on the basis of (f)(g). Perhaps he objected to the internal rhyme, which does have the air of floating in from somewhere else. Dobson/Taylor and Knight/Ohlgren prefer the b reading, and indeed there appears to be no real reason to emend; sometimes internal rhymes just happen.

Stanza 433/Line 1731 There is some textual uncertainty in this line; Child and Knight/Ohlgren both print it as "That he had spend an hondred pounde" on the basis of fg, but b omits "had." I am not convinced that the emendation of fg is correct. Mightn't Robin have incurred debts that came due that day, or some such? Possibly there is an error here, but we have no assurance that the reading of fg is the correct alternative.

 Stanza 436/Line 1742  Robin sees young men shooting "full fayre upon a day" according to Child; this is the reading of e (which begins with this stanza) and f (g reads "faire"); b has "ferre," i.e. probably "far." Knight/Ohlgren prefer the reading of b, reading it to mean that the archers are shooting a distant targets rather than that they are a sight worth seeing. There is no strong reason to prefer either variant; it probably comes down to our assessment of the relative values of b and e.

 Stanza 437/Line 1747  Editors have generally emended the third line of the verse. b says Robin was "commytted" the best archer in England, and e has comitted. fg, confused by the b reading, have one of their typical monstrosities, "commended for." Child and Knight/Ohlgren are both sure that the word should have been a Middle English form of "counted"; Child emends to "comped." Knight/Ohlgren to "comted." The latter seems more likely, although there are many other possibilities, along the lines of "command to" or "committed to be."

 Stanza 444/Line 775  Child's text of this line says that Robin took his leave "full courteysly." Knight/Ohlgren omits the word "full," without explanation or support in the prints.

 Stanzas 451, 454/Lines 1803, 1815  The place where Robin Hood was killed is somewhat uncertain. Child prints "Kyrkesly" in stana 451, "Kyrke[s]ly" in 454; bfg all read Kyrkesly in the first and Kyrkesly in the second. Knight/Ohlgren are convinced (p. 168) that Child is wrong and both should read "Kyrkely." See also the variants mentioned in the commentary on the text.

Last updated in version 2.6
File: C117U

Get a Bit of Pork

DESCRIPTION: "Get a bit of pork, And stick it on a fork, And give it to The Jew boy, Jew."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)
KEYWORDS: playparty Jew food discrimination
FOUND IN: New Zealand
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 128, "(Get a bit of pork)"
(1 text)
File: SuSm128B

Get Along, Little Dogies

DESCRIPTION: Characterized by the chorus, "Whoopee ti yi yo, get along, little dogies, It's your misfortune and none of my own. Whoopee ti yi yo, get along, little dogies,You know Wyoming will be your new home." Tells of herding cattle down the trail for slaughter
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1893 (journal of Owen Wister)
KEYWORDS: cowboy animal work
FOUND IN: US(MW,SE,So)
REFERENCES (25 citations):
Randolph 178, "Little Doogie" (sic) (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, pp. 268-270 "Whoopee, Ti Yi Yo, Git Along, Little Dogies" (1 text, 1 tune)
Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys, pp. 70-71, "Get Along, Little Dogies" (1 text)
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 76, "Git Along Little Dogies" (1 text, 1 tune)
Neely/Spargo-TalesAndSongsOfSoutherllinois, pp. 184-185, "Whoopee, Ti Yi Yo" (1 text)
Lomax/Lomax-FolkSongUSA 58, "Git Along Little Dogies" (1 text plus addenda, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 385-389, "Git Along, Little Dogies" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 242-244, "Run Along, Little Dogies" (1 text, 1 tune, mostly "Get Along, Little Dogies" but with lyrics imported from "Rocking the Cradle (and the Child Not His Own)" Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 189, "Go On, You Little Dogies"; 190, "Run Along, You Little Dogies" (2 texts, 2 tunes, both of which appear to be mixtures of this song with something else; the Get Hold of This (When There Isn't a Girl About)

DESCRIPTION: "Little Miss Muffet sat on a tuffet... There came a spider, sat down beside her, Whipped his old bazooka out," and begs, "Get hold of this... When there isn't a girl you feel so lonely..." Various tales of how men satisfy themselves without women

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Hopins)

KEYWORDS: soldier sex bawdy nonballad derivative
Get Me Down My Petticoat

DESCRIPTION: "Get me down my petticoat, get me down my shawl, Get me down my buttoned boots, for I'm off to Linen Hall." The singer goes to seek her love, who may have enlisted to fight the Boers. She asks the British to hold the Dubliners back.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (MacColl & Seeger, _Singing Island_)

KEYWORDS: soldier separation love clothes

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1899-1902 - Boer War

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):
DT, PETICOAT*
ADDITIONAL: Frank Harte _Songs of Dublin_, second edition, Ossian, 1993, pp. 64-65, Get Me Down My Petticoat"" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2565

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Hand Me Down My Petticoat

NOTES [20 words]: For background on the Boer War and the Irish soldiers there, see "John McBride's Brigade"; also "Marching to Pretoria." - RBW

File: Hart065

Get On Board, Little Children

DESCRIPTION: "The gospel train is coming, I hear it just at hand... Get on board, little children (x3), There's room for many a more." The train will carry all who wish to board, and "the fare is cheap."

AUTHOR: possibly John Chamberlain

EARLIEST DATE: 1866 (The Jubilee Harp, Advent Christian Publication Society, p. 366, #638)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad train

FOUND IN: US(SE) West Indies(Bahamas) Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (10 citations):
Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, p. 131, "Git on Board, Little Children" (1 text, 1 tune; p. 134 in the 1901 edition)
Cohen-LongSteelRail, pp. 619-624, "The Gospel Train Is Coming" (2 text plus a text of "The Gospel Train (IV)"; 1 tune for each of the two songs)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 529, "The Gospel Train" (2 texts plus a fragment; the "C" fragment is this piece; "A" and "B" are "The Gospel Train (II) and (III)""))
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 529, "The Gospel Train" (1 tune plus a text excerpt)
Pottie/Ellis-FolksongsOfTheMaritimes, pp. 16-17, "The Gospel Grail" (1 text, 1 tune)
Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories 5, "Git On Board" (1 text, 1 tune)
Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 82, "Get On Board, Little Children" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, pp. 254-255, "De Gospel Train Am Leabin" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 361, "Get On Board, Little Children" (1 text)
JournalOfAmericanFolklore, Elsie Clews Parsons, "Spirituals and Other Folklore from the Bahamas," Vol. 41, No. 162 (Oct-Dec 1928), Anthems: Cat Island #11 p. 460, ("I got a daughter name' Nancy") (1 text)
Roud #13948
RECORDINGS:
Alphabetical Four, "Get On Board Little Children" (Decca 7594, 1939; rec. 1938; on AlphabFour01)
Sam Block, "Freedom Train" (on VoicesCiv)
Harry C. Brown, "De Gospel Train Am Comin'" (Columbia A-2255, 1917; rec. 1916)
Rev. Clayborn, Guitar Evangelist, "The Gospel Trains Coming" (Vocalion 1082, 1927; rec. 1926)
Rev. Mose Doolittle, "Get On Board" (Victor 20295, 1926)
Dunham Jubilee Singers, "Get On Board" (Columbia 14676-D, 1933; rec. 1931)
Fannie Lou Hamer, Bob Moses, "Get On Board" (onSingFreeCD)
Kanawha Singers, "The Gospel Train" (Brunswick 365, 1929)
Moore Spiritual Singers, "Get On Board" (Bluebird B-8095, 1939)
Norfolk Jubilee Quartette, "Get On Board, Little Children, Get On Board" (Paramount Oriole Male Quartette, "Get On Board Little Children" (Oriole 893, 1927)
Willie Peacock, "Get On Board, Children" (on VoicesCiv)
Clara Smith, "Get On Board" (Columbia 14183-D, 1927; rec. 1926; also issued as E8938, n.d.)
Sons of Israel, "Gospel Train" (Kingsport 901, n.d.)
Southern Plantation Singers, "Get On Board Little Children" (Vocalion 1414, 1929; rec. 1928)
Tuskegee Institute Singers, "Get On Board" (Victor 18446, 1918; rec. 1916)
12268, 1925; Herwin 92009 [as Southland Jubilee Singers], 1926)
T-Bone Walker, "Get On Board, Little Children" (Capitol 133, 1943; rec. 1942)
Williams Jubilee Singers, "Gospel Train is Coming" (Columbia 14457-D, 1929)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Cindy (I)" (tune)
cf. "My Station's Gonna Be Changed" (lyrics)
cf. "I Want To See Jesus" (lyrics)

NOTES [109 words]: Gail Greenwood points out that a number of sources credit this (as "The Gospel Train") to John Chamberlain (1821-1893). This includes an old (but undated) printed "ballet." It is not clear whether he was responsible for the music. Cohen mentions this attribution but without comment on its value.
The title in the ballet is "Rail Road Hymn."
Thanks to Jim Dixon for pointing out the 1868 printing in The Jubilee Harp, which lacks the "little children" phrase but is clearly the same song. - RBW
The civil rights versions of this song have been altered so little from the original spiritual that, in my judgment, they don't warrant a "SAME TUNE" tag. -PJS

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Cindy (I)" (tune)
cf. "My Station's Gonna Be Changed" (lyrics)
cf. "I Want To See Jesus" (lyrics)

NOTES [109 words]: Gail Greenwood points out that a number of sources credit this (as "The Gospel Train") to John Chamberlain (1821-1893). This includes an old (but undated) printed "ballet." It is not clear whether he was responsible for the music. Cohen mentions this attribution but without comment on its value.
The title in the ballet is "Rail Road Hymn."
Thanks to Jim Dixon for pointing out the 1868 printing in The Jubilee Harp, which lacks the "little children" phrase but is clearly the same song. - RBW
The civil rights versions of this song have been altered so little from the original spiritual that, in my judgment, they don't warrant a "SAME TUNE" tag. -PJS

Last updated in version 5.3

File: FSWB361A

Get Out of Bed! (Bugle Call Lyric)

DESCRIPTION: World War I lyric set to the tune of the infantry reveille: "Get out of bed! Get out of bed! You lay bastards. I feel sorry for you I do."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang)

KEYWORDS: soldier nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang, p. 232, "(no title)" (1 short text)

File: BrPa232A

Get Out, Yellowskins, Get Out

DESCRIPTION: "The Yellowskins here in these hills Now know how it appears To have their gold by others stole As we have suffered for years. Get out, Yellowskins, get out (x2), We'll do it again if you don't go. Get out, Yellowskins, get out!"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Burt-AmericanMurderBallads)

KEYWORDS: China gold homicide

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, p. 157, (no title) (1 short text, 1 tune)

NOTES [225 words]: Reportedly based on an incident of July 1885, in which eight white men shot up a camp where 32 Chinese were digging for gold. None of the murderers were ever punished. I must say, though, that Burt-AmericanMurderBallads's finding a song about the incident seems awfully convenient. The flip side being, of course, that the song seems to accurately reflect the vicious and irrational anti-Chinese prejudice of the era.

J. Franklin Jameson, Dictionary of United States History 1492-1895, Puritan Press, 1894, p. 131. says of this event, "In 1885, twenty-eight Chinamen were murdered by miners in Wyoming and $147,000 of property was destroyed."

A period of extreme restrictions on Chinese immigration followed. A series of treaties in 1844, 1858, and 1868 had opened the doors for immigrants from the far east; 105,000 Chinese were identified in the 1880 census. An attempt to restrict immigration was passed by congress in 1879 but vetoed by President Hayes. In 1880, an agreement was reached with China to limit immigration. This also made it harder for those who left the United States for China to return. In 1888, immigration was stopped entirely. In 1892, laws were passed permitting expulsion of the Chinese. The limits were clearly unfair, since Europeans were still permitted to enter the country in large numbers, but what else is new? - RBW

Last updated in version 2.5

File: Burt157

Get That Boat

DESCRIPTION: "Get that boat! my lucky little driver, Get that boat, get that boat, I say." The singer orders the crew to overtake the boat ahead of them, even if it means skinning them alive, or crashing into the other vessel if it won't get out of the way

AUTHOR: possibly Pearl R. Nye

EARLIEST DATE: 1971 (OHS)

KEYWORDS: ship racing river

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

ADDITIONAL: [no author listed], Scenes & Songs of the Ohio-Erie Canal, Ohio Historical Society, 1971, "Get That Boat" (1 text, 1 tune, from Pearl R. Nye)

NOTES [76 words]: According to the notes in the Ohio Historical Society booklet, the Ohio-Erie Canal (not to be confused with the Erie Canal; it ran from Cleveland on Lake Erie to Columbus, Ohio and on down to the Ohio River at Portsmouth) often suffered from traffic jams around towns, where they had to check in with canal officials. This led to intense competitions to move ahead in the line -- and hence to boat races (or maybe we should say battles) like this one. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.5

File: OHSGBoa

Get Up and Bar the Door [Child 275]

DESCRIPTION: Old man and old wife must bar the door; neither wants to. They agree that whoever speaks first shall bar the door. Thieves enter the house, and play tricks on the couple. At last the old (man) cries out; the (wife) orders him orders him to bar the door

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1769 (Herd)

KEYWORDS: humorous robbery bargaining contest

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South),Scotland(Aber)) US(Ap,MW,NE,SE,So) Canada(Mar,Newf)

REFERENCES (32 citations):

Child 275, "Get Up and Bar the Door" (3 texts)

Bronson 275, "Get Up and Bar the Door" (20 versions)

Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 275, "Get Up and Bar the Door" (2 versions: #1, #12)

Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 92, "The Barring o' the Door" (1 text)

Greig/Duncan 321, "The Barrin' o' the Door" (4 texts, 3 tunes) {A=Bronson's #16, B=#11, C=#12}

Barry/Eckstorm/Smyth-BritishBalladsFromMaine pp. 318-321, "Get Up and Bar the Door" (2 texts, 2 tunes) {Bronson's #17, #10}

Flanders-AncientBalladsTraditionallySungInNewEngland4, pp. 72-75, "Get Up and Bar the Door" (1 text, 1 tune)

Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 148-150, "The Barrin' o' the Door" (1 text, 1 tune)

Randolph 34, "Get Up and Shut the Door" (2 fragments, 1 tune) {Bronson's #20}
Get Up Early in the Morning

DESCRIPTION: "Get up early in the morning, Go and bait your trawl, You scarce had time to light your pipe, When over your dories go. And make three runs a day, No matter how hard she blows, And the devil is in the merchant, boys, He just keeps us alive."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1998 (Andersen, Voyage to the Grand Banks, according to Hallowell)

KEYWORDS: fishing hardtimes commerce

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

File: C275

Get Up Early in the Morning

DESCRIPTION: "Get up early in the morning, Go and bait your trawl, You scarce had time to light your pipe, When over your dories go. And make three runs a day, No matter how hard she blows, And the devil is in the merchant, boys, He just keeps us alive."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1998 (Andersen, Voyage to the Grand Banks, according to Hallowell)

KEYWORDS: fishing hardtimes commerce

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

File: C275
Get Up Goodwife and Shake Your Feathers

DESCRIPTION: "Here comes in a guid new year" The singers come to the back of the house.
"Rise up, goodwife and shake your feathers . gie us oor hogmanay. ... Up stocks, doun steils, Dinna think that we're feils" We're cold. "Gie's a piece an' lat's rin"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1822 (Blackwood's)
KEYWORDS: request begging ritual nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(England(North),Scotland(Aber,Bord)) New Zealand
REFERENCES (9 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast 5, p. 1, ("Get up gudewife and shak' your feathers") (1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan3 639, "Get Up Gudewife" (1 text)
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 61, "(Git up, good wives, and shake your feathers") (1 text)
74 ("Rise up, good wife, and shake your feathers")ADDITIONAL: K. M'Gonigle, "Scraps of English Folklore, XI: Northumberland (Ellingham Women's Institute)" in Folklore, Vol. XXXVI, No. 3 (Sep 1925 (available online by JSTOR)), pp. 250-251 ("Get up, auld wife, and shake your feathers") (1
text) with The Calendar (London, 1832 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol. II, p. 788, ("Get up, goodwife, and shake your feathers")
J. Christie in John Bulloch, editor, Scottish Notes and Queries (Aberdeen, 1888 ("Digitized by guid new year") (1 text with 5 verses, 1 tune)
John Muir, "Notes on Ayrshire Folk-Lore" in John Bulloch, editor, Scottish Notes and Queries (Aberdeen, 1895 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol. VIII, No. 3, August 1894, p. 39, ("Get up, Guidwife, and shake your feathers")
"Hogmanay and New-Year's Day" in Blackwood's Edinburgh Magazine (Edinburgh, 1822 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol. XI, January 1822, p. 31, ("Rise up, gudewife, and shake your feathers")
R.C. MacLagan, "Additions to 'The Games of Argyleshire' (Continued)" in Folklore, Vol. XVI, No. 2 (Jun 1905 (available online by JSTOR)), pp. 215-216 ("This night is called Hogmanay") (1 text: four verse epilogue to "The New-Year Mummer's Tale of Golishan" "'as it used to be said, sung, and acted all over Scotland, from Cheviot to Cape Wraith,... as communicated to the _Scotsman_ of 31st Dec, 1902.")
Roud #5887
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Ye Gae But to Your Beef-Stan'" (subject)
cf. "Our Feet's Cauld" (one verse, at least in Christie's version)
NOTES [231 words]; "Hogmanay" is the Scottish New Year's Eve celebration.
Greig:. ". on the last day of the year we used to sally forth to serenade the neighboring houses with [this song]."
Muir, Chambers, M'Gonigle, Blackwood's, and Greig/Duncan3 639 have only one verse.
Chambers's version is "Get up, goodwife, and shake your feathers, And dinna think that we are beggars; For we are bairns come out to play, Get up and gie's oour hogmany." Christie's text is the basis of the description. Christie's last verse is the Greig/Duncan 640 fragment; most reporters that I have found separate the two and I have kept "Our Feet's Cauld" separate.
Christie's fourth verse - "Up stocks, doun steils, Dinna think that we're feils, For we're but bairnies come to play, Rise up an' gie 's oor hogmanay" - is also combined with the "shake your feathers" verse by Fraser as "Up sticks! Down stools! Don't think that we are fools."
MacLagan's example combines "shake your feathers" and "our feet's cauld" in a different way than Christie's text. The first verse is an introduction to the holiday and a "bless the master" verse. Then comes another "get up, guid wife" ("get up, guid wife, and binna sweir") that is usually reported as a separate rhyme; it concludes with "shake your feathers" and "our feet's cauld." Possibly, the formality of the mummer's play made combining usually independent verses attractive. - BS
Last updated in version 4.4
File: GrD3639
Get Up, Jack! John, Sit Down!

DESCRIPTION: A song of the eternal tasks of the sailor, repeated from generation to generation. The sailors all enjoy their rum, find girls in the towns, get drunk, spend their money, and have to return to sea, as their fathers did before him.

AUTHOR: Words: Edward Harrigan / Music: David Braham

EARLIEST DATE: 1885 (expanded version of the play "Old Lavender")

KEYWORDS: sailor work drink

FOUND IN: US(MA,NE) Britain(England(North))

REFERENCES (8 citations):
- Kidson-TraditionalTunes, pp. 106-108, "Outward Bound" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 71, "The Jolly Roving Tar" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 33, "Get Up, Jack" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 493-494, "Get Up, Jack! John, Sit Down!" (1 text)

DT, GETUPJCK JACKJOHN

Roud #2807

RECORDINGS:
- Stanley Baby, "Homeward Bound" (on GreatLakes1)
- Lena Bourne Fish, "Jolly Roving Tar" (on USWarnerColl01)
- Mick Moloney, "Get Up Jack John Sit down" (on HarriganBrahamMaloney)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Outward and Homeward Bound"

ALTERNATE TITLES:
- Outward Bound

NOTES [713 words]: Written by Edward Harrigan and his father-in-law David Braham for the play "Old Lavender," which is listed as premiering September 1, 1885. (Information supplied by Philip Harrigan Sheedy.) "Old Lavender" actually premiered September 3, 1877 (Moody, p. 260), but Harrigan expanded it for the 1885 show, and this song was added. The song has since entered oral tradition, as known versions exhibit significant variations. - DGE, RBW

The song has cross-fertilized with "Outward and Homeward Bound"; it may be that that was the inspiration for this song -- although Edward Harrigan's father was a sailor (born of Irish parents in Carbonear, Newfoundland; Moody, p. 7), and Harrigan himself had been a ship's caulker (Moody, pp. 15-19), so Harrigan had plenty of background on a sailor's life. Nonetheless the handful of versions in oral tradition, although typically shortened than the Harrigan/Braham original, clearly retain large parts of the original. It's a rather odd piece in the Harrigan/Braham repertoire; Ned Harrigan, despite his nautical background, rarely wrote about the sea in his plays.

The song was from the play "Old Lavender," one that Harrigan worked on for many years (the first version his company performed was one of the few Harrigan shows that didn't do well, but he eventually got it right): "Harrigan toyed with Old Lavender most of his life. In 1885 he added more songs: "Poverty's Tears Ebb and Flow"; "Please to Put That Down"; a tribute to liquor, "When sorrow sits down on your brow, / and sadness peeps out of your eye, / don't stop to think but take a drink"; and one of the swingiest Braham-Harrigan tunes, "Get Up, Jack, John, Sit Down" (Moody, p. 81).

Apparently the original version of the drama, "Old Lavender Water, or, Around the Docks" did not feature any music (Franceschina, p. 107), because it came out before Harrigan's association with composer David Braham was firm; the addition of the music no doubt helps to explain the success of the revived version.

Old Lavender was a character Harrigan played himself (there is a photo of Harrigan in the role in the photo insert following p. 54 of Moody); according to Moody, pp. 78-79, "The seedy and lovable reprobate, Old Lavender, copied after an eccentric who had achieved celebrity on Corlear's Hook, was one of Harrigan's finest portraits. His counterpart might be found among the soggy inhabitants of any waterfront saloon, but few devout drunks could match Lavender's astonishing resistance to Inebriation and to the deprivations of poverty. His elegant circumlocutions emerged in greater profusion with each dash of lubrication, and his natural dignity was unimpaired by his damaged top hat, his ragged frock coat, and his fingerless gloves. Harrigan had spotted the costume on an old man on lower Broadway.

In the play, Lavender is disowned by his brother Philip for drunkenness. Philip's wife runs off with a fellow named Paul Cassin -- who proceeds to dump her, literally: he throws her in a river. She is saved by Rat, a friend of Lavender (Franceschina, p. 174), "Lavender's Sancho Panza," played by Tony Hart (Moody, p. 79). Lavender himself is afraid of water after a flood in a gold mine he discovered, hence his drinking (Moody, p. 80). But it all ends in reconciliations.

Harrigan said of him, "I think Old Lavender fits more of my own individuality in stage characterization than any other part I ever played. I never could see his rags. He was the sort of fellow who could be welcomed anywhere, and was man enough to set off a little from the rest of the crowd. With his conversational powers he could hold his audience. He drank not for drink's self [sic.], but for sociability -- and I've seen many Lavenders" (Moody, p. 81). In the last two years of Harrigan's life, when he was ill and no longer able to perform, his family and old colleagues such as his leading lady Annie Yeamans would visit him and perform parts of his plays. What he requested most often was something from "Old Lavender" (Kahn, p. 300).

This song is sung by Lavender himself; as presented, it "is a jaunty sea chantey with a busy hornpipe accompaniment and a vigorous 'manly' chorus" (Franceschina, p. 174).

For background on Harrigan and Braham, see the notes to "The Babies on Our Block." - RBW

Bibliography

Last updated in version 6.1
File: Wa071

Getting Married (Hog and Hominy)

DESCRIPTION: Singing game. "Here stands a loving couple, Join heart and hand, One wants a wife, And the other wants a man." They hope to agree to marry and have hog and harmony. Once married, the man goes to war. After the war, he joyfully returns home.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1916 (Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana)
KEYWORDS: playparty love courting war separation reunion
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 43-44=Wolford/Richmond/Tillson-PlayPartyInIndiana, p. 174, "Getting Married" (1 text)
Neely/Spargo-TalesAndSongsOfSouthernIllinois, p. 203, "Hog and Hominy" (1 text)
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #10, "Marriage" (2 texts)
Roud #7894
File: Neel203

Getting Upstairs

DESCRIPTION: "First young gent with the right hand round, Back to the left and swing clear around, Swing her to the center and we'll all join hands, Such I getting upstairs I never did see, Such a getting upstairs, it don't suit me." Continues with more dance steps

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1916 (Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana)
KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad
FOUND IN: US(MW,SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Ghaist o' Fernden, The

DESCRIPTION: A farmer's wife needs a midwife but the men won't fetch one for fear of meeting "the ghaist o' Fern-den." The ghost himself fetches the midwife and, leaving her at the farmer's door, reveals his identity and promises to take her home at midnight.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1853 (Jervise, _The History and Traditions of the Land of the Lindsays in Angus and Mearns_, according to Greig/Duncan2)

KEYWORDS: childbirth ghost

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Greig/Duncan2 342, "The Ghaist o' Fernden" (2 texts)
- Lyle/McAlpine/McLucas-SongRepertoireOfAmeliaAndJaneHarris, pp. 162-164, "The Ghaist o' Fern Den" (1 text)

Roud #5872

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Brownie of Fernden

NOTES [21 words]: The sense of "ghost" here seems to be spirit but not of a particular person. One text in Greig/Duncan2 refers to a "brownie." - BS

Last updated in version 4.2

File: GrD2342

Ghost Army of Korea

DESCRIPTION: "Just below the Manchurian border, Korea is the spot, We're due to spend time here In the land that God forgot." The soldiers endure bad weather and nasty creatures, have no comforts, and are forgotten and ignored by those safe at home

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Dallas-TheCruelWars-100SoldiersSongs); said to have been collected 1956

KEYWORDS: soldier hardtimes war

FOUND IN: Britain(England)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Dallas-TheCruelWars-100SoldiersSongs, pp. 180-181, "Ghost Army of Korea" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #2567

File: DalC180

Ghost in the Cellar

DESCRIPTION: Game. "Mother, I see a ghost." The mother responds, "IT was only your father's coat hanging up." The ghost appears and catches someone who becomes the next ghost.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (Newll)

KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad mother ghost

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #158, "Ghost in the Cellar" (1 text)

File: Newe158

Ghost of Polly Rock and Her Two Bantlings, The DESCRIPTION: "When I was but a tiny boy, And sailed on board a privateer, Three dreadful ghosts did me annoy": a woman and her two children, betrayed by the ship's Captain Rock. He tells her where to find the captain. The captain meets them but concludes he is drunk

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales)

KEYWORDS: husband wife betrayal children ghost humorous

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales, pp. 210-211, "The Ghost of Polly Rock and Her Two Banglings" (1 text)

Roud #V1060

File: TNY210

Ghost of the Peanut Stand, The

DESCRIPTION: Biddie Magee owns a Jersey City peanut stand. She loves Connie O'Ryan who joins the army. Biddy takes to bed and dies, "the peanut-stand went up the spout," Connie is drummed out. Her house is haunted by the ghosts of Biddy, Connie, and the peanut stand

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1879 (broadside, LOCSinging sb30417a)

KEYWORDS: courting army Civilwar separation death humorous ghost

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 70, "The Ghost of the Peanut Stand" (2 fragments, 1 tune)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1861, p. 125, "The Peanut-Gal's Ghost" (1 reference); #1862, p. 125, "The Peanut Stand" (4 references)

Roud #2762

BROADSIDES:
LOCSinging, sb30417a, "The Peanut Stand," H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Joe Bowers" (tune, per broadside Bodleian Harding B 26(690))

NOTES [331 words]: The De Marsan text is more complete than the Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick fragment, and is the basis for the description. If nothing else, the De Marsan text dates itself to the Civil War: Connie "got in with a parcel of Jersey roughs; they led him around like a toy; So, he joined the New-York Fire-Zoo-Zoos, and he went for a soger-boy."

The Union 11th [New York] Regiment Infantry "1st New York Fire Zouaves" were mustered in May 7, 1861 and mustered out June 2, 1862. (source: The Civil War Archive site); see also "Abraham's Daughter" for a reference to "the fire Zou-Zous." - BS

As the dates above show, the 11th New York was not long in service (a lucky bunch; they enlisted for two years but served only one); its only real battle was First Bull Run, though it was also involved in the early part of the Peninsular campaign. It was called the "Fire Zouaves" because many of the members were New York firemen -- skills which they put to good use in fighting a fire that threatened to consume part of Washington, D.C. Otherwise, its service was noteworthy mostly for the rowdy conduct of the troops.

The regiment was also famous for its first colonel, E. Elmer Ellsworth (1837-1861), who in 1862 led the regiment into Alexandria, Virginia, and proceeded to tear down the Confederate flag flying over the Marshall House hotel. The owner, James T. Jackson, proceeded to murder Ellsworth (and was killed in return by one of Ellsworth's soldiers), making the young soldier an instant martyr.

It will be observed that the odds of an Irish peanut vendor joining that particular regiment were pretty small -- but, of course, the unit was unusually well-known and hence a likely subject for songs.

For more about Ellsworth, see the notes to "The Soldier's Funeral." - RBW

Broadside LOCSinging sb30417a: H. De Marsan dating per Studying Nineteenth-Century Popular Song by Paul Charosh in American Music, Winter 1997, Vol 15.4, Table 1, available at FindArticles site. - BS

Last updated in version 3.5

File: CrSNB070
Ghost's Bride, The

DESCRIPTION: John Gordon comes to court Mary, saying her lover, his brother, is long dead. She agrees to marry him. She hears the dead brother speak, saying John stole his land, wife, and life. When John Gordon awakes, Mary is gone, her bones by the brother's grave

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: love courting brother death homicide betrayal marriage abandonment reunion

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 58, "The Ghost's Bride" (1 text)
ST BrII058 (Full)

Roud #6567

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Susannah Clargy" [Laws P33] (plot)

cf. "Alonzo the Brave and Fair Imogene" (plot)

NOTES: This song, "A Gentleman of Exeter," and "Susannah Clargy" are all essentially the same story, and looking at the titles in the Broadside Index, I wonder if they haven't cross-fertilized -- or aren't retellings of some epic original. (Note that the story is almost "Hamlet.") The notes in Brown describe this as the best of the lot, and it is certainly vividly told. If there is any complaint against it, it is that it is a little too perfect, and the Brown copy seems to be the only collection. Perhaps it was composed in the family of the informant? - RBW

File: BrII058

Ghostly Crew, The [Laws D16]

DESCRIPTION: A sailor has endured much without fear -- until the night twelve ghosts board his ship and take stations "as if [they] had a right." They disappear as the ship passes a lighthouse. The singer is sure they are sailors drowned in a collision with his ship

AUTHOR: words: Harry L. Marcy

EARLIEST DATE: 1874 ("Fisherman's Ballads and Songs of the Sea")

KEYWORDS: sea ship ghost

FOUND IN: US(NE) Canada(Mar,Newf)

REFERENCES (13 citations):

Laws D16, "The Ghostly Crew"

Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 180-182, "The Ghostly Crew" (2 texts, 1 tune)

Beck-FolkloreOfMaine, pp. 204-205, "The Ghostly Fishermen" (1 text, 1 tune)

Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 115, "The Spirit Song of George's Bank" (1 text, 1 tune)

Peacock, pp. 873-874, "The Ghostly Sailors" (1 text, 2 tunes)

Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 96, "Ghostly Fishermen" (1 text, 1 tune)

Leach-HeritageBookOfBallads, pp. 158-159, "The Spirit Song of George's Bank (The Ghostly Seamen)" (1 text, 1 tune on p. 204)

Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 117, "The Ghostly Sailors" (1 text, 1 tune)

Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 114, "The Ghostly Sailors" (1 text, 1 tune)

Smith/Hatt/Fowke-SeaSongsBalladFromNineteenthCenturyNovaScotia, pp. 96-99, "The Ghostly Sailors" (1 text)

Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 79-80, 245-246, "The Ghostly Fishermen" (1 text, 1 tune)

Ives-21FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 25-28,79, "The Ghostly Fisherman" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT 701, GHOSCREW GHOSCRE2

Roud #1822

RECORDINGS:

Pat Crich, "The Spirit Song on St. George's" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

Mrs. T. Ghaney, "Spirit Song on George's" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

Morris Houlihan, "The Ghostly Fisherman" (on NFMLeach); "Twelve Ghostly Fishermen" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

Pat Murphy, "The Ghostly Fisherman" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Glen Alone" (theme)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Ghostly Seamen

NOTES [433 words]: Gordon Bok reports, "The story I heard was that the schooner Haskell, out of Gloucester, was anchored near George's [Bank] when a sudden gale parted her ground tackle and she went charging, bare-poled, down through the fleet. She cut the schooner Johnston almost in two, killing all her men. On every voyage thereafter, a crew would appear on her deck at night and go through the motions of fishing. After a few trips, no crew would even sign on her, and she rotted at the wharf."

Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick adds more details: On March 7, 1866, the new Charles Haskell rammed the Andrew Jackson, inspiring this song; the Haskell later became known as "the ghost ship."

Some of this may be folklore; after all, we hear a lot of ghost stories about ships sunk by ramming. For example, a story very much like this took place twenty years after Marcy's text was published: On June 22, 1893, HMS Camperdown, in a confused practice maneuver involving an admiral showing off, rammed HMS Victoria, causing the latter to sink with the loss of 358 men including the admiral. Camperdown survived, but was put into reserve roles not long after, and was broken up in 1911 although she was only 22 years old.

And there is a ghost associated with the story: According to Peter Underwood's Gazetteer of British, Scottish & Irish Ghosts, p. 135, shortly after the Victoria sank, the ghost of the admiral aboard, George Tryon, was seen at the home of Lady Tryon in London.

Nonetheless, although the ghosts on the Haskell have not been verified, Beck-FolkloreOfMaine, p. 203, assures us that the beginning and end are true: The Haskell did sink another ship, and she rotted at the pier because no one would serve on her. On p. 205, Beck compares the story to that of the North Star, a sealer out of Saint John's. This, however, seems to be simply a tale of another unlucky ship, not a true parallel.

Another ship-related ghost story from Newfoundland is found on pp. 35-36 of Captain Joseph Prim and Mike McCarthy, The Angry Seas: Shipwrecks on the Coast of Labrador, Jesperson Publishing, 1999. A ship Antelope had sunk in a great storm in 1878. Many men died and were buried in Conception Bay; others were to go home on the Abeoya. The captain of the latter took a boat to where the dead were buried and called out repeatedly, "Is there anybody here who wants to go home?" Supposedly the boat tipped eighteen times, as if men had come over the side, and when they returned to the Abeoya, the rope over the side moved eighteen times as if men were climbing her. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.4
File: LD16

Gliddy Giddy Gout
DESCRIPTION: Teasing game. "Giddy giddy gout, You're shirt's hanging out. Five miles in, And ten miles out."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)
KEYWORDS: playparty clothes
FOUND IN: New Zealand
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 125, "(Giddy giddy gout)"
(1 text)
File: SuSM125

Giein' the Nowte Their Fother
DESCRIPTION: "As I rode in by yon bonnie waterside... there I spied a wee-faur'd maid. She was gien the nowte their fodder." He asks her to fancy him; she replies that she has no dowry. Next summer, he returns and asks again, and makes her a rich lady
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1876 (Christie)
KEYWORDS: courting marriage money
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Gigantic, The

DESCRIPTION: The schooner Gigantic, with a crew of six, leaves Newfoundland for Portugal and has a difficult crossing from October 22 until November 13. They land their cargo of fish and take on salt for the trip home.

AUTHOR: William Best (written 1917)
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA/Leach)
KEYWORDS: commerce sea ship ordeal
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 42, "The Gigantic" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #30127
RECORDINGS:
John James, "Gigantic" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

Gil Brenton [Child 5]

DESCRIPTION: A lord is preparing to wed. His bride seeks to conceal the fact that she is not a virgin, but the truth -- that she had once slept with a lord in a wood -- comes out. It is then revealed that the man she slept with was her husband-to-be.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1783/1799 (Riewerts-BalladRepertoireOfAnnaGordon-MrsBrownOfFalkland)
KEYWORDS: marriage seduction trick disguise
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (11 citations):
Child 5, "Gil Brenton" (8 texts)
Bronson 5, "Gil Brenton" (3 versions)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 5, "Gil Brenton" (3 versions: #1, #2, #3)
Riewerts-BalladRepertoireOfAnnaGordon-MrsBrownOfFalkland, pp. 186-193, "Gil Brenton/Chil Brenton" (2 parallel texts plus a photo of the badly-transcribed tune; also a reconstructed tune on p. 284)
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1 1, "Lord Bangwell's Adventure" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph 13, "The Little Page Boy" (1 fragmentary text, 1 tune, which Randolph places with "Child Waters" though it also has lines from the "Cospatrick" version of "Gil Brenton" and is so short it might go with something else)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 59-63, "Gil Brenton" (1 text)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 5, "Cospatrick" (1 text)
Grigson-PenguinBookOfBallads 42, "Gil Brenton" (1 text)
Buchan-ABookOfScottishBallads 1, "Gil Brenton" (1 text, 1 tune in appendix) {Bronson's #1}
DT, GILBRENT*
Roud #22
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Willie's Lady" [Child 6] (lyrics)
NOTES [924 words]: The description above is that of the fullest versions of this ballad; often large parts of the plot have been lost, even in the longest text (e.g. Mrs. Brown's 74 verse version lacks the preliminary seduction).
Sir Walter Scott's version of this (Child's B) names the hero "Cospatrick," which Scott lists as the name of the Earl of Dunbar around the time of Edward I of England. The name was still used in Child's time for members of the Dunbar line. The name, however, is older; there were at least two significant figures named Cospatrick (the spelling of Mitchison, p. 16, Oram, p. 58) or Gospatrick (so Barlow-Edward, p. 137, etc.; Barlow-Rufus, p. 295; Swanton, pp. 202-203) around the time of the Norman Conquest. The first Cospatrick seems to have been an Anglo-Saxon thegn (thane); he was killed at the court of Edward the Confessor in 1064, although probably not at that king's command (Barlow-Edward, p. 235). According to StentonEtAl, p. 578, he was "the heir of the native earls of Bernicia" -- although Bernicia was never an earldom, but rather a kingdom that became part of Northumbria; apparently there was speculation that Edward's queen had arranged the murder to create opportunities for her brothers. But this seems unlikely, since her brother Tosti(g) was already Earl of Northumbria (and was overthrown soon after). The other Cospatricks were northern Earls; it's not clear how many of them there were. According to Barlow-Edward, p. 235n., an Earl Utrecht of "Northumbria" was murdered in 1016, leaving several sons, Cospatrick being the third. Barlow doubts that this is the same as the preceding, although it is just chronologically possible. It seems more likely the 1016 earl was an ancestor of the one from 1064. The same note mentions another Cospatrick who was with Tostig, the brother of the future King Harold II Godwinson, when Tostig visited Rome in 1061. There was also a Cospatrick who was Lord of Allerdale and Dalston in the time of Edward the Confessor (Barlow-Edward, p. 137n.). Barlow speculates that this might have been the Cospatrick who was murdered at Edward's court. Finally, in 1067-1068, the Anglo-Saxon Chronicle mentions a Jarl (Earl) Gospatrick who was active in the north of England (Swanton, pp. 202, 204). But, theoretically, the earl of Northumbria at this time was supposed to be Morcar (Morkere), who had been appointed late in the reign of Edward the Confessor. Douglas, p. 218, lists Gospatrick among those rebelling against William the Conqueror in 1069, but details seem uncertain. Northumbria and Cumbria and Lothian were at this time rather debatable properties (England in the aftermath of the Norman Conquest had largely lost control of the north, because William the Conqueror didn't have enough Normans to colonize and control the north; Barlow-William, p. 297). Both Malcolm III King of Scots and the king of England had some claims to these territories (Douglas, pp. 225-226. The simplest explanation being that Malcolm was their direct overlord but held them as a vassal of the King of England. But Malcolm, who was always fighting the English, probably would not have seen it that way). Mitchison, p. 16, says that a Cospatrick was apparently a Saxon claimant to one or another northern English earldom in 1069, and whose son held Cumberland until William II of England conquered it in 1092. It was presumably this Cospatrick whose daughter Octreda married Duncan (II), the oldest son of Malcolm III of Scotland (Barlow-Rufus, p. 295; Oram, p. 58). When Malcolm died, he was succeeded by his brother Donald Ban. Duncan in 1094 invaded Scotland and took the throne, but was killed later that year; Octreda and her son William fled to England (Oram, p. 58), where William and descendants later put in an unsuccessful claim to the Scottish throne (the "FitzWilliam" claim). If this Earl Gospatrick was the same as the preceding, he should perhaps be regarded as Earl of Cumbria rather than Northumberland. Or maybe he was Malcolm's earl, or maybe he ruled the area north of the Tweed. Douglas's suggestion is that Malcolm and Swein King of Denmark were looking to carve out a state in northern England which would be ruled by Edgar the Atheling, the man who (by ancestry) should have been King of England rather than William of Normandy. But why, then, would Gospatrick support a man who was taking this earldom? And how would Malcolm and Swein decide who was Edgar's overlord? Obviously it is all pretty vague. It seems unlikely that any of this has a genuine connection to the ballad; I mention it mostly to demonstrate the point that there really were a lot of Cospatricks/Gospatricks. It is interesting to note, however, that Gospatrick is said in Child B brought his wife from over the sea. Might this be a sign of the Saxon earl marrying a Norman wife? Of course, the "Cospatrick" text is Walter Scott's, and seems to be almost unknown in other forms of the ballad. Might this have been Scott's insertion to memorialize a famous local lord? Again, several instances of the ballad mention violence by the groom against the bride on their wedding night; this sounds much like the Thousand and One Nights, but there is unlikely to be a direct connection. Bronson-Song, p. 43, studying the text and tune of this, suggests that the tune collected from Mrs. Brown must have had an internal refrain, the text of which was not taken down. This apparently was a habit of the transcriber; he omitted the internal refrains of "Clerk Colvill," "Gil Brenton," and "Willie's Lady." - RBW
Gila Monster Route, The

DESCRIPTION: A hobo is left behind by the train. The poem recalls his history: He and his pal, given a handout, used it for wine rather than food, got drunk, and were arrested. Set free, the hobo wanders until he catches another train

AUTHOR: L. F. Post and Glenn Norton

EARLIEST DATE: 1934

KEYWORDS: hobo travel prison drink

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 24-26, "The Gila Monster Route" (1 text)
Roud #9924

NOTES [42 words]: This is not even a song (let alone a traditional song); it is a poem published in Railroad Man's Magazine. I cannot for the life of me tell why the Lomaxes reprinted it; apart from a liberal use of railroad slang, it has very little to commend it. - RBW

Gilderoy

DESCRIPTION: "Gilderoy was as bonny a boy as e'er cam tae the glen." The singer describes his charms and how lovingly he once cared for her. He taken as an outlaw. He is convicted (falsely, in her mind) and hanged because the laws were so strict

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1725 (an isolated stanza appears in "Westminster Drollery," 1671)

KEYWORDS: love outlaw trial execution

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1636? - execution of "Gilderoy," aka Patrick McGregour, in Edinburgh

FOUND IN: US(So) Britain(England(South),Scotland) Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (11 citations):
Percy/Wheatley-ReliquesOfAncientEnglishPoetry I, pp. 318-323, "Gilderoy" (1 text)
Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 27-31, "Gilderoy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, pp. 560-562, "Gilderoy" (1 text)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 482, "Gilderoy" (1 text)
Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #43, "Gilderoy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 63, "Gilderoy" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Randolph/Legman-RollMeInYourArms I, pp. 40-41, "Gilderoy" (1 fragmentary text, 1 tune, connected with the Scottish ballad more by the tune than the text) Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex, ZN955, "Gilderoy was a bonny boy"; ZN1821, "My love he was as brave a man"
DT, GILDROY
Walter de la Mare, _Come Hither_, revised edition, 1928; #87, "My Handsome Gilderoy" (1 text)
Roud #1486
BROADSIDES:
_NL Scotland, S.302b.2(020), "Gilderoy," unknown, after 1700
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Salisbury Plain" (theme)
SAME TUNE:
The People's Song ("We long to see the season come When we can vote for Harrison") (Harrison campaign song) (A. B. Norton, _Songs of the People in the Log Cabin Days of Old Tippecanoe_, A. B. Norton & Co., 1888 (available on Google Books), p. 50)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
I Blowed Her with My Horn
NOTES [455 words]: Claude Simpson, _The British Broadside Ballad and Its Music_, pp. 252 ff., [notes that Gilderoy] seems to have been so glorified that he appears in historical legends not long after [his execution]. Simpson cites a broadside ballad printed "in the 1690s..." "probably written much earlier," entitled "The Scotch Lover's Lamentation: or, Gilderoy's Last Farewell... To an excellent new Tune, much in request." That ballad begins, "Gilderoy was a bonny boy." It is to be found in Pepys, Craford, Bagford and A Collection of Old Ballads, 1723-1725. - EC
William Rose Benet's _Reader's Encyclopedia_ has this to say:
"Gilderoy. A famous cattle-stealer and highwayman of Perthshire, who is said to have robbed Cardinal Richelieu [died 1642] in the presence of the King, picked Oliver Cromwell's pocket [Cromwell, however, was not of any note in 1636, and had not yet led his armies into Scotland], and hanged a judge. He was hanged in 1636.... Some authorities say there were two robbers by this name."
David Brandon's _Stand and Deliver: A History of Highway Robbery_ (p. 76) gives another version of this, but with a twist: the robber is named "Gilders Roy." Brandon reports that "when he stopped a judge... his gang stripped his two footmen, tied them up and threw them into a pond, whereupon they drowned. Roy himself smashed the judge's carriage, shot the horses, and then hanged his hapless victim." Right. Shoot valuable horses?
Much of this seems to be derived from Percy, but Wheatley adds a much less flattering commentary: "The subject of this ballad was a ruffian totally unworthy of the poetic honours given him.... [H]e was betrayed by his mistress Peg Cunningham, and captured after killing eight of the men sent against him, and stabbing the woman...
"He was one of the proscribed Clan Gregor, and a notorious lifter of cattle in the Highlands of Pethshire for some time before 1636. In February of that year seven of his accomplices were taken, tried, condemned, and executed at Edinburgh.... [I]n July, 1636, [he] was hanged with five accomplices at the Gallowlee."
The National Library of Scotland site, however, lists his death year as 1638. Ford lists certain others of his exploits; he too is cautious about their veracity.
Sam Hinton notes the most likely source for the robber's name (cf. Ford): "Gilderoy" could be a corruption of Gaelic "Gionna Ruadh" ("Gillie Roy") -- "red-haired boy."
There is another piece called "Gilderoy" in the _Scots Musical Museum_ (#66); this is probably a rewrite based on the traditional tune. I strongly doubt it ever went into tradition itself; it begins "Ah! Chloris, cou’d I now but sit As unconcern’d as when Your infant beauty could beget No happiness, nor pain!" - RBW
_Last updated in version 4.4_
_File: RL040_

Giles Corey

DESCRIPTION: "Come all New England men And hearken unto me And I will tell what did befalle Upon the Gallows tree." "In Salem village was the place." "This Goody Corey was a witch." Wife and husband are accused; he is pressed to death and she is hung
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Burt-AmericanMurderBallads)
Giles Scroggins

DESCRIPTION: "Giles Scroggins courted Molly Brown... If you love me as I love you, No knife can cut our love in two." "But scissors cut as well as knives... For just as they were going to wed, Fate's scissors cut poor Giles's thread." She refuses his ghost in a dream

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1848 (Davidson's Universal Melodist)

KEYWORDS: love courting death ghost humorous

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Scott-EnglishSongBook, pp. 66-67, "Giles Scroggins" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Davis-TraditionalBalladsOfVirginia 25, "[Appendix to] Lady Alice" (1 text)

Roud #1620

NOTES [91 words]: Davis thinks this piece "evidently a burlesque of 'Giles Collins,',' and this is certainly possible. But it is so broad, and the plot so commonplace, that it could easily have arisen independently.

Davis also has notes on the authorship and various places it has appeared, mostly in broadside or songster form. He admits that the attributions are all uncertain. It's not clear if the song ever really went into tradition, but it certainly was printed frequently.

Scott's comment is that it is "A clown song; undoubtedly in Grimaldi's repertory." - RBW

Last updated in version 3.2

File: DavB025

Gilhooly's Dinner Party

DESCRIPTION: "Gilhooly gave a party to his friends a week ago, There were guests from County Sligo and Galway and Mayo." The many sorts of food are described. People eat in strange and messy ways. Eventually Gilhooly charges the diners ten dollars each

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Finger-FrontierBallads)

KEYWORDS: party humorous food courting money

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Finger-FrontierBallads, pp. 151-152, "Gilhooly's Dinner Party" (1 text)

Roud #8836

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Irish Jubilee" (theme) and references there

File: Fing151

Gill Stoup, The

DESCRIPTION: "What a mischief whisky's done ... Brings muckle grief at hame." Jake gets drunk and sets out "owre the ragin' main." Soldier Tam draws his pay but he and Soldier John drink it all. A husband buys meal at the mill but sells the sack to buy whisky.

AUTHOR: unknown
Gimme de Banjo

DESCRIPTION: Shanty. Characteristic line: "Dance, gal, gimme de banjo!" The singer "was sent to school fer to be a scholar," but had no success and left his books to others. (Now he is at sea picking the banjo)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951

KEYWORDS: shanty, sailor, music

FOUND IN: US (MA)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Doerflinger, Songs Of The Sailor and Lumberman, p. 45, "Gimme de Banjo" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Hugill, Shanties From The Seven Seas, p. 341, "Gimme de Banjo" (2 texts, 1 tune) [AbEd, pp. 256-257]

ST Doe045 (Partial)

Roud #9437

File: Doe045

Gimme Oil in My Lamp

DESCRIPTION: "Gimme oil in my lamp, keep shinin' and look down. Gimme oil in my lamp; I will pray every day. Gimme oil in my lamp, keep shinin' and look down, Until the break of day." "Sing hosanna (x3) to the king of kings." "Give me (joy/love/faith) in my heart."

AUTHOR: A. Sevison (source: hymnals cited by Hymnary.org)

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)

KEYWORDS: religious, nonballad

FOUND IN: US (SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 758, "Gimme Oil in My Lamp" (1 short text, 1 tune)

File: BrS5758

Gin and Coconut Water

DESCRIPTION: The singer, from the West Indies, now in U.S., complains that he has "lost my strength and my energy" because he cannot get gin and coconut water in America. He goes to a doctor who says, "Take this advice fom me ... go back to the West Indies"

AUTHOR: Wilmoth Houdini

EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (Houdini)

KEYWORDS: emigration, drink, America, nonballad, doctor

FOUND IN: West Indies (Bahamas)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
182-185, "Gin and Coconut Water" (Honey come and go with me, Back to the West Indie) (1 tune)

RECORDINGS:
- Blind Blake Higgs, "Gin and Coconut Water" (on WIHIGGS01)
- Wilmoth Houdini and his Royal Calypso Orchestra, "Gin and Cocoanut Water" (1946, on Decca 23543 A)

NOTES [29 words]: Higgs keeps Houdini's name in the song. The doctor's prescription according to both Higgs and Houdini is "Take this advice from me Houdini and go back to the West Indies" - BS

Last updated in version 5.2
File: RcGiCoWa

---

Gin Ye See My Lad Kiss Him and Clap Him

DESCRIPTION: "Gin ye see my lad kiss him and clap him, And tell him that I was bookit [registered as betrothed in the session records] the streen."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan7)

KEYWORDS: courting nonballad marriage

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Greig/Duncan7 1344, "Gin Ye See My Lad Kiss Him and Clap Him" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Roud #7225

NOTES [16 words]: The current description is based on the Greig/Duncan7 fragment and the Greig/Duncan7 [gloss]. - BS

Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD71344

---

Gin Ye Wed a Bonnie Wife

DESCRIPTION: "Gin ye wed a bonnie wife Little sleep will sair [Greig/Duncan8: serve] ye"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan8)

KEYWORDS: marriage wife

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Greig/Duncan8 1920, "Gin Ye Wed a Bonnie Wife" (1 fragment)
- Roud #15120

NOTES [38 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan8 fragment.

Scottish proverb: "He that has a bonnie wife needs mair than twa een" (source: Andrew Henderson, Scottish Proverbs (London, 1876 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 61). - BS

Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD81920

---

Ginger Blue

DESCRIPTION: Walky, talky, Ginger Blue, White man run, but the nigger he flew. Wakin' talkin' Ginger Blue, I can tell you might true, I'm just from the Tennessee mountains. Take a drink of beer as sweet as water That flows from the Tennessee fountains."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (Randolph), but apparently in existence in the nineteenth century

KEYWORDS: nonballad

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
- Randolph 298, "Ginger Blue" (1 fragmentary text)
- Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 496, "Jinger Blue" (1 fragmentary text)
- Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 496, "Jinger Blue" (1 tune plus a text excerpt)
- Roud #11762

RECORDINGS:
- Charlie Oaks, "Ginger Blue" (Vocalion 15344, 1926)
Arthur Tanner, "Dr. Ginger Blue" (Columbia 15479-D, 1929)

SAME TUNE:
Sherman's March ("Now, listen to my song," by Michael Fee) (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets p. 141)

NOTES [117 words]: The notes in Brown suggest that his text (the "Jinger Blue" version) might be derived from "Walkin' in the Parlor" as well as the nineteenth century pop song "Ginger Blue."
Possible -- but with only a fragment, it's beyond proof.

Edward Harrigan, in his performance piece "The London Comic Singers," featured an African-American military unit, the "Ginger Blues" (an imitation of Harrigan's "Skidmore Guard" from the "Mulligan Guard" plays). The Ginger Blues had a song, which isn't this (it can be found in Finson-Edward-Harrigan-David-Braham, vol. I, #11, pp. 37-40), but it's possible that one of the songs influenced the other. For background on Harrigan, see the notes to "Babies on Our Block." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2
File: R298

Ginny's Gone to Ohio

DESCRIPTION: "Ginny's gone to Ohio, Ginny's gone away, Ginny's gone to Ohio, Ginny's gone away." "Ginny's a pretty gal, don't you know," "Ginny's gone, an' I'm goin' too, " Ginny's dressed in strings and rags"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1967 (NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal)
KEYWORDS: travel nonballad clothes beauty
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
DT, GINNYGON*
Roud #481

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Riley" (lyrics)

NOTES [153 words]: Although the Golden Ring recording calls this traditional, I wonder a little. The only actual printed version seems to be the NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal from Carlie Tart and family, which makes me wonder if it isn't a version of "Riley" somewhat adapted.
The NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal article connects it with a piece found in the 1830s journal of Fanny Kemble:
Jenny shake her toe at me,
Jenny gone away.
Jenny shake her toe at me,
Jenny gone away.
Hurrah! Miss Susy, oh!
Jenny gone away.
Hurrah! Miss Susy, oh!
Jenny gone away.
Allowing that "Jennie" could easily turn to "Ginnie/Ginny," I don't really see much connection in the rest of this song.
Roud files it in with versions of "Tommy's Gone to Hilo," but if so, the genders have changed and other changes have been made. At minimum, it is a deliberate rewrite. Ultimately, unless we find more versions, I don't think we can say much about the origin. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1
File: DTginnyg

Ginseng Blues

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "You can't read my mind. When you think I'm loving you I'm quitting you all the time." Singer has a girl in Georgia, one in Dixie, his home's in Carolina but he's got two children in Georgia.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (StuffDreams1)
KEYWORDS: infidelity sex bragging rambling nonballad lover children
Kentucky Ramblers, "Ginseng Blues" (on StuffDreams1)

NOTES [38 words]: The Kentucky Ramblers' track follows each chorus with a yodel. The title is from the first verse: "I ain't going to dig no ginseng, I ain't going to hunt no crow, Ain't going to do a doggone thing but love my dear sweet mama." - BS

Last updated in version 5.2

Gipsies' Glee, The

DESCRIPTION: "A merry, merry life we gipsies lead" in the forest. We pitch our tents by day, listen to song birds, sit under a tree and drink ale. We pitch our tents by night and drink a tankard.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames)

KEYWORDS: drink nonballad Gypsy

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 68, "The Gipsies' Glee" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 299)

Roud #1244

File: WT068

Gipsy King, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer says he is the Gipsy King but he has no crown, courtiers, or ministers. His subjects are his equal and they share their table and drink. "They don't grudge me the largest glass, Nor ... the prettiest lass ... Ne'er a king do I envy"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1826 (_Janus_)

KEYWORDS: drink food nonballad royalty Gypsy

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (3 citations):

Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 127-128, "The Gipsy King" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Gl 43)

Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #743, p. 49, "The Gipsy King" (2 references)

ADDITIONAL: Janus, or, The Edinburgh Literary Almanack (1826 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 315-316, "Song of the Gipsy King" (1 text)

Roud #1259

BROADSIDES:

Bodleian, Johnson Ballads fol. 146, "The Gipsey King" ("Tis I'm the gipsey king"), J. Pitts (London), 1819-1844; also Harding B 20(58), Harding B 11(1319), "The Gipsey King"

NLScotland, L.C.1269(181b), "The Gipsey King" ("Tis I'm the gipsey king"), J. Scott (Edinburgh), 1843-1855

NOTES [8 words]: The Janus text is headed "from the German." - BS

Last updated in version 3.5

File: WT127

Giraffe, The

DESCRIPTION: "It's hard to make a living now, in country or in town, The rich man's great ambition is to pull the poor man down." The squatters bring in guards "to protect the long Giraffe" from shearsers who demand better conditions. The shearsers eventually succeed

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1970 (AndersonStory)

KEYWORDS: sheep work labor-movement Australia

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Girl from Clahandine

DESCRIPTION: Before the singer leaves for America he bids his friends adieu and tearfully leaves his girl. He finds no one in America as true or kind as the girl he left behind. When he has enough gold he'll return to marry her and settle in a cottage in Clahandine.

AUTHOR: Tom Flanagan (source: notes to IRClare01)

EARLIEST DATE: 1974 (IRClare01)

KEYWORDS: poverty love parting America Ireland emigration

FOUND IN: Ireland

Roud #18474

RECORDINGS:

Michael Flanagan, "Girl from Clahandine" (on IRClare01)

NOTES [66 words]: Notes to IRClare01: "...it has obviously been re-written from the popular 'The Girl I Left Behind' to place its location around North Clare. Saint Bridget's Well [he was born near there] is at Liscannor a few miles south of Luogh."

The verse structure, final line of two verses, and a few other lines follow Laws P1A but the story line does not follow any "The Girl I Left Behind" that I know. - BS

File: RcGiFCla

Girl from Turfahun, The

DESCRIPTION: "Ye bards may sing your sweetest lays In praise of beauty's grace...." The singer went to Ballycastle fair, where he sees a beautiful girl. They meet again at a dance, and during a pause, he asks her name. He learns she is married. He laments

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: love courting beauty husband wife

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H521, p. 372, "The Girl from Turfahun" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #6887

File: HHH521

Girl I Left Behind (I), The [Laws P1A/B]

DESCRIPTION: Two lovers promise to be faithful. He then sets out on a voyage. Before they can be reunited, one or the other proves unfaithful. (In Laws's "A" texts, the man marries a Scottish girl and his love dies of a broken heart; in "B" texts, the girl is untrue)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: c. 1847 (Forget-Me-Not Songster)

KEYWORDS: courting promise infidelity separation

FOUND IN: US(Ap,MA,MW,Ro,SE,So) Canada(Mar,Newf) Britain(Scotland(Aber)) Ireland Australia

REFERENCES (53 citations):

*Laws P1A/B "The Girl I Left Behind"

Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #83, p. 1, "The Girl I Left Behind"; #157, p. 2, "The Girl I Left Behind Me"; #88, p. 2, ("I'll stay with her and think no more On the girl I left behind") (1 text plus 2 fragments)

Greig/Duncan5 1059, "The Girl I Left Behind" (12 texts, 8 tunes)

Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 198-200, "Peggy Walker" (3 texts)

Randolph 283, "The Girl I Left Behind" (4 texts, 1 tune. Laws assigns Randolph's A text to P1A and B, C, and D to P1B)

Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 101-104, "The Girl I Left Behind" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 64A)

Randolph/Legman-RollMeInYourArms I, pp. 434-440, "The Girl I Left Behind" (5 texts, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 145, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (5 texts plus 1 excerpt and mention of 1 more. Laws lists the "A" and B" texts as P1A and "C," "D," "F," and "G" as P1B)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 145, "The Girl I Left Behind" (1 excerpt, 1 tune)
Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 79, "My Parents Rearing Me Tenderly" (1 text)
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 92, "The Rambling Cowboy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys, pp. 134-135, "The Rambling Cowboy" (1 text)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, pp. 153-154, "The Girl I Left Behind" (1 text, 1 tune)
Reynolds/Folk-SongsAlivePart2 44, "Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text, 1 tune)
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 305-206, "The Maid I Left Behind" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wyman/Brockway-LonesomeSongs-KentuckyMountains-Vol1, p. 76, "Peggy Walker" (1 text, 1 tune)
Czaden/Haufrecht/Studer-FolkSongsOfTheCatskills 39, "The Girl I Left Behind" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 96, "My Parents Treated Me Tenderly" (6 texts, 6 tunes)
Cambiaire-EastTennesseeWestVirginiaMountainBallads, pp. 47-49, "The Girl I Left on New River" (1 text)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H188, p. 401, "The Girl I Left Behind" (1 text, 1 tune)
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 148, "My Parents Raised Me Tenderly" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 28, "The Girl I Left Behind" (1 text plus mention of 1 more, 1 tune)
Dean-FlyingCloud, p. 10, "The Girl I Left Behind" (1 text)
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, p.115, "There Was a Rich Old Farmer" (1 text, 1 tune, rather worn-down)
Stout-FolkloreFromIowa 33, pp. 48-49, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text, mostly lyric but probably derived from this)
McIntosh-FolkSongsAndSingingGamesOfIllinoisOzarks, pp. 17-18, "Across the Plains of Illinois" (1 text, 1 tune, so heavily localized that it might well be considered a separate song)
Peacock, pp. 449-452, "The Girl I Left Behind" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, pp. 76-77, "The Girl I Left Behind" (1 text, 1 tune)
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 134, "Jennie Ferguson" (1 text, 1 tune); 138, "The Girl I Left Behind" (1 text, 1 tune)
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 70, "the Girl I Left Behind (Janey Ferguson)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ryan/Small-HaulinRopeAndGaff, p. 134, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text, a single stanza probably of a version rewritten for seal-hunting, but with only four lines, it can hardly be separated from the main song)
McNeil-SouthernFolkBalladsVol1, pp. 106-109, "The Broken-hearted Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, p. 50, "The Rich Old Farmer" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 165, "The Girl I Left Behind" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cohen/Seeger/Wood-NewLostCityRamblersSongbook, p. 38, "The Girl I Left Behind" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 62, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (2 texts, 1 tune, with the "A" text, although mixed and westernized, probably belonging here and the "B" text being the lyric piece); 63, "My Parents Raised Me Tenderly" (1 text, 1 tune)
Tinsley-HeWasSinginThisSong, pp. 200-203, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text, 1 tune, a cowboy adaption)
Ohrlin-HellBoundTrain 84, "The Girl I Left in Missouri" (1 text, 1 tune)
Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol1, pp. 59-6-, "Maggie Walker, the Girl I Left Behind" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 45-47, "I'll Ne'er Forget the Parting" (1 text, 1 tune)
MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland 65, "The Girl I Left Behind" (1 text, 1 tune)
Shay-AmericanSeaSongsAndChanteys, pp. 202-203, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text, 1 tune)
Spaeth-ReadEmAndWeep, pp. 16-17, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #747, p. 49, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (4 references)
Forget-Me-Not-Songster, pp. 220-221, "The Maid I Left Behind" (1 text, 1 tune, which despite the title often refers to "The girl I left behind me"; it looks as if the title was changed to avoid confusion with the more lyric "The Girl I Left Behind Me" on p. 218)
Heart-Songs, pp. 66-67, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text, 1 tune, beginning "The dames of France are fond and free")
Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 117, "The Girl I've Left Behind Me" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 114, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text)
Winstock-SongsAndMusicOfTheRedcoats, p. 68, "The girl I left behind me" (1 tune)
DT 338, GIRLEFT (GIRLEFT2* -- perhaps a mixed version, with the text of Laws P1 and the tune of the playparty?) GIRLLFT6*
Roud #262 and 23929

RECORDINGS:
Jules [Verne] Allen, "The Gal I Left Behind" (Victor V-40022, 1929; on WhenIWas2)
Clint Howard et al, "Maggie Walker Blues" (on Ashley02, WatsonAshley01)
Dock Boggs, "Peggy Walker" (on Boggs3, BoggsCD1)
Texas Gladden, "Always Been A Rambler" (on USTGladden01 -- a tiny fragment that might be this or almost anything)
[G. B.] Grayson & [Henry] Whitter, "I've Always Been a Rambler" (Gennett, unissued, 1928) (Victor V-40324, 1928; on GraysonWhitter01, LostProv1, ConstSor1)
Harry Jackson, "The Gal I Left Behind" (on HJackson1)
Billie Maxwell, "The Arizona Girl I Left Behind" (Victor V-40188, 1930; on MakeMe)
Pleaz Mobley, "My Parents Raised Me Tenderly" (AFS; on LC12)
Spencer Moore, "The Girl I Left Behind" (on LomaxCD1700, LomaxCD1702)
New Lost City Ramblers, "I've Always Been A Rambler" (on NLCR13, NLCRCD2)
Mrs. Clara Stevens, "The Girl I Left Behind" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth b.26(187), "Margaret Walker" ("My parents raised me tenderly having no child but me"), S. Russell (Birmingham), 1840-1851; also Firth b.25(478), "Margaret Walker"; Firth c.26(280), "Girl I Left Behind"; Harding B 11(2237), Firth c.14(210), "The Lover's Lament" or "The Girl I Left Behind Me"
Murray, Mu23-y1:050, "The Girl I Left Behind Me," James Lindsay (Glasgow), 19C, with the unhappy ending left off
NLScotland, L.C.1270(015), "The Girl I Left Behind Me" ("Now for America I am bound, Against my inclination"), unknown, c. 1880, with the unhappy ending left off
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Girl I Left Behind Me (III)" (tune)

SAME TUNE:
Old England Forty Years Ago (File: TPS048)
Well I Couldn't Care Less (File: Tawn032)
The Girl I Left Behind Me (by Thomas Davis) (Kathleen Hoagland, editor, One Thousand Years of Irish Poetry (New York, 1947), pp. 471-472)
A New Song on the Causes -- beginnings, events -- end -- and consequences of the late war with Great Britain ("Old England forty years ago, When we were young and tender") (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 217)
The Girl I Left Behind Me (square dance calls) (Welsch-NebraskaPioneerLore, pp. 99-100)
The Sealer's Song (I) (File: Doyl3052)
The Girl I Left Behind Me ("I'll go to the ice and I'll catch some seals") (ADDITIONAL: James Murphy, editor, _Songs Sung by Old-Tlme Sealers of Many Years Ago_, James Murphy Publishing, 1925 (PDF available from Memorial University of Newfoundland web site), p. 19)

NOTES [89 words]: In addition to this ballad form, there is a song with this title (indexed as "The Girl I Left Behind Me (lyric)"). As the two have cross-fertilized (often, e.g., sharing the latter's tune "Brighton Camp"), the reader is advised to check both songs for completeness. The texts entitled "The Rambling Cowboy" are fairly distinct, being about the daughter of a rich old rancher who wins a cowboy's heart, but the song is still recognizable this. Presumably it was reworked by someone -- Thorp mentions an attribution to a "K. Tolliver." - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1
File: LP01
Girl I Left Behind Me (II), The (lyric)

DESCRIPTION: The singer recalls the girl he left behind, and now plans to return to her, even if it involves losing his job. He reminisces: "Oh, that girl, that sweet little girl, The girl I left behind me, With rosy cheeks and curly hair, The girl I left behind me."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1825 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 28(66)); (tune "Brighton Camp" dated by Chappell to 1758)

KEYWORDS: separation love return nonballad playparty

FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW,NE,So)

REFERENCES (21 citations):
Randolph 546, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (3 texts, 1 tune)
Hudson-FolksongsOfMississippi 98, pp. 229-230, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text)
Gainer-FolkSongsFromTheWestVirginiaHills, pp. 173-174, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text, 1 tune, short enough that it's not really clear if it's this or a very defective version of "The Girl I Left Behind Me (I)"
Welsch-NebraskaPioneerLore, pp. 10-11, "The Gal I Left Behind Me" (1 text)
Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 46-47=Wolford/Richmond/Tillson-PlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 155-156, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text, 1 tune)
McIntosh-FolkSongsAndSingingGamesOfIllinoisOzarks, pp. 76-77, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text, 1 tune)
Abernethy-SinginTexas, pp. 107-108, "The Gal I Left Behind Me" (1 text, 1 tune, unusually long but still a nonballad)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 280-282, "The Gal I Left Behind Me," "That Pretty Little Gal" (3 texts, 1 tune)
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 62, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (2 texts, 1 tune, with the "B" text belonging here and the "A" text being a Westernized form of Laws P1)
Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys, pp. 69-70, "The Gal I Left Behind Me" (1 text)
Finger-FrontierBallads, p. 63, "The Gal I Left Behind Me" (1 short text, filed here because it is Western and short)
Dallas-TheCruelWars-100SoldiersSongs, pp. 48-49, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text, 1 tune)
Chappell/Wooldridge-OldEnglishPopularMusic II, pp. 187-189, "Brighton Camp, or, The Girl I've Left Behind Me" (1 tune, partial text)
Scott-EnglishSongBook, pp. 8-9, "Brighton Camp" (1 text, 1 tune)
Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 79-80, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 tune plus dance instructions)
Hill-PoemsAndSongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 226-227, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text, a Civil War adaption)
Forget-Me-Not-Songster, p.218, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text, possibly rewritten, which does not seem to include the chorus; pp. 220-221 have "The Maid I Left Behind Me," which is the ballad version of the song, Laws P1)
Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #141, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 281, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text)
Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, pp. 242-244, "The Girl I Left Behind Me"

DT, GIRLFLT4* GIRLFLT5* GRLBHNDZ

Roud #4497 and 7680 and 23929

RECORDINGS:
Anonymous singer, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (on Unexp1)
Bull Mountain Moonshiners, "Johnny Goodwin" (Victor 21141, 1927; on TimesAint05)
Vernon Dalhart, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (Columbia 437-D, 1925)
Uncle Dave Macon, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (Vocalion 15034, 1925)
Pete Seeger, "Girl I Left Behind" (on PeteSeeger24) (on PeteSeeger40)
Gid Tanner & his Skillet Lickers, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (Columbia 15170-D, 1927)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 28(66), "The Girl I Left Behind Me" ("I am lonesome since I cross'd the hills"), W. Armstrong (Liverpool), 1820-1824; also Harding B 16(330b), Harding B 18(570), Harding B 11(1322), Harding B 26(214), ["The] Girl I Left Behind Me"; Harding B 11(455), Firth c.20(167) [many illegible words], "Brighton Camp" or "The Girl I Left Behind Me"
LOCSinging, cw102000, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" ("I'm lonesome since I cross'd the hills"), J. Andrews (New York), 1853-1859; also cw102010, as201170, sb20156a, as104460, as107220, as10446a, "The Girl I Left Behind Me"
CROSS-REFERENCES:
  cf. "Brighton Camp" (tune)
  cf. "The Wayward Boy" (tune)
  cf. "The Battle of the Windmill" (tune)
  cf. "The Waxies' Dargle" (tune)
  cf. "When I Look Back to Bonny Aberdeen" (tune)
  cf. "Anti-Confederation Song (II)" (tune)

NOTES [222 words]: The tune "Brighton Camp," suitable for playparties, dances, and all sorts of fun occasions, seems to have sustained a variety of texts which then became intermixed. Some may even have cross-fertilized with the ballad "The Girl I Left Behind" [Laws P1]. The reader is advised to check all these sources to get a complete cross-section.

W. Bruce Olson contributed extensive notes to the Digital Tradition regarding the origin of the tune, arguing against Chappell's date. The Folksinger's Wordbook credits this piece to Samuel Lover, who did indeed publish a set of lyrics in 1855. Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd also attributes its version to Lover. But it seems likely he just touched up an existing piece, as the tune and the title are older.

This song seems to have given rise to a singing game/playparty of the same title, exemplified e.g. by the versions of Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana and McIntosh-FolkSongsAndSingingGamesOfIllinoisOzarks. Roud seems to number the playparty versions as #7680 and the non-playparties as #4497. I think. But unless a version is labelled a playparty, it's next to impossible to tell them apart. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0
File: R546

Girl I Left Behind Me (III), The

DESCRIPTION: The singer is bound for Baltimore but still thinks about "the girl I left behind me. My friends they sent me off for fear I'd wed a steam-loom weaver ... Sweet Helen, dear, tho' far from thee,Our hearts will ne'er be parted." He returns to Glasgow.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 19C (broadside, Murray Mu23-y1:050)
KEYWORDS: love emigration separation America
FOUND IN:
BROADSIDES:
  Bodleian, Harding 2806 c.15(254), "Girl I Left Behind Me" ("Now for America I'm bound")," unknown, n.d.; also Harding B 26(215), "Girl I Left Behind Me"; Harding B 19(86), also "The Girl I Left Behind Me" ("Now I am bound for a foreign land"), W. Birmingham (Dublin), c.1867; also 2806 b.10(65), "The Girl I Left Behind Me" ("Now I am bound for a foreign land")
  Murray, Mu23-y1:050, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" ("Now for America I'm bound"), James Lindsay (Glasgow), 19C
  NLS: Scotland, L.C.1270(015), "The Girl I Left Behind Me" ("Now for America I'm bound"), unknown, c.1880
CROSS-REFERENCES:
  cf. "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (tune, per broadside Bodleian Harding B 26(215))

NOTES [53 words]: The "Now I am bound for a foreign land" broadsides have the singer leave Bantry [Clonmel in Anderson, Farewell to Judges & Juries] rather than Glasgow, head for Sydney instead of Baltimore, and spend his exile in Van Diemen's Land, rather than America. Broadside NLS: Scotland L.C.1270(015) lacks the happy ending. - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: BrT6ILB3

Girl I Left Behind Me (V), The

DESCRIPTION: The war with France is over and, after ten years, the sailors "now return to embrace The partners of their bosoms." The singer plans to "spend my life to live and love The Girl I left behind me." When their lives are over they'll be together in heaven.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1839 (broadside, Bodleian Firth b.25(83))
KEYWORDS: love war reunion nonballad sailor
FOUND IN:
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth b.25(83), "The Girl I Left Behind Me" ("The wars are o'er, and gentle peace"), J. Catnach (London), 1813-1838; also Firth c.13(244), Firth b.25(36), Harding B 11(2738), "The Girl I Left Behind Me"; Harding B 11(2068), Harding B 15(168a), "The Lass I Left Behind Me"
File: BdGILB5

Girl I Left Behind Me (VI), The
DESCRIPTION: Singer bids farewell to his beloved and departs for the war. He shares "the glory of that fight." He swears that if he does not return, "Dishonor's breath shall never stain/The name I leave behind me." The girl may tell how she will miss him if he dies
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (recording, Lloyd & Howard Massey)
LONG DESCRIPTION: Singer bids farewell to his beloved -- "I breathed the vows that bind me" -- and departs for the war. He shares "the glory of that fight." He looks forward to the day of victory and to being reunited with his love, but swears that if he does not return, "Dishonor's breath shall never stain/The name I leave behind me." In one version the voice then shifts to the girl: "He don't come it'll break my heart/And a-almost run me crazy"
KEYWORDS: virtue love marriage promise army battle Civil war farewell parting return reunion separation lover wife soldier
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, p. 327, "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (1 text, tune referenced)
DT, GIRLLFT7
RECORDINGS:
Dr. Lloyd & Howard Maxey [Massey], "The Girl I Left Behind Me" (OKeh 45150, 1927)
NOTES [115 words]: The Digital Tradition entry assigns a keyword of "Irish" to this, but they also state that it's from "Songs of the Seventh Cavalry" (published by the Bismarck Tribune); it certainly has the ring of an American Civil War piece to my ears. As the DT entry is undated, I use the Masseys' recording for Earliest Date. - PJS
There are of course two other famous girls left behind: the lyric based on the tune "Brighton Camp," and the ballad Laws P1, which he confusingly gives this title ("I've Always Been a Rambler" might have been a better title). The simple presence of this key line seems to cause some interchange of lyrics; best to check them all if you're looking for all instances. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.2
File: DtGLFT7

Girl I Left in Sunny Tennessee, The
DESCRIPTION: The singer is happily returning home to see the girl he left behind. He recalls the joyful times in Tennessee. Finally the train pulls into his hometown, and he sees his relatives but not Mary. His mother tells him that Mary is dead and in her grave
AUTHOR: Harry Braisted and Stanley Carter
EARLIEST DATE: 1899 (copyright; first recording by Byron Harlan)
KEYWORDS: love separation return death
FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW,SE,So) Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (7 citations):
Dean-FlyingCloud, pp. 86-86. "The Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee" (1 text)
Randolph 810, "The Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee" (1 text)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 725, "Sunny Tennessee" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 98, "The Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee" (3 texts plus mention of 1 more, 2 tunes)
Wolfe/Boswell-FolkSongsOfMiddleTennessee 67, pp. 110-111, "Girl in Sunny Tennessee" (1 text, 1 tune)
Rorrer-RamblingBlues-LifeAndSongsOfCharliePoole, p. 69, "The Girl I Left in Sunny Tennessee" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 272-273, "The Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee" (1 text plus a sheet music cover)
Roud #4290
RECORDINGS:
S. H. Dudley & Harry Macdonough, "The Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee" (Zon-O-Phone 506, rec. c. 1901; on Protobilly)
Morgan Denmon, "Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee" (OKeah 45105, 1927)
Floyd County Ramblers, "Sunny Tennessee" (Victor V-40307, 1930; on Protobilly)
[Byron] Harlan & [Frank] Stanley, "The Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee" (Columbia 257, 1901)
Byron G. Harlan, "The Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee" (Cyl: Edison 5716, c. 1899)
John James, "Sunny Tennessee" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
Wade Mainer, "The Girl I Left In Sunny Tennessee" (King 1093, 1952)
Asa Martin & James Roberts, "Sunny Tennessee" (Banner 32306, 1931; Conqueror 7935, 1932; rec. 1931)
Peerless Quartet, "The Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee" (Victor 19390, 1924)
Charlie Poole and the North Carolina Ramblers, "The Girl I Left in Sunny Tennessee" (Columbia 15043-D, 1925; on CPoole04)
Red Fox Chasers, "The Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee" (Gennett 6930/Supertone 9497, 1929)
Walter Scanlan, "The Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee" (Edison 51893, 1927)
Ernest V. Stoneman "The Girl I Left in Sunny Tennessee" (Challenge 151, 1927); "The Girl I Left Behind in Sunny Tennessee" (Challenge 151/Gennett 3368/Herwin 75529, 1926)
Sweet & Zimmerman, "The Girl I Loved in Sunny Tennessee" (Cyl: Edison 7414, 1900)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bull Dog Down in Tennessee" (tune, subject of parody)
cf. "Down on the Farm (II)" (theme)
cf. "I'll Be There, Mary Dear" (theme)
SAME TUNE:
Bull Dog Down in Tennessee (File: RcBDDITe)
File: R810

Girl in Portland Street, The

DESCRIPTION: Sailor meets a girl and they go about courting/seducing each other. Refrain of "Fal-de-lol-day" throughout. This has some of the anatomical progression verses of "Yo Ho, Yo Ho." Harlow's version ends with the sailor discovering the girl has a cork leg.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas)
KEYWORDS: shanty bawdy humorous
FOUND IN: US Britain
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Hugill-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 70-71, "A Fal-De-Lal-Day" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 54-55, "The Girl In Portland Street" (1 text, 1 tune) [AbEd, pp. 50-51]
ADDITIONAL: Frederick Pease Harlow, _The Making of a Sailor, or Sea Life Aboard a Yankee Square-Rigger_, 1928; republished by Dover, 1988, pp. 263-264, "A Fal-De-Lal-Day" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9162
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "A-Rovin'" (theme of moving down the body) and references there
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Fol-de-lol-day
NOTES [18 words]: Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips says that the first refrain of this was often whistled rather than sung. - SL
Last updated in version 3.3
File: Hug1054

Girl of Constant Sorrow

DESCRIPTION: Singer tells of leaving her mother (now dead) and her home in Kentucky so that her children could be fed. She then describes the coal miners' poor food, homes and clothing; she is sure "if there's a heaven/That the miners will be there"
AUTHOR: Words: Sara Ogan Gunning / tune "Man of Constant Sorrow" (Emry Arthur?)
EARLIEST DATE: before 1950 (recording by author)
KEYWORDS: separation mining hardtimes poverty family worker derivative
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, pp. 1168-169, "I Am a Girl of Constant Sorrow" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 128, "Girl of Constant Sorrow" (1 text)
DT, CONSTSR2*
Roud #499
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Man of Constant Sorrow" (structure, tune)
NOTES [25 words]: Although the source lists a copyright date of 1965, I'm certain [this] was recorded on a Library of Congress field recording in the 1930s or 1940s. - PJS
File: FSWB128B

Girl of Killy Kranky, The DESCRIPTION: The singer was once such a "smart chap" that "the Prince of Wales he wanted me to go and join the army." Now he is "old an' frail like a dog without a tail" For that he blames his wife, Jane McLean the lass from Killie Kranky." She assails him
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA-Leach)
KEYWORDS: shrewishness marriage abuse humorous husband wife soldier
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
Roud #2572
RECORDINGS:
Cyril O'Brien, "The Girl of Killy Kranky" (on MUNFLA-Leach)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Killy Kranky" (another song turning the name "Killiecrankie" to another use)
File: ML3GoKiK

Girl on the Greenbrier Shore, The DESCRIPTION: Singer leaves his home, despite his brokenhearted mother's warnings, for the girl on the greenbrier shore. The girl leaves him, and he remembers his mother's words -- "Never trust a girl on the greenbrier shore."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1941 (recording, Carter Family)
KEYWORDS: love warning abandonment
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Cohen/Seeger/Wood-NewLostCityRamblersSongbook, pp. 54-55, "The Girl on the Greenbrier Shore" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 165, "The Girl On The Greenbrier Shore" (1 text)
DT, GRNBRIR3*
Roud #17338
RECORDINGS:
The Carter Family, "The Girl On The Greenbrier Shore" (Bluebird B-8947, 1941)
NOTES [28 words]: For the (fragile) relationship between this piece and "The New River Shore (The Green Brier Shore; The Red River Shore)" [Laws M26], see the notes on the latter piece. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: CSW054

Girl that Wore a Waterfall, The [Laws H26]
DESCRIPTION: The singer sees a pretty girl who "wore a waterfall." Eventually he walks her home, where he encounters her husband. The singer is beaten black and blue and relieved of watch and money. He says he will no longer approach girls with waterfalls!

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Randolph)
KEYWORDS: courting hair punishment fight
FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW,SE,So)
REFERENCES (8 citations):
Laws H26, "The Girl That Wore a Waterfall"
Randolph 389, "The Girl with the Waterfall" (1 text, 1 tune)
McNeil-SouthernFolkBalladsVol2, pp. 44-46, "The Girl That Wore a Waterfall" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wolfe/Boswell-FolkSongsOfMiddleTennessee 70, pp. 114-115, "The Girl Who Wore the Waterfall" (1 text, 1 tune)
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, p. 304, "The Girl with the Waterfall" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 64, "The Girl That Wore a Waterfall" (1 text, 1 tune)
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 58, "The Waterfall" (1 fragment, 1 tune, plus a citation of a songster version)
DT, WATERFL2
Roud #2189
NOTES [68 words]: The "waterfall" as a hair style came into vogue in 1845, and continued to be used until shortly after the Civil War. Randolph describes it as "a mass of artificially curled hair, worn at the back of the head, arranged about a nucleus of false hair known as a 'rat.'" The word can also refer to a neck scarf.

The popularity of the song is evidenced by a reference to it in the Canadian song "Hogan's Lake." - RBW

Girl Volunteer, The (The Cruel War Is Raging) [Laws O33]

DESCRIPTION: (Johnny) has been ordered off to war. His sweetheart begs to go with him. He refuses her; military service would fade her beauty. She offers to buy his release; this too fails. (In some versions Johnny relents and allows her to come.)

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Brown)
KEYWORDS: war soldier separation love cross-dressing
FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE,So)
REFERENCES (15 citations):
Laws O33, "The Girl Volunteer"
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 177-180, "Lisbon" (3 texts, of which this is the third, to which Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety does not assign a letter; the first two are "William and Nancy (I) (Lisbon; Men's Clothing I'll Put On I)" [Laws N8])
Randolph 44, "Johnny Must Fight" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 94-95, "Johnny Must Fight" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 44B)
Arnold-FolkSongsofAlabama, pp. 6-7, "Oh, Johnny" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 100, "The Girl Volunteer" (1 text)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 100, "The Girl Volunteer" (2 excerpts, 2 tunes)
Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol2, p. 10, "Poor Johnny" (1 text, 1 tune, which the editors file here although the text appears to have many floating verses); p. 50, "Johnny, Oh, Johnny" (1 text)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, pp. 77-78, "I Was Standing on Pickets" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 113, "The Warfare is Raging" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Combs/Wilgus-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernUnitedStates 109, pp. 178-179, "I'm Going to Join the Army" (1 text)
Fuson-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands, p. 104, "Johnny" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 272, "The Cruel War Is Raging" (1 text)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 131-132, "May I Go With You, Johnny?" (1 text)
DT 487, CRUELWAR* CRUELWR2*
Roud #401
RECORDINGS:
Louise Foreacre, "The War Is A-Raging" (on Stonemans01)
Aunt Polly Joines, "The Warfare is A-Raging" (on Persis1)
Pete Steele, "The War Is A-Ragin' For Johnny" (on PSteele01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Manchester Angel"
cf. "William and Nancy (I) (Lisbon; Men's Clothing I'll Put On I)" [Laws N8]
cf. "The Banks of the Nile (Men's Clothing I'll Put On II)" [Laws N9]
cf. "High Germany (I)"
cf. "Oh! No, No" (theme: sweetheart tries to convince soldier to let her accompany him)
SAME TUNE:
The Panther Pack is Prowling (RECORDING, Chip Dockery, in "Panther Pack Medley" on InCountry)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Cruel War

NOTES [37 words]: The Combs version of this song contains a reference to Pensacola -- the port from which many American troops set out for Cuba during the Spanish-American war (1898). The song is clearly much older than that, however. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.1
File: LO33

Girl Who Was Drowned at Onslow, The

DESCRIPTION: What mournful news that we did hear." A girl is drowned in an icy stream. After a three day search her body is found. Her true love and parents mourn.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia)

KEYWORDS: drowning mourning family river

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 154, "The Girl Who Was Drowned at Onslow" (1 text)

Roud #3287

NOTES [39 words]: Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia says this "true song" is about an accident in the farming community of Onslow "at the head of Cobequid Bay in Colchester County" Nova Scotia.
This song is item dG42 in Laws's Appendix II. - BS

File: Mack154

Girl with the Flowing Hair, The

DESCRIPTION: "My heart went pitty pitty patty As she passed me by so beautiful and fair. Oh, she winked at me with her soft blue eye, The girl with the flowing hair."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1968

KEYWORDS: hair beauty

FOUND IN: Australia

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, pp. 175-176, "The Girl with the Flowing Hair" (1 tune, fragment of text)
File: MA175

Girl with the Striped Stockings On, The

DESCRIPTION: "One rainy day I'll ne'er forget, The prettiest girl I ever met, When she raised her skirts to the wet, I saw she had striped stockings on." He sees her often, with her stockings showing. They walk together. She steals his watch and chain
Girleen Don't Be Idle

DESCRIPTION: Macaronic. "Girleen don't be idle, gather your ducks and mind 'em"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1947 (OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)
KEYWORDS: farming nonballad bird
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 62, "Girleen Don't Be Idle" (1 text)
Roud #16244
RECORDINGS:
Elizabeth Cronin, "Girleen Don't Be Idle" (on IRECronin01)
NOTES [19 words]: The current description is quoted from the English part of the OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin jingle. - BS
Last updated in version 3.2
File: OCC062

Girls Lover, A

DESCRIPTION: "My love is like a little bird that flies From tree unto tree, And when you are with a fairer maid Do you ever think of me? Must I go bound and you go free? Must I love a man that won't love me, And would I act a childish part, Marry a man that would...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (High-OldOldFolkSongs)
KEYWORDS: love courting rejection bird marriage floatingverses
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
High-OldOldFolkSongs, p. 10, "A.. Single Life She Choosed" (1 short text)
File: High010

Girls o' Aiberdeen, The

DESCRIPTION: "I'll sing the flowers o' Don and Dee, The charming girls o' Aiberdeen." The Scottish lasses are better than the fair girls of England, but the girls of Aiberdeen are "far aboon them a'." "I loe the lasses a' and a'," but Aiberdeen girls best of all.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1908 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: beauty nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #70, p. 1, "The Girls o' Aiberdeen" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan3 519, "The Girls o' Aiberdeen" (1 text)
Roud #6003
NOTES [30 words]: The Dee and Don are rivers that flow into the North Sea at Aberdeen. Greig #68 has the contributor say "he used to sing ["The Girls o' Aiberdeen"] in New Zealand in early days." - BS
Last updated in version 2.4
Girls of Coleraine, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer talks of "a sweet little spot in the county of Derry." He says there is no such town in all Ireland. He warns against girls of the city, or places like Killarney. But girls and boys of Coleraine never change. He blesses the town

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: home nonballad
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
  Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H64, pp. 161-162, "The Girls from [of] Coleraine" (1 text, 1 tune)
  ADDITIONAL: Richard Hayward, Ireland Calling (Glasgow,n.d.), p. 20, "The Girls of Coleraine" (text, music and reference to Decca F-2603 recorded Oct 4, 1931)

Roud #13460
CROSS-REFERENCES:
  cf. "Teddy O'Neill" (tune)

NOTES [24 words]: The date and master id (GB-3357-1) for Hayward's record is provided by Bill Dean-Myatt, MPhil. compiler of the Scottish National Discography. - BS

File: HHH064

Girls of Newfoundland, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer sailed from "a hot and sunny clime" for Harbour Grace thinking about "those girls from Newfoundland." Now the crew are home and "drink a health to all seamen bold" and enjoy the girls.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: homesickness sex sea ship drink sailor
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Peacock, pp. 875-876, "The Girls of Newfoundland" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #9804
RECORDINGS:
  Arthur Nicolle, "The Girls of Newfoundland" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]

NOTES [34 words]: The first line of this in Peacock is given as "We weighed our anchors in Harley Buck," which is all the sense he can make of the town name. I would suggest that this is a mis-hearing of "Corner Brook." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: Pea875

Girls of the King's Navy

DESCRIPTION: "The first thing we'll ask for, we'll ask for some men, And may we have one more for every good WREN," Or maybe ten men. The women also want more pay. And more dates. The XO offers them what they want -- and much more

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead)
KEYWORDS: soldier courting nonballad
FOUND IN: Canada
REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead, pp. 144-145, "Girls of the King's Navy" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #350
CROSS-REFERENCES:
  cf. "The First Thing They Asked For" (lyrics, form)

NOTES [54 words]: This appears to me, based on the chorus, to be based on the Sailor's Alphabet or one of its relatives, but it is not itself an alphabet song. Roud lumps it with "The Soldier and the Girls of the Shamrock Shore

DESCRIPTION: "It being in the spring when the small birds sing And the lambs do sport and play, I entered as a passenger To New South Wales sailed o'er...." Sentenced to transportation for fourteen years, the singer bids farewell to the girls of the Shamrock Shore

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1968
KEYWORDS: transportation separation parting
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, p. 171, "The Girls of the Shamrock Shore" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia, pp. 40-41, "The Girls of the Shamrock Shore" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, GIRLSHAM*
Roud #3365
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Van Dieman's Land (II -- Young Henry's Downfall)" (floating lyrics)
cf. cf. "Scarborough Settler's Lament" (theme) and references there
cf. "The Shamrock Shore (The Maid of Mullaghamore)" (theme of separation -- not transportation -- and one verse)

Girls of Ulan, The

DESCRIPTION: "The girls from Ulan need no schoolin' For blucher boots are all the go. And how their hobnail boots they rattle On that hard and slippery floor, Like a mob of Queensland cattle On the rush at four...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1968
KEYWORDS: clothes
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, pp. 213-214, "The Girls of Ulan" (1 text)
Meredith/Covell/Brown-FolkSongsOfAustraliaVol2, p. 291, "Ulan Girls" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #22663

NOTES: It's not entirely clear whether these two songs are the same -- particularly since both are fragmentary. The first insults the Ulan girls, and has no tune; the second praises them. One may be a parody, or they may be complimentary fragments. For the moment, pending fuller versions, I'm lumping them together on the principle that they're about the same subject. - RBW

Give Me a Blighty Girl

DESCRIPTION: "Give me a Blighty girl, a Blighty girl for me. I've been across the sea, I know what's good for me. French girls are very nice For Frenchmen I can see, But when I get back to Blighty, a Blighty girl for me."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang)
KEYWORDS: love home
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang, p. 220, "(no title)" (1 short text)
Give Me a Hut

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, give me a hut in my own native land... I don't care how far in the bush it may be, if there's one faithful heart that will share it with me." The singer praises Australia and the life there, and hopes that someone will be willing to share said life
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (Paterson's _Old Bush Songs_)
KEYWORDS: Australia marriage loneliness
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (6 citations):
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, p. 137, "Native Mate" (1 text, 1 tune)
Anderson-StoryOfAustralianFolksong, pp. 140-141, "Native Mate" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia, pp. 118-119, "Oh, Give Me a Hut" (1 text, 1 tune)
Manifold-PenguinAustralianSongbook, p. 103, "Oh, Give Me a Hut" (1 text, 1 tune)
Meredith/Covell/Brown-FolkSongsOfAustraliaVol2, pp. 255-256, "Australia for Me" (1 text, probably deliberately modified. 1 tune)
Paterson/Fahey/Seal-OldBushSongs-CentenaryEdition, pp. 155-157, "Oh, Give Me a Hut in My Own Native Land" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "My Gumtree Canoe" (tune)
NOTES [66 words]: Edward E. Morris, A Dictionary of Austral English, 1898 (I use the 1972 Sydney University Press with a new foreword but no new content), p. 207, defines "Hut" as follows: "a cottage of a shepherd or a miner. The word is English but is especially common in Australia, and does not there connote squalor or meanness. The "Men's Hut' on a station is the building occupied by the male employees." - RBW
Last updated in version 5.2

Give Me a Prein

DESCRIPTION: Gie's a preen [pin] to stick i' my thoom, To carry my lady to London toon. Oh London toon's a bonnie braw place; It's a' covered over wi' gold an' lace
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1828 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2)
KEYWORDS: playparty injury
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Bord))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 176, "Give Me a Prein" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: James Inglis, Oor Ain Folk (Edinburgh, 1894 (second edition) ("Digitized by Google")), p. 100, ("Gie's a preen to stick i' my thoom") (1 text)
Roud #15525
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Carry My Lady to London" (first two lines (see Gomme 1.59))
NOTES [9 words]: The current description is all of the Inglis text. - BS
Last updated in version 2.6

Give Me Him

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Gimme Him gimme Him Aw sho Gimme Him Gimme Him until I die (x2)."
Verses: Jesus died a happy death for sin that was not his own. "He died on the Roman cross That we might live"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1942 (Parrish-SlaveSongsOfTheGeorgiaSeasIslands)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious Jesus
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Give Me Jesus

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, when I come to die (x3), Give me Jesus (x3), You may have all this world, Give me Jesus." "I heard my mother say (x3), Give me Jesus." "Dark midnight was my cry...." "In the morning when I rse...." "I heard the mourner say...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1997 (Warren-EveryTimeIFeelTheSpirit)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad Jesus floating verses
FOUND IN: US (MA)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Warren-EveryTimeIFeelTheSpirit, pp. 36-37, "Give Me Jesus" (1 text, 1 tune)
Parrish-SlaveSongsOfTheGeorgiaSeaIslands 59, pp. 240-242, "Oh When I Come To Die" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #12360

Give Me the Roses While I Live

DESCRIPTION: "Wonderful things of men are said, When they have passed away, Roses adorn the narrow bed, Over the sleeping clay. Give me the roses while I live... Useless are flowers that you give After the soul is gone." Encouraging companionship while still alive

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (recording, Carter Family)
KEYWORDS: friend flowers religious nonballad death
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
DT, GIVEROSE*
Roud #17339
RECORDINGS:
The Carter Family, "Give Me Roses While I Live" (Victor Vi-23821, 1933; Montgomery Ward M-7356, c. 1937)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
 cf. "When I Leave These Earthly Shores" (theme of giving roses)
 cf. "Love Me Now" (theme of love while one is still alive)
NOTES [16 words]: In the Sacred Harp, this is given the tune-name Odem, after a friend of editor Thomas Denson. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0

Give Me Your Heart (I Have a Sweetheart)

DESCRIPTION: "I have a little sweetheart, And you can't guess his name, Or the town he lives in; He lives there just the same. He won't let me kiss him, But I can call him dear." She asks him, "Give me your heart, and let it be true." He is willing to agree

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric)
KEYWORDS: love courting nonballad
FOUND IN: US (So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 12, "I Have a Sweetheart" (1 text plus an excerpt, 1 tune)
Roud #7505

Give the Dutch Room

DESCRIPTION: "Stand back, boys, and give the Dutch room." The singer describes how the Dutch fight hard in the campaign which culminates in the capture of Fort Smith.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1916 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)

KEYWORDS: Civil war

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
December 1862 - first campaign against Fort Smith, including the battles of Cane Hill (Nov. 28) and Prairie Grove (Dec. 7). The Union troops, though they occupied Fort Smith, could not hold it; they gained control of the town "for keeps" on Sept. 1, 1863

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 373-374, "Give the Dutch Room" (1 text)
Roud #7762

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Prairie Grove" (subject)

NOTES [270 words]: This is a strange, and perhaps confused, little song. The first verse refers to a battle at "Cahound." Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety suggests that this is the Battle of Cane Hill (which he misdates to Dec. 5), and I have no better suggestion. Belden's notes also suggest that the "Lane" of the song was James H. Lane. This seems a little dubious. There were two James H. Lanes in the war: A Unionist Senator from Kansas (1814-1866) and a Confederate brigadier (1833-1907). The latter served only in the east, however, and the former, although he had fought for "bleeding Kansas," is not listed as a Civil War general.

My own guess is that Lane is Walter P. Lane (1817-1892), a Confederate officer who served in the west throughout the war, though he didn't earn his brigadier's star until March 1865.

The other curiosity is the use of the word "Dutch." The "Dutch" were actually Germans, and the name was used in a derogatory way by non-Germans. But here they are praised. So who wrote the piece?

The purpose may have been somewhat political, to encourage the German soldiers. Their record in the war was not particularly good overall, though through no fault of their own.

At Wilson's Creek, Sigel's "Dutch" brigade had been routed. Troops under Sigel had suffered badly at the hands of Stonewall Jackson in the Shenandoah Valley. And those same troops, now the XI Corps, had been outflanked and routed at Chancellorsville and Gettysburg. At no point had the soldiers done wrong; it was the officers' fault. But they had a terrible reputation. This might have been an attempt to perk them up.

- RBW

File: Beld373

Give the World a Smile

DESCRIPTION: "Are you giving to the world a smile, sunny smile, Helping lessen someone's dreary mile, dreary mile? ... Give the world a bright smile each day, Helping someone on life's dreary way." The singer can make the world better with joy, smiles, a song

AUTHOR: Words: Otis Deaton / Music: M. L. Yandell (source: Abernethy)

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (recording, th Corley Family)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad music

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Abernethy-SinginTexas, pp. 120-121, "Great God, Attend" (1 text, 1 tune, a copy of a shape note version)

Roud #29160

RECORDINGS:
McDonald Quartet, "Give the World a Smile" (Gennett 6581) (Royal 91519)

File: Aber120

Give Up the World

DESCRIPTION: "The sun give a light in the heaven all round (x3), Why don't you give up the world?" "My brother, don't you give up the world? (x3) We must leave the world behind."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
Give Up the World and Come On, Sun Going Down

DESCRIPTION: "Give up the world and come on, Sun going down (x4)"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 2014 (USSeasland03)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious
FOUND IN: US(SE)
RECORDINGS:
Minnie Gracie Gadson, "Give Up de Word and Come On (Sun Going Down)" (on USSeasland03)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Give Up the World" (theme)
File: RcGUWC0S

Give Us a Flag

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, Fremont he told them when the war it first begun How to save the Union and the way it should be done, But... Old Abe he had his fears Till ev'ry hope was lost but the colored volunteers." The war went badly until Black troops were used
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1864 (Moore, Songs of the Soldiers, according to Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar)
KEYWORDS: Civilwar Black(s) battle soldier
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 293-295, "Give Us a Flag" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber-SoldierSongsAndHomeFrontBalladsOfCivilWar, pp. 64-65, "Give Us a Flag" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11631
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hoist Up the Flag" (tune, according to Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar)
NOTES [321 words]: The Union first began enlisting black troops (informally) in 1862. By the end of that year, four regiments were raised, only to have Lincoln shut them down. After the issuance of the Emancipation Proclamation, however, Lincoln allowed the formation of (segregated) "colored" regiments.
In the end, over a hundred and fifty such regiments were raised. Their performance was mixed -- but this was probably the fault of the (white) officers rather than the black troops. A large fraction of the officers in the "colored" regiments were soldiers who had given up on promotion in the white army, and shifted to the "Colored" troops to get ahead.
The "colored" troops had other reasons for bad morale; their pay was much lower than their white counterparts, and their equipment less good. And soldiers from both sides looked down on them.
Among the references in this song are:
"Frémont he told them when the war was just begun" -- General John C. Frémont was the first theatre commander west of the Mississippi. He was a bad general but a good Free Soiler, and proposed the raising of Black regiments.
"McClellan went to Richmond with two hundred thousand brave" -- refers to McClellan's Peninsular Campaign of 1862. McClellan was a conservative Democrat, and did not want the war to interfere with slavery. The song exaggerates his forces (he had about 120,000 men in the Peninsula), but correctly notes that his campaign failed.
"The 54th" presumably refers to the 54th Massachusetts, perhaps the most distinguished of the "colored" regiments. It fought in the unsuccessful assault on Fort Wagner (outside Charleston; July 18, 1863), and suffered roughly 40% casualties.
The phrase "Give Us a Flag" is a request for a regimental standard. All ordinary regiments had flags, which were proudly carried and zealously defended from enemy attack; to give the Black
Give Us a Song

DESCRIPTION: "'Give us a song,' the soldier cried, the outer trenches guarding." On the eve of an attack against the Russian forts the soldiers sing 'Annie Laurie' and think about Irish Norah or English Mary. The soldier is killed by mortar fire.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1908 (Greig/Duncan1)
KEYWORDS: love battle death music Russia
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan1 108, "Give Us a Song" (1 text)
Roud #5786
NOTES [91 words]: Greig/Duncan1: "The song seems most likely to refer to the unsuccessful assault of 18 June 1855 but it could apply to the attack later that year on 8 September immediately before the Russians abandoned Sebastopol." - BS
I would hesitate to attribute it to any particular event; there were so many small clashes in the siege of Sebastopol that the "candidate" attacks must number in the dozens. But it is patently a Crimean War song: Even if you ignore the mentions of the Russians, the description of fortifications and mortars assures that. - RBW

Glad Tidings Good People

DESCRIPTION: "Glad tidings good people, we are here for to tell, This morning in Bethlehem lies a baby just born." It is Jesus. Think about his life. "Sympathize with Mary, his mother so mild."
Spread the news; "we found our savior on this Christmas day"

AUTHOR: Words: Harrison Bryant (source: Cox-FolkMusicInANewfoundlandOutport)
EARLIEST DATE: 1974 (Cox-FolkMusicInANewfoundlandOutport)
KEYWORDS: religious baby Jesus
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cox-FolkMusicInANewfoundlandOutport, p. 112, "Glad Tidings" (1 text, tune referenced)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "A Virgin Most Pure" (tune)

Gladys Kincaid (I)

DESCRIPTION: "Little Gladys Kincaid" is talking with a friend. Her brother finds her body, and instantly concludes that Brodus Miller killed her. A reward is offered. The community is outraged that a "Negro beast" could do such a thing causes him to be hunted down

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1932 (Henry, collected from Hazel Winters)
KEYWORDS: abduction rape homicide death punishment
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry-SongsSungInTheSouthernAppalachians, pp. 57-58, "Gladys Kincaid" (1 text)
NOTES [186 words]: To tell this song from Gladys Kincaid (II), consider this opening stanza:
Little Gladys Kincaid,
A girl we all knew well,
She started back to her home
To where her mother dwell
And on on her way she met a girl
And stopped her for a talk
And while they was a-standing there
Up Brodus Miller walked.
It sounds to me as if this version is based on "The Knoxville Girl" or something like it. Henry's version -- the only one extant -- seems to have lost at least one crucial verse describing her abduction, and presumably her rape. The racism of the text is palpable; in the song, it appears that the only evidence against Brodus Miller was that he was Black.
Although this murder inspired two ballads (this one and one in Brown, neither widespread), the editors of Brown were unable to determine anything about the story behind the ballad.
A correspondent who signs herself "Amanda" tells me the murder took place in Morganton, North Carolina. Her grandmother apparently knew Gladys Kincaid, and sang one of the songs (probably Gladys Kincaid II).
This is item dF41 in Laws's Appendix II (Gladys Kinkaid II is dF42). - RBW
File: MHAp057

Gladys Kincaid (II)
DESCRIPTION: Gladys is on her way home from work in the hosiery mill when "the negro... did this awful deed Too horrible to tell" (i.e. rape and murder). Miller, the alleged perpetrator, is hunted down and shot; his body is displayed
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Brown)
KEYWORDS: abduction rape homicide death punishment
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 297, "Gladys Kincaid" (1 text)
ST BrII297 (Full)
Roud #4114
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Gladys Kincaid (I)" (subject)
NOTES [106 words]: To tell this song from Gladys Kincaid (I), consider this opening stanza:
Come all of you good people
And listen if you will
Of the fate of Gladys Kincaid
Who worked in the hosiery mill.
Although this murder inspired two ballads (this one and one in Henry, neither widespread), the editors of Brown were unable to determine anything about the story behind the ballad.
A correspondent who signs herself "Amanda" tells me the murder took place in Morganton, North Carolina. Her grandmother apparently knew Gladys Kincaid, and sang one of the songs (probably this one).
This is item dF42 in Laws's Appendix II (Gladys Kinkaid I is dF41). - RBW
File: BrII297

Glasgerion [Child 67]
DESCRIPTION: The king's daughter declares her love for Glasgerion and invites him to her bed.
He tells his servant of the tryst. The boy sneaks in in his stead. When the lady learns this, she kills herself. Glasgerion kills the lad, (then himself)
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1750 (Percy Folio)
KEYWORDS: nightvisit love sex betrayal death suicide homicide trick
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland,Wales)
REFERENCES (13 citations):
Child 67, "Glasgerion" (3 texts)
Bronson 67, "Glenkindie" (1 version)
Hales/Furnival-BishopPercysFolioManuscript, volume I, pp. 246-252, "Glasgerion" (1 text)
Percy/Wheatley-ReliquesOfAncientEnglishPoetry III, pp. 45-49, "Glasgerion" (1 text)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 222-229, "Glasgerion" (2 texts plus one "analogy")
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 40, "Glasgerion" (1 text)
Friedman-Viking/PenguinBookOfFolkBallads, p. 71, "Glasgerion" (1 text, 1 fragment)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads, pp. 216-218, "Glenkindie" (1 text)
"Glasgerion" was famous enough to be mentioned in line 1208 of Chaucer's "House of Fame" in the context of Orpheus and other great musicians:

There herde I pleyen on an harpe
That snowned bothe wel and sharpe,
Orpheus ful craftely,
And on his syde, faste by,
Sat the harper Orion, [=Arion]
And Eacides Chiron, [i.e. the centaur Chiron]
And other harpers many oon,
And the Bret Glascurion;

[Lines 1201-1208 as given in Chaucer/Benson. The text as given on p. 85 of Chaucer/Havely is almost the same, apart from spelling variants, except that it reads "And on the syde" for "And on his syde" in line 1204. There are five sources for the "House of Fame," three manuscripts (F, B, P, of which F is the earliest and best) and two early printings, by Caxton (Cx) and Thynne (Th). In the key liine 1208, there are three variants. One, "As" for "And," is pretty definitely an error in the manuscript (P) which has it. "Bret" is the reading of B; F has the obvious error "Gret"; P has something like "Bretur," but corrected it; Cx Th read "Bryton." "Glascurion" is the spelling of F B; P Cx Th read "Glaskyrion." Despite all these differences, the essential meaning seems secure.] "Glasgerion" is widely stated to be an anglicisation of "Glas Keraint," a legendary Welsh harper said to be able to harp "a fish out o' saut water Or water out o' a stane." Chaucer/Benson, p. 986, says there is a legend that he was a bard to Alfred the Great of England. Glas Keraint is often stated to have been historical (though Chaucer/Benson, p. 986, notes that there are no truly contemporary mentions), in that there are chronicle mentions of him, but the stories are not very circumstantial. In fact, I couldn't find out anything about him except the Chaucer references. But no one knows how Chaucer heard of him. And there are some who disagree with the identification of Glasgerion with Glas Keraint. Chaucer/Havely, p. 197, reports, "Breeze suggests... that the real identity of Chaucer's Glascurion is 'to be found in Gwydion ... the famous otherworld magician, craftsman, storyteller, and bard' (*Glasgwydion). Meecham-Jones... argues that Chaucer is unlikely to have had access to the texts dealing with Gwydion (Bk 4 of the Mabinogi) and proposes two possible identifications: an anonymous Welsh exile and Merlin. His third suggestion (*Glastyrion) lacks support" (as it is based on a misreading of manuscript B). Gwydion shows up in more places than just the fourth tale of the Mabinogi [i.e. the tale of Math son of Mathonwy], Bromwich, pp. 392-393, says "there are a number of allusions to Gwydion in poems belonging to Hanes Taliesin [the history/tale of Taliesin], and in the main, these characterize Gwydion in a manner similar to that in Mabinogi Math. Here Gwydion is a powerful magician, who can make horses and hounds out of toadstools, shoes out of seaweed..., a woman out of flowers, and who can produce the illusion of a sea filled with hostile vessels." This would give Chaucer more chances to read of Gwydion, but it's still hard to see how he would have heard of him in London, and if he did hear of Gwydion, it would probably be as a magician and trickster, not a musician!

All agree that, whoever Glascurion was, he is the same as the Glasgerion of this ballad. - RBW Bibliography

• Bromwich: Rachel Bromwich, editor,Trioedd Ynys Prydein: The Triads of the Island of Glasgow Barber, The

DESCRIPTION: Pat from Belfast stops at a Glasgow barbershop for a Mayo haircut but is given a Scottish haircut instead. When Pat refuses to pay the barber calls two bobbies. Pat takes down bobbies and barbers with his stick. Enough of Scottish barbers and haircuts.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1970 (Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster)

KEYWORDS: fight Ireland Scotland humorous police hair

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster 30, "The Glasgow Barber" (1 text, 1 tune)
Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday 29, pp. 71-72,116,168, "The Glasgow Barber" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2908

NOTES [82 words]: Anthony Columbanus O'Cadhla points out a clarification to the description: "it should be pointed out that 'Pat' actually hails from County Mayo in the West of Ireland -- on the Atlantic seaboard -- which the song's lyrics clearly indicate. In order to travel from Mayo to Glasgow, it is first necessary to make one's way to Belfast, a port city on the Irish sea, which lies on the east coast of Ireland. and from there take passage on a ferry to Glasgow, also a port city on the Irish sea." -(RBW)

Last updated in version 4.3

File: MorU030

Glasgow Doctor, The

DESCRIPTION: A short Glasgow doctor married a tall woman who did "scratch and tear his eyes." When she caught cold he "gave her such a dose" she died. At the feast "in honour o' her death" he choked on too much gin and was buried with his wife in one coffin.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1856 (broadside, Murray Mu23-y2:014)

KEYWORDS: shrewishness marriage homicide funeral medicine drink party humorous husband wife doctor

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan7 1504, "The Glasgow Doctor" (3 texts, 2 tunes)
Roud #7166

BROADSIDES:
Murray, Mu23-y2:014, "Glasgow Doctor," Poet's Box (Glasgow), 1856

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Short Doctor

NOTES [38 words]: The type of humor is illustrated by a typical verse: "The people came baith far and near To try the doctor's skill And those he knew not how to cure He well knew how to kill." - BS
For which punch line, see also "Kill or Cure." - RBW

Last updated in version 2.5

File: GrD71504
Glasgow Fair On the Banks of Clyde

DESCRIPTION: The singer, from Ireland, meets a girl in Glasgow. She says it was well known that he was to be married in Ireland. He seduces her anyway. When she recalls his promise to marry, "I promised to meet her there again, But I forgot and cross'd the Clyde."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1853 (broadside, Bodleian Firth b.26(194))
KEYWORDS: seduction promise parting Ireland Scotland
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan7 1402, "Glasgow Fair on the Banks o' Clyde" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Roud #7256
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth b.26(194), "Banks of the Clyde" ("When I was young and youth did bloom"), John Ross (Newcastle), 1847-1852
NLScotland, L.C.Fol.70(126a), "Glasgow Fair On the Banks of Clyde" ("When I was young and youth did bloom"), Poet's Box (Glasgow), 1869; also L.C.Fol.178.A.2(347), "Banks of Clyde"

Glasgow Lassie, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer meets his Glasgow lassie at a fair. She rejectts his offer to go to Edinburgh because she is already engaged. He offers barns, etc. She says her love was poor but he'd work. She goes with the singer to the tavern for drink and is seduced.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1825 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 28(33))
KEYWORDS: seduction drink
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan7 1320, "The Glasgow Lassie" (1 text)
Roud #7144
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 28(33), "Glasgow Lassie" ("The first time that I saw my Glasgow lassie"), W. Armstrong (Liverpool), 1820-1824

NOTES [38 words]: The description follows Greig/Duncan7. In the Bodleian broadside the male pursuer does not convince the Glasgow Lassie to go with him and decides that "now my courtship is all in vain. I'll go quickly unto yon tavern" [alone]. - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD71402

Glasgow Merchant, The

DESCRIPTION: "There was a wealthy merchant In Glasgow town did dwell; He had a lovely shopboy And his mistress loved him well"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan7)
KEYWORDS: husband wife servant
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan7 1443, "The Glasgow Merchant" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #7274
NOTES [14 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan7 fragment excluding the chorus. - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD71443

Glasgow Peggy [Child 228]

DESCRIPTION: A Highland man comes to Glasgow and falls in love with Peggy. Her parents declare themselves against his suit; they will guard her more than all their other property. But she chooses to go with him, and he reveals that he is a rich nobleman

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1827 (Kinloch)
KEYWORDS: courting disguise
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber,Bord))
REFERENCES (9 citations):
Child 228, "Glasgow Peggy" (7 texts, 1 tune)
Bronson 228, "Glasgow Peggy" (14 versions+1 in addenda)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 228, "Glasgow Peggy" (3 versions: #3, #12, #13)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #44, p. 1, "Glasgow Peggy" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan4 850, "Glasgow Peggy" (12 texts, 8 tunes)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 588-589, "Glasgow Peggy" (1 text)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads, pp. 34-35, "Glasgow Peggy" (1 text)
Montgomerie/Montgomerie-ScottishNurseryRhymes 160, "(Oh Sandy is a Highland lad)" (1 short text)
DT 228, GLASGPEG*
Roud #95
RECORDINGS:
Ewan MacColl and Peggy Seeger, "Glasgow Peggy" (on SCMacCollSeeger01) {cf. Bronson's #2, taken from a different recording and with a few lyric variations but mostly the same}
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bonny Lizie Baillie" [Child 227] (theme)
cf. "MacDonald of the Isles" (tune and general plot)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Hieland Laddie
Hielan' Lads Are Brisk and Braw
NOTES [31 words]: Roud lumps this with "MacDonald of the Isles." That there is some sort of interdependence is clear. But they seem to be distinct songs; see the notes to "MacDonald of the Isles." - (BS, RBW)
Last updated in version 4.1
File: C228

Glasgow Ships

DESCRIPTION: "Glasgow ships come sailing in On a fine summer morning." If "she" steps on board John/George will kiss her. Send butter and bread to the Captain's daughter. Her lover's dead. She turns her back, washes her face, wears a ring

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Maclagan)
KEYWORDS: ring ship food death nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber,High))
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #159, p. 2, "A Glasgow Ship" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan8 1581, "Glasgow Ships Come Sailing In" (2 texts)
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 29, "Glasgow Ships" (3 texts, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Robert Craig Maclagan, The Games and Diversions of Argyleshire (London, 1901 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 81-82, "Glasgow Ships" (1 text, 1 tune)
Robert Ford, Children's Rhymes, Children's Games, Children's Songs, Children's Stories (Paisley, 1904 (2nd edition, "Digitized by Google")), pp. 81-82, "Glasgow Ships"
Roud #12971
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "I Saw Three Ships" (some lines, but not the tune)
cf. "Sheriffmuir" (tune, per Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)
cf. "The Blacksmith" (one verse) and references there NOTES [73 words]: Ford's version of the game includes the verse, familiar -- for example -- from
"The Blacksmith" and "Brave Wolfe": "Braw news is come to town, Braw news is carried; Braw news is come to town, [so-and-so's] married." This is also a verse -- one of two -- for Robert Chambers (Edited by Norah and William Montgomerie), Traditional Scottish Nursery Rhymes (1990
Glasgow, The

DESCRIPTION: John Williams is banished from Coot-hill. "They tore me from the arms of my charming Sally Greer." His friends take him to Liverpool and pay his passage to New York on Glasgow. The mate lets the ship run aground. Twenty-five men are lost.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast)

KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship wreck sailor emigration separation lover

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, pp. 110-111, "The Glasgow" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7346

CROSS-REFERENCES:
 cf. "Sally Greer" (theme, plus the girl's name)

NOTES [191 words]: February 14, 1837: "... sunk after striking the Barrells .... lost her rudder and drove over the rocks.... Altogether 82 were rescued by the Alacia [under Captain Walsh] at considerable risk" (source: Bourke in Shipwrecks of the Irish Coast v1, p. 44)

Is this "Coot-hill" or Courtown? From Last Name Meanings site re "Coote: (origin: Local) Welsh ,Coed, a wood; Cor. Br., Coit and Cut. Coot-hill or Coit-hayle, the wood on the river." For more on "coot-hill" see notes for "The Champion of Coute Hill."- BS

An even more interesting question is the relationship of this song to "Sally Greer." Both are songs involving an emigrant who is aboard a wrecked ship, and both involve a girl named Sally Greer who is left behind.

On the other hand, the ship is different (Glasgow versus Monatch of Aberdeen), the motivations are slightly different, "Sally Greer" never mentions Liverpool, and this song describes a lesser disaster (in "Sally Greer," over 90% of the people on the ship are lost).

My best guess is that one is a rework of the other, with "Sally Greer" perhaps slightly more likely to be the original, since it's more widespread. - RBW

File: R110

Glashen-Glora

DESCRIPTION: The singer describes the mountain stream and thinks of happier days. Wherever he travels he will think about this stream. "Thy course and mine alike have been Both restless, rocky, seldom green"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1824 (_Cork Constitution_., according to Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)

KEYWORDS: lyric river

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland, pp. 189-191, "Glashen-Glora" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Edward Hayes, The Ballads of Ireland (Boston, 1859 (reprint of 1855 London edition)), Vol I, pp. 51-52, "Glashen-Glora"

NOTES [63 words]: Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland: "This lyric originally appeared with the signature W------. 'Glashen-glora,' adds the author, 'is a mountain torrent, which finds its way into the Atlantic Ocean through Glengariff, in the west of this count (Cork).' The Editor may add that the name, literally translated, signifies 'the noisy green water:' glas, green; en, water; glorach, noisy." - BS

File: CrPS189

Glass Market, The

DESCRIPTION: "There's been mony a feein' [hiring] market On this side o' the Dee But the like o' the last Glass Market I never chanced to see."

AUTHOR: unknown
Glass of Whisky, The

DESCRIPTION: Murrough O'Monaghan, home from the wars minus a leg, begs along a road. He wishes he had been a marine that had retired with a full pay pension. Good whisky gives him strength to face illness and weather. He wishes Merry Christmas and whisky for all.

AUTHOR: William Paulet Carey (source: Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)

EARLIEST DATE: 1793 (_The Sentimental and Masonic Magazine_, according to Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)

KEYWORDS: drink begging injury disability soldier

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland, pp. 80-82, "The Glass of Whisky" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "When I Was a Young Man in Sweet Tipperary" (tune, according to Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)

NOTES [114 words]: Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland details Carey's background, including his turn as witness for the Crown. "Considering the political apostasy of the author -- a crime seldom forgotten or forgiven in Ireland -- it is singular that any song known to have been of his writing should have become popular, which Murrough O'Monaghan's aspiration respecting a glass of whisky certainly did; and it has continued to be so to the present time -- upwards of forty years. This, however, has been accounted for to the Editor by the statement that the character of Murrough O'Monaghan was a sketch from life" of a well known character said "to have been a faithful emissary of the United Irishmen." - BS

File: CrPS080

Glead, The

DESCRIPTION: A young glead is abandoned but rescued and well raised by a man. In his greed he ignores the tenth commandment, drives poor women from their farms, and tries to buy the town of Mains. The singer wishes "muckle toil and pains For a' your gread and pains"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan3)

KEYWORDS: greed farming bird

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Greig/Duncan3 679, "The Glead" (1 text)

Roud #6102

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Greedy Gled o' Mains" (subject?)

NOTES [70 words]: Greig/Duncan3 glossary p. xlii: "gled,glead" is translated as "kite,hawk," "The Greedy Gled o' Mains" begins "There lives a farmer in this place His name ye nead na speire." Greig/Duncan3 says nothing to solve the mystery for that song or for "The Glead." It seems likely to me that both songs are about the same person.

Exodus 20.17: the tenth commandment is "thou shalt not covet ... anything that is thy neighbor's." - BS

Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD3679

Gleanntan Araglain Aobhinn (Happy Glen of Araglin)

DESCRIPTION: Gaelic. The singer bids farewell, across the waves, to the Glen of Araglin. He recalls the wine and beer, baying hounds, magic music, plough-teams, horses, cattle, birds, deer, "and the beautiful fair-breasted maiden"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1971 (OCanainn-SongsOfCork)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage farewell lyric nonballad animal

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):

OCanainn-SongsOfCork, pp. 82-83, "Gleanntan Araglain Aobhinn" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [19 words]: The description is from O Canainn's translation.

OCanainn-SongsOfCork: "The Araglin is a river in County Cork." - BS

File: OCan082

Glen Alone, The

DESCRIPTION: The crew lowers a boat to investigate "an ugly form" in the moonlit. It's the Glen Alone, "rugged yards and splintered spars, her mainmast and mizzen gone," six skeletons and a note that food is gone. We row away: "her deck seemed swarmed with shadows"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1983 (Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou)

KEYWORDS: death sea ship sailor ghost food starvation wreck

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 43, "The Glen Alone" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #1965

CROSS-REFERENCES:

NOTES [15 words]: See "The Ghostly Crew" [Laws D16] for another Newfoundland ballad of haunting at sea. - BS

Last updated in version 5.0

File: LeBe043

Glen Isla

DESCRIPTION: "Keen blaws the wind roond the nooks o the shielin, His auld mallin promise are covered wi sna. Hoo changed fae the times since we went up Glen Isla." THe singer recalls the hard times on the journey away from Blair. She misses her mother

AUTHOR: Belle Stewart (1906-1997)

EARLIEST DATE: 2006 (Stewart/Belle-Stewart-QueenAmangTheHeather)

KEYWORDS: travel hardtimes mother

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Stewart/Belle-Stewart-QueenAmangTheHeather, p. 43, "Glen Isla" (1 text)

Roud #21436

File: StQue043

Glen O'Lee

DESCRIPTION: The exile recalls leaving Donegal. He tells of leaving his friends. He mentions all the things he can no longer do: Play the fiddle at balls, dance the jig with the girls, etc. From ten thousand miles away, he wishes peace and contentment to his old home
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: homesickness emigration
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H672, p. 212, "Glen O'Lee" (1 text, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Scarborough Settler's Lament" (theme) and references there
File: HHH672

Glenariffe
DESCRIPTION: The singer praises his home in Glenariffe, saying, "The beauty of our lovely glen is straight from God's own hand." He describes the local waterfall, the heights, the hallowed ground at Kilmore. He blesses his home
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: home nonballad
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H801, pp. 164-165, "Glenariffe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13474
File: HHH801

Glenarm Bay
DESCRIPTION: The singer sees a pretty girl along Glenarm Bay. He asks what she is doing. She answers, in effect, "Looking for boys. What else would I be doing up so early." He asks her if she will marry. Being assured he is serious and will be faithful, she consents
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love courting marriage beauty
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H102, p. 464, "Glenarm Bay" (1 text, 1 tune)
Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 28, "Glenarm Bay" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #3575
File: HHH102

Glendronach
DESCRIPTION: "O potent ally Glendronach, Thou Prince of the barley bree."
AUTHOR: Rev. James Simmie (source: Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast)
EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: drink nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #62, pp. 2-3, ("O potent ally Glendronach") (1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan3 570, "Glendronach" (1 fragment)
Roud #5896
NOTES [83 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan3/Greig fragment. Greig: The correspondent says this is written by Rv James Simmie, "minister of Rothiemay in the early part of last century, composed on the Glendronach Distillery. She can recall only a part of the refrain."
Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv, of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Glendronach (570) is at coordinate (h4-5,v6) on that map [roughly 31 miles NW of Aberdeen]. - BS

Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD3570

Glendy Burk, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer complains, "I can't stay here 'cause they work too hard; I'm bound to leave this town; I'll take my duds and tote 'em on my back when the Glendy Burk comes down." He describes the "funny" boat and promises to take his girl to Louisiana

AUTHOR: Stephen C. Foster
EARLIEST DATE: 1860 (sheet music)
KEYWORDS: ship work hardtimes travel
FOUND IN: US(MW) Australia
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, pp. 109-110, "When the New York Boat Comes Down" (1 text, 1 tune -- a heavily localized version sung to the tune of "Year of Jubilo"; also fragments of another version)
Rickaby/Dykstra/Leary-PineryBoys-SongsSongcatchingInLumberjackEra 62, "The Selkirk" (1 fragment, 1 tune, clearly this although the boat's name is changed to the "Selkirk")
Saunders/Root-MusicOfStephenCFoster-Vol2, pp. 93-96+427, "The Glendy Burk" (1 text, 1 tune)
Emerson-StephenFosterAndCo, pp. 19-20, "The Glendy Burk" (1 text)
DT, GLNDYBRK*
ST MA109 (Full)
Roud #29373

NOTES [542 words]: This song, for some reason, seems to have done particularly well in Australia, with several localized versions ("The New York Boat," "The Bundaberg") known. These versions on their faces often bear little resemblance to Foster's song -- but in almost all cases (as the titles show), the errors are simple errors of hearing. In the case of Rickaby's "The Selkirk," it is clear that the song was deliberately rewritten, but Rickaby had only one verse and a chorus, and the only change in those eight lines is the name of the boat; unless a version shows up with a full text, I'm going to continue lumping it here.

It's also worth noting that the tune I learned for this song (from Debby McClatchy) is not the same as Foster's sheet music. Thus this text has acquired at least two new tunes over the years. Highly unusual, given that Foster is credited with more tunes than texts, and that very many of his texts are in fact quite poor.

I have to suspect, in fact, that this song sat on a shelf somewhere for several years. Note that Saunders/Root firmly date the sheet music to 1860. And yet, there was a real ship, the Glendy Burke which went into service on the Ohio and the lower Mississippi in 1851 (according to scattered Internet sources). But Berman, p. 245, says that this Glendy Burke was snagged and sunk at Cairo, Illinois in 1855. I find no record of a replacement built in the period after that. The logical conclusion -- though it is obviously not certain -- is that Foster wrote this song prior to the boat's sinking, or at least five years before the song was published.

According to Emerson, p. 255, "The steamboat Glendy Burke (never a sure speller, Foster dropped the "e") had been built in Jefferson, Indiana, in 1851, and named for a New Orleans banker, merchant, and legislator, Glenn D. Burke, with whom Morrison Foster had done business back in 1843.... [T]he Glendy Burke was no longer even afloat. In 1855, the 435-ton side wheel packet hit a snag and broke up near Cairo. Its wreckage damaged other vessels for decades. Foster's 'mighty fast boat' was nothing but a navigational hazard."

This probably needs a minor correction. Steven S. Lohmeyer points out to me that Jefferson, Indiana is not on a river (and probably is too small to have supported a major boat-builder anyway); the reference should be to "Jeffersonville, Indiana," home of the Howard Steamboat Yard, which is on the Ohio River, across from Louisville, Kentucky.

Morneweck, pp. 273, has more information on this topic, some of it perhaps from her father, none other than Morrison Foster, Stephen's older brother:

"Morrison was traveling regularly on the river now [1843]. His next trip in 1843 was to New Orleans in November, and straight back again; he arrived home on the steamboat Allegheny on December 10. This winter journey resulted in a $14,400 order placed with Burke, Watt and Company, commission merchants of Carondelet Street, whose chief officer was the notable Glendy Burke.
The famous steamboat, later immortalized in song by Stephen, named for Glendy Burke, was not launched, however, until 1851. Her first captain was J. M. White. Morrison’s impression was that Mr. Burke’s name originally was Glen D. Burke, not Glendy....” - RBW

Bibliography

- Morneweck: Evelyn Foster Morneweck (Stephen Foster’s niece), Chronicles of Stephen Foster’s Family, University of Pittsburgh Press, 1944

Last updated in version 5.1
File: MA109

Glenelly

DESCRIPTION: "There is no other spot in the land of the Gael Where my young heart the full strains of pleasure could feel." The singer recalls his poor but happy home, his friends, his dreams. He prays that he may return to Glenelly before he dies

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: home rambling
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H720, p. 165, "Glenelly" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13475
File: HHH720

Glenlogie, or, Jean o Bethelnie [Child 238]

DESCRIPTION: Jean o Bethelnie is enraptured with handsome Glenlogie; he wants someone richer. Jean takes to her bed; her father's chaplain appeals to Glenlogie. Glenlogie changes his mind and marries Jean

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1768 (Percy collection)
KEYWORDS: love rejection marriage
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (13 citations):
Child 238, "Glenlogie, or, Jean o Bethelnie" (9 texts)
Bronson 238, "Glenlogie, or, Jean o Bethelnie" (21 versions+1 in addenda)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 238, "Glenlogie, or, Jean o Bethelnie" (1 version: #10)
Chambers-ScottishBallads, pp. 305-306, "Glenlogie" (1 text)
Lyle/McAlpine/McLucas-SongRepertoireOfAmeliaAndJaneHarris, pp. 46-49, "Glenlogie/There war Aucht an ’forty nobles" (2 texts)
Buchan/Moreira-TheGlenbuchatBallads, pp. 144-145, "Glenlogie" (1 text)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 412-415, "Bonnie Jean o' Bethelnie" (1 text)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #58, pp. 1-2, "Glenlogie or Jean o' Bethelnie";
"Folk-Song in Buchan," p. 21, ("Bethelnie, O Bethelnie") (1 text plus 1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan5 973, "Glenlogie" (15 texts plus two fragments on pp. 601-602, 18 tunes)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads, pp. 57-58, "Glenlogie" (2 texts)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 85, "Glenlogie" (1 text)
DT 238, GLENLOG GLENLOG2*
ADDITIONAL: Robert Chambers, The Popular Rhymes of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1870 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 308-309, "Glenlogie"
Roud #101
RECORDINGS:
John Strachan, "Glenlogie" [fragment] (on Lomax43, LomaxCD1743); "Glenlogie (Jean o' Bethelnie" (on FSB5, FSBBAL2)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "A Rich Irish Lady (The Fair Damsel from London; Sally and Billy; The Sailor from Dover; Pretty Sally; etc.)" [Laws P9] (lyrics in some texts)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Bonnie Jeannie o Bethelnie

NOTES [124 words]: Reported to be the story of Jean Meldrum and Sir George Gordon of Glenlogie. Meldrum became a servant of Mary Stewart in 1562. Some versions of the song follow the details of the story very closely, implying either that the song is of broadside origin or that the alleged history is just that: Alleged.
(For details, see the notes in Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, which quote an article by Dr. Shearer in the Huntly Express of January 24, 1882). - RBW

Grafted onto the end of Greig/Duncan 973A and 973B is the "ye shine where ye stand" fill-in-the-name verse found in such songs as "Bonny Portmore" (see references there). In this case, "Bethelnie, O Bethelnie, Ye shine where ye stand, May the heather bells around you Shine o'er Fyvie's land." - BS

Last updated in version 4.2
File: C238

Glenora, The

DESCRIPTION: Tom Warren is captain of Glenora out of Burgeo. This day Warren stays on shore and Glenora runs into a gale which the crew rides out. After the wind dies Warren came out in a motor boat and gives loud and obvious orders before going to sleep.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1977 (Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou)

KEYWORDS: sea ship storm

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 44, "The Glenora" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #31208

NOTES [63 words]: Burgeo is on the south coast of Newfoundland, about 70 miles east of Port-aux-Basques by sea. - BS

Frank Galgay and Michael McCarthy, Shipwrecks of Newfoundland and Labrador, Volume III, Creative Publishers, 1995, p. 157, mention a schooner named Glennara, Captain Jacobs, wrecked at Strawberry, Labrador in 1876. I have no idea if this is the same ship as the Glenora. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: LeBe044

Glenorchy Maid, The

DESCRIPTION: "When spring spread her green velvet claes on the common, When summer wi' flow'r's decks the heather braes," even then, there is nothing "more inviting, to me more delighting" than the Glenorchy maid. The singer expects to live with her in bliss

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1899 (Ford)

KEYWORDS: love beauty nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 135-137, "The Glenorchy Maid" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13115

File: FVS135

Glenshesk Waterside, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer recalls wandering along the Glenshesk water, but now he must sadly depart. He wishes he were still there, "But fate proposes I must go, in foreign lands abide." He describes all the things he won't see again

AUTHOR: P. C. J. McAuley (?)
Glenwhorple Highlanders

DESCRIPTION: "There's a braw fine regiment as ilka mon should ken, They are deevies at the fechtin', they hae clured a sicht o' men." The singer boasts of the deeds of Scots going back to MacAdam, the very first man, who dwelt in Glen Eden, up to today's drinkers

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead)

KEYWORDS: soldier humorous drink bragging

FOUND IN: Canada

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead, pp. 64-65, "Glenwhorple Highlanders" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #29411

File: Hopk064

---

Gloamin' Fa'

DESCRIPTION: The singer asks her husband to sit by her on their fiftieth wedding anniversary. She recalls their life together. Their children now are grown, except one "oor Father didna spare ... Thank God the others hae been right." She hopes they'll die together.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Greig/Duncan4)

KEYWORDS: age love marriage nonballad children husband wife death

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Greig/Duncan4 928, "Gloamin' Fa" (1 text)

Roud #6239

File: GrD4928

---

Gloamin' Star at E'en, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer tells of his hard work all day, but is happy when it's through: "But I maun haste awa' Where the tryst was set yestreen To meet my bonnie lassie Neath the gloamin' star at e'en." He blesses the star, and cares not for riches when he has her.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (Greig/Duncan4)

KEYWORDS: love courting work

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (4 citations):

Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #82, p. 1, "The Gloamin' Star" (1 text)

Greig/Duncan4 880, "The Gloamin' Star" (6 texts, 8 tunes)

Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 66-67, "Neath the Gloamin' Star at E'en" (1 text)

DT, GLOAMSTR

Roud #5569

NOTES [21 words]: Quite a few versions of this open with a reference to Phoebus (Apollo); I have to think it started as a broadside somewhere. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.5

File: Ord066
Glorious Beer

DESCRIPTION: "I won't sing of sherbet and water, For sherbet with beer will not rhyme... I look to that great institution... Beer, beer, glorious beer, Fill yourselves right up to here; Drink a great deal of it, Make a good meal of it." It beats other "lubricants"

AUTHOR: Words: Will Godwin / Music: Steve Leggett
EARLIEST DATE: 1899 (recorded by Dan W. Quinn); reportedly written 1896
KEYWORDS: drink humorous nonballad
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fahey-Joe-Watson-AustralianTraditionalFolkSinger, [p. 22, page headed "this item was obviously...."], "(no title)" (1 fragment)
Roud #V4214
RECORDINGS:
Dan W. Quinn, "Glorious Beer" (CYL: Columbia 5063, 1899)
File: FaWGloBe

Glorious Exertion of Man, The

DESCRIPTION: "Gallia burst her vile shackles on this glorious day, And we dare to applaud the great deed." "Columbia ... was cleared ... Chains disappeared." "Mong our neighbors, now, Liberty dwells ... On the rock of Man's Rights she a fortress has planned."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1796 (_Paddy's Resource_(Philadelphia), according to Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)
KEYWORDS: America France nonballad patriotic freedom
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
July 14, 1789 - The Bastille is taken, marking the beginning of the French Revolution
1791-1792 - Thomas Paine publishes _The Rights of Man_

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 15, "The Glorious Exertion of Man" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Man is Free by Nature" (subject of the French Revolution)

Glorious Meeting of Dublin, The

DESCRIPTION: October 10, 1869 many thousands gather, without disturbance, "to use all legal means to set these brave men free," Butt and Moor speak. "Five hundred thousand did stand" across Ireland in support. "No separation do we want we only seek our rights"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c.1867 [after October 1869] (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 26(219))
KEYWORDS: prisoner Ireland political
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

FOUND IN:
Roud #V8269
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 26(219), "The Glorious Meeting of Dublin Held in Cabra ," P. Brereton (Dublin), c.1867
NOTES [243 words]: October 2, 1869 at Youghall a petition for amnesty for Fenian prisoners held for sedition was presented by the Town Commissioners to John-Poyntz Earl Spencer, Lord Lieutenant General and General Governor of Ireland, without response. The meeting at Dublin followed and drew up a petition to Gladstone. Mr Butt presided and other speakers included Mr Moore M.P., Rev Mr Leverett, Mr Russell and Mr O'Donnell President of the Trade Association. (sources: The Times Oct 4, 1869, pg. 9, col. C, Issue 26559. The Times Oct 11, 1869, pg. 5, col. D, Issue 26565. Copyright 2002 The Gale Group)
The following year Isaac Butt founded the Home Government Association, which was soon replaced by the more aggressive Home Rule League. (source: "Home Rule" on the Irelandseye site).

January 5, 1871 - "33 Fenian prisoners, including Devoy, Rossa, O'Leary and Luby, are released by the British in a general amnesty" (source: Irish Culture and Customs site)

See "Rossa's Farewell to Erin" for another example about the Amnesty Movement: Rossa is one of the prisoners mentioned in the Bodleian broadside and freed January 5, 1871. Others are General Thomas F. Burke (as "Burk"); see "Thomas F. Burke" in Speeches from the Dock, Part I at the FullBooks site [also Burke's Dream" [Laws J16] - RBW]), McSweeney (who also appears in Brereton's broadside "Exile's Return" in Hugh Anderson, Farewell to Judges & Juries, pp. 396-397) and a difficult to read name beginning "O'Ne." - BS

Glorious Repeal Meeting Held at Tara Hill

DESCRIPTION: Dan and Steele at the Tara meeting say they won't yield without repeal of the Union. "God bless our Queen ... But in spite of all the tory clan We will repeal the Union." "In spite of Wellington and Peel We'll gain our liberation"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1843 (Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)

KEYWORDS: Ireland freedom royalty political

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Aug 15, 1843 - Repeal meeting at Tara (source: Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 50A, "Glorious Repeal Meeting Held at Tara Hill" (1 text)
Roud #V4968

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Meeting of Tara" (subject)

cf. "Daniel O'Connell (I)" (subject: Daniel O'Connell) and references there

NOTES [303 words]: Daniel O'Connell founded National Association of Ireland for full and prompt Justice and Repeal April 1840 (In January the Association was renamed the Loyal National Repeal Association). O'Connell argued that the Union Act of 1801 was invalid. In October Young Ireland established The Nation which supported Repeal. In 1843 O'Connell spoke to "monster" meetings attended by 100,000 or more supporters in favor of Repeal. The June meeting at Mallow was followed in August by the meeting at Tara and, in September, by a meeting at Mullaghmast. Finally, on October 7 [my sources all say October 4 - RBW], the government prohibited the meeting scheduled at Clontarf the following day. O'Connell issued a notice that the meeting was "abandoned." That ended the Repeal meetings. (source: The Princess Grace Irish Library (Monaco) site entry for Daniel O'Connell; O'Connell's notice for the Clontarff meeting can be read at 1169 and Counting site)

Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 50: "Thomas Steele, although a protestant landlord, was one of O'Connell's lieutenants."

The commentary for broadside NLScotland L.C.Fol.178.A.2(065) states "The meeting at Tara, Co. Meath in the summer of 1843, is now estimated to have been attended by 750,000 people." - BS

A number which should inspire some skepticism -- 750,000 people was a tenth of the population of Ireland! Robert Kee (p. 208 of The Most Distressful Country, which is volume I of The Green Flag) mentions this estimate, but notes that it was from The Nation, which was pro-Irish. O'Connell's estimate was an even more absurd million and a half. A more realistic estimate is a quarter of a million (from Cecil Woodham-Smith, The Great Hunger, p. 11).

For additional information on the context, and the failure of Repeal, see the notes on "The Meeting of Tara." - RBW

Glorious Things of Thee are Spoken

DESCRIPTION: "Glorious thing of thee are spoken, Zion, city of our God. He whose word cannot be broken, Formed thee for his own abode." Hearers are reminded that God is an unshakable foundation, the source of living water, seen in cloud and fire

AUTHOR: Words; John Newton (1725-1807) / Music: Franz Joseph Haydn (1732-1809)
EARLIEST DATE: 1779 (see Notes)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
ADDITIONAL: Charles Johnson, One Hundred and One Famous Hymns (Hallberg, 1982), p. 51, "Glorious Things of Thee Are Spoken" (1 text, 1 tune)
Robert J. Morgan, _Then Sings My Soul, Book 2: 150 of the World's Greatest Hymn Stories_, Nelson, 2004, pp. 50-51, "Glorious Things of Thee Are Spoken" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7112
NOTES [307 words]: For background on John Newton, see the notes to "Amazing Grace." Morgan, p. 51, observes that Haydn's tune for this came to be used first at the Austrian and then as the German national anthem.

John Julian, editor, A Dictionary of Hymnology, 1892; second edition 1907 (I use the 1957 Dover edition in two volumes), p. 427, has much to say of this text:
[First] published in the Olney Hymns, 1779, Book i., No. 60, in 5 stanzas of 8 lines, and entitled, "Zion, or the City of God," Isa. xxxiii.20, 21. It has attained great popularity in all English-speaking countries, and ranks with the first hymns in the language. It is used, however, in various forms as follows:

[I summarize the next section: 1. The original text. 2. An 1819 version based on stanzas i, ii, and v. 3. An 1852 version, rarely used, derived from stanzas i, iii, v. 4. An 1853 version based on stanzas i and ii, with an added doxology not by Newton; 5. A minor version rewritten in four line stanzas with the doxology of #4 and a new verse by I. G. Smith, producer of the whole mess; 6. A rewrite by J. Keble which used the doxology of #4 plus new words by Keble. 7. A version consisting of stanzas i, ii, iv, v. 8. A version consisting of stanzas i-iv with slight alteration.]

In the American collections the same diversity of use prevails as in Great Britain. Sometimes the hymn is broken into two parts, with part ii beginning, "Blest inhabitants of Zion." ... Stanzas i., ii., v., have been rendered into Latin by the Rev. R. Bingham, and included in his Hymno. Christ. Latina, 1871, "Dicta de te sunt miranda."

According to LindaJo H. McKim, Presbyterian Hymnal Companion, Westminster/John Knox Press, 1993, pp. 286, 447, Haydn's tune is known as "Austrian Hymn" because it was written for the Habsburg (Austrian) Emperor's birthday in 1797. - RBW

Glorious Wedding, A

DESCRIPTION: "I will sing you a song of a comical style... It's all about a wedding, a glorious affair; As I was the bridegroom, I happened to be there." The singer reports all the wild events at the wedding, and all the peculiar guests who were present

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Cox)
KEYWORDS: marriage humorous wedding drink
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cox-FolkSongsSouth 182, "A Glorious Wedding" (1 text)
ST JHCox182 (Full)
Roud #5158
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Blythesome Bridal" (theme)
NOTES [36 words]: This seems to be sort of an American version of "The Blythesome Bridal" -- not the same song, but the same idea, of a wild party. The wedding is not really part of the plot; it's just the occasion for the party. - RBW

Glory to His Name

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Glory to his name (2x), There to my heart was the blood applied, Glory to His name." Verses: At the cross the singer was cleansed from sin by Jesus's blood. The singer is glad to have entered "the fountain that saves from sin"

AUTHOR: WORDS: E. A. Hoffman /MUSIC: J. H. Stockton (source: Date)
EARLIEST DATE: 1898 (Date)
KEYWORDS: ritual religious nonballad Jesus
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
ADDITIONAL: Henry Date, Pentecostal Hymns Nos. 1 and 2 Combined (Chicago: Hope Publishing Company, 1898 ("Digitized by Internet Archive"), #41 p. 41, "Glory to His Name" (1 text, 1 tune)
RECORDINGS: Mississippi John Hurt, "Glory to His Name" (on MJHurt05)
NOTES [10 words]: The last line of the four-line verse is "Glory be His name." - BS
Last updated in version 4.0
File: RcGlTHNa

Glory Trail, The (High Chin Bob)

DESCRIPTION: 'Way high up the Mogollons... A lion cleaned a yearlin's bones." High-Chin Bob, who wants to ride the "glory trail," ropes the lion. But the lion is healthy, and keeps fighting. Even today, Bob's ghost(?) and the lion continue their struggle

AUTHOR: Words: Charles Badger Clark
EARLIEST DATE: 1919
KEYWORDS: cowboy talltale fight animal
FOUND IN: US(SW)
REFERENCES (8 citations):
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 124, "The Glory Trail" (1 text, 1 tune)
Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys, pp. 81-83, "Hlgh-Chin Bob" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ohrlin-HellBoundTrain 49, "High Chin Bob" (1 text, 1 tune)
Tinsley-HeWasSinginThisSong, pp. 148-151, "High Chin Bob" (1 text, 1 tune)
Coleman/Bregman-SongsOfAmericanFolks, pp. 48-50, "The Glory Trail" (1 text, 1 tune)
Saffel-CowboyPoetry, p. 155-157, "The Glory Trail" (1 text)
DT, HIGHLCHIN*
ADDITIONAL: John I. White, _Git Along, Little Dogies: Songs and Songmakers of the American West_, 1975 (page references are to the 1989 University of Illinois Press edition), pp. 126-136, "Badger Clark, Poet of Yesterday's West" (1 text plus discussion and a short biography of Clark)
Roud #12499
RECORDINGS:
Glenn Ohrlin, "High Chin Bob" (on Ohrlin01)
NOTES [22 words]: Charles Badger Clark's original title for this is "The Glory Trail," although "High Chin Bob" seems to be more common in tradition. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.3
File: FCW124

Gloucestershire Wassailers' Song

DESCRIPTION: "Wassail! wassail! all over the town, Our (pledge/toast) it is white, our ale it is brown." Health to the master's (animal's) body parts that he be sent a good present. Butler, "bring us a bowl of the best" else "down fall butler, and bowl and all"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1822 (_Time's Telescope for 1814_)
KEYWORDS: request drink nonballad wassail animal horse sheep
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South,West))
REFERENCES (9 citations):
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 116-117, "Thames Head Wassailers' Song" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO WT 367, "Cricklade Wassailers' Song"; Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 367, "Thames Head Wassailers' Song")
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 755.2, "Thames Head Wassailers' Song" (1 text)
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #51, "Wassail Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
Dixon-AncientPoemsBalladsSongsOfThePeasantryOfEngland, Song #18, pp. 199-200, "Gloucestershire Wassailers' Song" (1 text)
Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, pp. 403-404, "Gloucestershire Wassailers' Song" (2 text)
Rickert-AncientEnglishChristmasCarols, 55. 251-253, "'Wassail, Wassail, all over the Town" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Time's Telescope for 1814 (London, 1822 (3rd edition, "Digitized by Google")), p. 3, ("Wassail! wassail! all over the town") (1 text)
Ian Bradley, _The Penguin Book of Carols_ (1999), #92, "Wassail, Wassail, All Over the Town [The Gloucester Wassail]" (1 composite text)
ADDITIONAL: Jon Raven, _The Urban and Industrial Songs of the Black Country and Birmingham_, Broadside, 1977, pp. 23-25,
(no title) (3 short texts, which could be souling or wassailing songs or something else)
Roud #209
RECORDINGS:
Billy Buckingham, "The Waysailing Bowl" (on Voice16)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Somerset Wassail" (subject, one verse) and references there
NOTES [373 words]: The opening verse seems common to "Somerset Wassail" and "Gloucestershire Wassailers' Song." The rest of the text seems distinct enough to warrant splitting the two.
The Billy Buckingham version on Voice16 includes verses of which this is a typical example:
Now here's a health to my master and to his right eye.
Pray God send our master a good Xmas pies,
And a good Xmas pie that we may all see.
To my wassailing bowl I'll bring unto thee.
The "right eye" is replaced by "right ear," "right arm," "right hip" and "right leg" with gifts of "happy New Year," "good crop of corn," "good flock of sheep" and "a good fatted pig."
Dixon's "Gloucestershire Wassailers' Song" ("Wassail! wassail! all over the town"), which was copied by Bell, is like Buckingham's except that the body parts belong to named animals rather than "master." For example, "Here's to our mare, and to her right eye, God send our mistress a good Christmas pie." Bell's footnote 46: "the name of the horse is generally inserted by the singer [for 'our mare']; and 'Filpail' is often substituted for 'the cow' in a subsequent verse." (source: Robert Bell, editor, [The Project Gutenberg EBook (1996) of] Ancient Poems, Ballads and Songs of the Peasantry of England (1857)).
Bell 1857, as is so often the case, takes his text from Dixon 1846 without attribution. In this case, Note 46 is Bell's own.
From Time's Telescope for 1814: "In Gloucestershire [on New Year's Eve], the wassailers still carry about a great bowl, dressed up with garlands and ribbons, and sing the following verses: ...."

Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames: "I have named this the 'Thames Head Wassailers' Song' because I have not heard it except around the Thames source. It has been called 'The Gloucestershire Wassailing Song,' though it seems to have been quite as popular in North Wilts as in Gloucestershire...."
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO "manuscript Wt 367 includes two songs, one identified as the 'Thames Head Wassailers Song', is in Williams' own hand. The second is a typescript which uses the same number but is identified as the 'Cricklade Wassail Song'. The Thames Head version lacks Verse 9 in the published edition on pages 116, 117 while the Cricklade version lacks Verse 5." - BS

File: RcGlWasS

Glow-Worm (Gluhwurrmchen)
DESCRIPTION: Obnoxious little piece beginning, in English, "Glow little glow-worm, glimmer, glimmer." The rest is equally pointless.
AUTHOR: Music: Paul Linke (German words by Bolten-Backers0
EARLIEST DATE: 1902
KEYWORDS: animal nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, p. 246, "Glow-Worm"
SAME TUNE:
Down by the Seashore (I) (Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHome CompanionFolkSongBook, p. 149)
Go 'Way From Mah Window

DESCRIPTION: Woodchopping song: "Go 'way from mah window, Go 'way from mah door, Go 'way from mah bedtime, Don't you tease me no mo'." "Go 'way in de springtime, Come back in de fall, Bring you back mo' money Dan we bofe can haul."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)
KEYWORDS: work separation
FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE,So)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
  Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 439, "Go 'Way from My Window" (1 text)
  Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 377, "Go 'Way F'om Mah Window" (1 short text, 1 tune)
  Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, p. 198, "Go Way f'om Mah Window" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Wolfe/Boswell-FolkSongsOfMiddleTennessee 91, pp. 143-144, "Go Away from My WIndow" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Roud #11017
File: San377

Go A Sparking

DESCRIPTION: A man goes sparking but the girls are "mad and their heads not combed"; they can't make bread; he has to saw the meat they cook. Their father comes gunning for him. At church they wear an old lint sack and "leather bonnet with a hole in the crown"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1938 (Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed)
KEYWORDS: courting clothes hair humorous nonballad father youth
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
  Owens-TexasFolkSongs-1ed, pp. 222-223, "I Went Out A-Sparkin'" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, pp. 112-113, "Went Out A-Sparkin'" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Randolph 466, "The Old Leather Bonnet" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Fred High, "Go A Sparkin'," Max Hunter Folk Song Collection, Cat #0369 (MFH #222), accessed 6 September 2014 from http://maxhunter.missouristate.edu/songinformation.aspx?ID=369
Roud #6359
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Come All You Virginia Girls (Arkansas Boys; Texian Boys; Cousin Emmy's Blues; etc.)" (theme, structure, tune)
NOTES [63 words]: This seems, in text and form, the man's answer to "Come All You Virginia Girls." - BS
I originally filed Randolph's "Old Leather Bonnet" under "Come All You Virginia Girls" on the grounds that it might be a version of that song that had lost its first verse. But the Owens texts make it likely that this is indeed an independent song, so (at Ben's suggestion) we file it here. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.5
File: 0w2E112
Go And Dig My Grave

DESCRIPTION: "Go and dig my grave both long and narrow, Make my coffin neat and strong... Two, two to my head, two, two to my feet, Two to carry me, Lord, when I die." "My soul's gonna shine like a star... I'm bound for heaven when I die."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1893 (Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: West Indies (Bahamas)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories 18, "Dig My Grave Long and Narrow" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 90-93, "Dig My Grave" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 350, "Dig My Grave" (1 text)
DT, GO&DIG
Roud #15633

RECORDINGS:
Unidentified men from Andros Island, "Dig My Grave" (AAFS 502 B1, 1935; on LomaxCD1822-2)
David Pryor, Henry Lundy et al, "Dig My Grave" (AFS, 1935; on LC05)
John Roberts & group, "Dig My Grave Both Long and Narrow" (on MuBahamas2)
Pete Seeger, "Dig My Grave" (on PeteSeeger04)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Little Beggar Boy" (floating verses)
NOTES [60 words]: Fred W. Allsopp, in Folklore of Romantic Arkansas, Volume II, p. 159, reports an item in Harper's Magazine in 1878 with the chorus
Soul shall shine lak a star in de mornin',
Soul shall shine lak a star in de mornin';
Oh, my little soul's gwine to rise an' shine,
Oh, my little soul's gwine to rise an' shine.
Whether that is related to this I do not know. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.2
File: FSWB350B

Go Away From Me, Willie

DESCRIPTION: "Go away from me, Willie, and leave me alone, For I'm a poor stranger,..." "The boys they won't have me, as I understand; They want a freeholder...." "The leaves they will wither,..." "I'll build me a castle on the mountain so high...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1954 (collected from Charlie Hatcher by Boswell)
KEYWORDS: love rejection floatingverses
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Wolfe/Boswell-FolkSongsOfMiddleTennessee 98, pp. 151-152, "Go Away From Me, Willie" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #417

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Pretty Saro" (lyrics)
cf. "On Top of Old Smokey" (lyrics)
cf. "The Poor Stranger (Two Strangers in the Mountains Alone)" (lyrics)
NOTES [60 words]: This song is extremely composite, with two verses from "Pretty Saro," three from "On Top of Old Smokey" or one of its relatives, and three that are floaters. Roud tossed it one of his catchall numbers. I finally decided that it was so confolate that it needed its own number. But, no matter how you look at it, it's really a bunch of songs mashed together. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.6
File: BoWo098

Go Away Sister Nancy

DESCRIPTION: "Go 'way! Sister Nancy, go 'way! I don't want you to hold me. Got sugar and lasses in my soul, And I want brother Honeycutt to hold me!"
Go Down Emmanuel Road

DESCRIPTION: "Go down Emanuel Road, go for broke rock stone," "knock out" or "broke them" or "rock them" or "out come" or "count down" one by one ... eight by eight or "mash your finger" "finger mash no cry" "member to play with a play"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Jekyll-JamaicanSongAndStory)
KEYWORDS: game nonballad worksong
FOUND IN: West Indies (Bahamas, Jamaica) Belize
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Jekyll-JamaicanSongAndStory 98, ("Me go da Galloway road, Gal an' boy them broke rock stone") (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Jim Morse, _Folk Songs of the Caribbean_ (New York: Bantam Books, 1958), pp. 104-106, "Manuel Ground" (1 text fragment, 1 tune) [source: Bennett Folkways recording]
Ervin Beck, "Belizean Creole Folk Songs" in _Caribbean Quarterly_, Vol. 29, No. 1 (March 1983 (made available online by JSTOR)), pp. 44-45, "Kellyman Town" (1 text, 1 tune) (recorded 1956-57).
RECORDINGS:
Louise Bennett, "Manuel Ground" (1957, on "Childrens' Jamaican Songs and Games," Folkways FC 7250)
Blind Blake Higgs, "Go Down Emmanuel Road" (on WIHIGGS01)
Lord Fly and Dan Williams Orchestra, "Medley of Jamaican Mento-Calypsos(Linstead Market; Hol' him Joe; Dog war a mattuse lane; Manuel Road)" (1951, on Motta MRS 02A, 2006, as "Medley: Linstead Market/Hold 'Im Joe/Doh War A Matches Lane/Emanuel Road" on "Take Me to Jamaica," Pressure Sounds CD PSCD 51)

NOTES [539 words]: The Gaylads version is a ska recording that is close to an abbreviated Bennett version. The third, and longest verse is "[Go down a Manuel Road, gal and boy, /Fe go bruk rock stone (gal and boy)][2x], Bruk them one by one (gal and boy)/ ... /Bruk them four by four (gal and boy) /Finger mash you no cry (gal and boy)/Member to play wid a play (gal and boy)/Finger mash you no cry (gal and boy)."
The instructions are usually (see Jekyll, Lewin and Bennett, Lord Composer) aimed at "gal and boy" but Higgs has "jolly boys" and Lord Fly has "Jolly Boy." Lewin (p. 43) has "gal" and "boy" "commonly used in the Jamaican context" of song.

Lewin, p. 80: "In 'Manuel Road', the most popular [Jamaican stone] game, six or more players kneel in a circle, each tapping a fairly large stone on the ground in time to the song. The speed thus established, the game begins in earnest. Players pass the stones to the right. If the movement coincides with the accents of the song (indicating the passing of the stones) all is well. If not, a finger can be crushed as a stone lands on it heavily."

Bennett liner notes p. 2, and Morse, pp. 105-106, give a different description of the game, without

REFERENCES:
Scarborough-ASongCatcherInSouthernMountains, p. 74, "(Go Away Sister Nancy)" (1 short text; tune on p. 386)
Roud #8811
NOTES [53 words]: Reportedly the cry of an ecstatic in church. In Pentecostal sorts of denominations, shouting during a service is common, and in this denomination, it was usual for a neighbor to hold onto the shouter. Reportedly this woman wanted the handsome Brother Honeycutt to assume that duty rather than the female Sister Nancy. - RBW literal stones, in which "anyone who drops out is the 'mashed finger.'"
The title of Bennett's track is "Manuel Ground" but she sings "Go down a Manuel Road," album liner notes and Morse's transcription notwithstanding.
Jekyll has "Galloway road", "where there is a quarry."
The label on Lord Composer's 78 MRS DMS 31 has its two songs as "Jamaican digging songs."
While the references I have make "Go Down Emmanuel Road" a ring game, Lewin has this to say about "Hill an' Gully": "Most Jamaicans know 'Hill an' Gully Rider' as a work song. It, however, started life as a rather athletic game played by men and boys in western Maroon towns" [Lewin, p. 82]. The label is at least partly justified, but see the following note as further justification for marking "Go Down Emmanuel Road" a worksong.
The following description of Jamaican women's work songs -- commenting specifically on "Hill an' Gully" and "Manuel Road" -- reminds me of Gaelic songs for milling wool (waulking tweed) (see, for example, the Index entries for "Oran Na Caillich," "Brughaidhean Ghlinn-Braon, "Fhear a Bhata" and "O A lu, Nach Till Thu Dhomnaill"): "Manual labour was such an all-pervading feature in the life of black Jamaicans that music from other areas of activity was borrowed to accompany it. For example, the Maroon game 'Hill an' Gully' ... is now known and used in field and on stage as a work song. Work movements and rhythms also inspired play activities, such as stone passing games. I remember women in my childhood, sitting facing piles of stones, breaking them for covering dusty or water-pocked roads. They worked rhythmically, whether singly or in groups, to let the 'music carry the work' and make it easier for them. The same rhythm was transferred to games such as 'Manuel Road'...." [Lewin, p. 101].

Ervin: "Although one Belizean informant associated 'Kellyman Town' with Kelly Street in Belize City, the word 'Kellman' probably should be regarded as a Belizean transmutation of the 'Galloway road' (site of a stone quarry) in Jekyll's version." - BS

Go Down Moses, Hold the Key
DESCRIPTION: "Go down Moses, Hold the key, Don't let the wind blow on the righteous." "Come a fish by the name of whale, Swallowed brother Jonah by the head and tail" "Want to go to Heaven when you die, Just stop your tongue from telling lies"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1893 (Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious Bible
FOUND IN: West Indies(Bahamas)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories 8, "Go Down, Moses" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [160 words]: The description is based on the Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories text. The tag line for each couplet is "Hey! hey! my soul."
What is the key and wind about in the first verse? The wind, at least, may refer to Exodus 14:21 -- "and the Lord caused the sea to go back by a strong east wind ... and the waters were divided" - or, more likely, the Exodus song at 15, and specifically at 15:10 - "Thou didst blow with thy wind, the sea covered them [the Egyptians]: they sank as lead in the mighty waters" - in hope that the wind of judgment not be turned against the singers (citations from King James Bible). - BS
Given that the second verse mentions Jonah, one might speculate that the wind is the storm which pursued Jonah at sea and forced the sailors on his ship to throw him overboard.
Note also that the song says "whale"; the Hebrew Bible unambiguously says "fish" and never mentions a mammal (for more about this, see the notes to "God's Radiophone"). - RBW
Last updated in version 4.2
File: Edwa008

Go Down, Moses
DESCRIPTION: Moses is commissioned to free the Israelites: "Go down, Moses, Way down in Egypt's land. Tell old Pharaoh to let my people go." The firstborn of Egypt are specifically threatened; the rest is more general
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1861 (sheet music published under title "The Song of the Contrabands 'O Let My People Go"

KEYWORDS: religious Bible freedom escape death

FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE)

REFERENCES (18 citations):
Curtis-Burlin-NegroFolkSongs-TheHamptonSeries (I), pp. 13-21, "Go Down, Moses" (1 text with variants, 1 tune with variants)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 570, "Go Down, Moses" (1 text)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 570, "Go Down, Moses" (1 tune plus a text excerpt)
Gainer-FolkSongsFromTheWestVirginiaHills, pp. 213-215, "Go Down, Moses" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 276-277, "Go Down, Moses" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber-SoldierSongsAndHomeFrontBalladsOfCivilWar, pp. 26-27, "Go Down, Moses" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-FolkSongUSA 109, "Go Down, Moses" (1 text, 1 tune)
Courlander-NegroFolkMusic, p. 42, "Go Down, Moses" (partial text)
Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, pp. 366-367, "The Song of the 'Contrabands.' 'O Let my people go'" (1 text, a copy of a version rewritten by Rev. L. C. Lockwood)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 354-355, "O! Let My People Go" (1 text -- an excerpt)
Warren-EveryTimeIFeelTheSpirit, pp. 40-42, "Go Down, Moses" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 316, "Go Down, Moses" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 294, "Go Down Moses" (1 text)
Messerli-ListenToTheMockingbird, pp. 31-34, "Go Down, Moses" (1 text)
Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, p. 247, "Go Down, Moses" DT, GOMOSES* GOMOSES2*
Roud #5434

RECORDINGS:
Marian Anderson, "Go Down Moses" (Victor 19370, 1924) (Victor 1799, 1937)
Bentley Ball, "Go Down Moses" (Columbia A3085, 1920)
Big Bethel Choir, "Go Down Moses" (Victor 20498, 1927)
Chariooteers, "Go Down Moses" (Columbia 35718, 1940; rec. 1939)
Cotton Belt Quartet, "Go Down Moses" (Vocalion 1024, 1926)
Ebony Three, "Go Down Moses" (Decca 7527, 1938)
Rev. Fullbosom, "Moses Go Down into Pharoahlnd" (Paramount 13078, 1931 -- possibly a recorded song/sermon)
Hampton Institute Quartette, "Go Down Moses" (RCA 27472, 1941)
Harmonizing Four, "Go Down Moses" (Vee Jay 864, rec. 1958)
Roland Hayes, "Go Down Moses" (Vocalion 1073, 1927; Vocalion 21002, n.d.; Supertone S-2238, 1931)
Rev. H. B. Jackson, "Go Down Moses" (OKeh 8804, 1930; rec. 1929)
Reed Miller, "Go Down, Moses" (CYL: Edison [BA] 3574, n.d.)
Pete Seeger, "Go Down Moses" (on PeteSeeger31)
Noble Sissle & his Southland Singers, "Go Down Moses" (Pathe 20488, 1921)
Southern Sons, "Go Down Moses" (Bluebird B-8808, 1941)
Edna Thomas, "Go Down, Moses" (Columbia 1606-D, 1928)
Tuskegee Institute Singers, "Go Down Moses" (Victor 17688, 1915; rec. 1914)
Tuskegee Quartet, "Go Down Moses" (Victor 20518, 1927; rec. 1926)
University of North Carolina Club, "Go Down, Moses" (Brunswick 3161, 1926)
University Singers, "Go Down Moses" (Cameo 530, 1924)
Virginia Female [Jubilee] Singers, "Go Down Moses in Egyptland" (OKeh 4437, 1921)
Wheat Street Female Quartet, "Go Down Moses" (Columbia 14067-D, 1925)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Song of the Contrabands

NOTES [86 words]: Rev. L. C. Lockwood, described as "Chaplain of the 'Contrabands' at Fortress Munroe," [sic. -- the fort's name was Fort Monroe - RBW] collected the song, reporting that "This Song has been sung for about nine years by the Slaves of Virginia." The original has 11 verses, only a few of which seem to have made it into tradition. - PJS
Moses's specific threat against the firstborn of Egypt is made in Exodus 11:4f. and is carried out in 12:29f. The rest of this song is based loosely on the background in Exodus. - RBW

Go Down, Old Hannah

DESCRIPTION: "Go down, old Hannah, well, well, well! Don't you rise no mo'. If you rise in the mornin', Bring Judgment Day." The singer describes the dreadful conditions in the Brazos River prisons, and hopes for release in any form

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (recording, unknown artists, AFS CYL-7-1)
KEYWORDS: prison hardtimes work worksong
FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (8 citations):
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, "Go Down, Ol' Hannah" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 286, "Go Down, Old Hannah" (1 text, 1 tune)
Botkin-TreasuryOfSouthernFolklore, p. 745, "Go Down, Old Hannah" (1 text, 1 tune)
Courlander-NegroFolkMusic, p. 142, "Go Down Old Hannah" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jackson-WakeUpDeadMan, pp. 77-75, "Should A Been on the River in 1910" (1 text, 1 tune; the first verse, about driving women and men alive, is from this song or "Ain't No More Cane on this Brazos", but the remainder is a separate piece); pp. 111-118, "Go Down Old Hannah" (4 texts, 2 tunes)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 71, "Old Hannah" (1 text)
DT, OLDHANN2*

ADDITIONAL: Moses Asch and Alan Lomax, Editors, _The Leadbelly Songbook_, Oak, 1962, p. 50, "Go Down Old Hannah" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6710

RECORDINGS:
James "Iron Head" Baker, Will Crosby, R. D. Allen & Mose "Clear Rock" Platt, "Go Down Old Hannah" (AFS 195 A2, 1933; on LC08) [note: the AFS reissue identified this as 196 A2; this listing comes from Dixon/Godrich/Rye] (AFS 617 A3, 685 A2, 696 A1, 717 B, all 1936)
Mose "Clear Rock" Platt, "Go Down Old Hannah" (AFS 2643 A1, 1939)
Dock Reese, "Go Down, Old Hannah" (on AschRec2)
Texas state farm prisoners, "Go Down, Old Hannah" (on NPCWork)
Unknown artists, "Go Down Old Hannah" (AFS CYL-7-1, 1933)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Ain't No More Cane on this Brazos"

NOTES [103 words]: The amount of common material in this song and "Ain't No More Cane on this Brazos" makes it certain they have cross-fertilized. They may be descendants of a common ancestor. But the stanzaic forms are different, so I list them separately.

The name "Hannah" refers to the sun. Jackson notes that, in some prisons, if a prisoner died or fainted in his row, he would be given no help, so the prisoners literally had to work until they dropped. On a day when it was particularly bright and hot, death in the fields was a real possibility -- hence the appeal, in some versions, "Wake up, dead man, Help me carry my row." - RBW
Go Easy, Mabel

DESCRIPTION: Percy dates Mabel Fitch, who thought "he was rich and didn't have to work." He begs her "If you can't go easy, Mabel, go as easy as you can." They marry; she becomes pregnant. When he learns she expects four children, he again begs for restraining

AUTHOR: Words: Ben Shields, Will D. Cobb & Ed Moran / Music: Fred Helf

EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (recording, Edward Meeker)

LONG DESCRIPTION: Ribbon clerk Percy is on a date with Mabel Fitch, who thought "he was rich and didn't have to work." He hears her ordering extravagantly and pleads with her to restrain herself, asking "If you can't go easy, Mabel, go as easy as you can." She expresses astonishment at "a millionaire that's broke." They marry, and after a year she is pregnant. The doctor and nurse arrive; the nurse holds up fingers signifying the number of babies about to arrive; when she shows four fingers young Percy reacts -- "PDQ he pleaded through the keyhole in the door," "Go easy, Mabel; Mabel if you love your Percy, cease, oh goodness gracious mercy" and again, "Mabel if you can't go easy, go as easy as you can."

KEYWORDS: courting marriage food humorous pregnancy childbirth baby children husband wife

FOUND IN: US

RECORDINGS:
Delmore Bros., "Go Easy Mabel" (Bluebird B-8204, 1939; on Protobilly)
Edward Meeker, "Go Easy Mabel" (CYL: Edison 10173, 1909; on Protobilly)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bill Morgan and His Gal" (theme: the date that eats and drinks unbelievable quantities) and references there

Go From My Window (I)

DESCRIPTION: Characterized by the line "Go (away) from my window, my love, (go/do)." Rain or other difficulties may trouble the swain, but he usually gains admittance in the end: "Come up to my window, love... The wind nor rain shall not trouble thee again...."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1611 (The Knight of the Burning Pestle); but see notes for evidence of 16th century versions

KEYWORDS: courting rejection nightvisit nightvisit

FOUND IN: Britain(England)

REFERENCES (9 citations):
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 50, "Go From My Window" (1 text)
Chappell/Wooldridge-OldEnglishPopularMusic I, pp. 146-147, "Go From My Window" (3 fragments of text, 1 tune)
Lyle/McAlpine/McLucas-SongRepertoireOfAmeliaAndJaneHarris, p. 159, "Gentle Johnnie Ogilvie the knicht o’ Inverwharity" (1 fragment which may be this)

DT, GOWINDOW*

ADDITIONAL: F. W. Moorman, editor, _The Knight of the Burning Pestle: A Play Written by Francis Beaumont and John Fletcher_ (J.M. Dent, London, 1898 ("Digitized by Google")), "The Knight of the Burning Pestle", Act III, Sc. 5, ll. 32-36, 54-58, pp. 94-95, ("Go from my window, love go") (1 text: two verses); a 1613 edition has the song in Act IV (Beaumont/Fletcher).

Charles Read Baskerville, _English Songs on the Night Visit_ in Publications of the Modern Language Association of America, Vol. XXXVI, No. 1 (March 1921 ("Digitized by Google")), Art. xxvii, pp. 589-590, ("The Coal-Pit is Tomorrow") ("The wind is in the west")

Peter Buchan, _Ancient Ballads and Songs of the North of Scotland_ (W&D Laing, and J Stevenson, Edinburgh, 1828), Vol. II, pp. 221-222, 337, "The Cuckold Sailor" (1 text)

Roud #966

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "One Night As I Lay on My Bed"

NOTES [956 words]: This piece was obviously very popular in the sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries (Chappell reports eight sources from that period, though presumably most of these are the tune). The earliest dated text (partial, of course) appears to be that in John Fletcher and Francis Beaumont's 1611 play "The Knight of the Burning Pestle," Act III, scene v:

Go from my window, love, go;
Go from my window, my dear;
The wind and rain
Will drive you back again:
You cannot be lodged here. - RBW

"Go From My Window (I)" is Baskerville's prime example in English of "the intrigue ballad of the night visit":

"An extension of the song on the night visit is found in a ballad of an intrigue type very widely spread among European folk. Several traditional forms collected in England and Scotland show, by reason of similar lines, a very close connection to the old comic song of the London stage. In this ballad a youth visits by agreement an old sweetheart who has married and borne a child, and the wife as she sings to the child warns the lover that her husband has unexpectedly remained at home" (Baskerville, p. 587).

This story is frequently told in the form of a cante fable. Two examples are "The Coal-Pit is Tomorrow" [the collier husband has stayed home from work and the wife has difficulty making her lover understand that "the cuckoo's in his nest And the coal-pit is tomorrow"] (Baskerville, pp. 589-590) and ("Begone, begone, my Willy, my Billy"). The lover keeps tapping at the window, refusing to understand the problem, the husband keeps asking what is causing the noise at the window, and the singer keeps hiding her answer to the lover in a lullaby to the baby until, exasperated, "she sprang out of bed, threw open the casement, and sang:- 'Begone, begone, my Willy, you silly; Begone, you fool, yet my dear. O the devil's in the man, And he can not understan' That he cannot have a lodging here" (Baring-Gould, p. 205).

Buchan tells the same story for "The Cuckold Sailor":

"Sailor's wives, in general, are not the most faithful to their husband's beds, when they are plowing the watery main.... [In this song] [t]he sailor's wife had made an appointment with her gallant to admit him unto her embraces that night, upon the usual private signal or watch-word being given, which he was to make at her window, at the time appointed; but as fate would have it, the sailor unexpectedly arrives, and to his astonishment hears a whistling at the window. He asks her the cause, when she informs him it was nothing but a bird called a cuckold, whistling, and requests him to be quiet and she would sing him a song, and begins with an address to her paramour, as given in the first verse; but he not perceiving its meaning, and her suitor continuing still at the window, the sailor questions her again and again on its meaning, but still receives evasive answers, and continues to sing to the satisfaction of all parties, the disappointed lover excepted, who was obliged, in the end, to go away dissatisfied" (Buchan, p. 337).

The Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle line "the cuckoo's in his nest" -- referring to the singer's husband -- must at one time have been "the cuckold's in his nest." The point of "cuckolding" is that cuckoos don't have nests of their own but lay their eggs to be hatched and raised in other birds' nests by the cuckolded nester. Buchan has "the cockle's in his nest." (Buchan, p. 221).

The song without the story, and without the cuckold line, appears in The Knight of the Burning Pestle.

Ebsworth quotes "another verse of the original" from John Fletcher's "Monsieur Thomas" (Ebsworth p. 200, footnote). In the context of the play Fletcher may have been adapting the song rather than repeating a traditional verse: Maid sings, "My man Thomas did me promise He would visit me this night"; Thomas sings, "I am here Love, tell me dear Love, How may I obtain thy sight"; Maid replies in song, "Come up to my window love, come, come, come, Come to my window my dear, The wind, nor the rain shall trouble thee again, But thou shalt be lodged here" (Waller, "Monsieur Thomas" Act 3, scene 3, pp. 137 l. 32-138 l. 1) [Wikipedia dates the play to 1610-1616.]

For a 1638 stage song based on "Go From My Window" but with no cuckold see Heywood, pp. 256-257, ("Arise, arise, my Juggie, my Puggie") [a song, according to Heywood, "added by the stranger that lately acted Valerius."] Willie calls on Juggie to let him in because "the weather is cold, it blowes, it snowes"; Juggie answers that "the weather is warme, 'twill do thee no harm ... thou canst not be lodged here"; when Willie prepares to leave Juggie relents: "the weather doth change ... thou shalt be lodged here."

Baring-Gould has a 1588 entry: "John Wolfe obtained leave to print three ballads; one was, 'Goe from my window, goe'" (Baring-Gould, p. 203). That is not the only evidence that the song was popular in the 16th century. Gilchrist makes the case that "Go From My Window" was well enough known in 1578 that it served as the basis for a "sacred parody" published in The Gude and Godlie Ballates (Gilchrist, pp. 161-164). The parody begins with the Lord saying "Quho is at my windo? quho, quho? Go from my windo, go, go! Quho callis thair, sa lyke a strangair? Go from my windo, go!" The petitioner pleads, "Lord, I am heir, ane wretchit mortall, That for thy mercy dois cry and call" (Gude&Godlie, p. 116). After rejections and further pleas, a final plea, "O gracious Lord celestiall, As thow art Lord and King eternall, Grant us grace, that we may enter all, And in at thy dure for to go," is answered, "Quho is at my windo? quho? Go from my windo, go! Cry na mair thair, lyke ane stranger, Bot in at my dure thou go" (Gude&Godlie, p. 119). - BS

Bibliography

- Beaumont/Fletcher: Francis Beaumont and John Fletcher, The Knight of the Burning Pestle (Walter Barre, London, 1613 ("Digitized by Google"))
- Gude&Godlie: The Gude and Godlie Ballates (W Paterson, Edinburgh, 1868 reprint of 1578 edition ( Digitized by Google"))

Last updated in version 4.2
File: ChWI146

Go Get the Ax
DESCRIPTION: "Peepin' through the knot-hole Of grandpa's wooden leg, Who'll wind the clock when I am gone? Go get the ax, There's a fly in Lizzie's ear, For a boy's best friend is his mother." The remainder of the song is equally farfetched
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)
KEYWORDS: nonsense nonballad
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 332, "Go Get the Ax" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #20046
NOTES [29 words]: According to Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, this was collected from a girl who was forced to sing it to be initiated into a sorority. One hopes it was nothing worse than that. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: San332

Go Hearty
DESCRIPTION: "Go hearty, fearty, hally go lum, (An old man/fox) went out to have some fun, He got some fun and (hurt/tore) his (skin/shin), Ho hearty, fearty, hally go in."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1890 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)
KEYWORDS: nonsense injury playparty
FOUND IN: New Zealand
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, pp. 90-91, "(Go hearty, fearty, hally go lum)", "(Go heerty, feerty, hally go lum)" (2 texts)
File: SuSm090C
Go In and Out the Window

DESCRIPTION: "Go in and out the window (x3) As we have done before (or: "For we have gained the day"). "Go round and round the levee..." "Go forth and face your lover..." "I kneel because I love you..." "One kiss before I leave you..."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1898 (Gomme)

KEYWORDS: playparty courting nonballad

FOUND IN: US(Ap,MA,MW,NE,SE,So) Britain(England(All),Scotland(Aber)) Ireland West Indies(Jamaica) New Zealand

REFERENCES (26 citations):
- Randolph 538, "Round and Round the Levee" (3 texts plus an excerpt, 1 tune)
- Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 76, "In and Out the Window" (1 text)
- Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore576, "In and Out the Window" (1 tune plus a text excerpt); also p. 524, "Marching Round the Levee" (1 short text, 1 tune)
- Hudson-FolksongsOfMississippi 140, pp. 287-288, "Marching Round the Levee" (1 text)
- Hudson-FolkTunesFromMississippi 35, "Marching Round the Levee" (1 short text, 1 tune)
- Cambiare-EastTennesseeWestVirginiaMountainBallads, p. 136, "Susie Brown" (1 text, a mixed text which has two verses typical of "Cuckoo Waltz" or something like it and two from "Go In and Out the Window"); p. 131, "I Measure My Love to Show You" (1 text, with unusual verses but the "For we have gained the day" chorus)
- Henry-SongsSungInTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 243, (no title) (1 fragment, probably this)
- Bush-FSoICentralWestVirginiaVol4, pp. 22-23, "In And Out the Window" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Spurgeon-WaltzTheHall-AmericanPlayParty, p. 105, "Go In and Out the Window"; pp. 209-210, "We're Marching 'Round the Levee" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
- Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices, p. 52, "We're Marching Round the Level" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Killion/Waller-ATreasuryOfGeorgiaFolklore, pp. 220-222, "Marching 'Round the Level" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads, p. 103, "Go Round and Round the Village" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 9-10, "Go In and Out the Windows" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Fuson-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands, p. 175, "Go Out and Meet Your Lover" (1 text)
- Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 47-48, "Go In and Out the Windows" (1 text, 1 tune)=Wolford/Richmond/Tillson-PlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 171-172, "Go In and Out the Window" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore, pp. 216-217, "Marching 'Round the Levee" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Abernethy-SinginTexas, pp. 92-93, "Marching Round the Levee" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Neely/Spargo-TalesAndSongsOfSouthernIllinois, p. 204, "Marching Round the Levee" (1 text)
- Chase-AmericanFolkTalesAndSongs, pp. 191-193, "We're Marchin' Round the Levee" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Leyden-BelfastCityOfSong 22, "Round About the Ladies" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Gardham-EastRidingSongster 6, pp. 10, 43, "Mr. Noah" (4 texts, 1 tune, all to the tune of "Go In and Out the Window"); the first text, on p. 10, has an "Old Uncle Noah" first verse and a "Go In and Out the Window" second verse but is given its own Roud number, #1405. the (A) text on p. 43, "Marry's Grandma," is a fragment that does not seem to occur elsewhere; (B) on p. 43 mixes verses about a lunatic asylum with "in and out the window" lines and is also unique; its Roud number is #1410. The final lyric on p. 43, (C), is a fairly normal "Go In and Out the Window" variant
- Greig/Duncan8 1615, "Out and In at the Windows" (2 texts, 1 tune)
- Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 34, "(In and out the windows)," "(Walking round the village)," "(In and out the windows)" (3 texts)

ADDITIONAL: Olive Lewin, "Rock It Come Over" - The Folk Music of Jamaica (Barbados: The University of the West Indies Press, 2000), p. 69, "In an' Out the Windah" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST R538 (Full)
Roud #4320

RECORDINGS:
- Kelly Harrell, "Cave Love Has Gained the Day" (Victor 23649, 1929; on KHarrell02)
- Louise Massey & the Westerners, "Go In and Out the Window" (Vocalion 05361, 1939)
- Pete Seeger, "Go In and Out the Window" (on PeteSeeger21)

SAME TUNE:
Yes! And We Can Do It! (File: BrPa035)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Go Round and Round the Valley
Round and Round the Village
Marching Round the Valley

NOTES [127 words]: Chase-AmericanFolkTalesAndSongs explains, "'Levee' here has no connection with flood control! It must mean a morning party or reception. (See Webster.) Such levees were held during the War Between the States to celebrate victories... 'For we have gained the day.'"

Maybe this explains why I've never heard the "levee" verses in the north. But the notes in Brown claim "Levee" is an error for "Valley."

Harrell's recording gained its odd name by studio incompetence. He sang the chorus as "Caze [= 'Cause] love has gained the day." The studio people couldn't figure out "Caze," and interpreted it as "Cave"!

It appears that the "Go In and Out the Window" title is rare in tradition. But that's the first verse of the song as I learned it in my youth, so there. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0
File: R538

Go in the Wilderness

DESCRIPTION: "If you want to go to heaven/go in the wilderness (3x)/...and wait upon the Lord."
"If you want to see Jesus..." "Lord, my feet looked new when I come out the wilderness..." [secular playparty version:] "First little lady go in the wilderness..."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (W. F. Allen, Slave Songs of the United States)

KEYWORDS: nonballad religious playparty Jesus

FOUND IN: US(SE,So) West Indies(Bahamas)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 14, "Go in the Wilderness" (1 text, 1 tune)
Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, pp. 208-209, "Leanin' on de Lord (Ef You Want To See Jesus)" (1 text, 1 tune; pp. 184-185 in the 1874 edition)
Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories 23, "Come Out the Wilderness" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #11846

RECORDINGS:
Famous Blue Jay Singers, "I'm Leaning on the Lord" (Paramount 13119/Crown 3329, 1932; Champion 50056, c. 1935; Decca 7446, 1938; on Babylon)
Edwards' Luling Dixie Singers, "How Did You Feel When You Came Out of the Wilderness" (1999, on "Field Recordings Vol. 14 Texas, Alabama, Tennessee, Georgia, Kentucky (1934-c.1950)," Document DOCD-5630)
Gullah Kinfolk, "Cum Out De Weederness" (on USSeaIsland04)
James Garfield Smalls, "Pitch It Right/Go in de Wilderness" (on USSeaIsland03)
Providence Missionary Baptist Church, "How Did You Feel When You Come Out of the Wilderness" (on USMississippi01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Old Gray Mare (I) (The Old Gray Horse; The Little Black Bull)" (tune, structure)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
I Wait Upon the Lord
How Did You Feel When You Came Out of the Wilderness?
Ain't I Glad I Got Out of the Wilderness

NOTES [74 words]: This is the song which is ancestral to "The Old Gray Mare (I) (The Old Gray Horse; The Little Black Bull)" and its kin. - PJS

Or. at least. an early member of the family. The editors suggest that the earliest version known, that of Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, might be descended from "Ain't I Glad I Got Out of the Wilderness," which they call a Methodist hymn (though it seems to have long since gone
Go In, You Big Bumblebee

DESCRIPTION: "Go in, you big bumblebee, You couldn't catch a flea."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)

KEYWORDS: playparty bug

FOUND IN: New Zealand

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 131, "(Go in, you big bumble bee)" (1 text)

File: SuSM138D

Go Mary and Toll the Bell

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Go Mary and toll the bell, Come John and call the roll, I thank God."
Verses: "Who is that coming dressed in white (red, blue, black), They must be the children of the Israelite (Moses led, coming through), mourners turning back), I thank God."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute)

KEYWORDS: nonballad religious floatingverses

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, p. 153, "Go, Mary, an' Toll de Bell" (1 text, 1 tune; p. 113 in the 1901 edition)

ADDITIONAL: Howard W. Odum, Religious Folk-Songs of the Southern Negroes, (reprint from American Journal of Religious Psychology and Education, July 1909, Vol.3 pp. 265-365 "Digitized by Internet Archive"), p. 95, ("Go, Mary, an' ring de bell") (1 fragment)

Roud #15231

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Go Tell It on the Mountain (I -- Christmas)" (lyrics, some versions)

File: Dett153

Go On Deacon and Get Your Crown

DESCRIPTION: "Go on, deacon, and get your crown (x3), The house of the Lord I'm bound for. My soul is bound for glory, yes, Lord, glory (x2), That's what Satan is a-grumbling about."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Killion/Waller-ATreasuryOfGeorgiaFolklore)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Killion/Waller-ATreasuryOfGeorgiaFolklore, p. 248, "Go On Deacon and Get Your Crown" (1 short text)

Roud #18165

File: KiWa238G

Go Over to Ireland

DESCRIPTION: "Go over to Ireland, and there you may see, How all dirty and ragged the Irish they be. A two-legged stool, and a table to match, And a string on the door, to lift the latch." The singer describes the dirt and vermin that infest the typical Irish home

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1949 (Nestler)

KEYWORDS: Ireland bug hardtimes
Go Personate Some Noble Lord

DESCRIPTION: A woman tells her lover to "personate some noble lord." He plays cards with the father and the daughter tips her lover to her father's cards. The father loses everything and the lover offers to trade his winnings for the daughter. The lord smiles.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan5)

KEYWORDS: courting disguise trick gambling cards father

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan5 1017, "Go Personate Some Noble Lord" (1 text)

Roud #6721

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "South Coast" (plot elements)

File: GrD1017

Go Preach My Gospel

DESCRIPTION: "Go preach my gospel, saith the Lord, Bid the whole world my grace receive, Ye shall be saved to trust my way and ye condemn who won't believe, Teach all the nations my commands, I'm with you till the world shall end."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1968 (NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Roud #10962

NOTES [8 words]: An abbreviated paraphrase of Matthew 28:19-20. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: NCF162GP

Go Round the Mountain

DESCRIPTION: "Go round this mountain, two by two (x3), Rise up, sugar, rise."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1962 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)

KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5, pp. 530-531, "Go Round the Mountain" (1 short text, 1 tune)

Roud #21191

NOTES [15 words]: The description is based on the Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 fragmet. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.1

File: BrS5530
Go Slow, Boys (Banjo Pickin')

DESCRIPTION: "Go slow, boys, don't make no noise, For old Massa's sleepin'. Go down to the barnyard an' wake up the boys, An' let's have a little banjo pickin'. For oh, it's almost mornin', Don't you hear the old cock crowin'?" The slaves (?) sneak off to a dance

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928
KEYWORDS: music slavery
FOUND IN: US(SE,So)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
  Randolph 278, "Go Slow, Boys" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 427, "Have a Little Banjo Beating" (1 text); also probably 118, "Hush, Honey, Hush" (1 fragment)
  Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 427, "Have a Little Banjo Beatin" (1 tune plus a text excerpt)
  Roud #7783
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Banjo Picking
File: R278

Go Tell Aunt Rhody

DESCRIPTION: "Go tell Aunt (Rhody) (x3) The old gray goose is dead. The one she'd been saving (x3) to make a feather bed." The cause of death varies; "a pain in the head"; "somebody... knocked it on the head"; "from standing on its head"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1918 (Cecil Sharp collection); +1913 (JAFL26)
KEYWORDS: bird death mourning
FOUND IN: US(MW,NE,SE,So)
REFERENCES (24 citations):
  Randolph 270, "Go Tell Aunt Rhody" (2 texts plus 2 excerpts, 1 tune)
  Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 230-231, "Go Tell Aunt Rhody" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 270A)
  Abrahams/Riddle-ASingerAndHerSongs, pp. 118-120, "Go Tell Aunt Nancy" (1 text, 1 tune, with an "Aunt Rhody" opening but an ending that might be from The Grey Goose)
  Owens-TexasFolkSongs-1ed, pp. 262-263, "Old Gray Goose" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 128, "Go Tell Aunt Patsy" (1 text)
  Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 128, "Go Tell Aunt Patsy" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Killion/Waller-ATreasuryOfGeorgiaFolklore, p. 256, "Aunt Tabby" (1 text)
  Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 8, (no title, but the goose's owner is Aunt Patsy) (1 text); pp. 195-196, "Go Tell Aunt Tabby" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 236, "The Old Grey Goose" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol1, pp. 87-88, "Aunt Rhody" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 193, "Aunt Tabbie" (1 text plus an excerpt)
  List-SingingAboutIt-FolkSongsInSouthernIndiana, pp. 56-58, "Go Tell Aunt Rhody" (1 text, 1 tune, plus a shape note reprint of a hymn with part of the same melody)
  Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp. 257, "The Old Grey Goose" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, p. 207, "Go Tell Aunt Rhody" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Trent-Johns-PlaySongsOfTheDeepSouth, pp. 30-31, "Run, Tell Aunt Nancy" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Lomax/Lomax-FolkSongUSA 3, "Go Tell Aunt Nancy" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 305-306, "The Old Gray Goose" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Warner-FolkSongsAndBalladsOfTheEasternSeaboard, p. 46, "Go Tell Aunt Rhody" (1 text)
  Arnett-IHearAmericaSinging, p. 39, "Go Tell Aunt Rhody" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Chase-AmericanFolkTalesAndSongs, pp. 176-177, "The Old Gray Goose is Dead" (1 text, 2 tunes)
  Seeger-AmericanFavoriteBallads, p. 45, "Go Tell Aunt Rhody" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 275, "Go Tell Aunt Rhody" (1 text)
  Silber/Silber-FolkSingersWordbook, p. 404, "Aunt Rhody" (1 text)

DT, AUNTRODY
Roud #3346
RECORDINGS:
Go Tell It on the Mountain (I -- Christmas)

DESCRIPTION: "Go tell it on the mountain, Over the hills and everywhere, Go tell it on the mountain That Jesus Christ is born." The singer describes the revelation of Jesus's birth to the shepherds and notes how God "made me a watchman"

AUTHOR: unknown (the version found in most hymnals was rewritten by John Weley Work II)

EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Fisk Jubilee Singers repertoire)

KEYWORDS: religious Christmas Jesus

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, pp. 78, App.III, "Go Tell It on de Mountain" (2 texts, 2 tunes; p. 174 in the 1909 edition)
Warren-EveryTimeIFeelTheSpirit, pp. 43-44, "Go, Tell It on the Mountain" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 381, "Go Tell It On The Mountain" (1 text)
DT, GOTEMLT*

ADDITIONAL: Ian Bradley, _The Penguin Book of Carols_ (1999), #25, "Go, Tell It on the Mountain" (1 text)

RECORDINGS:
Elizabeth Bivens, "Go Tell It On The Mountain" (on HandMeDown2)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
Go Tell It on the Mountain (II -- Freedom)

DESCRIPTION: "Go tell it on the mountain, Over the hills and everywhere, Go tell it on the mountain To let my people go." The singer describes the people, clothed in various colors, coming out of bondage

AUTHOR: unknown (but the new lyrics have been attributed to Fannie Lou Hamer)

EARLIEST DATE: 1963 (recorded by Fannie Lou Hamer)

KEYWORDS: religious freedom nonballad travel

FOUND IN: US West Indies (Jamaica)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
DT, GOTELMT2

RECORDINGS:
Fannie Lou Hamer, "Go Tell It on the Mountain" (on Voices Civ)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Go Tell It on the Mountain (I -- Christmas)"
cf. "Jesus Setta Me Free" (lyrics)

NOTES [79 words]: The "freedom" adaptation of "Go Tell It on the Mountain" came out of the civil rights movement of the early 1960s. I list "Jamaica" as a location in the "FOUND IN" field because ta variant ("set my people free") of this version was recorded by Bob Marley long before he became an internationally-known star, when reggae was still arguably an indigenous folk style. Does this qualify within the "folk tradition"? Eyes of the beholder, perhaps, but I wanted the fact noted. - PJS

Last updated in version 5.0

File: DTgotelm

Go to Berwick, Johnny

DESCRIPTION: "Go, go, go, Go to Berwick, Johnny, You shall have the horse, I shall have the pony."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1794 (Ritson, according to Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes)

KEYWORDS: animal travel

FOUND IN: Britain (Scotland (Aber))

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Greig/Duncan8 1689, "Busk and Go to Berwick, Johnnie" (1 text)
Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 281, "Ride Away, Ride Away, Johnny Shall Ride" (3 texts)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 571, "Go to Berwick Johnnie" (2 texts)
Montgomerie/Montgomerie-ScottishNurseryRhymes 9, "(Go, go, go)" (1 fragment)

Roud #8693

NOTES [141 words]: Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes: "Denham (1858) says that the Scottish version [of ("Ride away, ride, away, Johnny shall ride")], in which Johnny rides to Berwick, is a fragment of the 'good old border song "Go to Berwick, Johnny"'. ("Ride away, ride, away, Johnny shall ride") is a nursery rhyme version.

Whitelaw: "The old tune of 'Go to Berwick, Johnnie,' is usually sung to a nursery doggerel [sic] beginning "Go, go, go...." Then he prints two verses from Johnson's Museum "said to have been partly written by John Hamilton" about a raid across the border to bring back an English "bonnie lassie." The Greig/Duncan8 text, and one of the Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes texts seem somewhere between "nursery doggerel" and border raid song. I can't decide how to split the texts so I am lumping everything together here. - BS

Last updated in version 3.2

File: MSNR009
Go to Helen Hunt for It

DESCRIPTION: "Miss Helen Hunt knows all the spooks, And calls them out of dusty nooks." In case of uncertainty or loss, one is advised to turn to Miss Hunt. The song concludes when "Spain wanted money very bad." Spain had to "go to hell and hunt for it."

AUTHOR: Harry Connor?
EARLIEST DATE: 1898? (Copyright listed on undated sheet music)
KEYWORDS: political magic war
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1898 -- Spanish-American War
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Randolph 502, "Go to Helen Hunt for It" (1 text)
Roud #7641
NOTES [80 words]: The final verse of this song, which reveals the true reading of the name "Helen Hunt," refers clearly to the Spanish-American War. Spain, faced with insurrection in Cuba, tried to get international support, and failed. Isolated, Spain could not give in to American demands fast enough, and the U.S. went to war -- with disastrous results for Spain. Meanwhile, the American press has utterly besmirched the Spanish reputation, leading to scornful remarks such as those found here. - RBW

File: R502

Go To Saint Pether

DESCRIPTION: The singer orders that news be carried to "Saint Pether" (i.e. the Papacy) of the troubles facing the Catholic cause. The Pope is distressed to hear that his armies are defeated. Mary of Hungary calls for "liquor to temper me pain."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio)
KEYWORDS: battle religious
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 149, "Go to Saint Pether" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST E149 (Full)
Roud #5346
NOTES [234 words]: This is truly a difficult song to figure out, because so few details survive in the text. The one seemingly-identifiable figure is Mary of Hungary. The most notable woman of that name and title is Mary of Hungary and Bohemia (1505-1558), the sister of the Holy Roman Emperor Charles V and the wife of Louis II of Hungary.
In 1531, Mary was appointed regent of the Low Countries by Charles V. Charles was becoming involved in his great wars against Protestantism (this is, of course, shortly after Luther began his revolt, and the period in which Calvin was forming his opinions). That being the case, Mary of Hungary was involved in the persecution of Protestants. But they were Dutch Protestants, and for the most part she kept them under control. Thus it is hard to see how this song, presumably of English or Irish origin, could refer to her.
Another possibility occurring to me is that this song describes the Catholic distress after the defeat at the Battle of the Boyne (July 11, 1690). Catholics supported the former King James II (reigned 1685-1688/9) against the protestant William III of Orange, but were defeated. It may be that "Mary of Hungary" is Mary of Modena, James II's second wife, who bore him his son James the Old Pretender (it was the birth of this child that led to the Glorious Revolution of 1688; the nobility was not prepared to allow James to raise his son as a Catholic). - RBW

File: E149

Go to Sleep, My Little Pickaninny

DESCRIPTION: The "little Alabama coon" is told, "Go to sleep, my little pickaninny, Brother Fox will catch you if you don't...." Fuller forms may describe the child's life and ambitions for when he grows up.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Brown)
Go Wash in That Beautiful Pool

DESCRIPTION: "Go wash in that beautiful pool (x2). The rivers of life flow freely for all. Go wash in that beautiful pool." "My father passed over the river, Is now in the kingdom above. He's safe where the angels all dwell, Go wash...." "My mother passed over...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (McNeil-SouthernMountainFolksong)
KEYWORDS: religious father mother death nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE,So)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Jones-MinstrelOfTheAppalachians-Bascom-Lamar-Lunsford, p. 224, "Go Wash in That Beautiful Pool" (1 text, 1 tune)
McNeil-SouthernMountainFolksong, pp. 109-111, "Go Wash in That Beautiful Pool" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7875
NOTES [50 words]: Roud lumps this with "Go Wash in that Beautiful Stream," but I really don't see it. "Beautiful Stream" is about Naaman the Syrian in the Hebrew Bible. The Beautiful Pool, if it refers to anything, is from the New Testament. The forms of the text are similar, but there is nothing unusual about that! - RBW
Last updated in version 4.2
File: JoLun224

Go Wash in the Beautiful Stream

DESCRIPTION: "Go wash in the beautiful stream, Go wash in the beautiful stream, Oh, Naaman, oh, Naaman, Go down and wash, Go wash in the beautiful stream."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Chappell)
KEYWORDS: religious Bible river
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 575, "Go Wash in the Beautiful Stream" (1 fragment)
Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 97, "O Naaman" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #7875
NOTES [119 words]: An allusion to 2 King 5. Naaman, a soldier of Damascus, comes to Israel seeking a cure for his leprosy. He is eventually referred to the prophet Elisha. Elisha tells him to wash himself in the Jordan. Naaman argues, asking why he can't wash in the rivers of Damascus, but eventually does as he's told and is cured.
Naaman did have something of a point: The Jordan valley is not "beautiful"; it is drab, dusty, and very, very hot.
Roud lumps this with "Go Wash in that Beautiful Pool," but I really don't see it. This is about Naaman the Syrian in the Hebrew Bible. The Beautiful Pool, if it refers to anything, is from the New Testament. The forms of the text are similar, but there is nothing unusual about that! - RBW
Last updated in version 4.0
File: Br3575
Go Your Bond

DESCRIPTION: "You gonna need somebody on your bond (x2), When your room gets darn and death comes creepin' down, You gonna need somebody...." "Well, I got somebody on my bond (x2), When your room gets dark...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (Hutson/Pinckney/Rutledge-SomeSongsTheNegroSang)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious death
FOUND IN: US(SE,So)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Arnold-FolkSongsOfAlabama, p. 175, "Go Your Bond" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Hutson/Pinckney/Rutledge-SomeSongsTheNegroSang, pp. 254-255, "Wan' King Jedus Stan' My Bon'" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #16306
File: Arno175

Go-d'ling

DESCRIPTION: "Go-d'ling, go'dling ... link-i-bum .... Link-i-bum and a merry go too ... There are no more than thirty-two"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest)
KEYWORDS: nonballad nonsense riddle
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 194, "Go-d'ling" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #17754
NOTES [33 words]: Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest: "I.N. Taber... sang this riddle.... '... When she [Aunt Mary Daves] completed the song, I had thirty-two counts. And that's the answer to the riddle.'" - BS
Last updated in version 3.3
File: MooSW194

Goat's Will, The

DESCRIPTION: "Concerning a battle.. Between Larry's black goat and brave Mary McCloy." The goat, tethered outside its proper territory, will die to make amends. It makes its will (e.g. giving its teeth to a man who has none), curses McCloy, and bids farewell

AUTHOR: Hugh McCann (1869?)
EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: animal death lastwill
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H119, p. 21, "The Goat's Will" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13343
File: HHH119

Goathland Fox Hunt, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer invites "all you brave sportsmen ... for a day of hunting ... In Goathland parish." Some huntsmen are named.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1891 (Kidson-TraditionalTunes)
KEYWORDS: hunting animal moniker
FOUND IN: Britain(England(North))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Kidson-TraditionalTunes, p. 138, "The Goathland Fox Hunt" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
File: KiTu138
God Be With You

DESCRIPTION: "Till we meet (x3) At Jesus' feet, Till we meet." "Till we meet (x2), God be with you till we meet again."

AUTHOR: J. E. Rankin / Music: W. G. Tomer (source: Date; Heart-Songs)

EARLIEST DATE: 1898 (Date)

KEYWORDS: nonballad religious

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Heart-Songs, p. 507, "God Be With You" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Henry Date, Pentecostal Hymns Nos. 1 and 2 Combined (Chicago: Hope Publishing Company, 1898 (“Digitized by Internet Archive”)), #304 p. 220, "God Be With You" (1 text, 1 tune)

RECORDINGS:
Rosa and Joseph Murray, "Till We Meet Again" (on USSealsIsland03)

NOTES [86 words]: According to Rosa and Joseph Murray, "God Be With You" closes the prayer service. - BS

According to John Julian, editor, A Dictionary of Hymnology, 1892; second edition 1907 (I use the 1957 Dover edition in two volumes), pp. 951-952, Jeremiah Eames Rankin (1828-1904) in 1878 edited the Gospel Temperance Hymnal; a later book was Gospel Bells. Some poems had appeared earlier, in Songs of New Life (1869). He is said to have been best known for "Labouring and Heavy Laden" and "Rest, Rest, Brother, Rest." - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0
File: RcGBeWYu

God Be With You Davy

DESCRIPTION: Singer says "God be with you Davy. I had you for Christmas and I had you for Easter. And now I haven't your ould breeches thrown up in the tayster."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)

KEYWORDS: nonballad clothes

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 63, "God Be With You Davy" (1 text)

Roud #16245

NOTES [14 words]: The current description is all the OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin text. - BS

Last updated in version 3.2
File: OCC063

God Bless the Master of this House

DESCRIPTION: "God bless the master of this house with a gold chain round his neck, O where his body sleeps or wakes, Lord send his soul to rest." The listener is reminded of Christ's crucifixion, death, and redeeming blood. (A New Year's blessing is given.)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1955 (recording, Frank Bond)

KEYWORDS: religious Jesus nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Copper-SongsAndSouthernBreezes, pp. 272-273, "God Bless the Master of this House" (1 text, 1 tune)
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #35, "God Bless the Master" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #1066

RECORDINGS:
Frank Bond, "God Bless the Master Of this House" (on Voice16)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Bellman's Song (The Moon Shone Bright)" (lyrics)

NOTES [37 words]: This piece shares many of its words with "The Moon Shone Bright," and the general sense of the piece is very similar. But the tune and stanza form are different, so -- barring a "missing link" -- I list them separately. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.2

God Dawg My Lousy Soul

DESCRIPTION: "God dawg my lousy soul (x2), I'm goin' down the river And I couldn't git cross, God dawg..." Bluesy song; only the third and fourth lines change, e.g. "She put me in the bed And she covered up my head," "I'm goin' to Missouri To git me another dame"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1944 (Wheeler)
KEYWORDS: work love nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Wheeler-SteamboatinDays, p. 25-26, "God Dawg My Lousy Soul" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #10002

NOTES [39 words]: Yes, you know and I know what the title of the song should really be. But it's not clear whether Wheeler or her informant (Uncle Tom Wall) cleaned it up. If the latter, it's possible that it circulated in tradition in this form. - RBW

God Don't Like It

DESCRIPTION: A warning against drink: "Well, God don't like it, no, no!... It's a-scandalous and a shame!" "Some people stay in the churches... They drinkin' beer and whisky, And they say that they don't care."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Pearson Funeral Home Choir, according to Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry)
KEYWORDS: religious drink nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 28-30, "God Don't Like It" (1 text, 1 tune)
Courlander-NegroFolkMusic, pp. 73-74, "(God Don't Like It)" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Harold Courlander, _A Treasury of Afro-American Folklore_, Crown Publishers, 1976, pp. 338-339, "(God Don't Like It)" (1 text)
Roud #15642

God Got Plenty o' Room

DESCRIPTION: "God got plenty o' room, got plenty o' room. 'Way in the kingdom, God got plenty o' room my Jesus say." "So many weeks and days have passed, Since we met together last."
"Daniel's wisdom I may know." "We soon shall lay our school-books by."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 106, "God Got Plenty o' Room" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #12062

NOTES [119 words]: This song has more scriptural references than almost anything in Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, though the references are often rather loose. The reference to God having "room" is clearly to John 14:2, "In my father's house are many mansions (KJV) or "In my Father's mansion are many rooms" (variously rendered in the modern versions).
Jacob's Ladder is in Genesis 28:12, and though Jacob is not said to have prayed there, he did make a vow there in Genesis 28:20.
"Daniel's wisdom" -- there are several references to this; perhaps the most explicit is in Daniel 2, where Daniel is lumped with the Wise Men of Babylon, and perhaps 5:11-12. Stepehn's faith and spirit are described in Acts 7:55-60.
- RBW

Last updated in version 2.4

File: AWG106

---

God Help Kaiser Bill

DESCRIPTION: "Uncle Sammy, he's got the artillery, He's got the cavalry, He'd got the infantry., But when, by God, we all get to Germany, God help Kaiser Bill." Rest of song is variations on these lines

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Niles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe)

KEYWORDS: war soldier travel nonballad royalty

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Niles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe, p. 167, "(no title)" (1 text, tune referenced)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Ki-Wi Song" (tune, lyrics)

File: NiMo167

---

God Is at de Pulpit

DESCRIPTION: "God is at de pulpit, God is at de do', GOd is always over me, While He is in de middle of de flo'. God is a God, GÔd don't neber change, 'Cause He always will be king."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 568, "God Is at de Pulpit" (1 short text)

Roud #11888

File: Br3568

---

God Moves in a Mysterious Way

DESCRIPTION: "God moves in a mysterious way, His wonders to perform, He plants his footsteps on the sea (x2), And rides upon the storm (x3)." "Ye fearful saints fresh courage take. "Judge not the Lord by feeble sense." "Blind unbelief is sure to err."

AUTHOR: Words: William Cowper (1731-1800)

EARLIEST DATE: 1774 (Newton, Twenty-four Letters on Mysterious Subjects)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad storm

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection, p. 101, "God Moves in a Mysterious Way" (1 text)

NOTES [403 words]: According to John Julian, editor, A Dictionary of Hymnology, 1892; second edition 1907 (I use the 1957 Dover edition in two volumes), p. 265, "The leading events in the life of Cowper are: b[orn] in his father's rectory, Berkhampstead, Nov. 26, 1731; educated at Westminster; called to the Bar, 1754; madness, 1763; residence at Huntingdon, 1765; removal to Olney, 1768; to Weston, 1786; to East Dereham, 1795; death there, April 25, 1800."

It was a life marked by wild changes in mood. The "madness" mentioned above included three suicide attempts, "with laudanum, knife, and cord," and he developed an extreme belief in his guilt before God. It was in the aftermath of this that he met John Newton, the hymnwriter based at Olney. But in 1773, he suffered another bout of depression. He recovered again, and was able to work with Newton to publish Olney Hymns in 1779 and also Poems by William Cowper in 1782. Cowper clearly suffered from either major depressive disorder or bipolar II disorder; on the whole, I suspect the latter. Nor am I alone in this; after I wrote the above, I found on p. 64 of Kay Redfield Jamison, Touched with Fire: Manic-Depressive Illness and the Artistic Temperament, 1993 (I use the 1994 Free Press paperback edition) a table marking him as one of many great eighteenth century poets with bipolar disorder; her summary of his case is "Recurrent psychotic melancholia and repeated suicide attempts. Delusions and hallucinations. First signs of mental instability while in his twenties, confined to asylum in his early thirties. Family history of melancholia."

Julian, p. 433, reports of this song. "The commonly accepted history of this hymn is that it was composed by Cowper in 1773, after an attempt to commit suicide in the Ouse at Olney." But after sifting the evidence, Julian concludes, "To our mind it is evident that Cowper must have written this hymn, either early in 1773, before his insanity became so intense as to lead him to attempt suicide in October of that year, or else in April of 1774, when "he used to compose lines descriptive of his own unhappy state.' Of these date the latter is the more probable of the two."

The Olney Hymns is regarded as one of the greatest hymn collections; in this collection, Cowper is responsible for "God Moves in a Mysterious Way" and "There Is a Fountain Filled with Blood"; he also wrote "Oh! for a closer walk with God." - RBW

God Rest You Merry, Gentlemen

DESCRIPTION: "God rest you merry, gentlemen. Let nothing you dismay, Remember Christ our savior Was born on Christmas day... Oh tidings of comfort and joy." The birth of Jesus is recounted and listeners urged to sing praise and rejoice in the new year

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1820 ("A Political Christmas Carol" is an undeniable parody of this piece)

KEYWORDS: religious carol Christmas Jesus nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond,South)) Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (11 citations):
- Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 581, "God Rest You, Merry Gentlemen" (1 text)
- Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 106, "God Bless you Merry Gentlement" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Rickert-AncientEnglishChristmasCarols, pp. 105-107, "God Rest You Merry, Gentlemen" (1 text)
- Cox-FolkMusicInANewfoundlandOutport, pp. 92-93, "God Bless You Merry Gentlemen" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Dearmer/VaughnWilliams/Shaw-OxfordBookOfCarols 11, "God Rest You Merry"; 12, "God Rest You Merry" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
- Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #219, "God Rest You Merry, Gentlemen" (1 text)
- Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 260, "God Rest You Merry, Gentlemen" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 378, "God Rest You Merry Gentlemen" (1 text)
- Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, p. 249, "God Rest You Merry, Gentlemen"
- DT, GODREST*

ADDITIONAL: Ian Bradley, The Penguin Book of Carols (1999), #26, "God Rest You Merry, Gentlemen" (1 text)

Roud #394

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Somerset Carol"

SAME TUNE:

NOTES [214 words]: Although this song is often sung in America as if punctuated, "God rest you, merry gentlemen" (and, indeed, at least one of my old hymnals, The Parish School Hymnal of 1926, writes it that way), there is agreement that the correct reading is "God rest you merry, gentlemen." The gentlemen are being wished merriment, not being called merry.

Bradley in the Penguin Book of Carols notes several other problems with the song: sexist language, non-Biblical details (common in traditional carols, of course), and the bad theology that "this holy tide of Christmas all others doth deface." I'm not sure I buy that last one -- yes, the essence of the Christian message is the Atonement, which is celebrated in Good Friday and Easter. But Christmas celebrates the "beginning" of the Incarnation, so surely it would be more important than any day in the calendar except Good Friday, Easter, and maybe Ascension Sunday. So Christmas would seem to deface at least 99% of other days. Good enough for ordinary engineering purposes.

Bradley notes that this song seems to have been sung to several tunes in its early years. The common tune (the so-called "London Tune") was collected by Rimbault in 1846 and seemingly first printed in connection with these words by Bramley and Stainer in 1871. - RBW
God Save Ireland

DESCRIPTION: "High upon the gallows tree swung the noble-hearted three, By the vengeful tyrants stricken in their bloom." The three declare, "God Save Ireland" as they prepare to die, and say that their deaths don't matter. Listeners are encouraged to remember

AUTHOR: Timothy Daniel Sullivan (1827-1914)

EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (_The Nation_ Dec 7, 1867, according to Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)

KEYWORDS: Ireland rebellion execution

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1867 - Imprisonment of the Fenian leaders Kelly and Deasy, and the bungled rescue

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (7 citations):
Galvin-IrishSongsOfResistance, pp. 83-84, "God Save Ireland" (1 text, 1 tune)
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 74, "God Save Ireland" (1 text, 1 tune)
Healy-MercierBookOfOldIrishStreetBalladsVol2, pp. 137-138, "God Save Ireland" (1 text)
Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, pp. 144-145, "God Save Ireland" (1 text)
DT, GSAVILD*

ADDITIONAL: Kathleen Hoagland, editor, One Thousand Years of Irish Poetry (New York, 1947), pp. 522-523, "God Save Ireland" (1 text)
H. Halliday Sparling, Irish Minstrelsy (London, 1888), pp. 9-10, 508, "God Save Ireland"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Tramp! Tramp! Tramp!" (tune) and reference there
cf. "The Smashing of the Van (I)" (subject: The Manchester Martyrs)
cf. "Allen, Larkin and O'Brien" (subject: The Manchester Martyrs)
cf. "The Manchester Martyrs" (subject: The Manchester Martyrs)

NOTES [83 words]: Edward Condon was one of five men tried in 1867 for the death of Charles Brett. (For this incident and the story of the "Manchester Martyrs," see the notes to The Smashing of the Van.) One of those on trial was not connected to the crime. Three others were sentenced to death. Condon was allowed to live.

At the end of his trial, Condon cried out "God save Ireland." It became a Fenian slogan.

Sullivan is the author of a number of Irish patriotic poems, of which this is probably the best-known.

- RBW

God Save the King (God Save the Queen, etc.)

DESCRIPTION: Good wishes for the King of England: "God save (our Lord, or any monarch's name) the King, Long live our noble king, God save the King. Send him victorious, Happy and glorious, Long to reign over us, God save the King." Other verses equally insipid

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: c. 1744 ("Harmonia Anglicana")

KEYWORDS: royalty political nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(England)

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Chappell/Wooldridge-OldEnglishPopularMusic II, pp. 194-200, "God Save the King" (1 tune plus variants, 1 partial text)
Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel, p. 244, "God Save the Queen" (1 text)
Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 208, "God Save the King" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, pp. 249-251+, "God Save the King"
Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #18, "God Save the King" (1 text)
DT, GODSAVE*

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "America (My Country 'Tis of Thee)" (tune) and Same Tune references there for versions based on that text rather than this

SAME TUNE:
Heil Dir in Siegerkranz
America (My Country 'Tis of Thee) (File: RJ19006)
South Carolina, A Patriotic Ode (File: CAFS1298)
My Country (Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, pp. 88-89)
God Save the King (The King He Had a Date) (Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 115)
My Country's Tired of Me (Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 159)
Can Opener, 'Tis of Thee (Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 159)
Our Land Is Free (celebrating the end of transportation to Van Diemen's Land) (Robert Hughes, _The Fatal Shore_, p. 572)
God Save the Rights of Man (1798 Irish revolutionary song) (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 128; mentioned in Thomas Pakenham, _The Year of Liberty_, p. 193)
God Save America (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 78)
His Excellency George Washington ("From the Americ shore, The vast Atlantic o'er, Shout -- 'Washington!'") (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 92)
(Washington songs) ("Americans rejoice, While songs employ each voice" and "Hail Godlike Washington! Fair Freedom's chosen son") (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 96); Ode to be sung on the Arrival of the President of the United States ("Hail thou auspicious day! Far let America Thy praise resound") (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 117)
Ode ("Now let rich Musick sound And all the Region round With Rapture fill") (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 97)
Ode for the Fourth of July ("Come all ye sons of song, Pour the full sound along") (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 128; Rabson-SongbookOfTheAmericanRevolution, pp. 74-75)
Closing Ode ("Patrons, with dignity, The basic industry") (by A. P. Knapp) (Albert P. Knapp, _Grange Songster_, 1915, p. 3)

NOTES [584 words]: This, obviously, has never been a true popular or traditional tune. But, given the number of songs derived from it, as well as the parodies (e.g. "The King he had a date, He stayed out very late, He was the King. The Queen she paced the floor, She paced till half past four, She met him at the door, God save the King"), it seems to me that it belongs here.

Fuld tells an interesting anecdote showing that this was once a political song. As first printed, the opening line read "God save our Lord the King." When Bonnie Prince Charlie landed in 1745, this was hastily amended to "God Save great GEORGE our King" -- with "George" printed in large type. Nettel, p. 136, says it was taken up at that time by companies at Drury Lane and Covent Garden, and hence became popular with the public.

Prior to its adoption in Georgian times, the English used "The Roast Beef of Old England" as their anthem.

Julian devotes more than three large pages of small type to the origin of the song: "The origin and authorship of the English national anthem have given rise to much controversy, and many theories respecting them have been advanced, often demonstrating little save the writers' misapprehension of the points really at issue" (p. 437). In the appendix on p. 1566, he prints many stanzas of verses which were written as the song evolved toward its current form(s), with first lines like "God bless our native land."

Julian lists no fewer than seven claims to the authorship of the tune. 1. A certain Richard Clark attributed it to one Dr. John Bull, who played it for James VI and I in 1607; Julian notes that Clark's book is highly inaccurate. 2. It is derived from Thomas Ravenscroft's "Remember O Thou Man" (the resemblance, sez I, is faint indeed). 3. It is based on a sonata by Purcell (Julian says this resemblance is even fainter). 4. It is said to have been sung for James II c. 1688, but with no source mentioned. 5. It is claimed as a Jacobite composition of some later date. 6. The origin is a French piece made for Louis XIV -- an hypothesis which is highly unlikely, since the French words appear translated from the English. 7. Hen Carey is credited with both words and tune (this is the only hypothesis that is even slightly plausible, but proof is lacking; the song is not found in Carey's collected works, and the claim that he sung it in 1740 was not published until 1796.) Since none of these suggestions is tenable, it appears we must consider the composer to be unknown.

Julian adds that the text found in Harmonia Anglicana, the earliest verifiable version (undated but thought to be from 1743 or 1744) 'is headed 'For two voices,' the air differs slightly from the modern version, and the words consist of two stanzas only.' This was quickly adapted the the "Great GEORGE" version described above, in a score by Arne (Julian, p. 438). Many other modifications and parodies followed.
The phrase "God Save the King" is officially listed as Biblical (1 Sam. 10:24, 1 Kings 1:25, 34, 39, 2 Kings 11:12, 2 Ch. 23:11, etc.). One has to note that this is an inaccurate translation in the King James version, leading to the speculation that the acclamation actually predates the KJV (the navy may have used it around 1545, and the Agincourt Carol, which is more than a century older than that, has a line "Now gracious God he save our kynge"). The Hebrew phrase correctly translates as "let the King live," and so is rendered "Long live the King" in almost all modern Bible translations. - RBW

Bibliography

- Julian: John Julian, editor, A Dictionary of Hymnology, 1892; second edition 1907 (I use the 1957 Dover edition in two volumes)
- Nettel: Reginald Nettel, Seven Centuries of Popular Song, Phoenix House, 1956

Last updated in version 6.0
File: ChWII194

God Speed the Plough

DESCRIPTION: "Here's a health to the farmer and God speed the plough, Send him in his fields a good crop for to grow. "For the farmer indeed is a capital man." They fill the barn with food for the nation. All rejoice, for the "farmer enjoys his life more than a king"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1888 (Sumner)

KEYWORDS: farming food

FOUND IN: Britain(England)

REFERENCES (10 citations):
Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #22, "God Speed the Plough" (1 text, 1 tune)
RELATED: (versions of the song "I-blessed be Christs sonde"/"God Spede the Plowe All Day"/"The merthe of alle this londe")
Sidgwick/Chambers-EarlyEnglishLyrics CXLII, pp. 241-242, "(no title)" (1 text)
Brown/Robbins-IndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse, #1405.5
DigitalIndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse #2339
Rossell Hope Robbins, _Historical Poems of the XIVth and XVth Century_, Columbia University Press, 1959, #37 pp. 97-98, "God Speed the Plough" (1 text)
E. K. Chambers, _English Literature at the Close of the Middle Ages_, Oxford, 1945, 1947, pp. 95-96 (no title)
MANUSCRIPT: {MSArchSeldenB26}, Oxford, Bodleian Library Arch. Selden B.26, folio 19 (with music)

NOTES [61 words]: The refrain "God Speed the Plough" is very old; the manuscript Bodleian Arch. Selden B.26 is from the fifteenth century. There probably isn't a genetic relationship between that song and this, which is why I don't index the Bodleian piece, but one suspects it achieved proverbial status. Many of the references cited for the Bodleian poem will list other citations. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.3
File: PECS022

God's A-Gwine Ter Move All de Troubles Away

DESCRIPTION: "God's a-gwine ter move all de troubles away (x3), See 'm no more till de comi' day." "Genesis, you understand, Methuselah was the olde's man." "Dere was a man of de Pharisee, His name was Nicodemus and he wouldn't believe."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1919 (Curtis-Burlin-NegroFolkSongs-TheHamptonSeries)

KEYWORDS: religious death age

FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Curtis-Burlin-NegroFolkSongs-TheHamptonSeries (II), pp. 69-81, "God's A-Gwine Ter Move All de Troubles Away" (1 text with variants, 1 tune with variants)
Roud #17443
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Samson and Delilah" (lyrics and theme of the Samson story)
NOTES [181 words]: Methuselah is not explicitly said to be the oldest man in the Bible, but in Genesis 5:27, he is listed in the Hebrew text as living to be 969, which is in fact the greatest age listed for any patriarch. We should note, however, that the ancient Samaritan version says 720. The account of Jesus and Nicodemus is from John 3:1-21. This song follows the mistranslation of the King James Bible, which quotes Jesus as saying people should be "born again" when the clear intent of the Greek is to say they must be "born from above."
The story of Samson is in Judges 13-16, with the story of Samson and Delilah taking up chapter 16. The Biblical account does not say how many he killed -- 14:19 says he killed 30 in Ascalon, in 15:8 he commits a "great slaughter," 15:15-16 says he killed a thousand (exactly?), and at the end of chapter 16 he supposedly killed more than in his entire career up to then, but obviously there is no way to add that up to a particular total except that it must be greater than 2062 (which is twice 1000+3+1), assuming you take all those round numbers seriously. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: CuBu069

God's Own Country
DESCRIPTION: "Give me, give me God's own country (from a spieler's point of view)." The singer lists all the beautiful places of New Zealand -- and how wonderful they are IF you have cash. The country has been leased out to absentee
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1892 (Auckland Star, according to Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ)
KEYWORDS: beauty money New Zealand landlord
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ, pp. 82-83, "God's Own Country" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: BaRo082

God's Radiophone
DESCRIPTION: "One day Nebuchadnezzar constructed an image of gold" and ordered all to worship it, but the Hebrew Children refused, "For they had a connection with heaven on God's wonderful radiophone." The examples of Daniel, Elijah, and Jonah are also cited AUTHOR: Charles C. Mourer ?
EARLIEST DATE: 1966 (Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol1); there was apparently a copyright claim for a song of this name in 1924
KEYWORDS: technology religious rescue
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol1, pp. 13-14, "God's Radiophone" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7118
RECORDINGS:
Wade Mainer, "God's Radio Phone" (King 975)
NOTES [293 words]: The story of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego in Nebuchadnezzar's fiery furnace is told in chapter 3 of the book of Daniel. Interestingly, there is no hint whatsoever that they received any vision or prophetic knowledge before their ordeal; Daniel was a prophet, but the three young men were not.
The story of Daniel in the Lion's Den is in Daniel 6, with the mention of him praying three times a day being in 6:10. Fascinatingly, although Daniel was a prophet, he didn't have any notice about his fate, either. In the Book of Daniel, apparently, you only hear a voice from God when you don't actually need to hear it!
The story of Jonah and the Fish (not in the version recorded by Norman and Nancy Blake) is the subject of the whole book of Jonah. And the Hebrew Bible says explicitly fish, "not" "whale";
"whale" is the interpretation of the Greek Bible. Nor does God speak to Jonah while Jonah is inside the sea creature; in Jonah 1:17, God "provides" a fish to swallow Jonah, but doesn't comment on it; Jonah, Chapter 2, consists of Jonah talking to God; in 2:10, God spoke "to the fish", not to Jonah, and told it to spit the prophet out.

The story of Elijah and the Contest on Mount Carmel (not in the Burton/Manning version) is told in 1 Kings 18, and his opponents were not "professors and fakers"; they were priests of Baal. (A word which happens to mean "Lord," so if properly translated, the contest is between Elijah, a prophet of the Lord, and 400 priests of the Lord. Hm). Elijah didn't get any explicit messages from God at that precise moment, but I'll grant that he had been told to go to King Ahab of Israel, who ended up sponsoring the miracle described in the song. Still, I can't say I'm much impressed with the thinking in this song. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.1

File: BuMa013

Godalmighty Drag

DESCRIPTION: "Mama and papa, O lawdy, Mama and papa, O my Lord, Done told me a lie...." "Done told me they'd pardon me... by next July." "July and August... done come and gone." "Left me here rolling... On this ole farm." "Gonna write to the Governor...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARIEST DATE: 1934 (Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry)
KEYWORDS: prison family lie pardon worksong
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 398-399, "Godalmighty Drag" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 309-311, "Godalmighty Drag" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jackson-WakeUpDeadMan, pp. 130-132, "No More Cane on the Brazos/Godamighty" (1 text, 1 tune, a mixture of this with another song Jackson calls "Godamighty" though it has almost no lyric elements in common with "Godalmighty Drag"); pp. 261-267, "Godamighty" (3 texts, 2 tunes; possibly once again separate songs but so fluid that it isn't worth separating them out)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Please Have Mercy on a Longtime Man" (lyrics)
cf. "Texarkana Mary" (lyrics)

File: SBoA309

Goin' Cross the Mountain

DESCRIPTION: "Goin' 'cross the mountain, Oh, fare thee well, Goin' 'cross the mountain, Hear my banjo tell." The singer has his kit ready, and is going to join the Union army "to give Jeff's men a little taste of my rifle ball." He promises to return at the war's end

AUTHOR: unknown
EARIEST DATE: 1959 (Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl)
KEYWORDS: Civilwar fight parting
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 121, "Goin' Cross the Mountain" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST Wa121 (Partial)
Roud #4624

NOTES [60 words]: Although large parts of the Appalachians were in Confederate territory, the rough terrain did not encourage slaveholding, and most of the residents remained loyal to the Union. Kentucky stayed with the North, West Virginia seceded from Virginia, and eastern Tennessee welcomed Federal occupying troops. One suspects this song came from one of those regions. - RBW

File: Wa121

Goin' from the Cotton Fields

DESCRIPTION: "I'm goin' from the cotton fields, I'm goin' from the cane, I'm goin' from the old log
"hut That stands in the lane." Hard times force the singer to move north even though Dinah fears the cold. He regrets home and the old master's grave, but must go

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (Fuson-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands), from a manuscript apparently dated before 1895

KEYWORDS: hardtimes home emigration slave travel

FOUND IN: US(Ap,So)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Fuson-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands, pp. 121-122, "Goin' from the Cotton Fields" (1 text)
Arnold-FolkSongsOfAlabama, p. 115, "I'm Gwine from the Cotton Fields" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST Fus121 (Partial)

NOTES [56 words]: This has something of a minstrel feel, given that the singer talks about the "little patch of ground That good old master give me 'Fore the Yankee troops come down," as well as the former slave caring for Master's grave. And yet, the overall feel is quite authentic: Hard times and a hard migration. I've no idea what to make of it. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.2

File: Fus121

Goin' Home

DESCRIPTION: Sung to the swinging of a pick. "Ev'rywhere I look (hanh!), Where I look this mornin'... Look like rain." The singer describes his prowess wit the pick, tells how his girl wants him home, and hopes he can win a pardon from the governor

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1934

LONG DESCRIPTION: As a menhaden chantey: The singer will work "a few days longer" and go home. When he left his woman she cried and asked him not to go. He gets a letter from her every mail day asking him to come home. Looks like rain.

KEYWORDS: prisoner chaingang work separation pardon love home parting return reunion nonballad shanty worksong

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 84-86, Goin' Home" (1 text, 1 tune)
Frye-TheMenAllSinging, p. 184, ("I Left my baby standin' in the back door cryin"); p. 185, ("We're goin' home but got no ready made money") (2 texts)
GarrityBlake-FishFactory, p. 87, ("If I just had me one more dollar and a quarter"); GarrityBlake-FishFactory, p. 88, ("Do you see that dark cloud rising over yonder"); GarrityBlake-FishFactory, p. 99, ("I left my baby standing in the back door crying") (3 fragments)

Roud #15035

RECORDINGS:
Bright Light Quartet, ("Cap'n don't you see that dark cloud risin' over yonder") (on LomaxCD1708)
Menhaden Fishermen, "I'm Gonna Roll Here" (on USMenshaden01)
Northern Neck Chantey Singers, "Every Mail Day" (on USMenshaden02)
William Thompson and Group, "Every Mail Day" (on VaWork)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

NOTES [783 words]: The LomaxCD1708 song is part of the "Menhaden Chanteys" track.
VaWork "Every Mail Day" includes the "Hiking Jerry" verse, at least, from "Mule on the Mountain." These recordings on VaWork are by two different groups.
For more about Hurston's "Mule On de Mount" see "Mule on the Mountain."
"Goin' Home" is a menhaden chanty (as well as a prisoner work song). See the notes to "Help Me to Raise Them" for information about menhaden chanteys. As noted there, there is a general format and tune that seems especially suited for menhaden chanteys shared by "Biting Spider,"
"My Ways Do Seem So Hard," "Poor Lazarus" and "Section Gang Song." In the following discussion, lower case is the precentor chanteyman lining out the verse; upper case is the crew;
"(chatter)" is directions called out by the crew about hauling.
There is a rough analogy between the phrase structures of these menhaden chanteys and 12-bar blues.
To make my point clearer, here is the second verse of Richard "Rabbit" Brown's "James Alley Blues" (Victor 20578-A, 1927):
I done seen better days (phrase break) but I'm putting up with these (instrumental response)
I done seen better days (phrase break) but I'm putting up with these (instrumental response)
I'd have a much better time (phrase break) but these girls now are so hard to please (instrumental response)
The (instrumental response) in twelve bar blues may vary from a brief pause to an interlude longer than the line that calls it. The (phrase break) may just be a breath.
Here is the second verse of USMenhaden01 version of "Goin' Home":
I left my baby (O LORD) STANDING IN THE BACK DOOR CRYING
(chatter)
I left my baby (O LORD) STANDING IN THE BACK DOOR CRYING
(chatter)
Saying daddy don't you go (O LORD LORD LORD) DADDY DON'T YOU GO
(chatter)
The phrase breaks in menhaden chanteys may be an exclamation -- (O LORD) or (O LORD LORD LORD) -- or just a breath (as in "My Way Seems So Hard"). The (chatter) is often omitted from recordings.
In both blues and chantey the first line begins a thought without resolution, the second line repeats that to heighten the tension, and the third line resolves the thought. For the chantey the words to a particular verse may vary from crew to crew and perhaps from performance to performance. "Goin' Home" -- without repetition, breaks, chatter, or change of case -- illustrates the variation. (I've included the Hurston and Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs versions as well).
Going home:
I'm gonna roll/row here a few days longer ... I'm going home (Frye, USMenhaden01, VaWork)
If I can make June July and August ... I'll go back home (USMenhaden02, Hurston)
If I can make June July and August ... I'll be a man (GarrityBlake-FishFactory, LomaxCD1708) Gonna make/If I had me one more dollar and a quarter ... Then I'm going/I'd go back home (Frye, GarrityBlake-FishFactory)
Ready-made money:
How can I stay home I got no ready-made money ... Get around (USMenhaden01)
I can't go home I got no ready-made money ... To pay my way/fare (GarrityBlake-FishFactory, USMenhaden02)
How can I get there ain't got no ready-made money ... To pay my way (VaWork)
I'd go home but I ain't got no money ... To pay my way (Frye)
I ain't got no ready-made money ... I cain' go home (Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs)
The letter (also see indexed prison song "Every Mail Day" which includes Warner #173):
Every mail day I get a letter ... Saying daddy come home (USMenhaden01, USMenhaden02)
Every mail day I git a letter ... My son come home (Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, Warner)
Every pay day I gits a letter ... Son come home (Hurston)
Money-making country:
North Carolina is a money-making country ... And that's my home (USMenhaden01)
Chesapeake Bay ain't no money making country ... How do you know, By self experience
(Anderson)
Looks like rain:
O captain don't you see that dark cloud rising over yonder ... Looks like rain (USMenhaden01)
O captain don't you see that dark cloud rising over yonder ... First sign of rain (LomaxCD1708)
Everywhere I look this morning ... Sign of rain (Anderson)
Everywhere I look this mornin' ... Looks like rain (Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs)
For the "going home" set, Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry has "I'm go'n' make these few days I started, Then I'm goin' home" (John A Lomax and Alan Lomax, Our Singing Country (New York: The Macmaillan Company, 1949)), pp. 380-381, "Take This Hammer").
For a lined out prison song with the same phrasing but without chatter except for the "huh" after the verse hear "On a Monday" on VaWork. - BS

Last updated in version 4.2
File: LxA084

Goin' to Have a Talk with the Chief of Police
DESCRIPTION: The singer goes to talk with the police chief, apparently with regard to his "good girl" who has been avoiding him. He looks for her on boats and trains, hopes she will come to love him, and wishes she were not in trouble
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (recording, Peelee Hatchee)
KEYWORDS: police love separation
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Courlander-NegroFolkMusic, p. 98, "Goin' to Have a Talk With the Chief of Police" (1 text); pp. 271-272, "I'm Going Uptown" (1 tune, partial text)
Roud #10993
RECORDINGS:
Peelee Hatchee [pseud. for Emanuel Jones], "Talk with the Chief of Police" (on NFMAla6)
NOTES [23 words]: This song is so confused that I suspect it is composite. Some of it is reminiscent of "Corinna, Corinna" -- but some of it, well, isn't. - RBW
File: CNFM098

Going Across the Sea
DESCRIPTION: Floating lyrics, bound by the chorus, "Going (across the sea/to Italy) before long (x3) To see that gal of mine." Sample verses: "Yonder comes a pretty little girl, How do you reckon I know..."; "Finger ring, finger ring, shines like glittering gold..."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (recording, Uncle Dave Macon), but some of the floating verses show up in Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 88, "Betty Anne", which was collected in 1916.
LONG DESCRIPTION: Floating lyrics, held together by the chorus, "(across the sea/to Italy) (x3) To see that gal of mine." Sample verses: "Yonder comes a pretty little girl, How do you reckon I know..."; "Finger ring, finger ring, shines like glittering gold..."; "I asked that gal to marry me... She said she wouldn't marry me If all the rest was dead."
KEYWORDS: floatingverses courting travel love nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 111, "Wish I Had a Needle and Thread" (7 text, of which only 'E' is really substantial; it is certainly the "Italy" version of "Going Across the Sea." The other fragments contain verses typical of "Shady Grove," "Old Joe Clark," and others)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 111, "Wish I Had a Needle and Threat" (2 tunes plus text excerpts)
Lunsford/Stringfield-30And1FolkSongsFromSouthernMountains, pp. 44-45, "Italy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jones-MinstrelOfTheAppalachians-Bascom-Lamar-Lunsford, pp. 229-230, "Italy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 88, "Betty Anne" (1 text, 1 tune, with lyrics from "Shady Grove," "Fly Around, My Pretty Little Miss" and "Going Across the Sea")
Roud #11516
RECORDINGS:
Henry L. Bandy, "Going Across the Sea" (Gennett test pressing GEx14360, 1928; unissued; on KMM)
R. D. Burnett & Lynn Woodard, "Going Across the Sea" (recorded for Gennett 1929, but unissued; on BurnRuth01)
Crook Brothers String Band, "Going Across the Sea" (Victor V-40099, 1929)
Going Around the World (Banjo Pickin' Girl, Baby Mine)

DESCRIPTION: "I'm going across the ocean (friends of mine/baby mine) (x3) If I don't change my notion." "I'm going across the sea... Say you'll love no one but me." "I'm going around the world... (with/I'm) a banjo-pickin' girl." Verses usually about courting
AUTHOR: Words: Charles Mackay, Music: Archibald Johnston
EARLIEST DATE: 1859 (antecedent song "Baby Mine" published)
KEYWORDS: courting love nonballad travel music money rambling
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (3 citations):
McNeil-SouthernMountainFolksong, pp. 58-66, "Banjo Pickin' Girl" (5 texts, 2 tunes; the texts with tunes are titled "Baby Mine" and "Banjo Pickin' Girl")
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 54, "Baby Mine" (1 text)
Heart-Songs, pp. 356-357, "Baby Mine" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11519
RECORDINGS:
R. D. Burnett & Lynn Woodard, "Going Around the World" (recorded for Gennett 1929, but unissued; on BurnRuth01)
Coon Creek Girls, "Banjo-Pickin' Girl" (Vocalion 04413/OKe 04413, 1938; on GoingDown)
Leslie Keith & the Blue Sky Boys. "Going Around This World" (on Protobilly)
Elizabeth Spencer, "Baby Mine" (CYL: Edison 2383, 1911)
Pete Steele, "Goin' Around This World, Baby Mine" (on PSteele01)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Crawdad" (floating lyrics)
cf. "New River Train" (floating lyrics)
NOTES [80 words]: Old-time singers in the Revival era tend to sing this as "Banjo Pickin' Girl," with a much more feminist feel than the earliest version known to me (sung by Burnett and Woodard). I have to suspect that someone (presumably one of the all-girl groups) touched the song up slightly. It is still clearly the same song, however. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.0
File: RCGAtW

Going Back to Weldon

DESCRIPTION: "Going back to Weldon, Get a job in the Weldon yard." "Captain's got a Luger, Mate's got a forty-five." "If you fire me You got to fire all my buddies too" "I don't want no woman Got hair like a horse's mane" "The house is on fire And all goes burning..."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1990 (USMenhaden01)
KEYWORDS: work floatingverses nonballad shanty worksong
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):

RECORDINGS:
Menhaden Fishermen, "Going Back to Weldon" (on USMenhaden01)
NOTES [222 words]: "Going Back to Weldon" is a menhaden chantey. See the notes to "Help Me to Raise Them" for information about menhaden chanteys. It follows the general format and tune that seems especially suited for many menhaden chanteys. The verse structure is illustrated and discussed in the notes to "Goin' Home."
The "Captain's got a Luger" verse has floated from prison work songs and has become tamer because the relationship between menhaden captain and workers is voluntary. The notes to "They Don't Allow Me To Beat Them" illustrate a couple of prison versions: "Cap'n got a 44 an' he try to play bad, Take it dis mornin' ef he make me mad" and "Captain got a luger [sic] Tryin' to play bad, I'm goin' to take it in the mornin' If he makes me mad." The menhaden versions are "Captain's got a Luger, And the mate's got a forty five" and "Captain's got a new girl, And the mate's got his eyes on her."
Compare the menhaden verse "I don't want no woman Got hair like a horse's mane" with "She's got eyes like diamonds, her teeth shine just the same, She got sweet ruby lips and hair like a horse's mane" (Jimmie Rodgers, "Blue Yodel No. 3 (Evening Sun Yodel)" (Victor 21-0177, 1928)).
Another Weldon verse is "We will catch a load And get back to Weldon on the road." Weldon may be the site of the railroad yard at Weldon, North Carolina. - BS

Last updated in version 4.2
File: GaBl061

Going Down the Railroad
DESCRIPTION: "Going down the railroad, Do do do. Oh, Sally, won't you marry? Do do do. Ole Miss Kiser goin' to turn all around (x2), Do do do."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1962 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)
KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad marriage
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5, p. 537, "Going Down the Railroad" (1 short text, 1 tune)
File: BrS5537

Going Down the River
DESCRIPTION: Floating verses: "Hey, little girl, if you don't give me dinner/I'll buy me a boat and sail down the river/"'Coon Creek's up, Coon Creek's muddy/I'm so drunk I can't stand steady"
"Goodbye wife, goodbye baby/Goodbye biscuits sopped in gravy"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (recording, Dr. Smith's Champion Hoss Hair Pullers)
KEYWORDS: marriage food river dancetune floatingverses nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
DT, DOWNRIVE
RECORDINGS:
Dr. Smith's Champion Hoss Hair Pullers, "Going Down the River" (Victor 21711, 1928)
New Lost City Ramblers, "Going Down the River" (NLCR13)
NOTES [13 words]: This shouldn't be confused with any of the other "Down the River" songs. - PJS
File: RcGDtRy1
Going Down This Road Feeling Bad

DESCRIPTION: A series of complaints, all ending "And I ain't gonna be treated this a-way."
Examples: "I'm going down this road feeling bad." "I'm going where the climate suits my clothes."
"I'm tired of lying in this jail." "They feed me on cornbread and beans."

AUTHOR: Unknown, although the credits for Whitter's first recording read "Austin-Mills"
EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (recording, Henry Whitter)
KEYWORDS: prison hardtimes rambling
FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (10 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 441, "I'm Going Down This Road Feeling Bad" (1 text)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 441, "I'm Going Down the Road Feeling Bad" (1 tune plus a text excerpt)
Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices, p. 176, "Goin' Down This Road Feelin' Bad" (1 text, 1 tune)
Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol2, p. 22, "I'm Goin' Down the Road Feelin' Bad" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-FolkSongUSA 72, "Goin' Down the Road Feelin' Bad" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 346-347, "Goin' Down the Road" (1 text, 1 tune)
Botkin-TreasuryOfAmericanFolklore, pp. 876-877, "I'm A-Goin' down This Road Feelin' Bad" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, pp. 206-207, "Goin' Down the Road Feelin' Bad" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 60, "I'm Going Down This Road Feeling Bad" (1 text)

RECORDINGS:
H. M. Barnes & his Blue Ridge Ramblers, "Goin' Down the Road Feelin' Bad" (Brunswick 327, 1929)
James Barton, "I'm Going Where The Climate Fits My Clothes" (OKeh 40136, 1924)
Big Bill Broonzy, "Goin' Down the Road" (on Broonzy01)
Samantha Bumgarner, "The Worried Blues/Georgia Blues" (Columbia 166-D, 1924; Harmony 5111-H [as Luella Gardner, "Worried Blues"], n.d.) [Both songs are versions of "Going Down This Road Feeling Bad"]
Jack Burchett, "Chilly Winds (Lonesome Road Blues" (on WatsonAshley01)
Cliff Carlisle, "Goin' Down the Road Feelin' Bad" (Banner 32842/Melotone M12821/Oriole 8276/Perfect 12949/Romeo 5276/Conqueror 8201, 1933)
Fiddlin' John Carson & his Virginia Reelers, "Goin' Where the Climate Suits My Clothes" (OKeh 45498, 1930)
Dillard Chandler, "Going Down the Road Feeling Bad" (on Chandler01)
Cherokee Ramblers, "Goin' Down the Road Feelin' Bad" (Decca 5138, 1935)
George Childers, "Goin' Down This Road Feelin' Bad" (on FolkVisions2)
Elizabeth Cotten, "Going Down the Road Feeling Bad" (on Cotten01)
Cousin Emmy [Cynthia May Carver], "Lonesome Road Blues" (Decca 24215, 1941)
Crazy Hillbillies Band, "Going Down the Road Feeling Bad" (OKeh 45579, 1934)
Ollie Crownover & group "Goin' Down the Road Feelin' Bad" (AAFS 3562 B2)
Warde Ford, "I'm going down this road feelin' bad / I ain't gonna be treated this a-way / Goin' down that road feelin' bad" (AAFS 4206 A2, 1938; tr.; in AMMEM/Cowell)
Woody Guthrie, "Blowin' Down This Road" (Victor 26619, 1940); "I'm Goin' Down That Road Feelin' Bad" (AAFS 3418 A1)
Roy Hall's Cohutta Mountain Boys, "Going Down the Road Feeling Bad" (Fortune 170)
Rex & James Hardie, "Goin' Down the Road Feelin' Bad" (AAFS 3566 A1)
Sid Harkreader, "Way Down In Jail On My Knees" (Broadway 8115, c. 1930)
The Hillbillies, "Goin' Down the Road Feeling Bad" (Vocalion 5021, c. 1926)
Theophilus G. Hoskins "Goin' Down the Road Feelin' Bad" (AAFS 1519 A3)
David, Bill & Bully Ray Johnson, "Going Down the Road Feeling Bad" (on ClassOT)
Bascom Lamar Lunsford, "Goin' Down the Road Feelin' Bad" (AAFS 1805 B1)
Ray Melton, "Goin' Down the Road Feelin' Bad" (AAFS 1347 A2)
David Miller, "Way Down in Jail On My Knees" (Perfect 12697 [as Blind Soldier]/Conqueror 7709, 1931)
John D. Mounce et al, "I'm a-Goin' Down This Road Feelin' Bad" (on MusOzarks01)
J. J. Nesse, J. C. Sutphin & Vernon Sutphin, "Lonesome Road Blues" [instrumental version] (on Stonemans01
Pie Plant Pete [pseud. for Claude Moye], "Goin' Down the Road" (Decca 5030, 1934)
Joe Rakestraw, "Leavin' Here, Don't Know Where I'm Goin'" (on FolkVisions2)
George Reneau, "Lonesome Road Blues" (Vocalion 5029, c. 1926)
Robert Ricker, "Goin' Down This Road Feelin' Bad" (AAFS 3903 B5)
Roe Bros. & Morrell, "Goin' Down the Road Feelin' Bad" (Columbia 15199-D, 1927)
Smith & Irvine, "Lonesome Road Blues" [instrumental version] (Champion 16518, 1932; on StuffDreams1)
Soco Gap Band, "Lonesome Road Blues" (AAFS 3256 B3)
Gussie Ward Stine, "Goin' Down the Road Feelin' Bad" (AAFS 4103 B1)
Ernest Stoneman, "Lonesome Road Blues" (OKeh 45094, 1927; on TimesAint02, StuffDreams2)
Gordon Tanner, Smokey Joe Miller & Uncle John Patterson, "Goin' Down the Road Feelin' Bad" (on DownYonder)
Henry Whitter's Virginia Breakdowners, "Lonesome Road Blues" (OKeh 40015, 1924, rec. 1923); "Goin' Down the Road Feelin' Bad" (OKeh 40169, 1924)
Williamson Bros. & Curry, "Lonesome Road Blues" (OKeh 45146, 1927)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Leavin' Here, Don't Know Where I'm Goin'" ("water tastes like wine" lyric)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Goin' Down this Old Dusty Road
NOTES [143 words]: Botkin credits the words of this piece to Woody Guthrie, and certainly Woody sang the song. But there is every reason to believe it predates him. - RBW
Indeed it does; the Skillet Lickers included it in their skit "A Corn Likker Still in Georgia" in about 1930, and it may have been present in Black tradition before then.
Confusingly, [Warde] Ford's version is listed in the song catalog as, "I ain't gonna be treated this a-way," although the page is headed "I'm going down this road feelin' bad." He credits learning it from "Kaintucks" in Wisconsin.
Both "Worried Blues" and "Georgia Blues," as recorded by Samantha Bumgarner & Eva Davis, incorporate enough elements of "Goin' Down This Road Feeling Bad" that I classify them here. I place the Barton record here tentatively, as I have not heard it. The title, however, is far too suggestive to ignore. - PJS
Last updated in version 5.2
File: LxU072

Going for a Pardon
DESCRIPTION: The pretty little girl on the train has no ticket. Her father is in prison and going blind; she is going for a pardon. The conductor lets her stay on the train. She meets the governor and is granted a pardon for her father
AUTHOR: Words: James Thornton and Clara Hauenschild / Music: James Thornton
EARLIEST DATE: 1896 (copyright)
KEYWORDS: prison father disability pardon family children train
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Cohen-LongSteelRail, pp. 316-320, "Going for a Pardon/The Eastbound Train" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Randolph 721, "Going for a Pardon" (2 texts)
Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 256-257, "The Eastbound Train" (1 text, 2 tunes)
Huntington-FolksongsFromMarthasVineyard, pp. 46-48, "The Eastbound Train" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7390
RECORDINGS:
Blue Sky Boys, "The East Bound Train" (Bluebird B-8552, Montgomery Ward M-8670, 1940)
Asa Martin, "East Bound Train" (Gennett 6621, Supertone 9176 [as Emmett Davenport], 1928)
Asa Martin & Fiddlin' Doc Roberts, "East Bound Train" (Champion 15585 [as Jesse Coat & John Bishop], Champion 33045, 1928)
Asa Martin & James Roberts "East Bound Train" (Banner 32178, Oriole 8065, Perfect 12711, Romeo 5065, Conqueror 7837, 1931; Broadway 4086, 1932)
Lester McFarland & Robert Gardner [Mac & Bob], "The Lightning Express" (Brunswick 200, 1928; Brunswick 326, 1929; rec. 1927)
Nelstone's Hawaiians, "North Bound Train" (Victor V-40065, 1929)
Riley Puckett, "East Bound Train" (Columbia 15747-D, 1931)
Ernest V. Stoneman, "East Bound Train" (Edison 52299, 1928) (CYL: Edison [BA] 5548, 1928)
"Dock" Walsh, "The East Bound Train" (Columbia 15047-D, 1927)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Please, Mister Conductor (The Lightning Express)" (plot)

NOTES [57 words]: According to Sigmund Spaeth, A History of Popular Music in America, pp. 255-256, James Thornton was a very popular songwriter from about 1892 to 1898, producing such songs as "My Sweetheart's the Man in the Moon," "Don't Give Up the Old Love for the New," "She May Have Seen Better Days," and (especially) "When You Were Sweet Sixteen." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2
File: R721

Going Over in the Heavenly Land

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "The heavenly land (2x), Just going over in the heavenly land." Verse, for example: "Sinner joins the church and he runs pretty well, Just going..., Before six weeks he's on his road to hell, Just going...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1899 (Barton-OldPlantationHymns)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious floatingverses
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Barton-OldPlantationHymns, p. 42, "Jes' Gwine Ober in de Heavenly Lan'" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [28 words]: Barton-OldPlantationHymns also includes floating verses such as "You can hinder me here, but you can't do it there, For He sits in the heavens and he answers prayer." - BS

Last updated in version 4.0
File: Bart042

Going to Boston

DESCRIPTION: Playparty: "Goodbye girls, I'm going to Boston, (x3) Early in the morning." "Rights and lefts and play the better." "Won't you look pretty in the ballroom." The verses may describe the girls following the boys, or may just be about dancing

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (JAFL 20)
KEYWORDS: playparty dancing travel
FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW,So)
REFERENCES (11 citations):
Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana, p. 49=Wolford/Richmond/Tillson-PlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 200-201, "Go to Boston" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph 526, "We'll All Go to Boston" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Spurgeon-WaltzTheHall-AmericanPlayParty, pp. 163-164, "Roll for Boston"; pp. 205-206, "We'll All Go to Boston" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, p. 154, "Going to Boston" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 297-298, "Going to Boston" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp/Karpeles-EightyEnglishFolkSongs 67, "Going to Boston" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ritchie-SingingFamilyOfTheCumberlands, pp. 62-64, "[Goin' to Boston]" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ritchie-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 19, "Goin' to Boston" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 261, "Going to Boston" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 391, "Going To Boston" (1 text)
DT, GOINBSTN
Roud #3595
RECORDINGS:
Pete Seeger, "Going to Boston" (on PeteSeeger21)
Art Thieme, "Going to Cairo" (on Thieme05)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Paw-Paw Patch" (lyrics)

File: SKE67
Going to Chelsea to Buy a Bun

DESCRIPTION: The singer meets a girl and introduces himself as Harmless James. When she asks to be left alone and refuses his invitation to the Bun House he follows her through the fields until she yields. They marry the next day and she has a fine son.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1829 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 25(753))
KEYWORDS: courting seduction wedding childbirth
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan7 1352, "The Fair Maid of Chelsea" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #946
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 25(753), "Going to Chelsea to Buy a Bun" ("As I was going to Chelsea one day"), T. Birt (London), 1828-1829; also 2806 c.19(12), "Going to Chelsea to Buy a Bun"
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Leave Me Alone
NOTES [28 words]: Greig/Duncan7 is a fragment; broadside Bodleian Harding B 25(753) is the basis for the description. - BS
So was the guy buying a bun, or looking to put one in the oven?
Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD71352

Going to Clonakilty the Other Day

DESCRIPTION: The singer "was going to Clonakilty" and met "Dan and Miley ... and Gerry Connors and his hair." They step into a pub: "we'll fix it here." At the end the singer still has a fiver and claims someone should not brag, having been "born in the wagon"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1985 (IRTravellers01)
KEYWORDS: drink money hair
FOUND IN: Ireland
Roud #16694
RECORDINGS:
Mary Delaney, "Going to Clonakilty the Other Day" (on IRTravellers01)
NOTES [49 words]: Jim Carroll's notes to IRTravellers01: "One of numerous pieces made up by Travellers concerning a small incident among themselves ... the details of which are probably long forgotten, leaving only a handful of verses."
I assume "being born in the wagon" is equivalent to being a Traveller. - BS
File: RcGtCtOD

Going to German

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "I'm going to German', I'll be back some old day (x3)." "Tell me, mama, what more can I do? I been around the world, can't get along with you." The singer says he has paid the girl's fine, but they still didn't get along. He now has a new girl

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (recording, [Gus] Cannon's Jug Stompers)
KEYWORDS: travel love abandonment
FOUND IN: US
Roud #29273
RECORDINGS:
[Gus] Cannon's Jug Stompers, "Going to Germany" (Victor 38585, 1929; Victor 21351, Bluebird B5413, 1930s)
NOTES [57 words]: Jerry Silverman thinks this is a First World War song, but there is absolutely no hint in the song that the singer is a soldier, no mention of fighting, no mention of the Kaiser. Bob Bovee notes that, although Gus Cannon (who seems to be the ultimate source) called the song "Going to Germany," everyone sings the song "Going to German." - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: RcGoToG
Going to Kentucky

DESCRIPTION: We're going to Kentucky" or "the tatty ... "going to the fair, To see the senorita" or "Cinderella" "with flowers in her hair." Instructions to twist, or shimmy, or turn around.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1969 (Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)

KEYWORDS: playparty

FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond)) Canada(Ont) South Africa

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 122, "Going to Kentucky" (3 texts, 1 tune)

Roud #19158

File: OpGa122

---

Going to Leave Old Texas (Old Texas, Texas Song, The Cowman's Lament)

DESCRIPTION: "I'm going to leave old Texas now, They've got no use for the longhorn cow...."
The singer departs to "make his home on the wide wide range." When he dies, he will "take [his] chance on the holy one."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1966

KEYWORDS: cowboy travel death

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (3 citations):
- Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 66, "The Trail to Mexico" (5 texts, 1 tune, of which only the "E" text goes here; "A" and "B" are "The Trail to Mexico" and "C" and "D" are "Early, Early in the Spring")
- Tinsley-HeWasSinginThisSong, pp. 224-227, "I'm Going to Leave Old Texas Now" (1 text, 1 tune)
- DT, OLDTEXAS

Roud #12711

RECORDINGS:
- Harry Jackson, "I'm Gonna Leave Old Texas Now" (on HJackson1)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Bury Me Not on the Lone Prairie" (tune)

NOTES [21 words]: Often sung to the tune of "Bury Me Not on the Lone Prairie," but Gordon Bok's family tradition includes a different tune. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.1

File: FCW066E

---

Going to Live Humble to the Lord

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Humble, humble, humble yourselves, Going to live humble to the Lord"(2x). Verse: The singer, who has "my trials," was "walking along... elements opened... love came down." If you aim for the sky, don't lie.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute)

KEYWORDS: nonballad religious floatingverses

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, pp. 6-7, "Gwine to Live Humble to de Lord" (1 text, 1 tune; p. 135 in the 1901 edition)
- Work-FolkSongOfTheAmericanNegro, p. 54, "Live a Humble"; p. 74, "Live a Humble" (2 copies of the same text)

Roud #11952

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Hide Away (Jonah and the Whale)" (chorus: "Live humble ....")

NOTES [115 words]: Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute's verses include the floater, "If you get there before I do, Tell all my friends I'm coming too." The second and fourth line of each verse is "Going to live humble to the Lord." - BS

*Work's version is quite different, with chorus, "Live a humble, humble, humble yourself, the bells done rung" (repeated. There is no internal refrain in the verses. I was very tempted to split them. But it's very hard to define this sort of plot-less, idea-less, song that almost certainly originated among illiterate slaves or ex-slaves. Roud lumps the two, so I do too, because there isn't much actual point in splitting them. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0
File: Dett006

Going to Rest from All My Labor

DESCRIPTION: Verse format: First line ending "when I'm dead" is repeated, followed by "In the morning O Lord, My soul's so happy now, O Lord when I'm dead." First lines include "I'm going to rest from all my labor," "Going to rally with the angel Gabriel"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (Hutson/Pinckney/Rutledge-SomeSongsTheNegroSang)

KEYWORDS: death nonballad religious Jesus

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hutson/Pinckney/Rutledge-SomeSongsTheNegroSang, pp. 244-245, "Gwine T' Res from All My Labuh" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [18 words]: The description follows Hutson/Pinckney/Rutledge-SomeSongsTheNegroSang but I do not repeat the dialect. - BS

Last updated in version 5.1
File: HPR244A

Going to Ride in the Chariot in the Morning

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Swing low, Going to ride the chariot in the morning, Elijah, going to ride the chariot in the morning." Verses: "Swing low chariot in the East (West, North, South), Let God's people have some peace (some rest, a talk, a shout)"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro- HamptonInstitute)

KEYWORDS: Bible nonballad religious

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, p. 100, "Swing Low, Chariot" (1 text, 1 tune; p. 125 in the 1901 edition)

Roud #5435

File: Dett100

Going To Ride On the Cross

DESCRIPTION: "My Jesus, Going to ride on the cross (3x), In heaven forever more." "Jesus, says he's better than gold (3x), In heaven forever more"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1893 (Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories)

KEYWORDS: nonballad religious Jesus

FOUND IN: West Indies(Bahamas)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories 34, "Goin' To Ride On de Cross" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [12 words]: The description is based on the Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories text. - BS

Last updated in version 4.2
File: Edwa034

Going to See My True Love (Jenny Get Around)

DESCRIPTION: "The days are long and lonesome, The nights are gettin' cold, I'm goin' to see my true love 'Fore I get too old. O get around, Jenny, get around, O get around I say... long summer's day." Mostly floating verses, mostly about courting
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (collected from James Mullins, according to Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry)
KEYWORDS: love courting dancing floatingverses
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Ritchie-SingingFamilyOfTheCumberlands, pp. 192-193, "[Goin' to See My True Love]" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 63-64, "Jinny Get Around" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9175
NOTES [111 words]: This is one of those Great Floating Verse collections; every line of this song (as printed by Jean Ritchie) can be found somewhere else: "The days are long and lonesome, The nights are gettin' cold, I'm goin' to see my true love 'Fore I get too old." "I went up on the mountain, Give my horn a blow, Thought I heard that pretty girl say Yonder comes my beau!" "Asked that girl to marry me, Tell you what she did, Picked her up a knotty pine stick And like to broke my head." And so forth.
The result reminds me most of "Train on the Island (June Apple)," but the tune is utterly different. Jean Ritchie mentions a comparison to "Napoleon Crossing the Rockies." - RBW
Last updated in version 3.2
File: JRSF192

Going Up
DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "I'm going up, going up, Going all the way, Lord, Going up, going up, To see the heavenly land" (x2). Verses: The singer will keep climbing to see the angels, and likes best the shouting Methodists who drive the devil away.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1874 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious Devil
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, pp. 34-35, "Gwine Up (Oh Yes, I'm Gwine Up)" (1 text, 1 tune; pp. 216-217 in the 1874 edition)
Work-FolkSongOfTheAmericanNegro, p. 66, "Oh, Yes, I'm Going Up" (1 text)
Roud #12080 and 12356
File: Dett034

Going Up (Golden Slippers II)
DESCRIPTION: "What kind of shoes are you going to wear? Golden slippers (x2) Golden slippers, I'm a-going away... To live with the Lord. Goin' up (x13) to live with the Lord." "What kind of robes are you going to wear? Long white robes." Etc.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (recording, Fisk Univ. Jubilee Quartet)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad clothes
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 571, "Golden Slippers" (1 text)
Roud #11835
RECORDINGS:
Fisk University Jubilee Quartet, "Golden Slippers" (Victor 16453, 1910; rec. 1909)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "What Kind of Crowns Do the Angels Wear?" (floating verses)
NOTES [40 words]: Although the editors of Brown seem to think this is the same as the standard "Golden Slippers," it clearly is something else again, though perhaps inspired by memories of the other.
The tune given in BrownV is the usual "Golden Slippers." - RBW
Last updated in version 4.1
File: Br3571
Going Up Camborne Hill, Coming Down
DESCRIPTION: "Going up Camborne Hill, coming down (x2), The horses stood still, the wheels turned around, Going up Camborne Hill, coming down." "White stockings she wore (x6), Going up Camborne Hill, coming down."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (Gundry-CanowKernow-SongsDancesFromCornwall)
KEYWORDS: clothes railroading horse
FOUND IN: Britain(England(West))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Gundry-CanowKernow-SongsDancesFromCornwall, p. 53, "Going Up Camborne Hill, Coming Down" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #3102
File: Gund053A

Going West
DESCRIPTION: "I'm going out west before long (x2), I'm going out west where times are best." "My boy, he's gone west... and he'll never come back." "Little girlie, don't cry when I tell you goodbye." "You promised you'd marry me." "Lay your hand in mine...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1966
KEYWORDS: love courting separation travel
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 53, "Going West" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 296, "Going Back West 'fore Long" (1 fragment, too short to classify but it might well be this piece)
Roud #5113
NOTES [31 words]: Roud lumps this with "I Am Going to the West." That song, however, is a parting song, with the singer leaving because his land is ruined. The only common element is the migration theme. - RBW
File: FCW053

Gol-Darned Wheel, The
DESCRIPTION: The cowboy boasts of his skill with horses. But a tenderfoot brings in a "gol-darned wheel" (bicycle). The cowboys get the singer to ride it, but it won't stop when he pulls on the handles. He crashes, but is glad that the "wheel" is even more damaged
AUTHOR: James B. Adams
EARLIEST DATE: 1898 (Recreation magazine; see NOTES)
KEYWORDS: humorous cowboy technology injury
FOUND IN: US(SW)
REFERENCES (6 citations):
Ohrlin-HellBoundTrain 16, "The Gol-Darned Wheel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys, pp. 71-74, "The Gol-Darned Wheel" (1 text)
DT, GDWHEEL*
Roud #4043
RECORDINGS:
Glenn Ohrlin, "Gol Darn Wheel" (on Ohrlin01)
The Westerners (Massey Family) "Gol-Darn Wheel" (ARC 6-01-54(C 843-1) Chicago, IL, Wednesday 14, 1934 (Curt Massey f, Larry Wellington, ac, Allen Massey v/g, Milt Mabie, sb. Tony Russell, p. 610.)
Marc Williams, "The Gol-Durned Wheel" (on BackSaddle)
NOTES [173 words]: This song is item dB38 in Laws's Appendix II.
Gary Stanton has done research on this song, and sent me the following: [- RBW]
This past spring [2014], I using the Library of Congress "Chronicling Historic America" site, I brought up the front page of the St. John's Herald (Apache County, Arizona Territory) 14 March 1896, [which printed] the stanzas to "The Cowboy and the Wheel." But the tag line was "Gol Darned Wheel." Just below the title was a bracketed source "[Recreation]" but no author. Well, Recreation was the name of a sporting magazine published by G. O. Shields, as the publication of the American Canoist's Association. In the February 1896 issue he published, "The Cowboy and the Wheel," by James B. Adams. James Barton Adams was a newspaper man in Denver and published Breezy Western Verse in 1899, but this poem was not included. What this information lacks is identifying who first put the tune to the verses but it must have been relatively soon after being composed. It is very well distributed across the West.

Last updated in version 5.3
File: 0hr016

Gold
DESCRIPTION: "When the gold fever ranged I was doing well," but nonetheless the singer sets out (for California). He meets hard times, and misses his wife and family. He imagines himself at home, but wakes to find it was a dream. He returns to his miserable mining AUTHOR: Enuel Davis?
EARLIEST DATE: 1912 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)
KEYWORDS: hardtimes family loneliness dream gold warning
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 346-347, "Gold" (1 text)
Roud #7774
NOTES [48 words]: Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety mentions that this was written "by Enuel Davis," who contributed other complaints about the trail to California, and sung to the tune of "Lily Dale." But in context, it appears possible that Davis was the transcriber or publisher. - RBW
File: Beld346

Gold Band, The
DESCRIPTION: "Goin' to march away in the gold band, in the army, bye and bye (x2) Sinner, what you gonna on that day (x2), When the fire's a-rolling behind you, In the army, bye and bye." "Sister Mary's goin' to hand down the robe... the robe and the gold band"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)
KEYWORDS: religious army
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 85, "The Gold Band" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 289-290, "The Gold Band" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber-SoldierSongsAndHomeFrontBalladsOfCivilWar, p. 74, "The Gold Band" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11632
File: SCw74

Gold Dust Fire, The
DESCRIPTION: "Ain't that a pity, oh Lord (x3), Ain't that a pity 'bout the Gold Dust men. Some got scalded, some got drowned, Some got burnt up in the Gold Dust fire"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1944 (Wheeler)
KEYWORDS: river ship disaster fire
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Aug 7, 1882 - Explosion of the packet Gold Dust, killing 17 and wounding 47
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Gold Is the Great Friend of the Masses

DESCRIPTION: "Gold is the great friend of the masses, The mainstay of the classes, The great aim of thelasses, And the ruin of the asses."

AUTHOR: Charles Thatcher? (source: Garland-FacesInTheFirelight-NZ)

EARLIEST DATE: 1967 (Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ)

KEYWORDS: gold nonballad

FOUND IN: New Zealand

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ, p. 55, "(Gold Is the Great Friend of the Masses)" (1 short text)
- Garland-FacesInTheFirelight-NZ, p. 273, "(Gold is the great friend of the masses)" (1 short text)

NOTES [29 words]: For brief background on Charles Thatcher's career, see the notes to "Where's Your License?" For an extensive collection of his songs, see Anderson-StoryOfAustralianFolksong.

Gold Spoons vs. Hard Cider

DESCRIPTION: "In a cabin made of logs, By the river side, There the Honest Farmer lives, Free from sloth and pride." This contrasts to the "Tinsell'd finery" of Martin (van Buren). "The farmer" eats crackers, cheese, cider. Martin's lackeys block the farmer's way

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1840 (Poughkeepsie Journal, according to Nestler)

KEYWORDS: political nonballad food farming

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- Dec 2, 1840 - William Henry Harrison defeats Martin Van Buren
- Mar 4, 1841 - Harrison (the first Whig to be elected President) is inaugurated. He gives a rambling inaugural address in a rainstorm and catches cold
- April 4, 1841 - Harrison dies of pneumonia, making him the first president to fail to complete his term. After some hesitation, Vice President John Tyler is allowed to succeed as President

FOUND IN: US(MA)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Harold Nestler, "Songs from the Hudson Valley" (article in _New York Folklore Quarterly_, Volume V, #2, Summer 1949), pp. 106-107, "Gold Spoons vs. Hard Cider" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Old Tippecanoe (I)" (subject of the Harrison/van Buren election) and references there

NOTES [41 words]: Lest we think that Donald Trump is the only President who had no acquaintance with the truth, this song is, for all practical purposes, pure lies. Martin van Buren grew up fairly poor, and William Henry Harrison was not a poor but honest farmer. - RBW

Gold Strike

DESCRIPTION: "There's gold in the hills, gold in the streams, I'm goin' down to Dahlonega, honey lamb, The great gold rush is on." The first gold was found by Benjamin Parks in 1828. People are still panning for gold. Local industries stamp out the gold

AUTHOR: Ray Knight

EARLIEST DATE: 1982 (Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices)

KEYWORDS: gold nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Gold Watch [Laws K41]

DESCRIPTION: A sailor sees a girl and asks her to sleep with him. After an initial show of reluctance, she agrees to a fee of five guineas. They go to supper and then to bed. When he awakens, the girl is gone -- as are his money and his gold watch.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland)

KEYWORDS: sex seduction robbery whore humorous

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Laws K41, "Gold Watch"
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 52, "Gold Watch" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 417, RMBSAIL2*

Roud #1901

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Maggie May" (plot)
cf. "Can't You Dance the Polka (New York Girls)" (plot)
cf. "The Poor Chronic Man" (plot)
cf. "The Winnipeg Whore" (plot)
cf. "The Red Plaid Shawl" (plot)
cf. "The Rookery" (plot)
cf. "The Young Man Badly Walked" (plot)
cf. "Roving Jack the Baker" (plot, with sex roles reversed)

File: LK41

Gold Watch and Chain (I)

DESCRIPTION: Singer tells girl that he would pawn his gold watch and chain, his ring, and his heart if she would love him again. He demands that she give back the gifts he's given her, including a lock of hair and a picture, and laments her unfaithfulness.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (recording, Ephraim Woodie & The Henpecked Husbands)

KEYWORDS: love betrayal floatingverses gift

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
DT, GOLDWTCH

Roud #16993

RECORDINGS:
Carter Family, "Gold Watch and Chain" (Victor 23821, 1933; Montgomery Ward M-7354, c. 1937)
New Lost City Ramblers, "Gold Watch and Chain" (on NLCR13, NLCREP2)
Ephraim Woodie & The Henpecked Husbands, "Last Gold Dollar" (Columbia 15564-D, 1930; rec. 1929; on LostProv1)

File: DTgoldwt

Gold Watch, The

DESCRIPTION: A con man allows a farmer to embarass him into making a foolish bet: that his fancy gold watch chain is not attached to a watch. Other farmers take part of the bet. The con man wins by revealing a hidden watch.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1886 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(4308))

LONG DESCRIPTION: A well dressed out-of-town con man walked into an inn parlor and feigned sleeping. A farmer found that the stranger's gold watch chain was attached to a piece of wood in his watch pocket, rather than to a watch. The farmer bet the stranger that he had no watch attached to the chain [which, I assume, would be an embarrassment to the stranger], and other farmers joined in the bet. The con man opened the piece of wood, revealed a gold watch hidden inside, and won the bets.

KEYWORDS: wager trick
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 257-258, "The Gold Watch" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 234)
Roud #1311
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(4308), "The Wooden Watch" ("A stranger once in Worcestershire") , W.S Fortey. (London), 1858-1885
File: WT257

Gold's a Wonderful Thing

DESCRIPTION: "Gold's a wonderful thing, what a change it can make, 'Tis the great civiliser... It peoples the country; wherever it's found, There's certain to be a great rush to the ground." The song lists some who grew rich, and the gold-seekers and girls who follow

AUTHOR: Charles R. Thatcher (1831-1878)
EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Colquhoun-NZ-Folksongs-SongOfAYoungCountry)

KEYWORDS: gold humorous travel

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Colquhoun-NZ-Folksongs-SongOfAYoungCountry, p. 56, "Gold's a Wonderful Thing" (1 text, 1 tune) (p. 34 in the 1972 edition)
Garland-FacesInTheFirelight-NZ, p. 95, "(Olden Days of Lake Wakatipu)" (1 short text)
Hoskins-GoldfieldBalladeer-LifeAndTimes-Charles-R-Thatcher, p. 57, "(Olden Days of Lake Wakatipu)" (1 excerpt); pp. 180-182, "Gold"; compare pp. 169-171, "Olden Days at Lake Wakatipu" (1 text)

NOTES [136 words]: For brief background on Charles Thatcher's career, see the notes to "Where's Your License?" For an extensive collection of his songs, see Anderson-StoryOfAustralianFolksong. This song poses a bit of a conundrum, because Charles Thatcher wrote at least two items beginning "Gold's a Wonderful Thing." Given the likelihood of cross-fertilization, and the lack of evidence that either one is traditional, I've lumped them -- and used the title Gold's a Wonderful Thing" because it's clearly more memorable than Thatcher's titles. What appears to be the more common text was originally titled "Olden Days of Lake Wakatipu," with the tune is listed as "St. Giles and St. James's"; the other one, which Hoskins-GoldfieldBalladeer-LifeAndTimes-Charles-R-Thatcher just calls "Gold," is to the tune of the Irish Washerwoman. - RBW

Golden Axe, The

DESCRIPTION: "Join that happy band." "Crawled to the chicken coup on my knees, Thought I heard a chicken sneeze...." "Hawk's a-setting on the railroad tack Picking his teeth with a carpet tack... hit him on the head with the golden axe."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Randolph)

KEYWORDS: violence nonsense floatingverses humorous parody nonballad animal chickens

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Randolph 284, "The Golden Axe" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, p. 177-178, "Oh Hear That Trumpet Sound" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7765

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Henhouse Door (Who Broke the Lock?)" (floating verse)
cf. "Polly Wolly Doodle" (floating verse)
cf. "Mourner, You Shall Be Free (Moanish Lady)" (gospel parody)
NOTES [82 words]: The "join that happy band" chorus is "Oh hear that trumpet sound Stand up and don't set down If you don't join that happy band What you gonna do when they chop you on the head with the golden axe" marks this as a gospel parody.
The "chicken sneeze" verse is a floater; see, for the whole verse, the entry for "Henhouse Door (Who Broke the Lock?)" The carpet tacker verse can also be found in "Polly Wolly Doodle" (see, for example, Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 462). - BS

Last updated in version 3.5
File: R284

Golden Carol, The (The Three Kings)

DESCRIPTION: "Now is Christmas y-come, Father and Son together in one, Holy Ghost us be on...." The song announces Christmas, then tells the story of the "three kings" who came, visited Herod, saw Jesus, offered their gifts, and went home another way

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1475 (Oxford, Bodleian ms. Eng. Poet. e. 1)
KEYWORDS: Jesus Bible Christmas carol religious MiddleEnglish
FOUND IN: Britain(England)
REFERENCES (10 citations):
Greene-TheEarlyEnglishCarols, #125, pp. 82-86, "(no title)" (3 texts plus variant readings)
Rickert-AncientEnglishChristmasCarols, pp. 110-112, "Now is Christmas Ycome" (1 text); pp.112-115, "Reges de Saba venient/Now is the Twelfth Day ycome" (a sort of parallel/sequel to the preceding)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 107, "The Three Kings" (1 text)
Dearmer/VaughnWilliams/Shaw-OxfordBookOfCarols 173, "The Golden Carol" (1 text plus a tune by Vaughan Williams)
Brown/Robbins-IndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse, #2333; an Epiphany version is #2339
DigitalIndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse #3763 and #3769
MANUSCRIPT: {MSCambridgeS54}, Cambridge, St. John's College MS. S.54 (Cambridge University 259), folio 7 [IMEV #2339]
MANUSCRIPT: {MSEngPoetE1}, Oxford, Bodleian Library, MS. Eng. Poet. e.1 (Bodley 29734), folio 31 [IMEV #2339]
MANUSCRIPT: {MSHarley541}, London, British Library, MS. Harley 541, folio 214 [IMEV #2333]
ST OBB107 (Partial)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "We Three Kings (Kings of Orient)" (subject)
cf. "Be mery all that be present, Omnes de Saba venient" (lyric on Herod and the wise men, from Richard Hill's manuscript; see Roman Dyboski, _Songs, Carols, and Other Miscellaneous Poems from the Balliol Ms. 354, Richard Hill's Commonplace Book_, #1, p. 1) (lyrics)
NOTES [1509 words]: This is essentially the story told in Matt. 2:1-12. It should be noted, however, that
1. There is no reason to believe that there were three visitors from the east. All we know is that they gave three gifts -- and although one of the gifts was gold, it certainly wasn't enough to make Jesus's family rich.
2. They may not even have been from the east (the orient); it was the star which was in the east if anything was (Albright/Mann, p. 12, suggest that Greek , "anatole," should be rendered "rising" -- i.e. the reading is that the visitors saw the star "in/at the rising." Both the major Greek lexicons -- Liddell & Scott for classical Greek and Baur for Koine Greek -- agree with this interpretation, although there are some New Testament uses where "east," or the direction of dawn, clearly seems indicated. Beare, p. 77, says that the use of a plural in verse 1 and a singular in verse 2 means that the word in verse 2 must mean rising). The only real indication that the visitors were from the east is the fact that magi were mostly Babylonian.
3. The visitors were not kings and were not wise men. They were "magi" -- Babylonian mystics and perhaps astrologers. Jews would generally consider magi to be evil sorcerers (the Greek word , "magos," apart from the uses in Matt. 2:1, 7, 16, is used only in Acts 13:6, 8 of Elymias, clearly an evil magician. Simon Magus, a magician who claimed to be "the great power of God," worked , "magia," in Acts 8, although he isn't called a "Magos" explicitly in Acts; he was only called by the title "magus" in post-canonical works). Albright/Mann are among the many commentators who explicitly translate as "magi," not "wise men" as in the King James Version; the New English Bible's
"astrologers" is better but still a little deceiving. Fenton, p. 46, demonstrates that it was understood as "magician" or "diviner" in the early church; Ignatius of Antioch, in the early second century, says that the appearance of the star signaled the fading of the power of magic.

Beare, p. 77, declares that "the magoi from the east are undoubtedly introduced in the character of astrologers, perhaps from Iran, but more likely from Arabia, the source of gold, frankincense, and myrrh, at least according to Hebrew poetic convention (Isa. 60:6; Cant. 3:6...). The early iconographic tradition represents them uniformly as Persians. 'But attempts to determine the country intended are guesses' (McNeile)."

According to James, p. xxvii, "It is not before the sixth century that [the Magi are]... described [as kings], at least commonly, though Kerhrer quotes a passage from Tertullian (adv. Marc. III.13) which is capable of being interpreted in that sense."

What's more, the Latin Vulgate -- the official Bible of the Catholic Church at the time this was written, when few in the West knew Greek -- correctly renders the word in Matthew 2:1 as "magi," not kings or wise men.

I wouldn't bet more than I can afford on their other gifts being frankincense and myrrh, either (there is no question about the meaning of the word "gold"). The word , "libanos," "frankincense," is found in the New Testament only here and in Rev. 18:13 -- and it is also the name of the Lebanon mountain range, so it might mean "the thing from Lebanon." (Although the word tus, the word used in the Latin Vulgate translation which was "the Bible" of England at the time this was written, unquestionably means "incense.")

"Myrrh" is even more interesting. It's also a rare word ( , "smyrna") which occurs only here and in John 19:39. And it too can be a place name, Smyrna (which also occurs a couple of times in the New Testament), so it could be "the thing from Smyrna." Also, two very important manuscripts, D and W* (both from probably the fifth century, making them two of the six oldest copies of this passage) read , "zmyrna." This is probably just an orthographic variant -- Greek, like English, was a bit inconsistent in its use of "s" and "z" -- but still, there is variation in the manuscripts. Here again, though, the Vulgate is clear: it reads "myrrh." Thus the carol is unquestionably right about what the Vulgate reads; it's just that the Greek is slightly more doubtful.

Albright/Mann, p. 13, make the interesting comment that "Myrrh was certainly suitable for a king, and was used at his anointing (cf. Ps[alm] xlv 8). But the gifts were also part of the common stock-in-trade of magi, and magical charms were written with myrrh-ink..... Regarded as the tools of a trade, offerings of the magi would not be gifts of homage, but a declaration of dissociation from former practice."

Greene-Earliest, p. 377, says that only one of the four copies of this appears as "a true carol with a burden," and that the burden does not metrically match the text, although he also notes a discontinuity in another copy, meaning it might have had a (more suitable) burden. But the "probability is that the original form of the piece was that of a song without a burden, particularly as the 'bob-and-wheel' type of stanza is not frequently combined with a burden." All this is true and argues against this song being traditional. But we can certainly say that it was popular.

The Oxford Book of Carols cites this as from Bodleian MS. Eng. Poet. e.1 (Bodleian 29734), a famous anthology of about 75 poems (Chambers, p. 96, says 75, 63 of them in English, 28 four elsewhere). Notably, if I count correctly, 17 of the 75 pieces in the Bodleian manuscript are also found in Oxford, Balliol Library 354, the Richard Hill manuscript (although Greene-Selection, p. 179, says there are only thirteen -- either way, a very high number; that's almost a quarter of the total!) I don't have an explanation for this link, but it strikes me as probably significant.

There are also, according to Greene-Selection, eight pieces shared with Sloane 2593 (Chambers, p. 96, says just six), the famous Sloane Lyrics; for more on manuscript Sloane 2593, see the notes to "Robyn and Gandeleyn" [Child 115].

Greene-Selection, p. 169, dates the Bodleian manuscript to the late fifteenth century, and is of the opinion that it is from the Beverly Minster in Yorkshire (a suggestion tentatively accepted also by Julia Boffey on p. 224 of FeinEtAl); Boffey considers it a choir songbook (Boklund-Lagopolou, p. 207). Greene suspects an interest in St. John the Evangelist, based on the presence of two carols to St. John. Greene-Selection declares that "No other MS. except Balliol 354 has correspondences with so many of the known carol manuscripts." On p. 180 he concludes that it was used both before and after the Reformation, because it includes pieces on Thomas Becket which were defaced. A few pieces have music, although most do not.

Bodleian MS. Eng. Poet. e.1 includes the following songs which are in the Index:

- Assay Thy Friend Ere Thou Hast Need (Brown/Robbins #3820; also in Balliol 354)
- Bring Us Good Ale (Brown/Robbins #549)
- The First Day of Yule (Brown/Robbins #3343; also in Sloane 2593)
- Gabriel of High Degree (Brown/Robbins #889; also in Balliol 354)
Gabriel That Angel Bright (Brown/Robbins #890; also in Balliol 354)
The Golden Carol (The Three Kings) (Brown/Robbins #2333)
The Gossips' Meeting (Brown/Robbins #1362; also in Balliol 354)
In Bethlehem, that Fair City (Brown/Robbins #1471; also in Balliol 354)
Mary for the Love of Thee (Brown/Robbins #2098; also in Balliol 354)
O Mary Mother (Brown/Robbins #1219/2211; also in Balliol 354 and Sloane 2593)
Of a Rose, a Lovely Rose (Brown/Robbins #1914; also in Balliol 354)
Pray for Us, Thou Prince of Peace (Brown/Robbins #3776; also in Balliol 354)
Some Be Merry and Some Be Sad (Women, Women, Love of Women) (Brown/Robbins #3171; also in Balliol 354)
The Salutation Carol (Brown/Robbins #3736; also in Balliol 354)
This Endris Night (Brown/Robbins #3627; also in Balliol 354 and Sloane 2593)
Tyrle, Tyrlo (Tyrley, Tyrlow) (Brown/Robbins #112; also in Balliol 354)

The manuscript also shares with Balliol 354 something very similar to "Things Impossible"; see the notes to that song. It also has "Holly and Ivy Made a Great Party" (Brown/Robbins #1225; for this see the notes on "The Holly and the Ivy"), "Timor Mortis Conturbat Me" (Brown/Robbins #375), a boar's head song (although not the usual "Boar's Head Carol"; it begins "At the beginynng of the mete"; Brown/Robbins #436), another Gabriel song, "Gabriel that angell bryght," shared with the Hill manuscript (Brown/Robbins #890); and other secular poems on religious themes. However, the Index of Middle English Verse says that the version with the Oxford Book's first line is from British Library MS Harley 541, folio 214a. One may suspect the Dearmer/VaughnWilliams/Shaw-OxfordBookOfCarols version of being conflated.
The text is also found in the small booklet Cambridge, St. John's College MS. S.54, which has been suspected of being a traveling musician's notebook. For more about this manuscript, see the notes to "Mary for the Love of Thee (Ay, Ay, Ay, Ay)." - RBW

Bibliography

- Albright/Mann: William F. Albright and C. S. Mann, Matthew (The Anchor Bible 26), Doubleday, 1971
- Boklund-Lagopolou: Karin Boklund-Lagopolou, I have a yong suster: Popular song and Middle English lyric, Four Courts Press, 2002
- Chambers: E. K. Chambers, English Literature at the Close of the Middle Ages, Oxford, 1945, 1947
- FeinEtAl: Susanna Fein, editor, My Wyl and My Wrytyng: Essays on John the Blind Audelay, Medieval Institute Publications, 2009

Golden Chain

DESCRIPTION: "Now the golden chain is broken, And you are forever free, I have not one tie or token That I've kept (to?) remember thee." "Take them as a vow I send you: You to me (are) forever dead." "You have wrecked a heart that loved you." And you'll be sorry, too

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (Arnold-FolkSongsofAlabama)

KEYWORDS: love betrayal separation

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Arnold-FolkSongsofAlabama, p. 53, "Golden Chain" (1 text, 1 tune)
Golden Gate Firmly Locked

DESCRIPTION: "Fellow countrymen, four hundred million strong," the Chinese are often skilled. They want to come to America, "but are barred." The singer wishes for wings to fly past the barbarians

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1911 (Jinshan ge ji, according to Cohen)
KEYWORDS: emigration discrimination China

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, p. 666, "[Golden Gate Firmly Locked]" (1 text)

NOTES [19 words]: For some background on Chinese immigration and the Chinese Exclusion Act, see the notes to "The Heathen Chinese." - RBW

Last updated in version 2.7

Golden Glove, The (Dog and Gun) [Laws N20]

DESCRIPTION: A lady is to be married, but finds she prefers the farmer who is to give her away. She pleads illness and calls off the wedding. She claims she has lost a glove (which she placed on the farmer's land) and will marry whoever finds it. The rest is obvious

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1825 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 28(181))
KEYWORDS: clothes courting marriage trick

REFERENCES (44 citations):
Laws N20, "The Golden Glove (Dog and Gun)"
Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, pp. 290-292, "The Golden Glove, or The Squire of Tamworth" (1 text)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #95, p. 2, "The Golden Glove" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan1 166, "The Golden Glove" (7 texts, 3 tunes)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 583, "Golden Glove" (1 text)
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #17, "The Golden Glove" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cologne/Morrison-WiltshireFolkSongs, pp. 58-59, "The Golden Glove" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kidsen-TraditionalTunes, pp. 49-51,173, "The Golden Glove" (2 texts, 3 tunes)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #26, "Golden Glove" (1 text, 1 tune)
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 229-231, "Dog and Gun (The Golden Glove)" (1 text plus 2 extracts and fragments of 2 more, 1 tune)
Randolph 71, "With Her Dog and Gun" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 95-97, "With Her Dog and Gun" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 71A)
Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 64, "Dog and Gun" (2 texts)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 73, "The Dog and the Gun" (1 text plus an excerpt and mention of 1 more, 1 tune)
List-SingingAboutIt-FolkSongsInSouthernIndiana, pp. 183-187, "The Farmer and the Damsel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Musick-JAF-TheOldAlbumOf-William-A-Larkin 24, "The Dog and the Gun" (1 text)
Flanders/Brown-VermontFolkSongsAndBallads, pp. 117-118, "The Dog and Gun" (1 text, 1 tune)
Flanders/Ballard/Brown/Barry-NewGreenMountainSongster, pp. 29-31, "Dog and Gun" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Thompson-APioneerSongster 26, "The Dog and the Gun" (1 text)
Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales, pp. 416-417, "The Lost Glove" (1 text) Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 197, "Dog and Gun" (1 text plus mention of 1 more)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 197, "Dog and Gun" (2 excerpts, 2 tunes)
Chappell-FolksongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 60, "The Golden Glove" (1 text, 1 tune)
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolksongsOfTheSouthwest 80, "The Jolly Farmer" (1 text, 1 tune) Hudson-FolksongsOfMississippi 43, pp. 158-159, "The Golden Glove" (1 text, lacking the beginning explaining the reason for the lady's behavior)
Hudson-FolkTunesFromMississippi 24, "Dog and Gun (The Golden Glove)" (1 text, 1 tune) Scarborough-ASongCatcherInSouthernMountains, pp. 227-230, "The Golden Glove" (1 text plus a fragment, with local titles "Lady Lost Her Glove," "The Dog and Gun"; 2 tunes on pp. 416-417) Wyman/Brockway-LonesomeSongs-KentuckyMountains-Vol1, p. 49, "The Lady and the Glove" (1 text, 1 tune)
Thomas-DevilsDitties, pp. 170-171, "The Dog and Gun" (1 text, 1 tune)
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 145, "The Golden Glove (or, The Dog and the Gun)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lady Gay." - BS
I'll bet that lasted about a week.... Many of the versions I've seen omit that. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0
File: LN20

Golden Gullies of the Palmer, The

DESCRIPTION: "Then roll the swag and blanket up, and let us haste away To the Golden Palmer, boys, where everyone they say Can get his ounce of gold, or it may be more, a day...." A cheerful call to set out for the gold fields of the Palmer River

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1984
KEYWORDS: river gold
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1875 - Discovery of gold in the Palmer River in Queensland. The influx of people from all over the world meant that few grew rich -- and many starved in the inhospitable terrain
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia, pp. 100-101, "The Golden Gullies of the Palmer" (1 text, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Marching Through Georgia" (tune & meter)
File: FaE100

Golden Hind, The

DESCRIPTION: Jim Harding ships on board the Golden Hind bound for Bahia. On the return trip with a cargo from Barbados the Golden Hind runs into a snow storm off Cape Race. Harding dies in the storm as the Golden Hind makes St John's.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA/Leach)
KEYWORDS: grief death sea ship storm sailor
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 922-924, "The Golden Hind" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9938
RECORDINGS:
Jim Rice, "The Golden Hind" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
NOTES [115 words]: Obviously not Francis Drake's Golden Hind. Bahia is on the coast of Brazil. - BS
Although Francis Drake is not part of Newfoundland history, a ship named the Golden Hind was. Humphrey Gilbert, who is considered to have founded Newfoundland as a colony (although his expedition was a disaster in which Gilbert himself died), sailed in a convoy of five ships, one of which was a 40 to vessel called the Golden Hind, which survived the voyage (see Paul O'Neill, _The Oldest City: The Story of St. John's, Newfoundland_, Press Procepic, 1975, pp. 38-39). That obviously isn't the Golden Hind of this song, either, but I would suspect there were later Newfoundland ships named for her. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: Pea922

Golden Ring Around My Susan Girl

DESCRIPTION: "Golden ring around (the/my) Susan Girl (x3), All the way around the Susan girl." "Take a little girl and give her a whirl...." "Round and around, Susan girl...." "Do-si-do left, Susan Girl...." "All run away with the Susan girl...."

AUTHOR: unknown
Golden Slippers (I)

DESCRIPTION: "Oh. my golden slippers am laid away, Kase I don't 'spect to wear 'em till my weddin' day... O 'dem golden slippers... Golden slippers Ise gwine to wear To walk de golden street." The singer reflects on things he cannot have now but will have in heaven

AUTHOR: James A. Bland

EARLIEST DATE: 1879 (sheet music published by John F. Perry & Co. of Boston); text copied into the log of the Andrew Hicks in that same year

KEYWORDS: clothes religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (13 citations):
Jackson-PopularSongsOfNineteenthCenturyAmerica, pp. 144-147, "Oh, dem Golden Slippers!" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 571, "Golden Slippers" (1 tune pus a text excerpt, unrelated to the text in Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3)
Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 38-39=Wolford/Richmond/Tillson-PlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 226-227, "Dem Golden Slippers" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scarbrough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 172, "Raccoon Up in de 'Simmon Tree" (1 text, 1 tune, with the chorus of "Golden Slippers (I)" though the sole verse is "Raccoon up in de 'simmon tree, Possum on de ground...."); this is followed by two more versions of the 'simmon tree verse
Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 255-256, "Golden Slippers" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 250, "Golden Slippers" (1 text)
Emerson-StephenFosterAndCo, pp. 41-42, "Oh, Dem Golden Slippers!" (1 text)
Messerli-ListenToTheMockingbird, pp. 184-186, "Oh, Dem Golden Slippers" (1 text)
Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #130, "Oh! Dem Golden Slippers" (1 text)
Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, p. 399, "Oh dem Golden Slippers"

DT, GOLDSLIP*

Aline Waites & Robin Hunter, _The Illustrated Victorian Songbook_, Michael Joseph Ltd., 1984, pp. 87-89, "Oh Dem Golden Slippers" (1 text, 1 tune, plus a plate of part of the color cover of the sheet music version)

ST RJ19144 (Full)

Roud #13941

RECORDINGS:
Wolfe Ballard & Claude Samuels, "Golden Slippers" (Broadway 8036, late 1920s)
H. M. Barnes & his Blue Ridge Ramblers, "Golden Slippers" (Brunswick 313, 1929)
Al Bernard, "Oh, Dem Golden Slippers" (Grey Gull 4209/Radiex 4209/Van Dyke 74209 [as Buddy Moore], 1928)
Harry C. Browne w. the Knickerbocker Male Quartet, "Oh! Dem Golden Slippers" (Columbia A-2116, 1916)
Vernon Dalhart, "Golden Slippers" (Durium [UK] 9-4, 1933)
Vernon Dalhart & Co. "O Dem Golden Slippers" (Edison 52174, 1928)
Dykes' Magic City Trio, "Golden Slippers" (Brunswick 128, 1927)
Edgewater Sabbath Singers, "Golden Slippers" (Paramount 3000, 1927)
Roy Harvey & the North Carolina Ramblers, "Oh Dem Golden Slippers" (Champion 45017, 1931)
Kanawha Singers, "Them Golden Slippers" (Brunswick 189/Vocalion 5173, 1927)
Minster Singers, "Oh! Dem Golden Slippers" (Gramophone Co. [UK] GC-4466, n.d.)
Chubby Parker, "Oh Dem Golden Slippers" (Silvertone 25102, c. 1927)
[John Wallace "Babe") Spangler & [Dave] Pearson, "Golden Slippers" (OKe, unissued, 1929)
West Virginia Ramblers, "Golden Slippers" (Champion 45017, 1935)

SAME TUNE:
Golden City (Wheeler-SteamboatinDays, pp. 51-52)

NOTES [24 words]: James A. Bland also composed "Carry Me Back to Old Virginny" and "In the Evening by the Moonlight"; for more about him, see those entries. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.0
File: RJ19144

Golden Vanity, The [Child 286]

DESCRIPTION: A ship is threatened by a foreign galley. The ship's cabin boy, promised gold and the captain's daughter as wife, sinks the galley. He comes back to his ship; the captain will not take him from the water. (The ending is variable)

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1685 (broadside)
KEYWORDS: sea battle death promise lie abandonment betrayal trick
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
c. 1552-1618 - Life of Sir Walter Raleigh (one of whose ships was named "The Sweet Trinity")
FOUND IN: Britain(England(All),Scotland(Aber,Bord)) Ireland US(All) Canada(Mar,Newf,Ont)
REFERENCES (105 citations):
Child 286, "The Sweet Trinity (The Golden Vanity)" (3 texts, 2 tunes) {Bronson's #52, #55}
Bronson 286, "The Sweet Trinity (The Golden Vanity)" (111 versions+1 in addenda)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 286, "The Golden Vanity" (7 versions: #2, #27, #43, #71, #74, #94, #102)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #116, p. 1, "The Lowlands O"; #119, p. 2, "The Lowlands Low" (2 texts)
Greig/Duncan1 37, "The Golden Vanity" (5 texts, 4 tunes) {D=Bronson's #13}
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 450-451, "The Lowlands Low" (1 text)
Porter/Gower-Jeannie-Robertson-EmergentSingerTransformativeVoice #30, pp. 165-166, "The Golden Victory" (1 text, 1 tune)
Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs, pp. 182-183, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 199-200, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 444
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 51, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text)
Purslow-TheConstantLovers, pp. 37-38, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 2 tunes)
Hamers-GarnersGay, pp. 78-79, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #9, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune)
OShaughnessy-MoreFolkSongsFromLincolnshire 7, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune)
Barry/Eckstorm/Smyth-BritishBalladsFromMaine pp. 339-347, "The Golden Vanity" (4 texts plus 2 fragments, 2 tunes) {Bronson's #108, #66}
Flanders-AncientBalladsTraditionallySungInNewEngland4, pp. 188-263 "The Sweet Trinity or the Golden Vanity" (39 texts plus 11 fragments, 18 tunes) {E=Bronson's #71, HH=#64}
Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 103-106, "The Goulden Vanitee" (1 text, 1 tune)
{Bronson's #53}
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 97-100, "The Golden Vanity" (3 texts)
Randolph 38, "The Lowlands Low" (4 texts plus a fragment, 3 tunes) {A=Bronson's #69, D=#48, E=#51}
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 56-59, "The Lowlands Low" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 38A) {Bronson's #69}
Abrahams/Riddle-ASingerAndHerSongs, pp. 142-146, "The Golden Willow Tree" (1 text, 1 tune, plus some excerpts)
Davis-TraditionalBalladsOfVirginia 47, "The Sweet Trinity (The Golden Vanity)" (4 texts plus 2 fragments, 1 tune entitled "The Turkish-Rogherlee and the Yellow Golden Tree, or Lowlands Low") {Bronson's #109}
Davis-MoreTraditionalBalladsOfVirginia 43, pp. 339-343, "The Sweet Trinity (The Golden Vanity)"
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 47, "The Sweet Trinity (The Golden Vanity)" (3 texts plus mention of 2 more)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 47, "The Sweet Trinity (The Golden Vanity)" (6 excerpts, 6 tunes)
Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 21, "The Green Willow Tree" (2 texts, 1 tune) {Bronson's #50}
Jones-MinstrelOfTheAppalachians-Bascom-Lamar-Lunsford, pp. 196-197, "Merrie Golden Tree" (1 text, 1 tune)
Richardson/Spaeth-AmericanMountainSongs, pp. 28-29, "The Mary Golden Tree" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #97}
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #174, "The Sweet Trinity (The Golden Vanity)" (2 texts)
Hudson-FolksongsOfMississippi 25, pp. 125-127, "The Sweet Trinity (The Golden Vanity)" (1 text)
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 56, "There Was a Little Ship" (1 text, 1 tune)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, pp. 38-40, "The Merry Golden Tree" (1 text, 1 tune)
Bronner/Eskin-FolksongAlivePart1 5, "Golden Willow Tree" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wolfe/Boswell-FolkSongsOfMiddleTennessee 20, pp. 37-39, "There Was a Ship Sailing" (1 text, 1 tune)
Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol1, pp. 37-38, "The Golden Willow Tree, or The Turkish Rebille" (1 text, 1 tune)
Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol2, pp. 86-87, "The Golden Willow Tree" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scarborough-ASongCatcherInSouthernMountains, pp. 184-189, "The Sweet Trinity; The Golden Vanity" (2 texts; the first, with no title, is from Randolph; the second has local title "The Golden Willow Tree"; 1 tune on pp. 406-407) {Bronson's #107}
Shellans-FolkSongsOfTheBlueRidgeMountains, pp. 62-63, "The Lonesome Sea Ballad" (1 text, 1 tune)
Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices, p. 10, "The Little Ship" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brewster-BalladsAndSongsOfIndiana 25, "The Sweet Trinity (The Golden Vanity)" (3 texts, 1 tune) {Bronson's #68}
List-SingingAboutIt-FolkSongsInSouthernIndiana, pp. 291-294, "The Lowland Sea" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 82, "The Lowlands Low" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #110, related to "The Arkansas Traveller"}
Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore, pp. 165-168, "The Sweet Trinity (The Golden Vanity)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Flanders/Brown-VermontFolkSongsAndBallads, pp. 230-231, "The Green Willow Trees" (1 text)
Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 136-137, "The Gallant Victory or Lowlands Low" (1 short text, with no hint of the Captain's refusal to save the boy; he is hauled aboard and dies, 1 tune)
Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp. 101-106, "The Sweet Trinity, or The Golden Vanity" (3 texts plus 2 fragments, 4 tunes) {Bronson's #44, #17, #19, #18}
Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 10, "Sweet Trinity; or The Golden Vanity" (1 text, called "Golden Vallady" by the singer, 1 tune) {Bronson's #21}
Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 6, "The Golden Vanity" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 19, "The Golden Vanity" (2 fragments)
Vičár/Panagapka-SongsNorthWoodsSungByOJAbbott 64, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune)
Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen, pp. 154-156, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #45}
Harlow-ChantingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 35-36, "Golden Vanitee" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, pp. 153-154, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 62-64, "Lowlands Low" (3 texts, 3 tunes) [AbEd, pp. 58-60]
Logan-APedlarsPack, pp. 42-46, "The Goulden Vanitye (Golden Vanity, or the Low Lands Low)" (2 texts)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 667-670, "The Sweet Trinity or The Golden Vanity" (3 texts)
Leach-HeritageBookOfBallads, pp. 89-90, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text)
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 8, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wyman/Brockway-LonesomeSongs-KentuckyMountains-Vol1, p. 72, "The Mary Golden Tree, or The Lonesome Low" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #37}
Cambiaire-EastTennesseeWestVirginiaMountainBallads, pp. 93-94, "The Merry Golden Tree" (1
Ritchie-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernAppalachians, pp. 74-75, "Lonesome Sea" (1 text, 1 tune) {cf. Bronson’s #41, which is also by Jean Ritchie and uses the same tune but a different title and slightly different words}

McNeil-SouthernFolkBalladsVol1, pp. 34-36, "The Green Willow Tree" (1 text, 1 tune)

Frank-NewBookOfPirateSongs 7, "Sir Walter Raleigh Sailing in the Lowlands" (1 text; #7 in the first edition); also 8, "The Sweet Trinity" (2 texts, 1 tune, with texts and tunes from different sources; #4 in the first edition)

Friedman-Viking/PenguinBookOfFolkBallads, p. 409, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text)

Cazden/Haufrecht/Studer-FolkSongsOfTheCatskills 67, "The Bold Trellitee" (1 text, 1 tune)

Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 132, "The ‘Golden Vanity’" (1 text)

Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 104, "Lowland Low (or, The Golden Willow Tree)" (1 text, 1 tune)

Warner-FolkSongsAndBalladsOfTheEasternSeaboard, p. 51-52, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text)

Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, pp. 108-109, "A Ship Set Sail for North America" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson’s #85}

Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 41, "The Golden Vanity" (7 texts plus 3 fragments, 11 tunes) {Bronson’s #94, #93, #88, #104, #43, #46, #78, #90, #99, #39, #106}

Sharp-OneHundredEnglishFolksongs 14, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson’s #1}

Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 27, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson’s #1}

Niles-BalladBookOfJohnJacobNiles 61, "The Sweet Trinity (The Golden Vanity)" (1 text, 1 tune)

Sharp/Karpeles-EightyEnglishFolkSongs 28, "The Weeping Willow Tree (The Golden Vanity)" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson’s #94}

VaughanWilliams/Lloyd-PenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs, pp. 46-47, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson’s #35}

Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 138-139, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune)

Fowke/Mills/Blume-CanadasStoryInSong, pp. 38-40, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune)

Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs 82, "The ‘Green Willow Tree’" (1 text, 1 tune)

Karpeles-FolkSongsFromNewfoundland 23, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text fragment, 1 tune)

Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario 4, "The Golden Vanity"; Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario 61, "The Green Willow Tree" (2 texts, 2 tunes)

Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 210-212, "The Low-Down, Lonesome Low" (1 text, 1 tune)

Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 95, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune) {should be Bronson’s #73, but heavily reworked}

Chase-AmericanFolkTalesAndSongs, pp. 120-121, "The Merry Golden Tree" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson’s #74}

Abrahams/Foss-AngloAmericanFolksongStyle, pp. 79-80, "Golden Willow Tree" (1 text, 1 tune)

Pound-AmericanBalladsAndSongs, 10, pp. 24-26, "The Lowlands Low" (1 text)

Cox-FolkSongsSouth 32, "The Sweet Trinity (The Golden Vanity)" (2 texts plus a fragment)

Bush-FSofCentralWestVirginiaVol1, pp. 88-90, "The Green Willow Tree" (1 text, 1 tune)

Gainer-FolkSongsFromTheWestVirginiaHills, pp. 96-97, "The Golden Willow Tree" (1 text, 1 tune)

Coleman/Bregman-SongsOfAmericanFolks, pp. 16-17, "The Golden Willow Tree" (1 text, 1 tune)

Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #18, "The Golden Vanity" (2 texts, 1 tune)

Ashton-RealSailorSongs, #75, "Sir Walter Raleigh Sailing in the Low-lands" (1 text)

Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs 22, "Sir Walter Raleigh Sailing in the Lowlands" (1 text)

Scott-ACollectorsNotebook-31TraditionalSongs, p. 22, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune, much-rearranged)

Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 64-66, "The Sweet Trinity"; "The Golden Willow Tree" (1 text plus a fragment)

Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 172, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text, 1 tune)

Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 213, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text)

Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex, ZN2370, "Sir Walter Raleigh ha’s built a Ship"
DT 286, VANTYGL1* VANTIGL2* VANTIGL3* VANTIGL4* (VANTYGL9)
James P. Leary, Compiler and Annotator, _Wisconsin Folklore_ University of Wisconsin Press, 2009, article "Kentucky Folksong in Northern Wisconsin" by Asher E. Treat, pp. 229-230, "A Ship Set Sail for North America" (1 text, 1 tune, sung by Mrs. M. G. Jacobs, Maud Jacobs, Pearl Jacobs Borusky) {Bronson's #85}
Walter de la Mare, _Come Hither_, revised edition, 1928; #411, "The Golden Vanity" (1 text)
Henry Randall Waite, _Carmina Collegensia: A Complete Collection of the Songs of the American Colleges_ first edition 1868, expanded edition, Oliver Ditson, 1876, p. 58, "Lowlands" (a two-verse fragment, on of which is from "The Golden Vanity" and the other about "Pompey" although it’s too short to know which Pompey song is meant)
ST C286 (Full)
Roud #122
RECORDINGS:
Almanac Singers, "The Golden Vanity" (General 5016B, 1941; on Almanac02, Almanac03, AlmanacCD1)
Horton Barker, "The Turkish Rebilee" (on Barker01) {Bronson's #74}
Justus Begley, "Golden Willow Tree" (AFS, 1937; on KMM)
Bill Cameron, "The Golden Vanity" (on FS5) {Bronson's #10}
The Carter Family, "Sinking In The Lonesome Sea" (Conqueror 8644/Okeh 03160, 1936; Columbia 37756) {Bronson's #73}
Dodie Chalmers, "The Golden Victory (The Golden Vanity) (on FSBBAL2) {Bronson's #33}
Johnny Doughty, "The Golden Vanity" (on JDoughty01, HiddenE)
Warde Ford, "The Lowlands Low" [fragment] (AFS 4194 A2, 1938; in AMMEM/Cowell) {Bronson's #20}
Sam Hazel, "The Golden Willow Tree" (AFS 2095 B2, 3096 A, 3096 B1, 1939)
[Mrs.?] Ollie Jacobs, "A Ship Set Sail for North America" (AFS, 1941; on LC58) {Bronson's #86}
Paul Joines, "Green Willow Tree" (on Persis1)
Joe Kelly, "The Golden Vanity" (on Ontario1)
Bascom Lamar Lunford, "The Merry Golden Tree" (Riverside RLP 12-645, 1956)
James Maher, "The Golden Vanity" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
Paralee McCloud, "The Little Ship" (on FolkVisions1)
Jimmy Morris, "The Golden Willow Tree" (AFS, 1937; on LC58) {Bronson's #105}
New Lost City Ramblers, "Sinking in the Lonesome Sea" (on NLCR06, NLCR11)
Frank Proffitt, "Lowlands Low" [excerpt] (on USWarnerColl01)
Almeda Riddle, "Merry Golden Tree" (on LomaxCD1707)
Jean Ritchie, "The Merry Golden Tree" (on JRitchie01) {Bronson's #41}
Pete Seeger, "The Golden Vanity" (on PeteSeeger16) (Commodore 3006, n.d. -- but this may be the same recording as the General disc by the Almanac Singers)
Rob Walker, "The Lowlands Low" [fragment] (AFS 4194 A3, 1938; in AMMEM/Cowell) {Bronson's #49}
Doug Wallin, "The Golden Vanity" (on Wallins1)
BROADSIDES:
NLScotland, L.C.Fol.70(122a), "Lowlands Low," Poet's Box (Glasgow), 1877; also L.C.Fol.70(103b), "Lowlands Low"
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Louisiana Lowlands" (lyrics)
SAME TUNE:
Sinking of the Great Ship (Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2, #287, pp. 662-663, the "A" text)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Lonesome Low
The Merry Golden Tree
The Sweet Kumadee
The Weep-Willow Tree
The Turkish Revoloo
Cabin Boy
Lowland Sea
Ye Gowden Vanitie
NOTES [339 words]: Connecting this song with actual events is impossible even if one accepts Sir Walter Raleigh as the murderous captain. The following dates may, however, provide some guidelines:
1453 - Fall of Constantinople gives the Turks good access to the Mediterranean (Lowland) Sea.
1571 - Battle of Lepanto cripples the Turkish navy.
1588 - Voyage of the Spanish Armada. Spanish navy crippled.

As far as I know, every version lists the enemy as Spanish, Turkish, or French. It should be noted, however, that the Barbary pirates were often called "Turks," since the Ottoman Empire had (often nominal) sovereignty over them.
Incidentally, while this song does not have a historical setting, the plot has historical antecedents; Bowers, p. 24 and note, mentions a 1605 pamphlet, "Two most unnatural and bloodie Murthers: The one by Maister Cauerly... the other by mistris Browne and her servant Peter." Apparently Peter, a servant, had been promised land and the girl's hand; when her father reneged, the young couple turned to murder.
The sinking of a ship by a youth is also apparently attested: Rodger, p. 46, says that a Saracen vessel threatened the fleet of Richard I on his way to the Third Crusade, but that one report claims it was sunk by a boy with an auger. Unfortunately, Rodger does not cite any primary sources for this account, and I don't believe sinking a ship with an auger is actually possible (by that time, ships had pumps and carpenters to plug leaks). I suspect that one of Rodger's sources actually heard a distorted version of this song.
Somewhat later, at the Battle of Sluys in 1340, the English fleet of Edward III "even [had] divers who tried to sink the enemy ships by boring holes in their hulls below water," according to Seward, p. 44. Sluys was a great English victory, but if the divers accomplished anything, I haven't heard of it. - RBW

In Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario 4 the drowned cabin boy returns as a ghost and -- never having said he would not sink it -- sinks the captain's ship. - BS
Bibliography

- Bowers: Fredson Bowers, Elizabethan Revenge Tragedy, 1940 (I use the 1977 Princeton paperback edition)
- Seward: Desmond Seward, The Hundred Years War: The English in France, 1337-1453, 1978 (I used the 1982 Atheneum paperback)

Last updated in version 6.1
File: C286

Golden Voyage, The
DESCRIPTION: "Listen awhile and I here will unfold What seemeth to promise promotion." A treasure had been lost at sea for 43 years. The "James and Mary" goes to the sight; working in harsh conditions far from shore for six weeks, they bring up the gold
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1908 (Flrth)
KEYWORDS: ship wreck money
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs 24, "The Golden Voyage; or, the prosperous Arrival of the James and Mary" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #V40809
File: PaSe024

Golden West
DESCRIPTION: "Many a miner searching for riches, Many a man gone to his last long rest, Surely virgin gold bewitches, Out under the sky of the golden west."
AUTHOR: unknown
 Gone Long Ago

DESCRIPTION: "Where are the friends that to me were so dear? Gone long ago... Hopes that I cherished are fled from me now, I am degraded for rum was my foe, Gone long ago, long ago." The singer looks back on what drink has cost him: His wife, his youth, his virtue

AUTHOR: (based on "Long, Long Ago by Thomas H. Bayly)

EARLIEST DATE: 1938 (Randolph)

KEYWORDS: drink warning parody

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Randolph 315, "Gone Long Ago" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7791

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Long, Long Ago!" (tune)

File: R315

Gonna Buy Me a Horse and Buggy

DESCRIPTION: "Gonna buy me a horse and buggy For to ride my gal about. Let her take the fresh morning air. Feed her on bananas, And she'll never get the gout. Tie a yaller ribbon in her hair."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida)

KEYWORDS: horse courting travel food hair clothes

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #103, "Gonna Buy Me a Horse and Buggy" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Roud #5003

File: Morr103

Gonna Tie My Pecker to My Leg

DESCRIPTION: Usually short fragments of "The Chisholm Trail" distinguished by the unique chorus which gives this variant its title.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE:

KEYWORDS: bawdy

FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW,So)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Cray-EroticMuse, pp. 192-194, "Gonna Tie My Pecker to My Leg" (3 texts)
Randolph/Legman-RollMeInYourArms I, pp. 203-204, "The Old Chisholm Trail"
Logsdon-WhorehouseBellsWereRinging 9, pp. 60-69, "Jimmie Tucker" (2 texts, 1 tune, both of which are really "The Old Chisholm Trail (II)," but in his notes are excerpts from "Gonna Tie My Pecker to My Leg")
DT, (CHISHLM)
Roud #3438

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Chisholm Trail (II)"

NOTES [16 words]: Versions are lumped with the similar "Old Chisholm Trail" in Randolph/Legman-RollMeInYourArms I. - EC

File: EM192
Goo Bye Me Lover

DESCRIPTION: "Goo'bye me lover, goo'bye me dear oh." "Charles a-go down ah he new courtin'-gal oh." "Bo Riley oh Boom-a-lay."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (Elder-FolksongsFromTobago)

KEYWORDS: grief courting infidelity love magic nonballad lover

FOUND IN: West Indies(Tobago)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Elder-FolksongsFromTobago 31, "Goo Bye Me Lover" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [57 words]: Elder-FolksongsFromTobago: "... the grief is over a human lover who deserts his woman for a new 'courting gal'.... [T]he reference in the chorus to Bo Riley, the great obeahman [shaman] .... One drummer spoke about the custom of women to employ the services of the powerful obeahmen to 'bring back' errant lovers to their home and children." - BS

Last updated in version 4.0

File: ElTo031

Goober Peas

DESCRIPTION: "Sitting by the roadside, on a summer's day... Lying in the shadows underneath the trees, Goodness how delicious, Eating goober peas." The southern soldier complains about army life, the battles, and the poor equipment; goober peas are his chief comfort

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1866

KEYWORDS: food Civilwar nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE,So)

REFERENCES (11 citations):
Jackson-PopularSongsOfNineteenthCenturyAmerica, pp. 73-75, "Goober Peas" (1 text, 1 tune)
Arnold-FolkSongsOfAlabama, p. 100, "Goober Peas" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 184-186, "Goober Peas" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber-SoldierSongsAndHomeFrontBalladsOfCivilWar, pp. 54-55, "Goober Peas" (1 text, 1 tune)
Arnett-IHearAmericaSinging, p. 82, "Goober Peas" (1 text, 1 tune)
Botkin-TreasuryOfSouthernFolklore, p. 715, "Eating Goober Peas" (1 text, 1 tune)
Messerli-ListenToTheMockingbird, pp. 158-160, "Goober Peas" (1 text)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, p. 351, "Goober Peas" (1 text)
Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 10, "Goober Peas" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 276, "Goober Peas" (1 text)

DT, GOOBPEAS

ST RJ19073 (Full)

Roud #11628

RECORDINGS:
New Lost City Ramblers, "Goober Peas" (on NLCREP4)

NOTES [200 words]: First published in 1866 (with words credited to A. Pindar and music to "P. Nutt"!), we know from outside references that this song was popular with southern soldiers in the Civil War. It is particularly accurate as a description of the last few years of the war, when the complete breakdown of Confederate industry left the soldier ragged, and the loss of farmland and rail lines left them starving. Peanuts -- "goober peas" -- often served as an emergency ration for soldiers in Georgia and other parts of the south.
The phrase in the song, "Mister, here's your mule" is usually treated as a joke about the fancy horses ridden by some officers, but E. Lawrence Abel, Singing the New Nation: How Music Shaped the Confederacy, 1861-1865, Stackpole, 2000, pp. 162-163, has another explanation. A sutler (called "Pies" of all things) worked near Jackson, Tennessee, and had a mule which drew his wagon. On one occasion, the soldiers hid the mule, then pretended to search for it, occasionally shouting out, "Mister, here's your mule." Supposedly they eventually returned it, and the phrase went into the soldiers' lexicon. Possible, of course, but it really sounds like an explanation after the fact. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.3

File: RJ19073
Good Ale (I)

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, good ale, thou art my darling, Thou art my joy both night and morning." Drink encourages the singer to work, to dream, to enjoy. But also "It is you that makes my friends my foes, It is you that makes me (wear old/pawn my) clothes...."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1790 (The Banquet of Thalia)

KEYWORDS: drink hardtimes poverty

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South),Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (7 citations):
- Greig/Duncan3 590, "The Braw Black Jug" (2 texts, 1 tune)
- Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 273, "Good Ale" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 91, "Old Brown Ale" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 263)
- Copper-ASongForEverySeason, pp. 276-277, "O, Good Ale" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Chappell/Wooldridge-OldEnglishPopularMusic II, p. 179, "Good Ale, Thou Art My Darling" (1 text, 1 tune)

ADDITIONAL: Frederick Atkinson, The Banquet of Thalia, Or, The Fashionable Songsters Pocket Memorial (York, 1790 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 84-85, "O Good Ale! Thou Art My Darling" ("The landlord he looks very big") (1 text)

Roud #203

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Harding B 11(2212), "O Good Ale Thou Art My Darling ("Long time I have been seeking thee"), H. Such (London), 1863-1885; also Harding B 25(1393), Harding B 15(225b), "O Good Ale! Thou Art My Darling"
- LOCSinging, as112320, "O! Dear Grog Thou Art My Darling," L. Deming (Boston), no date

ALTERNATE TITLES:
- Aul' Black Jug

NOTES [49 words]: Greig/Duncan3: "Learnt at Kinaldie about 1855.... Noted 19th December 1906."

As Duncan writes, in the same note, his version has "some affinity in words" with "O Good Ale Thou Art My Darling." Some verses agree and the chorus is close enough that I don't think Greig/Duncan3 should be split. - BS

Last updated in version 4.0

File: K273

Good Ale (II)

DESCRIPTION: "Good ale gars me sell my hose ... and pawn my sheen." The singer had six oxen in a plough but sold them all for "good ale." His children are ragged and might have been hanged but he has had them jailed instead.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan3)

KEYWORDS: poverty drink nonballad children prison animal clothes

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Greig/Duncan3 593, "Good Ale" (2 texts, 2 tunes)

Roud #6045

NOTES [17 words]: Greig/Duncan3: "Learnt from a farmservant fully twenty-six years ago. Noted 13th September 1907." - BS

Last updated in version 2.4

File: GrD3593

Good Boy, The

DESCRIPTION: "I have led a good life, full of peace and quiet. I shall have an old age, full of rum and riot. I have been a good boy, wed to work and study. I shall be an old man, ribald, coarse, and bloody." The once-good boy describes what he will now do

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)
NOTES [85 words]: Various authors have claimed this piece (the Digital Tradition lists Lemuel F. Parton, though Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag merely describes him as a source; Shay-BarroomBallads/PiousFriendsDrunkenCompanions also lists Lemuel F. Parton, and calls him a New York newspaperman. Spaeth offers Malcolm Ross and Ralph Albertson). Since versions differ dramatically in character, with only the first line or two being constant, one suspects that all these alleged "authors" are in fact customizing a generic piece. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.2
File: San203

Good bye Mursheen Durkin

DESCRIPTION: Molly Durkin marries Tim O'Shea. Cooney, "to keep my heart from breakin', I sailed to Americay." He finds no work in New York. He goes to San Francisco, finds gold and heads back to Ireland where "I'll marry Miss O'Kelly, Molly Durkin for to spite"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (for USBallinsloeFair, according to site irishtune.info, Irish Traditional Music Tune Index: Alan Ng's Tunography, ref. Ng #1331)

KEYWORDS: travel gold work drink America Ireland humorous rake emigration betrayal return

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 36, "Good bye Mursheen Durkin" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, MRSHDRK
Roud #9753

RECORDINGS:
Murty Rabbett, "Molly Durkin" (on USBallinsloeFair)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Muirton Durkin

NOTES [355 words]: O Lochlainn says "I learnt the last verse in childhood and 'invented' the other two finding nothing else but a fragment 'And now to end my story, I'll marry Queen Victorey'." What O Lochlainn remembers as the last verse appears to be the chorus. That fragment ending beats "I'll marry Miss O'Kelly" but otherwise "Molly Durkin" (on USBallinsloeFair) seems more authoritative.

In any case the description I used is from USBallinsloeFair. Here though is the description for O Lochlainn's version: Corney tires of courting and drinking locally. He goes off to roam the world. Then he tires "of all this pleasure" in Ireland and heads for New York. Now "good-bye Mursheen Durkin, Sure, I'm sick and tired of workin'" and heads for gold in California.

In Murty Rabbett's version the singer "landed in Castle Garden" in New York. That may be useful in bracketing the dates on that version. Castle Garden, before and again "Castle Clinton" at The Battery in New York, was the entry point for immigrants between 1845 and 1890 [see, for example, "Castle Garden, New York" transcribed from The Illustrated American of March 1, 1890 at Norway-Heritage site]. One problem with using "Castle Garden" for dating is that the name may have remained synonymous with "entry point for New York" long after the building became the New York Aquarium. In my own family I heard about "Kesselgarten" sixty years after it closed, although my grandfather arrived in New York thirteen years after that building became home to captive fish.

For a similar Castle Garden(s) reference see the notes to "Castle Gardens (I)." - BS

Although O Lochlainn's text seems to be the source for almost every version known today, it seems to have been pretty heavily folk processed by revival singers. And I'm not talking about the zillion ways of spelling "Mursheen/Muirsheen."

According to Soodlum's Irish Ballad Book, the tune is "Cailini Deas Muigheo" ("The Beautiful Girls of Mayo").

I seem to recall reading somewhere that "Muirsheen Durkin" is another name for Ireland. Of course, if you read enough Irish books, everything is a disguised name for Ireland. - RBW
Good Company

DESCRIPTION: "When I sit by myself," the singer cannot see into the future "but I feel I'm in very good company." Similarly, when he sits with a friend "to fight some great battle of wisdom or mirth," or considers "the meanings and mysteries" of love with his darling

AUTHOR: Charles Mackay (1814-1889) (source: Mackay)

EARLIEST DATE: 1859 (Mackay's _The Collected Songs of Charles Mackay_)

KEYWORDS: love nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 41, "Good Company" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO GI 81)
- ADDITIONAL: Charles Mackay, _The Collected Songs of Charles Mackay_ (London, 1859 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 308, "Good Company" (1 text)

Roud #1228

NOTES [18 words]: Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames: "I am told it was the favourite of the morris dancers in times past." - BS

Last updated in version 2.6

File: WT041

Good English Ale

DESCRIPTION: "When I was a little 'un my father did say, 'Whenever the sun shines that's time to make hay,' and when it's haying time, it's time for good ale. The singer pities those who don't drink. He wants drink and good food. He jokes of M.P.s who sleep on the job

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook)

KEYWORDS: drink work farming political

FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #120, "Good English Ale" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #1512

File: PECS120

Good for a Rush or a Rally

DESCRIPTION: "They are good for a rush or a rally, But they have no bottom to stay. But when I go out for a tally, I shear two hundred a day."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1968

KEYWORDS: work Australia sheep

FOUND IN: Australia

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, p. 276, "Good for a Rush or a Rally" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [38 words]: For comparison: A "gun" shearer was one who could consistently shear a "century" -- 100 sheep. The all-time record, which will likely never be broken, is held by Jackie Howe, who once sheared 328 sheep in an eight hour day. - RBW

File: MA276

Good King Wenceslas

DESCRIPTION: On St. Stephen's Day, Wenceslas sees a poor man gathering wood, and decides to help the peasant. Wenceslas and his servant go out in the bad weather. Returning home, the servant suffers from the cold but Wenceslas miraculously keeps him warm

AUTHOR: Words: J. M. Neale (1818-1866) / Music: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1853 (tune from Piae Cantiones, 1582)

KEYWORDS: religious royalty
Good Lord, Shall I Ever Be the One

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Good Lord, shall I ever be the one (3x), To get over in the Promised Land." Verses: "About the cool of day ... (God) call for old Adam" who tried to run away (in one verse) and said "hear me" (in another)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute)

KEYWORDS: Bible nonballad religious

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, p. 32, "Good Lord, Shall I Ever Be de One" (1 text, 1 tune; p. 123 in the 1901 edition)

Roud #15284

NOTES [53 words]: Genesis 3.8-12: "And they heard the voice of the Lord God walking in the garden in the cool of the day: and Adam and his wife hid themselves from the presence of the Lord God amongst the trees of the garden, And the Lord God called unto Adam, and said unto him, Where art thou? ... And the man said ...." (King James). - BS

Last updated in version 4.0

File: Dett032
Good Lord, When I Die

DESCRIPTION: "Good Lord, when I die (x3), shout one, Good Lord, when I die." I want to go to heaven when I die (x3)., Good Lord, when I die" "I want to see my Jesus, when I die (x3), Good Lord, when I die."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1915 (Work-FolkSongOfTheAmericanNegro)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad death
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Work-FolkSongOfTheAmericanNegro, p. 63, "Good Lord, When I Die" (1 text)
Roud #12070
File: FSAN063A

Good Mornin', Blues

DESCRIPTION: "I woke up this morning' with the blues all around my bed... Went to eat my breakfast, had the blues all in my bread." The singer describes how the loss of his girl has left him lonely, in pain, and otherwise miserable

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (recording, Ashley & Foster)
KEYWORDS: loneliness separation
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 311, "Good Mornin', Blues" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 75, "Good Morning Blues" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Moses Asch and Alan Lomax, Editors, _The Leadbelly Songbook_, Oak, 1962,p. 64, "Good Morning Blues" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11687
RECORDINGS:
Clarence Ashley & Gwen Foster, "Drunk Man Blues" (Oriole 8183, rec. 1931; on Ashley04)
NOTES [29 words]: Another Alan Lomax special; I don't know what fraction of it is traditional. - RBW
Well, Lead Belly sang it with those words. - PJS
OK, so it's a Lomax/Lead Belly special. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.3
File: LoF311

Good Morning Miss Carrie

DESCRIPTION: The singer thought Carrie was his girl but she will marry someone else. "Had a mighty good cry"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1963 (MJHurt05)
KEYWORDS: courting marriage rejection nonballad
FOUND IN:
RECORDINGS:
Mississippi John Hurt, "Good Morning Miss Carrie" (on MJHurt05)
File: RcGeMoMC

Good Morning, Ladies All (I)

DESCRIPTION: Capstan shanty. Title from second chorus: "Ah-ha, me yaller gals, Good mornin', ladies all." A packet heads out "bound to hell," the crew is mostly wiped out by "Yaller Jack" (yellow fever) and take on some monkeys as a crew.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Sharp-EnglishFolkChanteys)
KEYWORDS: shanty ship disease animal
FOUND IN: Britain West Indies
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas pp. 349-351, "Good Morning, Ladies All" (2 texts, 2 tunes; the "a" text is this piece, while "b" is "Good Morning, Ladies All (II)") [AbEd, p. 262]
Sharp-EnglishFolkChanteys, XVII, p. 20, "Good Morning, Ladies All" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #8284

NOTES [103 words]: Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas claims that any shanty including the phrase "Good morning, ladies all" would be of Negro origin, and had collected this from Tobago Smith, a West Indian shantyman. He also speculates that this may be a rumored but as yet undocumented shanty which tells the story of a crew of monkeys taking charge of a ship, but the three verses he had weren't enough to be sure. Sharp's verses don't even get that far, but the tune is pretty much the same. Sharp says this has some affinity with "Heave Away, Me Johnnies," though I couldn't see it, except for a couple notes in the tune of the chorus. - SL

File: Hugi349a

Good Morning, Ladies All (II)

DESCRIPTION: Pump or halyard shanty. "We are outward bound for Mobile Town, with a heave-o, haul! An' we'll heave the ol' wheel round an' round, Good mornin' ladies all!" Rest of verses on going home, spending money, women, and general good times themes.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1921 (Richard Runciman Terry's _The Shanty Book_, Pt.1)
KEYWORDS: shanty home dancing
FOUND IN: Britain West Indies
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas pp. 349-351, "Good Morning, Ladies All" (2 texts, 2 tunes; the "b" text is this piece, while "a" is "Good Morning, Ladies All (I)") [AbEd, p. 263]
Terry-TheShantyBook-Part1, #18, "Good morning, ladies all" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, pp. 91-92, "Good Morning, Ladies All" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #8290
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Outward and Homeward Bound" (shared verses)
File: Hugi350

Good Morning, Merry Sunshine

DESCRIPTION: "Good morning, merry sunshine, How did you wake so soon? You frightened all the stars away And shined away the moon." "I do not go to sleep, dear child, I just go round to see The little children of the east Who rise and watch for me."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (Randolph)
KEYWORDS: nonballad
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Randolph 879, "Good Morning, Merry Sunshine" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #7544
File: R879

Good News

DESCRIPTION: "Good news, chariot's coming (x3), And I don't want to be left behind." "There's a long white robe in Heaven I know." The song catalogs all the things to be found in heaven; the singer hopes to achieve all

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1874 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (7 citations):
Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, pp. 90-91,
"Good News, de Chariot's Comin'" (1 text, 1 tune; pp. 224-225 in the 1874 edition)
Curtis-Burlin-NegroFolkSongs-TheHamptonSeries (I), pp. 32-38, "Good News, Chariot's Comin'" (1 text with variants, 1 tune with variants)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 572, "Good News -- Chariot's Comin'" (1 fragment)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 572, "Good News -- Chariot's Comin'" (1 tune plus a text excerpt)
Work-FolkSongOfTheAmericanNegro, p. 49, "Good News, the Chariot's Coming" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 370, "Good News" (1 text)
DT, GOODNEWS
Roud #11891
RECORDINGS:
Bobby Jean Chauteau & group "Good News, Chariot is Coming" (New Light 101, n.d.)
Dixie Jubilee Quintet, "Good News" (Brunswick 3150, 1926)
Fisk Jubilee Quartet, "Good News" (Victor 16856, 1911)
Fisk University Jubilee Singers, "Good News, the Chariot's Coming" (Columbia A2072, 1916)
Hall Johnson Negro Choir, "Good News" (Victor 36020, 1930)
Master Spiritual Singers, "Good News, the Chariot is Coming" (Hub 3018, n.d.)
Southern Four, "Good News, Chariot's Comin'! and O Mary, Doan You Weep" (Edison 50885, 1921)
Tuskegee Institute Singers, "Good News" (Victor 17663, 1914)
File: FSWB370B

Good News Coming from Canaan
DESCRIPTION: "I thought I heard my mother say, Good news coming from Canaan. I want to hear my children pray, Good news coming from Canaan."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Brown)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 574, "Good News Coming from Canaan" (1 fragment)
Roud #11893
File: Br3574

Good News In the Kingdom
DESCRIPTION: "Good news in the kingdom and I won't die no more, my leader, Good news in the kingdom, Lord, and I won't die no more." Verses include "A Roman soldier pierced my Lord ... They pierced him to his tender side" and floaters
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1893 (Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories)
KEYWORDS: floating verses nonballad religious Bible Jesus
FOUND IN: West Indies(Bahamas)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories 17, "Good News In the Kingdom" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [95 words]: The description is based on the Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories text. The verse is call and response, with "And I won't die no more" the response to each verse line. Floating verses include "I saw King Peter on the sea ... He left his net and followed me," "I do believe without a doubt ... The Christians have a right to shout," and "Come on Moses don't get doubt ... Stretch your rod and come across."
The "Roman soldier" verse refers to John 19:34, "But one of the soldiers with a spear pierced his side, and forthwith came there out blood and water" [King James]. - BS
Last updated in version 4.2
File: Edwa017
Good News, Member

DESCRIPTION: "Good news, member, good news, member, Don't you mind what Satan say. Good news, member, good news, And I heard from heaven today." "My brother have a seal and I so glad." "Mr. Hawley have a home in paradise." "Archangel bring baptizing down."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, pp. 97-98, "Good News, Member" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #12054

File: AWG097B

---

Good news, the Chariot's Coming (II)

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Good news the chariot's coming (x3), I don't want it to leave me behind."

Verses: "Going to get up in the chariot." "There's a long white robe (golden crown, golden harp, silver slippers) in heaven I know"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1874 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute)

KEYWORDS: nonballad religious

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, p. 101, "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" (1 text, 1 tune; p. 179 in the 1874 edition)

Roud #5435

NOTES [89 words]: The description is based on the Raichelson text. Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute has "swing low sweet chariot" instead of "good news." Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute's verses are "the good old chariot swings so low" and "the good old chariot will take us home." Both Raichelson and Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute repeat the verse line three times, followed by "I don't want it to leave me behind." - BS

Last updated in version 4.0

File: Dett101

---

Good Night Molly Darling Good Night

DESCRIPTION: The singer, outside Molly's window, standing in the snow, sees her light is on and leaves a message. When she looks out of her window she'll see his footprints. He wraps himself in his cloak and goes home.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)

KEYWORDS: courting love nightvisit nonballad

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 64, "Good Night Molly Darling Good Night" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #9310

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Are Ye Sleeping Maggie?" (theme)

File: OCC064
Good Night, Bye-Bye, Forever
DESCRIPTION: "This night we part forever, You are nothing more to me... Not a tear would I shed for thee." "Good night, bye, bye, forever." "Take back the ring you gave me." "Go break the heart of another." The singer blesses the man and hopes he won't harm another
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1938 (Neely/Spargo-TalesAndSongsOfSouthernIllinois)
KEYWORDS: love betrayal separation ring
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Neely/Spargo-TalesAndSongsOfSouthernIllinois, pp. 234-235, "Good Night, Bye-Bye, Forever" (1 text)
Roud #4329
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Dear Companion (The Broken Heart; Go and Leave Me If You Wish To, Fond Affection)" (theme, some lyrics)
File: Neel234

Good Night, Sleep Tight
DESCRIPTION: "Good night, sleep tight, Don't let the bedbugs bite." Perhaps continues, "If they do, don't squall; Take a spoon and eat them all."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1947 (Opei & Opie, I Saw Esau, first edition)
KEYWORDS: bug nonballad
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore, p. 122, "(Good night)" (1 short text)
Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #595, p. 208 note 48, "(Good night, sleep tight)"
ADDITIONAL: Peter and Iona Opie, _I Saw Esau: Traditional Rhymes of Youth_, #168, "(Good night, sleep tight)" (1 text)
Roud #19322
NOTES [50 words]: The Baring-Goulds claim this as a parody of something that runs "Good night, Sleep tight, Wake up bright In the morning light To do what's right With all your might." All I can say is, I've heard the "bed bugs bite" version but never this alleged original, which sounds too feeble to be traditional. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.5
File: SaKo122G

Good Old Bailing Wire
DESCRIPTION: "Things keep breaking every day at some place on the farm... But some one makes the loss all right and pulls us from the mire By mending things almost at sight by using bailing wire." Bailing wire repairs all things. Perhaps it holds the universe together
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (High-OldOldFolkSongs)
KEYWORDS: humorous nonballad farming technology
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
High-OldOldFolkSongs, pp. 36-37, "Good Old Bailing Wire" (1 text)
ST High036 (Partial)
File: High036

Good Old Days of Adam and Eve, The
DESCRIPTION: "I sing, I sing of days grown older... Sing high, sing ho, I grieve, I grieve For the good old days of Adam and Eve." In the good old days, the town was smaller, the people bolder, etc.
AUTHOR: unknown
Good Old Dollar Bill, the

DESCRIPTION: "They are telling of old Glory Now in pictures songs and stories.... Sing the praises of Old Glory, But I've been through the mill And a real star spangled banner Is a good old dollar bill." The singer tells how money produces popularity

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1950 (article "The Wanigan Song Book" by Isabel J. Ebert)

KEYWORDS: money nonballad America

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
ADDITIONAL: James P. Leary, Compiler and Annotator, _Wisconsin Folklore_ University of Wisconsin Press, 2009, article "The Wanigan Songbook" by Isabel J. Ebert, p. 217, "The Good Old Dollar Bill" (1 text, sung by Emory DeNoyer)

Roud #30389

NOTES [82 words]: I originally wrote of this piece, "Emory DeNoyer, who sang this song, was blind and had a maimed left arm. He cannot have had much money. I rather suspect he wrote this. But Isabel Ebert, who collected it from him, did not say so. We will never know. Nor will we know the tune; it appears the song never went into tradition, and DeNoyer's melody was not recorded." It turns out this is not true; another version seems to have been found in New York. But the song is clearly quite rare. - RBW

Good Old Egg-Head

DESCRIPTION: "Did you go to the henhouse? Yes, ma'am! Did you get any eggs? Yes, ma'am. Did you put them in the bread...." And so forth, as the bread is baked. Similarly, and more bitterly, for going to a lynching, or for going to a wedding

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1917 (RIng Games of American Children, according to Coffin & Cohen)

KEYWORDS: play party food wedding execution

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
ADDITIONAL: Tristram P. Coffin and Hennig Cohen, _Folklore in America: Tales, Songs, Superstitions, Proverbs, Riddles, Games, Folk Drama and Folk Festivals_, Doubleday, 1966, pp. 181-182, "Good Old Egg-Bread" (1 text, probably of three different games)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Yes Ma'am" (form) and references there

File: CoCo181

Good Old Mountain Dew

DESCRIPTION: "Beside a hill there is a still Where the smoke runs up to the sky." The smell reveals that "the liquor boys are nigh." The making of the dew is described, and it is said to have been praised by scholars. The singer calls for more dew.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1916 (OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads)

KEYWORDS: drink nonballad

FOUND IN: US(MA,SE) Canada(Ont) Ireland

REFERENCES (8 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 41, "The Hidden Still" (1 fragment, probably this piece)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore541, "The Hidden Still" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 64, "The Real Old Mountain Dew" (1 text, 1 tune)
Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday 23, pp. 53-54,112,166, "The Mountain Dew" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 180-182, "Good Old Mountain Dew' (1 text, 1 tune)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 288-289, "Real Old Mountain Dew" (1 text, filed with "Old Mountain Dew")
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 229, "Real Old Mountain Dew" (1 text)

DT, MTDEW2*

Roud #938

RECORDINGS:
O. J. Abbott, "The Real Old Mountain Dew" (on Abbott1)
The Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem, "The Real Old Mountain Dew" (on IRClancyMakem01)
John Griffin and Ed Geoghegan?, "The Real Old Mountain Dew" (on Voice13)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Are You There Moriarity" (tune, per OLochlainn)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Let the Grasses Grow

NOTES [80 words]: OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads: "I am told it was written by Phil O Neill of Kinsale." - BS

Robert Gogan, _130 Great Irish Ballads_ (third edition, Music Ireland, 2004), p. 37, on the other hand, attributes it to Samuel Lover. But I should observe that few of his song notes seem to find support in reputable sources. And, of course, it's possible that Lover published a version without actually writing it. Not to be confused with Bascom Lamar Lunsford's "Old Mountain Dew." - RBW

Last updated in version 4.1
File: LxA180

Good Old Rebel, The (The Song of the Rebel Soldier)

DESCRIPTION: "I'm a good old Rebel soldier, and that's just what I am, And for this Yankee nation I do not give a damn!" The rebel tells of his history in the Confederate army. He scorns the Reconstruction governments, and proclaims, "I won't be reconstructed!"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1866?

KEYWORDS: Civilwar soldier political

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
July 21, 1861 - First Battle of Bull Run/Manassas. Confederates under Beauregard and Johnston rout an inexperienced Federal force under McDowell.
Aug 29-30, 1862 - Second Battle of Bull Run/Manassas. Lee's army takes Pope's force in flank and rolls it up.
Apr 7 and Sept 8, 1863 - Federal attempts to retake Fort Sumter and Charleston Harbor. Both failed.
May 1-4, 1863 - Battle of Chancellorsville (which would appear to be the "Battle of the Wilderness" referred to in some texts, since Stonewall Jackson is mentioned in the immediate context). Lee defeats Hooker, but Jackson is killed.
May 5-7, 1864 - Battle of the Wilderness. Lee's army mauls the Federal force under Grant and Meade, but the Federals refuse to retreat.
May 11, 1864 - Battle of Yellow Tavern. Confederate cavalry commander J.E.B. Stuart mortally wounded (he died May 12).

1865-1872 - The era of the Freedmen's Bureau. Its purpose was to help former slaves to make the transition to freedom, and to give them as many opportunities as possible. Most Southerners fought it tooth and nail, and finally the Radical Republicans abandoned it in 1872

FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE,So)

REFERENCES (24 citations):
Randolph 231, "I'm a Good Old Rebel" (3 texts, 3 tunes)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 216-217, "I'm a Good Old Rebel" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 231C)
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 193, "The Song of the Rebel Soldier"; 194, "An Old Unreconstructed" (2 traditional texts plus assorted floating stanzas and a copy of a printed text plus mention of 6(?) more, 1 tune)
Warner-FolkSongsAndBalladsOfTheEasternSeaboard, pp. 70-71, "The Old Rebel Soldier" (1 text)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 391, "The Good Old Rebel" (2 texts plus a fragment and mention of 1 more)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 391, "The Good Old Rebel" (2 tunes plus text excerpts)
Hudson-FolksongsOfMississippi 118, pp. 259-260, "I'm a Good Old Rebel" (1 text)
Wolfe/Boswell-FolkSongsOfMiddleTennessee 57, pp. 95-96, "I'm a Good Old Rebel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cox-FolkSongsSouth 77, "I'm a Good Old Rebel" (1 text)
Smith-SouthCarolinaBallads, pp. 45-47, "The Good Old Rebel"; "For I'm a Good Old Rebel" (2 texts)
Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 437, "O I'm a Good Old Rebel" (1 text); also a sheet music cover on p. 443
Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 356-357, "Oh, I'm a Good Old Rebel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber-SoldierSongsAndHomeFrontBalladsOfCivilWar, pp. 88-89, "Oh, I'm a Good Old Rebel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 535-540, "Good Old Rebel" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 133, "The Good Old Rebel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Botkin-TreasuryOfSouthernFolklore, p. 716, "I'm a Good Old Rebel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Colonial-Dames-AmericanWarSongs, pp. 134-135, "I'm a Good Old Rebel" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #C122, p. 192, "Oh, I'm a Good Old Rebel" (1 reference)
Good Old State of Maine, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer tells how lumbering woods are "different from the good old State of Maine." The woods have "alieners and foreigners" and low wages, deep snow, harsh regulations and bad food. "I'll mend my ways and spend my days in the good old State of Maine."
Good Old Way (I), The

DESCRIPTION: "The good old way, the good old way, I am travelling in the good old way, And no matter where I be nor what people thinks of me...." "The Baptists in their glee may turn their back on me...." The singer condemns sinners and vows to stick with God

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1938 (Chappell)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 93, "The Good Old Way" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #16937
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "O I Shall Have Wings" (lyrics)
File: ChFRA093

Good Old Way (II), The

DESCRIPTION: "As I went down in the valley to pray, Studying about that good old way When you shall wear the starry crown, Good Lord, show me the way. Oh (mourner/sister/member), let's go down, let's go down... down in the valley to play." "%

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 84, "The Good Old Way" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #12041
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Down in the Valley to Pray" (lyrics)
NOTES [27 words]: This shares a lot of lines with "Down in the Valley to Pray," and some would perhaps lump them. But the overall form is different enough that I have split them. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.4
File: AwG084A

Good Religion

DESCRIPTION: Format is ((phrase, "I got good religion") (3x) "My feet been taken out the miry clay"). Phrases include "I'm so glad," "In my heart," "Day was Monday/Tuesday/..." May be other Good Roarin' Fire, A

DESCRIPTION: "Wi' the day's work done," these things make the singer happy to come home: "a good roarin' fire," "your childer lep an' run," a "wife is kind an' happy," "a clean-sweep' stone."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1911 (Greig/Duncan5)
KEYWORDS: home work fire nonballad children wife
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber)) Ireland Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #167, p. 2, "When a Chap Comes Hame" (1
text)
Greig/Duncan5 1070, "When a Chap Comes Hame" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Hayward-UlsterSongsAndBalladsOfTheTownAndCountry, p. 32, "A Good Roarin' Fire" (1 text) Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 38-41, "The Big Roaring Fire (A Good Roaring Fire; A Tidy Smilin' Wifey)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6301
RECORDINGS:
Angus McDonald, "Home From the War" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
Jim Rice, "Roarin' Fire" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
File: HayU032

Good Scow Alice Strong, The

DESCRIPTION: "When running down for Cleveland On the good scow Alice Strong, The Captain's eyes grew weary." He orders the mate to take charge. "The mate was but a farmer Who'd seen service with a plow": He steers the ship on a straight course -- into another boat!

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (Collected from John S. Parsons by Walton)
KEYWORDS: ship farming wreck humorous
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, pp. 165-166, "The Good Scow Alice Strong" (1 text)
Roud #19887
File: WGM165

Good Ship Kangaroo, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer goes to sea on the Kangaroo. His sweetheart gives him a token to remember her by. On his return home, he learns the she has run off with another man. He vows to go to a foreign shore and "throw [him]self away" on a foreign girl

AUTHOR: Harry Clifton (source: Greig/Duncan6)
EARLIEST DATE: before 1884 (broadside, Bodleian Firth c.22(95))
KEYWORDS: love separation sailor return infidelity
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber)) Ireland Australia
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Greig/Duncan6 1211, "On Board of the Kangaroo" (5 texts, 3 tunes)
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 109, "On Board the Kangaroo" (1 text, 1 tune)
Good Ship Venus, The

DESCRIPTION: A quatrain ballad, this song describes the interminable sexual misadventures of the crew of the Good Ship Venus, whose mast is a rampant penis.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: Vance Randolph firmly dates the three versions in his "Unprintable" Collection from the Ozarks to 1890.

KEYWORDS: bawdy sex humorous ship

FOUND IN: Australia Canada Britain(England) US(NE,MW,So,SW) New Zealand

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Cray-EroticMuse, pp. 315-318, "The Good Ship Venus" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Randolph/Legman-RollMeInYourArms I, pp. 500-501, "Frigging in the Rigging" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead, pp. 58-59, "Good Ship Venus" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, pp 177-178, "There's Nothing Else to Do" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brand-BawdySeaSong 2, "The Good Ship Venus"; 12, "Frigging in the Rigging" (2 texts)

DT, FRGGING SHPVENUS

Roud #4836 and 8350

CROSS-REFERENCES:
ct. "Christopher Columbo" (lyrics)

NOTES [69 words]: The limerick-form stanzas with the internal rhyme in the third line of "Good Ship" frequently migrate to "Christopher Columbo." - EC

Roud splits off Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea's "There's Nothing Else to Do" as a separate song, #8350, presumably because it never mentions the ship "Venus." But it has the "Frigging in the Rigging" chorus, and it's a quatrain ballad about sexual escapades; I think they can be lumped. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: EM315

Good Shot, Never Miss

DESCRIPTION: "Good shot, never miss, When you've got a girl to kiss."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)
Good Time in Georgia

DESCRIPTION: "Dere ain't no good times in Georgia, Like I used to have. Dere ain't no good times in Georgea, Like I used to have. I'm going back to Alabama and git my good gal back."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Killion/Waller-ATreasuryOfGeorgiaFolklore)

KEYWORDS: love separation travel hardtimes

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Killion/Waller-ATreasuryOfGeorgiaFolklore, p. 237, "Good Time in Georgia" (1 short text)

Roud #18158

File: KiWa237G

Good-bye (Goodbye My Brother)

DESCRIPTION: "Goodbye, my brother, goodbye, Hallelujah! Goodbye, sister Sally, goodbye, Hallelujah! Going home, Hallelujah! Jesus call me, Hallelujah! Linger no longer, Hallelujah! Tarry no longer, Hallelujah"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 52, "Good-bye" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #12011

File: AWG052A

Good-Bye Everybody

DESCRIPTION: "Good-bye everybody, Good-bye, sing Hallelujah." The singer is leaving. Jesus is at the Sacrement Table, "handing bread and wine to the members." Good-bye "all you deacons (preachers, false pretenders)"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1942 (Parrish-SlaveSongsOfTheGeorgiaSeaIslands)

KEYWORDS: farewell nonballad religious Jesus

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Parrish-SlaveSongsOfTheGeorgiaSeaIslands 15, pp. 90-92, "Good-Bye Everybody" (1 text, 1 tune)

RECORDINGS:
Joe Armstrong and the Georgia Sea Island Singers, "Goodbye, Everybody" (on LomaxCD1712, recorded 1959)

NOTES [30 words]: The current description is based on the Parrish-SlaveSongsOfTheGeorgiaSeaIslands text. Parrish says this was a favorite St. Simons farewell song at the end of an evening service. - BS

Last updated in version 4.1

File: Parr015

Good-bye, My Honey, I'm Gone

DESCRIPTION: Singer had a girl, Isabella, who ran off with another fella. He has bad luck with girls, and often "hollered for a copper But he said he couldn't stop her." Cho: "Good-bye my honey I'm gone (x2)," last two lines of verse, then "Good-bye my honey I'm gone"
Good-Looking Widow, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer, a good-looking widow, has had three husbands and is looking for a fourth. Her husbands were a tailor who was a swell, a baker who was a loafer, and another who "was some fond o' me, but mair fond o' a dram"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan7)
KEYWORDS: marriage drink death
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan7 1302, "The Good-Looking Widow" (4 texts, 2 tunes)
Roud #7199
NOTES [31 words]: Sounds like a Scottish rewrite of the Wife of Bath's Prologue. It might be interesting to sing it with "The Marriage of Sir Gawain" [Child 31], which is essentially the Wife's tale. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD71302

Goodbye Eliza Jane

DESCRIPTION: "Lookey here 'Liza, listen to me, you ain't the girl you promised to be."
Disappointed that Liza "went riding with Mr. Brown," the singer declares, "Goodbye, Miss Liza, I'm going to leave you." He demands his gifts back; Mr. Brown can replace them
AUTHOR: Words: Andrew B. Sterling / Music: Harry Von Tilzer
EARLIEST DATE: 1903
KEYWORDS: courting separation betrayal
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Spaeth-ReadEmAndWeep, p. 211, "Good-bye, Eliza Jane" (partial text and tune)
Rorrer-RamblingBlues-LifeAndSongsOfCharliePoole, p. 93, "Good-bye Sweet Liza Jane" (1 text)
Roud #12403
RECORDINGS:
Peerless Quartet, "Minstrels Part 4, Goodbye Eliza Jane" (Little Wonder 343, 1916)
Charlie Poole and the North Carolina Ramblers, "Good-bye Sweet Liza Jane" (Columbia 15601-D, 1930; on CPoole03 as "Goodbye Liza Jane")
NOTES [34 words]: I couldn't believe this was a Harry von Tilzer song either. Amazing what a little Charlie Poole influence can do.
For some background on Harry von Tilzer, see the notes to "A Bird in a Gilded Cage." - RBW
Last updated in version 4.3
File: SRw211
Goodbye I Am Going
DESCRIPTION: "Goodbye I am going."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1994 (Elder-FolksongsFromTobago)
KEYWORDS: ritual nonballad religious
FOUND IN: West Indies(Tobago)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Elder-FolksongsFromTobago 43, "Goodbye I Am Going" (1 short text, 1 tune)
NOTES [29 words]: Elder-FolksongsFromTobago describes the ritual that accompanies this "mournful 'song of dispatch' heard at the baptismal ceremony of the Spiritual Baptist (Shouters) church." - BS
Last updated in version 4.0
File: ElTo043

Goodbye Jeff
DESCRIPTION: "Their soldiers reconnoiter like the mischief, Jeff, And appropriate our cattle and our corn." The Union soldiers have taken half the slaves and will free the rest. The war is failing. The Confederate concludes, "I think we'd better give it up and run."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales)
KEYWORDS: Civilwar slave humorous soldier desertion
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales, p. 360, "(no title)" (1 text)
Roud #6614
File: TNY360A

Goodbye John
DESCRIPTION: "Twas on a Friday morning I bid London Town adieu." "Goodbye, John, Don't stay long, But come back home to your own chickiebiddie, My heart bears so to see you go, Don't forget your darling"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1868 (broadside, Bodleian Bod8412 Firth c.12(385))
LONG DESCRIPTION: John loved sweet Nancy, a big lass (15 stone=210 pounds, face the size of a dinner plate) who ran a sweets shop. He dreamt, while sailing, that she came to him looking "just like a mermaid." In the morning, as they approached land, Nancy came to meet him in a boat which capsized and sent her to the bottom, In a spoken interlude John explains that as a British sailor he cannot stand by to "see a British female in distress"; to save her as she was going down a third time, he grabbed her hair; to his surprise it was a wig that came off and she went to the bottom of the Thames.
KEYWORDS: love separation travel request beauty hair death drowning river sea ship shore dream England humorous sailor
FOUND IN: US(SE) Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 690, "Goodbye John" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 149-151, "Goodbye John, But Don't Stop Long" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #24344
RECORDINGS:
Everett Bennett, "Goodbye John, But Don't Stop Long" (on NFAGuigné01)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Bod8412 Firth c.12(385), "Goodbye John" ("Twas on Friday morning I bade London town goodbye"), Poet's Box (Glasgow), 1868
NOTES [94 words]: The above description is based mostly on Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 plus a stray line. I assume there is more to the song, but I don't have any way to test it. - RBW
The description "Goodbye, ... darling," is the chorus; the long description is based on Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports's text for Bennett's recording. The Poet's Box broadside has more details of John's sailing to exotic ports, keeps the tragic end, but lacks the spoken patter.

Guigné has this as a music hall number which she found in a Tony Pastor song book. - BS

Last updated in version 4.2

File: BrS5690

Goodbye Liza Jane (I)

DESCRIPTION: "Our horse fell down the well around behind the stable (x2). Well he didn't fall clear down but he fell, fell... As far as he was able. Oh, it's goodbye Liza Jane." Similarly "My gal crossed a bridge... but the bridge it wasn't built yet." Etc.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)

KEYWORDS: nonsense humorous

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 51, "Good-by Liza Jane" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST San051 (Full)

RECORDINGS:

Pete Seeger, "Goodbye Liza Jane" (on PeteSeeger22)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Black Them Boots (Goin' Down to Cairo)"

File: San051

Goodbye Mama, Goodbye Dada

DESCRIPTION: "Goodbye mama, goodbye dada, Goodbye to all the rest, Goodbye mama, goodbye dada, For I love dolly best." "Past 8 o'clock and it's bedtime for dolly, Past 8 o'clock and it's bedtime for me. Dolly must sleep... Dolly and I are quite sure to agree."

AUTHOR: unknown

KEYWORDS: nonballad mother father

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Porter/Gower-Jeannie-Robertson-EmergentSingerTransformativeVoice #2, p. 112, "Goodbye Mama, Goodbye Dada" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [252 words]: The first verse of this ("Goodbye mama.... For I love dolly best") is the entire text recalled by Jeannie Robertson, and there seem to be no other clear collections from tradition. And yet, I seemed to recall the lyric when I saw it. Hunting around on the Internet didn't produce much, but on the King Laoghaire Irish site someone supplied a text that supplies the "Past 8 o'clock and it's bedtime for dolly" verse, with chorus

Good night Mama, good night Papa,
Good night to all the rest,
Good night Mama, good night Papa,
For I love dolly best.

and a second verse

Ma turn the lights out for I am so sleepy,
Papa good night, love and give me a kiss,
Dolly good night I will see you tomorrow,
Dolly and I are quite sure to agree.

Several others claimed to recall the song. Another poster claimed that this was a song about a Topsy doll (aka a Topsy-Turvy doll) -- that is, a doll with two heads and upper bodies joined at the waist, so that by flipping over the skirt, you could show either head. Typically one head was black and one white. These dolls were apparently in existence by the 1890s if not earlier, and still made into the 1950s. There was a song about the Topsy dolls in which the girl washes her doll but can't make it white. Obviously racist, but it has several lyrics that look like they are related to the Robertson fragment. So my guess is that Jeannie Robertson heard the Topsy Doll song in her youth, and (consciously or unconsciously) kept the least offensive part, which became this song. - RBW
Goodbye to My Stepstone

DESCRIPTION: The singer has stayed at home among loved ones for a long time, but now is leaving: "Goodbye to my stepstone, goodbye to my home, God bless the ones that I leave with a sigh; I'll cherish dear memory while I am away; Goodbye, dear old stepstone, goodbye."

AUTHOR: probably J. O. Webster

EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (collected from Lela Ammons by Bascom Lamar Lunsford. Source: _Sing Out_, volume 35, #4 [1991], p. 8); J. O. Webster published his piece "Old Doorstep," the likely ancestor, in 1880

KEYWORDS: travel home farewell rambling

FOUND IN: US(SE,So)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
- Jones-MinstrelOfTheAppalachians-Bascom-Lamar-Lunsford, "Old Stepstone" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 713, "The Old Stepstone" (1 short text, 1 tune)
- Randolph 853, "The Old Stepstone" (1 texts plus 2 fragments)
- DT, STEPSTON*
  - Roud #7453
  - RECORDINGS: Daphne Burns, "Goodbye To My Stepstones" (Paramount 3032, 1927)
  - Floyd County Ramblers, "Step Stone" (Victor V-40331, 1930; Bluebird B-5107, 1933; on TimesAint05)
  - Bascom Lamar Lunsford, "Stepstones" (Brunswick 231, 1928; Brunswick 314, 1929; on BLLunsford01) (Rounder LP 0065, 1957)
  - Peg Moreland, "The Old Step Stone" (Victor V-40008, 1929)
  - E. R. Nance Singers, "Goodbye to My Stepstone" (Champion 16316, 1931)
  - Three Muskateers, "Goodbye to the Step Stones" (Bluebird B-6525, 1936)
  - Ernest V. Stoneman and His Dixie Mountaineers, "Goodbye Dear Old Stepstone" (Edison 52489, 1929; Ernest Stoneman and Eddie Stoneman, "Good-bye Dear Old Stepstone" (ARC, unissued, 1934)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
- The Old Doorstep

NOTES [27 words]: I've seen this attributed to Woody Guthrie, but the texts in Randolph, and his references to 1890s songbooks, make it clear that the basic song predated him. - RBW

Goodbye to the Old Pick and Shovel

DESCRIPTION: "farewell to my old pick and shovel... The bulldozer now has took over To tear down the mountains of stone." The 'dozer mechanic has skills the old road-builder doesn't, but couldn't survive the life the old man once led. The world is changed, not better

AUTHOR: Words: Dennis Hogan (source: Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ)

EARLIEST DATE: 1962 (Fern Fire, according to Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ)

KEYWORDS: worker technology hardtimes

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ, p. 137, "Goodbye to the Old Pick and Shovel" (1 text)

NOTES [20 words]: Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ list this as being sung to "Red River Valley." It sort of fits, but it's hard work.... - RBW

Goodbye-ee

DESCRIPTION: "Goodbye-ee, Don't sigh-11! Wipe the tear, baby dear, From your eye-ee. Though
Goodbye, Brother

DESCRIPTION: "Goodbye, brother (x2), If I don't see you more; Now God bless you (x2), If I don't see you more." "We part in the body, but we meet in the spirit, If I don't see you more; We'll meet in the heaven, in the blessed kingdom, If I don't see you more."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad parting separation
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 477, "Good-bye, Brother" (1 text, 1 tune)
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 47, "Good-bye Brother" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #12004
File: San477

Goodbye, Fare You Well (I)

DESCRIPTION: "Fare you well, Julianna, you know, Hoo row, row, row, my boys, To the westward we roll and we now coming home, Goodbye, fare you well, goodbye, fare you well." The sailors bid farewell to the whales and look forward to arriving home

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1971
KEYWORDS: whaler home nonballad sailor whale
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 321-322, "Goodbye, Fare You Well" (1 text)
DT, FARWJUL
NOTES [18 words]: A great tune; I'm surprised it's not more widely collected. But hardly a good sentiment in these days. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.3
File: DarNS321

Goodbye, Little Girl, Goodbye

DESCRIPTION: "The sound of the bugle is calling, Fare thee well, fare thee well." The soldier boy sets out: "Goodbye, little girl, goodbye... In my (Virginia/blue) uniform, I'll return to you." In the din of battle, he sends a (dying?) message to the girl

AUTHOR: Words: Will D. Cobb / Music: Gus Edwards
EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (copyright date on sheet music)
KEYWORDS: soldier separation love
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 271, "Goodbye, Little Girl, Goodbye" (1 text)
Roud #15745
NOTES [73 words]: The Brown text appears confused. It starts simply enough, with a soldier bidding goodbye to his girl. But when the battle comes, it's not clear whether the lover dies, or the lover lives and goes home, or someone else asks him to send a message.
Lyricist Will D. Cobb was also responsible for "Dolly Grey." He and Gus Edwards seem to have specialized in rather silly love songs, based on the back cover of the sheet music to this piece. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.7
File: Br3271

Goodbye, Mother
DESCRIPTION: "Goodbye, Mother, goodbye, Your voice I shall hear it no mo', Death done flamished yo' body...." The singer hears mother calling from the grave, wishes she were still alive, and hopes to go to heaven where there is no trouble
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934
KEYWORDS: death mother burial religious
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 592-593, "Good-by Mother" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #15566
File: LxA592

Goodbye, My Blue Bell
DESCRIPTION: "Goodbye, my Blue Bell, Farewell to you. One last fond look into your eyes so blue. 'Mid campfires gleaming, Through shot and shell, I will be dreaming Of my sweet Blue Bell." "Blue Bell, my heart is breaking... Blue bell, my tears have started."
AUTHOR: Words: Edward Madden / Music: Theodore Morse EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Recording, Harry Macdonough & the Haydn Quartet)
KEYWORDS: soldier separation
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 395, "Goodbye, My Blue Bell" (1 fragment)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 395, "Goodbye, My Blue Bell" (1 tune plus a text excerpt)
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 48, "Blue Belle" (1 short text)
Roud #11331
RECORDINGS:
Eddie Adcock, "Virginia Bluebell" (Patuxent CD-300, 1963; on Protobilly)
Richard Brooks & Reuben Puckett, "Good Bye, My Blue Bell" (Victor 20542, 1927)
Harry Macdonough & the Haydn Quartet, "Blue Bell" (CYL: Columbia 32515-2, 1904; on Protobilly)
Merle Travis, "Blue Bell" (Capitol transcription, 1945; on Protobilly)
NOTES [22 words]: Brown's informant thought this came from the Spanish-American War. Possible, but probably beyond proof. The timing is about right. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.1
File: Br3395

Goodbye, My Love, Goodbye
DESCRIPTION: Hauling shanty, probably Negro in origin. "I'm bound away to leave you, Goodbye, my love, goodbye. I never will deceive you, Goodbye, my love, goodbye." Given verses are all variations on the 'goodbye, farewell, we're bound away' theme.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1887 (Davis/Tozer _Sailor Songs or Chanties_)
KEYWORDS: shanty farewell separation
FOUND IN: Britain US West Indies
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen, p. 62, "Goodbye, My Love, Goodbye" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 118-119, "Goodbye, My Love, Goodbye" (1 text, 1 tune)
[AbEd, p. 102]
Goodbye, My Lover, Goodbye

DESCRIPTION: A riverman, departing for New Orleans, bids his sweetheart farewell: "I'm going away to New Orleans, Goodbye, my lover, goodbye...." "She's on her way to New Orleans... She's bound to pass the Robert E. Lee...." "I'll make this trip and make no more...."

AUTHOR: T. H. Allen?

EARLIEST DATE: 1882 (copyright, according to College Songs)

KEYWORDS: river farewell work separation floating verses

FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW,SE,So)

REFERENCES (9 citations):
- Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 274, "Goodbye, My Lover, Goodbye" (1 text plus a fragment)
- Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, pp. 46-47, "Good-bye, My Lover, Good-Bye" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Jackson-WakeUpDeadMan, pp. 97-99, "Goodbye, My Lover, Goodbye" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Henry-SongsSungInTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 160, "Goodbye, My Lover, Goodbye" (1 text)
- Roberts-SangBranchSettlers, #65, "Good-bye, My Lover" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Botkin-TreasuryMississippiRiverFolklore, p. 591, "Let Her Go By" (1 text)
- Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #140, "Good-bye, My Lover, Good-bye!" (1 text)
- Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 152, "Goodbye, My Lover, Goodbye" (1 text)

Roud #15381

RECORDINGS:
- Emry Arthur, "Goodbye, My Lover, Goodbye" (Vocalion 5209, 1928)
- Kanawha Singers, "Goodbye My Lover Goodbye" (Brunswick 242, 1928)
- Bill Mooney & his Cactus Twisters, "Goodbye, My Lover, Goodbye" (Imperial 1150, n.d.)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Goodbye, My Love, Goodbye" (chorus form)
- cf. "Sunflower Chorus on Micanopy People" (tune)

SAME TUNE:
- Sunflower Chorus on Micanopy People (File: Morr012)

NOTES [408 words]: The description above is based on the most coherent version I could find -- although neither the Robert E. Lee nor New Orleans are mentioned in the College Songs texts. Brown's texts, however, have nothing of either plot; both have a verse "See the train go 'round the bend... Loaded down with (railroad/Chapel Hill) men," with the other stanzas floating. Jackson's version is similar: the train comes round the bend filled with CONVICT men. It appears that the simple tune was used for all sorts of floating verse songs.

The Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors version seems to have been particularized for Great Lakes sailors; it begins "A farmer boy stands on the deck" and complains about all the things he doesn't know (e.g. he can't tell various types of sail apart). This may have been influenced by "Goodbye, My Love, Goodbye," which is also a sailor song, but that is a separation song, and the Walton version is a taunt, so I don't think they are the same. This has been attributed to T. H. Allen (so College Songs, and cf. Brown), but I don't know the reliability of the citation.

This song was apparently popular enough in the late 1800s to have played a minor but odd role in politics. The chief issue in the presidential campaign of 1896 was the issue of free silver. The larger part of the Republican party was in favor of the gold standard, but a substantial minority was pro-silver. This became a major issue at the presidential nominating convention, when the Silver Republicans tried to put their position into the platform.

According to Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr., Fred L. Israel, and William P. Hansen, editors, History of American Presidential Elections, Volume II (1848-1896), Chelsea House, 1971, p. 1803, when the gold standard plank was introduced as an amendment to the Republican platform, the Silver Republicans made it clear that they would leave the party if their position was adopted. This threat was greeted with jeers, including "Go to Chicago!" (site of the Democratic convention), "Put him out," and "Goodbye, my lover, goodbye." - RBW

There is a parody version ["See the Steamer Go 'round the Bend"]: "See the steamer go 'round the bend, goodbye, my lover, goodbye/They're taking old Sammy away to the pen...And why are they taking old Sam to the pen?...He hit a policeman and hit him again/goodbye, my lover, goodbye." Sam Hinton credits this to his father, who liked to improvise. - PJS

Goodbye, Old Paint

DESCRIPTION: "Goodbye, old Paint, I'm a-leavin' Cheyenne." The impatient cowboy is off for Montana. He bids farewell to the girl and starts his horses on their way

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (recording, Harry "Haywire Mac" McClintock)

KEYWORDS: horse cowboy rambling

FOUND IN: US(Ro,So)

REFERENCES (14 citations):

Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 184, "Old Paint" (1 text, 1 tune)

Larkin-SingingCowboy, pp. 169-170, "Goodbye, Old Paint" (1 text, 1 tune)

Lomax/Lomax-FolkSongUSA 63(A), "Old Paint" (1 text, 1 tune)

Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 383-385, "Good-by, Old Paint" (1 text, 1 tune)

Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 195, "I'm A-Leavin' Cheyenne" (1 text, 1 tune)

Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, p. 263, "Goodbye, Old Paint" (1 text, 1 tune)

Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys, pp. 118-119, "Old Paint" (1 text)

Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 83, "Old Paint" (3 texts, 1 tune, although the "C" text appears to be "The Wagoner's Lad")

Welsch-NebraskaPioneerLore, pp. 24-25, "Old Paint" (1 text)

Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, p. 572, "Goodbye, Old Paint" (1 text)

Tinsley-HewasSinginThisSong, pp. 122-125, "Goodbye Old Paint" (1 text, 1 tune)

Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 275, "Goodbye, Old Paint" (1 text)

Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 106, "Goodbye Old Paint" (1 text)

DT, OLDPAINT*

Roud #915

RECORDINGS:

Arkansas Charlie [pseud. for Charlie Craver], "Goodbye Old Paint" (Vocalion 5270, rec. 1928)

Emmett Brand, "Riding My Buggy, My Whip in My Hand" (on MuSouth06)

Sloan Matthews, "Goodbye, Old Paint (II)" (AFS, 1940s; on LC28)

Harry "Haywire Mac" McClintock, "Goodbye Old Paint" (Victor 21761, 1928; on WhenIWas1)

Patsy Montana, "Ridin' Old Paint" (Conqueror 8575, 1935)

Jess Morris, "Goodbye, Old Paint (I)" (AFS, 1942; on LC28, LCTreas)

Tex Ritter, "A-Ridin' Old Paint" (Conqueror 8144, 1933;Perfect 12984, 1934; on BackSaddle);

"Goodbye Old Paint" (Vocalion 5493, c. 1931; Conqueror 8073, 1932; Vocalion 04911, 1939)

Pete Seeger, "Old Paint" (on PeteSeeger09, PeteSeegerCD02)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Wagoner's Lad" (floating lyrics)

cf. "I Ride an Old Paint"

NOTES [42 words]: I classify Emmett Brand's recording here because it has to go somewhere, but it also includes material from "Rye Whiskey (Jack of Diamonds)" and "Wagoner's Lad," and a tune the collector found reminiscent of "One Morning in May." Ah, the folk process! - PJS

Last updated in version 5.3

File: LxU063A
Goodbye, Pretty Mama

DESCRIPTION: "I'm gonna take those shoes I bought you, Put yo' feet on de groun' (x2)." "I'm gonna leave you jes' like I foun' you, All out an' down (x2)." "I ain' gonna buy you nothin' else, When I go to town (x2)."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1934

KEYWORDS: separation clothes

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, p. 20, "Good-by, Pretty Mama" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #15522

NOTES [33 words]: The Lomaxes call this a "variant of the Tie-Tamping Chant." They offer no supporting evidence, however, and the forms of the two songs are different. So I separate them (though Roud lumps them). - RBW

File: LxA020

---

Goodbye, Susan Jane

DESCRIPTION: Susan Jane tells the singer that she is in love with Rufus Andrew Jackson Payne. He asks "give me back my love again." She says "I cannot love [you] again." She is "so deceiving" he "threatened twice to leave her" and now he must. Now he thinks her ugly.

AUTHOR: Will S Hayes

EARLIEST DATE: 1874 (broadside, LOCSheet sm1874 03345)

KEYWORDS: love infidelity rejection humorous playparty

FOUND IN: Canada(Ont) US(So)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario 62, "Goodbye, Susan Jane" (1 text, 1 tune)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-1ed, pp. 241-243. "Miss Susan Jane" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph 435, "Liza Jane" (2 texts plus a fragment, 1 tune; the "B" text is this, "A" is "Liza Jane," and "C" is too short to clearly identify) Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 86, "Good-bye, Susan Jane" (1 text, 1 tune)

BROADSIDES:
LOCSheet, sm1874 03345, "Susan Jane" ("I went to see my Susan"), J.L. Peters (New York), 1874 (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [116 words]: Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario: Vance Randolph reports it from Missouri, giving it as a variant of 'Liza Jane,' but textually it seems to be a separate song.

See Mrs L D Ames, "The Missouri Play-Party" in The Journal of American Folklore, Vol. XXIV, No. 93 (Jul-Sep 1911 (available online by JSTOR)), pp. 299-300 "Oh, Ain't I Gone" (1 text, 1 tune) for a song that shares only one line in its chorus - "So good-by, Susan Jane! - with this song but is otherwise a collection of floating verses not in Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario or Hamilton. - BS

I suspect that this began as some sort of popular comic song, but I will admit that I haven't found the original. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.3

File: FowOn062

---

Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye

DESCRIPTION: "The bright stars fade, the morn is breaking, The dewdrops pearl each bud and leaf." The singer must leave, and bids, "Goodbye, sweetheart, goodbye." "The sun is up, the lark is soaring," but despite saying goodbye, he cannot bring himself to leave

AUTHOR: J. L. Hatton (source: Heart-Songs)

EARLIEST DATE: before 1855 (broadside Bodleian Harding B 11(2784))

KEYWORDS: love separation nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Heart-Songs, pp. 160-161, "Goodbye, Sweetheart, Goodbye" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13897
BROADSIDES:
File: HeSo160

Goodman's Song, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer threatens to retaliate for thin or lumpy porridge by making the oxen run or leave the land unploughed. "Wine wine wine awa', Halkie's [cow] ane and humlie's [hornless cow] twa, Wine wine wine awa"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: farming work food nonballad drink
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan3 395, "The Goodman's Song" (1 text)
Roud #5928
File: GrD3395

Goodnight Irene

DESCRIPTION: The singer describes how he courted Irene. Now he and his wife are parted. "And if Irene turns her back on me, gonna take morphine and die." Chorus: "Irene, goodnight, Irene, goodnight; Goodnight, Irene, goodnight, Irene, I'll (get/see) you in my dreams."
AUTHOR: popular version by Huddie Ledbetter ("Lead Belly")
EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (recordings, Huddie Ledbetter [Lead Belly])
KEYWORDS: love courting separation drugs suicide loneliness floatingverses
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 315, "Irene" (1 text, 1 tune)
Seeger-AmericanFavoriteBallads, p. 48, "Irene, Goodnight" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, pp. 307-308, "Irene (Goodnight, Irene)"
DT, IRENGDNT
ADDITIONAL: Moses Asch and Alan Lomax, Editors, _The Leadbelly Songbook_, Oak, 1962, p. 93, "Irene" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11681
RECORDINGS:
Scott Dunbar, "Goodnight Irene" (on USDunbarS01)
Gordon Jenkins & The Weavers, "Goodnight Irene" (Decca 27077, 1950; on Weavers01)
Huddie Ledbetter [Lead Belly], "Irene" (AFS 120 A1, 1933) (AFS 120 A6, 1933) (AFS 120 A7, 1933) (Atlantic 917, 1950)
Pete Seeger, "Goodnight, Irene" (on PeteSeeger24) (on PeteSeeger43)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Dark and Dreary Weather" (floating lyrics)
cf. "Willy, Poor Boy" (floating lyrics)
cf. "Sometimes I'm in This Country" (floating lyrics)
cf. "Late Last Night When Willie Came Home (Way Downtown)" (floating lyrics)
cf. "Rambling Round" (approximate tune)
cf. "Roll On, Columbia" (tune)
NOTES [161 words]: Fuld quotes the Lomaxes to the effect that Lead Belly learned the chorus of this song from his uncle. Many of the verses can also be shown to be older. To what extent Lead Belly created this song, as opposed to reshaping the materials, cannot now be determined.
The 1888 song "Irene, Goodnight," sung by the Haverly Minstrels and credited by Spaeth to "Davis" (but dated 1892), is a separate piece. - RBW
The "Davis" cited by Spaeth is Gussie L. Davis, and according to Guy Logsdon & Jeff Place the date is 1887, not 1888. They note some melodic similarity to the song sung by Lead Belly. According to Seeger, Lead Belly said Irene was a sixteen-year-old girl he knew, who took up with a rambler. - PJS
Jon W. Finson, The Voices That Are Gone: Themes in Nineteenth-Century American Popular Song, Oxford University Press, 1994, p. 142, refers to Davis's composition of "Irene, Good Night" in a way that implies he thinks it is the same. But he offers no evidence. - RBW

Goodnight Ladies
DESCRIPTION: "Goodnight ladies (x3), We're going to leave you now." "Merrily we roll along, Roll along, roll along, Merrily we roll along Over the deep blue sea." "Farewell ladies, (x3), We're going to leave you now." "Sweet dreams, ladies, We're going to leave...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1847 (sheet music)
KEYWORDS: nonballad farewell
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (6 citations):
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 179-180, "Goodnight, Ladies" (1 text, 1 tune)
Heart-Songs, p. 145, "Good-night" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #138, "Good-night, Ladies" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 258, "Goodnight Ladies" (1 text)
Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, pp. 255-256, "Goodnight Ladies"

ADDITIONAL: Henry Randall Waite, Carmina Collegensia: A Complete Collection of the Songs of the American Colleges first edition 1868, expanded edition, Oliver Ditson, 1876, p. 28, "Good Night" (1 text, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Mary Had a Little Lamb" (partial tune)
NOTES [87 words]: The notes in Fuld indicate a complex history for this song. "Farewell Ladies," containing the first verse of the piece, was printed in 1847 and credited to E. P. Christy. It seems likely enough that the Christy Minstrels used it to close programs.
The complete text, with the "Merrily We Roll Along verse" (which shares a melody with "Mary Had a Little Lamb") was published in 1867.
Fuld says that the melody is that of "I've Been Working on the Railroad," but if so, there has been a lot of embellishment along the way. 0 RBW

Goorianawa
DESCRIPTION: "I've been many years a shearer, and fancied I could shear... But, oh my! I never saw before The way we had to knuckle down at Goorianawa." The shearer describes the many places he has worked, then complains how Goorianawa broke his spirits
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1912 (short version in "The Lone Hand")
KEYWORDS: work sheep Australia
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (6 citations):
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, pp. 268-269, "Goorianawa" (1 text, 1 tune)
Meredith/Tritton-DukeOfTheOutback, p. 96, "Goorianawa" (1 text, 1 tune)
Anderson-StoryOfAustralianFolksong, pp. 192-194, "Goor9anawa" (1 text, 1 tune)
Manifold-PenguinAustralianSongbook, pp. 126-127, "Goorianawa" (1 text, 1 tune)
Paterson/Fahey-Seal-OldBushSongs-CentenaryEdition, pp. 186-189, "Goorianawa" (1 text)
Stewart/Keesing-Seal-OldBushSongs-CentenaryEdition, pp. 60-61, "Goorianawa" (1 text)
Roud #9114
NOTES [41 words]: According to Patterson/Fahey/Seal, Goorianawa was known among shearers as a hard station to work -- bad conditions and low pay. "Banjo" Paterson had heard of this song at the time he assembled Old Bush Songs, but was unable to locate a text. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2
File: MA268

Goose and the Gander, The DESCRIPTION: "Goose and gander walked over the green." Goose walked barefoot afraid of being seen. "I had a black hen" with a white foot and she laid an egg in a willow tree root.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1891 (Kidson-TraditionalTunes)

KEYWORDS: humorous nonballad nonsense bird

FOUND IN: Britain(England(North))

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Kidson-TraditionalTunes, pp. 71-72, "The Goose and the Gander" (1 text, 1 tune)

Hamer-GreenGroves, pp. 62-63, "The Grey Gooise And Gander" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #1094

NOTES [38 words]: Kidson-TraditionalTunes (1891): "Many years ago this used to be a favorite song round about Leeds... common in the kitchens of quiet publichouses, and were in general the exclusive copyright of old fogies who gathered there." - BS

Last updated in version 5.0
File: KiTu071

Goose Hangs High, The

DESCRIPTION: "Im June of '63, I suppose you all know, General Lee he had a plan into Washington to go." Stuart loses a battle, but Lee invades Pennsylvania; Meade replaces Hooker; the Union wins: "You cannot whip the Yankee boys while the goose hangs high"

AUTHOR: G. P. Hardwick? (see NOTES)

EARLIEST DATE: before 1863 (see NOTES)

KEYWORDS: Civilwar battle

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

June 9, 1863 - Battle of Brandy Station. Union cavalry attack Stuart's rebel horse, but are driven off

July 1-3, 1863 - Battle of Gettysburg. George Gordon Meade's Army of the Potomac holds off Robert E. Lee's Army of Northern Virginia

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 372-373, "The Goose Hangs High" (1 text plus mention of 1 more)

Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #794, p. 53, "The Goose Hangs High" (1 reference); also #795, "The Goose Hangs High #2," and #796, "The Goose Hangs High #3," plus perhaps #797, "Der Goose Hangs High"

Roud #7763

NOTES [630 words]: Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety admits that this song may not have been traditional; both texts were copies sold as pamphlets, probably by the same blind man, Jasper Kinder. There was, however, some sort of transmission involved. Page 8 of Edwin Wolf 2nd, American Song Sheets, Slip Ballads, and Political Broadsides 1850-1870, Library Company of Philadelphia, 1963, has as its item 100 a broadside entitled "The Battle of Gettysburg," which has as its first line "In June of '63, I suppose you all know." It is listed as by G. P. Hardwick, who also published it; it is said to have seven verses, and to use the tune "Where everything is lovely and the Goose hangs high." A copy of such a broadside was sold on eBay in 2019; it appears to have been printed in red ink, and had an 1863 copyright. There is another copy in the Duke University digital collections, item bsvg301446. Presumably that is this song, and it implies an even earlier "Goose hangs high" song. This seems to be listed on p. 53 of Wolf, which has a #794 "The Goose Hangs High" ("7 verses, beginning 'Now good folks I will sing you a song," said to be "Composed and Sung by Mat. Gebler with unbounded applause"), which inspired "The Goose Hangs High No. 2" ("Come, listen to my rhyming, and I'll not detain you long"), and "No. 3" ("The sights, in New-York City, you'll find, are strange and queer"), and even "Der Goose Hangs High" ("Come, all yer gallus fellers, and listen unter me").

I cannot for the life of my guess what the significance of a goose hanging high might be. I would note that a "Goose Hangs High Songster" was published in 1866 -- but I haven't seen it. Joe Offer at mudcat.org commented that geese FLY high when the weather is good, so it is his believe that the "goose hanging high" means that all is well. But another poster said that it meant to let dead game hang until it starts to get "high," i.e. aged.

After the Battle of Chancellorsville, northern Virginia was largely denuded of supplies, which made it hard for Lee to provision his army (a fact mentioned in the text). In addition, the North's Army of the Potomac was, for nearly the only time in the war, shrinking; a number of regiments had volunteered in early 1861 for two years, and now were mustering out. With the Union forces weak and defeated, it seemed like time to invade the North.

The Union had a bit of a surprise waiting: Until this time, Jeb Stuart's cavalry had been much superior to the Federal forces. But Joe Hooker, the Union commander, had reorganized the union horse as a single corps (as opposed to un-unified brigades and divisions). For the first time in the war, they came looking for Stuart at Brandy Station -- and fought on fairly even terms.

In the end, contrary to the song, the Union troopers were driven off, and took more casualties than the Confederates. But they had shown they could stand up to the Confederates -- which would stand them in good stead at Gettysburg, where they beat off an attack by Stuart. Plus they had learned a lot about Rebel movements.

As the Rebel forces moved north, Lincoln and his cabinet became more and more worried about Joe Hooker, the loser of Chancellorsville, who was still in command. Finally, on June 28, they induced Hooker to resign, replacing him with George Gordon Meade (1815-1872). It was Meade who held off Lee's attack at Gettysburg. The song is again too optimistic about the aftermath, though; while Lee failed to drive Meade off his position, Lee was not routed, and Meade pursued very slowly, inflicting very little additional damage on Lee's forces.

The day after the end of the Battle of Gettysburg, July 4, 1863, Grant captured the city of Vicksburg. It was the single best week for Union arms in the entire war. - RBW

Gooseberry Grows on an Angry Tree, The

DESCRIPTION: "The gooseberry grows on an angry Tree ... Others are merry as well as we ... Some are sad and some are glad, Thorns flourish not on every Tree ... About ye merry maids all"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1798 (James Hook, _Christmas Box_, according to Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)

KEYWORDS: playparty

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame, p. 289, ("The gooseberry grows on an angry Tree") (1 fragment)

Goosey, Goosey, Gander

DESCRIPTION: "Goosey, goosey, gander, Whither shall I wander, Upstairs and downstairs And in my lady's chamber." The ending varies

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1784 (Gammer Gurton's Garland)

KEYWORDS: bird

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 190, "Goosey, goosey gander" (1 text)
Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #89, p. 86, "(Goose-a-goose-a, gander)"
Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel, p. 50, "Goosie, Goosie Gander" (1 text)
Dolby-OrangesAndLemons, p. 98, "Goosey, Goosey Gander" (1 text)

NOTES [204 words]: This is another Mother Goose rhyme I seem to vaguely recall hearing sung rather than recited, so I'm including it on that basis, though I'm anything but sure about this. The early version, in Gammer Gurton's Garland, ends with instructions that the listener will find provisions in the lady's chamber; in the common version, it houses "an old man Who would not say his prayers" -- which the Baring-Goulds note is a relic of another nursery rhyme, "Old Father Long
Katherine Elwes Thomas, of the ever fertile imagination (and we know what was used as the original fertilizer) believes this refers to the militantly anti-Protestant Cardinal (David) Beaton, who in fact was thrown downstairs and killed in 1546. To be fair, it should be noted that he might be found in a lady's chamber; he was far from celibate. Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel offers instead that it comes from the reign of Elizabeth I and the Papist Purges, with the ganders being priests, since all Catholic priests were male. (The problem with this, of course, is that all Protestant priests were male at that time, too.) The Opies suggest that the modern version might be combined from several late eighteenth century rhymes, but do not list their origin. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.3
File: BGMG089

Gordon o' Newton's Marriage

DESCRIPTION: The singer describes "this night our Gordon has brought home a young and blooming bride." The house and tenants "wi' harmless mirth welcome our lady home" and drink her health. "Wi' Gordon's plaid the Forbes maid does now herself adorn"

AUTHOR: Alexander Moir (source: Greig/Duncan3)
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: marriage drink
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan3 615, "Gordon o' Newton's Marriage" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6056
NOTES [81 words]: Greig/Duncan3, citing Bulloch, The House of Gordon: "The song celebrates the marriage of Alexander Gordon of Newton, b. 1804, and Sarah, eldest daughter of Alexander Forbes, which took place on 20 February 1844."
Greig/Duncan3: "It was sung at the tenants' dinner."
Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv, of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Newton (615) is at coordinate (h3,v6-7) on that map [roughly 23 miles NW of Aberdeen]. - BS
Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD3615

Gorion-Og

DESCRIPTION: Fragment: "I found the track of the wind in the trees...but never a trace of baby o." Similarly "...mist on the hill..." and "swan on the lake."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1963 (recording, Margaret MacArthur)
KEYWORDS: baby family lullaby
FOUND IN: US(NE)
RECORDINGS:
Margaret MacArthur, "Gorion-Og" (on MMacArthur01)
NOTES [67 words]: This sounds like a fragment or degenerated form of a child-disappearance ballad. In the hope that the rest of it may surface some day, and because there's a thread of narrative buried in what sounds like a nursery rhyme, I include it. - PJS
I must admit that this explanation never occurred to me (the song just sounds like a lullaby) -- but it's a beautiful melody; I too hope we can find more of it. - RBW
File: RcGorion

Gospel Cannonball

DESCRIPTION: "On the great and holy Bibble, on the pages I do find, How God came down from heaven to redeem this soul of mine." The singer notes the popularity of the Bible and urges listeners to heed so they too can go to God on the Gospel Cannonball

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (recording, Wade Mainer and the Sons of the Mountaineers)
KEYWORDS: train religious nonballad derivative
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-LongSteelRail, pp. 636-637, "The Gospel Cannonball" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #18559
RECORDINGS:
Delmore Brothers, "Gospel Canon Ball" (Decca 5970/46049, 1941)
Wade Mainer and the Sons of the Mountaineers, "The Gospel Cannonball" (Bluebird B-8349/Montgomery Ward M-8448, 1939)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Wabash Cannonball" (lyrics)
NOTES [61 words]: Cohen considers this derived from the "Wabash Cannonball," while admitting that none of the recorded versions use that popular tune. Certainly some of the lyrics are closely parallel. The source is unknown. It is interesting to note that, though the song talks a lot about the Bible, it never actually cites it, and the theology is, to say the least, simplified. - RBW
File: LSRai636

Gospel Pool, The
DESCRIPTION: "Brother, how did you feel that day, When you lost your guilt and burden? I felt like the Lord God freed my soul, And the healing waters move." The healed man says that he could run (or his hands looked new), and "the green trees bowed."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1919 (Brown)
KEYWORDS: religious healing
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 521, "The Gospel Pool" (2 short texts)
Roud #11816
NOTES [47 words]: This seems to be based, very loosely, on the healing in John 5:2-9, where a crippled man hopes to enter the healing waters of Bethzatha. But the parallel is not very close -- and the part about the healing effects of the waters is largely absent in the best manuscripts of John. - RBW
File: Br3521

Gospel Ship (I), The
DESCRIPTION: "The Gospel Ship is sailing by, The Ark of Safety now is nigh; On sinners, unto Jesus fly... Oh, there'll be glory... when we the Lord embrace." Fathers and brothers are invited to come along; the end of the world is described
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1843 (Thompson-APioneerSongster, from a manuscript dated 1843); Flanders/Brown-VermontFolkSongsAndBallads cite a manuscript seemingly from 1831
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(MA,NE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Thompson-APioneerSongster 71, "The Gospel Ship" (1 text)
Flanders/Brown-VermontFolkSongsAndBallads, pp. 75-77, "The Gospel Ship" (1 text)
ST FiBr075 (Partial)
Roud #2838
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Shout, Shout, We're Gaining Ground" (lyrics)
NOTES [119 words]: Although the title of this is clearly reminiscent of "The Old Gospel Ship," the kinship consists at most of a few stray lines. It's a bit closer to Randolph's fragments, "Shout, Shout, We're Gaining Ground," which may be a free-floating chorus of this verse. The piece itself is clearly inspired by the New Testament Apocalypse, but the language itself has almost no resemblance to the Bible (e.g. the name "Jehovah," which isn't what the Hebrews called their God anyway [see the notes on "Guide Me, Oh Thou Great Jehovah"], is not used in the New Testament, which uses the Greek word "Lord"; nor did YHWH the Father open the sealed book; it was the Lamb, i.e. God the Son, who opened the scroll; see Rev. 6.1ff.) - RBW
Gospel Train (II), The
DESCRIPTION: "Select de proper train (x3), When de bridegroom comes." "Git on board de train (x3) When de bridegroom comes." "Gwine to travel wid my Savior." "Gwine to travel home to glory."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Brown)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad train
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 529, "The Gospel Train" (2 texts plus a fragment; this is the "A" text; "B" is "The Gospel Train (III)"; "C" is a fragment of "Get On Board, Little Children")
File: Br3529A

Gospel Train (III), The
DESCRIPTION: "Oh, don't you hear that whistle blowin' (x3), Get on board, get on board." "Oh, it ain't no harm to trust in Jesus (x3), Get on board, get on board." "Jesus is the conductor." "Oh! have you got your ticket ready?"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1919 (Brown)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad train
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 529, "The Gospel Train" (2 texts plus a fragment; this is the "B" text; "A" is "The Gospel Train (II)"; "C" is a fragment of "Get On Board, Little Children")
File: Br3529B

Gospel Train Am Leaving (I)
DESCRIPTION: "De gospel train am leaving For my father's mansions, De gospel train am leaving, And we all be left behind." "Oh, run, Mary, run, De gospel train am leaving, Oh, run, Mary, run, I want to get to heaben today."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)
KEYWORDS: religious train nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 255, (no title) (1 short text)
File: ScaNF255

Gospel Train is Coming (I), The (Gospel Train IV)
DESCRIPTION: "The gospel train is coming, don't you want to go (x3), Yes, I want to go." "Jesus is the engineer, don't you want to go? (x3). Yes, I want to go." "Can't you hear the bell ring...." "Can't you hear the wheel hum...." "She's comin' round the curve...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1926 (recording, Rev. Edward W. Clayborn)
KEYWORDS: train religious nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Cohen-LongSteelRail, pp. 619-624, "The Gospel Train Is Coming" (1 text plus 2 texts of "Get On Board, Little Children”; 1 tune for each of the two songs)
Brown/Schinhart-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 770, "Way Back in Heaven" (1 short text, 1 tune, with the form of this song although the surviving stanza does not mention the gospel train)
RECORDINGS:
Rev. Edward W. Clayborn (Clayburn, Clayton, Claiborn), "The Gospel Train is Coming" (Vocalion 1082/Melotone M12546, c.1927)
File: LSRai619

Gosport
DESCRIPTION: "I sing not of Naples, of Venice, of Rome... But will sing of a seaport, and Gosport's the town." They don't know what mops are at the inns; there are no more than 10,000 "lasses of pleasure"; justice is drowned in beer. The singer bids the town farewell
AUTHOR: Words: Henry Man / Music: Richard Leveridge (source: Browne-FolkSongsOfOldHampshire)
EARLIEST DATE: 1765 (broadside, according to Browne-FolkSongsOfOldHampshire)
KEYWORDS: humorous home sailor whore nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Browne-FolkSongsOfOldHampshire, pp. 57-59, "Gosport" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: BrHa057

Gosport Beach (The Undutiful Daughter)
DESCRIPTION: "On Gosport beach I landed, that place of noted fame." The sailor meets a beautiful whose merchant parents threw her out. He offers to marry her, breaks a ring, and goes on his voyage. Three months later, he returns and marries her
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1835 (broadside, Bodleian Firth c.12(383))
KEYWORDS: sailor love clothes brokentoken wedding marriage
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Huntington-SongsTheWhalemenSang, pp. 127-129, "The Undutiful Daughter" ( text)
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 53, "Gosport Beach" (1 text)
Henderson-VictorianStreetBallads, p. 143, "Gosport Beach" (1 text)
Roud #1038
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth c.12(383), "Gosport Beach" ("On Gosport beach I landed"), B.W. Dickinson (York), 1823-1834; also Harding B 11(1383), Harding B 11(1380), Harding B 11(1381), Harding B 11(1382), Firth c.12(379), Harding B 16(105d), Harding B 11(1936), 2806 c.17(153)[some words illegible], Firth c.13(12), 2806 c.17(484v), "Gosport Beach"
File: SWMS127

Gosport Nancy
DESCRIPTION: "Gosport Nancy she's my fancy, She's the girl to make good sport, How she'll greet you when she meets you When your ship gets into port." The singer tells how Gosport women are good to sailors -- but Nancy's establishment is best of all
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1987 (Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy)
KEYWORDS: sailor navy beauty sex whore
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy, pp. 54-55, "Gosport Nancy" (1 text, with tune on p. 150)
File: Tawn040

Gossip Joan (Neighbor Jones)
DESCRIPTION: "Good morrow, Gossip Joan, Where have you been a-walking? I have for you, for you for you, for you for you... a budget full of wonders." The wonders are listed: A cow with a calf that cannot eat hay, a duck which died from eating a snail

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1720 (Pills to Purge Melancholy)

KEYWORDS: talltale animal

FOUND IN: Britain(England) US(SE)

REFERENCES (7 citations):
Chappell/Wooldridge-OldEnglishPopularMusic II, p. 98, "Good Morrow, Gossip Joan" (1 text, 1 tune)
Reeves/Sharp-TheIdiomOfThePeople 37, "Gossip Joan" (2 texts)
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 54, "Gossip Joan" (1 text)
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 41-42, "Gossip Joan" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO OX 262)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 144, "Neighbour Jones" (1 text)
Scott-EnglishSongBook, pp. 38-39, "Good Morrow, Gossip Joan" (1 short text, 1 tune; the text may not be original)
ADDITIONAL: Wit and Mirth, or, Pills to Purge Melancholy (London, 1720 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol VI, pp. 315-316, "The Woman's Complaint to Her Neighbor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1039
CROSS-REFERENCES:

NOTES [20 words]: Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO has one verse not in Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames ("My duck has swallowed a snail ...."). - BS

Last updated in version 3.2

File: Br3144

Gossips' Meeting, The

DESCRIPTION: "I shall you tell of a full good sport, How gossips gather them on a sort." Seven or more gather to drink and talk. Men who strike their women will feel wrath in return. A harper plays. Once a week they will gather and drink, and then go home

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: c. 1475 (Oxford, Bodleian ms. Eng. Poet. e. 1)

KEYWORDS: drink travel home money abuse music MiddleEnglish

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (10 citations):
Greene-TheEarlyEnglishCarols, #419, pp. 280-284, "(no title)" (2 texts plus variant readings)
Ritson-AncientSongsBalladsFromHenrySecondToTheRevolution, pp. 117-120, "Lytyll Thanke" (1 text) [DIMEV #3795]
Brown/Robbins-IndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse, #1362
DigitalIndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse #2274 (6-line version) and #3795 (quatrain)
ADDITIONAL: Roman Dyboski, _Songs, Carols, and Other Miscellaneous Poems from the Balliol Ms. 354, Richard Hill's Commonplace Book_, Kegan Paul, 1907 (there are now multiple print-on-demand reprints), #90, pp. 106-108, "[Hoow, gossip myne, gossip myn]" (1 text, with an additional text on pp. 187-188; the main version is DIMEV #2274, the one in the note #3795)
MANUSCRIPT: {MSEngPoetE1}, Oxford, Bodleian Library, MS. Eng. Poet. e.1 (Bodley 29734), folio 57 [DIMEV #2274]
MANUSCRIPT: London, British Library, MS. Cotton Vitellius D.XI, folio 43 [DIMEV #3795]
MANUSCRIPT: London, British Library, MS Cotton Titus A.XXVI, folio 161 [DIMEV #3795]
ST MSGosMee (Partial)

NOTES [265 words]: I had some difficulty deciding what to do with this piece. Its strong attestation argues for its inclusion in the Index: four manuscripts, including the Richard Hill manuscript and Bodleian MS. Eng. Poet. e.1, both of which have contributed many songs to the Index. The relatively mundane, even vulgar, sentiment also argues for popular origin.

On the other hand is the fact that it exists in two forms (one in quatrains, Greene's "B" text, although this text is missing much text due to manuscript defects; not in IMEV, but #2358.5 in the IMEV supplement; DIMEV #3795) and one in six-line stanzas rhymed aaabbc (IMEV #1362, DIMEV #2274). What's more, it is the six-line form -- the less folk-like stanza form -- which is found in the Richard Hill and Eng. Poet. e.1 copies. The two manuscripts with the quatrain version are not major folk manuscripts. The piece is the only poem in Cotton Vitellius D.XI; Cotton Titus A.XXXVI has about ten poetic items, but except for "Erthe upon Erthe (Earth upon Earth, Earth out of Earth)," they are either long literary pieces or short proverbial scribbles. It seems clear that one form of this is a rewrite of the other, but it's not clear which is which. It is possible that the article by Rossell Hope Robbins "Good Gossips Reunited," British Museum Quarterly 27 (1963): 12-15: 12-13, clarifies the matter, but I haven't seen it. In the end, I decided to index the piece and let you make up your own minds. For more about the famous anthology Bodleian MS. Eng. Poet. e.1 (Bodleian 29734), see the notes to "The Golden Carol (The Three Kings)." - RBW

Got Dem Blues

DESCRIPTION: "Got dem blues, but I'm too mean, lordy, I'm too damned mean to cry. I got dem blues, Got dem blues, but I'm too damned mean to cry. Yes, I got dem dirty blues, But I'm too damned mean to cry, Yes! mean to cry, Sweet daddy! Uh-huh! Turn me down! Uh-huh!

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)
KEYWORDS: nonballad floatingverses
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, pp. 232-233, "Got Dem Blues" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Roud #29317
File: San232

Got the Blues That Can't Be Satisfied

DESCRIPTION: Singer's "got the blues and can't be satisfied," but someday he'll catch a train and ride. Meanwhile, he wants a quart because whiskey will keep the blues away. He buys his girl a diamond ring, finds her with another man, whom he kills.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1963 (MJHurt04)
KEYWORDS: courting infidelity sex train travel homicide death drink lover
FOUND IN:
RECORDINGS:
Mississippi John Hurt, "Got the Blues That Can't Be Satisfied" (on MJHurt04)
File: RcGBTCBS

Got the Farm Land Blues

DESCRIPTION: Farmer laments that thieves have gotten his chickens, corn, beans and the tires from his car, while the boll weevils have eaten his cotton and a storm has torn down his corn. He plans to sell his farm and move to town.

AUTHOR: probably Clarence "Tom" Ashley of the Carolina Tar Heels
EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (recording, Carolina Tar Heels)
KEYWORDS: theft farming storm bug
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dunson/Raim/Asch-AnthologyOfAmericanFolkMusic, p. 68, "Got the Farm Land Blues" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #17630
RECORDINGS:
Carolina Tar Heels, "Got the Farm Land Blues" (Victor 23611A, 1930; on AAFM1, HardTimes2)
NOTES [8 words]: The song is in the form of a "white blues." -PJS
Last updated in version 5.5
Got the Jake Leg Too

DESCRIPTION: Singer wakes up in the middle of the night with "jake leg"; he can't get out of bed and feels nearly dead. His Aunt Dinah has it; a preacher drinks and gets it too. Singer warns against drinking "Jamaica ginger"; he will pray for his fellow jake-leggers

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (recording, Ray Brothers)

KEYWORDS: disease warning drink

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1919 - The Volstead Act establishes prohibition of "intoxicating liquors" to carry out the 18th amendment to the U.S. Constitution.
1930 - With Jamaica ginger ("jake") having become a popular way to get illegal alcohol, contaminated "jake" causes an outbreak of neurological symptoms in the United States
1933 - The 21st amendment to the U.S. Constitution ends prohibition.

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal, Roger Whitener, "Selections from 'Folk-Ways and Folk-Speech,'" Vol. XXIX, No. 1 (Spring/Summer 1981), pp. 63-63, "(I can't eat, I can't talk)" "(I went to bed last night, feelin' mighty fine)" (2 excerpts, not necessarily of the same song)

Roud #17562

RECORDINGS:
Ray Brothers, "Got the Jake Leg Too" (Victor 23508, 1930; on RoughWays1)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Jake Limber Leg Blues" (topic of jake)
cf. "Alcohol and Jake Blues" (Tommy Johnson) (topic of jake)
cf. "Old Rub Alcohol Blues" (topic of dangerous prohibition alcohol substitutes)
cf. "Clarksdale Moan" (Son House) (topic of dangerous prohibition alcohol substitutes)
cf. "Canned Heat Blues" (Tommy Johnson) (topic of dangerous prohibition alcohol substitutes)
cf. "If I Call You Mama" (topic of dangerous prohibition alcohol substitutes)

NOTES [1920 words]: In 1929-1930 public health authorities in the USA became aware of an epidemic of neurological disease, "jake leg," characterized by irregular, halting gait and muscular palsy, caused by impurities contained in bootleg liquor, most notably "Jamaica ginger." Jake leg inspired numerous tunes and songs among country and blues artists. - PJS

Not all Jamaica ginger was dangerous -- but one batch was very bad. MacInnis, pp. 42-43, has this report:
"Ginger Jake [was]... a popular substitute for liquor during Prohibition in the United States. This was an alcoholic extract of Jamaica ginger, and legally listed in the U. S. Pharmacopoeia as a cure for assorted ailments. It tasted so horrible that the authorities thought it would surely be safe enough to sell, but the poor bought it anyway to satisfy their need for a buzz. Sadly, in 1930 one batch was accidentally adulterated with poisonous tri-orthocresyl phosphate (TOCP). Victims' symptoms beginning with cramps and sore calf muscles but developing into a form of leg paralysis known and celebrated in song as Jake Leg." (NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal, p. 64, says it was also sometimes called "Jake Foot.")

The account in Timbrell, pp. 259-263, is similar. The disease, when first noticed, was called "1930-type of polynuertis," and received a good deal of newspaper attention. "Foot drop" was the most common symptom (because the sufferer's foot would droop if lifted into the air), but "wrist drop" was also known. It was found mostly in the states in a band from Texas to Ohio -- supposedly Cincinnati General Hospital dealt with 400 cases in one half-year period in 1930.

Baum, p. 311, observes that one of the first to spot the problem was a doctor named Ephraim Goldfain, The first case he was was of "a man whose name is lost to history [who] staggered in off the street. The patient's feet dangled like a marionette's, so that walking involved swinging them forward and slapping them onto the floor..... He wasn't in any pain, he said, but he could barely get around." The disease didn't appear to be polio, but tests for lead poisoning came back negative. And there weren't any other obvious candidates. A new disease had been found.

Baum, p. 315, mentions another consequence not cited in most of the other articles: Jake Leg caused impotence. This was apparently one of the main side effects; one of Baum's contacts suggests that this was the real reason the condition became the subject of so many songs.
"Jake" was apparently a widely-used remedy for all sorts of minor pains -- presumably because it was almost pure alcohol. Theoretically "jake" really was undrinkable in pure form -- the usual method of consumption was to dilute it with water or soft drinks. It was still pretty bad when taken with water, but Coca-Cola made it palatable. And it was cheaper than going to a speakeasy. Although the FDA regulated and tested "jake," the tests were not very effective. The test, according to Satin, p. 177, consisted of heating it to 250 degrees Fahrenheit for three hours. This boiled off all alcohol and water. The test consisted of weighing what was left over. If it weighed enough, the jake was considered legitimate. But in fact it could contain any adulterant that didn't boil off at 250 degrees. Since Jamaica Ginger was somewhat expensive, many recipes had only a little ginger and used something else, such as castor oil, to make up the rest of the non-volatile material (Satin, p. 179). After all, no one cared about the ginger -- they were buying it for the alcohol.

Unlike a modern pharmaceutical, there was no one standard source; several different manufacturers made jake, which made it easier for one batch to become contaminated without others being affected.

One of the manufacturers of cheap "jake" was a fellow by the name of Harry Gross. But, in 1929, he had a problem: castor oil was getting expensive. He needed a substitute (Satin, p. 179). He started looking around for a chemical he could get at industrial rates. And -- because he did all the mixing himself in a secret work room -- no one really knew what he was doing (Satin, p. 181). To make things even more complicated, although the "jake" was all manufactured in Gross's secret operation, it was sold under a variety of labels -- Gross used half a dozen names, and had agreements to share others (Satin, p. 182; Baum, p. 318, sees this as a sinister attempt to evade regulations, adding that his license to handle alcohol during Prohibition had been revoked some years earlier).

As a replacement for castor oil, Gross eventually settled on a chemical called Lindol, which, as we have seen, was properly tri-ortho-cresyl phosphate, or TOCP (Satin, p. 180) -- a lacquer solvent! Blum, p. 204, explains that it combined "carbon, hydrogen, and oxygen into a ring-shaped structure called a cresol (also found in creosote), and phosphorus hangs onto the ring like an exhausted swimmer gripping a life preserver." It passed the boiling test, and it was colorless, tasteless, odorless, and mixed easily with the other components of "jake."

Apparently no one realized it was dangerous -- products were not properly tested for toxicity at this time (Timbrell, p. 261; Baum, pp. 316-317, says that it had been found non-toxic in dogs and monkeys, although it later proved to be dangerous to rabbits and calves). Lindol made up about 2% of the mix produced by Gross, and exposure to it was quickly found to produce "jake leg" type symptoms in animals (Timbrell, p. 260).

Blum, p. 204, suggests that the TOCP actually made the "jake" pack more punch -- the neurotoxic effect of the TOCP gave the consumer more of a buzz. The flip side is, most drinkers of "jake" were already alcoholic; what they wanted was the alcohol more than the high.

It generally took between seven and sixteen days for symptoms to develop (TOCP operates by killing off nerves, and it took time for the damage to accumulate; Timbrell, p. 261; Blum, p. 206, says that some of the byproducts actually resemble nerve gases such as sarin). This is one reason why it took some time to diagnose the problem. A newspaper broke the story on March 7, 1930 (Satin, p. 182).

The contaminated samples were eventually traced to Hub Products, Harry Gross's company; the FDA visited him on March 17. He was minimally cooperative, but stopped shipping "jake" on March 18; he shut down his business a few weeks later (Satin, p. 184).

Gross, his brother-in-law Max Reisman, and a distributor were charged with violations of the Prohibition and Food and Drug acts (i.e. selling illicit alcohol and an adulterated substance. Satin, p. 185, is indignant that no charges were brought for their poisoning of thousands of people). The case went to trial in March 1931. Gross and Reisman eventually (and separately) pleaded guilty to relatively minor charges, and were given suspended sentences and fines (Satin, p. 184). Because they remained relatively uncooperative, they eventually were sent to prison to serve their time (so Satin, p. 185; Baum, p. 319, says Gross went to jail but Reisman did not).

There was talk of a suit against the Celluloid Corporation, maker of the TOCP (Baum, p. 319), but that went nowhere -- properly, it seems to me, since they had no idea how their product was used. Estimates of those who suffered from "Jake Leg" reportedly ranged from 35,000 (Timbrell, p. 261) to 50,000 (MacInnis, p. 42), some of whom took the Jake for legitimate medical reasons rather than because they were drunks -- but there was little sympathy for the sufferers, since most of them were alcoholics. This helps to explain why no compensation was paid to the victims. Also, it appears that Gross and Reisman were bankrupt; they never paid their lawyers, let alone any settlements (Satin, p. 185).

North Carolina Folklore Journal, p. 64, says that there were some local concentrations where the number of Jake Leg sufferers was particularly high, including in Kentucky and Tennessee, which may help explain the old-time "Jake" songs.

Timbrell, p. 262, mentions several more recent incidents of outbreaks of TOCP poisoning around the world, but apparently not on the same scale as the Ginger Jake disaster. And (as far as I know) none has inspired a song, at least in English.

Timbrell, p. 262, cites a little bit of the Ray Brothers recording of this song, and says that there were at least ten other blues songs about Jake Leg. Satin, p. 183, says that four had been released by May 1930, and on p. 186 quotes one by the Allen Brothers. If any went into tradition, I am not aware of it, but see "Alcohol and Jake Blues."

Jamaica ginger, and contaminated jake, were not the only bad alcohol substitutes used during Prohibition; methyl alcohol/methanol (and the derived "methylated spirits"), rubbing alcohol (isopropyl alcohol), and others were used, as the songs in the cross-references show. Rubbing alcohol is usually isopropyl alcohol (isopropynol), C3H8O or CH3CHOHCH3; it differs from propyl alcohol in that the hydroxyl group -OH comes off the middle carbon, not one of the carbons on the end. Like most alcohols other than ethyl alcohol, it gives a brief buzz but is deadly if metabolized; indeed, it is a skin irritant. It was not widely available until after World War I, so somebody must have tried it out as an ethanol substitute quite quickly.

Rubbing alcohol is mentioned as an alcohol substitute in "Old Rub Alcohol Blues" and "Clarksdale Moan," and in "Canned Heat Blues" in the formulation known as "alcorub."

Methyl alcohol gives the drinker the impression of consuming "regular" alcohol, but methyl alcohol is in fact a poison (Emsley, p. 110, says that methylated spirit is more poisonous than bleach). Plus its buzz didn't last very long (Blum, p. 161), tempting the drinker to consume more sooner, adding to the danger of overdose.

But methyl alcohol is cheap (Blum, p. 40) -- and was commonly used as an adulterant during Prohibition in the United States. Nor was it just during Prohibition. In June 2020, I saw reports of methyl alcohol (also known as methanol) being used in place of ethyl alcohol (ethanol) in hand sanitizer.

Ironically, the more ethyl alcohol, the less poisonous the methyl alcohol; the ethyl alcohol soaks up the enzyme which otherwise converts the methyl alcohol into lethal formic acid (Timbrell, pp. 196-197). The main effect of methyl alcohol in small doses is to make hangovers far worse, but it can also damage the kidneys and eyes, and if consumption reaches about 70 ml, death will generally follow.

Methanol sometimes would show up even in un-adulterated alcoholic beverages; some of the "kick" in bad moonshine was from methanol, and certain fruit-based brandies, such as slivovic, could contain quite a lot (Timbrell, p. 196) -- I would guess that some of this came from the pits of the fruit being processed.

The signs of wood alcohol poisoning, according to Blum, p. 41, are "weakness, severe abdominal pain and vomiting, blindness, a slip into unconsciousness, heart failure." We now know that this is because the enzyme that deals with ethyl alcohol transform methyl alcohol into poisonous formic acid.

Methanol is also known as wood alcohol or methanol, and as we saw, is a component of methylated spirits. Another name for a mix of methyl and ethyl alcohol is "denatured alcohol," a component in the heating fluid Sterno. Under one name or another, methanol is mentioned in songs including "The Man that Waters the Workers' Beer" and "Canned Heat Blues." - RBW

Bibliography

- Baum: Dan Baum, "'Jake Leg: How the blues diagnosed a medical mystery,'" article published 2003 in The New Yorker; republished on pp. 310-320 of Norm Cohen, editor, All This for a Song, Southern Folklife Collection, 2009. Page references are to the Cohen reprint
- MacInnis: Peter MacInnis, Poisons (originally published as The Killer Bean of Calabar and Other Stories), 2004 (I use the 2005 Arcade paperback)
Gotta Travel On
DESCRIPTION: Singer says he's "Done laid around, done stayed around/This old town too long" and he wants to travel on. He says the police are after him, but "There's a lonesome freight at 6:08" and he'll be on it.
AUTHOR: Nominally Paul Clayton, but it's clear that the song is derived from "Yonder Comes the High Sheriff," first recorded in 1927
EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (recording, Pete Seeger)
KEYWORDS: police hobo train travel
FOUND IN:
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Yonder Comes the High Sheriff" (tune, words, structure)
SAME TUNE:
Done Played Around and Stayed Around Viet Nam Too Long (RECORDING, Chuck Rosenberg, Saul Broudy, Bull Durham, Tom Price & Robin Thomas, on InCountry)

Gougane Barra
DESCRIPTION: There is a green island in lone Gougane Barra." What better place for a bard? The singer thinks about past bards there, "far from the Saxon's dark bondage and slaughter." When Ireland is free some minstrel will come here a lay a wreath on his grave.
AUTHOR: James Joseph Callanan (1795-1829) (source: Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)
EARLIEST DATE: 1830 (_The Recluse of Inchidony_, written 1826, according to Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)
KEYWORDS: Ireland lyric nonballad patriotic
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland, pp. 191-195, "Gougane Barra" (1 text)
O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 107, "Gougane Barra" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Charles Gavan Duffy, editor, The Ballad Poetry of Ireland (1845), pp. 192-194, "Gougaune Barra"
Edward Hayes, The Ballads of Ireland (Boston, 1859 (reprint of 1855 London edition)), Vol I, pp. 47-49,"Gougaune Barra"
NOTES [172 words]: Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland: The origin of the river Lee is the lake of Gougane Barra, "about two miles in circumference," with one small island which, "in times of trouble, [was] sought as an asylum." The lake is formed "by numerous streams descending from the mountains that divide the counties of Cork and Kerry." Croker points out that Callanan is not buried at Gougane Barra, but in Portugal. - BS
There is a certain amount of confusion about this author. Most sources list his name as James Joseph Callanan, but he is also sometimes listed under the name "Jeremiah" (and, yes, it is known that it is the same guy). Most sources agree that he was born in 1795, but his death date seemingly varies; Hoagland and MacDonagh/Robinson give 1829. He wrote some poetry of his own, but is probably best known for his translations from Gaelic. Works of his found in this index include "The Convict of Clonmel," "The Outlaw of Loch Lene," "Sweet Avondu," "The Virgin Mary's Bank," "Gougane Barra," and a translation of "Drimindown." - RBW

Governor Al Smith
DESCRIPTION: "Cal in the White House preparing for his rest, Al and his buddies are doing their best, He'll win, Al will win." Hoover will be "hard to beat," but with booze "hard to drink," Smith will win because he opposes Prohibition.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (recording, Carolina Night Hawks)
Gowans are Gay, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer walks out in May and meets a "proper lass." He asks what she is doing; she replies, "Gathering the dew; what need you ask?" He asks her to marry; she says it is not her task to give him her maidenhead. He returns home wondering who she was

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1924
KEYWORDS: courting virginity virtue loneliness
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Combs/Wilgus-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernUnitedStates 140, pp. 142-143, "The Gowans are Gay" (1 text)
Roud #4295
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Seeds of Love"
cf. "Thyme, It Is a Precious Thing"
cf. "In My Garden Grew Plenty of Thyme"
NOTES [43 words]: I suspect that this is a reversal of one of the "Thyme" songs (probably a "Garners Gay" version of "Thyme (It Is a Precious Thing)"). There are many similarities. But even if it is such, the changes are enough that we have to list it as a separate song. - RBW
File: CW142

Gown of Green (I), The

DESCRIPTION: Polly agrees "to wear the gown of green" The singer leaves "to fight our relations in North America." Many are killed. Some men foolishly buy their sweethearts toys, rings and posies; "give her the gown of green to wear, and she will follow you"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1818 (_The Vocal Library_, according to Kidson) [but note the 18C "answer" and rhe several broadsides from before 1813]
KEYWORDS: courting sex war separation death America lover soldier
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond,North),Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig/Duncan4 907, "The Gown o' Green" (4 texts plus a single verse on p. 575, 4 tunes)
Kidson-TraditionalTunes, pp. 61-63, "The Gown of Green" (1 text, 1 tune)
OShaughnessy-YellowbellyBalladsPart1 19, "The Gown of Green" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1085
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 16(106a), "The Gown of Green" ("As my love and I was walking to view the meadows round"), J. Evans (London), 1780-1812; also Harding B 25(766), Harding B 17(116b), Firth c.14(198), Harding B 11(1098), Harding B 11(2104), Harding B 25(766), "The Gown of Green"
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Erin's Lovely Home" (tune, per Greig/Duncan4)
NOTES [575 words]: The description follows broadside Bodleian Harding B 11(1098).
Greig/Duncan4 quoting Duncan: "Leartnt fifty to sixty years ago in Kinardine. Noted 26th November 1908."
Greig/Duncan4 versions share only the first two verses with the broadsides. The description is from the broadsides but Greig/Duncan4 versions omit the narrative dealing with separation and North America and goes right to commentary on the fickleness of young women." One verse of Greig/Duncan4 907B seems not connected to the tradition but is suggested by "the fickleness of young women" theme: "When Adam was created, and none on earth but he, And Eve she was his only bride, and full of modesty, No bed of down, I'm sure they had, but on a flowery plain, No wonder that her daughters love to wear the goons o' green."

There are broadsides answering "The Gown of Green"; see, for example, Bodleian, Harding B 25(767), "The Answer to The Gown of Green" ("As a soldier was walking all on the highway"), J. Grundy (Worcester), 18C; also Harding B 25(766), "Answer to The Gown of Green"; 2806 c.18(132), "Sequel to The Gown of Green" - BS

Roud assigns the same number to "The Gown of Green" (I) and (II). The two are obviously related though there is no overlap in story or evidence that they are fragments of some longer ballad; in fact, the wars are not the same. - BS

(In fact it's just possible that they are the same, though not likely. During the American Revolutionary War, Spain was fighting against Britain; if the hero was a sailor, or simply a soldier being transported in a warship, it's just possible that he could have been in a fight with a Spaniard. Alternately, if we reverse the place where he lost the limb, Our Hero could have fought in Wellington's Peninsular Campaign in Spain, then been shipped to America to fight in the War of 1812. That happened to several regiments. - RBW)

The expression "Gown of Green" predates this song. See, for example, J Woodfall Ebsworth, The Roxburghe Ballads, (Hertford: The Ballad Society, 1897 ("Digitized by Microsoft")), Vol. VIII Part 3 [Part 25], pp. 689-690, "The Shepherd's Ingenuity; or The Praise of the Green-Gown" ("Amongst the pleasant shady Bowers, as I was passing on"), printed c.1682, and which ends "Now, all you little pretty maids, that covets to go brave, Frequent the meadows, groves and shade, where you those girls may have, When Flora's coverlid she spreads, then Bridget, Kate, and Jane, May change their silly maiden-heads for curious Gowns of Green."

Also, [Thomas d'Urfey,] Wit and Mirth, or, Pills to Purge Melancholy (London: J Tonson, 1719 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol V, pp. 17-14, "Jockey's Escape from Dundee and the Parsons Daughter whom he had Mow'd" ("Where gott'st thou the Haver-Mill bonack") (1 text, 1 tune), which includes the following verse: "All Scotland ne'er afforded a lass, So bonny and blith as Jenny my dear; Ise gave her a Gown of Green on the Grass But now Ise no longer must tarry here."

According to James Henry Dixon, Scottish Traditional Versions of Ancient Ballads (London: The Percy Society, 1845 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 89, "Got on the gown o' green.] A young female who has acted indiscretely, is, in Scotland, said to have put on 'the gown of green.' The expression is not confined to Scotland, but prevails in the north of England." - BS

For that matter, "Greensleeves" is sometimes taken to refer to green clothing with, shall we say, suggestive overtones. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.0

File: RcTGoGr1

Gown of Green (II), The

DESCRIPTION: Harry meets a woman and baby. He claims to know her. He reminds her of the day "you wore the gown of green." He has returned from Portugal and Spain with gold and a pension, though he has lost a limb "saving my commander's life." He proposes.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 18C (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 25(767))

KEYWORDS: love marriage war reunion Spain baby lover sailor soldier

FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond))

Roud #1085

RECORDINGS:

Jack Norris, "The Gown of Green" (on Voice01)

BROADSIDES:

Bodleian, Harding B 25(767), "The Answer to The Gown of Green" ("As a soldier was walking all on the highway"), J. Grundy (Worcester), 18C; also Harding B 25(766), "Answer to The Gown of Green" ("A sailor was walking upon the high way"); Harding B 17(278b), "Sequel to The Gown of Green" ("As a soldier was walking all on the highway"); Harding B 25(522), "The Disconsolate Maiden"

NOTES [134 words]: The opening line makes Harry either a soldier or a sailor.

Roud assigns the same number to "The Gown of Green" (I) and (II). The two seem related though there is no overlap in story or evidence that they are fragments of some longer ballad; in fact, the wars are not the same. - BS
(In fact it's just possible that they are the same, though not likely. During the American Revolutionary War, Spain was fighting against Britain; if the hero was a sailor, or just a soldier being transported in a warship, it's just possible that he could have been in a fight with a Spaniard. Alternately, if we reverse the place where he lost the limb, Our Hero could have fought in Wellington's Peninsular Campaign in Spain, then been shipped to America to fight in the War of 1812. That happened to several regiments. - RBW)
File: RcTGoGr2

Gra Geal Mo Chroi (II -- Down By the Fair River)

DESCRIPTION: The singer hears a woman wishing her lover were here. Her lover passes. The singer remarks on her beauty "like a sheet of white paper her neck and breast." He or she promises to prove true to his or her own love.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1875 (OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads citing P W Joyce's _Old Irish Folk Music and Songs_.)

KEYWORDS: love beauty lover promise

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar,Ont) Ireland

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp. 150-151, "Down by the Fair River" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 69, "Down By the Fair River" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario 27, "Groyle Machree" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H582, pp. 238-239, "Gragalmachree" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 13, "Gra Geal Mo Chroi" (1 text, 1 tune)
Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 30, "Gra mo Chroi" (1 text, 1 tune)

RECORDINGS:
Mikeen McCarthy, "One Fine Summer's Morning" (on IRTravellers01)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 b.11(148), "Lovely Young Johnny" or "Gra Gal Ma Cree"," H. Such (London), 1863-1885

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Stone and Lime" (lyics)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Newry Mountain

NOTES [336 words]: Is this Laws M23 ["Gay Girl Marie"]? I don't believe so. There is no letter from the lover, and none of the consequences of that letter (some versions of this ballad have a line "Like a sheet of white paper her neck and breast" that may hint at a letter).

The coded name as "Grey Gram o'Chree" (Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs) or "Gra geal mo chroi" (O Lochlainn) is mentioned ("And her name in plain Irish is ....") once or twice, but is not the end of almost every verse as it is in Laws M23. This ballad is about a girl thinking about her lover; it is a collection of floating verses -- connected to that theme -- that I don't find in Laws M23. For example,
The moon it may darken and show us no light
The bright stars of heaven fall down from their height
The rocks may all melt, and the mountains remove
The ships of the ocean may go without sails
The smallest of fishes turn into great whales
In the middle of the ocean there will grow an apple tree
For good measure, Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs adds "Come all ... Never build your nest on a green hollow tree...." lines and "I lost my own darling by courting too shy."
One point I missed in earlier contrast of this song with "Gay Girl Marie" [Laws M23] is that Laws M23 has a male protagonist ["I am a bold rover ..."] while this song is a woman's story ["If I were an empress ..."] - BS

In earlier editions of the Index, with the improbable title to guide us, however, we did lump them. See additional notes under "Gay Girl Marie" [Laws M23].
It is unfortunate that, apart from Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, almost none of the versions of this were available to Laws. But Laws does not list the Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia text here. So we have now split the songs. According to William H. A. Williams, "Twas Only an Irishman's Dream, University of Illinois Press, 1996, p. 34, "machree" (used in some of the alternate titles) is a popular word in Irish song because it comes from Irish Gaelic "mo chroí," "my heart." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2
File: CrMa069

Gra Mo Chleibh

DESCRIPTION: Gaelic. The singer meets a beautiful woman. OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin appears to have verses missing. The last verse implies that the singer "was obliged to run for his life from the girl's father."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage courting beauty father

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 65, "Gra Mo Chleibh" (1 text)

NOTES [17 words]: The description follows the "English Summary" provided by OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin. - BS

Last updated in version 3.2
File: OCC065

Gra-mo-chroi. I'd Like to See Old Ireland Free Once More

DESCRIPTION: "Last night I had a happy dream ... I thought again brave Irishmen Had set old Ireland free." Some modern heroes are named and Father Murphy and the Wexford men of ninety-eight. "It's Gra-mo-chroi, I'd like to see old Ireland free once more"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1912 (OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads)

KEYWORDS: rebellion dream Ireland nonballad patriotic

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1775-1847 - Life of Daniel O'Connell
1778 - Birth of Robert Emmet
1796 - A French fleet (carrying, among others, Wolfe Tone) sets out for Ireland
May 26, 1798 - Beginning of the Wexford rebellion
May 27, 1798 - The Wexford rebels under Father John Murphy defeat the North Cork militia
June 5, 1798 - The Wexford rebels attack the small garrison (about 1400 men, many militia) at New Ross, but are repelled
June 21, 1798 - The rebel stronghold a Vinegar Hill is taken, and the Wexford rebellion effectively ended
1803 - Robert Emmet attempts a new rebellion. The revolt is quickly crushed, and Emmet eventually hanged
Nov 24, 1867 - Hanging of the Manchester Martyrs; this year also marked the failed Fenian rising

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 63, "Gra-mo-chroi. I'd Like to See Old Ireland Free Once More" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST OLoc063 (Partial)

Roud #5204

BROADSIDES:
Margaret Barry, "Gra Machree" (on IRMBarry-Fairs)

CRÖSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Daniel O'Connell (I)" (subject: Daniel O'Connell) and references there

NOTES [242 words]: This song mentions many heroes of Irish freedom, most of whom are the heroes of other songs:

For (Daniel) O'Connell, see "Daniel O'Connell (I)" and "Daniel O'Connell (II)."

For Lord Edward (Fitzgerald), the sort-of-leader of the 1798 United Irishmen, see the notes to "The Green Above the Red.
For Wolfe Tone, the Irish Protestant who helped organize the failed invasion of 1796, see especially "The Shan Van Voght."
For Robert Emmet, the rebel against the post-1798 Union, see among others "Bold Robert Emmet, "Emmet's Death," "Emmet's Farewell to His Sweetheart," and "My Emmet's No More."
For Father Murphy and his role in the 1798 rebellion, plus the Battle of Vinegar Hill, see the notes to "Father Murphy (I)" and the references there; also "Sweet County Wexford."
"Allen, Larkin, and O'Brien" were the "Manchester Martyrs," for whom see especially "The Smashing of the Van (I)."
If the song dates from the time of the Manchester Martyrs, I would note the existence of a roughly contemporary song, "Slave's Dream," beginning, "I had a dream, a happy dream, I dreamed that I was free" (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, pp.142-143). I know of no connection, but the use a lot of common words.
According to William H. A. Williams, 'Twas Only an Irishman's Dream, University of Illinois Press, 1996, p. 34, "machree" (used in some of the alternate song titles) is a popular word in Irish song because it comes from Irish Gaelic "mo chroí," "my heart." - RBW
Last updated in version 5.2
File: OLoc063

Grace Before Meat at Hampton
DESCRIPTION: "Thou art great and Thou art good, And we thank Thee for this food; By Thy hand we must be fed, Give us, Lord, our daily bread. Amen"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, p. 179, "Grace Before Meat at Hampton" (1 text, 1 tune; p. 143 in the 1901 edition)
Roud #15285
File: Dett179

Grace Brown and Chester Gillette [Laws F7]
DESCRIPTION: Gillette is awaiting execution for drowning his sweetheart on a boating excursion. The singer mentions the grief of the mothers
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales)
KEYWORDS: homicide execution grief
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
July 11, 1906 - Murder of Grace Brown
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Laws F7, "Grace Brown and Chester Gillette"
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 32-34, "The Murder of Grace Brown" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 119-121, "The Ballad of Grace Brown and Chester Gillette" (1 text)
DT 809, GRACBRWN
Roud #2256
NOTES [76 words]: This murder also provided the model for Theodore Dreiser's "An American Tragedy." The movie "A Place in the Sun" is also reported to be based on it. There is a related book, The Prison Diary and Letters of Chester Gillette : September 18, 1907 through March 30 1908, by Craig Brandon and Jack Sherman. I have not seen it. There is also a novel, Joseph W Brownell, Adirondack Tragedy: The Gillette Murder Case of 1906. I haven't even tried to see that. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.1
Grace Darling (I) (The Longstone Lighthouse)

DESCRIPTION: "Twas on the Longstone lighthouse there dwelt an Irish maid," Grace Darling. At dawn she saw "a storm tossed crew ... to the rocks were clinging." With her father's reluctant help, she launched a boat, rowed out, and "boldly saved that crew."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast); 19C (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 13(240))

KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship storm wreck sailor rescue

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Sep 7, 1838 - Grace Darling and her father rescue nine of the crew of Forfarshire (source: Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast)

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, pp. 86-87, "The Longstone Lighthouse" (1 text, 1 tune)

Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs 100, "Grace Darling" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #1441

BROADSIDES:

*Bodleian, Harding B 13(240), "Grace Darling" ("Twas at the Longstone lighthouse"), unknown, no date; also Harding B 11(4158), "Grace Darling"

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Grace Darling (II)" (subject)

cf. "Grace Darling (III)" (subject)

NOTES [678 words]: Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast: "Grace Darling was the daughter of the light-house keeper on one of the Farne Islands (a group of Islands, also called The Staples, seventeen in number) two miles off the N.E. coast of Northumberland.... The song has evidently been adapted for Irish audiences." - BS

According to Paine, p. 188, the Forfarshire was a steamer which carried cargo fro Hull and Dundee. Built in 1834, her last trip began on September 5, 1838, from Hull. She suffered boiler problems the next day, and the engines eventually went out completely in a storm. Her pumps also were struggling (Cordingly, p. 218.) Captain Humble nonetheless decided to continue with sails only rather than seek shelter -- even though her unpowered paddlewheels would make her far less maneuverable. She was wrecked on the Farnes shoals a little before 4:00 a.m. on September 7 (Paine, p. 188).

No one seems quite sure how many were aboard; Hudson/Nicolls, p. 90, suggests a crew of 25, with 40 passengers. They say the boat broke in two on the rocks, with the stern section (with the captain and almost all of the passengers but only part of the crew) was swept out to sea, with no survivors. Cordingly, p. 218, suggests that she carried 55 passengers and crew in addition to Captain Humble and his wife. He says on p. 219 that the twelve who were on the forward section included a women, two children, a handful of other passengers, and carpenter John Tulloch, who managed to bring the survivors to a rock. They had no food and no shelter, and were soaking wet and in danger of hypothermia. And they were about a mile from the lighthouse.

The Longstone Lighthouse was built in 1826 to replace an earlier lighthouse which had been ineffective in preventing wrecks. The Darling family had long kept the lighthouse; William Darling had succeeded his father as keeper of the old lighthouse in 1815, and then had moved to the Longstone light when it was finished (Cordingly, p. 216).

William and his wife Thomasina (who apparently was considerably older than her husband) had nine children, but only two -- Grace and one boy -- were still at home in 1838, and the boy happened to be away on the night of the storm. The Forfarshire wreck was not the only time William Darling went on a rescue mission; Cordingly, p. 217, tells how he and his sons had rescued a man from the Autumn in 1834. By 1838, however, most of the boys had moved out. Grace Darling was apparently the first to see the wrecked Forfarshire. Because it took at least two to handle their lifeboat (a 21-foot-long coble, according to Cordingly, p. 219), William Darling had to have Grace to help him go out on his rescue mission. The gale was still blowing, and their boat was open, so this was genuinely dangerous (Cordingly, p. xii).

Three of the survivors -- a clergyman and the two children -- had died before the Darlings could reach them (Cordingly, p. 220). It took two trips, but the nine passengers still living were all brought back to Longstone (Cordingly, p. 221. Several of them helped with the rowing during the rescue).
Although William and Grace both took part in the rescue, it was Grace who became famous for her part (as Cordingly says on p. 215, "For a woman to row out to a shipwreck in a storm was unheard of, and the story received even more attention for the fact that the woman was twenty-two years old, had a pleasant face and modest manner, and had a name that might have come straight from the pages of a Victorian novel). A subscription brought her about 750 pounds in gifts, and she became a popular subject of poetry and at least four books. The lighthouse became the site of a perverse sort of pilgrimages; the myriad visitors made it hard for the Darlings even to tend the lighthouse (Cordingly, p. 222).

According to Benet, p. 275, Grace Horsley Darling was born in 1815, making her 22 years old (and hence rather a spinster) at the time of the Forfarshire wreck. She died in 1842, still a heroine, of a cough she picked up not too long after the rescue (Cordingly, p. 223).

Bibliography

- Benet: William Rose Benet, editor, The Reader's Encyclopedia, first edition, 1948 (I use the four-volume Crowell edition but usually check it against the single volume fourth edition edited by Bruce Murphy and published 1996 by Harper-Collins. The entry on Grace Darling, however, was deleted from the fourth edition)
- Cordingly: David Cordingly, Women Sailors and Sailors' Women, Random House, 2001 (I use the undated, but later, paperback edition)

Last updated in version 4.3
File: Ran086

Grace Darling (II)

DESCRIPTION: Grace tells her father to launch the lifeboat in the storm to rescue "the shipwreck'd wanderers from the grave." He answers "twere worse than madness." At daybreak she calls on him again to launch the boat. They launch the boat and save the crew.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1861 (broadside, LOCSinging sb20150a)
KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship storm wreck sailor rescue
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sep 7, 1838 - Grace Darling and her father rescue nine of the crew of _Forfarshire_. (source: Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, p. 87)
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #798, p. 53, "Grace Darling" (2 references, which appear to be this song)
Roud #V3152
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth b.28(3a/b) View 8 of 8, "Parody. Grace Darling" ("Oh! dearest dad, the winds are blowing"), G. Ingram and Co. (London), no date
LOCSinging, sb20150a, "Grace Darling" ("Oh! father loved! the storm is raging"), H. De Marsan (New York), 1859-1860
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Grace Darling (I) (The Longstone Lighthouse)" (subject) and notes there
cf. "Grace Darling (II)" (subject)
NOTES [83 words]: The description is based on broadside LOCSinging sb20150a. Broadside LOCSinging sb20150a: H. De Marsan dating per Studying Nineteenth-Century Popular Song by Paul Charosh in American Music, Winter 1997, Vol 15.4, Table 1, available at FindArticles site. While broadside Bodleian, Firth b.28(3a/b) View 8 of 8 is labelled "parody" it is not comical. Instead it seems a mild paraphrase. - BS
For background on Grace Horsley Darling, see the notes to "Grace Darling (I) (The Longstone Lighthouse)." - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: BdGrDa02
Grace Darling (III)

DESCRIPTION: At night in a heavy sea the "Forfarshire" steamer strikes a rock on Longstone Island. "To pieces she flew." Grace Horsley Darling hears the cries and asks her father to go to the rescue. They launch a boat and save nine of sixty.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1858 (broadside, Bodleian Firth c.12(126))

KEYWORDS: rescue drowning sea ship wreck father

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Sep 7, 1838 - Grace Darling and her father rescue nine of the crew of Forfarshire (source: Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast)

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #168, p. 1, "Grace Darling" (1 text)

Greig/Duncan1 30, "Grace Darling Our Langoleen" (1 text)

Roud #3811

BROADSIDES:

Bodleian, Firth c.12(126), "Grace Darling" ("I pray give attention to what I will mention"), The Poet's Box (Glasgow), 1858; also Harding B 15(118a), Firth c.12(125), 2806 c.14(25), "Grace Darling"

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Grace Darling (I) (The Longstone Lighthouse)" (subject) and references there

cf. "Grace Darling (II)" (subject)

NOTES [110 words]: "Langoleen" is not in the Greig/Greig/Duncan1 text. It is not in the Greig #168 article. Greig/Duncan1 neither explains it nor says the song title is "editorial." Finally, I don't know what the word means. - BS

Partridge's Dictionary of Slang and Unconventional English defines "langolee" (no terminal n) as a nineteenth century term for "the male member"; maybe this is the reason for the lack of a definition in most of the textbooks. If we assume "langoleen" is the feminine form, then perhaps it's "beloved." Or perhaps I'm speculating out of turn.

For background on Grace Horsley Darling, see the notes to "Grace Darling (I) (The Longstone Lighthouse)." - RBW

Last updated in version 2.4

File: GrD1030

Grace, Grace, Dressed in Lace

DESCRIPTION: Skipping/counting game. "Grace, grace, dressed in lace, Went upstairs to powder her face. How many boxes did she use? One, two three...." (Or "five, ten, twenty....").

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)

KEYWORDS: clothes playparty

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 109, "(Grace, Grace, dressed in lace)" (1 text)

Roud #19323

File: SuSm109B

Gracie M Parker

DESCRIPTION: Gracie Parker leaves Alberton for Saint Pierre "heavily lumber-laden." In a heavy gale "she struck a sunken rock ... And all on board were drowned." Two bodies wash up on the beach. The drowned crew are named

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland)

KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship storm wreck sailor moniker

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Dec 16, 1893 - Schooner Gracie M Parker from Alberton, PEI stranded and wrecked in a storm in St Pierre Harbour under Captain Farrell (Northern Shipwrecks Database) (Note that the ballad has the schooner put to sea on November 15, 1893 so someone is wrong by a month)

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 49-50, "Gracie M Parker" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 136-137,254-255, "The Schooner Gracie Parker" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #12469

RECORDINGS:
Mrs. Benjamin Smith, "The Schooner Gracie Parker" (on MRElves01)

NOTES [25 words]: Alberton is on the north west coast of Prince, Prince Edward Island. St Pierre Harbour is on St-Pierre, a French island southwest of Newfoundland. - BS

File: Dib049

Grafted into the Army

DESCRIPTION: "Our Jimmy has gone for to live in a tent, They have grafted him into the army... I told them the child was too young, alas! At the Captain's forequarters they said he would pass...." The mother talks of her little boy in the army; she hopes he comes back

AUTHOR: Henry Clay Work

EARLIEST DATE: 1862 (sheet music published by Root & Cady, according to Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar; the version in Work-SongsOf-Henry-Clay-Work just says "186_.")

KEYWORDS: soldier mother youth humorous

FOUND IN: US(MA)

REFERENCES (9 citations):
Work-SongsOf-Henry-Clay-Work, pp.137-140, "Grafted Into The Army" (1 text, 1 tune, a copy of the original sheet music)
Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales, pp. 361-362, "(no title)" (1 text)
Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 371, "Grafted Into the Army" (1 text, a copy of a Johnson & Co. broadside)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #799, p. 53, "Grafted Into the Army" (13 references)
Silber-CivWarFull, pp. 311-313, "Grafted into the Army" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber-SoldierSongsAndHomeFrontBalladsOfCivilWar, pp. 68-69, "Grafted into the Army" (1 text, 1 tune)
Colonial-Dames-AmericanWarSongs, p. 93, 'Grafted' into the Army" (1 text)
Messerli-ListenToTheMockingbird, pp. 113-115, "Grafted into the Army" (1 text)

DT, GRFTRMY*

Roud #6596

NOTES [58 words]: Various authors note that Henry Clay Work's verb "grafted" is a multi-layered pun. It is, on its face, a mis-statement of "drafted"; it is a form of "grafting," as in combining the branches of different trees -- and it reminds us of graft, as in financial illegalities, which were common among military suppliers and recruiters in this period. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: SCw68

Gramachree

DESCRIPTION: The singer hears the birds singing and courting as he wanders by the banks of Banna. He thinks longingly of Molly, who once said she loved him but now hates him. He says that he will be true for as long as he lives

AUTHOR: George Ogle (1739-1814)? (source: Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)

EARLIEST DATE: 1787 (Scots Musical Museum)

KEYWORDS: love betrayal

FOUND IN: Ireland Britain(Scotland) Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H204, pp. 388-389, "Gramachree" (1 text, 1 tune)
O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 122, "Molly, Asthore" (1 text); pp. 158-159, "Gramachree Molly" (1 text)
Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland, pp. 133-136, "Banna's Banks" (1 text)
Grampound Wassail. The

DESCRIPTION: "Wassail, wassail, wassail, wassail And joy come to our jolly wassail. Now here at this house we first will be seen, To drink the king's health such a custom has been." The singers salute the house and ask gifts; they offer good wishes

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Palmer, but apparently collected in the nineteenth century)

KEYWORDS: request ritual drink food begging nonballad wassail royalty

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #144, "The Grampound Wassail" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #209

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Somerset Wassail" (subject) and references there

NOTES [39 words]: Roud lumps this with the many other wassail songs, but the form is very different, and it's much longer than most wassails -- as given in Palmer, almost a script for how everyone behaves. I have no hesitation in splitting them.. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.7

File: PECS144

Grand Conversation on Brave Nelson, The

DESCRIPTION: Heroes discuss Nelson and his victories at Copenhagen and the Nile. He is wounded and dies in the victory at Trafalgar and is returned to be buried in England. A memorial statue is erected in renamed Trafalgar Square at Charing Cross.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1867 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 20(61))

KEYWORDS: battle commerce England memorial political
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Aug 2, 1798 - Battle of the Nile at Aboukir Bay
Apr 2, 1801 - Battle of Copenhagen
Oct 21, 1805 - Battle of Trafalgar
1843 - Nelson's Column is erected in Trafalgar Square

FOUND IN:
Roud #V714

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 20(61), "Grand Conversation on Nelson Arose" ("As some heroes bold, I will unfold, together were conversing"), J. Harkness (Preston), 1840-1866; also Firth c.12(49), Harding B 11(1387), Johnson Ballads 2534, "Grand Conversation on Brave Nelson"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Grand Conversation on Napoleon" (structure)
cf. "The Grand Conversation Under the Rose" (structure, theme)
cf. "Nelson's Victory at Trafalgar (Brave Nelson)" [Laws J17] and references there (subject)

NOTES [163 words]: The theme of commerce benefiting from war gets passing notice in "The Grand Conversation on Napoleon" and is the main theme of "The Grand Conversation Under the Rose." In this broadside it has one verse between the victories at Copenhagen and the Nile, and the final victory and death at Trafalgar:

Many a gallant youth, I'll tell the truth, in action have been wounded
Some left their friends and lovers in despair upon their native shore.
Others never have returned again, but died upon the raging main,
Causing many a mother to cry, my son, and widows to deplore.

When war was raging, it is said, men for their labour were well paid
Commerce and trade was flourishing, but now it ebbs and flows,
And poverty it does increase, tho' Britons say they live in peace,
This grand conversation on brave Nelson arose.

The reference to Trafalgar Square and Nelson's Column assures that "The Grand Conversation on Brave Nelson" was written after "The Grand Conversation of Napoleon." - BS

Last updated in version 5.0
File: BrdGCoBN

Grand Conversation on Napoleon, The

DESCRIPTION: Consider Napoleon's imprisonment on St Helena. Better to have died at Waterloo than be condemned by England to this "the dreary spot." His defeat at Moscow and betrayal at Waterloo are recounted. We will speak again of him when again we face the foe.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1839 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(1389))
KEYWORDS: battle exile betrayal death commerce France memorial political prisoner Napoleon

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
June 18, 1815 - Battle of Waterloo

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion, p. 192, "The Grand Conversation of Napoleon" (1 fragment)
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 196, "The Grand Conversation on Napoleon" (1 text, 1 tune)
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 162, "The Grand Conversation on Napoleon" (2 texts (1 Irish Gaelic), 1 tune)
Dallas-TheCruelWars-100SoldiersSongs, pp. 128-131, "The Grand Conversation on Napoleon" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1189

RECORDINGS:
Tom Costello, "A Grand Conversation on Napoleon" (on Voice08)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(1389), "The Grand Conversation on Napoleon ("It was over that wild beaten track a friend of bold Buonapart"), J. Catnach (London), 1813-1838; also Harding B 19(107), 2806 c.15(104)[some words illegible], "Grand Conversation on the Remains of Napoleon"; also Firth b.34(196), Firth c.16(92), Harding B 11(4086), Firth c.16(91), Harding B 11(1508), Harding B 11(253), "[The] Grand Conversation on Napoleon"; also Harding B 11(1390), "The Grand Conversation on Napoleon Arose"; Harding B 11(254), "The Grand Conversation of Napoleon"

NOTES [1122 words]: Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion p. 192 is a fragment; broadside Bodleian Harding B 11(254) is the basis for the description.

Easily missed in passing is a one-line reference to the benefit commerce has from war: "He caus'd the money to fly wherever he did go." This theme is expanded in "The Grand Conversation on Brave Nelson" and is the main theme of "The Grand Conversation Under the Rose."

The allusion to England is as reference to the "bunch of roses" (Zimmermann p. 192). An unspoken reference is to Ireland as the "we" in "may our shipping float again to face the daring foes ... we'll boldly mount the wooden walls."

The ballad is recorded on one of the CD's issued around the time of the bicentennial of the 1798 Irish Rebellion. See:

Franke Harte and Donal Lunny, "The Grand Conversation on Napoleon" (on Franke Harte and Donal Lunny, "My Name is Napoleon Bonaparte," Hummingbird Records HBCD0027 (2001))

Harte speculates that the last line of each verse ("And the grand conversation on Napoleon arose") is a corruption of the last line of each verse of "The Grand Conversation Under the Rose" ("This grand conversation was under the rose"); that is to say, the conversation was sub rosa=secret.

BS

There seems to be a tendency in broadsides to blame Napoleon's failure at Waterloo on betrayal. "Napoleon Bonaparte (III)" blames Marshal Grouchy. This song prefers to blame Marshal Ney (1769-1815).

There is some justification for this (as there is for blaming Grouchy, who didn't march to the sound of the guns at Waterloo). Ney's performance in the Waterloo campaign was utterly pitiful. Napoleon should have known better. Ney had performed brilliantly in the 1813 retreat from Moscow; his rearguard action had saved all that could be saved (Glover, p. 181). Napoleon had long before called him "the bravest of the brave" (Chandler, p. 830) But he was not the smartest of the smart. He had hardly any education at all, and "never made much pretense at being able to express himself in a very civil manner, or even of possessing the thinnest veneer of culture" (Schom, p. 31). Napoleon himself had said that it would be dangerous to give Ney a significant independent command.

But when Napoleon returned from France to Elba, Ney led a body of troops against him -- and then changed his mind and joined his old commander (Schom, p. 32). Maybe Napoleon felt he owed him something. Or maybe Napoleon really had lost it. Whatever the explanation, it was a major mistake.

Once Europe became aware that Napoleon was back, they hastened to gather their armies -- but it took time for many of the forces, which could move no faster than a marching man, to reach the front (Chandler/Beckett, p. 154). The first to reach the French border were the Anglo-Dutch under Wellington and the Prussians under Blucher. Napoleon had only about 200,000 men to guard all of France (Keegan, p. 121), while the Prussians alone were bringing 100,000, and the Anglo-Dutch about 70,000 (Keegan, p. 123, although many of these were unreliable), and Austria and Russia would eventually bring at least 300,000 more. If he let them all gather, Napoleon would be swamped.

But only the Anglo-Dutch and the Prussians were in place in June 1815. Napoleon's plan was to interpose between them and defeat them in detail (Keegan, p. 122). To do this, he divided the army into three wings of roughly two corps each. Grouchy commanded the right, Napoleon the central reserve (which could reinforce either wing). The left was eventually assigned to Ney.

Appointed to command the left wing less than a week before Waterloo (Chandler, p. 1029), Ney's first task was to defeat a British rearguard while Napoleon and Grouchy fought the Prussians at Ligny. But Ney, given the chance to gobble up a few British brigades, instead stopped moving and muffed the Battle of Quatre Bras (June 16, 1815; Schom, pp. 258-259, 267-268). If he had won, it would have chewed up Wellington's army before Waterloo, making the latter battle easier for the French.

And in muffling Quatre Bras, he also contradicted Napoleon's orders to I Corps commander Jean-Baptiste Drouet Comte d'Erlon. As a result, d'Erlon didn't fight at Quatre Bras -- and didn't fight with Napoleon at the simultaneous battle at Ligny (Chandler, pp. 1034-1057, especially pp. 1051-1053; also Schom, pp. 271-272, detailing how d'Erlon was bounced around the countryside by Napoleon and Ney. At one point, he was on the brink of attacking at Ligny -- and actually turned around and marched away!). D'Erlon's presence at Ligny would probably have turned Ligny, which was a tactical win for the French despite dreadful weather, into a complete strategic victory (Chandler/Beckett, pp. 155-156). Instead, the Prussian losers -- whom Napoleon expected to retreat toward Prussia (Glover, p. 213) -- were able to regroup and show up to support Wellington.
at Waterloo.
Ney's disastrous performance continued at Waterloo itself, where the Marshal had tactical control of the battlefield. (Keegan, p. 126. Napoleon was feeling unwell and played very little role; Glover, p. 216.) Ney started late (see map on pp. 124-125 of Keegan), and did little except put in frontal attack after frontal attack (Glover, p. 216) -- and no one understood defensive warfare better than Wellington. If Blucher hadn't shown up, it's possible that Ney's bull-in-a-stainless-steel-plateware-shop style might have worked -- but Blucher's arrival (with Grouchy, who was supposed to watch him with 30,000 men -- Chandler, pp. 1060-1062 -- nowhere to be found; Chandler, p. 1069) doomed Napoleon.

Still, the ultimate fault is Napoleon's. He knew that Ney had all the imagination of a pithed frog; the man was simply not fit for independent command. (If you want to get a picture of Ney, think George W. Bush: Charming, aggressive, and unable to adapt to new data,) And Napoleon knew it, and he had much better commanders (notably Davout, whom he had made War Minister) available. Napoleon chose the wrong officers, and didn't exercise close control over them, and paid the inevitable price.

As for the idea that Ney sold out Napoleon -- this is a pitiful joke. When Napoleon returned from Elba, Ney led the first substantial body of troops to oppose him. He could have stopped Napoleon on the spot -- but instead rallied to his standard. And, after Napoleon fell, Ney was tried for treason and shot in December 1815 (Schom, p. 318, who notes that he actually commanded the firing squad himself). By the time of Waterloo, his only hope was for Napoleon to win. Ney's only "betrayal" lay in accepting a command he wasn't fit to exercise. And that's a crime quite a few others, including many Presidents and Prime Ministers, have been guilty of. - RBW

Bibliography

- Schom: Alan Schom, One Hundred Days: Napoleon's Road to Waterloo, Atheneum, 1992

Last updated in version 4.2

File: BrdGCoNa

---

Grand Conversation on O'Connell Arose

DESCRIPTION: Dan O'Connell is dead. His career is reviewed: MP for 18 years, supported the Reform Bill, "left our church and clergy free," opposed slavery, killed Lestaire in a duel. He would have supported Irish unity when the British were fighting in the Crimea.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1862 (broadside, Bodleian Firth c.26(87))

KEYWORDS: death Ireland memorial patriotic political

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- 1775-1847 - Life of Daniel O'Connell
- Feb 1, 1815 - Kills D'Esterre in a duel over a political comment made by O'Connell
- 1823 - O'Connell's Catholic Association formed to resist the requirement that Irish Catholics pay tithes to the Anglican Church of Ireland.
- July 1828 - Daniel O'Connell elected MP.
- 1829 - Catholic "emancipation," allowing them every political right open to Protestants of equivalent position
- 1840-1843 - O'Connell led the movement to repeal the act that joined Ireland and Great Britain as the United Kingdom
- May 15, 1847 - O'Connell dies
- 1854-1856 - Crimean War

FOUND IN:
- Roud #V716

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Firth c.26(87)[final lines illegible], "Grand Conversation on O'Connell Arose" ("Come all you sons of Erin's land and mourn the loss of noble Dan"), J.O. Bebbington (Manchester), 1858-
1861; also 2806 b.10(20) [some lines illegible], 2806 b.10(36), "Grand Conversation on O'Connell Arose"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "The Grand Conversation on Napoleon" (structure)
- cf. "The Grand Conversation on Brave Nelson" (structure)
- cf. "Daniel O'Connell (I)" (subject: Daniel O'Connell) and references there
- cf. "Ould Father Dan" (subject)

NOTES [233 words]: O'Connell on slavery: "With respect to the principles of President Tyler on the subject of negro slavery, I am as abhorrent of them as ever I was; indeed, if it was possible to increase my contempt of slave-owners and the advocates of slavery, my sentiments are more intense now than ever they were, and I will avail myself of the first practical opportunity of giving utterance to them, especially in connection with the horrible project of annexing Texas to the United States." (source: "Letter to James Haughton, February 4, 1845" at Study of Slavery, Resistance, and Abolition, Yale Center for International and Area Studies site.

Except for the line and rhyme structure and the use of the title in the last line of each verse this ballad seems unrelated to the earlier "Grand Conversation" broadsides. - BS

This item shows O'Connell as more of a visionary than usual: President Polk (the successor to Tyler) would annex Texas under the pretext of the Mexican War, and that annexation did indeed provoke the American Civil War, because it led to the collapse of the Missouri Compromise and led to the increasingly frantic attempts at conciliation which eventually failed and caused the Union to come apart.

It also shows the higher plane on which O'Connell lived: The Irish leaders of the next generation generally had no qualms against slavery; John Mitchel, indeed, actively advocated it. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: BrdGC00A

Grand Conversation on Sebastopol Arose (I)

DESCRIPTION: The British defeat the Russians at Alma, Balaclava, Inkerman and Sebastopol. British generals and units are named. Incidentally, there was some help by "6,000 sons of France"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1966 (Zimmermann)

KEYWORDS: war battle patriotic

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- Sept 20, 1854 - Battle of Alma
- Oct 25, 1854 - Battle of Balaclava
- Nov 5, 1854 - Battle of Inkerman
- Sep 9, 1855 - Fall of Sevastopol following an 11 month siege

FOUND IN:
- Roud #V715

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Firth c.14(71), "Grand Conversation on Sebastopol Arose" ("You Britons all, both old and young, attend unto my song"), unknown, no date

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "The Grand Conversation on Napoleon" (structure)
- cf. "The Grand Conversation on Brave Nelson" (structure)
- cf. "Grand Conversation on Sebastopol Arose (II)" (subject)

NOTES [72 words]: Except for the line and rhyme structure and the use of the title in the last line of each verse this ballad seems unrelated to the earlier "Grand Conversation" broadsides. - BS

For background on the Crimean War, and the rather inaccurate numbers in this piece, see the notes to "The Heights of Alma (I)" [Laws J10].

Roud lumps the two "Grand Conversation on Sebastopol Arose" types, but the forms imply that they are different. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: BrdGCSA1

Grand Conversation on Sebastopol Arose (II)

DESCRIPTION: The British and French join Omar Pasha "to seize upon Sebastopol and set poor Turkey free." They defeat the Russians at Alma when Lord Raglan leads the battle with "legions of France by the side of old Britain" and Colin Campbell leads the Highlanders.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1966 (Zimmermann)
KEYWORDS: war battle patriotic
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sept 20, 1854 - Battle of Alma
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dallas-TheCruelWars-100SoldiersSongs, pp. 207-210, "The Grand Conversation on Sebastopol Arose" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #V715
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 26(224), "Grand Conversation on Sebastopol Arose" ("As the Western powers of Europe, united all together"), unknown, no date
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Heights of Alma (I) [Laws J10]" (subject) and references there
cf. "The Kilties in the Crimea" (subject)
cf. "The Grand Conversation on Napoleon" (structure)
cf. "The Grand Conversation on Brave Nelson" (structure)
cf. "Grand Conversation on Sebastopol Arose (I)" (subject)
NOTES [336 words]: Except for the line and rhyme structure and the use of the title in the last line of each verse this ballad seems unrelated to the earlier "Grand Conversation" broadsides. - BS
Roud lumps the two "Grand Conversation on Sebastopol Arose" types, but the forms imply that they are different.

The Crimean War was hardly fought to "set Turkey free." The Ottoman Empire was a despotism, and remained one -- but it was considered a useful one by the Western powers, since it kept Russia from controlling Constantinople and the straights. Hence the Crimean War.

Omar Pasha (or Omer Pasha; that being the spelling used in Kinross, p. 493) is described by Kinross as an "impatient general"; he was certainly quite a character. Born in 1806 in Croatia, with the name Michael Lattas, he had been an Austrian army cadet, but then deserted to the Ottomans (Palmer, p. 55). In October 1853, he had opened the fighting against Russia (Royle, p. 81). In early 1854, though, he hesitated, leaving Silistria (the first major object of the Russian invasion) to its fate. It was the Russians who finally gave up their siege. According to Kinross, p. 498, he had only limited involvement in the siege of Sebastopol, fighting instead in the defence of Eupatoria. This may be in part because the British and French had so little use for the Turks.

He ended up being disgraced for his conduct at Kars in 1855, was rehabilitated in 1861, and died in 1870.

Lord Raglan, a veteran of the Napoleonic Wars, was the original Allied commander in the Crimea; for his story, see the notes to "The Heights of Alma" [Laws J10].

Sir Colin Campbell (1792-1863) was a far better general, but socially inferior; he too fought in the Napoleonic Wars, as a junior officer of brilliant talent, but it took him more than twenty years to gain command of a regiment. The commander of the Highland Brigade, he and it gained fame together in the Crimea. He ended his career by suppressing the Indian Mutiny. For more about him, see "The Kilties in the Crimea." - RBW

Bibliography

• Kinross: Lord Kinross, The Ottoman Centuries: The Rise and Fall of the Turkist Empire, 1977 (I use the 1979 Perennial paperback edition)
• Palmer: Alan Palmer, The Crimean War (originally published as The Banner of Battle), Dorset, 1987
• Royle: Trevor Royle, Crimea: The Great Crimean War 1854-1856 (Abacus, 1999)

Last updated in version 5.0
File: BrdGCSA2

Grand Conversation Under the Rose, The

DESCRIPTION: Mars and Minerva sit under the rose, considering the rusting implements of war. British peace has followed the war of independence in the States and the defeat of Napoleon in France. "Come stir up the wars, and our trade will be flourishing"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1821 (broadside, Bodleian 2806 c.17(449))
KEYWORDS: war commerce America England nonballad political gods Napoleon FOUND IN: Ireland Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion, p. 33, "The Grand Conversation Under the Rose" (1 fragment)
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 197, "The Grand Conversation Under the Rose" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 584, "Grand Conversation Under the Rose" (1 text)
Dallas-TheCruelWars-100SoldiersSongs, pp. 125-127, "Under the Rose" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #21272

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 c.17(449), "Grand Conversation Under the Rose," G. Thompson (Liverpool), 1789-1820; also Firth b.25(353), Johnson Ballads 848, Harding B 11(1391). Harding B 11(1392), Harding B 11(1393), Harding B 11(2479), Harding B 16(106d), Johnson Ballads fol. 27[some words illegible], Firth b.25(84), Johnson Ballads 194, Harding B 17(117b), "The Grand Conversation Under the Rose"; Firth c.16(95), "The Grand Conversation Held Under the Rose"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Land of Liberty" (tune, per broadside Firth c.16(95))

NOTES [322 words]: Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion p. 33 is a fragment; broadside Bodleian 2806 c.17(449) is the basis for the description. Zimmermann's reference underscores the reliance of commerce on war; after all, the broadside notes, "Napoleon did make the money fly about" [a line shared with "The Grand Conversation on Napoleon"]. The rose may be a symbol for England (cf. "The Bonny Bunch of Roses" [Laws J5]) - BS

The effect of Napoleon on commerce is, at best, a debatable point. War production certainly helped some economies at some time (look what it did for the United States in World War II). But the Napoleonic Wars seem to have caused not growth but recession, or at least loss of personal wealth due to inflation, in Britain (see the versions of "Ye Parliaments of England" which blame economic woes on Napoleon). Napoleon's "continental system" was an embargo on British trade which might have proved fatal had it not been so widely flouted; the British government's massive spending on its military sucked capital out of the economy and damaged internal trade. Plus the army and navy required so many men that farming and industrial production suffered; it was the desperate British need to round up sailors for the navy that caused the impressment crisis and led to the War of 1812 with the United States.

Napoleon helped make the munitions makers rich (and that may be the reference here); historian Arthur Herman, whose outlook never manages to make it much beyond the deck of a navy ship, claims that in the period of the Continental System, "Britain's economy was booming. The wheels of the Industrial Revolution were humming... War had given Britain the biggest economy... in the world" (To Rule the Waves, p. 413; compare p. 406). Possibly, if you just count total output. But ordinary people suffered.

For more background on the Continental System and its economic effects, see the notes to "The Ports Are Open." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: BrdGCUtR

---

Grand Coureur, Le

DESCRIPTION: French shanty. Verses tell of the Corsair, which sets out from L'Orient to hunt the English. She runs into bad weather, bad Englishmen, bad food. Finally sinks and the crew save themselves by floating on various unfloatable objects (guns, anchors, etc)

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Hayet _Chansons de bord_)
LONG DESCRIPTION: French shanty. Verses tell of the Corsair, which sets out from L'Orient to hunt the English. She runs into bad weather, bad Englishmen, bad food. Finally sinks and the crew save themselves by floating on various unfloatable objects (guns, anchors, etc). Chorus: "Allons le gars, gai, gai! Allons les gars gaiment! / Let's go, lads, cheerily, cheerily, Let's go lads, so gaily!"
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage shanty ship wreck
FOUND IN: France
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Grand Dissolving Views (I), The

DESCRIPTION: Singer, by a fireside, sees "a Grand Dissolving View" of poverty on one hand and of famous business men, authors, and monarchs. He hopes in the future rich may see the poor as brothers, and workhouses and prisons will be few.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE:

KEYWORDS: poverty death England nonballad political

FOUND IN:
Roud #V41824

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(1394), "The Grand Dissolving Views ("While thinking of some past events at home the other night"), unknown, n.d.

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Grand Dissolving Views (II)" (subject and form)

NOTES [133 words]: The first verses of "The Grand Dissolving Views" (I) and (II) are identical [causing Roud to lump them - RBW]; the second verses are almost identical in their portrayal of a poor family and they share one more verse comparing the fates of a swindler and poor thief. The question is "which is the original and which the derivative?" For a date, an 1875 broadside for another song lists "Grand Dissolving Views" as one of the newest songs (NLScotland, RB.m.143(144), "The Harp That Once Through Tara's Halls," The Poet's Box (Glasgow), 1875). The famous people cited include London investment banker George Peabody (1795-1869), writers Charles Dickens (1812-1870) and Robert Burns (1759-1796), heiress and philanthropist Angela Georgina Burdett-Coutts (1814-1906), and Queen Victoria (1819-1901) - BS

Last updated in version 5.1

File: BrdGDV1

Grand Dissolving Views (II), The

DESCRIPTION: Singer, by a fireside, sees "a Grand Dissolving View" of past events as -- a poor worker and his starving family, a swindler going free while a starving orphan goes to jail -- and Irish heroes who "died for love of country; it was an honourable crime"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE:

KEYWORDS: poverty death Ireland nonballad patriotic

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Healy-MercierBookOfOldIrishStreetBalladsVol2, pp. 30-32, "The Grand Dissolving views" (1 text)
Roud #V41824

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 19(35), "The Grand Dissolving Views" ("While thinking of some past events at home the other night"), unknown, n.d.

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "By Memory Inspired" (subject and references there)

NOTES [307 words]: The first verses of "The Grand Dissolving Views" (I) and (II) are identical [causing Roud to lump them - RBW]; the second verses are almost identical in their portrayal of a poor family and they share one more verse comparing the fates of a swindler and poor thief. The question is "which is the original and which the derivative?" For a date, an 1875 broadside for another song lists "Grand Dissolving Views" as one of the newest songs (NLScotland, RB.m.143(144), "The Harp That Once Through Tara's Halls," The Poet's Box (Glasgow), 1875). The heroes cited often each have ballads of their own: executed Father Murphy ["Come All You Warriors," "Father Murphy (I)," "Some Treat of David," "Father Murphy (II) (The Wexford Men of '98)," "Boulavogue"], Robert Emmett ["Emmett's Grave"], Lord Edward ["Edward (III)"], Allen Larkin and O'Brien ["Allen, Larkin and O'Brien"], O'Connell ["Daniel O'Connell (I)," "Erin's King (Daniel Is No More)\), "Kerry Eagle\) and General Meagher \["The Escape of Meagher\]; I have found no song yet for United Irshmen John and Henry Sheares [see now "The Brothers John and Henry Sheares" - RBW], or 18th century orator and member of the Irish parliament Henry Grattan [as "Henry Grattin"] (source: "Henry Grattan" and "Shears Brothers" in 1798 Rebellion at the Rathregan National School site). - BS

Several histories I've read have notes about how Irish folklore magnifies some heroes, such as Wolfe Tone and Fater Murphy, and ignores the Sheares brothers. The latter are at least mentioned in "The Tree of Liberty," plus the probably-not-traditional "The Brothers John and Henry Sheares." Gratton earns a brief comment in "Ireland's Liberty Tree," which is mostly about the parliament he built up.

I do think "The Grand Dissolving Views (I)" is the original; (II) looks very much like a local adaption.

- RBW

Last updated in version 5.1

File: BrdGDV2

Grand Falls Tragedy, The

DESCRIPTION: At 3 A.M. a flat-car, loaded with rocks, falls down an incline and crushes three workmen below. The dead workmen are named and their home told.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1975 (Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou)
KEYWORDS: death worker railroading
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 46, "The Grand Falls Tragedy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #30701
NOTES [97 words]: Grand Falls is on TC-1, south of Notre Dame Bay, along the old route of Newfoundland's trans-insular railway. - BS

There was a famous accident in 1907 known as "The Grand Falls Tragedy" which took place as a dam was being built. Despite the name, this song clearly refers to a separate incident (both the number and the names of the dead are different). Note that the song has no date and does not in fact mention Grand Falls. So all we have to go on is the name of the dead, and one of those is thought to be wrong! So far, I have not been able to identify the date and situation. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: LeBe046

Grand Hotel, The

DESCRIPTION: "There's a place in Vancouver the loggers know well, It's a place where they keep rotgut whiskey to sell. They also keep boarders and keep them like hell, And the name of that place is the Grand Hotel."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1949
KEYWORDS: logger drink
FOUND IN: Canada(West)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Fowke/Johnston-FolkSongsOfCanada, pp. 180-181, "The Grand Hotel" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, GRNDHOTL*
Roud #30932
RECORDINGS:
Stanley G. Triggs, "The Grand Hotel" (on Triggs1)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Vilikens and his Dinah (William and Dinah) [Laws M31A/B]" (tune & meter) and references there
cf. "Farewell to Tarwathie" (tune)
NOTES [49 words]: The ship "Cassiar" (referred to in the third verse) was a coastal steamer whose special duty was to carry loggers back and forth from the camps to Vancouver for sprees. The Digital Tradition lists this as having "Farewell to Tarwathie" as its tune. Most others list "Sweet Betsy." Both fit. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2
Grand Idaho

DESCRIPTION: "Kind providence our lot may case, And yet we have to choose at last, If you're inquiring where to go, Come down to southern Idaho." The trees yield abundantly. The rains come constantly. Workers are urged to supply brawn; they will be welcome

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (Western Folklore 24, according to Cohen)

KEYWORDS: derivative home work farming emigration

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp 582-583, "Grand Idaho" (1 text)
Roud #19475

CROSS-REFERENCES: cf. "Beulah Land" (tune) and references there

File: CAFS2582

Grand Mystic Order, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer dreams of his initiation into the Orange Institution. He must answer that Joshua took the Israelites unto the Promised Land. His conductor knocks in code on a door. The path through the door is dangerous and he passes other tests.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: mid-19C (Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)

KEYWORDS: dream ritual religious

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 97, "The Grand Mystic Order" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
 cf. "The Brilliant Light" (subject and some phrases)
 cf. "The Knight Templar's Dream" (subject)
 cf. "The Grand Templar's Song" (subject and some phrases)
 cf. "The Blackman's Dream" (subject)

NOTES [855 words]: "The Loyal Orange Institution was founded after the Battle of the Diamond [at Diamond Crossroads] on September 21, 1795. The 'skirmish' was between the Roman Catholic Defenders and the Protestants of the area.... At the beginning the membership was of the labouring and artisan classes.... In the Rebellion of 1798, the Orangemen were on the side of the Crown and had much to do with the defeat of the United Irishmen.... With the rebellion at an end the lodges were to be less fighting societies, and more political and fraternal clubs.... From 1815, the Institution had been seriously affected, by internal disputes. Many of them were about lodge ritual and the attempts to form higher orders." (source: The Orange Institution - The Early Years at Grand Orange Lodge of Ireland site.)

Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion p. 302: The initiation songs "evoke Moses' rod, the crossing of the Red Sea or the Jordan, and strange wanderings in darkness, barefooted, among terrifying noises, to final illumination." - BS

For the Battle of the Diamond, see the notes to "The Battle of the Diamond," "Bold McDermott Roe," and "The Boys of Wexford." Songs about the Orange Order are too numerous to list.

The statement that the Orangemen were on the side of the British in 1798 is far too simplistic; most of the rebel leadership in 1798 was Protestant -- including Henry Munro (for whom see "General Monroe") and the Presbyterian Henry Joy McCracken (for whom see "Henry Joy McCracken (I)"), who ended up in command of the Ulster rising.

What is true is that the Protestants in Ulster generally did not rise in 1798. Kee, pp. 130-131, discusses at length the reasons for this. Probably most important was the fact that they had largely been disarmed in 1797, and they didn't have any remaining organization. And they had been led to expect French intervention, and had so far been disappointed.

Plus they had reason to fear their Catholic colleagues. The United Irishmen, with their Protestant leaders, had tried to "paper over" the split, but the Wexford rebellion, which was more spontaneous, had shown extremely sharp sectarian divisions (note especially the much-discussed atrocity at Scullabogue, for which see e.g. "Kelly, the Boy from Killane"). Had the Ulster Protestants still had a military organization, they might have joined the Catholics -- but they couldn't really take part as individual rebels. So they fell back on particularism and groups like the Orange Order. Hence this song. Joshua was, of course, the leader of the Israelites after the death of Moses, who was responsible for the conquest of Palestine. Joshua also brought a new religion. He is an obvious symbol for any religious minority with militant intentions.

It's not really an accurate picture, we should point out. The Bible seems to portray Joshua as leading a small army to defeat much larger local forces (note, e.g., the reports of the spies of the great population of Palestine in Numbers 13:28-29, and the claim in Deuteronomy 7:1 that the nations of Canaan are "mightier and more numerous" than the Israelites)-- but if the census figures in Numbers are correct, the Israelites probably outnumbered the whole population of Palestine at the time. Numbers 26:51 says that the population of fighting men shortly prior to the entry into Canaan was 601,730 (implying that there were two million or more Israelites counting women and children). Such an army could defeat any local city-state foolish enough to send out a force to fight it.

At least three explanations for this discrepancy have been offered. One is that the Hebrew word for "thousand" is in fact used with a different meaning here -- that it should mean something like "squad," of perhaps a dozen men. So, e.g. the figure in Numbers 26, instead of being read 601,730, should be something like "six hundred (or perhaps "sixty") squads, one thousand seven hundred thirty men." This explains everything, but there is no evidence for it.

Another possibility is that the Exodus was not a single event: That either there were multiple invasions of Palestine, each by a smaller group, or that there was only one, but that several local tribes eventually came to be adopted as "Jewish." The simplest form of this hypothesis is that Joshua -- who was an Ephraemite -- led the "Joseph Tribes" of Ephraem and Mannasseh into central Palestine and gradually influenced the tribes around it (Cornfeld, pp. 73-74; Wright, pp. 77-78).

A more nuanced version is that Canaan was captured in small bits and pieces over many years, with relatively small armies involved in each conquest but a roll of all those who participated over the centuries giving rise to a very high total. This fits the archaeological record: Ai was destroyed around 2400, long before the Israelites came on the scene, and never reoccupied (Wright, p. 80), Jericho around 1400 and perhaps not reoccupied until much later (Kenyon, p. 189), other cities destroyed in the period up to 1200. Joshua could hardly have lived through this entire period, but wherever and whenever he was active, he may indeed have fought against the odds. - RBW

Bibliography

- Kee: Robert Kee, The Most Distressful Country, being volume I of The Green Flag (covering the period prior to 1848), Penguin, 1972
- Kenyon: Sir Frederic Kenyon, The Bible and Archaeology, Harper & Brothers, no date but after November 1940

Last updated in version 2.5
File: Zimm097

Grand Saint Pierre, Ouvre Ta Porte (Great Saint Peter, Open Your Door)

DESCRIPTION: French. A Scottish sailor is at heaven's door. St Peter refuses him: sailors belong in Hell with the rest of the demons. If I let you in you will ruin paradise. The sailor says a Scottish sailor would wipe out the devils in Hell. St Peter lets him in.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage humorous religious talltale sailor Devil Hell
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, p. 878, "Grand Saint Pierre, Ouvre Ta Porte" (1 text, 1 tune)
RECORDINGS:
Joseph Lemoine, "Grand Saint Pierre, Ouvre Ta Porte" (on PeacockCDROM)
File: Pea878
Grand Templar's Song, The

DESCRIPTION: Grand Templars will be led by Moses's staff and Aaron's rod "to the promised land of God." Moses saw the Burning Bush and became a pilgrim. Noah loved the Free Masons and built the first ship. The singer sees lights and the serpent and finds "the Secret"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Tunney-StoneFiddle)

KEYWORDS: religious ritual

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Tunney-StoneFiddle, p. 130, "The Grand Templar's Song" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Grand Mystic Order" (subject and some phrases)
cf. "The Knight Templar's Dream" (subject)
cf. "The Brilliant Light" (subject)
cf. "Orange and Blue" (Masonic symbolism)

NOTES [191 words]: The images in Tunney-StoneFiddle seem confused but become clearer when compared with other Masonic songs. For example, the line "The serpent passed me by, I bent unto the ground" are, in "The Brilliant Light" dream sequence: "I cast it [Aaron's rod] on the ground and a serpent it became When he ordered me right courteously to lift it up again. I stooped and it spit fire ... I done as those words commanded and took it by the tail." The burning bush and travels of Moses are themes shared with "The Grand Mystic Order." These images are also in "The Knight Templar's Dream." What seems to have been lost in Tunney-StoneFiddle is a first verse explaining that the images are part of a dream and an indication that Masonic rituals are being described. - BS

The story of Aaron's staff that became a serpent is told in Exodus 7:8fff., I wonder, though, if the reference here isn't to Numbers 21:6fff., where God sends serpents ("fiery serpents," in the King James Bible, though the translation is somewhat uncertain). The Burning Bush is in Exodus 3. The story of Noah is in Genesis 6:9-9:29; nowhere does it state that Noah built the first ship. - RBW

File: TSF130

Grandawill

DESCRIPTION: Grandawill is doing a chore (churning butter/washing the floor). A man (sailor/soldier) makes a pass. He takes her by the middle and lays her on the floor/grass. Something noteworthy happens (e.g., the wind of her arse blows open the door)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1828 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2)

KEYWORDS: sex bawdy nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Bord))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 183, "Grandawill" (1 text)

Roud #15529

NOTES [120 words]: Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2: "... 'The Witty Shepherd' (Madden 21.281) ... contains the lines: 'He laid the maiden down on the barn floor, / And the wind of her a..e blew open the door.' Lyle may be referring to a version of broadside Bodleian, Harding B 25(2094), "Witty Shepherd" ("A shepherd kept sheep on a hill so high"), T. Birt (London), 1828-1829, which has the lines "Then he set this fair maid down on the green ground, / And he made her believe the world it went round." In any case, the broadside plot -- the shepherd, in disguise, meets the pregnant girl again and claims he never heard of her lover (he had given her a false name) -- does not fit Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 183. - BS

Last updated in version 2.6

File: LyCr2183

Grandfather Bryan

DESCRIPTION: Grandfather Bryan dies on St Patrick's day. The singer lists the worthless items he inherits: cloth-leather britches, broomstick with the head of a rake, blanket of cloth patches, a key with no lock .... "I'm fixed in grand style for the winter."

AUTHOR: unknown
Grandfather's Clock

DESCRIPTION: A description of the relations between grandfather and clock. The clock ran for the entire length of the old man's life, celebrating happy occasions and never complaining. "But it stopp'd -- short -- never to go again When the old man died."

AUTHOR: Henry Clay Work

EARLIEST DATE: 1876 (sheet music published by C. M. Cady of New York)

KEYWORDS: technology family nonballad

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (11 citations):
- Work-SongsOf-Henry-Clay-Work, pp. 177-180, "Grandfather's Clock" (1 text, 1 tune, a copy of the original sheet music)
- Stout-FolkloreFromIowa 72, pp. 94-96, "Grandfather's Clock" (2 texts plus 2 fragments)
- Neely/Spargo-TalesAndSongsOfSouthernIllinois, pp. 219-220, "Grandfather's Clock" (2 texts)
- Jackson-PopularSongsOfNineteenthCenturyAmerica, pp. 76-79, "Grandfather's Clock" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Scott-EnglishSongBook, pp. 124-125, "My Grandfather's Clock" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
- Emerson-StephenFosterAndCo, pp. 67-68, "Grandfather's Clock" (1 text)
- Messerli-ListenToTheMockingbird, pp. 176-179, "Grandfather's Clock" (1 text)
- Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #116, "Grandfather's Clock" (1 text)
- Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 251, "Grandfather's Clock" (1 text)
- DT, GRANCLOK*

ADDITIONAL: Martin Gardner, editor, _Famous Poems from Bygone Days_, Dover, 1995, pp. 168-169, "Grandfather's Clock" (1 text)

ST: RJ19076 (Full)

Roud #4326

RECORDINGS:
- Carolina Buddys, "Grandfather's Clock" (Decca 5142, 1935)
- [?] Clark & [Walter] Scanlan, "Grandfather's Clock" (Edison 50979, 1922)
- Frank Crumit, "Grandfather's Clock" (Victor 19945, 1926)
- Edison Male Quartette, "Grandfather's Clock" (CYL: Edison 8967, 1905)
- Chubby Parker, "Grandfather's Clock" (Supertone 9732, 1930)
- Tom & Roy, "Grandfather's Clock, Part 1/Part 2" (Montgomery Ward M-4242, 1933)

SAME TUNE:
- cf. "His Grandfather's Hat" (tune, form)
NOTES [850 words]: Soon after the Civil War, Henry Clay Work retired from songwriting (presumably because of the poor pay). In 1871, however, the Chicago fire burned down the offices of Root and Cady (the publishing firm). George F. Root wrote of this, "Our presses had been at work all summer, and great piles of books filled the basement of the main building, ready for the fall trade. They would all be gone in a few weeks, so we did not take out a special insurance upon them, but assumed the risk for that short time ourselves" (Root, pp. 152-153). Most of Root & Cady's printing plates, and their account books, survived (Root, p. 155). But all the stock was destroyed, and even though Root & Cady sold off the plates and copyrights (the sheet music and copyrights going to S. Brainerd's Sons, Cleveland), it wasn't enough; Root & Cady was through, and "Mr. Cady left the city" (Root, p. 157), while Root's own family formed "Geo. F. Root & Sons" in connection with John Church & Co. (which had bought other copyrights).

With his catalogue gone and Root, his internal source of music, having gone his own way, Chauncy M. Cady asked his friend Work to write some songs to help him re-establish his business. One of the songs Work turned in was "Grandfather's Clock," which had been gathering dust in his files for some years. The song sold some 800,000 copies, and earned Work about $4,000 in royalties (at that time, easily enough to retire on). He dedicated it "To my Sister Lizzie."

Folklore has it that, until this song was published, floor clocks were just "floor clocks" or "tall clocks." Since then, they have been known as "Grandfather clocks." This strikes me as more reasonable than many folk derivations, but I cannot verify this from any of my linguistic sources. Partridge, p. 116, says only that the term is from the late nineteenth or early twentieth century. Incidentally, there are famous instances of something rather like this actually happening, though I doubt it inspired Work's song. One story is of the famous Captain Cook and his final voyage of exploration. One of the reasons Cook was such a great explorer was that he was among the first officers to actually be able to tell longitude; in recent decades, enough astronomical data had been gathered to make it possible to navigate by the stars -- plus the chronometer (the first timepieces accurate enough to tell time while at sea) had been invented.

True chronometers were still very rare in Cook's time, since they had to be hand-made with incredible accuracy. John Harrison (1693-1776) had invented the device and built a handful; Larcum Kendall had made a handful in imitation of Harrison. Kendall's first machine, known as K-1, was used by Cook on his voyages. And, according to Sobel, p. 151, "Almost at the instant the captain died in 1779, according to an account kept at the time, K-1 also stopped ticking."

Opie/Tatem, p. 84, tells a tale of the clock at the House of Lords, which should have been wound up, stopping when George III died. They also mention a comment in Notes & Queries, 1864, in which nurses said it was a common occurrence for a clock to stop when someone died. Opie/Tatem have several more references to this type of thing, but all are more recent than the song. - RBW

Parodies of this piece have been common. Paul Stamler tells us of "His Grandfather's Hat," which likely will not make it into this collection: "'His Grandfather's Hat' is a parody of 'Grandfather's Clock,' referring to candidate Benjamin Harrison [elected in 1888, but defeated in 1892], grandson of President William Henry Harrison: 'His grandfather's hat is too big for his head/But Ben puts it on just the same.'" - PJS, RBW

Not all the parodies were political; Finson, pp. 132-133, reports, "Work's vision of the clock as a human servant generated parodies numbering 'upwards of twoscore,' according to Birdseye, who exaggerated little in this case. Alice Dale and George W. Morgan copied Work's song immediately in 'Grandmother's Clock' (1876) which also provides companionship (she talks to the machine throughout) and dies with its owner. B. M. McWilliams came very close to plagiarism in 'The Clock That Struck When Grandpa Died' (1880). And Work himself tried to capitalize on his success with 'Sequel to "Grandfather's Clock"' (1878), in which a relative returns to the old man's house and watches the useless machine chopped up for kindling."

Finson, p. 126, notes that there had been a number of earlier clock songs, often lamenting aging and the passage of time, which (like this song) imitated clock noises. So Work was imitating a popular genre -- but transformed and totally transcended it; those other songs all seem forgotten. Finson, p. 215, says that the song was popularized by Sam Lucas; "Lucas (1848-1916), born of former slaves in Fayette County, Virginia, enjoyed one of the most distinguished careers on stage of any nineteenth-century entertainer, at first as a member of the Original Georgia Minstrels (an all-black troupe which also include [James] Bland) and later in reviews, plays, and vaudeville." - RBW

Bibliography

- Opie/Tatem: Iona Opie and Moira Tatem, editors, A Dictionary of Superstitions, 1989 (I use the 1999 Barnes & Noble edition)
Grandfather's Story
DESCRIPTION: When children ask for a story, grandfather tells the sad tale of James Tenny and Nancy Foes, who grow up and fall in love in the woods. He goes out hunting, and is long delayed. She goes out to seek him, and dies in the snow. He finds her on his return
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin)
KEYWORDS: love death separation hunting
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, pp. 217-219, "Grandfather's Story" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9059
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "After the Ball" (theme)
NOTES [22 words]: The mechanism of this reminds me rather strongly of "After the Ball." I wonder if it wasn't written in imitation of that song. - RBW

Grandma's Advice
DESCRIPTION: The girl is cautioned by her grandmother to be cautious of boys. "They will flatter you and cunningly deceive." But the girl, courted by Johnny Green and Ellis Grove, thinks "If the girls... had been afraid / Grandma herself would have been an old maid"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1840 (The Lover's Harmony); supposedly also The [Winchester] Virginia Sentinel and Gazette, March 2, 1795
KEYWORDS: courting youth
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond,North,South)) Canada(Mar) US(Ap,MA,MW,NE,Ro,SE,So) Ireland
REFERENCES (30 citations):
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 74, "Grandma's Advice" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 173)
Hamer-GreenGroves, pp. 56-57, "Granny's Advice" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph 101, "Grandmaw's Advice" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 138, "Little Johnny Green" (1 text, 1 tune)
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, p. 157, "My Grandmother Lived on Yonder Green" (1 text, 1 tune)
Stout-FolkloreFromIowa 13, pp. 21-22, "Little Johnnie Green" (1 text)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 194, "Grandma's Advice" (1 text plus a fragment and mention of 3 more)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 194, "Grandma's Advice" (3 excerpts, 3 tunes)
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #194, "Little Johnny Green" (2 short texts)
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #83, "Grandma Would Have Died an Old Maid" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scarborough-ASongCatcherInSouthernMountains, pp. 374-375, "Die an Old Maid" (2 texts, with local titles "My Grandmother Lived on Yonder Little Green," (no title); 1 tune on p. 457)
Grandmother's Chair

DESCRIPTION: After the singer's grandmother died, her will was found to grant large sums to several siblings, but to the singer, only granny's old armchair. He is far from content, but takes the chair home -- and eventually discovers a fortune hidden inside

AUTHOR: Probably Eliza Cook (words) and Henry Russell (tune) (see NOTES)

EARLIEST DATE: 1880 (broadside, LOCSheet, sm1880 02996)

KEYWORDS: money death hiding

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South),Scotland(Aber)) US(MW,NE,SE,So) Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (10 citations):

Greig/Duncan3 705, "Grandmother's Chair" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 658, "Old Armchair" (1 text)
Randolph 467, "Granny's Old Arm Chair" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 360-362, "Granny's Old Armchair" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 467A)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 668, "The Old Armchair" (1 short text (an excerpt?), 1 tune)
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 100, "My Grandmother's Chair" (1 text, 1 tune)
Huntington-FolksongsFromMarthasVineyard, pp. 72-75, "Granny's Old Arm Chair" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scarborough-A SongCatcherInSouthernMountains, pp. 373-374, "Grandmother's Old Armchair" (1 text; tune on p. 457)
Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 123-125,252, "The Old Arm Chair" (1 text, 1 tune)
Spaeth-WeepSomeMoreMyLady, pp. 204-206, "The Arm Chair" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST R467 (Partial)
Roud #1195
RECORDINGS:
[Clarence] Ashley & [Gwen] Foster, "The Old Arm Chair" (Vocalion 02647, 1934)
Daisy Chapman, "My Grannie's Old Armchair" (on SCDChapman01)
Crockett's Kentucky Mountaineers, "Granny's Old Arm Chair" (Crown 3188 [as Johnny Crockett & Trio]/Montgomery Ward M-3026 [as Harlan Miners Fiddlers]/Paramount 3277/ Varsity 5078, all c. 1931)
Frank Crumit, "Granny's Old Arm-Chair" (HMV [UK] B-4059, 1932)
Pete Daley's Arkansas Fiddlers, "Granny's Old Armchair" (Varsity 5078, n.d.)
Charlie Parker & Mack Woolbright, "The Old Arm Chair" (Columbia 15694-D, 1931; rec. 1927)
Williamson Bros. & Curry, "The Old Arm Chair" (OKeh 45146, 1927)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth b.28(4a/b) View 3 of 8, "Grandmother's Chair" ("My grandmother she at the age eighty-three"), R. March and Co. (London), 1877-1884; also Harding B 20(62), "Grandmother's Old Arm-chair"
LOCSheet, sm1880 02996, "Granda's Old Arm-chair", White, Smith & Co (Boston), 1880 (tune)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Old Arm Chair
NOTES [559 words]: Warner notes that this piece was printed twice in 1880 -- once, under the title "Grandmother's Chair," credited to John Read, and the other, "Grandma's/Granny's Old Arm Chair," attributed to Frank B. Carr. No definitive information about the author has been forthcoming. Cohen, however, notes sheet music from 1841, credited to Eliza Cook (words) and William Clifton (music), but cites Spaeth to the effect that it was composed by Henry Russell (credited with singing it in the Cook/Clifton printing) in 1840. The attribution to Cook and Russell is also found in Jon W. Finson, The Voices That Are Gone: Themes in Nineteenth-Century American Popular Song, Oxford University Press, 1994, p. 113. I should add that it makes sense, because Eliza Cook was a fairly well-known poet and Russell a popular composer. Of Cook, Finson says, "Cook (1818-1889) was a British poet of no small reputation. Daughter of a tradesman, she taught herself letters, and she wrote for the Weekly Dispatch and the New Monthly for years." Scarborough claims that it is of "British origin," but cites no evidence -- but of course the description would fit Eliza Cook.
For background on Henry Russell, see "Cheer, Boys, Cheer (II)."
Since John H. Warland and T. Bissell published "A Reply to the Old Arm Chair" around 1841 (Finson, p. 115), I think the attribution to Cook and Russell fairly sound. - RBW
See one version of "Grandma's Old Arm-Chair" [Sheet Music: digital id sm1880 02996], published in Boston in 1880, attributed to Frank B Carr, at the Library of Congress American Memory site. There are three versions of an entirely different song as "The Old Arm Chair" beginning "I love it, I love it, and who shall dare, To chide me for loving that old arm chair." This is probably the Cohen reference since the words are attributed to Eliza Cook in two cases and the music is attributed to William Clifton and sung by Henry Russell ((Sheet Music: digital id sm1841 380380), published in New York in 1841), music attributed to Henry Russell ((Sheet Music: digital id sm1840 370920), published in Boston in 1840) and with no music attribution ((Sheet Music: digital id sm1842 381990), published in Baltimore in 1842); all three are at the Library of Congress American Memory site. This is also the song in three "[The] Old Arm[-]/]Chair" broadsides [America Singing: digital id as110050/sb30397a/as110060] at the Library of Congress American Memory site. [I concur with Ben in this; "The Old Armchair" can also be found in Scott-EnglishSongBook, pp. 90-91, and is a different song.]
As to Frank B Carr, here is a note from John Hill in the DigiTrad discussion of "Fields of Athenry": "Finding the published song isn't always the end of the story. Someone recently asked if I could find the words to 'Granny's old arm chair'. I found them in the collection of the Library of Congress. Written by Frank B. Carr 'America's Motto vocalist' (whatever that was) published in 1880 in Boston. Then about 3 weeks later (by accident) I found the same song in the same collection written by John Reid. pub 1881 Boston. There were other songs by John Reid but no other by Frank B. Carr. So was the later Publication the real writer and maybe the earlier one only the performer (Although he claimed to be the writer) What was odd was they were both published in the same town... " - BS

Last updated in version 5.2
File: R467

Grandy Needles
DESCRIPTION: "Grandy Needles, Grandy Needles, set, bump set! Through the long lobby we go, we go." Thread grandmother's needle. Open the gates for King George and his lady. It is too dark to see how to thread grandmother's needle.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1912 (Partridge)
KEYWORDS: playparty royalty
FOUND IN: Britain(England(North,South)) West Indies(Jamaica)
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 2, "Grandy Needles" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: J.B. Partridge, "The Game of 'Thread the Needle' and Custom of Church Clipping" in Folklore, Vol. XXIII, No. 2 (Jun 1912 (available online by JSTOR)), p. 200 ("Grandy needles, thread your needles - set! set! set!") (1 text)
J.B. Partridge, "Cotswold Place-Lore and Customs (Continued)" in Folklore, Vol. XXIII, No. 4 (Dec 1912 (available online by JSTOR)), p. 446 ("Thread the needle to begin") (1 text, 1 tune)
Martha Warren Beckwith and Helen Roberts, _Folk-Games of Jamaica_ (Poughkeepsie: Vassar College, 1922 ("Digitized by Internet Archive")) #31 pp. 38-39, "Thread the Needle" (4 texts, 3 tunes)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Thread the Needle" (game) and references there
NOTES [28 words]: The "Grandy needles, thread your needles ..." text from Partridge is associated with a "Thread the Needle" game played until about 1860 in Cumbria on Easter Tuesday. - BS

Last updated in version 4.2
File: OpGa002

Granemore Hare, The
DESCRIPTION: The boys from Maydown hunt a hare. The hare sings about the the strategy of the chase and how she has been trapped by the dogs. Dying, she blames McMahon for bringing Coyle and his dogs, changing the way the hunt had been carried out all these years.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1970 (Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster)
KEYWORDS: death hunting animal dog
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster 42, "The Granemore Hare" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2883
RECORDINGS:
Patsy Flynn, "The Grangemore Hare" (on IRHardySons)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Hare of Kilgrain" (theme: fatal hare hunt)
cf. "The Innocent Hare" (theme: fatal hare hunt)
cf. "The White Hare" (theme: fatal hare hunt)
NOTES [8 words]: Granemore and Maytown are in County Armagh. - BS
File: MorU042

Granfa' Grig Had a Pig
DESCRIPTION: "Granfa' Grig Had a pit In a field of clover; Pittie died, Granfa' cried, And all the fun was over."
Granger

DESCRIPTION: "I wish I was a granger, and with the granger band, With a haystack on my shoulder And a pitchfork in my hand." Chorus is dance instructions. Similarly, "I wish I was a cowboy." "I want to be a preacher." "I want to be a farmer." "I want to be a rich man"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Botkin, The American Play-Party Song)
KEYWORDS: playparty farming work nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Spurgeon-WaltzTheHall-AmericanPlayParty, pp. 106-108, "Granger" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7913
File: Spurg106

Granite Mill Fire, The

DESCRIPTION: "May God, the great Creator With wisdom me provide, Guide and direct my pencil, These few lines to inscribe." The singer tells the tragic scenes of the fire, such as workers leaping to their deaths. He tells others to plan their work better

AUTHOR: A. W. Harmon (according to the broadside)
EARLIEST DATE: 1966 (New Green Mountain Songster); probably published c. 1874
KEYWORDS: fire death disaster
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sept 19, 1874 - Burning of the Granite Mill in Fall River, Massachusetts. The tragedy, in which 20 died, three disappeared, and 36 were injured, was aggravated by the failure to sound a fire alarm for twenty minutes
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsAREgionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 57-58, "The Granite Mill Fire" (1 text plus a print of a broadside)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
NOTES [16 words]: A. W. Harmon is also credited with "The Capture of William Wood by the Blackfoot Indians." - RBW
Last updated in version 2.7
File: CAFS1057

Grannie Gair

DESCRIPTION: "Lang lang syne I lo'ed a lassie, Lo'ed a lassie young and fair; Then her name was Jeannie Cassie, Noo she's kent as Grannie Gair"

AUTHOR: J Imray (source: Greig/Duncan4)
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan4)
KEYWORDS: age love
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan4 740, "Grannie Gair" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6172
Granny Will Your Dog Bite?

DESCRIPTION: "Chicken in the bread tray, Scratching out the dough, (Granny/Auntie) will your dog bite? No, chile, no." Other verses may also be about chickens or involve questions: "Auntie, will your oven bake?"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)

KEYWORDS: bird chickens food nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 158, "Chicken in the Bread Tray" (1 text)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 158, "Chicken in the Bread Tray" (1 tune plus a text excerpt)
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 181, "Chicken in the Bread Trough" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 194, (no title) (1 short text)
Killion/Waller-ATreasuryOfGeorgiaFolklore, p. 226, "Children's Quatrains" ("Chicken in de' bread tray") (1 short text)
NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal, Joseph D. Clarke, "Burke Davis as Folklorist," Vol. XIX, No. 2 (Mar 1971), p. 63, "(Folk Song)" (5 stanzas, probably representing multiple songs, beginning "Mamma pass the corn bread," "Chicken in the bread tray," "Oh, Nellie had a pair of shoes," "Ye living men come view the ground," "Eat the meat, gnaw the bone;", the second is from "Granny Will Your Dog Bite?"; we file the first as "Mama Pass the Corn Bread" and the third as "Barefoot Nellie"; the last two are too short to file)

Roud #6389

RECORDINGS:
Floyd County Ramblers, "Granny, Will Your Dog Bite?" (Victor V-23759, 1930/Timely Tunes 1561)

File: Br3158

Granua's Lament for the Loss of her Blackbird Mitchell the Irish Patriot

DESCRIPTION: Granua sings "My Blackbird's banished to a foreign isle ... John Mitchel brave is my Blackbird's name," tried with Reilly and Meagher and sentenced by Baron Lefroy to be transported for 14 years. O'Connell died in '47. Mitchel was transported in '48

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1848 (Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)

KEYWORDS: transportation trial Ireland patriotic bird lament

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
May 27, 1848 - Judge Thomas Lefroy sentences John Mitchel (source: Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 60, "Granua's Lament for the Loss of her Blackbird Mitchell the Irish Patriot" (1 text)

Roud #V4933

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(389), "The Blackbird" ("Come all you Irishmen both great and small"), H. Such (London), 1863-1885; also 2806 b.10(56), "The Blackbird"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "John Mitchel" (subject: John Mitchel)

NOTES [67 words]: From National Library of Scotland commentary on broadside NLScotland RB.m.143(013), "Shiel's Rights of Man": "Granua (also spelt Grainne). The daughter of the mythical Irish warrior and folk hero, Finn McCool, Granua is also used as a symbol for Ireland - much like the figure of Britannia is employed as a symbol for Great Britain." - BS

For background on Mitchel, see the notes to "John Mitchel." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.1
Granuaile

DESCRIPTION: "Poor Old Granuaile," bound in chains, in deep distress, mourns the loss of the old heroes and avengers. Dan O'Connell says "I have got the bill to fulfil your wishes.... Her voice so clear fell on my ear"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads)

KEYWORDS: Ireland patriotic

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 3, "Granuaile" (1 text, 1 tune)
Healy-MercierBookOfOldIrishStreetBalladsVol2, pp. 33-34, "A New Song Called Granuaile" (1 text, probably this though printed without stanza divisions)
Roud #3034

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Granuwaile" (theme)
cf. "Old Granny Wales (Granny O'Whale, Granua Weal)" (subject of Granuaile)
cf. "Sheila Nee Iyer" (aisling format)
cf. "Ar Eirinn Ni Neosfainn Ce hi (For Ireland I Will Not Tell Whom She Is)" (aisling format)
cf. "Eileen McMahon" (aisling format)
cf. "Erin's Lament for her Davitt Asthore" (aisling format)
cf. "Poor Old Granuaile" (aisling format)
cf. "The Rights of Man" (aisling format)
cf. "The Cailin Deas" (theme; also the aisling format)
cf. "The Blackbird of Avondale" or "The Arrest of Parnell" (theme)
cf. "Daniel O'Connell ()" (subject: Daniel O'Connell) and references there

NOTES [785 words]: Two similar but different broadsides:
Bodleian, Harding B 19(25), "Granauile" ("One morning fair to take the air and recreate my mind"), J.F. Nugent & Co. (Dublin), 1850-1899
Bodleian, Johnson Ballads 507A, "Granawai" ("[Come] all you Irish hero's that's craving for liberty"), E. Hodges (London), 1855-1861

"Granuaile O'Malley (Or Grace O'Malley, or Gráinne Ni Mhaille or Gráinne Uaile) is among the most illustrious of O'Malley ancestors. She was a 'Sea Queen' and pirate in the 16th century." (Source: The Official Web Site of The O'Malley Clan Association)
The ballad is recorded on one of the CD's issued around the time of the bicentenial of the 1798 Irish Rebellion. See:
Franke Harte and Donal Lunny, "Granuaile" (on Franke Harte and Donal Lunny, "My Name is Napoleon Bonaparte," Hummingbird Records HBCD0027 (2001))
Harte: "The older Gaelic poets when they wished to write on the wrongs that Ireland has suffered at the hands of the English since the invasion of Ireland in 1169, they often adopted the type of poem called 'The Aisling.' He goes on to describe the 'aisling' and shows that Granuaile is typical of the pattern. - BS
Power associates the aisling in particular with Aodhagan O Rathaille (c. 1670-c. 1730), and notes on p. 97 that "If any form of verse can be described as typically 18th century, then the aisling deserves this title. Essentially, the aisling means vision and the poetry... known as 'aislings' are essentially vision poems. The first poems of this kind appeared during the end of the 16th century."

By the eighteenth century, he adds, a formula had been fixed: "The poet goes out walking and meets a beautiful lady. He then describes her dress and appearance and asks her who she is. She is generally the personification of Ireland and she promises early deliverance from the foreign yoke and the return of the Stuarts to the English throne.... Aisling-poetry was always closely connected with the Jacobite movement and is mainly escapist in mode. It often abounds in classical allusions."

Power would technically deny this song Aisling-hood, since the "last aislings were written in the early 19th century and even still referred to the Stuart prince." The references to Daniel O'Connell obviously changes the picture, but the form fits -- this might be called a neo-aisling. Especially since it's in English.

Granuaile seems to have inspired a whole family of these neo-aislings, in fact -- enough that it might be called a sub-genre at least. See "The Rights of Man" and "Poor Old Granuaile," ; compare also "Erin's Green Shore" [Laws Q27] and "Erin's Lament for her Davitt Asthore."

For more on aislings, see Ben Schwartz's note to "Eileen McMahon."

Oxford Companion, p. 410, gives Granuaile O'Malley's dates as c. 1530-c. 1603 (making her an almost exact contemporary of Elizabeth I), observes that she was married twice and imprisoned 1577-1579 -- and notes that, on the whole, she strove for peaceful relations with the English. In 1593, when in England, she supposedly met Queen Elizabeth, although no details of this meeting survive (Chambers, pp. 142-143).

Boylan, pp. 302-303, listing for Grace O'Malley, gives her dates as c. 1530-c. 1600 and says she was "Called Gráinne Umhaill or 'Granuaile' from her family's territories. (The popular form 'Gráinne Mhaol', with its meaning of 'bald' or 'cropped', is erroneous." Boylan gives a few other details, e.g. of her capture by Sir Richard Bingham and her release on payment by her son-in-law Richard Burke, but admits that most of what is recorded about her comes from tradition rather than valid history.

Her name seems to have been unusually popular in Newfoundland. StoryKirwinWiddowson, supplement, p. 695, has this entry: "gruanuail n also granua uile, graunyer whale. For a summary discussion of the allusion to Grace O'Malley (1530?-16--?), queen of the O'Malleys of Connaught whose proper name in Irish was Grainne Ni Mhaille, Grania Uaile in the popular form, and the shirt to the later personification, see G. M. Story, 'A Tune beyond Us as We Are," N[fewfoundland] Studies iv, p. 134-5, and for further oral variant granny whale, cp George Borrow, Wild Wales (1862), Ch. 25. In ballad usage: Ireland, Hibernia, freq old graunuail." They offer citations back to 1835.

Daniel O'Connell (1775-1847) was an Irish patriot who worked vigorously for Catholic freedom. He did not take part in the 1798 rebellion, but promoted Irish and Catholic rights for many years, and in 1829 saw Britain lift the ban on Catholics in parliament. One of the greatest of the peaceful Irish leaders, his tragedy is that eventually neither side trusted him. For more about his history, see the various songs named for him. - RBW

Bibliography

- Power: Patrick C. Power, A Literary History of Ireland, Mercier Press, 1969

Last updated in version 5.3
File: OLoc003

Granuwale

DESCRIPTION: Granuale "the distress of Erin she sorely lamented." Irish men had fought for old England but England, in turn, "oppressed poor old Granuale." She hopes for help in "some strange nation" but mourns the loss of the green Linnet banished to St Helena

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: first half 19C (Zimmerman-SongsOffIrishRebellion)
KEYWORDS: Ireland patriotic Napoleon
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
June 18, 1815 - Battle of Waterloo, after which Napoleon seeks sanctuary with the British and ends up exiled on St. Helena

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Zimmerman-SongsOffIrishRebellion 29, "The New Granuwale" (1 text, 1 tune)
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 204, "The New Granuwale" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
Grass of Uncle Sam, The

DESCRIPTION: "Come, people of the Eastern towns, It's little that you know About the Western prairies" where beef is grown and horses run wild "on the grass of Uncle Sam." The singer describes cowboy life, both when on the range and when in town

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1891 (Miles City, Montana Stock Growers' Journal, credited to "M.C.")

KEYWORDS: cowboy travel

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
ADDITIONAL: John I. White, _Git Along, Little Dogies: Songs and Songmakers of the American West_, 1975 (page references are to the 1989 University of Illinois Press edition), pp. 101-105, "The Grass of Uncle Sam" (2 texts, 1 tune, plus various excerpts and a history of the song)

Roud #11313

File: JIWGA101

Grasshopper and a Fly, A

DESCRIPTION: A grasshopper and a fly argue about priority. The fly claims a royal father. Grasshopper responds, "But your mother was a Turd." "Rebel Jemmy Scot, That did to Empire soar, His Father might be the Lord knows what But his mother we knew was a whore"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1719 (_Pills to Purge Melancholy_)

KEYWORDS: nonballad political bastard royalty bug

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 304, "The Fly and the Grasshopper" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 369)
ADDITIONAL: Wit and Mirth, or, Pills to Purge Melancholy (London, 1719 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol II, pp. 275-277, "An Allegory" ("A grasshopper, and a Fly") (1 text, 1 tune)
John Stephen Farmer, editor, Merry Songs and Ballads, Prior to the Year 1800 (1897 ("Digitized by Microsoft")), Vol III, pp. 212-213, "A Grasshopper and a Fly" (1 text)

Roud #1326

NOTES [254 words]: According to WitandMirth:"set to Musick by Mr Henry Purcell [c.1659-1695]." The Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames text is complete enough to not be considered a fragment but it cleans up the text ("And, let thy father be what he will, Thy mother was never a king [sic]" instead of "Your Father might be of high Degree, But your Mother was but a Turd") and altogether omits the chorus referring to "Rebel Jemmy Scot." In the Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames text the political symbols are changed, if they survive at all, and the fly returns the grasshopper's insult by saying, "And let thy mother be what she will, Thy father sprang from a frog"; there is no such comeback in the older text and it is not clear whom the grasshopper is meant to represent.

This is apparently about James, Duke of Monmouth (1649-1685), contender for the crown, whose mother was Lucy Walter, mistress of Charles II. Fraser writes, "Lucy Walter was not a whore. But she did belong to that restless and inevitably light-moralled generations of young ladies who grew..." up in the untralled times of the Civil War.... Charles himself never questioned Monmouth's parentage. He assumed responsibility for the child from his birth and was inclined rather to remove him from his unsuitable mother's care than to consign him to a limbo of doubtful bastardy" (source: Antonia Fraser, Royal Charles: Charles II and the Restoration (New York, 1979), p. 64-65). - BS

For a bit more about Monmouth, see the notes on "The Battle of the Boyne (I)." - RBW

_Last updated in version 2.6_

File: WT304A

---

Grassy Islands

DESCRIPTION: "I'm gwine away to leave you, O-o-o-o-o! I'm gwine away to the grassy islands, O-o-o-o-o-o!"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)

KEYWORDS: travel separation

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 207, "Grassy Islands" (1 fragment, 1 tune)

File: ScNF207A

---

Grat for Gruel

DESCRIPTION: "There was a weaver o' the north, And O but he was cruel; The very first nicht that he was wed, He sat and grat for gruel." The wife explains that gruel cannot be had; he will have it if she must cook it in the wash-pot and he must eat it with a trowel

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (recording, Jimmy McBeath)

KEYWORDS: humorous food marriage

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 202, "Grat for Gruel" (1 text, 1 tune)

File: K202

---

Grave of the Section Hand, The

DESCRIPTION: "They laid him away on the brow of the hill, Outside of the right-of-way." The section hand's many years of service are recalled. His grave will guard the track. The place of the burial is briefly described.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Dean-FlyingCloud)

KEYWORDS: death railroading burial

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Dean-FlyingCloud, p. 129, "The Grave of the Section Hand" (1 text)

File: Dean129
Grave of Wolfe Tone, The

DESCRIPTION: "In Bodenstown churchyard there is a green grave ... Once I lay on that sod -- it lies over Wolfe Tone." He wakes to the sound of students and peasants who come to the grave to raise a simple monument "fit for the simple and true"

AUTHOR: Thomas Davis (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

EARLIEST DATE: 1845 (_The Nation_, according to Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

KEYWORDS: patriotic political Ireland burial

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Nov 10, 1798 - Wolfe Tone (1763-1798) condemned to execution; he cuts his own throat to avoid hanging as a criminal (his request to face a firing squad had been denied)

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (5 citations):

O'Connor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 39, "The Grave of Wolfe Tone" (1 text)

OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 32, "The Grave of Wolfe Tone" (1 text, 1 tune)

Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 121, "The Grave of Wolfe Tone" (1 text)

ADDITIONAL: Edward Hayes, The Ballads of Ireland (Boston, 1859), Vol I, p. 244, "Tone's Grave"

Kathleen Hoagland, editor, One Thousand Years of Irish Poetry (New York, 1947), pp. 481-482, "Tone's Grave" (1 text)

Roud #9313

RECORDINGS:

Liam Clancy, "In Bodenstown's Churchyard" (on IRLClancy01)

BROADSIDES:

Bodleian, Harding B 26(690), "Wolfe Tone's Grave!", Haly (Cork), 19C

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Emmett's Grave" (tune, broadside Bodleian Harding B 26(690))

NOTES [78 words]: Given Ireland's recent history, it's ironic to note that Wolfe Tone was a Protestant. For the history of the events that led to his execution, see the notes to "The Shan Van Voght." - RBW

The ballad is recorded on one of the CD's issued around the time of the bicentenial of the 1798 Irish Rebellion. See:

Franke Harte and Donal Lunny, "Bodenstown Churchyard" (on Franke Harte and Donal Lunny, "1798 the First Year of Liberty," Hummingbird Records HBCD0014 (1998)) - BS

File: OCon039

Grave Sinking Down

DESCRIPTION: "(It was sad when the grave was sinking down)(x2) That awful time, People keep awake all night, It was sad when the grave was sinking down"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (Hutson/ Pinckney/ Rutledge- Some Songs The Negro Sang)

KEYWORDS: death funeral mourning derivative nonballad religious

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Hutson/ Pinckney/ Rutledge- Some Songs The Negro Sang, pp. 296-297, "Grave Sinkin' Down" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Titanic (I), The ("It Was Sad When That Great Ship Went Down") [Laws D24] (Titanic #1)" (form)

NOTES [27 words]: The description follows Hutson/Pinckney/Rutledge-SomeSongsTheNegroSang but I do not repeat the dialect. This seems a one verse adaptation of a "Titanic" song. - BS

Last updated in version 5.1

File: HPR296G

Graveyard, The

DESCRIPTION: "Who gwine to lay this body, Member, O shout glory, And who gwine to lay this body, O ring Jerusalem." "O call all the members to the graveyard." "O graveyard, ought to know me." "O, grass grow in the graveyard."
Gray Cat on the Tennessee Farm

DESCRIPTION: About life on a Tennessee farm. All the singer wants is a "baby in the cradle and a pretty girl to rock it," plus meat in the sack, sugar in the gourd, a tub of lard. Ch: "Big cat spit in the little kitten's eye/Little cat, little cat, don't you cry...."

AUTHOR: Uncle Dave Macon, more or less

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (recording, Uncle Dave Macon)

LONG DESCRIPTION: Disjointed verses about life on a small farm in the Tennessee Hills. Singer says all he wants is a "baby in the cradle and a pretty girl to rock it," along with meat in the sack, sugar in the gourd, and a big tub of lard. Chorus: "Big cat spit in the little kitten's eye/Little cat, little cat, don't you cry/I do love liquor and I will take a dram/I'm gonna tell you, pretty Polly Ann"

KEYWORDS: farming drink nonballad baby family animal

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

RECORDINGS:
Uncle Dave Macon, "The Gray Cat on the Tennessee Farm" (Vocalion 5152, 1927)
New Lost City Ramblers, "Grey Cat on the Tennessee Farm" (on NLCR06)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "One Fine Day" (floating lyrics)
cf. "Mary, She Did Dream a Dream" (lyrics)

File: RcGcotTF

Gray Mare, The [Laws P8]

DESCRIPTION: The miller gains Kate's love and is offered a large dowry. He also demands her father's gray mare. The father turns him out of the house for asking too much. When he later meets Kate, she tells him she wants no part of the man who preferred a mare to her

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1825 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 28(45))

KEYWORDS: courting dowry marriage

FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW,NE,Ro) Canada(Mar,Newf) Britain(Scotland,England(North,West),Wales) Ireland

REFERENCES (23 citations):
Laws P8, "The Gray Mare"
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #67, p. 2, ("Rodger the miller came a-courting of late") (1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan4 761, "Roger the Miller" (2 texts)
Kidson-TraditionalTunes, pp. 79-81, "The Grey Mare" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Bush-FSofCentralWestVirginiaVol2, pp. 59-62, "Young Jimmy, the Miller" (1 text, 1 tune)
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 235-236, "The Gray Mare" (1 text plus mention of 1 more)
Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 63, "Young Rogers, The Miller" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 160, "My Father's Gray Mare" (1 text)
List-SingingAboutIt-FolkSongsInSouthernIndiana, pp. 230-231, "John Roger, the Miller" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #49, "Courting My Father's Gray Mare" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 26, "Rogers the Miller" (1 text)
Peacock, pp. 278-279, "The Gray Mare" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-FolksongsOfNewBrunswick, pp. 53-56, "Roger the Miller" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 79, "Roger the Miller" (1 text, 1 tune)
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 89, "Roger the Miller" (1 text, 1 tune)
Botkin-TreasuryOfSouthernFolklore, p. 718, "Young Rogers the Miller" (1 text, 1 tune)
Grazier Tribe, The

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, ye toilers of this nation, I hope you will draw near... My pen I take to hand To try to describe a grazier tribe That now infests this land." The singer laments the British controls on Irish production and the corruption of the system.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads)

KEYWORDS: Ireland poverty hardtimes crime

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Galvin-IrishSongsOfResistance, pp. 21-22, "The Grazier Tribe" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 78, "The Grazier Tribe" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #2998

RECORDINGS:

Straighty Flanagan, "The Grazier Tribe" (on Voice05)

NOTES [223 words]: It appears that this song refers to the period of time around the famines, when many Irish smallholders were displaced and their properties converted into large estates to graze animals rather than grow crops. The "grazers" are, of course, the members of the English government who were devouring Ireland's subsistence. It should be noted that, economically, this made sense. Ireland is not good country for growing crops; there isn't enough sun. It is excellent country for pastoral industries. The problem is, there were too many Irish to be supported by herding. They needed to wring every calorie they could out of the soil. The charges in this song are technically correct; England heavily restricted Irish commerce and instituted a system of officialdom that severely restricted Irish freedom. It should be noted, however, that this was the way all of Europe treated its colonies (including the British colonies in North America). The real problem was not the economic policies (though these did produce much poverty); rather, it was the sullen relationship between the Irish and their masters, as well as the strained relations between Catholics and Protestants -- a problem worsened by the English anti-Catholic statutes. Understanding and compassion could have made a bad situation much better -- but that was sadly lacking. - RBW

File: PGa021

Grazier's Dochter, The

DESCRIPTION: A squire secretly weds a servant maid. She becomes pregnant. His parents threaten them with ruin; he leaves her and marries another. His first wife dies of grief. Her ghost finds him in bed with his bride, kills him, and writes of the story on the corpse

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1767 (dated Harvard College Library chapbooks 57(iii):10, according to Lyle-Andrew-Crawfurd'sCollectionVolume1)
KEYWORDS: grief infidelity love marriage abandonment revenge corpse death pregnancy father servant ghost
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Bord))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lyle-Andrew-Crawfurd'sCollectionVolume1 8, "The Grazier's Dochter"; Lyle-Andrew-Crawfurd'sCollectionVolume1, pp. 229-234, "The Unfortunate Grazier's Daughter" (2 texts)

File: LyCr108

Greaser Joe's Place

DESCRIPTION: "You kin brag of city caffeys and their trout from streams and lake... But the grub at Greaser Joe's is the finest ever dealt. Come, hombre, and just tuck a bowl of chili 'neath your belt." Further extravagant praise of Joe's food follows

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1921 (Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys)
KEYWORDS: food nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys, pp. 74-75, "Greaser Joe's Place" (1 text)
NOTES [32 words]: Thorp says he had this from the Denver Republican, so presumably Greaser Joe's was a restaurant there. Why Thorp thought this a cowboy song, rather than a silly advertisement, I don't know. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.3

File: ThLo074

Greasy Cook, The (Butter and Cheese and All, The Cook's Choice)

DESCRIPTION: The singer keeps company with a cook. One day she is about to send him off with cheese and butter when the master comes in. He hides in the chimney; the fire melts cheese and butter and sets them afire. The master douses him; he flees to a chorus of jeers

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1845 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(692))
KEYWORDS: cook courting food humorous
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South,Lond),Scotland(Aber)) Ireland Canada(Newf) US(Ro)
REFERENCES (8 citations):
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 108, "Butter and Cheese and All" (1 text)
Peacock, pp. 251-252, "Butter and Cheese" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greig/Duncan4 914, "A Cook I Went a-Courtin'" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 108-109, "Butter and Cheese and All" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 304 with vocal rendition)
Copper-SongsAndSouthernBreezes, pp. 236-237, "The Cook's Choice" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #64, "Butter and Cheese and All" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 129, "The Greasy Cook" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #85, "Butter and Cheese" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Roud #510

RECORDINGS:
Harry Cox, "The Greasy Cook" (on HCox01) (on FSBFTX13)
Sam Larner, "Butter and Cheese" (on SLarner02)
Alexander March, "Butter and Cheese" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
Mrs Clara Stevens, "Butter and Cheese" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(692), "Cookey's Courtship", "Cupboard Love" or "Butter, Cheese, and All" ("Tis a pity you should teaze me so"), J. Pitts (London), 1819-1844; also Firth c.18(274), "Butter and Cheese"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Boatsman and the Chest" [Laws Q8] (plot) and references there
NOTES [43 words]: This and similar songs are sometimes traced back to a story in Boccaccio (seventh day, second story: Gianella, Peronella, and her husband). But the story is really one of the basic themes of folktale, and doubtless predates Boccaccio as well as these songs. - RBW

File: CoSB236

Greasy Grimy Gopher Guts
DESCRIPTION: "Great (big) gobs of greasy, grimy gopher guts...." The singer lists a variety of available non-delicacies, and laments, "And me without a spoon."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal)
KEYWORDS: food parody
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 133, "Greasy Grimy Gopher Guts" (1 text, tune referenced)
DT, GOPHRGTS
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Old Gray Mare (I) (The Old Gray Horse; The Little Black Bull)" (tune)
NOTES [14 words]: People swear this is a folk song. I haven't heard it, but I can't prove them wrong. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1
File: PHCFSS133

Great A Little A
DESCRIPTION: "Great A, little A, Bouncing B, The cat's in the cupboard And she can't see me."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1744 (Tom Thumb's Pretty Song Book, according to Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes)
KEYWORDS: animal playparty nonballad wordplay
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 51, "Great A, little a" (1 text plus a possible variant)
Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #607, p. 240, "(Great A, little a)" Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads, p. 116, "(no title; filed under "Rope Jumping")" (1 short text)

File: ByGo116a

Great American Bum, The (Three Jolly Bums)
DESCRIPTION: "Come all you jolly jokers if you want to have some fun And listen while I relate the tale of a great American bum." The singer rejoices getting maximum results from minimum work: "I am a bum, a jolly old bum, and I live like a royal Turk...."

AUTHOR: Harry "Haywire Mac" McClintock

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)

KEYWORDS: rambling begging work

FOUND IN: US Australia

REFERENCES (5 citations):
- Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia, pp. 192-193, "The Two Professional Hums" (sic; see note) (1 text, 1 tune)
- Paterson/Fahey/Seal-OldBushSongs-CentenaryEdition, pp. 293-295, "Two Professional Hums" (1 text)
- Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 183, "Shovellin' Iron Ore"; 192, "We Are Four Bums" (1 text plus a fragment, 2 tunes)
- Gilbert-LostChords, pp. 184-185, "The Great American Bum" (1 text)
- Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 50, "The Great American Bum" (1 text)

Roud #9833

RECORDINGS:
- Vernon Dalhart, "The Bum Song" (Columbia 1488-D, 1928)
- Dick Holmes, "The Bum Song" (Oriole 1324, 1928)
- Eddie Kirk, "Bum Song" (Edison 52384, 1928)
- Frank Luther, "The Bum Song" (Brunswick 254/Brunswick 4029, 1928)
- Frank Marvin, "The Bum Song" (Romeo 719/Cameo 8296 [as Lazy Larry], 1928)
- Harry "Mac" McClintock, "The Bum Song" (Victor 21343, c. 1928) (Decca 5640, 1939)
- "Weary Willie", "The Bum Song" (Perfect 12461/Pathe 32382, 1928; this is, surprisingly, not the same recording as the one by "Lazy Larry")
- Pete Wiggins, "The Bum Song" (OKeh 41092, 1928)

SAME TUNE:
- Jerry Ellis [pseud. for Jack Golding] "Bum Song #2" (Champion 15646, 1928; Supertone 9342 [as Weary Willie], 1929)
- Harry "Mac" McClintock, "The Bum Song, No. 2" (Victor 21704, 1928) (Decca 5689, 1939)
- Carson Robison Trio, "Bum Song No. 5" (Pathe 32477, 1929; Perfect 12571, 1930)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
- The Bum Song

NOTES [52 words]: "Hum" is Australian slang for "bum"; the Australian version abounds in such localizations.

Something like the "gimmick" of this song seems to go back about four centuries According to T. A. Shippey on p. 33, there is a 1622 citation, "I might haue been a scholler, learn'd my Grammer, But I haue lost all...." - RBW

_Last updated in version 4.2_

File: FaE192

Great American Flood Disaster, The

DESCRIPTION: "A terrible disaster Has come upon our land, Down where the Mississippi flows On her way so grand." People are enjoying life along the Mississippi when a great storm and floods come to bring ruin

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1987

KEYWORDS: flood river disaster

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- 1927 - Mississippi River floods, devastating the Delta region and leaving thousands homeless

FOUND IN: Australia

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Meredith/Covell/Brown-FolkSongsOfAustraliaVol2, pp. 120-121, "The Great American Flood Disaster" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Backwater Blues" (subject)
Great Big Dog

DESCRIPTION: "Great big dog come a-runnin' down de river, Shook his tail an' jarred de meadow. Go 'way, ole dog, go 'way, ole dog. You shan't have my baby. Mother loves you, Father loves you, Ev'ybody loves Baby. Mother loves you...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)
KEYWORDS: lullaby dog animal
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, pp. 157-158, "Great Big Dog" (1 short text, 1 tune)

File: ScNF157C

Great Big Sea Hove in Long Beach, A

DESCRIPTION: "A great big sea hove in Long Beach... And Granny Snooks she lost her speech." "Me boot is broke, me frock is tore... But George Snooks I do adore." "Oh, fish is low and flour is high... So Georgie Snooks he can't have I."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1940 (Doyle-OldTimeSongsAndPoetryOfNewfoundland, 2nd edition)
KEYWORDS: humorous nonballad sea hardtimes
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (6 citations):
Blondahl-NewfoundlandersSing, p. 11, "Great Big Sea Hove in" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fowke/Johnston-FolkSongsOfCanada, pp. 176-177, "A Great Big Sea Hove in Long Beach" (1 text, 1 tune)
Doyle-OldTimeSongsAndPoetryOfNewfoundland, "A Great Big Sea Hove in Long Beach" (1 text, 1 tune): p. 27 in the 2nd edition; p. 25 in the 3rd; p. 25 in the 4th; p. 13 in the 5th
Mills-FavoriteSongsOfNewfoundland, pp. 42-43, "A Great Big Sea Hove in Long Beach" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 77, "A Great Big Sea" (1 text, 1 tune)
England-HistoricNewfoundlandAndLabrador, p. 51, "A Great Big Sea Hove in Long Beach" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #4426
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Gaberlunzie Man" (tune & meter)
cf. "Kate's Big Shirt" (tune)
NOTES [34 words]: Fowke suggests this song dates from the 1930s, when Newfoundland sailors received poor pay for their fish but had to pay high prices for flour. Long Beach is a town on the east coast of Newfoundland. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0

File: FJ176

Great Big Taters in Sandy Land

DESCRIPTION: "Big yam taters in de sandy lan', Sandy bottom, sandy lan'." "Sift your meal an' save de bran, Mighty good livin' in de sandy lan'." The singer describes farming and courting in "de sandy lan'," and describes some of the local characters

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934
KEYWORDS: farming nonballad
FOUND IN: US(S0)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Abernethy-SinginTexas, pp. 69-70, "Raise Big Taters in Sandy Land" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 236-237, "Sandy Lan’" (1 text, 1 tune)
Great Booby, The

DESCRIPTION: This great booby fails at his ABC's and at plowing, and is a country clown in town. He falls out of a boat. "To go and see the circus [playhouse] sir to me is most inviting." He may become an entertainer.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1681 (broadside, Bodleian Douce Ballads 1(92a))

LONG DESCRIPTION: Through the centuries of broadsides the story outline stays the same and some verses remain, but the details change as the signs of the country bumpkin change. In all the versions, after his father turns the whip on him when he can't make the ox or horse plow, he goes to town to escape school and see the fashions and, for his trouble, is called a country clown and great booby. Once in town, whether London or Boston, his tour depends upon the times, but he is always ridiculed for his manners and naivety. In 17C London he goes to St Paul's steeple, Westminster Abbey, Pye-corner [orders roast meat he cannot pay for], Smithfield [loses his purse to a woman pick-pocket after she runs up a wine bill], the Exchange and Paris Garden, making a fool of himself at every stop. In 19C London or Boston or "town" the tour is much briefer but no less disastrous. And there's always the tumble from the boat. He may end as an entertainer: a bear-baiter in 17C London or a singer or clown later. And, depending on the site, the 19C broadsides may say he has heard that the French or British are coming, but only a booby would believe that Napoleon or John Bull is really coming.

KEYWORDS: travel ordeal farming humorous

FOUND IN: US(MA)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Thompson-APioneerSongster 87, "The County Clown" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: John Payne Collier, A Book of Roxburghe Ballads (London, 1847 ("Digitized by Microsoft")), pp.221-226, "The Great Boobee" ("My friend if you will understand my fortunes what they are") (1 text)

Roud #12618

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Douce Ballads 1(92a), "The Great Boobee" ("My friends if you will understand"), F. Coles (London), 1624-1680; also Douce Ballads 3(35a), Vet. A3 b.43(9), "The Great Boobee" Bodleian, Harding B 16(283b), "The Great Booby" ("My feyther he put me to school"), A. Carvalho (London), 19C; also Harding B 17(119a), "The Great Booby" LOCSinging, as104880, "The Great Booby" ("My feyther put me to the school"), L. Deming (Boston), no date
VonWalthour,CDDrive>g>g(118),"Great Booby" ("My feyther put me to the school"), unknown, no date

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Sellingers Round" (tune)

NOTES [135 words]: Broadsides LOCSinging as104880 and VonWalthour,CDDrive>g>g(118) appear to be the same edition. Collier p. 221, referring to "The Great Boobee": "a remarkable and very droll ballad, relating to old manners and amusements: by various allusions in it we may assign it to the reign of James I." The Collier and Bodleian Douce Ballads version shares some verses with Thompson-APioneerSongster, VonWalthour and Bodleian Harding but includes many more examples and does not end with the circus. Chappell has a list of "Ballads Printed For and Sold By William Thackeray at the Angel in Duck-Lane, London" that includes "Great Booby." Chappell: "The above list of Thackeray’s is probably one of his latest, seeming to have been issued about the year 1689." Wm Chappell, The Roxburghe Ballads (London, 1871), p. xxvii. - BS

Great Day

DESCRIPTION: "Great day! Great day, the righteous marching, Great day! God's going to build up Zion's walls." "Chariot rode on the mountain top... My God spoke and the chariot did stop." "This is the day of jubilee." "We want no cowards in our band."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1940 (Work)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad soldier

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

_Warren-EveryTimeIFeelTheSpirit_, pp. 46-47, "Great Day! Great Day!" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #12224

File: WarSp046

Great Day Since I Was Born

DESCRIPTION: "It's a great day since I was born." "Things I used to do Will do them no more." "Places I used to go I don't go there now." "The people I used to see I don't see 'em now"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (White)

KEYWORDS: nonballad religious

FOUND IN: US(SE) West Indies(Tobago)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

_Elder-FolksongsFromTobago_ 41, "Great Day Since I Was Born" (1 text, 1 tune)

ADDITIONAL: Newman I. White, _American Negro Folk Songs_ (Hatboro: Folklore Associates Inc, 1965 (reprint of Harvard University Press, 1928) #ii.66 pp. 116-117, ("Been a great change since I been born") (1 text)

RECORDINGS:

Blind Gary Davis, "Great Change Since I Been Born" (1992, on "Harlem Street Singer," Prestige Bluesville CD OBCCD-547-2(BV-1015); recorded 1960)

NOTES [33 words]: "'Great Change Since I Been Born' tells of [the singer's] own conversion to the church and the change that this new 'birth' brought to his life" (Larry Cohn, liner notes for _Harlem Street Singer_). - BS

Last updated in version 4.0

File: ElTo041

Great Elopement to America, The

DESCRIPTION: Mick courts Nancy Keays, "a rich farmer's daughter." Her father will not agree to the marriage. With her 500 pounds they elope. Her father searches through Ireland without success and posts a reward for their arrest, but they are safe in America.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 19C (broadside, Bodleian 2806 c.8(158))

KEYWORDS: courting elopement emigration manhunt escape America Ireland father

FOUND IN:

Roud #V4359

BROADSIDES:

_Bodleian, 2806 c.8(158), "The Great Elopement to America" ("Farewell to old Ireland the land of my fathers)," Haly (Cork), 19C

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "M'Kenna's Dream" (tune, broadside Bodleian Harding B 26(201))

cf. "The Gallant Farmers' Farewell to Ireland" (words, and references there)

cf. "William and Phillis" (plot)

File: BrTGETA
Great Fight Between Tom Sayers and Bob Brettle, The

DESCRIPTION: Sayers's fights, from his first, with Aby Crooch in 1842, to his most recent, with Tommy Burns, are listed. Then he fights Brettle who yields after being injured by a fall. Sayers is "the champion of proud England, and the conqueror of all."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1859-1860 (see NOTES)
KEYWORDS: fight injury moniker
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sep 9, 1859 - Boxing match between Bob Brettle and Tom Sayers
FOUND IN:
Roud #V9717
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 13(13), "Lines on the Great Fight Between Tom Sayers Champion of Britain and Bob Brettle of Birmingham" ("You lovers of the pugelistic [sic] ring, attend with mirth and cheers"), unknown, 1859-1860
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Heenan and Sayers" (subject) and references there
NOTES [64 words]: Sayers's next fight, with John C. Heenan, on April 17, 1860, was much more notable than his fight with Brettle. So, with an early printing date of the fight between Sayers and Brettle, it seems reasonable to make the late date the fight between Sayers and Heenan [see Laws H20]. Brettle, who lost this fight with Sayers when his shoulder was dislocated, retired after this fight. - BS
Last updated in version 5.1
File: BdGFBTSB

Great God A'mighty

DESCRIPTION: A chopping song with story. "He's a-choppin de new ground (x3), Great God a'mighty." The singer describes his axe blade, boasts of his ability, and discusses arguments with the captain

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934
KEYWORDS: prisoner chaingang work
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation): Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 79-82, "Great God A'mighty" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #15571
RECORDINGS:
Texas state farm prisoners, "Chopping in the New Ground" (on NPCWork)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Choppin' Charlie" (lyrics)
NOTES [34 words]: This shares many of its verses, and its setting, with "Choppin' Charlie." But "Choppin' Charlie" has a plot of sorts, and "Great God A'mighty" is just a chopping song, so I very tentatively split them. - RBW
File: LxA079

Great God, I'm Feelin' Bad

DESCRIPTION: "Great God, I'm feelin' bad, I ain't got the man I thought I had."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)
KEYWORDS: separation nonballad
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation): Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 238, "Great Gawd, I'm Feelin' Bad" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Roud #29308
File: San238
Great Grand-dad

DESCRIPTION: "Great grand-dad when the West was young, Barred his door with a wagon tongue." He raised 21 boys without any trouble -- but now there’s a great-grandson, and of course youth being what it is, "that" one gives trouble

AUTHOR: Lowell Otus Reese

EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Saturday Evening Post)

KEYWORDS: father children family

FOUND IN: US(SE,So)

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Randolph 482, "Great Grand-dad" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 266, "Great Granddad" (1 text)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 266, "Great Granddad" (1 excerpt, 1 tune)
Larkin-SingingCowboy, pp. 83-85, "Great Grand-dad" (1 text, 1 tune)
Coleman/Bregman-SongsOfAmericanFolks, pp. 24-25, "Great-Granddad" (1 text, 1 tune, apparently the version sung by Tex Ritter)

ADDITIONAL: John I. White, _Git Along, Little Dogies: Songs and Songmakers of the American West_, 1975 (page references are to the 1989 University of Illinois Press edition), pp. 176-182, "Great Grandad" (1 text, 1 tune, plus a history of the song)

Roud #4446

RECORDINGS:
John White, "Great Grand Dad" (Domino 4440, c. 1929; on MakeMe)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Old Grandma"

NOTES [16 words]: You mean it isn't just the current generation of old people who complain about the young? -) - RBW

Last updated in version 3.2

File: R483

Great Judgment Morning, The

DESCRIPTION: "I dreamt that the great judgment morning Had dawned and the trumpet had blown...." The singer describes the scene before God's throne "as the lost was told of their fate" and the poor, widows, and orphans rewarded. The rich man's money does not save him

AUTHOR: Words: Bertram H. Shadduck / Music: Lycurgus L. Pickett

EARLIEST DATE: 1894 (reported date of composition); first field collection 1925 (Randolph)

KEYWORDS: religious death Hell

FOUND IN: US(NE,So)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Randolph 618, "The Great Judgment" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Beck-FolkloreOfMaine, pp. 270-271, "Great Judgment Morning" (1 text)

Roud #4731

File: R618

Great Northern Line, The

DESCRIPTION: "My love he is a teamster, a handsome man is he... With his little team of bullocks on the Great Northern Line." The singer describes her handsome, hard-driving, hard-swearing, flirting, madly inventive teamster love

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1968 (Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia)

KEYWORDS: work Australia

FOUND IN: Australia

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, p. 273, "The Great Northern Line" (1 text)
Meredith/Tritton-DukeOfTheOutback, pp. 85-86, "The Great Northern Line" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Knickerbocker Line" (tune & meter)

File: MA273
Great Ship Went Down, The (Titanic #16)

DESCRIPTION: "Titanic was a ship... Oh, it was a pleasure trip." "Titanic was her name, Atlantic was her fame, she sank about five hundred miles from shore, 1600 were at sea... went down an angry wave to rise no more." 1600 die in the "angry wave."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (recording, Cofer Brothers)
KEYWORDS: sea wreck family disaster death
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
ADDITIONAL: Cowboy Loye and Just Plain John, Old Time Ballads & Cowboy Songs (no date but internal evidence dates it after 1932), pp 43-44, "Titanic"
RECORDINGS:
Cofer Brothers, "The Great Ship Went Down" (OKeh 45137, 1927)
NOTES [111 words]: The Cofer Brothers version of this is so generic that it might almost be a rewrite of one of the other songs, but the Cowboy Loye version has the interesting feature of mentioning Mr. and Mrs. Isidore Strauss -- the second richest couple on the ship after John Jacob Astor. I haven't met this in any other Titanic song. It is also unusual in that it doesn't shove a moral down your throat.
Thanks to John Garst for help with the Loye text.
For an extensive history of the Titanic, with detailed examination of the truth (or lack thereof) of quotes in the Titanic songs, see the notes to "The Titanic (XV)" ("On the tenth day of April 1912") (Titanic #15) - RBW
File: RcGSWD

Great Silkie of Sule Skerry, The [Child 113]

DESCRIPTION: A lady mourns that she knows not her son's father. He appears at her bedside, revealing that he is a silkie. He prophesies that she shall marry a "gunner," who will shoot both him and her son.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1852
KEYWORDS: selkie seduction
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Hebr))
REFERENCES (11 citations):
Child 113, "The Great Silkie of Sule Skerry" (1 text)
Bronson 113, "The Great Silkie of Sule Skerry" (1 version, though only the fifth stanza is proper to the tune)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 113, "The Great Silkie of Sule Skerry" (1 version)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 321-323, "The Great Silkie of Sule Skerry" (2 texts)
Leach-HeritageBookOfBallads, pp. 59-60, "The Great Selchie of Shool Skerrie" (1 text)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 31, "The Great Silkie of Sule Skerry" (1 text)
Friedman-Viking/PenguinBookOfFolkBallads, p. 27, "The Great Silkie of Sule Skerry" (2 texts, 1 tune) (Bronson's (#1))
Grigson-PenguinBookOfBallads 74, "The Great Silkie of Sule Skerry"; 75, "Sealchie Song" (1 text)
Hodgart-FaberBookOfBallads, p. 69, "The Great Silkie of Sule Skerry" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 219, "The Great Silkie" (1 text)
DT 113, SILKIE1* SILKIE2*
Roud #197
RECORDINGS:
Art Thieme, "The Great Silkie of Sule Skerry" (on Thieme06)
NOTES [456 words]: The tune to which this ballad is most often sung nowadays was composed by James Waters in the late 1950s. It was also used by Pete Seeger as the melody for his setting of Nazim Hikmet's poem about Hiroshima, "I Come and Stand at Every Door." -PJS
The fullest collection of texts and tunes for this piece is probably that of Alan Bruford, who in "The Grey Silkie" (originally published in Scottish Studies 18, 1974; also available in E. B. Lyle, ed., Ballad Studies) prints, in tolerably incomprehensible form, eight texts or fragments and two tunes. Bruford also discusses the relationship of the song to "The Play o de Lathie Odivere" (best known now perhaps in Gordon Bok's adaption "The Play of the Lady Odivere"), having much to say, and little of it good, about this piece first published by Walter Traill Dennison in The Scottish Antiquary in 1894. Bruford doesn't quite say so, but it appears that he believes Dennison's piece to be a forgery built upon a small core of traditional material.

According to Jack Zipes, The Great Fairy Tale Tradition, a Norton Critical Edition, Norton, 2001, p. 51, "The motif of a young hero who is compelled to wear an animal skin is an ancient one and made its first literary appearance in Sanskrit in the Pancatantra, a collection if Indian didactic fables and stories, about 300 C.E. In 'The Enchanted Brahmin's Son,' a father burns the snakeskin of his son to preserve his humanity. This particular motif is found in numerous folktales. Generally speaking, however, it is a young woman or her parents who burn the animal skin to set a young man free." Zipes goes on to list many more "Beastly Born Heroes," although his list does not appear to include the seal folk.

I had one thought about this song that doesn't seem to have been covered by anyone else. This refers to the fact that the selkie is killed by a "good gunner." Seals were hunted by guns, but it wasn't common -- if a seal is hit in the water, it sinks, so there is no point in shooting it unless it's on land (and, even then, it will head for the water if it is merely wounded). Inuit seal hunters, for instance, don't seem to have taken to firearms even when available. Guns were used in the Newfoundland seal hunt, but they were phased out over time, partly to conserve the species but partly because they were so pointless.

Which leads to the observation that shooting seals was both a temporary and a local phenomenon. Norwegians and Newfoundlanders hunted seals as a commercial operation; so did Scots, especially from Dundee. There wasn't much Irish sealing. This raises the thought that, somewhere deep down, this isn't just a competition between seal and human but between peoples from two different lands. - RBW

Great Speckled Bird, The

DESCRIPTION: "What a beautiful thought I am thinking Conerning the great speckled bird." The bird, though attacked by other birds, "is one with the great church of God." The bird's success is promised when God comes on the bird's wings

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (Aurora Advertiser)

KEYWORDS: religious Bible bird

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (5 citations):

Abernethy-SinginTexas, p. 126, "The Great Speckled Bird" (1 text, 1 tune)

Randolph 621, "The Great Speckled Bird" (1 texts plus a fragment, 1 tune)

Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 435-437, "The Great Speckled Bird" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 621A)

Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 368, "The Great Speckled Bird" (1 text)

DT, GRTSPCKL* GRTSOCK2

Roud #7444

RECORDINGS:

Roy Acuff & his Crazy Tennesseans, "Great Speckle Bird" (Vocalion 04252/OKehe 04252/Conqueror 8740, 1936; ARC 7-01-59, 1937; Columbia 37005, c 1946; Columbia 20031, c. 1947; Columbia [Canada]C-1139, 1948; rec. 1936)

Hall Brothers, "The Great Speckled Boatman" (Bluebird, unissued, 1938)

Holiness Church congregation, "Great Speckled Bird" (on MMOKCD)

Jack & Leslie, "The Great Speckled Bird" (Decca 5555, 1938)

Charlie Monroe's Boys, "The Great Speckled Bird" (Bluebird B-7862, 1938)

Morris Brothers, "The Great Speckled Bird" (Bluebird B-7903, 1938)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Broken Ties (I'm Thinking Tonight of My Blue Eyes)" (tune)

SAME TUNE:

Great Speckle Bird No. 2 (RECORDING: Roy Acuff & his Smoky Mountain Boys, ARC 07-06-54/Conqueror 8877, 1937; Vocalion 04374/OKehe 04374, 1938; Columbia 37007, 1946; Columbia 20003, c. 1948; rec. 1937; Columbia 20032, c. 1945)

Answer to Great Speckled Bird (RECORDING: Roy Hall & his Blue Ridge Entertainers, OKeh 4771, prob. 1939; recorded 1938; listed as Vocalion 04771/Conqueror 9184 in Lornell, _Virginia's Blues, Country & Gospel Records 1902-1943_.)

NOTES [237 words]: Usually credited to Roy Acuff (who certainly popularized it); however, a 1936 printing in the Aurora, Missouri Adviser precedes Acuff's 1937 copyright, and there is a claim that it was written around 1934 by Guy "Uncle George" Smith. And some of Randolph's informants would date the song much earlier.

There is a significant similarity to the Carter Family's version of "Broken Ties (I'm Thinking Tonight of My Blue Eyes)," which may have inspired this as well as several later important country songs. The image of the "great speckled bird" comes from Jeremiah 12:9 in the King James Bible ("Mine heritage is unto me as a speckled bird, the birds round about are against her"). This is not, however, a very apt translation of a difficult Hebrew original (which mentions, seemingly as a single subject, a hyena and a bird of prey; the ancient Greek version reads "My inheritance is a hyena's cave"; a few Greek manuscripts also mention bandits; the KJV translation is probably derived from the Latin "avis discolor," a multicolored bird, which looks like a wild guess by the Latin translator). Most modern versions render the verse in a way not parallel to the KJV, although John Bright in the Anchor Bible offers "speckled bird of prey." The Jewish Tanakh tries to have it both ways: "Like a bird of prey [or] a hyena," while admitting the meaning is uncertain; the brackets around "[or]" are in the Tanakh text. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: R621

Great Storm Pass Over, A

DESCRIPTION: A hurricane passes over Andros Island; for three days the sun is blotted out. The singer fixes his heart on Jesus; while many are crippled, wounded, or killed, he is spared. He tells sinners that the time of judgement is coming; they had better pray

AUTHOR: "Tappy Toe" (nickname, real name unknown; Andros Island sponger)

EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (recording, men from Andros Island)

KEYWORDS: warning death disaster storm Caribbean Jesus

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1929 - The Bahamas are devastated by a hurricane with little or no advance warning. Many deaths and much damage results

FOUND IN: West Indies(Bahamas)

Roud #15622

RECORDINGS:

Unidentified men from Andros Island, "A Great Storm Pass Over" (AAFS 504 A, 1935; on LomaxCD1822-2)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Run Come See" (subject)

NOTES [17 words]: While the storm described is the same one described in "Run Come See," this is an independent song. - PJS

File: RcAGSP0

Great, High Wind that Blew the Low Post Down, The

DESCRIPTION: "It blew in the valley and it blew on the hill, And it blew till the sun and the moon stood still... It's the great, high wind that blew the low post down." It's so strong it blows "the whiskers off the rye," "buttons off the sky," and stirs chicken soup

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (Bush-FSofCentralWestVirginiaVol2)

KEYWORDS: humorous nonballad storm

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Bush-FSofCentralWestVirginiaVol2, pp. 12-14, "The Great, High Wind that Blew the Low Post Down" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #7025

File: BwV2013

Grecian Bend, The

DESCRIPTION: "I'm the wretchedest man that e'er was seen, For badly swindled I have been." He meets a girl with a Grecian Bend. She is very pretty, and he ends up paying her (expensive) rent.
Then she goes off with another man. He warns against such girls

AUTHOR: Tony Pastor (source: New-Comic-Songster)
EARLIEST DATE: 1870 (New-Comic-Songster)
KEYWORDS: love courting clothes warning recitation

Greedy Gled o' Mains, The

DESCRIPTION: "There lives a farmer in this place" known for his greed. In all weather he greedily drives his crew. He is too smart for "poor silly folk" round about. "Grab a' ye can is aye the plan Wi' the greedy gled o' Mains."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: greed commerce farming nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan3 358, "The Greedy Gled o' Mains" (1 text)
Roud #5903
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Glead" (subject?)

NOTES [115 words]: Greig/Duncan3 glossary p. xlii: "gled,glead" is translated as "kite,hawk"
Greig/Duncan3: "John Milne published this song in 1901 (Milne, p. 9) and commented: '[This song] was popular in the first thirty years of the [nineteenth century].''
This song begins "There lives a farmer in this place His name ye nead na speire." Greig/Duncan3 says nothing to solve the mystery for this song or for "The Glead." It seems likely to me that both songs are about the same person.

Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv, of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Mains of Pitfour (358) is at coordinate (h5,v0) on that map [roughly 28 miles N of Aberdeen] - BS

Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD3356

Greedy Harbour

DESCRIPTION: "Down in Greedy Harbour we went one time; We shipped on board with old man Ryme; The skipper and I could not combine, With him I spent a very short time." The singer buys and loses a punt, dresses a cow in silks, and drinks turpentine thinking it wine

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland)
KEYWORDS: humorous nonballad talltale
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 127, "Greedy Harbour" (1 text, 1 tune)
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 114, "Grady's Harbour" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6344
NOTES [525 words]: The Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland version of this claims that it was written by Jack Maher and Stephen Mullins of the Sagona. On the other hand, Leach's informants thought the song local to Labrador. There are several hints in the Leach text that it is indeed the more original (e.g. the reference to "Grady's Harbour," a real place, rather than "Greedy Harbour," which does not exist; the use of Ryan as the Captain's name rather than "Ryme" -- but, of course, these could be localizations).
What we can say is that the S. S. Sagona was a real ship. She was built in 1912 for Crosbie & Co., later being sold to the Reid company and the Newfoundland Railroad, which in addition to running trains also ran the coastal steamers (Hanrahan, p. 201). Ryan/Drake, p. 40, list her as being a steel steamer, 420 net tons, 98 horsepower -- surprisingly small for a steel steamer, although about typical for the wooden wall steamers of the period. Connors, p. 39, quotes a newspaper report from 1912 which describes her as "a vessel of 807 gross tons, 420 net, length 175 feet, breadth 28 feet, depth 20 ft. 3 ins. Her accommodation for the sealers 'tween decks is fine. She has a fine saloon amidships and steerage aft, with smoking rooms and ladies' cabn. The ship can take 50 saloon and 40 steerage passengers, can steam 14 knots."

As the newspaper account says, she was designed to carry passengers (which again makes it surprising that she was so small). But she did serve on the Newfoundland/Labrador run for a time, so men who served on her could have written a Newfoundland song.

In addition to ferry service, she spent some time as a sealer, starting in 1912-1914 under S. R. Winsor, then taking the war period off and resuming service in 1921 under Job Knee (Chafe, p. 104). In 1923, she and the other ships belonging to the Newfoundland Railroad reverted to the ownership of the Newfoundland government when the Reid Newfoundland Company gave up its assets in Newfoundland (Connors, p. 48). Ryan/Drake, p. 40, says that her last year as a sealer was 1938, and she was sold in the 1940s. (She was one of the few steel sealers to still be active in that period; all the other steel steamers were sold off, mostly to Russia, during World War I.)

I don't have a complete list of captains of the Sagona, but Winsor, p. 60, lists her commanders for all but two years of them, and there are no Ryans or Rymes among them. If "Old Captain Ryan" is a real person, I would suspect he is the nineteenth century sealing captain William Ryan, for whom see "Captain Bill Ryan Left Terry Behind."

Ryan/Drake, p. 40, and Connors, p. 40 have photos of the Sagona. (Yes, they have their photos on the same page. It's the same photo, too). There is also a picture on p. 60 of Winsor which seems to confirm that she was more of a liner than s sealer, she looks quite fine and is steaming fast enough to create quite a wave. The Sagona is also mentioned in "Arrival of 'Aurora', 'Diana', 'Virginia Lake,' and 'Vanguard,' Loaded," "First Arrival from the Sea Fishery S. S. Fogota, 1912," and "To the Memory of the Late Captain Kennedy." - RBW

Bibliography

- Connors: William Connors, By the Next Boat: A Photo History of Newfoundland Coastal Boats, Johnson Family Foundation, 2002

Last updated in version 4.5
File: GrMa127

Green Above the Red, The

DESCRIPTION: When the English red has been above the Irish green our fathers rose to set the green above the red. Heroes are named. Irish green is banned now but "we vow our blood to shed, Once and forever more to raise the green above the red"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1886 (broadside, Bodleian 2806 b.10(118))

KEYWORDS: Ireland nonballad patriotic political rebellion

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (3 citations):
- O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 58, "The Green Above the Red" (1 text)
- Healy-MercierBookOfOldIrishStreetBalladsVol2, pp. 125-126, "The Green Above the Red" (1 text)
- Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 86, "The Green Above the Red" (1 text)

ST OCon058 (Partial)
Green Banks of Banna, The

DESCRIPTION: "By the green banks of Banna I wander alone Where the river runs softly by sweet Portglenone." The singer recalls the day her lover said he must leave her. She laments his long absence. She will be happy once he returns.

AUTHOR: Maud Houston?

EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: love, separation

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H233, pp. 287-288, "The Green Banks of Banna" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #3818

NOTES [28 words]: Sam Henry attributed this to Maud Houston, but only in one of his copies. In any case, it's the sort of thing anyone might scrap together from traditional pieces. - RBW

File: HHH233

Green Brier Shore (II), The

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, then I can court little and I can court long, and I'll court an old sweetheart till the new one comes along. I'll kiss them and court them...." Nancy and Willie declare their love and lamenting her rich parents' disapproval of Willie.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1962 (Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs)

KEYWORDS: love, courting, floating verses

FOUND IN: Canada (Ont)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs 68, "Green Brier Shore, The" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 329, GRNBRIR2*

Roud #549

RECORDINGS:
Orlo Brandon, "The Green Briar Shore" (on ONEFowke01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Way Down the Ohio" (lyrics)

NOTES [151 words]: Though it has the same title, it does not have the story line of the Laws M26, "Green Brier (Red River or New River) Shore" [though Roud lumps them, and I'm almost tempted to do the same until and unless more versions of this form show up - RBW]. In fact there is precious little story line at all, the verses all describe Nancy and Willie declaring their love for each other and lamenting her rich parents disapproval of Willie.

Has a completely unrelated and lighthearted first verse which could also function as a chorus, "Oh, then I can court little and I can court long, and I'll court an old sweetheart till the new one comes along. I'll kiss them and court them -- keep their mind at ease. But when their back is turning I'll court who I please."

Fowke states that it seems to be a composite, borrowing verses from several other songs, including the other "Green Brier Shore" and "Lovely Willie." - SL

Last updated in version 2.6
File: FowM068

Green Broom

DESCRIPTION: Old broom-cutter tells his lazy son to get to work cutting broom. The boy does, then takes it to market to sell. A lady hears him, and has him brought in, where she proposes marriage to him. They wed, as the lady sings his praises.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1720 (Pills to Purge Melancholy, under the title "The Jolly Broom-Man: Or the unhappy BOY turn'd Thrifty")

KEYWORDS: love marriage work worker courting

FOUND IN: Britain(England(All),Scotland(Aber)) Ireland Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (19 citations):
Stokoe/Reay-SongsAndBalladsOfNorthernEngland, pp. 104-105, "Broom, Green Broom" (1 text, 1 tune)
Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs, pp. 88-89, "Green Broom" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Gl 93, "Broom Dasher"; Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Bk 10, "Jack and His Brooms" (2 texts)
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 152-153, "The Green Broom" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 422)
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 56, "Green Broom" (1 text)
Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 65, "Green Broom" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #96, "Green Brooms" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #122, p. 2, "The Broom-Cutter"; #124, pp. 2-3, "The Broom-Cutter" (1 text plus 1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan5 950, "The Broom-Cutter" (3 texts, 2 tunes)
Sharpe-OneHundredEnglishFolksongs 49, "Green Broom" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 223, "Green Brooms" (1 text, 1 tune)
Karpeles-FolksongsFromNewfoundland 76, "Green Broom" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H147, p. 474, "Green Broom" (1 text, 1 tune)
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 82, "Little Girleen With the Curling Poll Would You Buy Brooms" (1 text)
Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 32, "Green Broome" (1 text, 1 tune)
Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #120, pp. 98-99, "(There was an old man, and he liv'd in a wood)" (first half of the song only)
Montgomerie/Montgomerie-ScottishNurseryRhymes 166, "(There was an old man)" (1 fragment)
DT, GRBROOM* GRNBROM2*
ADDITIONAL: Walter de la Mare, _Come Hither_, revised edition, 1928; #139, "Green Broome" (1 text)
Roud #379

RECORDINGS:
Sam Larner, "Green Broom" (on SLarner02)
Sean McDonagh, "Green Brooms" (on FSB3)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 c.17(156), "The Green Broom," W. Armstrong (Liverpool), 1820-1824; also Harding B 16(108a), Firth b.26(294), Firth b.25(38), Firth c.18(205), "Green Brooms"; Harding B 28(93), "Jack and His Brooms"

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Jack and His Brooms

NOTES [85 words]: Found in Gammer Gurton’s Garland, according to Sharp, and also in Pills to Purge Melancholy. -PJS
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Gl 93 is listed twice: as "Broom Dasher" and "Twas of a Broom Dasher." The "Twas of a Broom Dasher" entry says, "The words are incomplete in the manuscript." The notes to "Broom Dasher" -- with a slightly different text -- says, "It is obvious that these are but fragments." - BS
Not to be confused with "The Broomfield Hill," also sometimes found under the title "Green Broom." - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: ShH49

Green Bushes, The [Laws P2]

DESCRIPTION: The singer courts a girl he meets by chance, offering her fine clothes if she will marry him. Although clothes do not interest her, she is willing to marry, even though she is already pledged. Her former love arrives and comments bitterly on her falseness

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1845 (in the play "The Green Bushes" by Buckstone); before 1839 (broadside, Bodleian Johnson Ballads fol. 30)

KEYWORDS: courting love clothes infidelity

FOUND IN: US(NE,SE) Canada(Mar,Newf) Britain(Scotland,England(Lond,North,South)) Ireland

REFERENCES (30 citations):
Laws P2, "The Green Bushes"
Kidson-TraditionalTunes, pp. 47-48, "Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hamer-GarnersGay, pp. 42-43, "Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #45, "Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp-OneHundredEnglishFolksongs 40, "Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, pp. 173-174, "Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 126, "Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp/Karpeles-EightyEnglishFolkSongs 48, "Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune -- a composite version)
Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 38, "Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Copper-SongsAndSouthernBreezes, pp. 240-241, "Down by the Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 397, "Green Bushes" (1 text)
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 57, "The Green Bushes" (1 text)

Butterworth/Dawney-PloughboysGlory, p. 16, "Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs, pp. 170-171, "The Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 156, "Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
OShaughnessy-YellowbellyBalladsPart1 20, "Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #64, "Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H143, p. 395, "The Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 147, "Green Bushes" (1 text)
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 30, "The Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)

Karpeles-FolkSongsFromNewfoundland 84, "Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 19, "Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Pottie/Ellis-FolksongsOfTheMaritimes, pp. 120-121, "Green Bushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Flanders/Brown-VermontFolkSongsAndBallads, pp. 246-247, "Way Down by the Green Bushes" (1 text)
MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland 66, "Green Bushes" (2 texts, 2 tunes)

Forget-Me-Not-Songster, p. 246, "Green Bushes" (1 text)

Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 195, "Green Bushes" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #822, p. 55, "The Green Bushes" (1 reference)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 134-135, "The Green Bushes" (1 text)
DT 491, GREEBUS*
Roud #1040

RECORDINGS:
Geoff Ling, "The Green Bushes" (on Voice01)
Thomas Moran, "Green Bushes" (on FSBFTX15)

BROADSIDES:
Green Carpet

DESCRIPTION: "On the green carpet here we stand, Take your true love by the hand, Take the one whom you profess To be the one whom you love best." "Oh what a beautiful choice you've made... Give her a kiss, and send her away, And tell her she can no longer stay."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (Newell)

KEYWORDS: playparty marriage love nonballad

FOUND IN: US(NE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Green Cockade (II), The

DESCRIPTION: In 1782 the Volunteers "won for Ireland full free trade" in return for Irish aid. In 1789 the Volunteers surrounded King William's statue "proclaiming Ireland should be free." But "the Irish divided, the English gained And Ireland once again was chained"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1887 (Madden's _Literary Remains of the United Irishmen of 1798_, according to Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

KEYWORDS: England Ireland patriotic political

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 4, "The Green Cockade" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #V37861

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 b.9(266), "The Green Cockade," unknown, n.d.

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Shamrock Cockade" (subject of the 1782 Volunteers)
cf. "The Song of the Volunteers" (subject of the 1782 Volunteers)
cf. "The Dungannon Convention" (for that event)

NOTES [313 words]: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 p. 1: "On St Patrick's Day, 1778, the first company of Belfast Volunteers was formed in response to the danger of a possible war between Britain and France. [According to Peter and Fiona Somerset Fry, _A History of Ireland_, p. 186, the year was 1777, though few other companies formed until 1778.] The movement spread like wildfire and soon there were companies in all parts of Ireland. At their height they numbered 100,000 members. By the following year they had become politicized and swung their weight behind the so-called Patriot Party, those in favour of legislative independence from the British parliament and the removal of impediments to Irish commerce."

[Moynan lists the following] Irish Volunteer Society protests
February 15, 1782 - Volunteer Convention in Dungannon, Co. Tyrone
September 8, 1783 - Volunteer Convention in Dungannon, Co. Tyrone
November 4, 1779 - Volunteers parade at "the site, at the time, of an equestrian statue of King William. They had signs fixed to their cannon which read 'Free Trade or This.'" - BS

For more on the Volunteers and their effect on Anglo-Irish relations, see the notes to "The Song of the Volunteers." The references to Irish unity accomplishing much are quite accurate; even before Grattan's Parliament (for which see "Ireland's Glory") gave Ireland a measure of independence, the Irish had shown that they could sometimes act on their own -- Mike Cronin, _A History of Ireland_, p. 94 writes that the Irish "could, when they operated as a single block, defeat the will of the British Parliament": he notes on pp. 93-98 several instances of this in the period 1750-1780. But he also notes that they were usually not united, and when not united, the British could almost always manipulate the results to their own ends. And then, of course, came 1798, and the whole thing fell down. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.1

File: Moyl004

Green Erin

DESCRIPTION: The singer recalls happy times in Erin with Norah and their child. Years later he has returned. "But dark is my home and wild wild its trees wave For my wife and my baby are dust in the grave"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan6)

KEYWORDS: love return death Ireland nonballad baby wife

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan6 1241, "Green Erin" (1 text)
Roud #6782
Green Eyes, Greedy Eyes

DESCRIPTION: "Green eyes, greedy eyes, Brown eyes, pick the pies, Blue eyes tell lies."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)

KEYWORDS: playparty colors

FOUND IN: New Zealand

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 126, "(Green eyes, greedy eyes)" (1 text); p. 130, "(Green eyes, greedy eyes)" (the same text)

Roud #19925?

Green Fields of America (I), The

DESCRIPTION: The singer bids farewell to Ireland. His parents weep to leave but he wants a trouble-free life in America with no taxes or tithes. We must follow "our manufacturies" across the Atlantic. "The landlords and bailiffs" have driven us from home.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1863 (broadside, Bodleian Harding 2806 b.10(70))

KEYWORDS: emigration farewell poverty America

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Tunney-StoneFiddle, pp. 156-158, "The Green Fields of Canada" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT, GRNFLDA3* GRNCANAD

Roud #2290

RECORDINGS:
Paddy Tunney, "The Green Fields of Amerikay" (on IRPTunney01); "The Green Fields of Canada" (on Voice04); "Green Fields of Canada" (on IRPTunney02)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 b.10(70), "Green Fields of America" ("Farewell to the land of Shillelagh and shamrock"), H. Such (London), 1849-1862; also Harding B 11(1413), Harding B 11(3626), Harding B 11(2600), "Green Fields of America"

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Emigrant's Farewell" (theme)

NOTES [85 words]: Many versions of this song note that there are "no taxes or tithes to devour up our wages" in America. While this obviously is not true (America always had at least some taxes, even if only on the sale of taxable items), the freedom from the tithe was very important. For many years, Irish Catholics were charged a tithe which went to the (Anglican) Church of Ireland. Ireland was not entirely freed of the tithe until the mid-nineteenth century, though after 1838 it was up to the landlords to administer it. - RBW

Green Fields of America (III), The

DESCRIPTION: Gaelic. "The poet asks for bread and soup and lots of it."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage food

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 163, "Green Fields of America, The" (1 text)

NOTES [39 words]: The description follows the "English Summary" provided by OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin.

OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin: "Our text has the look of a chorus.... The usual words... bear no relation to our text." - BS

Last updated in version 3.2
Green Fields Round Ferbane, The

DESCRIPTION: "I curse the day that I sailed away From my dear little Isle so green." The singer recalls his youth and some friends he'll see no more. "The lust for gold it soon grows cold." "I'll turn my face from this awful place" and go home to stay.

AUTHOR: John Mary Doyle (1896-1969) (source: notes to IRHardySons)
EARLIEST DATE: 1980 (IRHardySons)
KEYWORDS: homesickness emigration return Ireland gold
FOUND IN: Ireland
Roud #17891
RECORDINGS:
Big John Maguire, "The Green Fields of Ferbane" (on IRHardySons)

Green Flag of Erin

DESCRIPTION: An song favoring "De Valera" over Colonel Lynch and his supporters, who "our country have sold" for the East Clare MP seat. The rest of the song is about "the banner of freedom, The Green White and Gold," the flag of the "republic we'll have"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1974 (IRClare01)
KEYWORDS: Ireland nonballad patriotic political
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1917 - Eamon De Valera defeats Patrick Lynch in the East Clare MP bi-election
FOUND IN: Ireland
Roud #18469
RECORDINGS:
Michael Flanagan, "Green Flag of Erin" (on IRClare01)

Green Flag, The

DESCRIPTION: "Hibernia's sons, the patriot band" are united, patriotic, and hope the time will come to punish the English "landlords, absentee, and knaves" "Hibernia then will raise her head, The green flag wide extending ... Justice then begins her reign"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1796 (_Paddy's Resource_(Philadelphia), according to Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)
KEYWORDS: England Ireland nonballad patriotic
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 10, "The Green Flag" (1 text, 1 tune)
Green Flowers O
DESCRIPTION: Anna Lee wonders whether "God forgot in his creating hours" to create flowers "with petals tinged of green." She finds one. The singer has never seen another.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (NFOBlondahl03)
KEYWORDS: flowers religious
FOUND IN:
RECORDINGS:
Omar Blondahl, "Green Flowers O" (on NFOBlondahl03)
NOTES [101 words]: Blondahl03 has no liner notes confirming that this song was collected in Newfoundland. Barring another report for Newfoundland I do not assume it has been found there. There is no entry for "Green Flowers O" in Newfoundland Songs and Ballads in Print 1842-1974 A Title and First-Line Index by Paul Mercer. - BS
There is a biological reason why flowers aren't green: Most pollinators (bees, hummingbirds, etc.) are programmed to seek non-green colors when looking for nectar. A green flower would attract little attention -- and so the mutation, even if successful in other regards, would likely die out. - RBW
File: RcGrFlo0

Green Grass (I)
DESCRIPTION: "A dis, a dis, a green grass, A dis, a dis, a dis, Come all you pretty fair maids, And dance along with us." The singer goes a-roving, takes a girl by the hand, and promises her a prince. If the prince dies, she shall have another. All clap hands.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1842 (Robert Chambers, _Popular Rhymes of Scotland_, according to Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)
KEYWORDS: playparty courting dancing nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(England)
REFERENCES (8 citations):
Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs, pp. 106-107, "Tripping Up the Green Grass" (1 text, 1 tune)
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 17, "Green Grass" (5 texts, 1 tune)
Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #645, p. 256, "(A dis, a dis, a green grass)"
Montgomerie/Montgomerie-ScottishNurseryRhymes 62, "(A dis, a dis, a green grass)" (1 text)
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #3, "Here Comes a Duke" (4 texts, three of them being "Three Dukes," the last being this); #4, "Tread, Tread the Green Grass" (1 text); #161, "Tread the Green Grass" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: James Orchard Halliwell, The Nursery Rhymes of England (London, 1844 ("Digitized by Google")), #271 p. 154, ("Trip trap over the grass")
Robert Chambers, The Popular Rhymes of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1847 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 375, "A Dis, A Dis, A Green Grass" (1 text)
Walter de la Mare, _Come Hither_, revised edition, 1928; #215, "Green Grass" (1 text)
Roud #1381
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Walking on the Green Grass"
NOTES [25 words]: Roud lumps this with "Walking on the Green Grass," apparently on the basis that they're both playparties about green grass. They look distinct to me. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.3
File: BGMG645

Green Grass (II)
DESCRIPTION: "Green grass, green grass, Growing up so high, For you are the one that I love best, And (Susie) come up to me." If she says no, "You naughty girl, you sassy girl, You ought to be ashamed, For you are the one that I live best, And Susie come up again"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads)
KEYWORDS: playparty courting
Green Grassy Slopes, The

DESCRIPTION: "I'm going to speak ... of the deeds that were done by King William, On the green grassy slopes of the Boyne." "Praise God for sending us King William." "If ever our service is needed" we "will join, And fight, like valiant King William"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: c.1895 (Graham-TheOrangeSongster)

KEYWORDS: Ireland nonballad patriotic

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Smyth/Bush/Long-OrangeLark 3, "The Green Grassy Slopes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Graham-TheOrangeSongster, p. 22, "The Green Grassy Slopes of the Boyne" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [21 words]: For the Battle of the Boyne, see "The Battle of the Boyne (I)"; for the political background, see also "The Vicar of Bray." - RBW

File: OrLa003

Green Gravel

DESCRIPTION: "Green gravel, green gravel, Your (bank/grass) is so green; The fairest young damsel I ever have seen." Usually a short lyric of praise for a girl, then a report that the girl's love is dead

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1894 (Gomme); c.1835 (Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)

KEYWORDS: courting death river playparty

REFERENCES (22 citations):
Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs, pp. 26-27, "Green Gravel"; Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs, p. 27, "Around the Green Gravel" (3 texts, 2 tunes)
Randolph 532, "Green Gravel" (2 short texts plus an excerpt, 1 tune)
Spurgeon-WaltzTheHall-AmericanPlayParty, p. 109, "Green Gravel"; p. 110, "Green Gravel" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Arnold-FolkSongsofAlabama, p. 129, "Green Gravel" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5, p. 510, "Green Gravel" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #130, "Green Gravel" (1 text, 1 tune)
List-SingingAboutIt-FolkSongsInSouthernIndiana, pp. 75-78, "Green Gravel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeopleH48b, p. 10, "Green Gravel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hammond-SongsOfBelfast, p. 10, "Green Gravel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Flanders/Brown-VermontFolkSongsAndBallads, p. 188, "Green Gravel" (1 text)
Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 10-11, "Green Gravel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 54, "Green Gravel" (6 texts, 1 tune)
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #15, "Green Gravel" (1 short text, 1 tune); #172, "Green Gravel" (1 text)
Welsch-NebraskaPioneerLore, pp. 289-290, "Green Gravel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 26, "(Green gravels, green gravels)" (1 text)
Green Grow the Leaves

DESCRIPTION: "O green grow the leaves on the (hawthorn) tree, Some grow high and some grow low; With this wrangling and this jangling We never shall agree, And the tenor of our song goes merrily."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1912 (Leather-FolkLoreOfHerefordshire)

KEYWORDS: nonballad playparty

FOUND IN: Britain(England(West))
Green Grow the Rashes, O

DESCRIPTION: "There's naught but care on ev'ry han' In ev'ry hour that passes, O." In praise of women and love: "Green grow the rashes, O... The sweetest hours that e'er are spent Are spent amang the lasses, O." Other texts may be more explicitly bawdy

AUTHOR: Words: Robert Burns

EARLIEST DATE: 1794

KEYWORDS: love courting nonballad seduction bawdy

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber)) Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (10 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #121, p. 2, ("Green grows the rashes O"); "Folk-Song in Buchan," pp. 14-15, ("Green grows the rashes, O") (2 fragments)
Greig/Duncan7 1297, "Green Grows the Rashes O" (1 text)
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 66, "Green Grows the Rushes-O" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 98, "Green Grow the Rashes O" (1 fragment consisting of the chorus, 1 tune)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #825, p. 55, "Green Grow the Rushes, O!" (2 references)
Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 97-99, "Green Grow the Rushes O" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 160, "Green Grow The Rashes, O" (1 text)
DT, GRRASH* (the standard version) GRRASH1* (bawdy)
ADDITIONAL: James Kinsley, editor, Burns: Complete Poems and Songs (shorter edition, Oxford, 1969) #45, pp. 43-44, "Green grow the Rashes. A Fragment" (1 text, 1 tune, from 1784/1785); cf. #124, "A fragment" (1 text, with the "Green grow the Rashes" chorus but different lyrics)
James Johnson, Editor, _The Scots Musical Museum_ [1853 edition], volume I, #77, p. 78, "Green grows the Rashes" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST SBoA097 (Full)
Roud #2772

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Johnson Ballads fol. 25, "Green Grow the Rashes," J. Catnach (London), 1813-1838
NLScotland, RB.m.168(207), "Green Grow the Rashes," J. Pitts (London), 1820-1844

NOTES [381 words]: Not to be confused with the ritual/religious "Green Grow the Rashes, O." - RBW

Broadside NLScotland, RB.m.168(207): the imprint "Pitts, Printer, Wholesale Toy and Marble Warehouse, 6, Great St. Andrew Street, Seven Dials" is dated "between 1819 and 1844" at Bodleian Library site Ballads Catalogue; date shown is NLScotland "probable period of publication."

OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin is from Delaney's Scottish Song Book. The title of the song is in Cronin's song list.

Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick is from the chorus as in the description above. A description for Greig/Duncan7: The world's troubles are caused by women. Samson slew a thousand but a woman "his great strength subdued." King David paid dearly "when fair Bathsheba caught his eye." The first verse ends "the sourest hours the wardle saw Sprang frae the wives and lasses O." - BS

Samson, in fact, had enough woman trouble to be a twenty-first century sports star. In Judges 14:1-15:8, he becomes enamored of a Philistine woman, and engages in terrorism against the Philistines when the marriage plans don't work out. In 16:1-3, he hired a prostitute in Gaza and was trapped in the city, but escaped by tearing down the city gate. And only then, in Judges 16:4-31, did he become involved with Delilah, to whom the Greig/Duncan song clearly refers, since she was able to trick him into revealing the secret of his strength, allowing the Philistines to capture and blind him.
David's interest in Bathsheba is told in 2 Samuel 11 -- David spies Bathsheba, Uriah's wife, and sleeps with her. Then, to cover his crime, he has Uriah killed. Most of the rest of 2 Samuel is devoted to working out the consequences of this: Bathsheba's first child by David dies soon after birth (2 Samuel 12:15-25), David's heir Amnon rapes his half-sister Tamar (2 Samuel 13:1-22), Amnon's half-brother Absalom kills Amnon (2 Samuel 13:23-38), Absalom rebells and deposes David, then is killed in his turn (2 Samuel 15-18).

Jim Dixon points out to me that a song which is marked as being to the tune of "Green Grow the Rushes O" and with the same meter as the Burns song, is found in _The History of Pudica, a Lady of N-r-f-lk_ by Richard Gardiner (London,: M. Cooper, 1754; available on Google Books), p. 96. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.5
File: SBoA097

Green Grow the Rushes (World War II version)

DESCRIPTION: "I'll sing you one-oh, Green grow the rushes, oh. What is your one-oh.... Number one is the old C.O. And ever more shall be so." Similarly for Two, the second in command, on up no nine, the boys in the firing line and ten for the C.O.'s rover

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead)
KEYWORDS: cumulative soldier war derivative
FOUND IN: Canada
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead, pp. 55-57, "Green Grow the Rushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #133
CROSS-REFERENCES:
ct. "Green Grow the Rushes-O (The Twelve Apostles, Come and I Will Sing You)" (theme and structure)
NOTES [41 words]: Roud lumps this with the "straight" "Green Grow the Rushes-O (The Twelve Apostles, Come and I Will Sing You)," from which it is patently derived, but although the form is familiar, the text is completely rewritten, so I have separated them. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: Hopk066

Green Grow the Rushes-O (The Twelve Apostles, Come and I Will Sing You)

DESCRIPTION: Cumulative song with religious themes e.g., "I'll sing you three-o/Green grow the rushes-o/What is your three-o/Three for the Hebrew children/Two, two, the lily-white babes/clothed all in green-o/One is one and all alone and evermore shall be so."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1823 (Sandys, _Christmas Carols--Ancient and Modern_) KEYWORDS: ritual cumulative religious nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(England,Scotland),US(Ap,MA,MW,NE,Ro,SE,So) Canada(Mar,Newf)
REFERENCES (30 citations):
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 207, "The Ten Commandments" (5 texts, 3 tunes)
Sharp-OneHundredEnglishFolksongs 97, "The Ten Commandments" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph 605, "The Twelve Apostles" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 425-429, "The Twelve Apostles" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 605)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 50, "The Dilly Song" (2 texts; the first starts with the number 5!)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 50, "The Dilly Song" (2 excerpts, 2 tunes)
Cox/Hercog/Halpert/Boswell-WVirginia-B, #17, pp. 159-162, "The Twelve Apostles" (1 text, 1 tune, somewhat conjectural)
Roberts-SangBranchSettlers, #37, "The Twelve Apostles" (1 text, 1 tune)
Flanders/Brown-VermontFolkSongsAndBallads, pp. 83-85, "The Twelve Apostles" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 150, "The Twelve Apostles" (1 text)
Fuson-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands, p. 187, "Scripture in the Nursery" (1 text)
This page contains a collection of references to various sources of folk songs, with a focus on a particular song cluster known as "The Carol of the Twelve Numbers" or "The Dilly Song." This song cluster is said to have connections with Jewish Passover services, but the exact origins and development are unclear. The references include publications by scholars such as Robert Chambers, Enid Porter, Walter de la Mare, and Bob Stewart.

The song has various titles, including "Holy Babe," "Singing the Ten Commandments," and "Come and I Will Sing You." It is often sung during Passover and is related to other songs such as "Children Go Where I Send Thee." The song has been recorded by Patrick Gaffney and other performers.

Chambers cites a large manuscript collection of Scottish songs, while Botkin prints a text of the American piece "Children Go Where I Send Thee." Newell links it to the Passover chant "Echod Mi Yodea," a connection supported by Cohen. Archer Taylor tried to link it to Sanskrit roots.

This song cluster is frequently confused with other songs with similar names, such as Burns's "Green Grow the Rashes-O." The Cornish words printed by Kennedy are by Talek and Ylewyth; they are translated from an English version, though Kennedy lists versions in other languages. Some people consider this to be a variation of "Children Go Where I Send Thee."
Bob Stewart, Where Is Saint George? Pagan Imagery in English Folksong, revised edition, Blandford, 1988, p. 74, claims that "The 'Dilly Song' is surely the best known and most popular of all true folksongs." As with most Stewart comments, he offers neither data nor description of just what he was drinking when he came up with this idea. Probably he is another who lumps it with a wide variety of other songs. The version he prints, from the Barton Hill Mummers' Play (Bristol), appears rather untypical of tradition -- although very suitable for the rather strange interpretations he will use.

He suggests that the imagery comes from the Qabalah and ideas of the tree of life. (And Palmer actually finds this convincing.) I will agree only in the sense that, although the sense of the song is religious, many of the references are in no sense Biblical. The following annotated version will demonstrate the point, with observations on Biblical links (where there are any) plus what Stewart thinks each number stands for:

I'll sing you one, O
Green grow the rushes, O
What is your one, O

One is one and all alone and evermore shall be so. -- Refers to God or Jesus or both. Clearly it is a reference to the essential unity of God. (Even Stewart, p. 77, agrees with this, which tells you how certain it is -- although he makes a great deal more out of a basic Hebrew formula than the evidence is worth.)

Two, two, lily-white boys, clothed all in green, O -- Non-biblical. Stewart, p. 78, suggests that it links to "The Twa Brothers" [Child 49]! Baring-Gould suggested astrological Gemini twins Castor and Pollux. If we do look for Biblical twins, we have Jacob and Esau, and Judah's sons Perez and Zerah, but the latter pair are not personalities, and there is no hint that the former brothers were ever clothed all in green -- and then never got along.

Three, three, the rivals -- Who knows what this refers to? Not explicitly Biblical. The "three" may be the Trinity. although Stewart denies this; he offers a rather incoherent but Gnostic-sounding explanation

Four for the gospel makers -- Matthew, Mark, Luke John. Stewart, pp. 82-84, goes off on a long discussion of the four beasts associated with the Evangelists (man, eagle, lion, and bull), which he ties into what sound like Gnostic ideas. Here his information is so patently incomplete as to be absurd -- he ignores the use of the symbols in very early Gospel manuscripts, when the sort of heretical ideas he discusses were abhorrent to the Church.

Five for the symbols at your door -- ritual, not Biblical. (Though five could represent the five books of Moses). Stewart, pp. 84-85, connects this with the points of the pentagram, or with the sphere of Mars in the Tree of Life.

Six for the six proud walkers -- Got me (Brown A has "Firemen in the boat." Which doesn't help. Brown B has "ferrymen in the boat," which sounds rather like Charon). Stewart, p. 85, suggests that it is the Saint George whom he claims drowns in his longboat in the "Padstow May Song," whom he in turn links to the murderer in "Edward" [Child 13]. He suggests that the six proud walkers come from "The Joys of Mary."

Seven for the seven stars in the sky -- I'd blame this on J.R.R. Tolkien if it weren't so old. :-) (These would be the Pleiades, important to agricultural peoples as a sign of spring and planting season. - PJS.) Stewart, p. 86 also mentions the Pleiades, but again rings in the Tree of Life as well, and the crown of heaven, and druidic legend.

Eight for the April rainers -- Another ritual oddity (Brown: Eight archangels. Most traditions say there are "seven" archangels, though the Bible doesn't name them all and the Koran gives a different list. The figure eight might be the seven plus an unknown "head of the order")

Nine for the nine bright shiners -- Ditto (Brown: Nine is the night that the star shone bright!). Stewart, np. 87, notes versions which mention pale moonshine, and notes taht Luna, the Moon, was associated with fertility.

Ten for the Ten Commandments -- Ex. 20:2-17; Deut. 5:6-21. Stewart has a reference to the Qabalistic tenth sphere. I could imagine an obscure reference of this sort being corrected to a reference to the Commandments, but Stewart appears to have no actual basis for his tie-in except the number ten.

Eleven for the eleven who went to heaven -- The Twelve Disciples (Matt. 10:2-4; Mark 3:16-19; Luke 10:14-16; Acts 1:13), less Judas Iscariot. Despite this obvious Biblical reference, Stewart links this to the abyss separating the Qabalistic spheres..

Twelve for the twelve Apostles -- same as the above, with either Judas or Matthias (Acts 1:23-26) added. Stewart, p. 88, rings in the twelve signs of the Zodiac as well.

In the Department of Strange Footnotes, this song helped inspire a minor moment in Lloyd Alexander's well-known "Chronicles of Prydain," although not a very happy one. According to Michael O. Tunnell, The Prydain Companion: A Reference Guide to Lloyd Alexander's Prydain Chronicles, 1989 (I use the 2003 Henry Holt hardcover), pp. 211-212, "Alexander discovered the Proud Walkers when reading about a Celtic archaeological find.... 'In rituals and ceremonies... (ancient, barbaric customs) indeed there were people walking around on stilts. I saw the term Proud Walkers, and it suddenly connected in my mind with that old folk songs, "Green Grow the Rushes-o'" (Alexander, 1986b). Alexander goes on to explain that one line of the song speaks of the Proud Walkers. From these sources were born the Proud Walkers in The Book of Three." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: ShH97

Green Grow The Rushes, Oh! (II -- Singing Game)

DESCRIPTION: "Green grow the rushes, oh! (x2), Kiss her quick and let her go, Never mind the weather if the wind don't blow." "Though she wears a checkered gown, He and she must both kneel down...." "Give her a kiss and send her away."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland)

KEYWORDS: playparty courting nonballad

FOUND IN: US(NE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 11-13, "Green Grow the Rushes, Oh!" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #7, "Green Grow the Rushes, O!" (1 short text, probably this)

Roud #12979

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Little Crooked Ring" (lyrics)

NOTES [89 words]: Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland describes this as a kissing game, and seems to link it to the "Green Grows the Laurel" family. In fact it seems to partake of many other songs ("Green Grow the Rushes," "Hop High Ladies," etc.), and the mix is complex enough that I gave it its own entry. Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren's text is some sort of ring game, much shorter, but since it's a singing game with a "Green grow the rushes" line, it seemed best to file it here. Roud seems to have a different set of song divisions. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: Lins011

Green Grows the Laurel (Green Grow the Lilacs)

DESCRIPTION: The singer laments, "I once had a sweetheart but now I have none." (S)he wrote him a letter; the reply says to stop writing. (His/her) very looks are full of venom. (S)he wonders why men and women love each other

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1846 (in U.S., according to Studwell); before 1886 (broadside, Bodleian Firth c.18(245))

KEYWORDS: love rejection parting colors ring floating verses

FOUND IN: US(Ap,MA,MW,NE,Ro,SE,So) Ireland

Britain(Scotland(Aber,Bord),England(Lond,North)) Canada(Mar,Newf,Ont)

REFERENCES (36 citations):
- Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 490-491, "Green Grows the Laurel" (2 texts plus mention of 1 more)
- Randolph 61, "The Orange and Blue" (3 texts plus a fragment, 1 tune)
- Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 118-121, "The Orange and Blue" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 61A)
- Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 280, "Red, White, and Blue" (3 texts with an interesting assortment of green-growing flowers); also probably 282, "I Sent My Love a Letter" (3 texts, of which "B" is clearly this; "A" is "Down in the Valley" and "C" is a mess with some "Down in the Valley" verses and others about Lulu; it's not clear which Lulu)
- Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 280, "Red, White, and Blue" (2 tunes plus text excerpts)
- Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 77, "Green Frows the Laurel" (1 text)
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 91A, "Green Grows the Laurel"; 91B, "Green Grow the Lilacs" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Abernethy-SinginTexas, pp. 163-164, "Green Grow the Lilacs" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scarborough-ASongTexasInSouthernMountains, pp. 331-332, "The Orange and the Blue" (3 texts, all short, with local titles "Red, White and Blue," "Green Grows the Laurel," "Green Grows the Laurel"; 2 tunes on pp. 445-446)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 156, "Green Grows the Laurel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Bush-FSofCentralWestVirginiaVol4, pp. 63-64, "Green Grow the Lilacs" (1 text, 1 tune)
Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales, "Green Laurel" (1 text plus an excerpt)
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 286-288, "The One O" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Bk 20)
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #52, "Orange and Blue" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 158, "Green Grows the Laurel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #46, "Green Grow the Laurels" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H165a+b, p. 260, "Green Grow the Rashes (Green Grows the Laurel)" (2 texts, 2 tunes, though both are strongly mixed with something like "If I Were a Fisher"); also H624, p. 349, "I Am a Wee Laddie, Hard, Hard Is My Fate" (1 text, 1 tune, also probably a composite of this and something else)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 29, "Green Grows the Laurel" (2 texts; the "A" text is probably mixed with some other lost love song)
Peacock, pp. 454-455, "Green Grows the Laurel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 20, "I Wrote My Love a Letter" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-FolksongsOfNewBrunswick, pp. 29-30, "Green Grows the Laurel" (1 text, 1 tune) Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario 44, "I Once Loved a Lass" (1 text, 1 tune, from LaRena (Mrs. Gordon) Clark, which begins with verses probably from "The False Bride (The Week Before Easter; I Once Loved a Lass," continues with stanzas from "Green Grow the Laurel (Green Grow the Lilacs)," then has a "My love is like a dewdrop" stanza often found in "Farewell He," and includes several other lyrics that might have floated in) Flanders/Brown-VermontFolkSongsAndBallads, pp. 113-114, "Green Grows the Laurel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greig/Duncan6 1138, "Green Grows the Laurels" (5 texts, 3 tunes)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #70, p. 2, "Green Grows the Laurel"; #153, p. 3, ("Come all ye roving young men") (1 text plus 1 fragment)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 182, "Green Grows the Laurel" (1 text); also p. 187, "The Rose and the Thyme" (1 text, mostly "I Wonder What Is Keeping My True Love Tonight" but with several verses which probably belong here)
Porter/Gower-Jeannie-Robertson-EmergentSingerTransformativeVoice #64, p. 229-230, "Green Grow the Laurels" (1 text, 1 tune, with the first three verses being "Green Grow the Laurels"; the stanza form then shifts, with a few lines typical of "Wheel of Fortune (Dublin City, Spanish Lady)," and a broken token conclusion too short to identify)
McMorland/Scott-HerdLaddieOTheGlen, pp. 66-67, 151, "Green Grows the Laurels" (1 text, 1 tune)
Stewart/Belle-Stewart-QueenAmangTheHeather, pp. 94-95, "Green Grows the Laurel" (1 text)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 130, "Sweet William and Nancy" (1 text, mostly "William and Nancy (II) (Courting Too Slow)" [Laws P5] but mixed with this song and other material)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 170, "Green Grows the Laurel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cox-FolkSongsSouth 139, "The Green Laurels" (2 texts)
MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland 62, "Green Grows the Laurel" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 174, "Green Grow the Lilacs" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolkSingersWordbook, p. 165, "Green Grow the Lilacs" (1 text)
DT, "GREENGRO* GRENGRO2* WEELADDY* (the last being the mixed Sam Henry version)
Roud #279
RECORDINGS:
Daisy Chapman, "Green Grow the Laurels" (on SCDChapman01)
Robert Cinnamond, "Green Grows the Laurel" (on FSBFTX15)
Mary Delaney, "Green Grows the Laurel" (on IRTravellers01)
Louie Fuller, "Green Grow the Laurels" (on Voice15)
Marie Hare, "Green Grows the Laurel" (on MRMHare01)
Mike Kent, "The Nightengale" (on NFMLeach); "Nightingale Laurels" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
Tex Ritter & his Texans, "Green Grow the Lilacs" (Capitol 206, 1945)
Jeannie Robertson, "Green Grow the Laurels" (on FSB01)
Mrs. Clara Stevens, "Green Grows the Laurel" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth c.18(245), "I Changed the Green Willow for the Orange and Blue", W.S. Fortey (London), 1858-1885

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Will Ye Gang, Love"
cf. "The German Clockwinder" (tune)
cf. "The Ploughboy (I)" (lyrics)
cf. "The Blackbird and Thrush" (lyrics)
cf. "If I Were a Fisher" (floating lyrics)
cf. "I Wonder What Is Keeping My True Love Tonight (Green Grass It Grows Bonny)" (lyrics)
cf. "The Yellow Handkerchief (Flash Company)" (floating lyrics)
cf. "I've Travelled This Country (Last Friday Evening)" (floating lyrics)
cf. "The Rue and the Thyme (The Rose and the Thyme)" (floating lyrics)
cf. "A Warning to Girls" (floating lyrics)
cf. "Loved by a Man" (floating lyrics)
NOTES [1254 words]: A legend has it that Mexicans call Americans "Gringos" because, during the Mexican War, the yanquis sang "Green Grow the Lilacs" so often. The term "gringo" is much older than this, however. - RBW
Tristram Coffin [JournalOfAmericanFolklore 65 (1952), p. 342 ff.] and Porter/Gower-Jeannie-Robertson-EmergentSingerTransformativeVoice (228) make the point that the colors referred to in the various versions indeed differ, but they point out that the colors refer to plants and their traditional attributes: "green" laurel as a symbol of virginity and faithful love, rue as a symbol of abstinence and therefore faithfulness ("rue" later often changed to dew"), while "origin" refers to "origin blue -- blue bastard marjoram-thyme," with both marjoram and thyme "closely related to fertility and virility" (Coffin 343). So, writes Coffin, it would make sense after a long period of separation to exchange the "green laurel's" virginity for the "blue" of fertility in marriage. As regards to "origin," John Greenway notes "Herbs of the genus Origanum, often called 'origane' and 'origin,' being closely related to herbs of the genus Marjorana, are frequently called 'bastard marjoram'" (Cited in Coffin, p. 343). Thus it could well be that the significance of the colors is far more "herbal" "and "social" than "historical-political." While this is can be true generally, we cannot say for sure whether any one specific singer on either side of the Atlantic actively knew of these relationships. Tristram Coffin follows two strains of the tradition. "Group A", the British (probably original) emphasizes that in spite of the lovers having parted (or sent letters), the singer trusts that they will soon "renew" or consummate their relationship. "Group B", the Scottish and often American, emphasizes that the singer, even after an acrimonious exchange of letters, "hopes" that at their next meeting their "joy will renew" -- in other words a much more tenuous outcome. Both groups often have stanzas wondering how men can love maids, or maids men, when "they" are so deceitful. (Coffin, "A Tentative Study of a Typical Folk Lyric: 'Green Grows the Laurel,'" JournalOfAmericanFolklore 65 (1952), pp. 341-351.)

Jeannie Robertson's version from the Traveller tradition in the northeast of Scotland goes in a different direction: after they have parted and letters are rejected, a stranger appears to the singer, offers the singer castle, gold and silver if she would sleep with him the night. She cares nothing for all that, wishing her Willie were with her that night. He produces the broken token ring, reveals himself to be Willie, come back to marry her. Stated more abstractly, these Northeast variants combine the theme of separated lovers coming to a resolution (positive or negative), plus, in a relatively small subset, the theme of the "false-true lover" producing the broken token. Given, that all the hundreds of various narrative variants in this complex are so embedded in lyric and floating verses, it is probably better to "lump" them rather than try to "split" them. - DGE
Leach does not explain why the title of this cut on NFMLeach is "The Nightengale."
"Cupid's Garden" (I) includes the following lines: "For I mean to live a virgin, And still the Laurel wear" (see, for example, Bodleian broadside Harding B 20(119)). In the language of flowers laurel stands for "perfidy"; the spurge laurel stands for "coquetry"

In Louie Fuller's Voice15 version each verse lists another seducer: the singer, a sailor and a pageboy.

Mary Delaney's version on IRTravellers01 adds verses I haven't seen before: "Now me mamma she blames me For courting too young, She may blame my small beauty And my flattering old tongue. She may blame my small beauty And my dark rolling eye, If my love is not for me And sorry am I." and "Oh then, thank God, agraghy, The case could be worse, I got money in my pocket
And gold in my purse, When my baby is born I can pay for a nurse, And I'll pass as a maiden In a strange countery."

William E Studwell, The American Song Reader (New York, 1997), on page 101 traces "red, white, and blue" from a Jacobite line "We'll change the green laurel to the bonnet so blue": "Irish-American soldiers in the Mexican War of 1846-1848 sang a version containing their homeland colors at the time, "orange and blue." (The song was published in the United States in 1846, while the war was still going on.) In time, the colors changed to the American national colors "red, white, and blue" and the plant changed from laurel to lilacs, with the ending line becoming "And change the green lilacs to the Red, White and Blue."

The "green laurel" line seems to be from this song, though I haven't seen any other connection to the Jacobite cause. The "blue bonnet" -- often a reference to the Black Watch -- may be a Jacobite reference (see the Hogg-JacobiteRelicsOfScotlandVol2 reference to "Cock Your Beaver"), though I don't even find that to be clear. Was the Orange Order flag -- blue or purple star on an orange background -- or any other flag with Williamite colors -- widely used in 19th century Ireland? [But see "The Protestant Boys": "... loyal Protestants ... Orange and Blue, ever faithful and true, Our King shall support and sedition affright"; also see the Orange Order song "Orange and Blue."] In spite of my reservations, what interests me here is the idea of Irish soldiers singing about "homeland [Orange] colors."

Roy Palmer, in Folk Songs Colected by Ralph Vaughan Williams says "There is a somewhat implausible theory that the song might have had a covert political meaning in Ireland, where green stands for republicanism (though united with orange and white in the tricolour) and the orange and blue for Ulster separatism."

Greig #153 begins "Come all ye roving young men, And listen to me; And never lay your love On the top of a tree." For a parody of this verse see "Come All You Young Men." This is the typical "green grows the laurel" verse with the sexes reversed (at least on the first line). On the other hand (that is: "orange and blue") are just colors: in eleven Greig/Duncan6 1198 versions of "The Nobleman's Wedding" the bridegroom says, after his lover's death, "First I'll put on is a coat of red [or blue, or green] velvet, And I will wear it for one month or two, Next I'll put on is the green and the yellow, And aye, aye after the orange and blue"; in three more "the green and the yellow" are replaced by "the red and the yellow." I have only seen these colored mourning suits in versions from Scotland (Greig-Duncan, including Greig, and Ord). The Irish versions (Kennedy, McBride and Henry) and North American versions (Sharp, Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland, Peacock, Karpeles and Darling) may mention willow, but no suits. In fact, Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia has the suit verse but substitutes green willow for the suits. Kennedy's notes have (p. 383) a verse with "suits of deep mourning" -- but no colors -- from Donegal, and with the colored suits from North-East Scotland.

The verse "at our next meeting Our love we'll renew, And we'll change the green and yellow To the orange and blue" also floats to "Stone and Lime," where it has nothing to do with mourning suits. So far we only have "Stone and Lime" from Scotland.

The Mike Kent recordings seem mislabelled. There is no "nightingale" in the texts which do have "Green grows the laurels and soft falls the dew." - BS

Last updated in version 6.0
File: R061

---

Green Grows the Willow Tree

DESCRIPTION: "Green grows the willow-tree (x3), Up steps a lady with a rose in her hand."

"Bargain, bargain, you young man; You promised to marry me a long time ago. You promised to marry me -- you sha'n't say no."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren)

KEYWORDS: playparty flowers courting promise

FOUND IN: US(MA)

Roud #7918

File: Newe169
Green Hills of Antrim, The

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, dark was the day when I sailed from Cushleake And crossed the wild ocean, my fortune to seek." The singer's new land has beautiful birds and high mountains, but he misses home and Mary Machree "where the green hills of Antrim sweep down to the sea"

AUTHOR: Words: Canon Barnes

EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: homesickness emigration separation derivative

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon-Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H606, p. 208, "The Green Hills of Antrim" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Mountains of Mourne" (tune, lyrics)

File: HHH606

Green Hills of Islay, The

DESCRIPTION: "The green hills of Islay (or New Bay), they're far far away" The singer thinks of the glens and hills of home. His mother prays for him and longs for his return. A sweetheart may change an old love for new but the love of a mother is always the same.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA-Leach)

KEYWORDS: homesickness home return separation nonballad mother

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf) Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Roud #24801 and 30128

RECORDINGS:
Theresa Butler, "The Green Hills of New Bay" (on MUNFLA-Leach)

NOTES [31 words]: The MUNFLA/Leach text is a localized version of the Argyllshire text. Islay is an island of the Inner Hebrides; New Bay is on the north coast of Newfoundland. Steve Roud splits the two. - BS

Last updated in version 4.4
File: ML3GHiIs

Green Leaf

DESCRIPTION: "On to the next and circle four, Green leaf so green, Right hand crossed, The left hand back, You know very well what I mean. Swing her by the left, Swing her by the right, Green leaf... Balance all and swing her about, You know very well what I mean."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1916 (Wolford-ThePlayPartyInTheIndiana)

KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Wolford-ThePlayPartyInTheIndiana, pp. 49-50=Wolford/Richmond/Tillson-PlayPartyInTheIndiana, p. 158, "Green-leaf" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #7892

NOTES [18 words]: Roud lumps this with "Green Leaves," but they don't have much in common except the leaves. I split them. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.1
File: Wolf049

Green Leaves

DESCRIPTION: "Green leaves, green leaves, that grow on a vine, Go choose your partner as I've chosen mine, Honey in the gum so sweet, so sweet, (Joy/Love) is bound to be." Or, "...So choose a partner, the prettiest you can find."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1921 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)

KEYWORDS: love courting playparty

FOUND IN: US(SE,So)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5, pp. 525-527, "Green Leaves" (3 short texts, 3 tunes)
Spurgeon-WaltzTheHall-AmericanPlayParty, p. 111, "Green Leaves" (1 text, 1 tune)
NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal, Charles W. Joyner, "The Repertory of Nancy Jones as a Mirror of Culture in Scotland County," Vol. XXI, No. 3 (Sep 1973), p. 91, "The green leaves, the green leaves that grow on the vine" (1 text)

Roud #7892

NOTES [23 words]: Roud lumps this with Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana's "Green Leaf," but they don't have much in common except the leaves. I split them. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: BrS5525

Green Linnet, The

DESCRIPTION: "Curiosity bore a young native of Erin To view the gay banks of the Rhine" where he sees a "young empress" looking for her "green linnet." She recounts his exploits and says she will search until she finds him

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1839 (broadside, Bodleian Johnson Ballads 227); c.1830 (Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)

KEYWORDS: Napoleon love separation bird

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1769 - Birth of Napoleon Bonaparte
1798 - Napoleon's Egyptian campaign. When his fleet is destroyed at the Battle of the Nile, he is forced to abandon the troops there
1809 - Napoleon divorces his first wife Josephine; he marries Maria Louisa of Austria in 1810
1814 - Napoleon exiled to Elba
June 18, 1815 - Battle of Waterloo
1821 - Death of Napoleon on Saint Helena

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf,Ont) Ireland

REFERENCES (10 citations):
Huntington-SongsTheWhalemenSang, pp. 211-214, "The Green Linnet" (1 text, 1 tune)
Peacock, pp. 458-460, "The Green Linnet" (1 text, 1 tune)
Vikár/Panagapka-SongsNorthWoodsSungByOJAbbott 45, "The Green Linnet" (1 text, 1 tune)
O'Connor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIrland, pp. 10-11, "The Green Linnet" (1 text)
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 30, "The Green Linnet" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 201, "The Green Linnet" (1 text, 1 tune)
O'Cronin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 140, "Sweet Boney Will I E'er See You More" (4 texts, 1 tune)

Roud #1619

RECORDINGS:
O. J. Abbott, "The Green Linnet" (on Abbott1)
Elizabeth Cronin, "Sweet Boney Will I E'er See You More" (on IRECronin01)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Johnson Ballads 227, "Maria Louisa Lamentation. The Green Linnet," J. Catnach (London), 1813-1838; also Harding B 11(2326), Harding B 11(2327)[some illegible words], Harding B 11(3877), "Maria Louisas Lamentation"; Harding B 11(934), "Maria Louisa's Lamentation for the Green Linnet"; Harding B 25(1217)[largely illegible], "Maria Louisa's Lamentation"; Harding B 11(1421), 2806 b.11(72), 2806 c.17(158), 2806 c.18(134), "The Green Linnet" ("Curiosity bore a young native of Erin")
The Green Linnet

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Royal Eagle" (theme: Napoleon)

NOTES [315 words]: This song is curiously confused. The speaker seems to be Maria Louisa of Austria, Napoleon's second wife (it can hardly be his first wife Josephine; she died before Waterloo) -- but surely she would know her husband's career better than she seems to.

This apart from the fact that theirs was a political marriage, and neither party seems to have had any real affection for the other. (Napoleon died with the name of his first wife Josephine on his lips, and Maria Louisa, once Napoleon was exiled, quickly became involved with other men.)

The green linnet as a symbol for Irish nationalism occurs in "The Green Linnet" (where it may refer to Napoleon, or perhaps his son) and "Erin's Green Linnet" (where Daniel O'Connell seems to be the subject). The reason for this is not obvious, unless it has something to do with the linnet's reputation as a fine singer. - RBW

The ballad is recorded on one of the CD's issued around the time of the bicentennial of the 1798 Irish Rebellion. See:
Franke Harte and Donal Lunny, "The Green Linnet" (on Franke Harte and Donal Lunny, "My Name is Napoleon Bonaparte," Hummingbird Records HBCD0027 (2001))

Harte on the bird theme here: "The Irish have throughout history attributed the names of animals, and of birds in particular, to their various leaders... During the Jacobite period the Stuart Pretender was known as the 'Royal Blackbird' [a symbol of course shared by the Scots - RBW], Dan O'Connell was known as the 'Kerry Eagle,' and Charles Stewart Parnell was known as the 'Blackbird of Avondale,' so that it would not be strange for an Irish singer to find Napoleon Bonaparte referred to as the 'Royal Eagle,' or as in this song, the 'Green Linnet.'"

Last updated in version 6.1

File: SwMS211

Green Mossy Banks of the Lea, The [Laws O15]

DESCRIPTION: The young man, driven by "curiosity," roams the world. In Ireland he falls in love with a girl at first sight. He gains her father's approval by saying that he is rich. The two are married, and the American lad settles down on the banks of the Lea

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1835 (broadside, Bodleian Firth b.26(498))

KEYWORDS: rambling love courting marriage

FOUND IN: US(MA,MW,Ro) Canada(Mar,Newf) Britain(England(West)) Ireland

REFERENCES (17 citations):
Laws O15, "The Green Mossy Banks of the Lea"
Butterworth/Dawney-PloughboysGlory, pp. 18-19, "Green Mossy Banks of the Lea" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 585, "American Stranger" (1 text)
Cologne/Morrison-WiltshireFolkSongs, pp. 18-19, "The Green Mossy Banks of the Lea" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #27, "Green Mossy Banks of the Lea" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 98, "The Green Mossy Banks of the Lee" (1 text, 1 tune)
OCroinin-Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 164, "The Green Mossy Banks of the Lee" (2 texts)
Cazden/Haufrecht/Studer-FolkSongsOfTheCatskills 31, "The Green Mossy Banks of the Lea" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 70, "The Green Mossy Banks of the Lea" (1 text, 1 tune, short and full of odd distortions, e.g. the girl is "beautified" rather than "beautiful")
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #39, "The Green Mossy Banks of the Lea" (1 text, 1 tune)
Peacock, pp. 523-524, "The Green Mossy Banks of the Lea" (1 text, 1 tune); p. 600, "The Sweet Mossy Banks of the Wey" (1 text, 1 tune)
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 24, "American Stranger" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 47, "The Green Mossy Banks of the Lea" (1 text, 1 tune)
Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 47, "Green Mossy Banks of the Lea" (1 text, 1 tune) Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 221-223, "On the Green Mossy Banks of the Lea" (2 texts, 1 tune)

Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 205, "The Green Mossy Banks of the Lee" (1 text)
DT 477, MOSSYLEA MOSSYLE2

Roud #987

RECORDINGS:
Jim Keeping, "The Sweet Mossy Banks of the Wey" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
Anita Best and Pamela Morgan, "The Green Mossy Banks of the Lee" (on NFABestPMorgan01)
Pat Maloney, "The Green Mossy Banks of the Lea" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
Tony Wales, "The Green Mossy Banks of the Lea" (on TWales1)

BROADSIDES:
also Harding B 11(2224), Firth c.18(95), Harding B 11(1426), Firth c.18(86), Firth b.27(321), Johnson Ballads 1227, Johnson Ballads 1400, Harding B 11(1423), Harding B 11(1424), Harding B 11(1427), Harding B 11(1429), Harding B 11(1425), Harding B 11(1640), Firth b.26(65), Harding B 11(4030),
Harding B 11(1430), Firth b.25(300), Johnson Ballads 341, "The Green Mossy Banks of the Lea";
Harding B 26(232), Harding B 26(231), "The Green Mossy Banks of the Lee"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Miss Green" (tune)

File: LO15

Green New Chum, The

DESCRIPTION: "Come all of you assembled here, Just listen for a while... you can see with half an eye That I'm a green new chum." The singer went mining, had many troubles and little luck -- and now, with experience, looks and laughs at the next green new chum

AUTHOR: probably Charles R. Thatcher (1831-1878)

EARLIEST DATE: 1970 (AndersonStory)

KEYWORDS: mining hardtimes humorous

FOUND IN:
Anderson-StoryOfAustralianFolksong, pp. 27-28, "Green New Chum" (1 text, 1 tune)
Anderson-GoldrushSongster, pp. 76-77, "The Green New Chum" (1 text, 1 tune)
Anderson/Thatcher-GoldDiggersSongbook, pp. 9-10, "The Green New Chum" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [29 words]: For brief background on Charles Thatcher's career, see the notes to "Where's Your License?" For an extensive collection of his songs, see Anderson-StoryOfAustralianFolksong.

- RBW

Last updated in version 5.3

File: AnSt027

Green Peas and Barley

DESCRIPTION: "Green [hot] peas and barley O On a Sunday [Christmas] morning." "This is the way the teacher [gentleman] stands, Fold your arms and clap your hands"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan8)

KEYWORDS: food nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig/Duncan8 1603, "Hot Peas and Barley Rock" (1 text, 1 tune)
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 73, "Green Peas and Barley" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #12977

File: GrD81603

Green Peas, Mutton Pies

DESCRIPTION: "Green peas, mutton pies, Tell me where my Jeannie lies, And I'll be with her ere she rise, And cudle her to my bosom." "I love Jeannie over and over, I love Jeannie among the clover; I love Jeannie and Jeannie loves me; That's the lass that I'll go wi."

AUTHOR: unknown
Green Plaid, The

DESCRIPTION: Lord Lennox's Edinburgh regiment marches through Dumfries. One man would roll a lass in his green plaid. He says they have orders "each man to have a wife." She says her mamma would not approve. They leave for Minorca. She wishes she had gone with them.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan1)

KEYWORDS: courting parting army clothes Scotland mother soldier

FOUND IN: Britain (Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan1 90, "The Green Plaid" (3 texts, 3 tunes)
Roud #5793

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Lord Lennox' Men
Minorca

NOTES [47 words]: Greig/Duncan1: "The 25th Regiment of Foot (The Edinburgh Regiment), under the command of Lord George Henry Lennox, was based in Dumfries, Annan, and Kirkcudbright from the middle of 1767 until February 1768. In the latter year it embarked for Minorca where it served until 1775." - BS

Last updated in version 2.4

File: GrD090

Green Shores of Fogo, The

DESCRIPTION: "Our barque leaves this harbour tomorrow." The singer is leaving Fogo and Katie "my fortune I'm after seeking In a far distant land o'er the sea"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan8)

KEYWORDS: grief love parting nonballad lyric emigration

FOUND IN: Canada (Newf) Britain (Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig/Duncan8 1537, "The Green Hills of Erin" (1 text)
Peacock, p. 522, "The Green Shores of Fogo" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, SHORFOGO

Roud #6335

RECORDINGS:
Ken Peacock, "Green Shores of Fogo" (on NFKPeacock)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Blooming Bright Star of Belle Isle" [Laws H29] (tune)

NOTES [200 words]: Peacock states "This native love lyric is patterned on a much older Irish song entitled The County I'm Leaving Behind." I considered marking this derivative but I have not seen the base text. - BS

Roud does lump them, but Joe Hickerson, in his notes to "Drive Dull Care Away, Volume 1," says merely that it "seems to be based on" the Irish song. That's separate enough for me. - RBW
If Greig/Duncan8 is Peacock's "much older Irish song" then I agree with Roud in lumping them. The Newfoundland song in both Peacock and Digital Tradition has "green shores of Fogo" instead of "green hills of Erin" and leaves out a few verses. Peacock says, "I strongly suspect that she herself [the singer] is the Katie in the song," but the Katie verses are also in Greig/Duncan8. - BS
As additional data, Philip Hiscock's notes to this song in Eric West, Sing Around This One: Songs of Newfoundland & Labrador Vol. 2, Vinland Music, 1997, p. 54, say that local tradition in Fogo says that the girl's name was Kate Miller; the woman Peacock collected it from was "Mrs. John Fogarty," whose own first name is not given. Hiscock affirms that this is related to an IRISH folk song but is native to Newfoundland. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.4
File: Pea522

Green Trees Bending
DESCRIPTION: "Green trees bending, green trees bending, green trees bending, Hold to the side and swing to the back; If you catch a pretty boy, back right back."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)
KEYWORDS: playparty courting
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5, pp. 513-514, "Green Trees Bending" (1 short text, 1 tune)
NOTES [21 words]: Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 connects this with Newell's "Green Grows the Willow-Tree." I don't see it. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.1
File: BrS5513

Green Upon the Cape
DESCRIPTION: "I'm a lad that's forced an exile From my own native land... I'm a poor distressed croppy For the green upon my cape." The boy goes to Belfast, bids farewell to his parents, and sets out by ship for Paris. He hopes to return to a free Ireland
AUTHOR: William Michael Watson (source: Greig/Duncan1)
EARLIEST DATE: before 1879 (broadside, LOCsinging as10165a); c.1800 (Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)
KEYWORDS: Ireland soldier exile
FOUND IN: Ireland Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (7 citations):
Galvin-IrishSongsOfResistance, pp. 91-93, "Green Upon the Cape" (1 text, 1 tune)
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 21A, "Green On My Cape" (1 text, 1 tune)
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 32, "Green Upon the Cape" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan1 143, "The Wearing of the Green" (1 text)
Healy-MercierBookOfOldIrishStreetBalladsVol2, pp. 126-127, "(A Much Admired Song Called) Green on the Cape" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #2527, p. 171, "Wearing of the Green" (1 reference)
ADDITIONAL: H. Halliday Sparling, Irish Minstrelsy (London, 1888), pp. 15-17, 511-512, "Green Upon the Cape"
Roud #5773
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 c.8(47), "Green on the Cape," unknown, n.d.
LOCsinging, as10165a, "Wearing of the Green," H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878; also as101650, as10165a, "Green on the Cape"
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Wearing of the Green (I)"
NOTES [217 words]: Galvin lists this as a "Northern variant of 'The Wearing of the Green,'" but the sheet music makes it obvious that this is forced; there aren't enough notes in the melody for the lyrics.
Clearly the singer is one of the "Wild Geese" who fled Ireland. The Wild Geese often formed "Irish Brigades" in foreign countries; this seems to be the case here. The first migration of the Wild Geese came after the Boyne and the succeeding battles (roughly 1691-1700), but this song, despite its reference to Cromwell, probably refers to the second migration, as the young man left via Belfast. - RBW

It's not certain that broadside LOCSinging as10165a predates the other LOCSinging entries; it is the only one I can come close to dating. Its text seems corrupt. All three LOCSinging entries have Bonaparte promising to send a fleet "to pull the orange down," but only the De Marsan text has him promise as well to "guillotine their leaders, As well as 'King and Queen.'" In the broadside Bodleian 2806 c.8(47) the exile goes to New York and meets "Meagher, Walsh and Kelly" who promise to "send a convoy with you."

Broadside LOCSinging as10165a: H. De Marsan dating per Studying Nineteenth-Century Popular Song by Paul Charosh in American Music, Winter 1997, Vol 15.4, Table 1, available at FindArticles site. - BS

Last updated in version 3.5
File: PGa091

Green Willow, The

DESCRIPTION: Phoebe accuses William. "She said he had deceived her" Usual "All Around My Hat" complaints. She fears dying a maiden. William claims his deception "was only to try if you were true" They marry and live happily as an example for young lovers.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1953 (Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs)
KEYWORDS: love marriage lie
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 81, "All Around My Hat" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #567

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(1432), "The Green Willow," J. Catnach (London), 1813-1838; also Firth c.18(133), Harding B 11(1433), "The Green Willow"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "All Around My Hat" ("All around my hat" lyrics)

NOTES [96 words]: Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs pp. 80-81 words fit "All Around My Hat" but the tune is not the standard tune. On the other hand, Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs p. 81 has the standard "All Around My Hat" tune but, what seems to me to be, a different theme. Broadside Harding B 11(1432) matches Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs p. 81 but replaces the line "But since it is my fortune that I must Marry an old man" with "But since 'tis my misfortune that I must die a maiden." The description for "The Green Willow" is from a more complete but undated broadside Bodleian Firth c.18(133). - BS

File: CrMa081

Green Woods o' Airlie, The

DESCRIPTION: "The bonniest lass in a' the countryside Has fa'en in love wi' the plooman laddie But little did she think her heart was betrayed At the fit o' the green woods o' Airlie." After some laments over him, he comes back to her and they are married

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan4)
KEYWORDS: love courting marriage
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #66, p. 1, "The Green Woods o' Airlie" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan4 846, "The Green Woods o' Airlie" (4 texts, 1 tune)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 111-112, "The Green Woods o' Airlie" (1 text)
Roud #3324

ALTERNATE TITLES:
My Bonny Plooman Lad

File: Ord112
Green, Green, You're the Best Ever Seen
DESCRIPTION: "Green, green, You're the best ever seen. Red, red, You don't go to bed. Yellow, yellow, You dirty fellow. Black and white, You dirty skite."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)
KEYWORDS: playparty colors
FOUND IN: New Zealand
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 134, "(Green, green)" (1 text)
File: SuSm134E

Greenback (I)
DESCRIPTION: "If I had a scoldin' wife, I tell you what I'd do... Ho yo that greenback, greenback, hi yo today, Hi yo that greenback, they're done courting me." Other verses from floating themes: Someone steals the singer's overcoat; he warns others away from his wife
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (collected from Dave Macon by Boswell)
KEYWORDS: money floating verses wife
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Wolfe/Boswell-FolkSongsOfMiddleTennessee 92, pp. 144-145, "Greenback" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11022
File: BoWo092

Greenback Dollar
DESCRIPTION: Categorized by a lost love theme ("Don't forget me, little darling") and the line(s) "I don't want your greenback dollar; I don't want your watch and chain." Many versions say that the couple cannot marry because of parental opposition
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (recording, Weems String Band)
KEYWORDS: love separation family floating verses
FOUND IN: US(Ap,So)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Randolph 733, "Don't Forget Me, Little Darling" (4 texts, 2 tunes, but only "A" and "B" are this song; "D" is "Don't Forget Me, Little Darling"; "C" is probably composite)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 504-505, "Don't Forget Me, Little Darling" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 733A)
Roberts-SangBranchSettlers, #60, "Greenback Dollar" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, GBDOLLAR*
Roud #3420
RECORDINGS:
[Clarence] Ashley & [Gwen] Foster, "Greenback Dollar" (OKeh 02554/Vocalion 02554/Conqueror 9112, 1933; on Ashley04)
Hommer & Walter Callahan, "Greenback Dollar" (ARC 6-07-52/OKeh 03108/Vocalion 03108/Conqueror 8682, 1936; Columbia 37608/Columbia 20207, 1947)
Davis & Nelson, "I Don't Want Your Greenback Dollar" (Paramount 3188/Broadway 8243/QRS R-9014, 1930)
J. E. Mainer's Mountaineers, "Greenback Dollar" (Bluebird B-6090 [as Daddy John Love?], 1935)
Weems String Band, "Greenback Dollar" (Columbia 15300-D, 1928) [see notes]
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Rye Whiskey"
cf. "I Don't Want Your Millions, Mister" (tune)
cf. "Don't Forget Me, Little Darling (I)" (plot, floating lyrics)
SAME TUNE:
Roy Acuff, "New Greenback Dollar" (Vocalion 03235/OKeh 03235, 1936; Conqueror 9122/ARC 8-03-59, 1938; Conqueror 9781, 1941; Columbia 37614, 1947; Columbia 20213. 1948. Rec. 1936)
Dixon Brothers, "Greenback Dollar - Part 2" (Bluebird B-6462, 1936)
J. E. Mainer's Mountaineers, "Answer to 'Greenback Dollar'" (Bluebird B-7151/Montgomery Ward M-7301, 1937)
Wiley, Zeke & Homer, "Greenback Dollar - Part 3" (Bluebird B-7426, 1938)

NOTES [342 words]: Most versions of this appear to be pastiches of floating verses -- or at least floating themes. The mention of the "greenback dollar" is so characteristic, however, that I decided to classify this as a separate song. - RBW
This should not be confused with the fiddle tune of the same name, nor the folk-revival song with the chorus "I don't give a damn about a greenback dollar/Spend it as fast as I can"; the former is a popular fiddle tune, while the latter was composed by Hoyt Axton. Neither is any relation to this song. - PJS
We might note that the line "I don't want your greenback dollar" might have originated in a context not related to a rejected lover: The first "greenbacks" -- i.e. paper money unbacked by gold -- were issued during the Civil War, and they did depreciate significantly, with an average exchange rate of about three greenbacks for two gold dollars, but it sometimes fell to about two to one when Union forces seemed to be in particular trouble.
George Lineberry, the husband of the grand-niece of "Uncle Dick" Weems and "Uncle Frank" Weems, offers what is probably the final word on the matter:
"The Weems String Band (Perry County, TN) traveled to Memphis, TN in 1928 where Columbia was recording groups for the potential '1928 version American Idol.' (NOT).
"[Their] musical numbers were instrumental -- not vocal arrangements. However, Columbia wanted lyrics, i.e. no lyrics -- no record. So the Weems String Band went back to the hotel, created some lyrics (kind of) for their two songs: 'Greenback Dollar' and 'Davy' (sometimes referred to as 'Davy, Davy'). The lyrics met the minimum requirement, but both songs remained basically instrumentals. The next day they returned to Columbia's 'studio' and recorded both songs, resulting in their only record."
In the case of "Greenback Dollar," it appears that other hillbilly musicians (presumably operating under the same "get some words or get lost" imperative) proceeded to supply their own lyric grafts to produce the confusion of words found in the recording list. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.3
File: R733

Greenfields (How Tedian and Tasteless the Hours)
DESCRIPTION: "How tedious and tasteless the hours When Jesus no longer I see; Sweet prospects, sweet birds, and sweet flowers Have all lost their sweetness to me. The midsummer sun shines but dim, The fields strive in vain to look gay...."
AUTHOR: Words: almost certainly John Newton (1725-1807)?
EARLIEST DATE: 1779? (published with tune in 1808 in the Missouri Harmony)
KEYWORDS: religious Bible nonballad
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Randolph 625, "How Tedian and Tasteless the Hours" (1 text, 1 tune)
Abrahams/Riddle-ASingerAndHerSongs, pp. 112-114, "How Tedian and Tasteless the Hours" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 154, "Greenfields" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #3385
RECORDINGS:
Old Harp Singers of Eastern Tennessee, "Greenfields" (on OldHarp01)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Delights in Christ (tune)"
cf. "Edgefield" (same words, different tune)
NOTES [170 words]: The uncertainty about the authorship of this hymn derives from the fact that many early sources do not credit it. The earliest record seems to be The Original Sacred Harp, which credits John Newton in his book Olney Hymns, 1779. The tune is "Delights in Christ." - PJS, (RBW)
(The Missouri Harmony version, to the tune "Greenfields," precedes the Sacred Harp publication, but with no author listed. Note that there is another tune, "Greenfield," in the Missouri Harmony; it's not the same. The Missouri Harmony also sets the words to the tune "Harpeth.") Moderns, of course, will know it (if at all) to the tune "Greenfields." The Sacred Harp also sets this song to the tune "Edgefield," by J. T. White, but that version seems less popular.
Since the song does in fact appear in the Olney Hymns, which is mostly John Newton's work, the attribution to Newton seems pretty strong. But Newton rarely documented his writing process, so we can't say much more. For background on Newton, see the notes to "Amazing Grace." - RBW

File: San154

Greenhorn, The

DESCRIPTION: Recitation; a greenhorn arrives in the lumber camp and makes friends with everyone except Joe Bonreau, the camp bully. The greenhorn doesn't respond until Joe talks about the greenhorn's girlfriend, after which he proceeds to wipe the floor with Joe

AUTHOR: Probably Marion Ellsworth
EARLIEST DATE: 1941 (Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks)
LONG DESCRIPTION: Recitation; a greenhorn arrives in the lumber camp, and although he's quiet and doesn't smoke, drink or chew tobacco, he makes friends with everyone except Joe Bonreau, the camp bully, who teases him without mercy. The greenhorn doesn't respond until Joe makes remarks about the greenhorn's girlfriend, after which the greenhorn proceeds to wipe the floor with him. All approve, and Joe shakes his hand, saying to the speaker, "I guess, Jack, you was right/When I start in to rile that kid/I was fool with dynamite."

KEYWORDS: lumbering fight logger recitation
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks 103, "The Greenhorn" (1 text)
Beck-LoreOfTheLumberCamps 29, "The Greenhorn" (1 text)

Roud #8882
NOTES [18 words]: This, like the other pieces probably written by Ellsworth, does not seem to have entered oral tradition. - PJS
Last updated in version 5.2
File: Be103

Greenland (The Whaler's Song, Once More for Greenland We Are Bound)

DESCRIPTION: "Again for Greenland we are bound To leave you all behind." The singer describes the trip to the Greenland whaling grounds -- and the return, where they "see our sweethearts and our wives All waiting on the pier." The singer will return next year

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (Greig/Duncan1)
KEYWORDS: whaler travel return reunion sailor
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #85, p. 1, "The Whaler's Song"; #65, p. 2,
("Once more to Greenland we are bound"); "Folk-Song in Buchan," pp. 69-70, "The Whaler's Song"
(2 texts plus 1 fragment, 1 tune)
Greig/Duncan1 10, "Greenland" (7 texts, 8 tunes)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 317-318, "The Whaler's Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, GRNLNDBD GRNLNDB2
Roud #970
RECORDINGS:
A. L. Lloyd, "Greenland Bound" (on Lloyd9)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Once More for Greenland
File: Ord317

Greenland Disaster (I), The

DESCRIPTION: A sealing expedition leaves St. John's for the ice fields and all is well. When the men reached the ice, a storm comes up and freezes them. There are 25 dead and 23 missing. The singer concludes by hoping his audience will pray with him.

AUTHOR: Mrs. John Walsh

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland)

KEYWORDS: storm disaster death hunting

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Mar 21, 1898 - Greenland disaster

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (4 citations):

Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 146, "The Greenland Disaster" (1 text, 1 tune)
Blondahl-NewfoundlandersSing, p. 79. "The Greenland Disaster" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ryan/Small-HaulinRopeAndGaff, pp. 46-51, "The Greenland Disaster (1)," "The Greenland Disaster (2)" (2 texts, 2 tunes)

ST Doy40 (Partial)
Roud #4080

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Greenland Disaster (II -- Sad Comes the News)" (subject)
cf. "The Greenland Disaster (III -- Miscellaneous)" (subject)

England's account really covers only three events, and even those only superficially. All three resulted in pieces cited in the Index: The Greenland Disaster of 1898, discussed here; the Newfoundland Disaster of 1914, for which see "The Newfoundland Disaster (I)," and the disappearance of the Southern Cross, for which see "The Southern Cross (I)."

This song is item dD34 in Laws's Appendix II. Laws knew only the version in Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland; obviously it is more popular than he thought.

The versions of this song are very diverse; Blondahl-NewfoundlandersSing's, e.g., tells the story of the disaster in detail, while Doyle's is a bit briefer on that account but spends many stanzas detailing the names of the dead. Some of this may be caused by the vast numbers of Greenland Disaster poems floating about; Ryan/Small-HaulinRopeAndGaff have four probably non-traditional versions (lumped in the Index as "The Greenland Disaster (III -- Miscellaneous)") in addition to the two traditional forms (this and "The Greenland Disaster (II)").

Of all the tragedies great and small in the history of the Newfoundland sealing industry (and they were many, for sealing was hard and dangerous work), none seems to have embedded itself as deeply into the island's consciousness as this. Even if we ignore all the pieces about the disaster printed in Ryan/Small-HaulinRopeAndGaff, the story of the Greenland seems to be the event that most often turns up in ordinary histories. Feltham, p. 58, says, "the Greenland, even in my youth, almost a half-century after the disaster that bears her name, conjured up mental pictures of raging blizzards and dead and dying men." Greene, pp. 63-64, wrote "Many of the survivors were shipmates with the author four years afterwards, and their stories of suffering and of madness, of self-sacrifice, and of a wonderful endurance, were heart-rending in their relation."

As late as 1956, people were still collecting stories of the Greenland Disaster; Winsor, pp. 85-87, is an account by Nathan House, who was then 84 years old, and so was 26 at the time of the disaster.

The Greenland was built in Aberdeen, Scotland in 1871 -- and although she had a steam engine, it had only 75 horsepower (Feltham, p. 59), so her sails still played a vital part in her work; she could not go far or fast on her engines alone, and could do little to batter her way through ice. Despite this significant drawback, she went to the ice for the first time in 1872, and returned there every year until 1907, serving three different owners and ten different captains, including members of the famous Kean, Dawe, Barbour, and Winsor families (Feltham, p. 59).

From a very early date, she seems to have been regarded as unlucky -- e.g. in 1884, just two years after she was transferred to Newfoundland, she burned to the waterline and sank at her moorings, but was rebuilt (Galgay/McCarthy, p. 37).

By 1898, seals were getting harder to find than in the early 1800s, and the ships were getting more expensive. Ships couldn't afford to just harvest seals in one spot near the ship. So the habit had evolved of having "watches" of sealers -- usually four watches, i.e. gangs of dozens of men, per ship -- which would leave the ship to go hunting. (According to Nathan House, one of the "Master
The song lists the names of two of the dead -- in the Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland version, Mike Hennessey of St. Brenden and William Heaton of Harbour Grace. Ryan's list of casualties does not include a William Heaton, but there was a William Heath of Harbour Grace. The name of the other man is less certain. The song is correct in saying that the Greenland was commanded by Captain Barbour. The Greenland's captain in 1898, the year of the disaster, was George Barbour (1858-1928); one of eight sons of Benjamin Barbour, five of whom -- George, James, Joseph, Thomas, and William -- became sealing captains, although George is the only one of the brothers to get much mention in poetry. He was born at Cobbler's Island near Newtown in Bonavista Bay; Ryan, p. 498, and first commanded a sealer in 1893; DictNewfLabrador, p. 12). His wife, Lucretia Oakley of Greenspond, was the first teacher at the school in Flowers Island (Kean, p. 23), so the family did much for Newfoundland.

The Greenland left port on March 10, 1898 (Feltham, p. 59), with 207 men aboard (Galgay/McCarthy, p. 38; Winsor, p. 83, says there were 208. The difference may be that one counted the captain and the other didn't). It was a year and a voyage marked by rotten luck from the beginning; the Greenland had harvested a good haul of seals, but before they could load them, the carcasses were supposedly stolen by other crews (Feltham, pp. 59-60). According to Cadigan, p. 185, it may have been the notorious Abram Kean who was responsible. (For Kean, see "Captain Abram Kean.") At least, Kean's Aurora was the only ship in the vicinity when Barbour came back to find his seals missing (Collins, p. 192. For the Aurora, see "First Arrival -- 'Aurora' and 'Walrus' Full"). Barbour chased the Aurora to try to get his pelts back, and had a screaming brawl with Kean, but Kean (who frankly strikes me as a psychopath, based both on his history and on his autobiography) refused to give Barbour any satisfaction (Collins, pp. 192-193). Kean also made a vigorous defense of his conduct in the papers (Ryan, p. 306).

The need to make up for the lost seals explains why Greenleaf's text refers to a "saving" voyage; with much of his harvest lost, Barbour had to at least try to break even; a "saving trip" was a "moderately profitable voyage" or one determined to make enough to get by (StoryKirwinWiddowson, p. 436).

Hoping to make up the loss, four of the Greenland's watches of sealers had been let out at different points when a large storm blew up on March 21 (Winsor, p. 83). Captain Barbour had gone back to where he had left off the first watch, and picked them up -- but then was jammed by the ice and had no way to reach the other three watches as the storm closed in; all he could do was sound his whistle and hope they could find him (Galgay/McCarthy, p. 40. Unfortunately, this was a lesson not learned; in 1914, the Newfoundland Disaster -- subject of "The Newfoundland Disaster (I)" -- would likely have been prevented if Westbury Kean, the captain of the Newfoundland, had been willing to sound his whistle). The whistle was no help; a lake developed on the ice between the ship and the men, giving them no good path to get home even though they knew where to go (Ryan, p. 306). All they could do was try to huddle together and set up "pinnacles" of ice to guard against the wind. Six died that night; others seem to have fallen into the sea due to snow- and wind-blindness (Winsor, p. 83). Some men managed to light a fire and kill and eat a seal pup, but conditions were so bad that even men close to them could not join them to get warm by the fire and contribute equipment that could be burned (Winsor, pp. 83-84)

At daylight the next day, Captain Barbour sent out as many men as he could to find the lost sailors. They found six men "barely alive and 24 frozen corpses." Another body was found the next day, and the Diana and Iceland, which came to help with the rescue, found one more survivor and fourteen more bodies the next day. (Feltham, p. 61; Galgay/McCarthy, p. 41. For the Diana, see "Arrival of 'Aurora,' 'Diana,' 'Virginia Lake,' and 'Vanguard,' Loaded"). In all, 48 men died, and only 25 of their bodies were found (Feltham, p. 62; there is a list of all the victims on p. 63; Winsor, p. 84, also has a list, plus a list of where funeral services were held; Ryan, p. 324 n. 153 has another list showing where different accounts gave different names; Galgay/McCarthy, p. 38, has a copy of Barbour's first message to the owners at Baine Johnston and Company summarizing the disaster and asking where to go, and also gives a list of the dead on pp. 69-70). In addition to the dead, several others ended up needing limbs amputated (Ryan, p. 306). Greene, p. 63, says that "65 of those that had been saved were badly frostbitten."

The song lists the names of two of the dead -- in the Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland version, Mike Hennessey of St. Brenden and William Heaton of Harbour Grace. Ryan's list of casualties does not include a William Heaton, but there was a William Heath of Harbour Grace. The name of the other man is less certain. The Evening Herald listed a Michael Hennessey of St. Brendan's, but the Evening Telegram called him "Nicholas Hennessey" and the Evening Herald called him "M. Hennebury." A local consulted by Ryan says that Michael Hennessey was the correct name. In any case, it's clear that both the references in the song were to actual casualties of the disaster. The Greenland’s bad luck wasn’t over; she grounded on the way home and barely survived (Feltham, p. 61; Winsor, p. 86). She had tried to bring the injured to her home port of Harbour Grace, but there was no hospital there, so the ship (once she was re-floated) had to move on to St. John’s (Winsor, p. 86).

Interestingly, George Barbour continued to be given commands (he would command sealers for 35 years, starting in the Walrus and ending with the exceptionally modern Beothic II in 1928; Ryan, p. 498), and seemingly had little trouble finding sealers; “Captain Barbour was respected by his men because he always tried to consider their wealth and safety, despite the considerable blot on his career.... [I]t was generally felt there was absolutely nothing he could have done to have averted the disaster. The sudden unheralded storm came within an inch of destroying his vessel" (Feltham, p. 86 n. 58). Indeed, his career total of 752,563 seal pelts was second all-time for any captain (Ryan/Drake, p. 75; the all-time record was by the aforementioned Abram Kean,). There is a photo of Barbour on p. 75 of Ryan/Drake; p. 25 of Winsor has an 1899 photo of him alongside other famous sealing captains such as Abram Kean plus a portrait of him on p. 71, Arthur Jackman, and Alphaeus Barbour. Winsor, p. 45, has a (very grainy) photo of the Greenland entering St. John’s Harbour after the disaster.

Cadigan, p. 184, says that some reforms followed the disaster, but not enough to prevent future tragedies such as that described in "The Newfoundland Disaster (I)," which was even more costly than the Greenland story but was similar in many ways. Despite this horrid history, the Greenland continued to go to the ice until 1907. In late March of that year, while commanded by Captain Dan Bragg (mentioned as captain of the Greenland in "The Sealer's Song (II)"), she broke her main shaft and soon began to go down (Feltham, pp. 65-66), though it took long enough that there was no great loss of life that time time (Winsor, p. 45).

In addition to the three songs on the Greenland Disaster, the Greenland is also the subject of "The Sealing Trip of the S. S. Greenland 1891." There is a picture of the Greenland as she appeared in 1888 on p. 17 of Ryan/Drake. - RBW

Bibliography

- Cadigan: Sean T. Cadigan, Newfoundland and Labrador: A History, University of Toronto Press, 2009
- Feltham: John Feltham, Sealing Steamers, Harry Cuff Publications, 1995
- Galgay/McCarthy: Frank Galgay and Michael McCarthy, Shipwrecks of Newfoundland and Labrador, [Volume I], Harry Cuff Publishing, 1987
- Greene: William Howe Greene, The Wooden Walls among the Ice Floes: Telling the Romance of the Newfoundland Seal Fishery, Hutchinson & Co, London (PDF available on the Memorial University of Newfoundland web site)
- Kean: Abram Kean, with a foreword by Sir Wilfred Grenfell, Old and Young Ahead, 1935; I use the 2000 Flanker Press edition edited and with a new Introduction (and new photographs) by Shannon Ryan

Last updated in version 6.0

File: Doy40
Greenland Disaster (II -- Sad Comes the News), The

DESCRIPTION: "Sad comes the news from over the sea...." The Greenland sails for the ice in March, and soon finds seals. At the end of March, a blinding snowstorm begins. The men on the ice freeze, and many are never found.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (Peacock; MUNFLA/Leach)

KEYWORDS: storm disaster death hunting

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Mar 21, 1898 - Greenland disaster

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Peacock, pp. 926-927, "The Greenland Disaster" (1 text, 1 tune)
RySm050 (Partial)

Roud #6465

RECORDINGS:

Jim Rice, "The Greenland Disaster" (on PeacockCDROM) (on MUNFLA/Leach)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Greenland Disaster (I)" (subject)

cf. "The Greenland Disaster (III -- Miscellaneous)" (subject)

NOTES [120 words]: The Greenland incident produced several poems; Ryan and Small have no fewer than seven items on the tragedy, though their first two are both versions of "The Greenland Disaster (I)" and the last four appear to be non-traditional. Based on Peacock's text, this can be distinguished from the more-common "Greenland Disaster (I)" partly by being in triple time, partly by the first line quoted, and also by an inaccurate date (March 31 rather than March 21).

Peacock's note on this song is incorrect; the Greenland was not lost in the 1898 disaster; rather, she had dozens of sealers killed by ice conditions, but the ship herself came home safe. For background on this, see the notes to "The Greenland Disaster (I)." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: RySm050

Greenland Disaster (III -- Miscellaneous), The

DESCRIPTION: Catchall entry, for all poems about the Greenland Tragedy not covered by the other pieces on the subject. The Greenland goes to the ice, and 48 men are frozen or lost as a heavy storm traps them away from the ship

AUTHOR: various, some unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1898 (various poems in the Harbour Grace Standard)

KEYWORDS: storm disaster death hunting

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Mar 21, 1898 - Greenland disaster

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (2 citations):

ADDITIONAL: John Feltham, _Sealing Steamers_, Harry Cuff Publications, 1995, pp. 64-65, "(no titles)" (2 excerpts from the March 28, 1898 _Evening Telegram_, neither of them the same as any of the preceding)

Roud #V44707

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Greenland Disaster (I)" (subject)

cf. "The Greenland Disaster (II -- Sad Comes the News)" (subject)

NOTES [49 words]: The poems cited here are not one piece, but I've lumped them because there are so many of them, none traditional. These pieces are to be strongly distinguished from The Greenland Disaster (I) and (II), which are traditional.

For background, see the notes to "The Greenland Disaster (I)." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
Greenland Men, The
DESCRIPTION: "On board the noble Ann, 27th of March, from Shields to Greenland we set sail." They fall in with a French privateer. Poorly armed, their ship is taken and they suffer until ransomed. Back home, an attempt is made to press them to sea. They hope for peace
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1908 (Firth)
KEYWORDS: ship sailor pirate freedom pressgang money prison trick
FOUND IN: REFERENCES (1 citation):
Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs 063, "The Greenland Men" (1 text)
Roud #V29830
File: PaSe063

Greenland Voyage, The, or, The Whale Fisher's Delight
DESCRIPTION: "Why stay we at home now the season is come? Jolly lads, let us liquor our throats." The singer urges others to prepare the ship for the voyage. The spot a whale; the singer cheers as they kill it, and congratulated them on their work
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1986 (Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs)
KEYWORDS: ship whaler drink
FOUND IN: REFERENCES (1 citation):
Roud #V37548
File: PaSe036

Greenland Whale Fishery, The [Laws K21]
DESCRIPTION: The singer and his companions (are forced by poverty to) sign on a whaler. They spot a whale. The whale is harpooned, but sinks the boat and escapes. Five crewmen are killed. The captain regrets the loss of whale and/or crew. At last they leave Greenland
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1820 (_The Mavis_, according to Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast); before 1825 (broadside, Bodleian 2806 c.17(160))
KEYWORDS: ship whale whaler death
FOUND IN: US(MA,MW,NE) Britain(England(Lond,South),Scotland(Aber)) West Indies(Bahamas) Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (31 citations):
Laws K21, "The Greenland Whale Fishery"
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 104-105, "The Greenland Whale Fishery" (1 text)
Huntington-SongsTheWhalemenSang, pp. 9-10, "The Whalefish Song" (1 text, 1 tune, without reference to the drowned men); pp. 11-12
Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 18-19, "Brave Boys (The Greenland Whale)" (1 text, 2 tunes)
Huntington-FolksongsFromMarthasVineyard, pp. 29-30, "Brave Boys" (1 text, 1 tune)
Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen, pp. 151-152, "Greenland Fishery" (1 text, 1 tune)
Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 223-227, "The Whale," "The Greenland Whale" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, pp. 147-148, "The Whale" (1 text, 1 tune)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 707-708, "The Greenland Whale Fishery" (1 text)
Peacock, pp. 147-148, "Whaling Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
Karpeles-FolkSongsFromNewfoundland 42, "The Greenland Fishery" (1 text, 1 tune) Friedman-Viking/PenguinBookOfFolkBallads, p. 401, "The Greenland Whale Fishery" (1 text, 1 tune)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 169, "The Greenland Fishery" (1 text)
Cazden/Hautrecht/Studer-FolkSongsOfTheCatskills 95, "Bound for the Stormy Main" (1 text, 1 tune)
Grigson-PenguinBookOfBallads 81, "The Greenland Whale" (1 text)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #85, pp. 2-3, "The Greenland Fishery"; #87, p.
2, "The Greenland Fishery"; #135, p. 2, "The Greenland Fishery" (1 text plus 2 fragments)
Greig/Duncan1 9, "The Greenland Fishery" (10 texts, 8 tunes)
VaughanWilliams/Lloyd-PenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs, pp. 50-51, "The Greenland Whale Fishery" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 200, "Whale Fishers" (1 text)
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 58, "The Greenland Whale Fishery" (1 text)
Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 83, "The Greenland Fishery" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #11, "The Greenland Whale Fishery" (1 text, 1 tune) Shay-AmericanSeaSongsAndChanteys, pp. 122-123, "The Whale" (1 text, 1 tune, plus a fragment from _Moby Dick_ which may well be derived from this song) Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, p. 89, 'When de Whale Get Strike" (1 short text, 1 tune); , pp.
214-215, "Greenland Whale Fishery" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 32, "The Greenland Whale Fishery" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 142-144, "The Greenland Whale Fishery" (1 text, 1 tune)
Botkin-TreasuryOfAmericanFolklore, pp. 832-833, "Greenland Fishery" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ashton-RealSailorSongs, #83 insert, "The Greenland Whale Fishery" (1 text)
Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs, p. 72, "The Greenland Whale Fishery" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 94, "Greenland Fisheries" (1 text)
DT 321, GREENLAN* GRENLAN2* GRNFISH* GRENFIS4*
Roud #347
RECORDINGS:
Almanac Singers, "Greenland Fishing" (Rec. 1941, unissued at the time; on AlmanacCD1)
A. L. Lloyd, "The Greenland Whale Fishery" (on Lloyd9)
David Pryor: "When the Whale Get Strike" [fragment] (AAFS 512 A1, 1935; on LomaxCD1822-2)
Pete Seeger, "The Greenland Whalers" (on PeteSeeger10)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 c.17(160), "Greenland Whale Fishery" ("In eighteen-hundred and twenty-three"),
W. Armstrong (Liverpool), 1820-1824; also Firth c.13(67), Firth c.13(68), Firth c.13(69), Firth
c.13(71), Harding B 11(90), Harding B 11(3307), Harding B 11(958), Harding B 25(778), "Greenland Whale Fishery"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Barrack's Song" (form)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Greenland Whale-Fishing

NOTES [750 words]: [Lloyd cites a blackletter printing of this piece from before 1725.]
In 1830, the English whaling fleet moved from the right-whale grounds off Greenland to Baffin Bay, and thence to the grounds off Hawaii and Peru. The whalers' songs nonetheless continued to refer to the Greenland grounds. - PJS
It is true that there was a decrease in whalers going to the Greenland in 1830, but the Davis Strait and Baffin Bay were close enough that sailors might refer to the latter as "Greenland." More noteworthy was the decline Arctic whalers overall, because 1830 was "the most disastrous year in the whole history of British whaling. Out of 91 ships in Davis Straits (sic.), 19 were lost and 21 returned clean [i.e. without taking a whale]" (Lubbock, p. 278). 1835 was also very bad: "The disastrous years of 1835 and 1836 played havoc with British whaling, and the only fleet that could be said to be in a flourishing condition in 1837 was that of Peterhead, and this mainly because Peterhead captains made such a success of the sealing" (Lubbock, p. 342). One of those lost in 1835 was the famous whaler and exploration ship _Isabella_ (Lubbock, p. 299). So there just weren't as many ships to go to the Arctic.
Plus, of course, whales were getting fished out: in 1838, one of the most successful whalers, the _Eclipse_, caught nothing but juveniles (Lubbock, p. 343).
Nonetheless, there were still whalers in the Arctic for many years. The aforementioned _Isabella_ rescued John Ross in 1833 (see "Bold Adventures of Captain Ross"); the last ship to see the Franklin Expedition in the 1840s was a whaler (see "Lady Franklin's Lament (The Sailor's Dream)"
Nonetheless it must be said that by 1843 "a large fleet of ships in Davis Straits was now a thing of the past" (Lubbock, p. 344). Watson, p. 4, says, "The toll of such losses and paucity of whales acted as a turning-point in British Arctic whaling. From a peak of over 160 vessels in 1815, barely 30 sailed in 1830. Yields dropped, companies failed, boiling yards closed and men were paid off. London abandoned whaling in 1835 and Leith in 1840. The once-mighty Aberdeen fleet was cut to three vessels by 1839."

But that wasn't the end -- because of steam -- observe, for instance, that the ships of "The Old Polina" were steam whalers of the 1880s. "Just when it looked as if the trade... faced extinction, a timely restoration of fortunes returned to the port [of Dundee] through the innovative decision to introduce steam power to the fleet..... It provided speed to the fleet, ice-breaking capabilities in the whaling grounds, and safety in being able to press forward and cautiously retreat.... These factors... acted to motivate owners to construct bigger and better vessels to stalk the Right whale." It wasn't until 1885-1886 that the Greenland/Baffin Bay fishery went into terminal decline (Watson, p. 93), with a few whalers continuing in service until World War I.

Whalers also continued to sail from New England -- in fact, "Of an estimated nine hundred whaleships of all nations engaged in whaling in the late 1840s, more than seven hundred were American (Allen, p. 82) -- and this song is known in America as well as Britain, so maybe the American whalers kept the "Greenland" references alive.

In addition, although we don't use the term today, Spitsbergen (Svalbard) was sometimes known as "Old Greenland," so the song might refer to that.

Of course, the whales eventually failed, and the whaling steamers either went to Newfoundland to hunt seals or were sold off or scrapped. Arctic whaling was truly done by World War I.

Also, the skills needed for whaling in the Arctic differed from those needed in the Pacific: "the [arctic] bowhead, having no teeth, was forced to defend himself with his flukes; and it is probable that as many whale-boats have been smashed up and as many men killed or maimed by a Greenland or right whale's flukes [as in this song] as by a sperm whale's teeth. The chachalot or sperm whale was constantly killed by one lone boat, but it usually required three or four boats to kill a Greenland whale" (Lubbock, p. 5).

Interestingly, this song was well enough known to show up in Irish stage musicals, or at least in books inspired by them. Ned Harrigan (for whom see "Babies On Our Block") on p. 281 quoted the opening line as "'Twas in the good ship Nancy" and on pp. 281, 282, 286, 287, 288, 431 gave the conclusion "An' they niver cot that whale, brave boys! An' they niver cot that whale!" - RBW

Bibliography

- HarriganMulligans: Edward Harrigan, The Mulligans, G. W. Dillingham, 1901
- Lubbock: Basil Lubbock, The Arctic Whalers, Brown, Son, & Ferguson, 1937 (I use the 1955 reprint)

Last updated in version 5.2
File: LK21

Greenmount Smiling Ann

DESCRIPTION: The singer sees a beautiful girl, "Greenmount smiling Ann." He sees a young man in green approach her. They go off together; the birds sing and the swans glide along with them. He is assured they are "joined in Hymen's ban."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: love husband wife bird marriage beauty

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H182, pp. 464-465, "Greenmount Smiling Ann" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Roud #4457

File: HHH182
Greenock Railway, The
DESCRIPTION: Paddy pays a fare on the Greenock Railway to Glasgow. He enters a box and fights an upper-class man who says he is in the wrong fare class. He fights and escapes to work the harvest and return to Ireland, or is taken by a peeler and serves three months.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1879 (broadside, LOCSinging sb30407a)
KEYWORDS: violence travel escape technology Scotland humorous police railroading
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig/Duncan2 290, "The Greenock Railway" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1821, p. 123, "Paddy on the Railway" (` reference)
Roud #5833
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(823), "Paddy on the Railway" ("A paddy once in Greenock town"), H. Such (London), 1863-1885; also 2806 c.15(276),"Paddy on the Railway"; Harding B 11(2925), 2806 b.11(250). Harding B 11(2924), "Paddy on the Railway" ("Paddy one day from Greenock town")
LOCSinging, sb30407a, "Paddy on the Railway," H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878
NLScotland, L.C.Fol.178.A.2(086), "Paddy on the Railway," unknown, c.1870; also SSSSSS, "X"
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Iron Horse (I)" (theme: country folk ride the railroad)
NOTES [129 words]: If the description has not made it clear, this is another song about the country man confused by "wonders" of "civilization" for "never one in the county of Clare, Ever saw or heard of a Railway."
Sir Robert Peel established the Royal Irish Constabulary in 1812 and its success led, in 1829, to the Metropolitan Police Act for London. Originally the term "Peeler" applied to the London constabulary. (source: Sir Robert "Bobby" Peel (1788-1850) at Historic UK site.)
Greig/Duncan2 texts are fragments; broadside Bodleian Harding B 11(823) is the basis for the description.
Broadside LOCSinging sb30407a: H. De Marsan dating per Studying Nineteenth-Century Popular Song by Paul Charosh in American Music, Winter 1997, Vol 15.4, Table 1, available at FindArticles site. - BS
Last updated in version 3.5
File: GrD2290

Greens
DESCRIPTION: "Greens, greens, good old (collard/culluhed) greens, I eats 'em in the mornin', I eats 'em in the night, I eats 'em all the time; They make me feel just right."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)
KEYWORDS: food nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 347, "Greens" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 8, "Collard Greens" (1 text, tune referenced)
Roud #4491
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Turnip Greens" (theme)
NOTES [50 words]: It's not clear whether the Sandburg and Pankake songs are the same (about all they have in common are the phrase "good old collard greens") -- but both are fragments; it seems pointless to separate them.
The Pankakes have another song, "Turnip Greens," which may spring from the same, er, roots. - RBW
File: San347

Greense's Bonny Lass
DESCRIPTION: The singer, with "a wee drap spirits," pays a night visit to his love who had left the window ajar and the door bar greased. "Wi' hasty feet and lovin' arms I catched my lovey in the dark." He is ecstatic. She was "blithe to bid me come again"

AUTHOR: William Scott of Fetterangus (source: Greig/Duncan4)

EARLIEST DATE: 1832 (Scott, _Poems, Chiefly in the Buchan Dialect_, according to Greig/Duncan4)

KEYWORDS: courting sex nightvisit

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Âber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #30, p. 2, ("My neiper Jock wis fast asleep") (1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan4 786, "Greense's Bonny Lass" (2 texts, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Blythe, Blythe and Merry Was She" (half the chorus and the sense of the chorus)

File: GrD4786

---

Greenside Wakes Song, The

DESCRIPTION: "'Tis Greenside wakes, we've come to the town, To show you some sport of great renown." The singer calls for a spinning contest: "Tread the wheel (x2), dan don dell O." The singer boasts, and hopes to entertain again next year

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1877 (Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland)

KEYWORDS: work contest

FOUND IN: Britain(England)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, pp. 407-408, "The Greenside Wakes Song" (1 text)

ST BeCo407

File: BeCo407

---

Greensleeves

DESCRIPTION: A song of a man rejected by "Lady Greensleeves," whom he describes as "all my joy" and "my delight." He offers various gifts and honors if she will return to him and complains about what he has already spent upon her.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1580 (Stationer's Register; the first surviving printing is from _A Handful of Pleasant Delights_, 1584, and we first find the tune in 1652)

KEYWORDS: love courting rejection

FOUND IN: Britain

REFERENCES (7 citations):
Leather-FolkLoreOfHerefordshire, p. 137, "Handkerchief Dance [Greensleeves]" (1 tune, with dance instructions but no text)
Chappell/Wooldridge-OldEnglishPopularMusic I, pp. 239-242, "Green Sleeves" (1 text, 1 tune)
Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, pp. 170-174, "Lady Greensleeves" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 140, "Greensleeves" (1 text)
Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, p. 259, "Greensleeves"

ST CHW1239

File: GRNSLV3*

RECORDINGS:
Pete Seeger, "Greensleeves" [probably instrumental] (on PeteSeeger47)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "O Shepherd, O Shepherd" (tune)
cf. "What Child Is This?" (tune)
SAME TUNE:
Allan o Maut (II) (How Mault Deals With Every Man) (File: WhBA0M2)
At Rome there is a most fearful rout/New Song of Lulla By (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN331; Bodleian Wood E 25(110); Bodleian Harding B 39(131))
You traitors all that doo deuise, to hurt our Queen in trewcherous wise/A warning to all false Traitors.. [execution of 14 traitors, Aug. 1588] (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN3138)
Good Lord what a wicked world is this/A most excellent godly new Ballad (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN1009)
Come listen a while both young and old/Which nobody can deny (Reginald Nettel, _Seven Centuries of Popular Song_, Phoenix House, 1956, p. 109; it is not a good fit for the tune)
NOTES [569 words]: I have heard that green sleeves betokened a prostitute, and that this song is about a young man who yearned for a woman he could not marry because of her occupation. Kelly Eberhard informs me of a contrary legend, that green sleeves betokened English royalty. (I wonder, in all seriousness, if green sleeves did not betoken a "queen," which means of course both the female member of the ruling family and a prostitute.)
Also, Briggs, volume A.1, p. 296, has a tale of "Green Sleeves," in which Green Sleeves is a robber and magical being to whom the hero must appeal for answers; the tale reminds me a bit of the Loathly Women/"What Do Women Want" story (for which see the notes to "The Marriage of Sir Gawain" [Child 31].
The song has sometimes been credited to Henry VIII. There is nothing inherently impossible about this; Henry was a reasonably skilled musical performer, and he did fool around with composing -- and he was not the first English king to be a composer; the early fifteenth century "Old Hall Manuscript" (British Library Add. M.S. 57.950) contains two pieces credited to "Roy Henry" -- King Henry -- which must mean either Henry IV or Henry V, although we can't be sure which (Given-Wilson, p. 386. Personally, I'd guess it was Henry IV, who seems to have been a good musician before becoming king; Kirby, p. 254). But there is little sign that Henry VIII had the skill to write such a tune. The actual origin of this tune is unknown -- but it became popular almost instantly after its registration. Shakespeare mentions it twice in "The Merry Wives of Windsor" (II.i.57 and V.v.18); Chappell lists many other mentions from before 1600. Ault notes that the title was registered to Richard Jones (who would later print the _Handful of Pleasant Delights_ version) on Sept. 3, 1580 (cf. the Stationer's Register entry "A newe northen (sic.) Dittye of ye Ladye Grene Sleves, Rollins, #1892, p. 165) -- and, that, on the same day, another printer (Edward White, according to Rollins, #1390, p. 120) registered "The Ladie Greene Sleeves Answere to Donkyn her frende," implying that the piece was already well enough known to draw knock-offs. Examples of the latter include: Rollins #1049, p. 94, "Greene Sleves and Countenaunce in Countenaunce is Greene Sleves" (Edward White, September 18, 1580)
Rollins #1050, p. 94, "Greene Sleves is worse awaie, Yellow Sleeves Comme to decaie, Black Sleeves I holde in despite, But White Sleeve is my delight" (Edward White, September 18, 1580; apparently White wanted to corner the market on lousy imitations)
Rollins #1742, p. 151, "a merry newe Northen songe of Greenesleves begynninge the boniest lasse in all the land" (Richard Jones, December 14, 1580)
Rollins #2276, p. 197, "A Reprehension against Greene Sleves by William Elderton" (Richard Jones, February 13, 1581)
There is also this inimitable 1580 item (Rollins, #1051, p. 94): "Greene Sleves moralised to the scripture Declaringe the manifold benefites and blessinges of God bestowed on sinful manne (Sept. 15, 1580, II, 378, Henry Carr)."
Whether the piece ever really took a place in the traditional repertoire is another matter. - RBW
The words perhaps [did] not [become traditional], but the tune certainly did, being found in various forms as a morris dance, a country dance ("Green Sleeves and Yellow Lace") and two carols ("What Child Is This," of course, and "Dame Get Up and Bake You Pies"). -PJS
Bibliography

- Ault: Norman Ault, _Elizabethan Lyrics_, 1949 (I use the 1960 Capricorn Books edition)
- Briggs: Katherine Briggs, _A Dictionary of British Folk-Tales in the English Language_, Part A: Folk Narratives, 1970 (I use the 1971 Routledge paperback that combines volumes A.1 and A.2)
- Rollins: Hyder E. Rollins, _An Analytical Index to the Ballad-Entries (1557-1709)_ In the Register of the Company of Stationers of London, 1924 (I use the 1967 Tradition Press
Greenwich Pensioner, The
DESCRIPTION: "'Twas in the good ship Rover I sail'd the world around, And for three years and over, I ne'er touched British ground." The singer survives a storm off Portugal, but loses a limb in a battle. Now he is in Greenwich. He blesses the King but cannot sail
AUTHOR: probably Charles Dibdin (1745-1814)
EARLIEST DATE: 1891 (Ashton-RealSailorSongs)
KEYWORDS: sailor injury home
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ashton-RealSailorSongs, #52 insert, "The Greenwich Pensioner" (1 text)
ST AshS052i (Partial)
Roud #17509
BROADSIDES:
File: AshS052i

Greenwood Laddie, The
DESCRIPTION: Singer describes the beauty of her greenwood laddie. Her parents oppose the match because he has no riches, but she says "the more that they slight you, the more I'll invite you". She would still cherish him if she had the gold of the Indies or of Africa.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (recorded from Charles Boyle)
KEYWORDS: love beauty gold money lyric nonballad lover father mother
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 130, "The Greenwood Laddie" (1 text, 1 tune)
Tunney-StoneFiddle, p. 137, "The Greenwood Laddie" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2123
RECORDINGS:
Charles Boyle, "Greenwood Laddie" (on FSBFTX13)
Robert Cinnamond, "The Greenwood Laddie" (on IRRCinnamond02)
Paddy Tunney, "Greenwood Laddie" (on IRPTunney01)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
NOTES [83 words]: In 1909 Joyce collected "The Greenwood Lad," but only the tune, and without seeing it I won't cite it as Earliest Date. This is similar in tone to "Banks of the Bann," and even shares a verse, but it's otherwise different enough that I split them without question. - PJS
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland speculates that this might be somehow connected with a Gaelic song, and that the youth's "green-ness" might have political significance. Which strikes me as a rather forced interpretation. - RBW
File: K130

Greer's Grove
DESCRIPTION: Johnny intends to spend the night with Nancy but her cronies beat him and take his money. Next day his mother and neighbors comment on his appearance. He denies being beaten. Fellows, beware of Nancy.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1955 (IRRCinnamond02)
Greetings to the Sergeant

DESCRIPTION: "You've got a kind face, you old bastard, You ought to be bloody well shot: You ought to be tied to a gun-wheel, And there to bloody well rot."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang)

KEYWORDS: soldier punishment

FOUND IN:
Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang, p. 67, "Greetings to the Sergeant" (1 text)
Roud #10540
File: BrPa067

Gregorio Cortez

DESCRIPTION: Spanish. "In the country of the Carmen... The sheriff mayor died." An investigation points to Gregorio Cortez. When he is found, he pleads self-defense. Authorities pursue him. Eventually he gives up. The singer clearly sympathizes with Cortez

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (recording, Pedro Rocha and Lupe Martinez, according to Cohen)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage police homicide punishment escape

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 526-527, "Gregorio Cortez" (1 Spanish text plus a literal English translation)
File: CAFS2526

Gresford Disaster, The

DESCRIPTION: 242 miners and three rescuers died in the Gresford mine explosion. The management is accused of destroying the fireman's records to cover criminal negligence. "Down there in the dark they are lying; they died for nine shillings a day"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952

KEYWORDS: disaster death mining

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sept 22, 1934 - explosion of the Gresford pit mine (in Denbyshire) kills 265 miners and three rescuers

FOUND IN: Britain

REFERENCES (3 citations):
MacColl-ShuttleAndCage-IndustrialFolkBallads, pp. 11-12, "The Gresford Disaster" (1 text, 1 tune)
Grigson-PenguinBookOfBallads 116, "The Gresford Disaster" (1 text)
DT, GRESFORD
Roud #3089

RECORDINGS:
Mrs. A. Cosgrave, "The Gresford Disaster" (on FSB3)
File: PBB116
Grey Cat Kittled in Charlie's Wig, The
DESCRIPTION: "The grey cat's kittled in Charlie's wig (x2), There's one of them living and two of them dead, The grey cat's kittled in Charlie's wig"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1826 (Chambers)
KEYWORDS: animal childbirth
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Montgomerie/Montgomerie-ScottishNurseryRhymes 40, "(The grey cat's kittled in Charlie's wig)" (1 short text)
Greig/Duncan8 1675, "The Grey Cat's Kittled in Charlie's Wig" (4 texts, 2 tunes)
ADDITIONAL: Robert Chambers, The Popular Rhymes of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1826 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 143, ("The cats hae kittled in Charlie's Wig")
Robert Chambers, The Popular Rhymes of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1870 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 385, ("The cat has kittled in Charlie's Wig")
Robert Chambers (Edited by Norah and William Montgomerie), Traditional Scottish Nursery Rhymes (1990 selected from Popular Rhymes) #43, p. 33, "The Grey Cat"
Roud #13024
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Jock Robb" (tune, per Greig/Duncan8)
NOTES [14 words]: Chambers (1826) includes this and a Lillibulero verse as "Whig rhymes after 1745." - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: MSNR040

Grey Cock, The, or, Saw You My Father [Child 248]
DESCRIPTION: Man bids his love to let him in. After some hours of lovemaking, he tells her he must depart when the cock crows (or before). She hopes the cock will not crow soon, but it crows early. She learns that her lover is a ghost, and may never return
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1769 (Herd)
LONG DESCRIPTION: Man comes to his lover's window, bidding her open and let him in. They spend the night in lovemaking; toward dawn, he tells her he must leave when the cock crows for day. She prays the cock not to crow too soon, but the cock in fact crows early. She remarks her lover's cold lips and skin, realizing he has returned to her dead. As he leaves, she asks when she will see him again; he replies with impossibilities ("When the fish they fly, love, and the sea runs dry, love/And the rocks they melt in the heat of the sun") -- i.e., at the Judgment Day.
KEYWORDS: love sex farewell death dialog nightvisit paradox supernatural lover ghost
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South,West),Scotland) US(Ap,SE,So) Canada(Mar,Newf) Ireland
REFERENCES (19 citations):
Child 248, "The Grey Cock, or, Saw You My Father" (1 text)
Bronson 248, "The Grey Cock, or, Saw You My Father" (16 versions)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 248, "The Grey Cock, or, Saw You My Father?" (5 versions: #:1, #5, #8, #9, #12)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 427, "O Saw Ye My Father" (1 text)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 36, "The Grey Cock" (1 text, 1 tune)
{Bronson's #6}
Barry/Eckstorm/Smyth-BritishBalladsFromMaine pp. 310-313, "The Grey Cock" (1 text plus Joyce's version of "The Lover's Ghost")
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 611-612, "The Grey Cock" (2 texts)
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 90, "Pretty Crowin' Chicken" (1 text, 1 tune)
Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol2, pp. 78-79, "Pretty Crowin' Chicken" (1 text, 1 tune)
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 47, "Saw You My True Love John?" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp. 83-85, "The Grey Cock" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
{Bronson's #11, #13}
Karpeles-FolkSongsFromNewfoundland 21, "The Lover's Ghost" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Hugh Shields wrote an article, "The Grey Cock: Dawn Song or Revenant Ballad?" (reprinted in E. B. Lyle, Ballad Studies, pp. 67-92) which argues that, in its original form, this was an "alba" or "dawn song" rather than a revenant ballad.

The problem with the hypothesis, as even Shields grudgingly admits, is that this type of song is literally unknown in English (it's associated primarily with the Iberian peninsula, though James J. Wilhelm, Medieval Song, p. 107, claims that the oldest Dawn Song is the Provençal "En un vergier sotz folha s'albespi," and Wilhelm prints several other dawn songs from France, and even a few from Germany).

Shields never ever really defines the form, giving only a few footnotes, one pointing to a German article on Chaucer's Troilus. Looking at the examples in Wilhelm (there are several more found among the Provençal songs), it appears that the characteristic of the form is two young people, forbidden to meet, still coming together at night and having to part before dawn. Though there are also "religious" alba songs, presumably in praise of the light, and a few other things. All of them, however, are art or minstrel songs, not folk songs.

The former type of alba song, obviously, resembles "The Grey Cock" -- but the motivations are entirely different, and so, generally, is the outcome; in the alba songs, the light simply threatens to reveal the lovers, while it threatens the ghost's very existence in the English ballad. I incline to think the similarity, if there is one, is coincidental -- i.e. "The Grey Cock" may be an alba song, but it is not from the tradition of alba songs.

I should probably note, though, that the Provençal examples cited come mostly from the twelfth and thirteenth centuries -- i.e. some of them come from the time when England ruled large parts of Provence. Henry II had Provençal troubadours in his entourage (perhaps the most famous of all, Bertran de Born, c. 1140-1214, had a part in the quarrels between Henry and his son Henry the Young King, and wrote a lament for the latter). So the form could have been introduced into England at the time -- if you believe that it could have survived the conversion into English and then have lasted until modern times.

There is a nursery rhyme verse which is probably related to this, though it might also have been influenced by "Lady Isabel and the Elf-Knight" or something similar:

Oh, my pretty cock, oh, my handsome cock,
I pray you, do not crow before day,
And your comb shall be made of the very beaten gold,
And your wings of the silver so gray. (Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #852, p. 320.) - RBW

The nine-verse Costello version [VaughanWilliams/Lloyd-PenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs] of "The Grey Cock" begins with five verses often found in "Rise Up Quickly and Let Me In (The Ghostly Lover)," including the distinguishing lines Saying, "I'll be guided without a stumble...."
"....Disturbing me from my long night's rest?"
"It is your own true love, pray don't discover..."
"....For I am wet after my long night's journey, Besides I'm wet love unto the skin."
followed by the "where is the blushes" verse from "Willy O!", two bribery and betrayal verses from Child 248, and ends with the "when the fish they fly" verse from "I Will Put My Ship In Order"; Ewan MacColl's version of the Costello text adds one more verse from "Willy O!"

Perhaps a revenant "The Grey Cock" was closer to the P.W. Joyce version and the two closely related Karpeles-FolkSongsFromNewfoundland texts; that ballad also concludes with the "when the fish they fly" verse. There the distinguishing lines include
"And where is your bed, my dearest love," he said,
"And where are your white Holland sheets?
And where are the maids, oh my darling dear," he said,
"That wait upon you whilst you are asleep?"
"The clay it is me bed, my dearest dear," she said,
"The shroud is my white Holland sheet.
And the worms and creeping things are me servants, dear," she said,
"That wait upon me whilst I am asleep."
(Joyce's text, unlike Karpeles's, reverses the sex of the parties.) Or maybe that is another independent set of ballads.

Child's notes to "The Grey Cock, or, Saw You My Father?" refer to a ballad without a ghost theme ended prematurely by a crowing cock: "The cock is remiss or unfaithful, again, in a little ballad picked up by Burns in Nithsdale, 'A Waukrife Minnie,' Cromek, Select Scottish Songs. You can read the text of the 1789 poem at Burns Country site.

Robert Cinnamond's version on IRRCinnamond02, like Child, Johnson, Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenry'sSongsOfThePeople and Barry/Eckstorm/Smyth-BritishBalladsFromMaine, have no ghostly elements. At the end, as in Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenry'sSongsOfThePeople, the woman is deserted by a man who would just rather not be married. My own inclination, without getting into the "alba" controversy, is to believe that the ghostly versions, like Costello, VaughanWilliams/Lloyd-PenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs and MacColl, have imported the ghost from entirely different ballads.

Ford says of Burns's report of "The Waukrife Minnie" (lovers interrupted by early crowing with no ghost involved) that he had it "from the singing of a country girl in Nithsdale." Ford's comment is in connection with his own text of "My Rolling Eye" [Seventeen Come Sunday [Laws O17]] (Robert Ford, editor, Vagabond Songs and Ballads of Scotland [first series] (Paisley,1899), pp. 102-105) which includes the following verses, again about the interruption of two non-ghostly lovers by an early-crowning cock:
It's waery fa' the waukrife cock
May the foumart lay his crawing,
He wauken'd the auld wife frae her sleep,
A wee blink ere the dawning.
She gaed to the fire to blaw the coal,
To see if she would ken me,
But I dang the auld runt in the fire,
And bade my heels defend me.

Finally having read the Shields article cited above, I see that it analyzes the Costello version on pp. 71-77. Once the chimeric nature of that and other texts is demonstrated I find it difficult to understand the grounds for considering "The Grey Cock" to be a revenant ballad.

See R. H. Cromek, Remains of Nithsdale and Galloway Song, (London, 1810), pp. 72-75, "The Gray Cock," which Child describes as 'a song by Allan Cunningham, impudently put forward as 'the precious relique of the original.'" Cromek writes, "This copy was communicated by Mr. Allan Cunningham. He had it from his father...."; Cunningham's "forgery" has nothing of the revenant theme which, I assume, he would have incorporated if he had thought it appropriate to the ballad he was faking.
Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario [1965], p. 185, also looks at the Costello version: "Of her ten stanzas, the first five parallel almost line for line the corresponding stanzas sung by Mrs. Clark [of 'Rise Up Quickly and Let Me In']." Shields, in footnote 14, acknowledges Fowke's analysis. Since Fowke considers her text a version of "The Grey Cock," she may think of the Costello text as a "more complete" version of Child 248 of which her own text is a fragment. The other way of looking at the two texts is to consider Costello a composite with the Fowke text as one of its elements.
Whether or not they are "dawn songs," the Index includes a number of non-revenant night visits besides Child 248 that are ended early by premature cock crow. See, for example, the discussion of "My Restless Eye" and "A Waukrife Minnie," indexed as "Seventeen Come Sunday [Laws O17]." Another example is the song indexed as "The Light of the Moon." See "Rise Up Quickly and Let Me In (The Ghostly Lover)" for the note beginning, "Summing up: this is not a ghost song at all"; in this case the visit is ended by cock crow, though not prematurely.
For a discussion of "dawn songs", with and without ghosts, see Charles Read Baskervill, "English Songs on the Night Visit" in Publications of the Modern Language Association of America, Vol. XXXVI, No. 4 (December 1921 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 565-614. I would use this article as the starting point for any study of the subject.
Piling it on -- against the revenant -- is the Joe Holmes and Len Graham recording which ends "There was once I thought my love was as constant unto me As the stones that lie under yon ground, But now since I do find he's altered his mind I would rather live single as be bound." - BS

Last updated in version 5.1

File: C248

Grey Goose, The

DESCRIPTION: "Last Monday morning, Lord, Lord, Lord... My daddy went a-hunting... for de grey goose." The goose is found and killed; it takes six weeks to fall, and six weeks to pluck, and six weeks to cook... It cannot be cut, and comes back to life and flies away

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (recording, Washington "Lightnin")

KEYWORDS: talltale bird cook hunting

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (10 citations):
Lomax/Lomax-FolkSongUSA 5, "The Grey Goose" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 242-243, "De Grey Goose" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jackson-WakeUpDeadMan, pp. 95-97, "Grey Goose" (1 text, 1 tune)
Botkin-TreasuryOfAmericanFolklore, pp. 907-908, "The Grey Goose" (1 text, 1 tune)
Abrahams/Riddle-ASingerAndHerSongs, pp. 118-120, "Go Tell Aunt Nancy" (1 text, 1 tune, with an "Aunt Rhody" opening but an ending that might be from The Grey Goose)
Warner-FolkSongsAndBalladsOfTheEasternSeaboard, pp. 16-17, "The Gray Goose" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, pp. 109-110, "Grey Goose" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 403, "The Gray Goose" (1 text)

DT, GRAYGOOS

ADDITIONAL: Moses Asch and Alan Lomax, Editors, _The Leadbelly Songbook_, Oak, 1962, p. 88, "Grey Goose" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11684

RECORDINGS:
James "Iron Head" Baker, "The Grey Goose" (AFS 207B, 1933) (AFS 205 A3, 1934; on LC03)
Augustus "Track Horse" Haggerty & group, "The Grey Goose" (AFS 223 A2, 1933)
Lead Belly, "The Grey Goose" (on GrowOn2)
Pete Seeger, "Gray Goose" (on PeteSeeger05); "Grey Goose" (on PeteSeeger08, PeteSeegerCD02)
Washington "Lightnin;", "The Gray Goose" (AFS 182 A, 1933)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Derby Ram" (theme)
cf. "The Sucking Pig" (theme)
cf. "The Wonderful Crocodile" (theme)
cf. "T'Owd Yowe wi' One Horn" (theme)
cf. "Home, Happy Home"
NOTES [71 words]: Paul Stamler writes, "[This song and 'Home, Happy Home'] are so close that it might be better to call [the latter] an Alternate Title." I have no knowledge of "Home, Happy Home." Anyone know more? - RBW
"Home, Happy Home" was collected, almost certainly from white informants, by Garry Harrison in southern Illinois, probably in the 1970s. - PJS
John Greenway sees this as similar to "Cutty Wren." Once again, I don't see it. - RBW

Grey North Sea, The
DESCRIPTION: "And oh, we peppered them hot, sir, And yelled aloud with glee, Till the enemy staggered back to port In the grey North Sea."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1984 (Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy)
KEYWORDS: navy fight
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
May 31-Jun 1, 1916 - Battle of Jutland. The Royal Navy suffers more losses than the German fleet but forces the Germans to flee back to port
FOUND IN: Britain
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy, p. 144, "The Grey North Sea" (1 fragment)
NOTES [282 words]: Roy Palmer, who gave this to Tawney, thought it was about the Battle of Jutland. Tawney's text is too short to be sure, but it seems likely. The Royal Navy didn't fight many battles, particularly large-scale battles, in the North Sea. The Germans claimed victory in the battle. As Nigel Steel and Peter Hart, Jutland 1916: Death in the Grey Wastes, Cassell, 2003 (I use the 2004 paperback edition), pp. 424-425, say, "Any superficial analysis of ships lost and of casualties sustained shows that the Germans did indeed have a case for celebrating a victory.... In all, the British lost three battlecruisers, three armoured cruisers and eight destroyers. The Germans lost one battlecruiser, one pre-dreadnought, four light cruisers and five destroyers.... In the battle some 6,094 British sailors lost their lives as opposed to 2,551 Germans."
But they Steel/Hart go on to add on p. 425, "Whatever specious claims can be constructed from an analysis of losses or casualties it remains a fact that the British won the Battle of Jutland. In the end the material successes of the High Seas Fleet fade into complete insignificance in comparison to the crushing strategic success the Royal Navy secured for the British Empire." They had chased the Germans back into port, from which they never emerged again in the war. And they did it in just the way the song describes: they "peppered them hot." The British lost more ships -- but many German ships barely made it back to port due to the damage they had sustained; they frankly fled with their tails between their legs. So the song is a good fit for Jutland. The newspapers argued about who won. But the sailors on the British ships knew. - RBW

Grief Is a Knot
DESCRIPTION: Willie leaves Mary for another girl. Mary goes to her deathbed and sends for Willie who promises to take care of their baby. The baby dies too and is buried with Mary.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1924-1925 (see notes); 1952 (Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports)
KEYWORDS: infidelity sex burial death baby lover
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 153-155, "Grief Is a Knot (False Willie)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Peacock, pp. 673-674, "Grief Is a Knot" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9803
RECORDINGS:
Grigor's Ghost

DESCRIPTION: Grigor loves his rich cousin Katie. Her father arranges for Grigor's impressment. He is killed near Fort Niagara; the finger with her ring is cut off. His ghost appears to Katie without the finger. She dies. The father is left "bereft of all joys."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1825 (Buchan, _Gleanings of Scotch, English, and Irish Scarce Old Ballads_, according to Greig/Duncan2)

KEYWORDS: grief love ring army battle parting death America Scotland father servant soldier ghost

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan2 340, "Grigor's Ghost" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Roud #4600

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "On One Thursday's Evening" (tune, according to Greig/Duncan2)

NOTES [731 words]: This is a long ballad and many elements were left out of the description. Among them: Grigor, whose father had been exiled, was taken in and poorly used as a servant by his uncle MacFarlane; Katie is courted by wealthy suitors; her mother overhears their meeting and reports it to MacFarlane; when Grigor and Katie part she asks to be allowed to accompany him in the army but Grigor refuses and she gives him a ring; after Katie dies of grief the mother dies the same night.

According to the ballad, Grigor is killed near Fort Niagara July 30, 1759, four days after the battle there. - BS

The battle of Fort Niagara was part of William Pitt's grand strategy of 1758-1759 for the French and Indian War, in which he attacked the French in Canada on many fronts. The most notable of these campaigns was that of James Wolfe against Quebec, for which see "Brave Wolfe" [Laws A1]. The Niagara campaign took place some weeks before that, and in some ways was even more decisive (because the French had no real chance to reverse the result; they could have retaken Quebec). The British had already accomplished one of the objectives for which they had started the war: They had taken the fort at the confluence of the Allegheny and Monongahela rivers, the site of the future Pittsburg (see Walter R. Borneman, _The French and Indian War_, Harper-Collins, 2006, pp. 187-192). This allowed British resettlement of much of western Pennsylvania, from which they had been driven after Braddock's Defeat (for which see the song of the same name). But if the British could capture Fort Niagara, they could cut off Quebec (and, hence, European France) from the trans-Appalachian areas.

John Prideaux, newly appointed brigadier general, was given 3000 troops and sent up the Mohawk River to take the fort. (Borneman, p. 193). He was joined by about a thousand Iroquois at Oswego (see Fred Anderson, _Crucible of War: The Seven Years' War and the Fate of Empire in British North America_, 2000; I use the 2001 Vintage Books edition; pp. 330-331). This was significant for the British, because the Iroquois had been fairly quiet until then, and most other tribes supported the French. Prideaux therefore left a thousand British and American troops at Oswego to guard his communications and rebuilt the fort there, and rowed the rest of the troops to a point near the mouth of the Niagara River (Borneman, p. 194).

Fort Niagara, built in 1725 near the mouth of the Niagara and much improved in the years since, was well-built and well-situated for most purposes, with water on three sides and a strong wall on the fourth. But it was undermanned; the officer in charge thought that the threat was over for the year, and had sent most of his garrison off to other duties (Anderson, p. 355). His reasons were valid, but the conclusions were wrong; when the British showed up, the fort was manned by only about 500 men (fewer than 200 French regulars and about 300 locals). Plus it was vulnerable to artillery fire from a high point nearby (Borneman, p. 195). Prideaux put his troops there on July 7, 1759 and began a siege.
On July 20, Prideaux was killed by his own artillery (Anderson, p. 336, Borneman, p. 196). On July 23, before the English command could properly be reorganized, the French troops that had earlier left the fort returned. But, disregarding advice from the locals, the 1500 or so men marched right into an ambush and were slaughtered on July 24 (Borneman, p. 198; Anderson, p. 337, says that the Indians in the relief column pulled out, so it was perhaps only 600 Frenchmen who went to their doom. Either way, the relief expedition failed). With no further hope of rescue, Fort Niagara surrendered on July 25 (Anderson, p. 337; Borneman, p. 199).

The battle broke the back of the French position west of the Appalachians. For the moment, New France (what we now would call Quebec) still stood, but it had no real supply line to the southwestern forts. French settlements in places like Michigan and Illinois were cut off from contact with the French government. Few were actually attacked, but they could be taken any time the British wanted them.

The last sputter of the Niagara campaign came as the French attacked Oswego on the supply line to Fort Niagara (Borneman, pp. 202-203). This was a complete fiasco for the French, but perhaps this was the attack in which Grigor was killed. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD2340

Grimsby Lads, The

DESCRIPTION: "Here's to the Grimsby lads out at the trawling," working all night on the sea. "They sail in the cold and the grey of the morning," heading to the cold waters of the North Sea, where they work eighteen hours a day. In ten days they will return

AUTHOR: John Conolly and Bill Meek
EARLIEST DATE: 1986 (Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs)
KEYWORDS: sailor fishing home hardtimes
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs 156, "The Grimsby Lads" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [35 words]: There is of course no hint at all that this is traditional. John Conolly is also responsible for "Fiddler's Green," which arguably has become traditional -- at least, people do learn it from oral tradition. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.4
File: PaSe156

Grizzly Bear (Grizzely Bear)

DESCRIPTION: "Oh that grizzely, grizzely, grizzely bear, Tell me who was that grizzely bear. Oh Jack o' Diamonds was that grizzely bear." The singer describes the grizzely bear (and how his family tries to avoid and/or hunt it)

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (sung by convicts of Negro Prison Camp Work-SongsOf-Henry-Clay-Work)
KEYWORDS: nonballad hunting animal
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Courlander-NegroFolkMusic, p. 106, "Grizzly Bear" (1 text)
Jackson-WakeUpDeadMan, pp.184-192, "Grizzly Bear" (4 texts, 2 tunes)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 402, "Grizzly Bear" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Harold Courlander, _A Treasury of Afro-American Folklore_, Crown Publishers, 1976, p. 411, "Grizzley Bear" (1 text)
Roud #16673
RECORDINGS:
Texas state farm prisoners, "Grizzly Bear" (on NPCWork, FMUSA) [Jackson believes the lead singer here is Joseph "Chinaman" Johnson]
NOTES [129 words]: Courlander suggests the "Grizzly Bear" was a convict whose appearance was so wild that he resembled a bear. As most if not all versions seem to come from prisoners, this is at least possible. But several of the prisoners Jackson spoke to thought it was a warden, Carl Luther McAdams, considered very strict but fair and sometimes known as "the Bear." Still others mentioned a Joe Oliver who predated McAdams. Jackson notes that some scholars consider "the bear" to be a homosexual convict, but observes that the prisoners he talked to rejected that interpretation completely.
Jackson’s versions of the song vary widely; the two sung by Benny Richardson actually have plots of sorts, and Jackson calls them ballads -- though they're pretty vague, just a sort of travelogue.

-- RBW

Last updated in version 3.5
File: CNFM106A

Grizzly Hogan

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, there's a road to Seattle As plain as can be, And if you want to see a wreck, Just take a look at me." The police are afraid to deal with the singer, "Grizzly Hogan," when he gets drunk. He kissed his girl and broke her jaw. No one can match him

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (Beck-TheyKnewPaulBunyan)
KEYWORDS: lumbering talltale injury drink
FOUND IN: US(MW,NW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Beck-TheyKnewPaulBunyan, pp. 53-55, "Grizzly Hogan" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6518
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Frozen Logger" (theme of the logger breaking his girlfriend's jaw when kissing her)
NOTES [34 words]: The verse about the logger breaking his girlfriend's jaw by kissing her occurs also in "The Frozen Logger." For what little we can say about the relationship between the two, see the notes to that song. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: BBun053

Grog Tent We Got Tipsy In, The

DESCRIPTION: "The grog tent we got tipsy in, in old Bendigo, Was certainly the queerest place it's been my lot to know." The text is small and primitive but the landlady was pretty; all the miners got there. But with the landlady having married, it's all gone now

AUTHOR: Words: "Coxon"? / Music: N. J. Sporle
EARLIEST DATE: 1970 (AndersonStory)
KEYWORDS: drink mining marriage
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Anderson-StoryOfAustralianFolksong, pp. 88-90, "The Grog Tent We Got Tipsy In" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: AnSt088

Grog Time of Day (Fine Time of Day)

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Hurrah! my jolly boys, grog time o' day." "The captain's gone ashore, but the mate is aboard." "Captain locked the door and took away the key." I assume they get grog anyway.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1814 (_Landsman Hay_ per Wikipedia; see NOTES)
LONG DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Fine time o' day." We're rowing To St Thomas. There are fine girls
-- Nancy Gibbs and Betsy Braid -- there. "Massa" [our passenger] is a rich, handsome man from London and he loves pretty girls: "him lub 'em much, him lub 'em true." He chases them around the guava bush and catches them in the sugar cane....

KEYWORDS: drink shanty seduction sex
FOUND IN: West Indies
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Abrahams-DeepTheWaterShallowTheShore, pp. 11,16, "Grog Time a Day"; Abrahams-DeepTheWaterShallowTheShore, pp. 18-19, "Fine Time 'o Day" (1 text plus 3 fragments, 1 tune)
DT, FINETIME

cites four references for this song: "The song, the tune of which is now lost, was sung by:

The "Fine Time o' Day" text is quoted by Abrahams from Trelawney Wentworth, The West India Sketch Book (London: Whitaker & Co, 1834 ("Digitized by Google")), vol. 1 pp. 239-242 [Abrahams mis-cites this as vol. 2]. The Digital Tradition citing follows Wentworth but "cleans up" the grammar. That text was apparently put to a commonly-sung shanty to meet particular occasions. Wentworth writes that the singers are rowing from Tortola to St Thomas in a boat "pulling six oars, furnished with two lugger sails.... The subject matter of the song was as discursive and lengthy as Chevy Chase; and it showed an aptitude at invention on the part of the leader, as well as a tolerable acquaintance with the weak side of human nature, on the score of flattery: a small portion of it will suffice." Abrahams comments that "The song is obviously directed as a song of derision at the white man transcribing the song."

The long description follows Wentworth and Digital Tradition. Abrahams writes that "the refrain is still sung [1974] throughout the West Indies." - BS

Last updated in version 4.0

File: WIS011A

---

Grouchy Bill

DESCRIPTION: "Yes, I know Bill was grouchy, I know he was sometimes tough, Still... He had p'ints what was good enough." When the crew is called to break a logjam on the Brule, a young man is caught out on the river. Bill sets out to rescue him; both die

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1943 (Menominee Herald-Leader, according to Beck-TheyKnewPaulBunyan)

KEYWORDS: logger rescue death river

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

- Beck-TheyKnewPaulBunyan, pp. 156-161, "Grouchy Bill" (1 text)
- Beck-LoreOfTheLumberCamps 86, "Grouchy Bill" (1 text)

Roud #6511

CROSS-REFERENCES:

- cf. "Jim Bludsoe" (theme of a dead rescuer)

NOTES [23 words]: Beck doesn't say so, but this feels to me like it was inspired by "Jim Bludsoe," although it sounds as if it was based on a real event. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2

File: BBun156

---

Ground for the Floor (I)

DESCRIPTION: At day's end, the singer (a shepherd) makes his way home, where he sits content. He praises the cottage, though he has "nothing but ground for my floor." He sleeps well, rising cheerfully to his work and playing his pipe; he has no high ambitions

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1813 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(2066))

KEYWORDS: home farming work music nonballad sheep shepherd worker

FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond,South))

REFERENCES (2 citations):

- Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 153, "Ground for the Floor" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 423)
- Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 250, "Ground for the Floor" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #1269

RECORDINGS:

- George Maynard, "The Sun Being Set" (on Maynard1); "Ground for the Floor" (on Voice20)
Ground for the Floor (II)

DESCRIPTION: The singer has "a neat little cottage with ground for the floor" surrounded by brambles and thorns. He is happy with his dog and gun, a three-legged stool, a fire on the ground, bed of straw, and one guinea in the pocket of his only suit.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1813 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(3660))

KEYWORDS: home nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs, pp. 96-97, "Ground for the Floor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1269

NOTES [43 words]: The description is from broadside Bodleian Harding B 11(3660). Roud assigns the same number to this and "Ground for the Floor" ("The sun being set"); while they are about the same general subject and share a single phrase, I don't see how they are related. - BS

Ground Hog

DESCRIPTION: A family goes ground hog hunting, catches one, cooks and eats it with great enjoyment. Almost anything can happen in the process as verses float in and out.

AUTHOR: unknown (credited on the Norris recording to Harold Gray)

EARLIEST DATE: 1911

KEYWORDS: hunting food humorous animal family

FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE,So)

REFERENCES (23 citations):
Randolph 413, "The Ground-Hog Song" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 221, "The Ground Hog" (3 texts plus a fragment and indirect mention of 2 more)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 221, "Ground Hog" (5 tunes plus text excerpts)
Wyman/Brockway-LonesomeSongs-KentuckyMountains-Vol1, p. 30, "The Ground Hog" (1 text, 1 tune)
Richardson/Spaeth-AmericanMountainSongs, pp. 92-93, "Groun' Hawg" (1 text, 1 tune)
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 123, "Groundhog" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-FolkSongUSA 8, "Ground Hog" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 131, "Groundhog" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 271-274, "Groun' Hog" (1 text, 1 tune)
Botkin-TreasuryOfAmericanFolklore, pp. 893-895, "Groun' Hog" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 231, "The Ground Hog" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henry-SongsSungInTheSouthernAppalachians, pp. 5-6, "Ground Hog" (1 text)
Cox-FolkSongsSouth 176, "Ground Hog Song" (1 text)
Grounding of the Cabot Strait, The

DESCRIPTION: Cabot Strait leaves Sydney for Port aux Basques and runs aground off Cape Ray. Local people "row out in their dories through the bitter wind and snow" and rescue the passengers and crew. The Cabot Strait is "out" and awaiting repairs.

AUTHOR: Martha Osmond (source: Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports and Osmond recording)

EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports)

KEYWORDS: rescue sea ship shore storm wreck

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Jan 17, 1957 - The ferry Cabot Strait ran aground during a blinding snowstorm at Grand Bay near Port Aux Basques, Newfoundland (per Guigné, UP dispatch "52 [12 passengers and 39 crew [??]] Taken Safely Off Grounded Ferry" in The Niagara Falls Gazette (Niagara Falls, Jan 18, 1957), p. 11).

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 156-157, "The Grounding of the Cabot Strait" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #25335

RECORDINGS:

Martha Osmond, "The Grounding of the Cabot" (on NFAGuigné01)

File: Guig156

---

Grouse, Grouse, Grouse

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, the Army and the Aviation section Is all shot to Hell, so they say." The soldier complains of his officers, and notes that they do the same, "'Cause they think the only thing we do is grouse." But at least they fight; generals stay safe in the rear

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Niles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe)

KEYWORDS: war food

FOUND IN:
Groves of Blackpool, The

DESCRIPTION: "Now de war, dearest Nancy, is ended." The Cork City Militia return home to a grand reception and local brew. Their band plays "Boyne Water" and "Croppies Lie Down." It's good to be back among the tanners and glue-boilers "in de Groves of de Pool"

AUTHOR: Richard Alfred Milliken (1767-1816) (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

EARLIEST DATE: 1839 (Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)

KEYWORDS: rebellion drink music soldier home

NOTES [227 words]: The text mimics the local accent by replacing "th" by "d" with occasional other translations ("because" becomes "bekase," "pretty" becomes "purty," "murder" becomes "murther," "educated" becomes "educated," ....).

Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815: "A song from the loyalist side ... commemorates the activities of the North Cork Militia who became notorious, during the period when Wexford was under martial law, for the enthusiasm and brutality with which they carried out their duties." Moylan quotes Sparling's caracterization (from Irish Minstrelsy p. 504): "In 1798 Milliken was unenviably notorious for 'zeal and efficiency' as a yeoman."

Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland: "The Cork Militia were especially Orange. They suffered severely in the Rebellion of 1798...."

Croker believes the last verse - a toast to the tanners and glue-boilers "in de Groves of de Pool" - is the work of John Lander rather than "honest Dick Millikin." - BS

According to the brief biography in Kathleen Hoagland, editor, One Thousand Years of Irish Poetry (New York, 1947), p. 791, Milliken (or Millikin, as she spells it) lived and died in Cork; she gives his death date as 1815. He is known almost exclusively for his poem "The Groves of Blarney," which if nothing else had quite a vogue in the broadside press; see its entry. In this index, see also "The River Lee." - RBW

File: Moy1061

Groves of Blarney

DESCRIPTION: "The groves of Blarney they are so charming." The flowers, "grand walks," "the stone" and statues are described. No commander can compare with Lady Jeffers. If the singer were a poet like Homer "in every feature that I'd make it shine"

AUTHOR: probably Richard Alfred Milliken (1767-1816) (see Notes)

EARLIEST DATE: 1800 (1798-1799 probable date written, printed copies in Cork by 1800, according to Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)

KEYWORDS: nonballad lyric

NOTES [227 words]: The text mimics the local accent by replacing "th" by "d" with occasional other translations ("because" becomes "bekase," "pretty" becomes "purty," "murder" becomes "murther," "educated" becomes "educated," ....).

Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815: "A song from the loyalist side ... commemorates the activities of the North Cork Militia who became notorious, during the period when Wexford was under martial law, for the enthusiasm and brutality with which they carried out their duties." Moylan quotes Sparling's caracterization (from Irish Minstrelsy p. 504): "In 1798 Milliken was unenviably notorious for 'zeal and efficiency' as a yeoman."

Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland: "The Cork Militia were especially Orange. They suffered severely in the Rebellion of 1798...."

Croker believes the last verse - a toast to the tanners and glue-boilers "in de Groves of de Pool" - is the work of John Lander rather than "honest Dick Millikin." - BS

According to the brief biography in Kathleen Hoagland, editor, One Thousand Years of Irish Poetry (New York, 1947), p. 791, Milliken (or Millikin, as she spells it) lived and died in Cork; she gives his death date as 1815. He is known almost exclusively for his poem "The Groves of Blarney," which if nothing else had quite a vogue in the broadside press; see its entry. In this index, see also "The River Lee." - RBW

File: Moy1061

Roud #V668

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(4035), "Groves of Blarney" ("The groves of Blarney, they are so charming") , J.O. Bebbington (Manchester), 1855-1858; also Harding B 11(2095), 2806 b.11(161), Harding B 18(223), "Groves of Blarney"

LOCSinging, sb10145b, "The Groves of Blarney", H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Last Rose of Summer" (tune, per Hoagland)
cf. "Castle Hyde" (tune and theme, per Hoagland)
cf. "The Plains of Drishane" (theme: extravagant praise of Cork)
cf. "Castle Hyde" (theme: extravagant praise of Cork)
cf. "The Groves of Glanmire" (theme: extravagant praise of Cork)

SAME TUNE:
Our Ulysses ("A new Song of this great Ulysses," by John Ross Dix) (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, pp. 121-122)

NOTES [353 words]: H. Halliday Sparling's _Irish Minstrelsy_ (London, 1888), pp. 437-438, 505, "The Groves of Blarney" makes the attribution to Milliken. [Granger's Index to Poetry accepts this identification, but notes at least one version with an additional stanza by Francis Sylvester Mahony, for whom see "Bells of Shandon"; the attribution in Granger's appears to be based on Hoagland. She adds that "Millikin at a party declared he could write a piece of absurdity which would surpass 'Castle Hyde....' The Groves of Blarney was the result...." Other poems by Millikin in this index include "The Groves of Blackpool" and "The River Lee." - RBW].

See Yorke p. 60 for Father Prout's "There is a stone there ..." verse 6.

Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland, quoting the memoir prefixed to Poetical Fragments of the late Richard Alfred Millikin[1823]: "During the Rebellion, several verses were, in the heat of party [Croker: an electioneering dinner], added to this song, particularly those alluding to the mean descent of a certain noble lord [Croker: Lord Domoughmore (then Lord Hutchinson)]; but they were not the production of the original author, who, incapable of scurrility or personal enmity to those with whom he differed in opinion, scorned such puerile malice." Croker makes the added verse "'Tis there's the kitchen hangs many a flitch in ... All blood relations to my Lord Donoughmore"; Croker notes that, in The Reliques of Father Prout [Rev Francis Sylvester Mahony (1804-1866)] that verse is replaced by "There is a stone there, that whoever kisses .... "may clamber to a lady's chamber, Or become a member of parliament....

The Jeffrey/Jeffers/Jeffares family were Protestants granted lands previously owned by Catholic Irish. In County Cork they took over Blarney Castle (source: The Jeffrey Family site). Kissing the Blarney Stone, on the top story of the castle tower, is supposed to give the gift of eloquence.

Broadside LOCSinging sb10145b: H. De Marsan dating per Studying Nineteenth-Century Popular Song by Paul Charosh in American Music, Winter 1997, Vol 15.4, Table 1, available at FindArticles site. - BS

_Last updated in version 6.1_

File: OCon033

Groves of Glanmire, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer "come to this country a stranger" and, in his travels, has found "none to equal Glanmire." He lists the fine groves, the Bride Valley, the salmon fishing, hare hunting, "the finest of oak, lime and larch" and working mills.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1978 (OCanainn-SongsOfCork)

KEYWORDS: travel commerce fishing hunting nonballad lyric

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
OCanainn-SongsOfCork, pp. 90-91, "The Groves of Glanmire" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Groves of Blarney" (theme: extravagant praise of Cork) and references there

NOTES [131 words]: This is more moderate in praise of local places than "Castle Hyde" and "Dear Mallow, Adieu," and fairly close in spirit to "The Town of Passage" (!). On the other hand it is just one more of the family of songs that has spawned so many parodies around Cork. See, for example, "The Groves of Blarney," "The Plains of Drishane," "Darling Neddeen," "The Town of Passage" (II and III) and "The Praise of Kinsale." Or maybe this is just too subtle a parody for me to understand; it does end with a strange line that of all the mills working "there is one making silverspring starch." Silverspring Starch Company is/was in Glanmire (according to an entry on the Limerick City Council site 2/13/2006).

OCanainn-SongsOfCork: "Glanmire [is] some four miles from Cork city, on the Dublin Road." - BS

File: 0Can090

Gruig Hill

DESCRIPTION: The singer goes out to take the air, and sees a beautiful girl who lives near Gruig Hill. He describes her beauty at length. They go to her home; her family greets him kindly. He sets out for his home, hoping to marry her

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: love beauty drink

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
    Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H626, p. 465, "Gruig Hill" (1 text, 1 tune)
    Roud #18996
    File: HHH626

Gruver Meadows

DESCRIPTION: "My name is Gruver Meadows, my name I'll never deny, I've done a cruel murder and in prison I must die." Meadows has murdered his wife and Standon Dean. A claim of insanity is no help. He kisses his children and prepares to die

AUTHOR: unknown (perhaps influenced by Andrew Jenkins)

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (recording, Andrew Jenkins)

KEYWORDS: husband wife homicide execution farewell

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
    Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 210-211, "Gruver Meadows" (1 text)
    Roud #22283

RECORDINGS:
    Andrew Jenkins (as "Gooby Jenkins"), "Gruver Meadows" (Okeh 45115, 1927)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
    cf. "Charles Guiteau" [Laws E11] (tune & meter) and references there

File: CAFS1210

Gude Wallace [Child 157]

DESCRIPTION: Wallace meets a woman washing at a well. She says 15 Englishmen who seek him are at the inn. He says he'd go there if he had any money; she gives him some. He goes, disguised, vanquishes the 15, calls for food, is set upon by 15 more and defeats them too.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1768?

KEYWORDS: fight outlaw money food disguise

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
    1286 - Death of Alexander III of Scotland
    1290 - Death of his granddaughter Margaret "Maid of Norway"
    1292 - Edward I of England declares John Balliol king of Scotland
    1296 - Edward deposes John Balliol
    1297 - William Wallace, the Guardian of Scotland, defeats the English at Stirling Bridge
    1298 - Edward defeats Wallace at Falkirk. Wallace forced into hiding
    1305 - Capture and execution of Wallace (August 23)
    1306 - Robert Bruce declares himself king of Scotland
    1307 - Death of Edward I
1314 - Battle of Bannockburn. Robert Bruce defeats Edward II of England and regains Scottish independence
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (10 citations):
Child 157, "Gude Wallace" (9 texts, 1 tune) {Bronson's #2}
Bronson 157, "Gude Wallace" (2 versions)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 157, "Gude Wallace" (2 versions: #1, #2)
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 96, "A Sang o Gude Wallace" (1 text)
Chambers-ScottishBallads, pp. 8-12, "The Gude Wallace" (1 text)
Barry/Eckstorm/Smyth-BritishBalladsFromMaine pp. 465-466, "Gude Wallace" (notes plus part of Child G and a fragment of Child A)
Flanders-AncientBalladsTraditionallySungInNewEngland3, pp. 133-134, "Gude Wallace" (1 fragment, which mentions Wallace but otherwise has little resemblance to the Child ballad; it may be unrelated)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 433-435, "Gude Wallace" (1 text)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads, pp. 233-237, "The Gude Wallace" (2 texts)
DT, GUDWALL*

Roud #75
NOTES [2570 words]: Chambers, a composite of Buchan's "Ballads of the North of Scotland" and "Gleanings of Scarce Old Ballads" and a text in Johnson's Museum is the source for Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads [Robert Chambers, The Scottish Ballads (Edinburgh: William Tait, 1829 ("Digitized by Microsoft")), footnote p. 12]. The first half of Chambers/Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads is the Buchan text at Child 157H. - BS

William Wallace is one of the most famous figures in Scottish history, but surprisingly little is known of him. Prior to the reign of John Balliol, he was invisible; we don't even know his birth date, though many think he was born around 1272 (Magnusson, p. 133). And, ironically for a man known for being a Scottish patriot, his name means "William the Welshman," and being from Lanark, he probably was of Welsh descent (CraigieEtAl, p. 103).

As Keen puts it on pp. 66-67, "Considering the impact which his career made on the imagination of his countrymen, we know remarkably little historical detail of the life of William Wallace. The date of his birth is unknown. He came of a family of small landowners whose estates were in Ayrshire, and who seem to have been of Welsh origin. Nothing certain is known of him until after the outbreak of war between England and Scotland in 1296. In 1297... he slew the sheriff of Lanark, according to tradition to avenge the death of his beloved, Marion Bradfute, the heiress of Lamington, who had been executed by the English for sheltering her outlawed lover. This deed made him immediately a hero in the eyes of the common people.... He soon found himself at the head of a powerful irregular force. It was his genius that converted this undisciplined horde into an army of foot soldiers."

King Alexander III of Scotland had died in 1286, with his only heir being his granddaughter, Margaret Maid of Norway. But she in turn died in 1290 -- without heirs, not surprisingly, since she was only eight years old. (For background on this, see the notes to "Sir Patrick Spens" [Child 58]). There was no other obvious heir -- not only had Alexander III had no other children, but his father Alexander II had no other descendants, nor his grandfather William the Lion. Thus the heir would presumably be sought among the descendants of William's younger brother David Earl of Huntingon, or among William's and David's sisters, meaning that, if they were in the same generation as Alexander III, they would be third cousins of the dead king. (There is a convenient genealogy of this on page 301 of Oram, although it has an error in the genealogy of William the Lion's older brother Malcolm the Maiden.)

Alexander had been on good terms with Edward I, the King of England at the time, and Edward had already been interfering in Scottish affairs even before Margaret died (Prestwich, pp. 359-364). With her dead, Scotland faced a real succession crisis as perhaps as many as sixteen claimants came forward (Oram, p. 113). Most of them could be set aside, but the claims of John Balliol and Robert Bruce the Competitor (the grandfather of King Robert I Bruce) were strong -- Balliol was the grandson of David of Huntington's eldest daughter, and Bruce the son of the second daughter. Edward was given the right to determine the heir to the Scottish throne. He conducted a long investigation and decided (correctly, by modern reckoning) that Balliol deserved the throne (Prestwich, pp. 366-368). But Edward also decided that Balliol was his vassal, and answered to Edward, and would do just what Edward told him. From the moment Balliol took the crown, Edward insisted on hearing legal cases over his head (Prestwich, pp. 370-371).

Prestwich notes on p. 371 that Balliol -- his father's fourth son -- had not expected to be a great magnate, let alone a king; he had no training for the role he had entered into. He probably wasn't as ineffective as he came to be portrayed (Oram, p. 112); Scots chroniclers portrayed him in the worst possible light because they wanted to glorify Robert Bruce, and English looked down on him because he failed to defeat Edward I. But he certainly wasn't imperious enough to face Edward I in a contest of self-importance.

There is a genuine debate over just how much homage the King of Scots owed the King of England. Warren, pp. 177-179, studied what records there are and suggests that the most reasonable opinion is that the Scottish kings owed homage for Lothian (plus their lands in England), but nothing else in Scotland. Of course, this was before Henry II took forced homage from William the Lion -- and then Richard I sold back the claim. For a ridiculously low price, too -- 10,000 marks, or 6,667 pounds (McLynn, p. 122). Scotland was poor, but that still was only a year or so of Scottish revenue. Only a monomaniac would have sold Scotland so cheaply. But Richard did it. Richard's sale, it seems to me (as to most Scots) should have freed Scotland from any obligation at all (although Prestwich, p. 374, thinks Edward had a claim). But even Prestwich agrees that Edward's demands were too extreme.

The Scots called Balliol the "Toom Tabard" (empty coat) because he wouldn't stand up to Edward -- but even Balliol eventually suffered more abuse than he could take and went into what Edward regarded as rebellion (this came when Edward demanded that Balliol perform feudal service in France; Prestwich, p. 372). The Scots, unwilling to comply and needing help, concluded what would come to be known as the "Auld Alliance" with France. Edward deposed Balliol and declared himself in charge (Oram, pp. 114-115). This was typical Edward; Balliol reportedly had been willing to turn over his kingship to Edward in return for an English earldom, but Edward the Inflexible turned that down flat (Prestwich, p. 473), and even went so far as to publicly tear the coat of arms from Balliol's clothes (Prestwich, pp. 473-474 -- another reason for the "Toom Tabard" name). Balliol ended up living on his estates in France, hoping for French help which never came (Oram, p. 115) -- although his son would later claim the Scottish throne, ironically with the support of the English King Edward III. It's not even absolutely sure when Balliol died; it was probably 1313.

Edward's attempt at a takeover was so complete, he even set up a new administration in Berwick, abandoning Edinburgh (Prestwich, p. 474). He gave control of the country to Earl Warrene, who as it turned out did not want to do the job (Prestwich, p. 477).

It was in 1296 that Balliol was deposed. A sort of conspiracy by the nobility of Scotland collapsed instantly as Edward overran the country. Edward thought he had won (Prestwich, p. 476). It didn't take long to prove him wrong. In a sort of People's Revolt, Wallace rose to defend Scotland from Edward's attempts to take over the country. His rebellion apparently started quietly enough: He got into a brawl with some of Edward's soldiers who were at Lanark, and had to flee. A woman (possibly his wife) who helped him escape was tortured and killed; Wallace responded by killing a local English officer (Fry/Fry; p. 78; MacLean, p. 37).

In other times, Wallace might have been called simply an outlaw. But with Scotland an occupied nation, he could call himself a freedom fighter. He declared himself a supporter of John Balliol and raised a rebellion.

The higher nobility of Scotland was almost universally indifferent. They weren't happy with Edward I, but they had made terms with him, even if at sword point, and weren't willing to risk more fighting. (The fact that a lot of them had estates in England was a major factor in this.) But Wallace was able to gather a band of small landowners and minor knights. And he picked a good time: The French had recently declared that Edward I's province of Gascony was forfeited to them, so Edward was spending his time in Flanders and other places trying to get Gascony back. He wasn't paying attention to Scotland -- except to try to extract money from it, which obviously made him even less popular (Prestwich, p. 476).

In 1297, Wallace's troops met an English army at Stirling Bridge, the last place it was possible to cross the Forth without boats. The English under the Earl of Surrey started to cross the bridge in the presence of Wallace's army (Magnusson, pp. 135-138), and of course he destroyed the portion across the bridge and won a major victory -- Cook, p. 91, says the bridge broke under the fleeing English, though Magnusson, p. 139, makes the more reasonable suggestion that Surrey ordered it destroyed to protect his remaining troops.

It was not a complete victory for the Scots; Wallace's chief lieutenant Andrew de Moray was mortally wounded in the battle (Magnusson, p. 139), and many English garrisons held out. But the Scots had shown they could still fight -- an immense psychological boost. As a result, Wallace became a Guardian of Scotland, and obviously respectable (Mitchison, p. 43). People even called him "William the Conqueror" (McNamee, p. 22).

But Stirling Bridge had been fought while Edward I was away campaigning against France. He came rushing back, assembled an army, and himself led it -- the first time he had actually led an army in battle in more than thirty years (Prestwich, p. 479).

Edward's campaign was not really very well-organized; he had supply problems (Prestwich, pp.
Wallace in Scotland. This ballad seems to be another example of that; Child notes that the incident just as Robin Hood in England gathered wells and churches and trees named after him, so did notes how many alleged Wallace relics there are around Scotland -- most notably a Wallace Oak, little better. Scotland's National Wallace Museum has an artifact called (almost certainly falsely) ells tall, or 83 inches=6'11" or 2.1 meters (Magnusson, p. 133). The other late Scottish sources are Blind Harry also makes Wallace larger than life -- literally; Harry says that he was two and a quarter such as are found in this ballad.

The fictional Wallace described by Blind Harry is the sort of person who would have adventures bunch of Robin Hood-like adventures (Keen, p. 74, who notes the utter improbability of it all -- since Robin was a genuine outlaw but Wallace was a royal servant). The most that can be said is that accuracy is even slighter," while noting that it is very long) is largely hagiographic, giving Wallace a Blind Harry's poem (of which Keen says on p. 69, "Its literary merit is slight, and its historical contains "no attempt to picture the historic Wallace." Kunitz/Haycraft, pp. 259-260, hint that Blind Harry didn't even write "Wallace," since it contains Latin allusions a blind man would be unlikely to know. They suggest that John Ramsey, who copied the only manuscript in 1488, may have had a hand in the composition. They declare that it Wallace betrayed and captured in 1305 (by Scots, no less; Prestwich, p. 503), subjected to a kangaroo trial in England (the charge was treason, even though he had never taken an oath to Edward I, and the trial, according to Magnusson, p. 155, consisted simply of a recitation of the charges followed by conviction and sentence; Edward I, that alleged paragon of justice, did not so much as allow a statement by the defence), and executed with torture (Fry/Fry, p. 79). Edward's justification for drawing and quartering Wallace was that the Scot hadn't fought according to the rules of chivalry (Prestwich, p. 503). Portions of his body were gibbeted at various sites around England Wallace's brother John Wallace was apparently captured the next year (Prestwich, p. 510). That much is (probably) fact -- and it's about all the fact we have. Edward I had used black propaganda about Wallace, circulating horror stories about his behavior (Prestwich, p. 512). Once he was in custody, Edward tried to blot out Wallace's memory and leave no relics (hence the treason indictment and the destruction of Wallace's body, according to Magnusson, pp. 157-158), and even the histories sponsored by the Bruces and the Stuarts tried to ignore him (Magnusson, pp. 162-163), just as they tried to blacken John Balliol (Oram, p. 112). Wallace, after all, made Robert Bruce look inconsistent; Bruce's ancestors had competed against John Balliol, and Bruce himself had worked with the English as recently as 1301 (Prestwich, p. 496) -- as Earl of Huntingdon, he was one of those guys with estates on both sides of the border. It was only later that Wallace became a true national hero, meaning that his legend was created after the facts were almost completely lost -- e.g. it is believed that Blind Harry wrote his "Wallace" in the reign of James IV, almost two centuries after Wallace's death (Keen, p. 69). Kunitz/Haycraft, pp. 259-260, hint that Blind Harry didn't even write "Wallace," since it contains Latin allusions a blind man would be unlikely to know. They suggest that John Ramsey, who copied the only manuscript in 1488, may have had a hand in the composition. They declare that it contains "no attempt to picture the historic Wallace.

Blind Harry's poem (of which Keen says on p. 69, "Its literary merit is slight, and its historical accuracy is even slighter," while noting that it is very long) is largely hagiographic, giving Wallace a bunch of Robin Hood-like adventures (Keen, p. 74, who notes the utter improbability of it all -- since Robin was a genuine outlaw but Wallace was a royal servant). The most that can be said is that the fictional Wallace described by Blind Harry is the sort of person who would have adventures such as are found in this ballad. Blind Harry also makes Wallace larger than life -- literally; Harry says that he was two and a quarter ells tall, or 83 inches=6'11" or 2.1 meters (Magnusson, p. 133). The other late Scottish sources are little better. Scotland's National Wallace Museum has an artifact called (almost certainly falsely) Wallace's Sword; it is 1.7 meters long, or 5'7" (Magnusson, p. 126). Magnusson, pp. 146-147 also notes how many alleged Wallace relics there are around Scotland -- most notably a Wallace Oak, but just as Robin Hood in England gathered wells and churches and trees named after him, so did Wallace in Scotland. This ballad seems to be another example of that; Child notes that the incident is found in Blind Harry, though I suspect the ultimate inspiration was the tale of Wallace's wife and how her treatment caused him to become an outlaw. Wallace's influence is still being felt today; Magnusson, p. 159, notes that when a referendum was held to re-create a Scottish parliament in the late twentieth century, the date chosen for the referendum was September 11, 1997 -- the seven hundredth anniversary of the Battle of Stirling Bridge. - RBW

Bibliography

- Cook: E. Thornton Cook, Their Majesties of Scotland, John Murray, 1928
- Fry/Fry: Peter and Fiona Somerset Fry, The History of Scotland, 1982 (I use the 1995 Barnes & Noble edition)
- Kunitz/Haycraft: Stanley J. Kunitz and Howard Haycraft, Editors, British Authors Before 1800: A Biographical Dictionary, H. W. Wilson, 1952 (I use the fourth printing of 1965)
- MacLean: Fitzroy Maclean, A Concise History of Scotland, Beekman House, 1970

Last updated in version 4.1
File: C157

Gudeman, Ye're a Drunken Carle

DESCRIPTION: Dialog in which the husband and wife continue a twenty year fight about his drinking. She concedes she'll take a drink for a cure. They agree to end the fight and share the pitcher from now on.

AUTHOR: Alexander Boswell (1775-1822) (source: Ford)
EARLIEST DATE: 1803 (Boswell)

LONG DESCRIPTION: She: you're a drunk, confused, ne'er-do-weel. He: You're a scold and a cow that would be a bull. She: I spin to clothe you and you waste it on drink. He: You like a drink yourself. She: Perhaps only to cure the cholic. He: You don't hesitate to take a cholic when it brings a drink; but we've fought for twenty years so let's stop now. She: I'm wrong; we're too feeble to fight longer. He: You're right; from now on we'll share the pitcher between us.

KEYWORDS: accusation drink dialog humorous husband wife bargaining

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig/Duncan8 1870, "Hech, Goodman, You're a Drunken Carle" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: [Alexander Boswell], Songs Chiefly in the Scottish Dialect (Edinburgh, 1803 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 5-7, "East Nuik o' Fife" ("Auld gudeman, ye're a drunken carle, drunken carle") [see note]
Robert Ford, editor, Vagabond Songs and Ballads of Scotland [second series] (Paisley, 1901 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 126-127, "Gudeman, Ye're a Drucken Carle"
Roud #13496

CROSS-REFERENCES:
ct. "East Nuik o' Fife" (tune, per Ford)

NOTES [46 words]: Boswell prints each song with the title "Song" and, under that -- as if the title -- the name of the tune. This song is printed with the apparent title "East Neuk o' Fife," Ford makes it clear that Boswell had written new words to the old fiddle tune, "East Neuk o' Fife." - BS

 Guess I'll Eat Some Worms

DESCRIPTION: "Nobody (likes/loves) me, Everybody hates me, Going to the garden To eat worms." The rest of the song may describe the means by which one consumes the invertebrates or list the reasons why the singer is disliked (assuming it isn't obvious)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1947 (Opie & Opie)

KEYWORDS: animal food

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, pp.138-139, "Guess I'll Eat Some Worms" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, EATWORMS

ADDITIONAL: Peter and Iona Opie, _I Saw Esau: Traditional Rhymes of Youth_, #137, "(Nobody Loves Me)" (1 text)
Roud #12764

Guid Coat o' Blue, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer's wife buys him a good coat against the winter. "Nae mair will I dread the cauld blasts o' Ben Ledi." He ridicules those who, in pride, prefer new fashions to such a coat. "We fret over taxes ... but daft silly pride is the warst tax o' ony"

AUTHOR: John Paterson (source: _Whistle-Binkie_)

EARLIEST DATE: 1843 (_Whistle-Binkie_)

KEYWORDS: pride clothes nonballad wife

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig/Duncan3 660, "The Guid Coat o' Blue" (2 texts, 1 tune)

Roud #6087

Guid Guid Wife, The

DESCRIPTION: "To hae a wife, and rule a wife, Taks a wise wise man." The singer lists the penalties and injuries a man with a bad wife will suffer, and the benefits to a man with a good wife. A man with a good wife "gets gear eneuch"; a bad wife brings "care eneuch"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (Ord-BothySongsAndBallads)

KEYWORDS: marriage hardtimes warning nonballad husband wife

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 154, "A Guid, Guid Wife" (1 text)
Guid Nicht an' Joy Be Wi' You A'

DESCRIPTION: As the singer prepares to leave the gathering, he declares, "Guid nicht, an' joy be wi' you a', Since it is sae that I maun gang." He praises those with whom he has been drinking, has a last drink of his own, and starts on the long voyage home

AUTHOR: Words: John Imlah/Music: James B. Allan ?

EARLIEST DATE: before 1825 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 25(762)); there is a probable reference from 1804 (see NOTES)

KEYWORDS: drink home friend nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
- Greig/Duncan 1530, "Good Nicht an' Joy Be Wi' You A'" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 373-374, "Guid Nicht an' Joy Be Wi' You A'" (1 text)

ADDITIONAL: John Imlah, May Flowers (London, 1827 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 131-132, "Guid Night! an' Joy Be Wi' You A'!"

Roud #3936

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Harding B 25(762), "Good Night, and Joy Be With You All" ("All the money e'er I had, I spent it in good company"), W., Armstrong (Liverpool), 1820-1824

SAME TUNE:
- On the Murder of Hamilton (A Scotch Ballad) ("Oh! wo betire ye, Aaron Burr!") (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 179)

NOTES [227 words]: An argument could easily be made that "Guid Nicht an' Joy Be Wi' You A'" and "The Parting Glass" are the same song. Two verses often show up in both songs: "All the money e'er I had, I spent it in good company, And all the harm that e'er I did, I hope excused I will be, And what I've done for want of wit, to my memory I can't recall, So fill us up a parting glass -- good night and joy be with you all," and "If I had money for to spend, And leisure time to set a while, There is a fair maid in this town, that surely has me heart beguile: Her rosy cheeks - and her ruby lips I own she has my heart enthrall'd; Then fill to me the parting glass, Good night - and joy be with you all." The difference is in the remaining verses. "The Parting Glass" is concerned with a lover missed; "Guid Night, and Joy Be With You all" is about leaving a party, or emigrating, or dying, and leaving good friends behind. - BS

Although we have not found a clear version of this song that can be dated earlier than 1820, there is a strong hint that it dates from 1804 or earlier. The song "On the Murder of Hamilton," cited in the SAME TUNE field, is said to have used the tune "Good night, and joy be wi' ye a'!" -- presumably this. This can't be dated, either, but Aaron Burr killed Alexander Hamilton on July 11, 1804, so presumably the song was written not long after. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.5

Guide Me, Oh Thou Great Jehovah

DESCRIPTION: "Guide me, O Thou great Jehovah, Pilgrim though this barren land; I am weak, but Thou art mighty.... Bread of heaven, feed me till I want no more." The singer asks to be guided by the pillar of fire and to be taken safely to Canaan

AUTHOR: Words: William Williams (1717-1791) and others?

EARLIEST DATE: 1745 (words translated, according to the Methodist Hymnal)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
- Ritchie-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 48, "Guide Me, Oh Thou Great Jehovah" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 286, "Guide Me, O Thou Great Jehovah" (1 text, 1 tune)

ADDITIONAL: Charles Johnson, One Hundred and One Famous Hymns (Hallberg, 1982), pp. 94-95, "Guide Me, Oh Thou Great Jehovah" (1 text, 1 tune)

John Julian, editor, _A Dictionary of Hymnology_, 1892; second edition 1907 (I use the 1957 Dover edition in two volumes), pp. 77-78, "Arglwydd arwain trwy’r anialwch" (1 Welsh plus 2 English texts)

Roud #7103
NOTES [976 words]: There seems to be some confusion about the origin of this hymn. With the exception of H. S. Perkins, The Climax (White, Smith & Co., 1893?, p. 199, where it is given the name "Morrill" and credited to W. L. Woodcock), every source I checked credits at least some of the words to William Williams (who, according to McKim, p. 282, was known as "the 'Sweet Singer of Wales' and 'the Isaac Watts of Wales'"). Johnson thinks him the original and sole composer; Granger's Index to Poetry supports this. But the hymnals I checked all consider it a translation of the Welsh "Arglwyydd arwain trwy'r Anialwch," with Peter Williams (1722-1796) responsible for some of the translation. Reynolds, p. 81, also mentions a possibility that John Williams, son of William, had some role in shaping the text.

Perhaps the most authoritative statement is from Julian, p. 77:
Arglwyydd arwain trwy'r Anialwch. W. Williams.... This was published in the 1st ed. of the author's Alleluia, Bristol, 1745, in 5 stanzas of 6 lines... [The Welsh text, titled "Nerth i fyned trwy'r Anialwch," follows.] The first translation of a part of this hymn into English was by Peter Williams in his Hymns on Various Subjects (vii.). Together with The Novice Instructed: Being an abstract of a letter written to a friend. By the Rev. P. Williams, Carmarthen, 1771, Printed for the Author.... [A three stanza text, "Hymn V, Praying for Strength," follows.] These stanzas are a translation of stanzas 1, iii, v. W. Williams himself adopted the translation of stanza i, translated stanzas iii. and iv. into English, added a fourth stanza, and printed them in a leaflet as follows:
A Favorite Hymn sung by Lady Huntington's Young Collegians.
Printed by the desire of many Christian friends.
Lord, give it thy blessing.
[The standard text follows.] This leaflet was undated but was c. 1772." Julian also notes many divergences in the printed texts, and says that the translations of the poem into other languages are all based on the English, not the Welsh.

The confusion about the words is nothing to the tune, though. Three different books give three different melodies. Johnson lists his as by Thomas Hastings (1784-1872). A Lutheran hymnal I checked claims a tune written by George W. Warren in 1884. A different Lutheran production, the 1926 The Parish School Hymnal, puts it to "Pilgrim" by J. P. Ohl (1859). A Methodist hymnal sets it to John Hughes's "Cwm Rhonda," probably best known as the tune for "God of Grace and God of Glory"; this is also the tune cited on p. 201 of McKim. Reynolds, pp. 81, 342-343, also has it to "Cwm Rhonda," and says that author John Hughes lived in Wales 1873-1932. (A Mormon hymnal also uses "Cwm Rhonda, without listing the tune name on the page, but changes the lyrics to begin "Guide US, O thou great Jehovah, GUIDE US TO THE PROMISED land; WE ARE weak, etc.) All of these tunes are different. So is Jean Ritchie's; hers is unattributed.

The earliest printing in my possession, in H. S. Perkins, H. J. Danforth, and E. V. DeGraff, The Song Wave, American Book Company, 1882, pp. 196-197, does not credit the lyrics but says the tune is "from Flotow." With no explanation of who or what a Flotow is. Perkins, in another book, The Climax, has multiple versions. That on p. 201 he calls "Martha" and lists as "Arr. from FLOTOW by H.S.P." But on p. 199 he has it to the tune "Morrill" credited to W. L. Woodcock. The imagery of the song is strongly reminiscent of the Exodus -- e.g. in Exodus 16:4 God promises "bread from heaven" (the manna which the Israelites ate until they settled in Canaan). The Israelites are led by a pillar of fire at night (Exodus 13:21, etc.) There are no crystal fountains in Exodus, or anywhere in the Hebrew Bible, but the idea may have been inspired by the various references to water from a rock.

There is one other Exodus-inspired reference in the song, which is, however, an error. The name "Jehovah" is found in the King James translation of Exodus 6:9 as the (personal) name of God. Unfortunately, that's not the correct name of God, which is written . The proper English consonants are not JHVH but YHVH, and the vowels are simply wrong. Jews eventually came to consider it profane to read the name of God (hence the Greek Bible consistently renders the name YHWH by , Kyrios, the Lord, and English versions follow suit for the most part; the King James Bible has only half a dozen exceptions, but Exodus 6:9 is one of them).

To remind scripture readers not to pronounce the name of God (which was pretty definitely pronounced YAHVEH or YAHWEH), the Jews eventually started writing the consonants YHWH with the vowels of "adonai," the word for "Lord." What this was supposed to mean was, "When you see YHWH, read 'adonai." But the translators of the King James Bible took it literally, and applied the vowels of "adonai" to the consonants of "YHWH" and so produced the barbarism "Jehovah." To be sure, neither Williams would be likely to care about Jewish practice, or even Christian practice; Reynolds, p. 462, describes Peter as having been converted by George Whitefield as a boy, ordained in 1744 -- and promptly driven from the Episcopal Church. He became a "Calvinistic Methodist," but was expelled from that denomination for heresy. Eventually he founded his own congregation -- independent and presumably heretical. Reynolds, p. 464, describes William as having originally intended a career in medicine, then gone into the ministry -- but, having become a deacon, he refused ordination and quit the Church of England and became an itinerant preacher. He is alleged to have written 800 Welsh hymns and 100 English hymns; this is the only one of any note. - RBW

Bibliography

- Julian: John Julian, editor, A Dictionary of Hymnology, 1892; second edition 1907 (I use the 1957 Dover edition in two volumes)

Guillannée, La (La Gui-Annee)

DESCRIPTION: A (new year's) revel song, in which the singers demand pork-chine, or else the daughter of the house. Guillannee is mistletoe. In English this becomes "La Gui-Annee"; the singers declare "We've come to ask for mistletoe on this last day of the old year."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety); according to Mcintosh-FolkSongsAndSingingGamesofIllinoisOzarks, a version was copyrighted by Mrs. Charles P. Johnson in that same year

KEYWORDS: foreign language nonballad party father children

FOUND IN: US (MW, So) Canada (Ont)

REFERENCES (5 citations):

Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 515-516, "La Guignolee (La Gaie-Annee)" (1 text, 1 tune)

Botkin-TreasuryMississippiRiverFolklore, p. 584, "La Guillannee" (1 text, 1 tune)

Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes, p. 10, "La Guillannee" (1 text + translation, 1 tune)

Mcintosh-FolkSongsAndSingingGamesofIllinoisOzarks, pp. 3-7, "La Gui-Annee" (1 text, 1 tune)

McNeil-SouthernMountainFolksong, p. 34, "(La Guignolee)" (1 text + translation)

RECORDINGS:

Bloomsdale Singers, "La Guignolee" (KSGM 11279-A, n.d., prob. 1950s)

Prairie Durocher [sic] Singers, "La Guignolee" (KSGM 11279-B, n.d., prob. 1950s)

NOTES [35 words]: Botkin offers extensive notes on the Guillannee custom. He quotes Carriere: "The name Guillannée is to be explained as an abbreviation of gui de l'année, gui de la nouvelle année, New Year's Mistletoe." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: BMRF584

Guinea Negro Song

DESCRIPTION: A slave's complaint of his capture: (lines from various versions): "The Englie man he [s]teal me, And carry me to Birgimy [Virginee]. The American man he [s]teal me, And give me pretty red coatee, And make me fence rail toatee."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: slave work commerce theft clothes

FOUND IN: US (SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 472, "Guinea Negro Song" (2 short texts, probably from the same informant)

Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 472, "Guinea Negro Song" (2 tunes plus text excerpts)
NOTES [82 words]: Brown's notes indicate that this came from an ex-slave to whom this originally happened. White objected that this was chronologically impossible. It isn't, quite -- while the English banned the slave trade in the early nineteenth century, and even the Americans eventually stopped it, an Englishman with no morals might have taken a slave and slipped him through American customs.

But I think White is right and the informant didn't suffer this fate. The dialect is just a little too cutesy. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.1

File: Br3472

Guise o' Tough, The

DESCRIPTION: "I gaed up to Alford for to get a fee, I fell in wi' Jamie Broon and wi' him I did agree." He eats till all are amazed. He works, finds his plow bad, replaces it, damages the replacement. He lists the other characters in the bothy

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (Greig/Duncan3)

KEYWORDS: work farming moniker money food

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #4, pp. 2-3, "Guise o' Tough"; "Folk-Song in Buchan," pp. 48-49, ("I gaed up to Alford for to get a fee") (2 texts)
Greig/Duncan3 378, "The Guise o' Tough" (3 texts, 2 tunes)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 236-237, "The Guise o' Tough" (1 text)

Roud #3800

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Geordie Williamson" (some verses are shared)
cf. "Drumhendie" (tune, per Greig/Duncan3)

NOTES [73 words]: Greig #21, p 2: "While no doubt several of the expressions used in this class of song are more or less common property, it will be seen that 'Guise o' Tough' must have borrowed a good deal from 'South Ythsie.'

Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv, of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Guise (378) is at coordinate (h1-2,v6) on that map [near Alford, roughly 24 miles W of Aberdeen]. - BS

Last updated in version 2.6

File: Ord236

Guise of Tyrie, The

DESCRIPTION: "O wat ye how the guise [happening] began ... at Tyrie." Lady Tyrie and the laird o' Glack plotted to instal "bobbing Andrew [Cant]." The "muirland wives" give Lady Tyrie "ill tauk," saying she and her husband will go to hell; they tear her veil.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1828 (Buchan)

KEYWORDS: political religious clergy

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast "Folk-Song in Buchan," p. 33, ("Oh wat ye hoo the guise began") (1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan3 681, "The Guise o' Tyrie" (1 fragment)

ADDITIONAL: Peter Buchan, Ancient Ballads and Songs of the North of Scotland (Edinburgh, 1875 (reprint of 1828 edition ("Digitized by Google"))), Vol I, pp. 260-261, 312-313, "The Guise of Tyrie"

William Walker, The Bards of Bon-Accord 1375-1860 (Aberdeen, 1887 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 70-72, ("O wat ye how the guise began")

Roud #6106

NOTES [163 words]: Walker explains that the subject is the appointment of Andrew Cant by Alexander Forbes, Lord Pitsligo, to the pulpit of a new church in Pitsligo. The appointment of this "apostle of the Covenant" "was received with considerable disapprobation in the adjoining parish of Tyrie ... and out of this discontent sprang the song." Lady Fraser supported Cant "but how Elphinstone of Glack got mixed up in it, we have been unable to explain."
Buchan says of Cant that he was "a character much celebrated in the history of the troubles of Scotland in the seventeenth century. His induction to the pastoral charge of the parish of Tyrie, of which he was the first Protestant minister, having given great offence to the rabble, one of them composed the Guise of Tyrie. Mr Cant being an avowed enemy to all, and everything that savoured of Popery ... [Buchan concludes with an example]."
For more about the Scottish Covenanters see the notes to "The Bonnie House o Airlie" [Child 199].
- BS

Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD3681

Gull Cove

DESCRIPTION: If you commit to fishing Gull Cove and "if the codfish fades away as it often done before, We could lose our year in Gull Cove, where the stormy winds do blow." The song describes a bad year and all the boats that lose the year.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou)
KEYWORDS: fishing hardtimes
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 48, "Gull Cove" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #26473
RECORDINGS:
Anita Best, "Gull Cove" (on NFABest01)
NOTES [21 words]: Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou: Gull Cove is near Branch, St Mary's Bay [at the southwest corner of the Avalon Peninsula]. - BS

Last updated in version 6.1
File: LeBe948

Gull Decoy, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer reports, "I take no books, nor I read no papers, I have no money to spend or lose." He reads other people's newspapers, sets his dogs on orphans, and has no company but the gulls he whistles to, hence the name "the Gull Decoy."

AUTHOR: Larry Gorman (1846-1917)
EARLIEST DATE: 1947 (Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi)
KEYWORDS: hardheartedness dog bird money
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 255-256, "The Gull Decoy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 85-86,246, "The Gull Decoy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-LarryGorman, pp. 30-34, "The Gull Decoy" (1 text plus some fragments, 3 tunes)
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 19, "The Gull Decoy" (1 text plus some fragments, 1 tune)

ST Doe255 (Partial)
Roud #9193
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Mick Riley" (characters)
NOTES [174 words]: Manny and Wilson state that "This song was made up by Larry Gorman before he left Prince Edward Island in 1873.... Tradition says that the ballad was a satire on Larry's own uncle, and that Larry was 'run off the Island' for it." It is also said that later Larry was 'run out of Miramichi' for the mostly unprintable Donahue's Spree, so he went to Maine. These are only two of the many fables that cluster round the memory of that imp, Larry, the terror and delight of the logging camps for over fifty years." - RBW

Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland: There is a discussion alleging that "Gorman was convinced Riley [the subject of the song names himself Patrick Riley] had cheated him out of some wages, but whatever he may have done, that poet dug up all the dirt he could find on him, and (according to some people I've talked to) what he couldn't find he invented.... [We] have enough here to show the kind of character assassination local satire could involve, and few employed it
Gum Shellac

DESCRIPTION: Singer cites real and fictitious accomplishments of tinkers with gum shellac: making Pharaoh’s coffins; building Birmingham; fighting the Romans, Spanish, Danes, Black and Tans, and Cromwell; making cannons in Hungary; teaching Nero to play.

AUTHOR: "Pops" Johnny Connors (source: Jim Carroll’s notes to IRTravellers01)

EARLIEST DATE: 1985 (IRTravellers01)

KEYWORDS: humorous political talltale tinker

FOUND IN: Ireland

Roud #2508

RECORDINGS:
"Pops" Johnny Connors, "Gum Shellac" (on IRTravellers01)

NOTES [65 words]: Jim Carroll's notes to IRTravellers01: "Gum shellac is a paste formed by chewing bread, a technique used by unscrupulous tinsmiths to supposedly repair leaks in pots and pans. When polished, it gives the appearance of a proper repair but, if the vessel is filled with water, the paste quickly disintegrates, giving the perpetrator of the quick just enough time to escape with his payment." - BS

File: RcGumShe

Gum Tree Canoe, The

DESCRIPTION: "On Tom Big Bee river so bright I was born In a hut made of husks of the tall yellow corn, And there I first met with my Julia so true And I rowed her about in my gum tree canoe." The singer describes his work -- and the happy times courting in the canoe

AUTHOR: S.S. Steele ?

EARLIEST DATE: 1847 (broadside, LOCsheet sm1847 420770)

KEYWORDS: courting home love river

FOUND IN: US(MA,Ro,SE,So) Australia

REFERENCES (13 citations):
Thompson-APioneerSongster 69, "My Gum Tree Canoe" (1 text)
Randolph 787, "The Gum Tree Canoe" (1 text)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 269, "The Gumtree Canoe" (1 short text plus a fragment)
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #69, "My Gum Tree Canoe" (1 text)
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, p. 473, "The Gumtree Canoe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia, pp. 172-173, "The Gumtree Canoe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fahey-PintPotAndBilby, pp. 22-23, "The Gum-Tree Canoe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 34, "On the Tombigbee River So Bright" (1 text plus a part of the S. S. Steel version) Heart-Songs, pp. 250-251, "Tom-Big-Bee River" (1 text, 1 tune) cf. Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan, p. 481, "My Gum Tree Canoe" (source notes only)
DT, GUMTREE GUMTREE2 TOMBIGBE

ADDITIONAL: Henry Randall Waite, _Carmina Collegensia: A Complete Collection of the Songs of the American Colleges_ first edition 1868, expanded edition, Oliver Ditson, 1876, p. 21, "Tom-bigbee River" (1 text. 1 tune)

Roud #759

BROADSIDES:
LOCsheet, sm1847 420770, "The Gum Tree Canoe," G. P. Reed (Boston), 1847; also sm1885 18094, "The Gum Tree Canoe" (tune) [both attribute words to S.S. Steele and music to A.F. Winnemore]
LOCsinging, as104990, "The Gum Tree Canoe," J. Andrews (New York), 1853-1859; also as104980, as105000, as201240, "The Gum Tree Canoe"
NLScotland, RB.m.143(143), "The Gum-Tree Canoe," Poet's Box (Dundee), c.1890
CROSS-REFERENCES:
  cf. "The Indian Hunter" (theme)
  cf. "Give Me a Hut" (tune)

SAME TUNE:
  Our Gallant Yankee Boys! ("From the banks of the Potomac, our army so grand") (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets p. 120)
  Hurrah for Jeff. Davis ("Our country now calls, we'll up and away") (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, p. 190)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
  On Tom Big Bee River
  The Tombigbee River

NOTES [99 words]: The 1847 sheet music credits this to S. S. Steele, an attribution accepted by Patterson/Fahey/Seal -- but we all know that such attributions were less than utterly reliable. It is reported to have been sung by "A.F. WINNEMORE and his band of VIRGINIA SERENADERS." It does seem likely that the song did originate with this group; the earliest outside collection that I know of comes from 1909. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0
File: R787

Gun Canecutter, The

DESCRIPTION: The canecutter is struggling to survive, and "there's no joy for me, I got to cook my own tea, So I think I will marry a slutter." He needs her to help him with his work, so he hopes she'll "look into me eyes, she'll fall for me lies..."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1968
KEYWORDS: wife work Australia
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, pp. 106-107, "The Gun Canecutter" (1 text, 1 tune)

File: MA106

Gunner and Boatswain, The

DESCRIPTION: Boatswain and gunner meet. They agree that the next man they meet will decide which is most evil. It is the devil; he weighs them in his balance and says "I think you are... both for me"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1856 (Thompson-APioneerSongster)
KEYWORDS: accusation wager humorous sailor Devil
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Thompson-APioneerSongster 89, "The Gunner and Boatswain" (1 text)
Roud #2852

NOTES [149 words]: Thompson-APioneerSongster: "This humorous ballad is so fragmentary that the story is not clear. It seems to be a trial of the honesty of two men, with the devil acting as judge." Possibly it belongs among the tests of truth with [TMI] Motif group H 226, ordeal by balance [Defendant is weighed twice. He must be lighter second time; Stith Thompson, Motif-Index of Folk-Literature revised and enlarged by Stith Thompson, Indiana University Press, 1955 (Motif-Index of Folk-Literature on CDROM, Intelex Corporation, 1992). TMI example is from Penzer, The Pentamerone of Giambittista Basile, V.iii [?] 195 n.3]" While checking Thompson I looked for applicable motifs for "scales" or "judgment" or "balance" or "wager" and found no hits. Moreover, I looked at Hans-Jorg Uther, The Types of International Folktales, Suomalainen Tiedekatemia, 2004 and found no relevant tale types either. - BS

Last updated in version 2.8
File: TPS089
Gunner's Lament, The

DESCRIPTION: "We're poor little lambs who have lost our way, Ba, Ba, Ba, We're former artillery now infantry, Ba, Ba, Ba." The former artillerymen lament being forced to fight as foot soldiers, and suggest they "drown our sorrows with many beers."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead)

KEYWORDS: derivative soldier technology drink

FOUND IN: Canada

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead, p. 109, "The Gunner's Lament" (1 text, tune referenced)

Roud #29400

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Whiffenpoof Song" (tune)

NOTES [520 words]: This is (I think) intended to be dryly funny, but it is nonetheless a genuine complaint. Artillerymen required skills not needed by infantrymen (e.g., mathematics), and so were more highly trained and more elite; the Canadians tested soldiers for intelligence and ability to decide who would be in services such as artillery and anti-aircraft units (Bercuson, p. 240). To be downgraded to infantry status was a genuine demotion. (This apart from the fact that it probably put them in more danger.)

Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead attributes the events of this song to a reorganization of the forces in Italy. This appears to be correct, but a slightly different perspective is possible. The Italian campaign was very difficult, because of all of Italy's mountains and rivers. The 5th Canadian Armored Division, one of the most experienced Canadian units, was reorganized to take this into account. Bercuson, pp. 189-190, records:

"The 1st Canadian Corps would have a two-month hiatus... time enough for the 5th Canadian Armoured Division to continue tank-infantry training and to be reorganized to take into account lessons learned by British and Canadians in the Italian campaign thus far.... The most important of these lessons was that the armoured divisions were too poor in infantry to be effective in a country that did not lend itself to mobile warfare. It was therefore decided to add a second infantry brigade (the 12th) to the armoured division, formed from reconnaissance, motorized, and anti-aircraft regiments converted to infantry. The reason was simple: shortages of trained infantry were already becoming apparent only weeks after the Normandy landing. The Canadian Army staff... based on the war in the North African desert, and greatly underestimated infantry casualties and overestimated how many other troops it would need when allocating manpower resources [the North African war was more mobile and had less trench fighting than in Italy]. This would become a serious problem by the fall of 1944 and would precipitate a general manpower crisis in the Canadian Army."

The reorganization worked; the 5th Armored, after going back into line, managed to create a break in the German "Gothic Line." But the Allies had no troops in position to exploit it (Bercuson, pp. 190-191).

The same problem of not having enough infantrymen would afflict the Normandy invasion, and result in a very unpopular change in the Canadian conscription laws that contributed to the eventual downfall of the Mackenzie King governing coalition (Bercuson, p. 241; Tillman, p. 130).

For the British, the problem was if anything even worse; their estimates of casualties in various branches of the service tended to be inaccurate (d'Este, pp. 254-255 and repeatedly elsewhere in chapter 15, "The Manpower Dilemma"), and they had no men to spare. 94% of adult British males were in some sort of war service by 1944 (d'Ester, p. 252). Manpower shortages in Normandy were so severe that whole divisions were being organized out of existence and the troops reallocated to other forces or trained for other roles (d'Este, p. 262).

Bibliography

- D’Este: Carlo D’Este, Decision in Normandy, 1983 (I use the 1991 Harper Perennial paperback)

Last updated in version 5.2
File: Hopk109
Gunpowder Tea

DESCRIPTION: "Johnny Bull and many more, Soon they say are coming o'er And as soon as they're on shore, They must have tea. So Polly, put the kettle on...." "They'll want it strong... Sweetened well with sugar of lead." Their hides we will completely tan...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1966 (Huntington-FolksongsFromMarthasVineyard)
KEYWORDS: patriotic battle drink
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Huntington-FolksongsFromMarthasVineyard, pp. 58-59, "Gunpowder Tea" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, p. 52, "Gunpowder Tea" (1 text)
Roud #11622
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Molly Put the Kettle On (Polly Put the Kettle On)" (tune)
NOTES [162 words]: This piece, to the tune of "Polly Put the Kettle On," is clever in its ability to link ordinary objects to fighting. The reference is clearly to the Boston Tea Party, but there is no certainty that it dates from the Revolutionary War as opposed to the War of 1812.
"Gunpowder Tea" is a genuine product, still sold today; I found several Internet advertisements. "Sugar of lead" is lead acetate, a poisonous but widely-used sweetener; the Romans used it extensively (since they had limited access to genuine sugar); see John Emsley, Nature's Building Blocks: An A-Z Guide to the Elements, Corrected edition, Oxford, 2003, pp. 227-228. Sometimes, vintners didn't even bother with sugar of lead; they just put a lead bullet in their bottles. This had a double advantage: If the wine was going to vinegar (acetic acid), the lead would soak up the vinegar and convert it to sugar of lead. Thus it removed a bad taste and added a sweet taste. Too bad about the poison.... - RBW
Last updated in version 5.2
File: CAFS1052

Gustave Ohr

DESCRIPTION: Gustave Ohr recalls his quiet youth and how he fell in with (George) Mann's evil company. Eventually they attacked a man in a sugar camp. Ohr was taken and condemned to die. He concludes by thanking various legal officers for their kindness

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio)
KEYWORDS: execution gallows-confession
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1879 - George Mann and Gustave Ohr attack, rob, and beat to death John Whatmaugh. They are condemned to death later in the year
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 121, "Story of Gustave Ohr" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 402-403, "Story of Gustave Ohr" (1 text)
ST E121 (Full)
Roud #4099
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Charles Guiteau" [Laws E11] (tune & meter) and references there
cf. "Charles Mann" (meter, subject)
NOTES [13 words]: As "The Story of Gustave Ohr," this song is item dE39 in Laws's Appendix II. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.7
File: E121

Gutboard Blues

DESCRIPTION: "I'm off down the road ev're morning 'bout eight, Going down to the job, and it's a job I hate. Hackin', cuttin' mutton gut on a contract basis." The sheep guts never stop coming; it's hot and smelly and he's splashed with acid, with the "gutboard blues"

AUTHOR: Dave Jordan
Guy Fawkes

DESCRIPTION: "I'll tell a doleful tragedy; Guy Fawkes, the prince of sinisters, Who once blew up the House of Lords... That is, he would have blown them up... If only they had let him." Fawkes is betrayed, captured, and executed, and now they repeat it every year

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: c. 1826 (Universal Songster, George, and Robert Cruikshank, John Fairburn, Routledge and Jones, Publisher)

KEYWORDS: political execution nobility memorial death

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

1605 - The botched "Gunpowder Plot"

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

DT, GUYFAWKE

Roud #4974

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Bow Wow Wow" (tune) and references there

cf. "The Fifth of November (Guy Fawkes Song)" (subject)

SAME TUNE:

The Court of Momus ("What a shabby Government you have; Some ground should be selected") (by Charles R. Thatcher) (Hoskins-GoldfieldBalladeer-LifeAndTimes-Charles-R-Thatcher, pp. 162-164)

NOTES [235 words]: Earlier versions of the Index described this as written by Thomas Hudson (per Moffat, English Songs of the Georgian Period). Conrad Bladey informs me that this was "a party piece at vauxhall gardens and thus associated with" Hudson, but is older. There are texts from the 1820s. Personally, I wonder if there isn't a still earlier version adapted to produce the George IV text.

The "Gunpowder Plot" was an attempt by a group of Catholics to regain control of united Britain. The plan was to blow up the British houses of parliament (along with King James I and VI) on November 5, 1605. To this end, several dozen barrels of gunpowder were stashed below the parliament building.

It was in this secret chamber that Guy Fawkes, who was largely responsible for the execution of the plot, was captured on November 4. He and many fellow conspirators were eventually rounded up and hung. Guy Fawkes Day has since been an annual occasion for fireworks and celebrations in England: "Please to remember The fifth of November: Gunpowder Treason and Plot!"

There is, however, some reason to believe that the government was in on the secret all along, and let the plot proceed as far as it did in an attempt to strengthen its shaky position.

This is one of several political pieces set to the tune "Bow Wow Wow" -- a song which hardly exists in its own right, but which makes it very easy to sustain a line of patter. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

Guy Reed [Laws C9]

DESCRIPTION: Guy Reed is trying to break up a log jam when he is drowned. His funeral is given a full description; he is buried in his family plot

AUTHOR: Joe Scott (a friend of Reed's)
Guysboro Song

DESCRIPTION: The singer loses his parents and sister. He is treated badly by an uncle. He loses a captain's job at Canso: he drinks the freight and drowns 2 boys. On his other ship only 4 of 13 survive. He breaks his good knee in the Indies and decides to retire.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1932 (Creighton-NovaScotia)

KEYWORDS: drink hardtimes injury wreck orphan sailor

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 119, "Guysboro Song" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST CrNS119 (Partial)

Roud #1824

NOTES [49 words]: This song is item dD48 in Laws's Appendix II. The ballad mentions Guysborough County as the singer's birthplace, and Canso Strait and Ingonish as locales of his "hardships and pain." Guysborough County and Canso are on the south coast of Nova Scotia; Ingonish is on the Cape Breton coast. - BS

File: CrNS119

Gwan Round, Rabbit

DESCRIPTION: A call and response song: "My dog treed a rabbit, My dog treed a rabbit. Now watch that critter sittin' on that log, Now watch that critter how he do that dog."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1942

KEYWORDS: animal dog hunting

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Botkin-TreasuryOfSouthernFolklore, p. 707, "Gwan Round, Rabbit" (1 text, 1 tune)

File: BSoF707
Gwine 'Round Dis Mountain

DESCRIPTION: "Gwin 'round dis mountain, To geirgia I'm a gwine. Setting by that pretty little gal Broke dis heart o' mine. Car'lina gal can't you remember me... Someday you'll remember me."
"Gonna hew dis mountain down, my love... 'Fore the sun goes down."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)
KEYWORDS: love courting work hardtimes
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 741, "Gwine 'Round Dis Mountain" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #16311
NOTES [28 words]: The description is based on the Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 text. Roud lumps this with "Goin' from the Cotton Fields," but I don't see the link. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.1
File: BrS5741

Gwine Follow

DESCRIPTION: "Titty (i.e. Sister) Mary, you know I gwine follow, I gwine follow, gwine follow. Brother William, you know I gwine follow, For to do my Father('s) will. 'Tis well and good I am coming here tonight (x3) For to do my Father('s) will."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 18, "Gwine Follow" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11841
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Buffalo Gals" (partial form)
NOTES [24 words]: Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates note that the second part of this is essentially "Buffalo Gals," but the first part is independent. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.4
File: AWG018B

Gwine Tell-a My Lord, Daniel

DESCRIPTION: "Gwine tell-a my Lord, Daniel, How y'all talk about me, Daniel. I love-a coffee; you love-a tea; You go 'round town and talk about me. Gwine tell-a my Lord, Daniel, How y'all talk about me, Daniel."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida)
KEYWORDS: nonballad drink
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #98, "Gwine Tell-a My Lord, Daniel" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Roud #5059
NOTES [35 words]: Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida regards this as a very-much-worn-down spiritual. This is certainly possible, but I don't think we can even call it a religious song based on the tiny amount of material remaining. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.8
File: Morr098

Gwineter Harness in de Mornin' Soon

DESCRIPTION: "Baby, baby, you don't know; De way you treat me I bound to go. Gwineter
Gypsy Laddie, The [Child 200]

DESCRIPTION: A lord comes home to find his lady "gone with the gypsy laddie." He saddles his fastest horse to follow her. He finds her and bids her come home; she will not return, preferring the cold ground and the gypsy's company to her lord's wealth and fine bed

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1720 (Ebsworth); 1740 (Ramsay)
KEYWORDS: elopement Gypsy marriage abandonment husband wife
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber,Bord,High),England(All)) US(Ap,MA,MW,NE,Ro,So,SE,SW) Canada(Mar,Newf,Ont) Ireland
REFERENCES (95 citations):
Child 200, "The Gypsy Laddie" (12 texts)
Bronson 200, "The Gypsy Laddie" (128 versions+2 in addenda)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 200, "The Gypsy Laddie" (10 versions: #2, #4, #8, #21, #42, #71, #73, #83, #101, #120)
Chambers-ScottishBallads, pp. 127-129, "Johnie Faa, the Gypsy Laddie" (1 text)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #110, pp. 1-3, "The Gipsy Laddies" (2 texts plus 1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan2 278, "The Gypsy Laddie" (11 texts, 7 tunes) {A=Bronson's #45, B=#47?, C=#43, D=#44, E=#48, F=#3, G=#88}
Porter/Gower-Jeannie-Robertson-EmergentSingerTransformativeVoice #14, pp. 131-133, "The Gypsy Laddie (Child 200)" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #45.1}
Butterworth/Dawney-PloughboysGlory, p. 14, "Gipsy Laddy O" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 120-122, "The Draggle-tailed Gipsies" (2 texts) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 195; Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 260)
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 61, "The Gypsy Countess" (2 texts)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #81, "The Gipsy Laddie" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #42}
Barry/Eckstorm/Smyth-BritishBalladsFromMaine pp. 269-277, "Gipsy Davy" (4 texts plus 2 fragments and a quoted broadside, 2 tunes) {Bronson's #109, #110}
Flanders-AncientBalladsTraditionallySungInNewEngland3, pp. 193-229, "The Gypsy Laddie" (19 texts plus 6 fragments, 8 tunes) {N=Bronson's #107}
Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 207-209, "Gypsy Daisy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 73-76, "he Gypsy Laddie" (3 texts plus portions of another)
Randolph 27, "The Gypsy Davy" (6 texts plus 2 fragments, 4 tunes) {Randolph's A=Bronson's #100, E=#103, G=#123, H=#40}
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 49-51, "The Gypsy Davy" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 27G) {Bronson's #123}
Abrahams/Riddle-ASingerAndHerSongs, pp. 26-28, "Black Jack Davey" (1 text, 1 tune)
Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol1, pp. 97-98, "Black Jack Davy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 38, "The Blackjack Davy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-1ed, pp. 47-49, "Gypsy Davy" (2 texts, 1 tune) {Bronson's #124}
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, pp. 29-31, "Gypsy Davy" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 156-159, "Black Jack Davy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 21, "The Gypsy Laddie" (1 text plus a fragment, 2 tunes) {Bronson's #77, #98} Neely/Spargo-TalesAndSongsOfSouthernIllinois, pp. 140-141, "The Gypsy Laddie" (1 text, a short mixture of "The Gypsy Laddie" [Child 200] and "Seventeen Come Sunday" [Laws O17])
Brewster-BalladsAndSongsOfIndiana 19, "The Gypsy Laddie" (1 text)
Stout-FolkloreFromIowa 5, p. 11, "The Gypsy Laddie" (1 fragment)
Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends, p. 52, "Harrison Brady" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #128}
Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection, p. 43, "Gypsy Davie" (1 text)
Davis-TraditionalBalladsOfVirginia 37, "The Gypsy Laddie" (7 texts plus a fragment, 3 tunes)
{Bronson's #6, #91, #33}
Davis-MoreTraditionalBalladsOfVirginia 33, pp. 253-261, "The Gypsy Laddie" (5 texts, 2 tunes)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 37, "The Gypsy Laddie" (6 texts plus an excerpt, many of them mixed with "Sixteen Come Sunday"; "D" also partakes of "Devilish Mary")
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 37, "The Gypsy Laddie" (13 excerpts, 13 tunes)
Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 16, "Gypsy Davy" (1 fragment)
Lunsford/Stringfield-30And1FolkSongsFromSouthernMountains, pp. 4-5, "Black Jack Davie" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jones-MinstrelOfTheAppalachians-Bascom-Lamar-Lunsford, pp.199-200, "Black Jack Davy (The Gypsy Laddie)" (1 text, 1 tune) {same source as Bronson's #4, but the transcription is quite different}
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #166, "The Gypsy Laddie" (2 texts, 2 tunes) {Bronson's #13, #12}
Hudson-FolksongsOfMississippi 20, pp. 117-119, "The Gypsy Laddie" (2 texts)
Hudson-FolkTunesFromMississippi 26, "Black Jack David" (1 fragment, 1 tune) {Bronson's #115}
Cambiaire-EastTennesseeWestVirginiaMountainBallads, pp. 59-60, "The Gypsy Laddie (Gypsy Davy)" (1 text)
Shellans-FolkSongsOfTheBlueRidgeMountains, pp. 36-37, "The Radical Gypsy David" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wolfe/Boswell-FolkSongsOfMiddleTennessee 15, pp. 28-30, "The Gypsies (The Gypsy Laddie)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #12, "Gypsy Davy" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #11}
Wells-TheBalladTree, pp. 116-117, "The Gypsy Davy" (1 text, 1 tune) {from the same informant, although not the same session, as Bronson's #8}
Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp. 71-72, "The Gypsy Laddie" (1 fragment, 1 tune) {Bronson's #10}
Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 4, "Gypsy Laddie" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 16, "The Dark-Clothed Gypsy" (2 texts, 1 tune) {Bronson's #50}
Peacock, pp. 194-197, "Gypsy Laddie-O" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Karpeles-FolkSongsFromNewfoundland 17, "The Gypsy Laddie" (3 texts, 4 tunes)
Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario 3, "The Gypsy Daisy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Vikár/Panagapka-SongsNorthWoodsSungByOJAbbott 21, "The Gypsy Daisy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Flanders/Brown-VermontFolkSongsAndBallads, pp. 220-221, "Gypsy Daisy," "Seven Gypsies in a Row" (1 text plus a fragment)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 546-547, "Clayton Boone" (1 text)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 539-543, "The Gypsy Laddie" (4 texts)
Leach-HeritageBookOfBallads, pp. 120-122, "The Gypsy Laddie" (1 text)
Friedman-Viking/PenguinBookOfFolkBallads, p. 105, "The Gypsy Laddie (Johnny Faa)" (2 texts)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 148, "The Gypsy Countess" (1 text)
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 42, "Gypsy Davy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Warner-FolkSongsAndBalladsOfTheEasternSeaboard, pp. 6-7, "Blackjack Davy" (1 text)
Grigson-PenguinBookOfBallads 18, "The Gypsy Laddie" (1 text)
Turney-StoneFiddle, p. 110, "The Seven Yellow Gipsies" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp-OneHundredEnglishFolksongs 5, "The Wraggle Taggle Gipsies, O!" (1 text, 1 tune)
Niles-BalladBookOfJohnJacobNiles 52, "The Gypsy Laddie" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ritchie-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 80, "The Gypsy Laddie" (1 text, 1 tune) {cf.
Bronson's #38, a separate, somewhat different transcription

Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 33, "The Gypsy Laddie" (5 texts plus 5 fragments, 10 tunes) {Bronson's #35, #21, #17, #26, #20, #97, #33, #104, #36, #34}

Sharp/Karpeles-EightyEnglishFolkSongs 22, "Gypsy Davy (The Gypsy Laddie" (1 text, 1 tune -- a composite version) {Bronson's #26}

Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 18, "The Gypsy Laddie" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #73}

Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 311, "Gypsy Davy" (1 fragment, 1 tune) {Bronson's #99}

Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H124, p. 509, "The Brown-Eyed Gypsies" (1 text, 1 tune)

Hammond-SongsOfBelfast, p. 57, "The Dark-Eyed Gypsy" (1 text, 1 tune)

Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 17, "The Dark-Eyed Gypsy" (1 text, 1 tune)

Dunson/Raim/Asch-AnthologyOfAmericanFolkMusic, p. 108, "Black Jack David" (1 text, 1 tune)

Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs 76, "Seven Gypsies on Yon Hill" (1 text, 1 tune)

Hammond-Faber-BookOfBallads, p. 72, "The Gypsy Laddie" (1 text)

Cox-FolkSongsSouth 21, "The Gypsy Laddie" (4 texts, 1 tune) {Bronson's #94}

Cox/Hercog/Halpert/Boswell-WVirginia-A, #10A-C, pp. 40-45, "Gypsy Davy", "The Raggle Taggle Gypsies, O", "The Wraggle Taggle Gypsies, O" (3 texts, 2 tunes) {Bronson's #9, #74}

Gainer-Folk-Songs-FromTheWestVirginiaHills, pp. 72-73, "The Gypsy Davy" (1 text, 1 tune)

Ord-Bothy-SongsAndBallads, pp. 411-412, "The Gypsy Laddie" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #60}

Whiting-TraditionalBritishBallads 6, "The Gipsy Laddie" (1 text)

Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads, pp. 268-269, "Johnie Faa" (1 text)

Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 75-78, "The Gypsy Laddie"; "Gyps of David"; "Gypsy Davy (Catskill's)"; "The Gypsy Laddie" (3 texts plus a fragment)

Gilbert-LostChords, p. 35, "The Gypsy Davy" (1 text)

Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex, ZN2567, "There was seven Gipsies all in a gang"

DT 200, GYPDAVYGYPPLADD GYPLADD2 GYPLADD3 GYPBLJK* GYPSYRVR* GYPHARBR* BLCKJACK* BLCKJCK2 BLKJDAV GYPLADY*

Walter de la Mare, _Come Hither_, revised edition, 1928; #83, "The Wraggle Taggle Gipsies" (1 text)

Maud Karpeles, _Folk Songs of Europe_, Oak, 1956, pp. 38-29, "The Wraggle Taggle Gipsies O!" (1 text, 1 tune).

Roud #1

RECORDINGS:

O. J. Abbott, "The Gypsy Daisy" (on Abbott1)

Freeman Bennett, "Gypsy Laddie-O" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]

Cliff Carlisle, "Black Jack David" (Decca 5732, 1939)

Carter Family, "Black Jack David" (Conqueror 9574, 1940; Okeh 06313, 1941)

Dillard Chandler, "Black Jack Daisy" (on Chandler01)

Robert Cinnamond, "Raggle Taggle Gypsies-O" (on IRRCinnamond02)

Debra Cowan, "Dark-Skinned Davey" (on HClargillFamily)

Harry Cox, Jeannie Robertson, Paddy Doran [composite] "The Gypsy Laddie" (on FSB5 [as "The Gypsy Laddie"], FSBBAL2) {cf. Bronson's #42, #45.1}

Mary Jo Davis, "Black Jack Davy" (on FMUSA)

Texas Gladden, "Gypsy Davy" (AFS 5233 A1; on USTGladden01) {Bronson's #29}

Mrs. T. Ghaney, "Roving Gypsy" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

Woody Guthrie, "Gypsy Davy" (AFS, 1941; on LCTreas)
Joe Holmes, "The Dark-Eyed Gipsy" (on IREarlyBallads)
Harry Jackson, "Clayton Boone" (on HJackson1)
Margaret MacArthur, "Gypsy Davy" (on MMacArthur01)
New Lost City Ramblers, "Black Jack David" (on NLCR04); "Black Jack Daisy" (on NLCR14, NLCRCD2)
Maire Aine Ni Dhonnchadha, "The Gypsy-O" (on TradIre01)
Lawrence Older, "Gypsy Davy" (on LOlder01)
Harry Jackson, "Clayton Boone" (on HJackson1)
Jean Ritchie, "Gypsy Laddie" (on JRitchie01) {Bronson's #38}
Jeannie Robertson, "The Gypsy Laddies" (on Voice17)
Pete Seeger, "Gypsy Davy" (on PeteSeeger16)
Warren Smith, "Black Jack David" (Sun 250, mid-1950s)

BROADSIDES:

CROSS-REFERENCES:
\textit{cf.} "The Roving Ploughboy" (theme, lyrics, tune)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Black Jack Davy
The Gypsy Davy
Johnny Faa
Davy Faa
The Wraggle Taggle Gypsy
The Lady and the Gypsy
Harrison Brady
Gypson Davy
Black-Eyed Davy
The Heartless Lady
Egyptian Davio
It Was Late in the Night
When Johnny Came Home
The Gyps of Davy
The Dark-Clothed Gypsy

NOTES [999 words]: Hall, notes to Voice17, re "The Gypsy Laddies": "Francis James Child locates the history behind the ballad to the expulsion of the Gypsies from Scotland by Act of Parliament in 1609, and the abduction by Gypsies of Lady Cassilis (who died in 1642), her subsequent return to her home and the hanging of the Gypsies involved. [ref. Child, IV, pp. 63-5.]

Jeannie Robertson's version on Voice17 follows Child 200C,G in that the Gypsies are hanged in the last verse. - BS

Although the hero of this song is often called "Johnny Faa" or even "Davy Faa," he should not be confused with the hero/villain of "Davy Faa (Remember the Barley Straw)." - RBW

[Silber and Silber mis-identify all their texts] as deriving from "Child 120," which is actually "Robin Hood's Death." - PJS

Also sung by David Hammond, "The Dark-Eyed Gipsy" (on David Hammond, "I Am the Wee Falorie Man: Folk Songs of Ireland," Tradition TCD1052 CD (1997) reissue of Tradition LP TLP 1028 (1959)) Sean O Boyle, notes to David Hammond, "I Am the Wee Falorie Man: Folk Songs of Ireland": "The tune has been known in the O Boyle family for four generations and has never been published."

Ebsworth says of his Roxburghe version: "In White-letter, a single narrow slip, set up by Southerners, probably as a page of some Chap-book 'Garland of Songs' for circulation in the northern counties. Date circa 1720, not earlier" (p. 157). Baring-Gould writes that "The Scottish ballad of 'Johnny Faa' first appeared in Allan Ramsay's 'Tea Table Miscellany,' 1724," but I don't find it there; Ebsworth cites Cunningham's claim for Ramsay 1724 (p. 154), so that is probably the source of Baring-Gould's assertion.

Both Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 61A and Baring-Gould 50 cite James Parsons as the source of a strange version. The texts are different but agree in having a prequel to the usual story: the "lady" of the story is a gypsy girl who reluctantly marries the Earl (possibly against her will) and is recovered by the gypsies. Of the prequel Baring-Gould speculates, "I venture to suggest that the Jacobites took an earlier ballad of a gypsy girl married to an Earl, and adapted it to serve as a libel on Lady Cassilis [the supposed heroine]" (p. xxviii). Baring-Gould, but not his source, split the ballad into two parts "so as to give both melodies."

Martin Graebe points out in a note to the Ballad-L list that "There is, on the Bodley site, a broadside, 'The Gipsy Countess' which is a Victorian parlour version of the seduction which was often sung as a duet (some versions are subtitled 'a celebrated duet'). This has been included by Bellowhead on a recent CD -- and great fun it is too! It is possible that James Parsons knew this song. Baring-Gould had copies of the broadside in his collection but has clearly discounted it as being irrelevant, though he has adopted its title But is this what Parsons was referring to when he told Baring-Gould of an earlier part? And is there a, so far, undiscovered version from which both Parsons' version and the Victorian song are derived?"

The broadside referred to by Martin Graebe is Bodleian, Harding B 11(1312), "The Gipsy Countess, a Celebrated Duet" ("She. Oh, how can a poor gipsy maiden like me"), H. Such (London), 1863-1885; also Harding B 11(666), 2806 c.16(214), "Gipsy Countess". In this duet between "a poor gipsy maiden" and a "noble" man with "lands and proud dwellings," she asks how she can ever hope to be his bride. He answers that "All my heart, all my future, I'll lay at your feet." He asks her to marry and promises never to betray her. He tries to convince her of his sincerity. Finally, they agree to marry.

Child cites Finlay in his research on the Lady Cassilis story, but relegates Finlay's version of the ballad to notes on 200A and 200E. Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads follows Finlay, changing a few words. - BS

Sigrid Rieuwerts, in an essay entitled "The Historical Moorings of 'The Gypsy Laddie': Johnny Faa and Lady Cassilis," printed in Joseph Harris, editor, The Ballad and Oral Literature, Harvard University Press, 1991, notes that Child didn't think there was much history in this ballad, but seems to imply that Child wasn't trying very hard to find it (p. 79f.). He notes on p. 84 a poem written by one "Patrick Chamers" in 1719, in which one "Francy Fa an Egyptian" witched away "The Earle of Duglass Daughter Bessy by name... From her fathers Castle." An interesting coincidence of language, at the least.

On p.p. 89-90, Rieuwerts notes that King James V gave special privileges to one Johnny Faa in 1540. He was even awarded the title of "earl" -- although it wasn't a landed earldom; he was earl of the Roma in Scotland. Still, this made the name "Faa," and "Johnny Faa," very popular, because the Roma wanted the protection they thought the name would bring.

In fact the name was no help. By 1609, the Roma were being persecuted, and a number of men named Fa/Faa/Faw were hanged without proper trial on July 31, 1611 (pp. 90-91); others would follow in coming years. The Fifth Earl of Cassilis participated in some of these trials, so if this ballad is historical, the events of 1611 are the obvious place to start looking for the participants. Rieuwerts on pp. 91-92 notes that Child refers to a condemnation of a Johnny Faa in 1616 -- but adds that Child was wrong; the sentence of death was not carried out.

On p. 93, Rieuwerts says that the woman involved is generally identified as Jean Hamilton (1607-1642), who in 1621 married the sixth Earl of Cassilis. But he admits that nothing in the ballad, except the title "Cassilis," links the contents of the song with Lady Jean. It is noteworthy, however, that in 1630, Earl Cassilis was instructed by the crown to execute certain Roma over whom he had jurisdiction. (p. 94).

After all that analysis, however, Rieuwerts is forced to conclude that he cannot link the ballad to any actual historical events. He thinks (p. 96) that is makes historical sense. But that isn't the same thing. - RBW

Gypsy Maid, The (The Gypsy's Wedding Day) [Laws O4]

DESCRIPTION: The gypsy girl, left to fend for herself, meets a young lawyer who asks her to tell his fortune. She tells him that he has courted many fine ladies, but he is to marry a gypsy. He takes her to his home and marries her

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1845 (broadside, Bodleian Firth b.26(40))

KEYWORDS: prophecy marriage Gypsy

FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW,So) Britain(England(Lond,North,South))
REFERENCES (12 citations):
Laws O4, "The Gypsy Maid (The Gypsy's Wedding Day)"
Randolph 129, "The Gypsy Maid" (1 text)
Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 100, "The Gypsy's Wedding Day" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklife, pp. 177-179, "The Gypsy Maid" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 346, "The Little Gipsy Girl" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 245, "Gipsy Girl" (1 text)
OShaughnessy/Grainger-TwentyOneLincolnshireFolkSongs 9, "The Gipsy's Wedding Day" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #32, "Little Gipsy Girl" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cox-FolkSongsSouth 100, "The Orphan Gypsy Girl" (1 text)
Rorrer-RamblingBlues-LifeAndSongsOfCharliePoole, p. 90, "My Gypsy Girl" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 634-635, "The Oregon Gipsy Girl" (1 text)
DT 469, GYPSGIRL
Roud #229
RECORDINGS:
Horton Barker, "The Gypsy's Wedding Day" (on Barker01)
Charlie Poole and the North Carolina Ramblers, "My Gypsy Girl" (Columbia 15519-D, 1930; on CPoole02)
Jasper Smith, "The Squire and the Gypsy" (on Voice11)
Joseph Taylor, "The Gypsy Girl" (on Voice01)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth b.26(40), "The Gipsey Girl" ("My father was king of the gypsies you know"), J. Pitts (London), 1819-1844; also Firth b.28(37) View 2 of 2, "Gipsey Girl"; Harding B 16(101d), "Gipsy Girl"
Murray, Mu23-y1:046, "The Little Gipsy Girl," James Lindsay Jr. (Glasgow), 19C; also Mu23-y1:117, "The Little Gipsy Girl," unknown, 19C; Mu23-y4:028 [the last a very short version probably edited to fit in a corner of a page]
LOCSinging, as201140, "The Gipsy Girl" ("My father was king of the gipsies you know"), H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Squire and the Gipsy" (theme)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Gypsy Girl
The Little Gypsy Girl
NOTES [237 words]: [Sources such as] Charlie Poole have cleaned this one up. Broadside LOCSinging as201140 reads:
He took me to a house, it was a palace I am sure,
Where ladies were waiting to open the door;
On a bed of soft feathers, where I pleased him so well,
In nine months after his fortune I could tell.
Her father keeps the baby, she gets a pension of twenty pounds a year and "no more shall my gipsy girl ever more rove" but when she's in the neighborhood, she says, "your fortunes I will tell."
The Murray broadsides are all of the same version in which "little gypsy girl" meets "two handsome young squires," goes with one of them, and becomes pregnant; they marry.
Broadside LOCSinging as201140: H. De Marsan dating per Studying Nineteenth-Century Popular Song by Paul Charosh in American Music, Winter 1997, Vol 15.4, Table 1, available at FindArticles site. - BS
This song may, just possibly, have actually encouraged one actual marriage: "Alberta Slim" (Eric Edwards, 1910-2005), the Canadian country singer, had a sideline of reading tea leaves. His daughter, after his death, reports that her father had met her mother when the mother had her tea leaves read. Slim looked at the leaves (and presumably looked at her even more intently), and told her that she was going to marry him. Which, of course, she did.
I don't know that Alberta Slim knew this song, but he did know quite a selection of English folk songs. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.5
File: L004
Gypsy's Warning, The

DESCRIPTION: "Trust him not, oh gentle lady, Though his voice is low and sweet." "Listen to the Gypsy's warning, Gentle lady, trust him not." The Gypsy tells of a girl betrayed; the lady scorns (her). (The sequel may give the man's self-defense and the lady's answer)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1864 (sheet music)

KEYWORDS: Gypsy love warning

FOUND IN: US(MW,Ro,So,SW)

REFERENCES (17 citations):
Randolph 743, "The Gypsy's Warning" (4 texts, 1 tune, the first being the "Gypsy's Warning" proper, the second the "Answer to the Gypsy's Warning," the third being "The Decision in the Gypsy's Warning," and the last an excerpt from a copyrighted piece by Monroe H. Rosenfeld)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 525-527, "The Gypsy's Warning" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 743A)
Arnold-FolkSongsOfAlabama, p. 73, "Gipsy's Warning" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henry-SongsSungInTheSouthernAppalachians, pp. 154-155, "The Gypsy's Warning" (1 text)
Brewster-BalladsAndSongsOfIndiana 55, "The Gypsy's Warning" (1 text plus mention of 1 more); 56, "Answer to the Gypsy's Warning" (1 text)
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, pp. 75-76, "The Gypsy's Warning"-"Do Not Heed Her Warning"-"The Decision" (1 text, consisting of the three parts, 1 tune)
Stout-FolkloreFromIowa 58, pp. 76-79, "The Gypsy's Warning (And Answer)" (3 texts, two being of the "Warning" and one being the "Answer")
Cox-FolkSongsSouth 149, "The Gypsy's Warning" (1 text)
Cox/Hercog/Halpert/Boswell-WVirginia-B, #30, pp. 201-202, "The Gypsy's Warning" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Boette-SingAhipsyDoodle, p. 50, "The Gypsy's Warning" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #60, "The Gypsy's Warning" (1 text, 1 tune); #61, "Answer to the Gypsy's Warning" (1 text)
Finger-FrontierBallads, pp. 116-118, "The Gypsy's Warning" (1 text)
Spaeth-ReadEmAndWeep, pp. 19-21, "Love's Ritornella" (2 texts, 1 tune, with this piece listed as an appendix to the song named) Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #744, p. 49, "The Gypsy's Warning" (1 reference) cf. Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan, p. 479, "The Gypsy's Warning" (source notes only)

DT, GYPWARN*

ADDITIONAL: Aline Waites & Robin Hunter, _The Illustrated Victorian Songbook_, Michael Joseph Ltd., 1984, pp. 82-83, "The Gipsy's Warning" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1764 and 3761 and 6421

RECORDINGS:
Vernon Dalhart, "The Gypsy's Warning" (Perfect 12330, 1927; Romeo 601, 1928) (Brunswick 122, 1927; Supertone S-2011, 1930)
"Gooby" Jenkins, "The Gypsy's Warning" (Okeh 45069, 1926)
Arthur Smith Trio, "The Gypsy's Warning" (Bluebird B-7893, 1938)

NOTES [123 words]: This probably originated as three separate pieces, the original being "The Gypsy's Warning" (Roud #1764) and the sequels being the "Answer to the Gypsy's Warning" (Roud #3761, in which the young man begs the girl "Do not heed her warning") and the "Decision in the Gypsy's Warning" (Roud #6421, in which the girl decides to heed the warning). The three can, however, be sung together, and they are obviously dependent. What is more, the versions have sometimes merged (e.g. in the version in Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin). So I am listing them as one song even though I know they are multiple. The song seems to have been in tradition by 1880; Laura Ingalls Wilder quotes the first part in By the Shores of Silver Lake, chapter 22. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2

File: R743

Gyteside Lass, The

DESCRIPTION: "Aw warn'd ye heven't seen me lass -- her nyem aw winnet menshun." He met her "When aw strampt upon her good, an' the gethors com away," but that did not prevent them courting. He tells of his delight that she will continue to spend time with him
H'Emmer Jane, The

DESCRIPTION: "Now 'tis of a young maiden this story I tell, and of her young lover...." Her love, a ship's captain, sails away and is presumed lost. H'Emmer Jane goes crazy and drowns herself. He finally returns; shown the grave of his beloved, he dies himself.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1941 (Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs)
KEYWORDS: love separation death drowning humorous
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs 50, "The H'Emmer Jane" (1 text, 1 tune)
Blondahl-NewfoundlandersSing, p. 105, "H'Emmer Jane" (1 text, 1 tune)
Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 161-164, "H'emer Jane" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #4425

RECORDINGS:
Omar Blondahl, "The H'emm'r Jane" (on NFOBlondahl03)
Lloyd Soper, "H'emmer Jane" (on NFAGuigné01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. Vilikens and His Dinah (tune, meter and same satirical treatment of story) and references there

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Emmer Jane

NOTES [556 words]: Satire on popular broadsides and ballads of the period that told such melodramatic tales in great seriousness. Lyrics are written in imitation of an exaggerated Newfoundland accent, [e.g.] "On a cold stormy mornin' all down by the sea, H'Emmer Jane sot a-waitin', sot a'waitin' for 'e. On a cold stormy mornin' her body were found, so t'was figgered pretty generally she'd gone crazy and got drowned."
[The] date from a broadside set by Golden Hind Press, Madison NJ, 1941. States that "Emmer Jane is a fold song from the south shore on Newfoundland here printed for the first time." - SL
The dead captain is recognized because he is carrying H'Emmer Jane's handkerchief. If a [broken] ring is a man's token to be kept by a woman then perhaps the woman's token is her handkerchief.
That is true in "Jack Robinson" where Jack reveals himself to his old lover by showing her handkerchief. See also the French ballad "Arthur" [indexed here] where the heroine embroiders Arthur's name on her handkerchief. Maybe the question is: How much credit do we give H'Emmer Jane's author for familiarity with the broadside scene? Is Jane's name a reference to "Crazy Jane" [also indexed here, with allusions to its many parodies]?
H'Emmer Jane's handkerchief is found in the vest-pocket of the Captain's "cold carcass"; in a modern literal (?) reading of "The Suffolk Miracle," the daughter's "holland handkerchief" is found around her dead young man's head [but then there's the counter-example of "The Silvery Tide" in which the murdered Mary is found bound by the murderer's handkerchief].
Soper's 1951 recording includes an introduction by the singer. Soper says "H'emmer Jane is a folk song which comes to us from the northeast coast of Newfoundland. At least, that's what was picked up several years ago by Bob McLeod who worked [I'm not sure about the word 'worked'] for Mr. Gerald Doyle in compiling a couple of books of Newfoundland folk songs."
Soper refers to the line in his text, "with a boatload of shingles our captain sailed away": "As far as we know, this is a Newfoundland folk song. The references are local. The idiom is local. And most of all, the melody [that] is followed ["Vilikens and His Dinah"] is one that has been frequently used in various poems for several Newfoundland folk songs. The only point that causes me to query at the authentication of it as a Newfoundland folk song is one reference there to 'shingles' -- 'a boatload of shingles' -- which would indicate that it might have originated, probably, in Cape Breton because shingles are not a local product, strictly speaking. However, it is now accepted as a Newfoundland folk song, and there's no desire to disown it or let anybody else gain the benefit of the origin of it."
The point about the locality of the tune is not convincing and Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports has a long discussion of the history of the tune as a stage favorite across the English-speaking world and as a common vehicle for poems that could be fit to the meter and tune. In the case of "H'emmer Jane" the last line of each verse is often so long that its words must be clipped and jammed together to fit the tune. - BS
Might the original intent have been to have the last line of the verse peter off into spoken speech? That would account for metrical irregularities. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.0
File: FowM050

Ha Mi Ow-mos En Gun Las (The Octopus)
DESCRIPTION: Cornish. "Ha mi ow-mos en gun las." A riddle: The singer went on the sea and heard the fishes. He found one fish with "nine tails." but none in St Ives or Marazion could capture it. The answer is apparently an octopus
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1698 (source: Deane/Shaw)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage fishing riddle
FOUND IN: Britain(England(West))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
ADDITIONAL: Tony Deane and Tony Shaw _The Folklore of Cornwall_, B. T. Batsford, 1975, p. 80, "(Ha mi ow-mos en gun las')" (1 short Cornish text plus English translation)
File: DeSh090A

Ha, Ha, Ha
DESCRIPTION: Refrain: "Ha, Ha, Ha! Don't you hear me now?/The Black horse calverns are coming...." Verse: "When the war is ended the boys will see their fun/They'll march through the South with their ladies... And I'll raise me some little Union babies"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1917 (Cecil Sharp collection)
LONG DESCRIPTION: Refrain: "Ha, Ha, Ha! Don't you hear me now?/The Black horse calverns are coming/The ladies in the town, they think they're mighty gown/The hoopskirts they are a-flowing/It takes 40 yards of alapac to cover up the hoops/and to cover up the happy land of money." Verse: "When the war is ended the boys will see their fun/They'll march through the South with their ladies/I'll march mine through some Southern Union clime/And I'll raise me some little Union babies"
KEYWORDS: army Civilwar clothes nonballad nonsense children lover soldier
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1861-1865 - American Civil War
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 150, "Ha, Ha, Ha" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #3638
NOTES [6 words]: Eat your heart out, Uncle Dave. - PJS
File: ShAp2150

Haben Aboo an' a Banner
DESCRIPTION: The singer's family members are disreputable (father hanged for sheep stealing, mother burnt as a witch) and the singer himself fucks all comers in various positions for various reasons.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan7)
KEYWORDS: crime execution commerce bawdy nonballad family witch
Habitant d'Saint-Barbe

DESCRIPTION: Cumulative, call and response song: "L'habitant d'Saint-Barb' s'en va t'a Montreal" after six verses, building to "Le bout d'la queue du chien d'l'enfant d'la femm' d'l'habitant de Saint-Barbe..."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1976 (Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage cumulative nonballad

FOUND IN: Canada(Que,Mar)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs 32, "L'Habitant d'Saint-Barbe" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [11 words]: Progression of verses is very similar to "The Wild Man of Borneo." - SL

File: FowL32

Hackler from Grouse Hall, The

DESCRIPTION: Paddy Jack, the Hackler, has fallen on hard times since the Sergeant was assigned Grouse Hall. He jails people on false charges, including drinking, for which he jails the Hackler. But soon Home Rule will sack "Old Balfour's pack"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads)

KEYWORDS: prison drink Ireland humorous police

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 39, "The Hackler from Grouse Hall" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #3035

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Sergeant's Lamentation" (sequel to this ballad)

NOTES [506 words]: "The hackler was a distiller of high quality Poitin in 19th century Ireland" (source: Hearing before Trademark Trial and Appeal Board, US Patent and Trademark Office, January 6, 2000 in re United Distillers plc "On December 16, 1996 United Distillers plc filed an intent-to-use application to register the mark HACKLER on the Principal Register for 'alcoholic beverages, namely, distilled spirits, except Scotch whisky, and liqueurs.'...")

Apparently the more common definition is "one that hackles [to chop up or chop off roughly]; esp: a worker who hackles hemp, flax, or broomcorn." (source: Webster's Third New International Dictionary of the English Language Unabridged, 1976); its this last definition that OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads follows.
OLochlainn notes to "The Hackler from Grouse Hall" and its answer, "The Sergeant's Lamentation," explain the Sergeant's deeds and the references to people named in both songs and happenings in County Cavan. His source for notes is the singer.
The occurrences appear to be during Arthur Balfour's tour as Chief Secretary of Ireland in the late 1880s [1887-1891; his repressive methods earned him the nickname "Bloody Balfour." He made something of a habit of taking political prisoners -- see Robert Kee, The Bold Fenian Men, being Volume III of The Green Flag, p. 111 - RBW]. See for example the reference to the 1888 imprisonment of Father McFadden of Donegal in Derry Prison "for an agrarian speech" (source: Chapters of Dublin History site, Letters and Leaders of my Day Chapter XXII "Parnellism and Crime" (1887-8), by T.M. Healy). I'd guess, no doubt naively, that the issue here is moonshining to defeat high alcohol taxation. - BS
The other possibility for the date is 1902-1905, when Balfour was prime minister in succession to his uncle Lord Salisbury. Gladstone's proposals for Irish Home Rule had of course failed, but the issue never really went away, and the Liberals were increasingly in favor of it in the early twentieth century.
Supporting this dating is the fact that, during the Balfour administration, there was a movement for "tariff reform" -- i.e. lowering of duties within the British Empire, which would have made it easier for the Irish to export to England.
Balfour tried to calm the tariff controversy, but succeeded mostly in turning his party purely protectionist, thus making the Liberals even more popular with the Irish, since they were more likely to favor both Home Rule and Free Trade. So the song might well look forward to the 1906 election which shunted the Conservatives from power.
It appears, incidentally, that "hackler/heckler" has different regional meanings. The agricultural use is typical in Yorkshire; according to Arnold Kellett, The Yorkshire Dictionary of Dialect, Tradition, and Folklore, revised edition, Smith Settle, 2002, p. 79, "heckle" means "to dress flax by combing out and splitting the fibres with a special kind of comb called a heckle (var[jant] of hacke, from O[ld] E[nglish] haecel, related to 'hook')." - RBW
Last updated in version 4.1
File: 0Loc039

Had a Fine Sash
DESCRIPTION: ""Had a fine sash, As fine as silk, Any man that walks with me Calls me white as milk." "I had a little dog, His name was Blue, Put him on the track, He fairly flew." "I had a little pig, I fed him on cheese, I fed him so much His tail fell off."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric)
KEYWORDS: nonsense humorous animal dog food
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 169, "Had a Fine Sash" (1 text)
Roud #11361
NOTES [25 words]: Most of the lyrics here float, but the combination is unique, as is the first verse, so I agree with Roud in filing this as an independent song. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.3
File: Brne169

Had I the Tun Which Bacchus Used
DESCRIPTION: If the singer had Bacchus's wine cask he'd drink all day at no cost. And to avoid drinking alone he'd bring a friend. But since he does not have it, "let's drink like honest men." Let Bacchus have his wine; whisky is more divine.
AUTHOR: Richard Alfred Millikin (1767-1815) (source: Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)
EARLIEST DATE: 1839 (Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)
KEYWORDS: drink nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland, pp. 88-92, "Had I the Tun Which Bacchus Used" (1 text)
NOTES [66 words]: Bacchus (seemingly a Lydian name) is the God more properly known as Dionysus -- who was of course the god of wine and drunkenness -- and also of orgaistic rites; he was accompanied by the satyrs and Maenads (Baccae). He also had fertility aspects, which explains the idea of the bottomless wine vat.
Richard Alfred Millikin is better known as the (probable) author of "The Groves of Blarney." - RBW

Haddie Massa an' Haddie Missie

DESCRIPTION: The singer asks the free men and women going home to Africa to greet those at home for them. Don't cry on your trip home. Tell your mother we are free.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1940 (Elder-FolksongsFromTobago)
KEYWORDS: farewell parting return travel freedom sea ship slavery Africa nonballad
FOUND IN: West Indies(Tobago)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Elder-FolksongsFromTobago 18, "Haddie Massa an' Haddie Missie" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: ElTo018

Hag's Rant, The

DESCRIPTION: Old Susie spins in the corner and asks for her tollies. We have to eat them dry because the cream turned. Hags have a connection with milk and butter. That old crone "some day at a witch stake will burn." "If only old Ireland was free!"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1991 (Tunney-WhereSongsDoThunder)
KEYWORDS: age magic food witch
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Tunney-WhereSongsDoThunder, pp. 28-29, "The Hag's Rant" (1 text)
NOTES [66 words]: Tunney-WhereSongsDoThunder: "tollies" are "potatoes" [though the play on "toll" is interesting - RBW]. Tunney doesn't say so but this may only be a song in Gaelic, which he has translated into "the slave's patter, as you say."
Pure speculation: Potatoes, an old woman, free Ireland: is Suzy just an old lady, or Granuaile or Granu [see notes to "Granuwal" and "The Young Man's Dream"], or both? - BS
File: TST028

Haggertys and Young Mulvanny, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer wanders on a "pleasant evening"; as the sun illuminates the landscape, he sees a beautiful girl crying for "young Mulvanny Who lost his life on the Kipawa stream." She tells how he and the two Haggerty brothers died in a rafting accident
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1966 (Fowke)
KEYWORDS: logger river death lumbering
FOUND IN: Canada(Ont)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fowke-LumberingSongsFromTheNorthernWoods #39, "The Haggertys and Young Mulvanny" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #4559
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Kipawa Stream
File: FowL39

Haggis o' Dunbar, The

DESCRIPTION: "The haggis o' Dunbar": many better, few worse. To make it nice, they put in a peck of lice. To add fat, they put in a scabby cat. Chopped cheese, chickweed, sow's snouts and mugwort: you may get a bit if you're civil.
Hail to the Oak, the Irish Tree!

DESCRIPTION: "The Irish oak ... the kingly forest tree ... sickens where the slave, To power despotic, homage gives ... Its branching green head long defend The Shamrock, Thistle and the Rose. Hail to the oak, the Irish tree, And British hearts ..."

AUTHOR: W. Kertland? (source: Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)

EARLIEST DATE: 1839 (Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)

KEYWORDS: Ireland nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland, pp. 115-117, "Hail to the Oak, the Irish Tree!" (1 text)

NOTES [80 words]: See "The Sprig of Shillelah" for another example of "The Shamrock, Thistle[Scotland] and the Rose[England]" unity theme during and after the Napoleonic wars. Nevertheless, reference to "power despotic" remains. - BS

The unity theme is perhaps best known from its appearance in "The Bonny Bunch of Roses-O" [Laws J5]. I must admit to finding some irony in the Irish calling the oak their tree at a time when the British made "Heart of Oak" almost an alternative national anthem. - RBW

File: CrPS115

Hail, Hail, The Gang's All Here

DESCRIPTION: "Hail, hail, the gang's all here, So what the hell do we care, What the hell do we care? Hail, hail, the gang's all here, So what the hell do we care now?"

AUTHOR: claimed by D. A. Esrom, to a tune by Sir Arthur Sullivan

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Shay); published 1917 according to Wikipedia

KEYWORDS: nonballad

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Shay-BarroomBallads/PiousFriendsDrunkenCompanions, p. 36, "Hail, Hail!" (1 short text)
Colonial-Dames-AmericanWarSongs, pp. 170-171, "Hail, Hail, the Gang's All Here" (1 text)

Roud #9639

NOTES [37 words]: "D. A. Esrom" appears to be a pseudonym of Theodore Morse ("Esrom"="Morse" spelled backward) and his wife Theodora "Dolly" Terris Morse; they wrote a number of hits, but none of them went into tradition that I can tell. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: SBar036B

Hail, Smiling Morn!

DESCRIPTION: "Hail! smiling morn! that tips the hills with gold, Whose rosy fingers ope the gates of day; Who the gay face of nature doth unfold, At whose bright presence darkness flies away."
Hail! Hail! Hail!

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Hail! (x3), I'm going to join the saints above, Hail! (x3), I'm on my journey home." Verses: floaters such as "If you get there before I do, Look out for me, I'm coming too." "Look up yonder what I see, Bright angels coming after me"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1874 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute)

KEYWORDS: floatingverses nonballad religious

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, p. 185, "Hail! Hail! Hail!" (1 text, 1 tune; p. 177 in the 1874 edition)

Roud #15240

NOTES [23 words]: In Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute's verses, every alternate line is "I'm on my journey home." - BS

Last updated in version 4.0

File: Dett185

---

Hail! King of the Jews

DESCRIPTION: "Hail! King of the Jews, Hail! Star of the East, I'm coming to worship thee." "Jesus my Lord, He's has been down here, He went up again, Jesus my Lord, He went up again and He comes no more, Jesus my Lord"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1893 (Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories)

KEYWORDS: nonballad religious Jesus

FOUND IN: West Indies(Bahamas)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories 3, "Hail! King of the Jews" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [102 words]: The description is based on the Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories text. - BS
The mention of Jesus as King of the Jews is fairly common in Christianity -- among others, the Wise Men came to seek "the child who has been born king of the Jews?" (Matt. 2:2); Pilate asked if Jesus was the King of the Jews (Matt. 27:11 and parallels; John 18:33); the soldiers mockingly hail him as King of the Jews (Matt. 27:29 and parallels), and the notice on the cross reads "This is Jesus, the King of the Jews" or similar (Matt. 27:37 and parallels; John 19:19); in John, Pilate even declares Jesus to be the King (John 19:15). - RBW

Last updated in version 4.2

File: Edwa003
Hainan's Waal
DESCRIPTION: The singer prefers a drink from Haining's Well to "liquor or wine or usquebaugh [whisky]." He describes the stream. The quarrymen picnic there. "Beasties" stop there. Wanderers recall it. Let's "hae a fling" to a fiddle there and then sing its praises.
AUTHOR: Frank Gilruth (source: Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast)
EARLIEST DATE: 1911 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: dancing drink fiddle lyric
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #164, p. 1, "Hainan's Waal" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan3 506, "Hainan's Waal" (1 text)
Roud #5991
NOTES [120 words]: Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv, of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Haining's Well (506) is at coordinate (h3-4.v5-6) on that map [roughly 31 miles WNW of Aberdeen]. - BS
I would not go so far as to suggest literary dependence, but there is an interesting parallel here with the Biblical account of David and his Mighty Men in 2 Samuel 23:15fff. David, for whatever reason, declared, "O that someone would give me water to drink from the well of Bethlehem that is by the gate!" David at this time was still in the wilderness and could not move freely, so three men attacked a Philistine camp to bring David some of the water (which he then reused to drink). - RBW
Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD3506

Hairs on Her Dicky Di Do, The
DESCRIPTION: A quatrain ballad, this describes in graphic detail the pubic hairs of the maid of the mountain, and her sexual adventures.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE:
KEYWORDS: bawdy humorous
FOUND IN: Australia Britain(England) Ireland US(SW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cray-EroticMuse, pp. 134-135, "The Hairs on Her Dicky Di Do" (1 text)
Roud #21469
RECORDINGS:
Anonymous singer, "Dicky Dido" (on Unexp1)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Ash Grove" (tune)
File: EM134

Hairst o' Rettie, The
DESCRIPTION: "I hae seen the hairst o' Rettie... I've heard for sax and seven weeks The hairsters gURN and groan... But a covie Willie Rae... Maks a' the jolly hairster lads Gae singing down the brae." The singer praises Rae's efficient, comfortable organization
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: farming work moniker
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #3, pp. 2-3, "The Hairst o' Rettie" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan3 408, "The Hairst o' Rettie" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 271-272, "The Hairst o' Rettie" (1 text)
Roud #3512
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Parks o' Keltie" (tune, per Greig)
cf. "The Boghead Crew" (subject: harvest crew moniker song)
cf. "The Kiethen Hairst" (subject: harvest crew moniker song)
cf. "The Ardlaw Crew" (subject: harvest crew moniker song)
NOTES [246 words]: This song is so unusual that it's almost hard to describe (and impossible to keyword). Whoever heard of a bothy song in praise of the owner? - RBW
The "bothy song in praise of the owner" is not so strange considering that the crew is not hired for six months but only for the harvest. Peter A Hall, "Farm Life and the Farm Songs" in Greig/Duncan3: "Improvement [technological] also had its effect on harvest, which as well as being the culmination of the farm year, was a most important social event particularly in terms of courtship ([Greig/Duncan3] 406). The harvest crew was composed of farm workers, along with many temporary employees from the district ([Greig/Duncan3] 401), drawn from a wide variety of occupations." (p. xxv); [the] last of the bothy ballads of the old pattern are from the 1880s ([Greig/Duncan3] 372, 374), and although certain features are carried over into some of the local harvest songs ([Greig/Duncan3] 408 to 412), they lack both the emotional tone and the structure of the older pieces." (p. xxx). Greig: "Most people, we fear, will think that the poetry of the harvest field is ... gone; but that something may be made even out of the mechanical reaper is evident from the following clever and spirited ditty...."
Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv, of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Rettie (408) is at coordinate (h6-7,v6) on that map [near Banff, roughly 42 miles NNW of Aberdeen]. - BS

Hairst, The

DESCRIPTION: "I see the reapers in the field, for hairst is come." The singer praises "The bonnie yellow waving grain, our precious staff o' bread." He hopes Victoria may long reign over the people, and rejoices, for "The hairst is here again."

AUTHOR: James Davidson

EARLIEST DATE: reportedly written 1859

KEYWORDS: farming harvest food nonballad

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1837-1901 - reign of Queen Victoria

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 263, "The Hairst" (1 text)

Roud #2167

File: 0rd271

Hairy Capie

DESCRIPTION: Have you seen "hairy capie" [hairy cap] coming through the yard? He'll be here. He won't let his horse and mare rest. He's a "keerious cankert carlie" [strange, ill-natured churl]. A "Jenny Nettles" verse is included as well.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1908 (Greig/Duncan8)

KEYWORDS: farming derivative nonballad horse

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan8 1726, "Hairy Capie" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #2581

NOTES [41 words]: Roud lumps Greig/Duncan8 with "Jenny Nettles" with good reason. The second of the two verses is the usual first verse of "Jenny Nettles." I split them because the first verse, while patterned on "Jenny Nettles," has nothing to do with that story. - BS

Last updated in version 2.5

File: GrD81726

Hal-an-Tow

DESCRIPTION: Spring ritual song; "Robin Hood and Little John they both are gone to fair-O"; other verses similar. Cho.: "Hal-an-tow/Jolly rumble-O/For we are up as soon as any day-O/For to fetch the summer home, the summer and the May-O...."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: possibly 1660 (mentioned by Nicholas Boson of Newlyn); first actual text 1846 (Sandys); Palmer claims another text from 1838

LONG DESCRIPTION: Spring ritual song; "Robin Hood and Little John they both are gone to fair-O"; "Where are the Spaniards that made so great a boast-O/They shall eat the goose feather and we shall have the roast-O"; "Of all the knights in Christendom St. George he is the right-O."

Chorus: "Hal-an-tow/Jolly rumble-O/For we are up as soon as any day-O/For to fetch the summer home, the summer and the May-O/For summer is a comin' in and winter is a-gone."

KEYWORDS: magic ritual dancing nonballad Robinhood

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (7 citations):
Dixon-AncientPoemsBalladsSongsOfThePeasantryOfEngland, Song #12, pp. 187-189, "The Helstone Furry-day Song" (1 text)
Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, pp. 387-389, "The Helstone Furry-Day Song" (1 text)
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 62, "The Hal-an-Tow" (1 text)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 92, "Hal-An-Tow" (1 text + Cornish translation, 1 tune)
Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #135, "Helston Furry Dance" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gundry-CanowKernow-SongsDancesFromCornwall, pp. 10-11, "The Helston Furry Dance, or Flora" (1 text, 4 tunes); pp. 12-14, "The Hal-an-tow" (3 texts, 1 tune)
DT, HALANTO*

Roud #1520

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Maidens of England, Sair May Ye Mourn" (words of unknown meaning)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Haile an Taw and Jolly Rumbelow

NOTES [688 words]: A May song and Maypole dance. A version is still performed along with the Helston Furry Dance on May 8th of every year. Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland's Cornish words are a revivalist translation from the English. The phrase "Hal-an-tow [taw]" is variously translated as "heave on the rope" and "hoist the roof." - PJS

Both "hal-an(d)-to" and "rumbelo/rumble-o" have provoked extensive scholarly discussion, mostly because they exist in the far older song "Maidens of England, Sair May Ye Mourn" (which see).

This pushes the origins of the phrases back at least to the fourteenth century. Without quoting all the various versions cited under "Maidens of England," here is Michael Prestwich's modernized text (Prestwich, p. 81), which he describes as a song mocking the oarsman's chant of 'Heavalow, Rumbalow':

Maidens of England, sore may you mourn,
For you have lost your men at Bannockburn with 'Heavalow'.
What, would the king of England have won Scotland with 'Rumbalow'?

This seems to be the citation that has drawn all the attention, but in Ravenscroft's Pammelia there is a version of the song indexed as "My Lady Went to Canterbury" which has these lines:
heave and hoe Rumbelo,
hey trolo troly lo,
hey trolo trolly hey

So the words continued to be used in some form for many centuries (Bannockburn was in 1314, Ravenscroft published in 1609, and this song was found in the twentieth century). Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland offers two alternate explanations for the words Dutch "Haal aan het tow, "haul on the rope" was taken over by Cornish sailors as "hal-an-tow." Alternately, "hal an to/taw" may be Cornish for "raise the roof." It is not obvious how this phrase, whatever its origin, would be combined with the northern "rombylogh."

The verse about the "Spaniards that made so great a boast-O" presumably refers to the Spanish Armada of 1588, which signally failed to invade England and suffered losses of thousands of men and dozens of ships.

In the Complaynt of Scotland of 1549, we find a reference to a song "Sal i go vitht zou to rumbelo fayr?" (Complaynt, p. lxxxv), but even if "rumbelo" is a word and not a place name, that doesn't tell us what it means!

Whether any of these explanations is true, or none, the "rumbelow" refrain was well enough known that W. S. Gilbert used it in "The Mikado." In Act I, lines 67-71 (p. 265 in Gilbert/Sullivan/Bradley), we find the chorus
Then man the capstan -- off we go,
As the fiddler swings us round.
With a yeo heave ho,
And a rumbelow,
Hurrah for the homeward bound!

Bradley often has notes on Gilbert's sources, but of this he can only say "rumbelow: A meaningless combination of syllables or words, like 'yeo heave ho', used as a refrain by sailors when rowing or performing some other routine and rhythmical task. In some editions of the libretto the phrase is altered to 'a rum below'."

Alexander, p. 99, also gives a reinterpretation, printing "Jolly Rumble, O!" for "jolly rumbalow." Kennedy's Cornish words are by Talek and Yleweth, as are many of his other Cornish songs. Talek (E. G. R. Hooper) is perhaps the most interesting of the Cornish revivalists. Berresford Ellis, pp. 182-183, has this to say of him:

With the death of Nance, E. G. R. Hooper (Talek) was elected as [the third] Barth Mur [Grand Bard]... in 1959 [and served until 1965 when the rules forced election of another]. Hooper has been a great benefactor to the revival by his publication of much work that would otherwise have gone unnoticed. Perhaps his most notable achievement has been the editing and production of the all-Cornish periodical An Lef Kernewek in which has appeared much of the most notable writing in Unified Cornish.... A prolific translator and writer, he edited Kemysk Kernewek, a miscellany... in Cornish, published in 1964. An Lef Kermerek have also published, in 1962, Lyver Hymnys ha Salmow, containing 100 hymns and psalms in Cornish.

Parry/Shipley is not complimentary of most Cornish literature, which it calls amateurish, but mentions Talek's Kernow yn Catalunya ["A Cornishman in Cataluna"] as one of the few exceptions.

Bibliography

- Complaynt: James A. H. Murray, editor,The Complaynt of Scotland, volume I (Introduction plus Chapters I-XIII), Early English Text Society, 1872 (I use the 1906 reprint; the Complaynt was published in 1549)
- Parry/Shipley: John H. Parry, article on Cornish in Joseph T. Shipley, editor,Encyclopedia of Literature, Philosophical Library, 1946 [a collection of articles about the literatures of various languages of the world]

Last updated in version 5.3

File: K092

Halarvisa

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1875

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage shanty worksong nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 426-427, "Halarvisa" (2 texts-Swedish & English, 1 tune)
- Hugill-SongsOfTheSea, p. 51, "Halarvisa" (2 texts-Swedish & English, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "A Kom Till Mig Pa Lordag Kvall" (similar chorus)

NOTES [24 words]: Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas's notes (quoted from Sternvall's Sang under Segel 1935) say this was written down by "Navigation Pelle," 1875) - SL
DESCRIPTION: "Half ahead together, Take her up to thirty feet, Raise the after periscope While the captain has a peep, There's a Jerry cruiser Right on the starboard bow, Let's go up and sink the cow."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1982 (Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy)

KEYWORDS: navy technology derivative

FOUND IN: Britai(England(North))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy, p. 115, "Half Ahead Together" (1 text, tune referenced)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Arm in Arm Together" (tune)

NOTES [388 words]: Germany in World War II did not have a large fleet of cruisers -- Worth, pp. 50-53, lists light cruisers Emden, Königsberg, Köln, Karlsruhe, Leipzig, Nürnberg, heavy cruisers Admiral Hipper, Blücher, Prinz Eugen, and the panzerschiffe Deutschland/Lützow, Admiral Scheer, Admiral Graf Spee. What's more, most of them didn't get out much -- the three heavy cruisers had badly defective engines (Fowler, p. 59), and most of the light cruisers were structurally deficient (Worth, pp. 50-51) -- and Emden, the one exception, was so antique in her design as to be almost useless as a cruiser.

Despite that, they had quite a few encounters with British submarines. The first big encounter was December 13, 1939. The British Salmon (on of the S-Boats that were the subject of "Twelve Little S-Boats"; Bagnasco, p. 110) spotted Köln, Leipzig, and Nürnberg in the North Sea. Lt. Commander Bickford of the Salmon fired one torpedo at long range, which hit the Leipzig. The Germans then turned -- and a torpedo from Bickford's second batch hit the Nürnberg (Becker, pp. 68-69). Both German cruisers survived, but Leipzig's boiler damage was so severe that she never again served as an active combat unit (Fowler, pp. 54-55).

Most of the German fleet was involved in the invasion of Norway, and they suffered for it -- e.g. Blücher was sunk by the Norwegian defenses and Königsberg by British aircraft. On April 10, the very day Königsberg was lost, the British Truant torpedoed the Karlsruhe, destroying her engines and forcing the Germans to scuttle her (Showell, p. 115; Fowler, p. 52). At the same time, Spearfish torpedoed the Lützow, doing to much damage that she had to be towed into port for repairs (Showell, p. 108).

Two years later, on February 23, 1942, Trident damaged the Prinz Eugen so badly that her stern broke off (Bagnasco, p. 119; Fowler, p. 63), although she survived (later to have a collision with Leipzig truly ended the later's career Fowler, p. 55; Prinz Eugen was to be expended after the war in nuclear weapons tests).

And those are just the incidents where the British hit the German ships! No doubt there were other times when British submarines saw German cruisers. I don't know if one of those inspired this song, but obviously one or another incident might have. - RBW

Bibliography

- Becker: Caju Becker, Hitler's Naval War, (German edition 1971; English edition 1974 from Macdonald and Jane's; I used the undated Kensington paperback edition)
- Showell: Jak P. Fowler, The German Navy in World War Two, Naval Institute Press, 1979
- Worth: Richard Worth, Fleets of World War II, Da Capo, 2001
Half Crown, The
DESCRIPTION: De Valera will give a half crown to every newborn. Singer marries a widow and does his "best for the blooming half crown." His wife says he's not trying hard enough but then admits she's 63. "Check your wife's age before going to bed"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1985 (IRTravellers01)
KEYWORDS: age sex marriage childbirth money humorous wife
FOUND IN: Ireland
Roud #16988
RECORDINGS:
Vincie Boyle, "The Half Crown" (on IRClare01)
Andy Cash, "The Half Crown" (on iRTravellers01)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Cod Liver Oil" (tune) and references there

NOTES [403 words]: The tune, verse structure, and some lines derive from "Cod Liver Oil." Compare, for example, these lines from "Cod Liver Oil" [OLochlann-MoreIrishStreetBallads 30] with these from "The Half Crown"

I'm a young married man, and I'm tired of my life,
For lately I married an ailing young wife.
with these from "The Half Crown"
I'm a young married man and I'm tired of life,
Half killed and half crazy from this strap of a wife.
In Andy Cash's version on iRTravellers01 the singer earns his half-crown in spite of his wife's age (though, perhaps, the "young baby scream" makes him wonder if the reward were sufficient).
Notes to IRClare01: "In 1944, despite considerable opposition, the DeValera government introduced a family allowance of two-and-sixpence for every child after the first." The song says that DeValera was concerned because "the population of Ireland was beginning to fall." - BS

Ireland's population was a constant concern of her politicians -- see, e.g., "Daniel O'Connell (I)," plus all the hundreds of emigration songs. The problem did indeed continue into the twentieth century and De Valera's presidency -- Ruth Dudley Edwards, An Atlas of Irish History, second edition, Routledge, 1981, shows that the population of Ireland fell 4% from 1901 to 1946 (a period when the rest of the world increased its population massively), and fell another 1% from 1946 to 1961. What's more, the population decrease was all concentrated in the Republic of Ireland (8% and 4%, respectively); in Ulster, the population increased in this period.

So De Valera had a point. Except -- paying people to have children only works if there are jobs to support the children, and the Republic of Ireland was an economic basket case for most of De Valera's lifetime, including at the time he proposed this silly idea. If, instead of gimmicks, he has worked on genuine economic development, real free trade (including even with England), and a reasonable policy on science and technology, he could have had the kids and kept them in the country too. As witness the fact that Ireland is doing just fine now that it's gotten away from De Valera type economics -- it's very nearly the fastest-growing country in Europe.

[Later: The above was written around 2005, and the 2008 recession did a fine job of smashing the Irish economy, But the point remains: People don't produce economic development; production of useful products produces economic development.] - RBW

Last updated in version 2.5
File: RcTHaCro

Half Door, The
DESCRIPTION: The singer finds a home with "a sweet colleen" behind an open half-door. She invites him to come in. They dance. He proposes but she tells him to come back when she is older"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (NFOBlondahl04)
KEYWORDS: courting dancing
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf) Ireland
Roud #5275
RECORDINGS:
Margaret Barry and Michael Gorman, "The Half Door" (on Voice15)
Omar Blondahl, "The Half Door" (on NFOBlondahl04)
NOTES [35 words]: GEST Songs of Newfoundland and Labrador site has this as "Irish traditional" though I haven't yet seen any paper copy. - BS
Half-Hitch, The [Laws N23]

DESCRIPTION: A girl pretends to refuse her fiance. Finally he gives up, promising to marry the first girl he sees. She disguises herself as the ugliest woman possible and makes sure he sees her. He asks her to marry; she consents. She reveals herself after they wed

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1919 (Sturgis and Hughes)

KEYWORDS: courting disguise trick marriage

FOUND IN: US(MA,NE)

REFERENCES (9 citations):

Bronson (31), 1 version
Laws N23, "The Half-Hitch"
Barry/Eckstorm/Smyth-BritishBalladsFromMaine pp. 382-389, "The Loathly Bride" (1 text plus a version reprinted from Sturgis)
Flanders/Brown-VermontFolkSongsAndBallads, pp. 236-239, "The Half-Hitch" (1 text)
Flanders/Olney-BalladsMigrantInNewEngland, pp. 33-37, "The Half-Hitch" (1 text, 1 tune)
{Bronson's (#1) in the appendix to #31}
Flanders-AncientBalladsTraditionallySungInNewEngland1, pp. 265-275, "The Half-Hitch" (2 texts plus a fragment, 1 tune) {Bronson's (#1) in the appendix to #31}
Sturgis/Hughes-SongsFromTheHillsOfVermont, pp. 58-65, "The Half-Hitch" (1 text, 1 tune)
Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales, pp. 417-421, "The Half-Hitch" (1 text)

DT 453, HALFHITC

Roud #1887

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Marriage of Sir Gawain" [Child 31]

NOTES [55 words]: This text is associated by some editors (e.g. notably Flanders) with Child 31, "The Marriage of Sir Gawain." It should be noted, however, that the only themes the two have in common are a marriage made for honour rather than love and an ugly woman who turns out to be beautiful (themes also found in "King Henry," Child 32).

Last updated in version 4.0

File: LN23

Half-Past Ten

DESCRIPTION: The singer courted "wifie Jean," but her parents always locked the door at half past ten. Eventually she sees to it that the clock stops so she has more time with the young men. Finally her parents agree to the marriage; all live happily thereafter

AUTHOR: Catherine Mackay Bacon

EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Ford)

KEYWORDS: love courting marriage trick technology

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (4 citations):

Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 110-112, "Half-Past Ten" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #82, pp. 1-2, "Half-Past Ten" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan7 1501, "Half-Past Ten" (5 texts plus a single verse on p. 540, 6 tunes)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 71-72, "Half-Past Ten" (1 text)

Roud #2856

BROADSIDES:

NLScotland, R.B..m.168(213), "Half-Past Ten," Robert MacIntosh (Glasgow), c. 1850; also L.C.Fol.178.A.2(077), "Half-Past Ten," unknown, c. 1870

File: FVS110

Halifax Explosion, The [Laws G28]

DESCRIPTION: In Halifax harbor, a ship loaded with explosives is rammed by another vessel. The explosion and fire which follow cause terrible damage to the city and its population -- 1200 killed and 2000 wounded
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1933
KEYWORDS: fire death disaster ship
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Dec 6, 1917, 9:05 a.m. - The Halifax Explosion
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Laws G28, "The Halifax Explosion"
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, pp. 208-209, "The Halifax Explosion" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 676, HALIFAXX
ADDITIONAL: Ernest Fraser Robinson, _The Halifax Disaster, December 6, 1917_, Vanwell Publishing Ltd., 1987, 1997, pp. 58-60, "The Halifax Disaster" (1 text, said to be from the 1917 Halifax Mail-Star; it appears to have been tidied up somewhat)
Roud #2724
NOTES [3618 words]: I am not entirely sure this song belongs in Laws's catalog; he knew of only one collection, and none seem to have been found since (a fact which, by itself, should probably have excluded it), and that one collection is not very good, implying that tradition has not had the chance to work on it. But there can be no question that the event was worthy of commemoration in song.

The Halifax explosion has been called "the second most devastating blast in history" (behind Hiroshima; it actually did more damage than Nagasaki). As a survivor said, "Halifax was gone." Not surprisingly, it inspired several books. The most recent as of this writing is Laura M. MacDonald, written by a resident of Halifax (or, rather, by a resident of Dartmouth, the city on the other side of Halifax Harbour; apparently Dartmouth residents don't like being treated as part of Halifax). Most of what follows is based on MacDonald, although I have tried to tell the story in a more linear fashion (if I hadn't read the outline in Paine, I would have found her account very difficult to understand. As it is, reading MacDonald felt like I was watching a television drama where she took a commercial break every few pages). I have supplemented this with other references where I could.

To briefly sum up, the Halifax Explosion took place when the French munitions freighter _Mont Blanc_ and the Norwegian _Imo_ collided in Halifax harbor. The _Mont Blanc_ was scheduled to make a run to Britain with a large load of explosives when the _Imo_, also bound to sea and sloppily steered, collided with it. The impact was not particularly damaging in itself, but it struck sparks, starting a fire on the French ship. The captain, rather than fight the fires, ordered the crew to abandon ship. Twenty minutes later, burning and floating aimlessly, the _Mont Blanc_ ran up against a pier. The ship exploded, causing much damage and also starting a great wave which added to the damage.

If it weren't so tragic, the story of the _Mont Blanc_ would be almost comic. Why in the world was such a lousy ship used for such an important purpose? The cargo consisted mostly of explosives (though no one not on the ship knew this, because -- this being wartime -- the standard red explosives flag was not shown; Glasner, p. 35), along with a large amount of gasoline-related fuels (MacDonald, p. 16). Originally launched in 1899 (Paine, p. 344), the _Mont Blanc_ had been refitted to hold her touchy cargo (e.g. the nails in her hold had been replaced by copper to avoid striking sparks; MacDonald, p. 17). All this in a ship with an inexperienced crew and a captain who was new to his ship (he had only reached the rank of captain in 1916; Glasner, p. 15) and had little English (MacDonald, pp. 15-16). In a crisis, he would not know how to deal with his ship. It probably didn't help that he had never been to Halifax before, either (Glasner, p. 26).

The real problem was her speed. The best the _Mont Blanc_ could manage was about eight knots, and over a long stretch, she would probably not be able to exceed seven and a half. In fact, Glasner, p. 14, says that with the loading she had on her final trip she could barely make seven knots. By 1917, submarines were doing great damage, and the British were convoying their ships. The _Mont Blanc_ was too slow to sail direct from New York to Britain. She would have to go to Halifax to join one of the slow convoys there -- and even that might be pushing her abilities (MacDonald, p. 18). The later description "Large Slow Target" would have been a brilliant description of the _Mont Blanc_.

And Halifax was by this time the major shipment point from Canada to Britain. Fears of submarines had caused the harbor to be made more secure. There were anti-submarine nets at the entrance which were closed at sunset. When the _Mont Blanc_ arrived, the gates were shut for the day; she had to spend the night outside (Glasner, pp. 14, 16; MacDonald, p. 16), and then join what we might call the morning rush hour.

The other ship involved in the disaster was also trapped by the submarine precautions. The _Imo_ had been launched as the White Star Lines ship Runic, but had been sold and was now a Norwegian tramp steamer used among other things to ferry food to civilians in Belgium. Her crew had recently spent a lot more time sitting around than sailing, and were probably very disappointed when they failed to make past the submarine barriers before they closed for the day (MacDonald, p. 20); they had had to wait for a shipment of coal (Glasner, p. 27).

The shape of the bay contributed to the problem. Halifax is an excellent port, with a large inner bay (the Bedford Basin) capable of holding many ships. But the basin is reached by "the Narrows," a long channel only about a third of a mile wide -- good for security, since it's easy to guard and control (Glasner, pp. 16-17) but a definite traffic bottleneck. Two ships can pass each other in the Narrows, but only if they stay on their proper courses. Ships going in and out have to be steered by pilots experienced in entering the channel. (Many harbors of course require such pilots, but few need them as much as Halifax).

The Imo, in its haste, broke the rules. As she left the Bedford Basin, she encountered the Clara. The standard for ships at Halifax was to pass "port to port" -- that is, as we might say it, to "keep on the right side of the road." But, because of where the ships were located, it was quicker to pass "starboard to starboard." The Imo ended up on the wrong side of the channel (MacDonald, p. 30). And she then noticed another ship, the Stella Maris, pulling two scows near the south bank (MacDonald, p. 32-34). And there was some haze over the Narrows (MacDonald, p. 31). Despite this, the Imo did not slow down; a witness reported, "She is going as fast as any ship I ever saw in the harbor" (MacDonald, p. 33). According to Glasner, p. 27, she was moving at seven knots, two knots faster than the harbor speed limit, though it's not clear how this was determined.

The pilot of the Mont Blanc, Francis Mackey, apparently spotted the Imo first, though all he could see in the fog was her masts. He ordered the Mont Blanc to edge toward the starboard (northeast) bank. He sent whistle signals to the Imo (MacDonald, p. 38).

Unfortunately, there was a mixup in the whistle signals. Mackey gathered that the Imo, already far out of her lane, intended to stay there. He couldn't head closer to the shore on the starboard side; he was as close as he dared to take the heavily-laden ship. He steered Mont Blanc to port and let the ship stop (MacDonald, pp. 39-40).

The Imo once again reacted improperly. Instead of steering around the Mont Blanc, she ordered her engines to reverse. Which, because she had no cargo, was a largely useless order; her screw was too high to have much power, and she was slow to answer the helm (MacDonald, p. 40). The captain and pilot on the Mont Blanc tried to put their ship in reverse. It was too late. The Imo crashed into her starboard side (MacDonald, p. 41).

Only then, far too late, did the Imo manage to actually start moving backward. She backed out of the Mont Blanc, causing further damage. And, in the process, she did something which started a spark (Glasner, p. 29, thinks the grinding of metal on metal did it). Whatever it was, it was the caused the petroleum on the Mont Blanc's deck to catch fire. An oil fire, the kind that cannot be put out just with water -- even if the Mont Blanc had had hoses able to reach the spot, which it didn't (MacDonald, p. 43). It appeared there was nothing the crew could do. The ship couldn't even be scuttled; the seacocks were rusted shut (Glasner, p. 30; MacDonald, p. 48). The crew of the Mont Blanc abandoned ship -- and headed for the Dartmouth shore, so they didn't even give the Halifax city authorities a warning..

It's not quite certain what they did before abandoning. Did they change course? Start up the engines? The witnesses disagree. Whatever they did, the ship for some reason drifted across the Narrows to bump into a pier on the Halifax shore (MacDonald, p. 42).

Various ships came around to try to pull the ship back into mid-channel, or put out her fires (Glasner, pp. 32-39, lists some of the attempts). It was useless. She was too big to move and burning too hard to control the conflagration (MacDonald, pp. 50-51). Gradually the barrels of benzol and monochlorobenzol cooked off. Eventually, they set off the high explosive in the hold (at 9:04:35 a.m., according to later seismic measurements; MacDonald, p. 181, etc.).

It was quite a haul. 200 tons of TNT. Ten tons of gun cotton (nitrocellulose: cotton fibers treated with nitric acid. Horribly touchy when dry. Safe enough when wet, but how could it stay wet when surrounded by benzol fires?) Worst of all, 2300 tons of picric acid, some wet, some dry.

Picric Acid -- (NO2)3C6H2OH -- is a "very poisonous, yellow, crystalline, intensely bitter acid used in explosives, in dyeing, and in medicine" (AHDictSci, p. 496). It isn't just a munition; its first major use, from the 1840s to the 1860s, was as a yellow dye (Ball, p. 208). But it wasn't color-fast (Ball, p. 209), and its manufacture might have almost stopped -- except that it had such a useful ability to destroy things. It was the primary component of lyddite ("picric acid... mixed with 10% nitrobenzene and 3% Vaseline," PengDictSci, p. 254). It consists of a benzene ring with a hydroxyl (OF) group and no fewer than three NO2 groups, meaning that it can release tremendous amounts of chemical energy -- the only difference between picric acid and TNT is that TNT has a methyl group (CH3) where picric acid has its hydroxyl group (Le Couteur/Burreston, p. 98). Lyddite was used by the British as a shell burster (i.e. it's what made shells blow up when they hit something), and picric acid was the active ingredient; when dry, it explodes upon being subjected to pressure (e.g. being hit by a hammer, or of course colliding with an enemy ship or trench). It would also burn explosively if heated.

Although less familiar than TNT, because it is so much touchier, picric acid actually releases more energy when it explodes.

Picric acid was dangerous on other grounds. According to Darrow, p. 250, it also could be made into poison gas: "Chloropicrin, made from picric acid by the action of chlorine, was another [gas used in World War I]. It was mixed in a shell or bomb with tin chloride, which forms dense white clouds of vapor capable of penetrating the gas masks and carrying with it the volatile chloropicrin. Highly poisonous in itself, chloropicrin induces nausea and vomiting, thereby causing the victim to remove his mask and rendering him an easy prey to other lethal gases."

(If you're wondering why, given its dangers, picric acid was being made in Canada and shipped to Britain, rather than manufacturing in Britain, the basic answer is "nitrates." Picric acid, like every other major explosive used in the early twentieth century, required saltpeter or an equivalent nitrate source -- and the main source of nitrates was the west coast of Latin America. It was much easier to get them to Canada than to Britain in the days of submarine warfare. For more on this history of nitrates, see the notes to "Chamber Lye" and "Tommy's Gone to Hilo.")

MacDonald, p. 61, says that there were 2925 tons of explosives, total, on the Mont Blanc. The temperature of the explosion is thought to have been in the 5000C/9000F range (MacDonald, p. 62). In the era of conventional bombs, the largest ever used was about 10 tons. 2925 tons of mostly picric acid is in the nuclear weapons range -- at the very low end of the range (less than Hiroshima or Nagasaki by an order of about five), but unlike anything the world had ever seen in 1917, except for volcanic eruptions and meteor strikes.

The explosion was heard over 200 miles away, on Cape Breton and Prince Edward Island (Glasner, p. 81; MacDonald, p. 63). The Mont Blanc's anchor was thrown more than two miles, and other parts of the ship went three miles (MacDonald, p. 67).

People died in many ways. Possibly as many as 150 were simply vaporized and never found. More were killed by the pressure wave -- pulverized to death. Others died by being thrown into walls or other objections. Flying glass killed and maimed many more. All buildings within half a mile of the blast were destroyed (MacDonald, p. 64). The blast was so strong that it spawned secondary tornadoes (MacDonald, p. 66). It also caused a 20-foot-high wave to scour the Halifax basin, at some places reaching six blocks inland (MacDonald, map in frontispiece).

There were secondary effects -- fires, even the collapse of a magazine at a military base. It didn't explode, but it did burn a bit, putting out enough smoke to cause a secondary panic (Glasner, pp. 61-65).

Relief efforts were at first quite disorganized. The mayor of Halifax was away, leaving the Deputy Mayor in charge (Glasner, p. 55; MacDonald, p. 93). The fire chief had been killed (MacDonald, p. 94), as had many of the firefighters, and the city's one fire engine ruined (Glasner, p. 120). Many doctors were killed or hurt and unable to treat patients (MacDonald, p. 112). The hospitals ranged from damaged to almost completely unusable (MacDonald, p. 113). Medical supplies soon ran low, and the only way to sterilize equipment was to put it in boiling water (MacDonald, p. 118). Doctors operated on patients without anesthesia, and sewed up their wounds with ordinary cotton thread (Glasner, p. 94).

It was hard to bring in help from outside. The railroads had been damaged, or were blocked by ruined trains, and many telegraph lines were down. Only one rail line, in fact, was fully serviceable, and it was a new line, not yet up and running (MacDonald, p. 111).

The temperature the night after the blast was well below freezing (MacDonald, p. 143), and there followed a fierce blizzard, causing additional deaths (MacDonald, p. 145), adding to the strain on the survivors, and making it that much harder to bring in help.

The casualties could never be perfectly counted. Ritchie's round numbers (p. 95) are 1600 killed, 8000 wounded, 2000 missing. MacDonald's Appendix D, p. 291, lists 1611 official dead as of 1918; p. 293 lists 1201 bodies as buried, with 242 of them unidentified and 410 bodies missing -- but she reckons the known dead as of 2004 as 1952. She lists (p. 66) 6000 people as injured and 9000 as homeless. Others reverse those figures. Glasner, p. 41, says 1900 were dead and 9000 wounded, while on p. 118 she says 2000 were dead, 9000 injured, and 20,000 homeless -- which, if correct, means that more than half the city's population of roughly 50,000 was dead, wounded, or homeless. Very many of the injured lost their eyes to flying glass; 16 people lost both eyes, 249 lost one eye, and over 5500 had some sort of eye injury; 41 ended up totally blind (MacDonald, pp. 159, 234). The number of bodies was so large that, even when identifications had been made in the field, the information was often lost (MacDonald, p. 162).
Because the task was so great and the clues so few, very many bodies had to be buried before they were identified. Many of these, and some of the identified bodies from poor households, were buried in the same graveyard as the bodies brought in after the Titanic disaster (MacDonald, pp. 244-245). Coffins were improvised in all sizes, with parts of bodies in some and multiple corpses in others (MacDonald, p. 248).

There were hundreds of orphans: some 70 children who lost both parents, and 200 who lost one or the other parent. Of the latter, about 110 had lost their mothers and had no father at home (usually because he was serving in the war); MacDonald, p. 232.

It is estimated that 2000 buildings were destroyed and 10,000 damaged, leaving 25,000 people with damaged homes.

In one way, recovery was surprisingly swift. The explosion took place on Tuesday. By the following Monday, the authorities were saying they did not need more medical people (a number of temporary hospitals were up and running), and most mail and gas service was restored (MacDonald, pp. 219-220). But it took several weeks to end food rationing, and families were given a food allowance even after that (MacDonald, p. 229). And rebuilding took far longer -- indeed, most permanent rebuilding could not begin until spring when the ground thawed (MacDonald, p. 237). Even today, anyone digging near the harbor will soon find many artifacts of the explosion (MacDonald, p. 276).

The damage was estimated at $35 million -- Canadian dollars, but 1917 Canadian dollars. MacDonald, p. 68, applied conversion factors to make this $420 million in 2004 U. S. dollars. I suspect even that is low. That's strict inflation, but buildings were proportionally cheaper back then (e.g. a house could be had for $4000). I suspect that it would cost several billion to build replacements in today's world.

Even as the burials were going on, an investigation was underway. It was not supposed to be a criminal proceeding, but the man in charge was a judge, Arthur Drysdale, and a witness said, "The setting was almost Dickensian" (MacDonald, p. 252). It was a difficult situation, with the public howling for blood, and there was also the problem that, while the pilot and master of the Mont Blanc had survived, those on the Imo were both dead (Glasner, p. 43, has a photo of the ship blown ashore; her masts survived but her upper works were "demolished"). It was difficult to reconstruct what the crew of the Imo was thinking. MacDonald speculates that perhaps they failed to hear some of the whistle signals, but even seems insufficient.

MacDonald gives a detailed account of the proceedings (pp. 252-272), which ended with the blame being assigned almost entirely to pilot Mackay and master Le Medec of the Mont Blanc, plus the harbor Chief Examining Officer Frederick Evans Wyatt, responsible for procedures in the harbor. We can't really know what happened. But, reading MacDonald, it appears to me that there were many mistakes, and the Imo made all of them but the final one, when Mackay turned the Mont Blanc hard to port to try to escape the coming collision and thereby caused it. Even there, he seems to have thought that was what the Imo was calling for. It is clear that MacDonald considered Mackay a scapegoat, and Paine too is open to the possibility (p. 345). Ritchie, p. 95, assigns no direct blame but mentions only the mistakes made by the Imo. Glasner, p. 121, makes it explicit: "A scapegoat was required, but Captain Haakon From [commander of the Imo] and [pilot] William Hayes were both dead. As a result, blame was placed squarely on the shoulders of the captain and pilot of the Mont Blanc and Commander Wyatt.... Wyatt, Le Medec, and Francis Mackay were all placed under arrest and charged with manslaughter. Eventually, however, all charges were dropped."

The Imo, amazingly, was salvaged after the explosion, renamed, and put back in service -- but managed to wreck itself in the Falklands in 1921 (MacDonald, p. 282).

This song has all the features of a broadside prepared shortly after the explosion; I wouldn't be surprised if the author intended it to help the people raising money for relief. It includes the following accurate details:

"It was on the sixth of December, nineteen hundred and seventeen, That Halifax suffered disaster, the worst she'd ever seen; It was five minutes after nine, those still alive can tell"
The time of the explosion was December 6, 1917, 9:05 [a.m.].
"She carried a deck load of benzoil and shells for overseas, In her hold a new explosive, they call it TNT."

Benzoil, or benzol, is the liquid fuel that caused the initial fire. The cargo was not shells, but shell bursters; close enough. The TNT, as we see above, was a relatively small part of the cargo (and not new; trinitrotoluene had been around for decades. However, the Germans had used it first; it was a newer product to the British). But TNT was more famous than picric acid, even though less dangerous.
"Children were gone to their lessons, their mothers were busy at home, While fathers worked on at the factories little dreaming they'd soon be alone."
Most of MacDonald's and Glasner's books are devoted to documenting where people were -- and, yes, it was an ordinary work day.
"The relief ship had rammed the monster tearing a hole in her side,
And eased out in the stream again and drifted on with the tide."
Obviously accurate from the account given above.
"Houses were crushed like paper, people were killed like flies,
The coroner's record tells us the toll was twelve hundred lives."
This would seem to imply the song was written very soon after the explosion, before the various missing could be tallied; 1200 is close to the number of actual bodies.
"Two thousand were maimed and wounded, hundreds more lost their sight
And God knows how many children were alone in the world that night."
This again implies composition soon after the event, since the number of wounded is low and the number of blinded slightly higher than the total who in the end were completely blinded.
"And then the following morning as if to hurt them twice
There came a storm from the ocean, a blizzard of snow and ice."
This obviously refers to the snowstorm that so hampered the relief efforts.
The major Canadian author Hugh MacLennan, who was a boy in Halifax at the time of the explosion, went on to make it the subject of his noteworthy first novel, Barometer Rising, published in 1941 (Brown, p. 417). - RBW

Bibliography

  (originally published as the Hammond Barnhart Dictionary of Science), Houghton Mifflin, 1986
- Ball: Philip Ball, Bright Earth: Art and the Invention of Color, University of Chicago Press, 2001
- Darrow: Floyd L. Darrow, The Story of Chemistry, Chautauqua Press, 1928
- Glasner: Joyce Glasner, The Halifax Explosion: Surviving the Blast that Shook a Nation, Altitude, 2003. N.B. This is a short, undocumented, rather sensational book (the series title is "Amazing Stories")!
- MacDonald: Laura M. MacDonald, The Curse of the Narrows, Walker, 2005

Last updated in version 5.0
File: LG28

Hall's Lumber Crew

DESCRIPTION: The singer is hired for Hall's lumber crew; the various characters on the crew are described
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1941 (Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks)
KEYWORDS: lumbering work moniker humorous logger
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
  * Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks 69, "Hall's Lumber Crew" (1 text)
  * Beck-LoreOfTheLumberCamps 109, "Hall's Lumber Crew" (1 text)
Roud #8841
CROSS-REFERENCES:
  cf. "Peaslee's Lumber Crew" (structure)
  cf. "The Lumber Camp Song" (theme) and references there
NOTES [65 words]: The "moniker song" consists mostly of listing the names of one's compatriots, and perhaps telling humorous vignettes about each; it's common among lumberjacks, hoboes, and probably other groups. Sometimes, as with this song and "Peaslee's Lumber Crew", it's clear the singer is plugging names and descriptions into a generic structure, although in this case he's added a bit of narrative. - PJS

Last updated in version 5.2
File: Be069

Halle-Lu

DESCRIPTION: "Oh the books of Revelation Are a sure foundation, And we'll cross over Jordan, halle lu, And we'll cross over Jordan, halle lu, And we'll cross over Jordan, halle lu." "If you want a double blessing, You must sleep without undressing...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1966 (Huntington-FolksongsFromMarthasVineyard)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad river
FOUND IN: US(NE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Huntington-FolksongsFromMarthasVineyard, pp. 66-67, "Halle-Lu" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11625

NOTES [70 words]: There is no "Book of Revelations." The book called the Apocalypse of John (ἐπίλυπσις Ἰωάννου) is generally titled "The Revelation to John" in English translations. The verse about sleeping without undressing makes me think of 2 Corinthians 5:3 ("If so be that being clothed we shall not be found naked" according to the King James Bible), but I wouldn't bet that it is actually the inspiration. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2
File: HuVi066

Hallelu, Hallelu

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, one day as another, Hallelu, hallelu, When the ship is out a-sailing, Hallelujah." "Member walk and never tire... Member walk Jordan long road." "Member walk tribulation... You go home to Wappoo (?)" "...You want to die like Jesus"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 50, "Hallelu, Hallelu" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #12009

File: AWG050B

Hallelujah

DESCRIPTION: "The election now is over, Now, men, you all know well, The Democrats done the best they could But the Republicans gave them -- Hallelujah (chorus)." Each verse leads you to expect a word, then zips in the chorus instead

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (recording, Pope's Arkansas Mountaineers)
KEYWORDS: humorous nonballad political lie Hell wordplay
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Randolph 421, "Old Lyda Zip Coon" (1 text)
Roud #7632
RECORDINGS:
Pope's Arkansas Mountaineers, "George Washington" (Victor 21469, 1928)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Johnny Fell Down in the Bucket" (technique)
cf. "Hopalong Peter" (technique)
Hallelujah Christian, The

DESCRIPTION: "I'm a hallelujah Christian, From the wilderness I came, I'm saved and washed in Jesus's blood, Hallelujah to his name!" The singer visits the Jordan and Jericho, meets giants, dwells in Beulah, and awaits the Bridegroom (i.e. Jesus)

AUTHOR: W. H. Vanderherchen (source: hymnary.org)

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Richardson/Spaeth-AmericanMountainSongs)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad travel

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Richardson/Spaeth-AmericanMountainSongs, p. 66, "The Hallelujah Christian" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #13917

NOTES [140 words]: This is quite a hodgepodge. References to being washed in Jesus's blood are never explicit, but Rev. 7:14 refers to those washed in the blood of the Lamb, i.e. Jesus. The Jordan river is of course mentioned many times. The conquest of Jericho is covered in Joshua 6 (although the town was later rebuilt). There are numerous references to the Anakim, often understood to be giants: in the King James Bible, they are mentioned in Deut. 1:28, 2:10, 11, 21, 9:2; Josh. 11:21, 22, 14:12, 15 as well as references to "Anak," as well as other giants, the Rephaim and Nephilim. The land of Beulah is mentioned only in Isaiah 62:4, although modern versions (e.g. NRSV) may render this by its meaning "Married." Implicit mentions of Jesus as Bridegroom show up in Matthew 9=Mark 2=Luke 2; the reference to the Bridegroom coming is from Matthew 25. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: Rich066

Hallelujah, I'm a Bum (I)

DESCRIPTION: The bum explains that he cannot work when there are no jobs available, but then reveals his pleasure in a rambling life. He describes riding the rails, meeting women, begging, and -- sometimes -- troubles with the law.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (IWW Little Red Songbook)

KEYWORDS: begging humorous hobo train work

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (10 citations):
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, pp. 184-185, "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum!" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henry-SongsSungInTheSouthernAppalachians, pp. 109-111, "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum" (1 text, said to be "copied from a broadside")
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 26-28, "Hallelujah, Bum Again" (1 text, 1 tune)
Botkin-TreasuryOfAmericanFolklore, pp. 882-884, "Hallelujah, Bum Again" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ohrlin-HellBoundTrain 13, "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum" (1 text, 1 tune)
Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, p. 358, "Hallelujah I'm a Bum" (1 text, following the text of "Revive Us Again")
Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, pp. 197-202, ("Hallelujah, I'm a Bum") (partial texts illustrating the history of the song)
Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 102, "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 207, "Hallelujah, I'm A Bum" (1 text)

DT, HALLEBUM HALLEBU2

Roud #7992

RECORDINGS:
Hallelujah, I'm a Bum (II)

DESCRIPTION: A quatrain ballad, this tells the bawdy adventures of a bum who begs food from housewives.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE:

KEYWORDS: bawdy begging humorous hobo sex

FOUND IN: US(MW,SW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cray-EroticMuse, pp. 200-202, "Hallelujah I'm a Bum" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7992

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hallelujah, I'm a Bum (I)"

NOTES [15 words]: This bawdy subset of McClintock's Wobbly song is sung to the hymn tune "Revive Us Again." - EC

File: EM200
Hambone

DESCRIPTION: "Hambone hambone where've you been... Round the world and back again." "Hambone hambone where'd you stay... Met a pretty girl couldn't get away." "Mother bought me a billy goat... If that billy goat don't butt... Momma's going to beat my rusty butt."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1942 (Parrish-SlaveSongsOfTheGeorgiaSeasIslands)

KEYWORDS: nonballad playparty

FOUND IN: US(MW,SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Parrish-SlaveSongsOfTheGeorgiaSeasIslands, pp. 114-116, "Hambone" (1 text)

RECORDINGS:
The Phillips Wonders, "Hambone" (on "Art of Field Recording Volume I," Dust-to-Digital CD DTD-08, 2007; recorded 1976 in Iowa)

NOTES [8 words]: Each line is followed by a line of clapping. - BS

Last updated in version 4.1

File: Parrp114

Hamburg, Du Schone Stadt (Hamburg, You Lovely Town)

DESCRIPTION: German shanty. Sailor meets a girl who initially resists his advances, then takes his two dollars and tells him to wait while she runs up to her room. When he follows her up, he finds four men who beat and rob him. Choruses of "Oh, du mein ja, mein je!"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (Baltzer, _Knurrhahn_)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage shanty whore robbery Germany

FOUND IN: Germany

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 564-566, "Hamburg, Du Schone Stadt" (2 texts, German & English; 1 tune)
Hugill-SongsOfTheSea, p.64, "Hamburg Du Schone Stadt" (2 texts, German & English; 1 tune)

File: Hugi564

Hame, Hame, Hame

DESCRIPTION: "Hame, hame, hame, hame, hame, fain wad I be ... to my ain countrie" "The green leaf o' loyalty's begun for to fa', The bonny white rose it is withering and a'; But I'll water't wi' the blood of usurping tyrannie" The sun will shine yet.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1783-1785 (_Robert Burns's Commonplace Book_, according to Cromek)

KEYWORDS: nonballad political Jacobites

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Hogg-JacobiteRelicsOfScotlandVol1 80, "Hame, Hame, Hame" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #135, pp. 1-2, ("Hame, hame, hame, O hame fain would I be") (1 text fragment)
Greig/Duncan5, p. 637, ("Hame, hame, hame, O hame fain would I be") (1 text fragment)
ADDITIONAL: Robert Chambers, The Scottish Songs (Edinburgh, 1829), Vol I, pp. 101-102, "Hame, Hame, Hame"
R. H. Cromek, Remains of Nithsdale and Galloway Song, (London, 1810), pp. 169-170, ("Hame, hame, hame, O hame fain would I be")
ADDITIONAL: Walter de la Mare, _Come Hither_, revised edition, 1928; #191, "Hame, Hame, Hame" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Rosemary Lane" [Laws K43] (structure and some lines)
cf. "Hame, Hame" (tune, per Chambers)

NOTES [301 words]: Hogg: ... taken from Cromek; and sore do I suspect that we are obliged to the same masterly hand for it with the two preceding ones. The air to which I have heard it sung very beautifully, seems to be a modification of the old tune of "Mary Scott, the Flower of Yarrow." The two previous songs are "The Wars of Scotland" and "Lochmaben Gate," and Hogg suspects... the author to be Allan Cunninghame [sic].

The Greig/Duncan5 text, from Greig, is in a note to Greig/Duncan5 1057, "Hame, Dearie, Hame." Greig: "Around the touching cry of "Hame, hame" different songs have at one time or another been woven. Allan Cunningham and James Hogg produce versions with a Jacobite message. But verses like the following are alien to true folk-song: - [text]. Such things we never pick up on the traditional field. Nobody hears of them until they appear in some printed collection. The editor allows his readers to suppose that they are traditional and old, but the critic knows that they are mainly the work of the editor."

"Cromek died [1812] shortly after the issue [1810] of Remains of Nithsdale and Galloway Song, which was mostly written by Cunningham, though palmed upon Cromek as recovered antiques." (source: J. Ross, The Book of Scottish Poems: Ancient and Modern, (Edinburgh, Edinburgh Publishing Co, 1878), "Allan Cunningham 1784-1842," p. 738; other sources agree)

However, in this case, if there is a Cunningham "forgery" [the term I have seen applied to his contributions to Cromek; for example, see Shoolbraid's comments re "Annie Laurie"], then Cromek would have to be complicit. Cromek writes, "This song is printed from a copy found in Burn's Common Place Book, in the editor's possession. It has long been popular in Galloway and Nithsdale, and has many variations, of which this is the best." - BS

Last updated in version 2.5

File: GrD5p637

Hamfat Man, The

DESCRIPTION: The ham fat man falls in love with Sara Ann, a girl in the market who sells him "polony sausages." But every day she wants a new dress, and after he goes broke she goes off to Bathurst. The moral: "Never trust a girl that lives in Sydney town."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1984

KEYWORDS: courting food money separation

FOUND IN: Australia

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia, pp. 94-95, "The Hamfat Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gilbert-LostChords, p. 5, "Ham Fat Man" (1 fragmentary text, which does not contain any of the above plot, and is almost certainly bawdy, but which appears from its pattern to be the same piece)

NOTES [24 words]: Don't ask me why the title of the song (in Fahey, anyway) is "The Hamfat Man" while all the references in the text are to a "Ham fat man." - RBW

File: FaE094

Haming on a Live Oak Log (Mister Gator)

DESCRIPTION: "I went down on the river on a live oak log, log, log, Well the way I was haming, partner, like a lowdown dog, like a lowdown dog." The singer confuses a gator for a log and has to fight it. He complains about his sentence and the work his captain demands

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (recorded from "Chinaman" Johnson by Bower, Lomax, and Seeger)

KEYWORDS: animal fight prison

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Jackson-WakeUpDeadMan, pp. 240-245, "Haming on a Live Oak Log" (3 texts, 1 tune)

Roud #17457?

ALTERNATE TITLES:
I Was Down in the Bottom
Shake It, Mister Gator,
Move Along, 'Gator

File: JDM240

Hamlet Wreck, The

DESCRIPTION: "See the women and children going on the train, Fare-you-well, my husband, if I never see you again." The train runs late, and collides with a local (?). The rest of the song
The text describes a train wreck from 1911 involving a special train carrying members of St. Joseph's African Methodist Episcopal Church. The collision occurred near Hamlet, killing at least 8 people and injuring 88. The piece, titled "The Hamlet Wreck," was first printed as a broadside credited to Franklin Williams and William Firkins, but Brown expressed doubts about the attribution. Brown notes that the song was more likely composed rather than part of oral tradition, as it included less personal stories.

---

Hamma-Tamma Damma-Ramma

DESCRIPTION: Hammer song without real words, merely repeating "Hamma-tamma (hah!) damma-ramma (hah), etc."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1981 (Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices)

KEYWORDS: worksong nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices, p. 120, "Hamma-Tamma Damma-Ramma" (1 text, 1 tune)

File: Rose120

---

Hammer Man

DESCRIPTION: "Drivin' steel, drivin' steel, Drivin' steel, boys, Is hard work, I know...." "Treat me right... I am bound to stay all day; Treat me wrong, I am bound to run away." "Boss man... See the boss man comin' down the line."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)

KEYWORDS: work nonballad worksong

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 139, "Hammer Man" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #18764

File: San139

---

Hammer Ring

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, my hammer, hammer ring (x2), Ringin' on de buildin, hammer ring (x2)."
Doncha hear dat hammer... She ringin' like jedgment." "Oh, Lawd, dat hammer." There may be references to Black Betty, or mentions of Noah/Norah

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934
KEYWORDS: chaingang work
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 61-62, "The Hammer Song" (1 text, tune referenced)
Jackson-WakeUpDeadMan, pp. 193-201, "Hammer Ring" (7 texts, 2 tunes, very diverse; some could perhaps be filed with "Black Betty" or other prison songs, and they often share verses with "Drop 'Em Down")
RECORDINGS:
Jesse Bradley and group of prisoners, "Hammer, Ring" (AFS 219 A2; on LC8)
Texas state farm prisoners, "Let Your Hammer Ring" (on NPCWork)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Take This Hammer"
cf. "Don't You Hear My Hammer Ringing"
NOTES [15 words]: Not to be confused, obviously, with the Modern Folk "Hammer Song" ("If I Had a Hammer"). - RBW
Last updated in version 2.4
File: LxA061

Hammering

DESCRIPTION: Call and response. Each line is answered by "Hammering." Lines include "What the hammer say." "I nailed him down." "Mary wept." "Martha mourned." "They buried him" "And on the third day" "He ascended high" "To his Father's house"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1899 (Barton-OldPlantationHymns)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious Jesus
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Barton-OldPlantationHymns, p. 39, "Christmas Hymns of the Crucifixion" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #12264
NOTES [11 words]: The description is based on the Barton-OldPlantationHymns text. - BS
Last updated in version 4.0
File: Bart039

Hampshire Mummers' Carol (God Sent for Us the Sunday)

DESCRIPTION: "There is six good days all in the week, All for the labouring man, But the seventh is the Sabbath...." The singer urges hearers to go to Church and to bring up their children well. Read the Bible. Failure is likely to bring punishment.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1897 (Kingsclere Mummers, according to Broadwood)
KEYWORDS: religious death Jesus work burial
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Broadwood-EnglishTraditionalSongsAndCarols, pp. 78-79, "The Hampshire Mummers' Christmas Carol" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Richard M. Dorson, _Buying the Wind: Regional Folklore in the United States_, University of Chicago Press, 1964, p. 225, "Mummers' Carol" (1 text)
Roud #1065
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Moon Shines Bright (The Bellman's Song)" (lyrics)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
There Are Six Good Days All in the Week
Hancock Boys, The
DESCRIPTION: "The (Hancock) boys, they think they're men; They go a-courting when they kin," using any trick they can "To cheat some pretty girl." They work to buy courting clothes and try to put on a show. The singer says they fail and is happy they are upset at him
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore)
KEYWORDS: clothes courting
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore, pp. 153-154, "The Hancock Boys" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #4892
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "A Comical Ditty (Arizona Boys and Girls)" (theme)
NOTES [42 words]: I was very tempted to lump this with "A Comical Ditty (Arizona Boys and Girls)." I am far from convinced that they are distinct. But this song doesn't offer the girls' side, so I've very tentatively separated them, mostly to align to the Roud Index. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.5
File: SaKo153

Hand Loom v Power Loom
DESCRIPTION: "Come all you cotton weavers, Your looms you must pull down, You must get employed in factories...." The power looms are displacing the old weavers. They must work for a hard overseer. They will have little leisure and low pay
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1865 (Harland, according to Raven)
KEYWORDS: weaving hardtimes work technology boss
FOUND IN: Britain(England(North))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
File: JRVI117

Hand Me Down My Walkin' Cane
DESCRIPTION: Known mostly by the first verse: "Hand me down my walkin' cane (x3), I'm gonna catch the midnight train, All my sins been taken away, taken away." Remaining verses involve traveling, prison, food, where the singer wants to be buried, etc.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (recordings, Kelly Harrell, Gid Tanner, Henry Whitter & Fiddler Joe)
KEYWORDS: rambling food prison death burial floatingverses
FOUND IN: US(SE,So)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 363, "Hand Me Down My Walking Cane" (1 text plus mention of 1 more)
Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices, p. 95, "Hand Me Down My Walking Cane" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 53, "Hand Me Down My Walkin' Cane" (1 text)
DT, WALKCANE
Roud #11733
RECORDINGS:
Boswell Sisters, "Hand Me Down My Walkin' Cane" (Brunswick 6335, 1932)
Vernon Dalhart, "Hand Me Down My Walkin' Cane" (Durium [UK] 9-3, 1933)
Durium Dance Band w. Carson Robison & his Pioneers, "Hand Me Down My Walkin' Cane" (Durium [UK] EN-27, 1932)
Sid Harkreader w. Grady Moore, "Hand Me Down My Walking Cane" (Paramount 3022, 1927; Hand O'er Hand (I)

DESCRIPTION: "Hand, Hand, Hand o'er hand, Divil run away with a west country man." Other verses, if any, probably float.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1932 (Bone-CapstanBars)

KEYWORDS: shanty

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Bone-CapstanBars, p. 42, "Hand O'er Hand" (1 short text, 1 tune)

File: BoCB042

Handcart Song, The

DESCRIPTION: "Ye saints who dwell on Europe's shore, prepare yourselves for many more." "For some must push and some must pull" as the Mormons head west with their handcarts. The song praises how the Saints work together to make the migration.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (collected from Lalowi M. Hilton)

KEYWORDS: emigration travel

FOUND IN: US(Ro)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #209, "Handcart Song" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Handcarts

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, our faith goes with our handcarts, They have our hearts' best love; They're a novel way of traveling, Devised by God above, so sing Hurrah for the camp of Israel! Hurrah for the handcart scheme! Hurrah! hurrah! It's better far Than wagon or ox team."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1945 (American Folklore 58)
KEYWORDS: religious travel
FOUND IN: US(Ro)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #210, "Handcarts" (1 short text)
Roud #10892
CROSS-REFERENCES: cf. "The Handcart Song" (subject)
NOTES [71 words]: When the Mormons were driven out of Illinois and Missouri, they did not have the funds to afford a great migration. So Brigham Young came up with the idea of moving them west to Deseret (Utah) in handcarts. The migration was long and difficult and encountered many tragedies; that Mormonism survived the ordeal is a credit to the determination of those who followed the trail. On balance, though, it was a very bad idea. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.8
File: Hubb210

Handful of Earth from Mother's Grave, A

DESCRIPTION: "I must leave this dear old place where my childhood days were spent," but to preserve his memories, the singer will take "a handful of earth from mother's grave." It will guide him wherever he goes

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster)
KEYWORDS: mother death burial travel
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 95, "A Handful of Earth" (1 text)
Roud #16354
ALTERNATE TITLES: Earth from Mother's Grave
File: HMHS095B

Handsome Bill

DESCRIPTION: The singer tells Bill that she is too young to marry. Her sisters have not yet left school so she is still needed at home. She has already turned Ned, her cousin, down twice. And she will never marry a drinker: "join the temperance army and claim me"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1917 (Greig/Duncan4)
KEYWORDS: courting marriage rejection drink nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
Handsome Cabin Boy, The [Laws N13]

DESCRIPTION: A disguised girl signs aboard ship as a cabin boy. The ship's captain discovers her secret and, even though his wife is aboard, gets her pregnant. One night the "boy's" crying awakens the crew, who learn she is in labor. All are thoroughly astonished.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1842 (Journal from the Champion)

KEYWORDS: cross-dressing ship pregnancy adultery disguise childbirth sailor infidelity love

FOUND IN: US(MW) Britain(England(South),Scotland(Aber)) Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (15 citations):
- Laws N13, "The Handsome Cabin Boy"
- Greig/Duncan1 181, "The Handsome Cabin Boy" (3 texts, 1 tune)
- Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 160, "The Handsome Cabin Boy" (1 text)
- Porter/Gower-Jeannie-Robertson-EmergentSingerTransformativeVoice #26, pp. 157-158, "The Handsome Cabin Boy [Laws N13]" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Reeves/Sharp-TheldiomOfThePeople 32, "The Female Cabin Boy" (1 text)
- Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #6, "The Female Cabin Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 163, "The Handsome Cabin Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Peacock, pp. 280-281, "The Handsome Cabin Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 174-175, "The Female Cabin Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs 97, "The Female Cabin Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Hugill-SongsOfTheSea, p. 86, "The Handsome Cabin Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #836, p. 56, "The Handsome Cabin Boy" (1 reference)
- Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 123-125, "The Handsome Cabin Boy" (1 text)
- Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 192, "The Handsome Cabin Boy" (1 text)
- DT 445, CABINBOY*

RECORDINGS:
- Mrs. Mary Ann Galpin, "The Handsome Cabin Boy" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
- Bob Hart, "The Female Cabin Boy" (on Voice12)

BROADSIDES:
- Murray, Mu23-y1:035, "The Female Cabin Boy," James Lindsay Jr. (Glasgow), 19C

NOTES [64 words]: For accounts of women who served in the navy or the army, and sometimes became pregnant as a result, see the notes to "The Soldier Maid."

According to Edwin Wolf 2nd, _American Song Sheets, Slip Ballads, and Political Broadsides 1850-1870_, Library Company of Philadelphia, 1963, p. 56, there is a De Marsan broadside of this, with eight verses. This would imply a date before 1865. - RBW

_Last updated in version 5.3_

File: LN13

Handsome Charlie's Sing Out

DESCRIPTION: "Away, hey, Oh, haul him high-O! Way, hey! Oh, haul him high-O! Way, hey! Oh, haul him high-O! High-O! Raise him and haul him high-O!"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips)

KEYWORDS: sailor shanty nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, p. 20, "Handsome Charlie's Sing Out" (1 text, 1 tune)
- ADDITIONAL: Frederick Pease Harlow, _The Making of a Sailor, or Sea Life Aboard a Yankee Square-Rigger_, 1928; republished by Dover, 1988, p. 113, "(no title)" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #9161
Handsome Harry (II)
DESCRIPTION: "Handsome Harry Thomas He was sued for breach of promise." Mary told her family, they told the preacher, and he told the wedding bell. If you ever take a girl take one named Daisy, "because Daisies don't tell"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA/Leach)
KEYWORDS: courting marriage seduction sex wedding accusation humorous wordplay father mother rake wife clergy
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
Roud #21116
RECORDINGS:
Theresa White, "Handsome Harry" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

Handsome John
DESCRIPTION: "A lady lived near Portland square, She keep a waiting maid so fair Who loved the footman as her life Expecting for to be his wife." The lady loves the footman and beats the maid. The maid runs away and the lady marries handsome John
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland)
KEYWORDS: infidelity love marriage promise injury
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 38, "Handsome John" (1 text)
Roud #6363
NOTES [13 words]: Why do I have this feeling the marriage turned out to be not very happy? - RBW

Handsome Molly
DESCRIPTION: The singer sings the praises of handsome Molly, noting that "Sailing round the ocean, sailing round the sea, I'll think of handsome Molly wherever she may be." She proves less than faithful, but he loves her still
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1918 (Cecil Sharp collection)
KEYWORDS: love courting sailor separation abandonment
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (8 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 82, "The Lover's Lament" (4 texts plus a fragment, "E," that is probably "Handsome Molly"; the others are true "Farewell Ballymone (Loving Hannah; Lovely Molly)" texts)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 82, "The Lover's Lament" (2 excerpts, 2 tunes; the "B" excerpt is probably "Farewell Ballymone (Loving Hannah; Lovely Molly)" while "E" is probably "Handsome Molly")
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 710, "My Hair Was Black As Ribbon" (1 fragment, 1 tune, which could be anything but matches the form of this song)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, pp. 57-58, "Lovely Mary" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 180, "The Irish Girl" (1 text plus 2 fragments, 3 tunes, with the "A" text going here and the "B" and "C" fragments tentatively filed under "The Irish Girl")
Bush-FSofCentralWestVirginiaVol5, pp. 62-64, "Handsome Molly" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 148, "Handsome Molly" (1 text)
DT, HNDSMMOL
Roud #454
RECORDINGS:
[G. B.] Grayson & [Henry] Whitter, "Handsome Molly" (Gennett 6304/Champion 15629, 1927) (Victor 21189, 1928; rec. 1927; on GraysonWhitter01, LostProv1)
Mike Seeger, "Handsome Molly" (on MSeeger01)
Glenn Neaves, "Handsome Molly" (on GraysonCarroll1)
Doc Watson & Gaither Carlton, "Handsome Molly" (on Ashley02, WatsonAshley01)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Farewell Ballymoney (Loving Hannah; Lovely Molly)"
NOTES [195 words]: It is my firm belief that this is a version of the "Farewell Ballymoney/Loving Hannah" family of songs (with which it shares several verses and the whole plot, as well as melodic similarities). In this I actually agree with Roud.
Paul Stamler, however, observes that "The plotline is similar, but I'd be inclined to split off 'Molly' and class the 'went to church on Sunday' verse as a floater. Look at it this way -- if you ask old-time musicians to play 'Handsome Molly' about 95% can do so, but if you ask them to play 'Farewell Ballymoney' at least 95% will go, 'Hah?'"
I still think I'm right, but it is certainly true that "Molly" has achieved independent circulation (though all the versions I hear seem to come ultimately from the Grayson & Whitter recording), and so we list it as a separate song. - RBW
The Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians version shows that the song, with lyrics very close to those sung by Whitter, was circulating some nine years before he made his very-influential recording. Whitter, it should be noted, came from the same area in Virginia where the Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians version was collected. - PJS
Last updated in version 6.0
File: FSWB148

Handsome Sally
DESCRIPTION: A young man loves Sally, a servant, whose mistress also wants the lad. The mistress has Sally drowned
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIES DATE: 1916 (Cecil Sharp collection); +1909 (Joyce, _Old Irish Folk Music and Songs_) KEYWORDS: homicide drowning
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 120, "Handsome Sally" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2370
NOTES [37 words]: This in several regards resembled "The Lady and the Farmer's Son" [Laws O40]. Paul Stamler indeed filed them under the same heading. But Laws and Roud separate them, and I can hardly argue with that weight of authority. - RBW
File: ShAp2120

Handwriting on the Wall, The DESCRIPTION: "At the feast of Belshazzar and a thousand of the lords, While they drank from golden vessels," "the hand of God" wrote "on the wall." Daniel explains the situation to Belshazzar. The hand may write about you, too
AUTHOR: Knowles Shaw (1834-1878)
EARLIES DATE: 1965 (Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol1) KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol1, p. 46, "At the Feast of Belshazzar" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Roud #7123
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "There's a Little Hand Writing on the Wall" (subject)
NOTES [296 words]: This is a brief summary of the first part of Daniel 5. The festival for a thousand of his lords is in Daniel 5:1. The bringing in of golden vessels is in 5:2. The hand that writes on the wall appears in 5:5. Daniel is summoned in 5:12, although he should not be called a "captive"; he was in exile, but seems to have been free at this time. The Shaw song does not continue the story after this, but the rest of the chapter of Daniel describes Belshazzar's fear and the overthrow of Babylon.

Unfortunately for anyone interested in this hymn, there was no King Belshazzar of Babylon. The last king of Babylon was Nabonidas. He had a son whose name would probably have been rendered "Belshazzar" in Aramaic (the language of this section of Daniel), but this Belshazzar never became king. The rest of the "history" in this part of Daniel is even worse, e.g. there was no King Darius the Mede, and while there were Kings Darius of Persia, they came after, not before, Cyrus of Persia. All evidence is that the author of the Book of Daniel wrote during the 160s B.C.E., during the persecution of Antiochus IV of Syria, and that the author knew effectively nothing about the events of 539 B.C.E. (when Persians under Cyrus captured Nabonidas's Babylon). He doesn't even seem to have been able to write proper Hebrew (a scholarly rather than a living language by the 160s), which is probably why he gave up and started writing in Aramaic.

It is also curious that the Septuagint Greek translation, which was probably made just a few decades after Daniel was written, omits much of this chapter, especially verses 17-22, which is most of Daniel's condemnation of Belshazzar. This raises a strong possibility that the Aramaic of this chapter was heavily interpolated by a later writer. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.1

Handy Dandy (Handy Pandy, Andy Pany, Amos and Andy)

DESCRIPTION: "Handy dandy, Sugary candy, Which will you have, (High or low/Top or bottom)."
Or, "Andy pandy, sugary candy, French almond nuts."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1894 (Gomme)
KEYWORDS: playparty food
FOUND IN: Britain New Zealand
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 101, "(Andy pandy, sugary candy)," "(Ansy, pansy, sugary candy)" (2 texts)
Roud #19429

Hang Me, Oh Hang Me (Been All Around This World)

DESCRIPTION: Man about to be hanged laments his life. Says, "Hang me, oh hang me, and I'll be dead and gone/It's not the hangin' that I mind, it's layin' in the grave [or jail] so long." In some versions he describes his life as a gambler.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1917 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)
KEYWORDS: execution punishment death gambling gallow-confession lament
FOUND IN: US(MW,So)
REFERENCES (10 citations):
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 472-473, "The Gambler" (1 text)
Randolph 146, "My Father Was a Gambler" (2 texts, 2 tunes); 348, "Since I Left Arkansas" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 173-175, "My Father Was a Gambler" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 146A)
Friedman-Viking/PenguinBookOfFolkBallads, p. 232, "The Gambler" (1 text)
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 92, "I've Been All Around This World" (1 text, 1 tune)
Pound-AmericanBalladsAndSongs, 57, pp. 130-131, "The Gambler" (1 text)
Roberts-SangBranchSettlers, #16, "Rovin' Gambler" (1 text, 1 tune); #54, "My Daddy Was a Gambler" (1 short text, 1 tune, which Roberts thinks is a "Hang Me, Oh Hang Me (Been All Around This World)" fragment although it looks more like "The Roving Gambler (The Gambling Man)" [Laws H4] to me)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 298, "John Henry-I"; 299, (1 text, 1 tune, containing a large portion of "Been All Around This World" or a relative)
Spaeth-WeepSomeMoreMyLady, pp. 129-130, "I've Been All Around the World" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, GAMBLR2
Roud #3416
RECORDINGS:
Justus Begley, "I've Been All Around This World" (AFS, 1937; on KMM)
Grandpa Jones, "I've Been All Around This World" (King 524, 1946)
Art Thieme, "Cape Girardeau" (on Thieme02)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Don't Let Your Watch Run Down" (floating lyrics)
cf. "The Horse Trader's Song" (tune, floating lyrics)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Cape Girardeau
I've Been All Around This World
The Hobo's Lament
The Hobo Blues

NOTES [40 words]: Laws regards Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety's and Randolph's versions of this as a ballad, "The Gambler," which he lists as dE43. But the text seems much more diffuse than Laws's small and highly specific subset. - RBW

Hang on the Bell

DESCRIPTION: "The scene is in a jailhouse; if the curfew rings tonight The guy in number 13 cell will go out like a light." To prevent the bell from ringing, the convict's daughter Nellie ties herself to the bell, and keeps it silent until a pardon arrives

AUTHOR: T. Connor, C. Erard, R. Parker (according to Joe Hickerson)
EARLIEST DATE: before 1950 (recording, Beatrice Kay)

KEYWORDS: prison execution humorous reprieve father children derivative

NOTES [205 words]: This is often listed as a parody of Rosa Hartwick Thorpe's 1867 poem
"Curfew Must Not Ring Tonight" (for which cf., e.g., Michael R. Turner, Victorian Parlour Poetry: An "Parody" may be a rather strong word; there is no stylistic influence at all. (The first lines of the Thorpe poem, published when she was just 17, are "Slowly England's sun was setting o'er the hills tops far away, Filling all the land with beauty at the close of one sad day, And the last rays kissed the forehead of a man and maiden fair," or, in other publications, "England's sun was slowly setting...." The rest is equally nauseating.)

Despite its lack of quality, this thing was popular enough to earn nine citations in Granger's Index of Poetry.

The one thing that survived from the Thorpe original to this song is the absurdist plot of the girl silencing the curfew bell.

This byblow is not widely published, and there are few if any early recordings, but Joe Hickerson traced enough oral transmission that I have, with some misgivings, included it in the Index. Mostly, perhaps, to examine the relationship between the original poem and the derived song. - RBW

Hanging Johnny

DESCRIPTION: Shanty. Characteristic line: "Away, away... Hang, boys, hang!" The singer reports,
"They call me Hanging Johnny... Oh they say I hang for money. They say I hung my daddy...
We'll... hang together... And we'll hang for better weather."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1917 (Great Lakes sailor Carl Joys says he learned it before 1870)

KEYWORDS: shanty ship sailor

FOUND IN: US(MA,MW,SE) Canada(Mar) Britain(England)

REFERENCES (17 citations):
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, p. 31, "Hanging Johnny" (1 text, 1 tune) Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, pp. 65-67, "Hanging Johnny" (1 composite text, 1 tune)
Hanging of Charlie Birger

DESCRIPTION: Charlie Birger is feared throughout the Midwest; after the shooting of Joe Adams, Birger's henchman Thomasson turns state's evidence and Birger is sentenced to hang. Despite appeals and an unsuccessful suicide attempt, he is hanged on April 19, 1928.

AUTHOR: Carson Robison (or, possibly, Andrew Jenkins)

EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (recording, Vernon Dalhart)

LONG DESCRIPTION: Charlie Birger, bandit, is feared throughout the Midwest; after the shooting of Joe Adams and a public outcry, Birger's henchman Thomasson turns state's evidence and Birger is sentenced to hang. Despite appeals and an unsuccessful suicide attempt, he is hanged on April 19, 1928. The singer draws lessons in morality from this story

KEYWORDS: accusation betrayal crime execution homicide punishment death suicide outlaw

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
April 19, 1928 - hanging of Charlie Birger

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Neely/Spargo-TalesAndSongsOfSouthernIllinois, pp. 266-268, "The Death of Charlie Burger" (1 text)
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 214-215, "(The Death of Charlie Burger)" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 453-454, "The Death of Charlie Birger" (1 text)

DT, CIBIRGER

RECORDINGS:
Vernon Dalhart, "The Hanging of Charlie Birger" (OKeh 45215, 1928) (Edison 11002, 1929 [as "The Hanging of Charles Birger"])
Frank Luther, "The Hanging of Charlie Birger" (Supertone 9183, 1938)
Art Thieme, "The Hanging of Charlie Birger" (on Thieme02)
NOTES [62 words]: Birger's gang, and the rival Shelton Bros. gang, made Williamson Co. in southern Illinois a battleground in the mid-1920s, fighting over the rights to the regional bootlegging trade. The first bomb ever dropped on United States soil was a load of dynamite the Sheltons dropped on Birger's hangout from an airplane. The song accurately tells what happened after that.
- PJS
Last updated in version 3.2
File: DTcbirge

Hanging of Eva Dugan, The

DESCRIPTION: "Down in Arizona was just the other day The first time that a woman the death price had to pay, Yes, Mrs. Eva Dugan... Stepped up to the gallows." She leaves a note, "Bring me joy, oh, bring me sorrow, With the comin' of the morrow, I won't beg...."

AUTHOR: Word: Arthur Fields / Music: Fred Hall
EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (recording, Al Craver (Vernon Dalhart))
KEYWORDS: death execution
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Feb 21, 1930 - Hanging of Eva Dugan for the crime of murdering Andrew J. Mathis
FOUND IN: REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, p. 543, "The Hanging of Eva Dugan" (1 text)
RECORDINGS:
Vernon Dalhart (as Al Craver), "The Hanging of Eva Dugan" (Columbia 15530-D, 1930)
File: CAFS2543

Hanging of Sam Archer, The

DESCRIPTION: "Ye people who delight in sin, I'll tell you what has lately been, Come sympathize... For this young man who died in Shoals." "It is so hard for us to say, He was executed here today." He murdered Bunch, and -- like all his bad family -- must suffer

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (Hoosier Folklore 5, according to Cohen)
KEYWORDS: death homicide execution punishment prison mother
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 422-423, "The Hanging of Sam Archer" (1 text)
File: CAFS2422

Hangtown Gals

DESCRIPTION: "Hangtown girls are plump and rosy, Hair in ringlets, mighty cozy... Touch them and they'll sting like hornets. "Hangtown girls are lovely creatures, Think they'll marry Mormon preachers." They are often seen grinning and exposing their linens

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE:
KEYWORDS: courting nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Arnett-IHearAmericaSinging, p. 97, "Hangtown Gals" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 192, "Hangtown Girls" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 656-657, "Hangtown Girls" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Buffalo Gals" (tune)
Hannah from Butte, Montana

DESCRIPTION: "I've got a girl named Hannah, From Butte Montana, The reason I don't love her, She's dead, gol darn her! She lived on the Untrodden hills of Butte. None cared to love her And none dared to shoot."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Shay-BarroomBallads/PiousFriendsDrunkenCompanions)
KEYWORDS: love death
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Shay-BarroomBallads/PiousFriendsDrunkenCompanions, p. 145, "Hannah" (1 short text)
Roud #9538
NOTES [53 words]: Shay's seems to be the only text of this, so reconstruction may not be possible, but his text (apart from being short) appears damaged. There needs to be a missing word in the lines "She lived on the [???] Untrodden hills of Butte." Is there a word that would explain why no one else would either love her or shoot her?

Last updated in version 4.2

Hannah Healy, the Pride of Howth

DESCRIPTION: The singer is love sick for Hannah. Each morning courtiers swarm around her but none "dare entreat her or supplicate her." The singer is giving up; he'll "raise my mind from all female kind so Adieu, sweet Hannah, the pride of Howth!"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c.1840 (From a Waterford chap-book, according to Sparling)
KEYWORDS: love beauty nonballad
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 93, "Hannah Healy, the Pride of Howth" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9773
NOTES [11 words]: The Howth peninsula is about seven miles northeast of Dublin. - BS

File: OLCM093

Hannah McKay (The Pride of Artikelly)

DESCRIPTION: The singer bids farewell to Ireland and Magilligan, wondering how he can leave such a beautiful, friendly place. Even more painful is parting with Hannah McKay. He will think of her all the way through his voyage.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: emigration separation farewell
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H656, p. 187, "Hannah M'Kay/The Pride of Artikelly" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13543

File: HHH656

Hannamaria

DESCRIPTION: Hannamaria used to live in singer's town; she weighed 590 pounds. After supper a bunch of fellows get drunk and fight; singer is knocked ten feet into the air, but, "I fell down 'cause Hannamaria." Singer is going home with her; he warns others not to

AUTHOR: unknown
Hannibal Hope

DESCRIPTION: "There was once a moke named Hannibal Hope with a circus, understand"; he played the calliope and rum. When the circus comes to his home in Nashville, his girlfriend Mandy Green attends and praises his musical skills.

AUTHOR: Words: John Lowitz and Frank French
EARLIEST DATE: 1977 (Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin)
KEYWORDS: music courting travel
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, pp. 280-281, "Hannibal Hope" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [41 words]: Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin includes three songs from the Circus World Museum in Baraboo, Wisconsin. He does not offer a reason for including them in a book of folk songs; all are composed and give no evidence of having existed in tradition. - RBW

File: Pet280

Hans and Katrina

DESCRIPTION: "There was a rich Dutchman, in New York did dwell." His daughter Katrina is ordered to court a rich young man, but she loves Hans. She prepares to leave home, and chokes on a sausage as she gets ready. Her lover discovers her body and the sausage

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1967 (Leach-HeritageBookOfBallads)
KEYWORDS: love courting death food humorous parody
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Leach-HeritageBookOfBallads, pp. 182-183, "Hans and Katrina" (1 text, 1 tune on p. 208)
Stout-FolkloreFromIowa 39, pp. 54-55, "Vilikins and His Dinah" (2 texts, but both are "Hans and Katrina")
ST LeHe182 (Partial)
Roud #271
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Vilikens and his Dinah (William and Dinah) [Laws M31A/B]" (tune & meter) and references there
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Katrina

File: LeHe182

Hantoon, The

DESCRIPTION: Wexford barque Hantoon is off the coast of Portugal "when this cruel British monster on us came bearing down." Captain Neill tried "to save his ship and crew, But those cursed, heartless tyrants had cut our barque in two." Four of eleven are lost.

AUTHOR: William Martin, Slippery Green, Wexford
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast)
Hap and Row

DESCRIPTION: "Hap and row, hap and row, Hap and row the feetie o't; I never knew I had a bairn Until I heard the greetie o't." Life with the baby is described: A cinder from the cooking fire burns its feet; Sandy's mother wraps them in her cap

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan7)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig/Duncan7 1398, Greig/Duncan8 Addenda, "Hap and Row" (3 texts, 1 tune)
Porter/Gower-Jeannie-Robertson-EmergentSingerTransformativeVoice #58, p. 220, "Hap An' Rowe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Montgomerie/Montgomerie-ScottishNurseryRhymes 157, "(Hap and row, hap and row)" (1 text)

Roud #7252

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Reel o' Stumpie" (lyrics, tune?)

NOTES [107 words]: This is presumably the original which Burns converted into "The Reel of Stumpie." Roud, in fact, lumps them. I suspect there are cross-fertilized versions, so some care should be taken in looking at each. - RBW
While the first text is "late," from Greig-Duncan in 1914, the air is considerably older, 1734 according to Porter-Gower (p. 220). To this air is (often) attached a burden, such as Jeannie Robertson sang in 1954, or a few verses. Thus an "original" narrative might be suspected, but we know nothing of it. Perhaps the song's "interest" lies in its implied narrative possibilities, but certainly its musicality is significant. - DGE

Last updated in version 6.1

File: MSNR157

Happy Child, The

DESCRIPTION: "You parents who have children dear, To what I shall relate give ear, In Barnet lived a happy pair." The husband dies leaving a wife and daughter. The daughter tries to convert non-Christian children. The Devil appears. The girl goes to heaven.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Flanders/Ballard/Brown/Barry-NewGreenMountainSongster); broadside versions probably from the later eighteenth century

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Flanders/Ballard/Brown/Barry-NewGreenMountainSongster, pp. 48-53 (1 text, 1 tune)

ST FING048 (Partial)

Roud #4657

NOTES [2 words]: Ewwww. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.0

File: F1NG048
Happy Coon, The

DESCRIPTION: "I've seen in my time some mighty funny things, But the funniest of all I know Is a colored individual." The "very queer old coon" never speaks, is knock-kneed and pigeon-toed, but whistles all the time -- even when his wife dies or he is hit with a brick

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: abuse disability music

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 424, "The Happy Coon" (1 text)

Roud #11766

File: Br3424

Happy Days of Youth, The

DESCRIPTION: "The happy days of youth they are fast fleeting by Old age is coming on with a dark stormy sky." The singer recalls meeting his love "among the broom" and wishes he could have such a day again. "Farewell to happy youth likewise to mirth and glee"

AUTHOR: Robert Gilfillan (1798-1850) (source: Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #136, p. 2)

EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (Greig/Duncan3)

KEYWORDS: age courting nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #82, p. 1, "The Happy Days of Youth" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan3 542, "The Happy Days of Youth" (4 texts, 2 tunes)

Roud #6018

Last updated in version 2.4

File: GrD3542

Happy Family (I), The

DESCRIPTION: "I will sing you a song of a settler bold, Who lived at Botany Bay" and marries a tranportee wife, "The Pride of Botany Bay"; "The first of her virtues was beauty... and the 102nd was chastity." She "has friends" dearer than her husband. It's his folly

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (Anderson-FarewellToOldEngland)

KEYWORDS: transportation marriage betrayal

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Anderson-FarewellToOldEngland, pp. 129-130, "The Happy Family" (1 text)

File: AnFa129

Happy Friendship

DESCRIPTION: The singer and friends are together for a drink. "Freenship makens us aa mair happy... Freenship consecrates the drappie," Friendship is more satisfying than riches.

AUTHOR: unknown, but see notes re authorship by Robert Burns

EARLIEST DATE: 1840 (Cunningham)

KEYWORDS: money drink nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Bord))

REFERENCES (4 citations):
McMorland/Scott-HerdLaddieOTheGlen, pp. 144-145, 156, "In Freenship's Name" (1 text, 1 tune)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 477, "Happy Friendship" (1 text)

ADDITIONAL: Allan Cunningham, The Works of Robert Burns (London: C Daly, 1840 ("Digitized by the Internet Archive")), pp. 392-393, "Happy Friendship" (1 text)
Happy Green Shades of Duneane, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer asks the muses to help him praise Duneane. It is the land of his fathers. But now he must leave; he bids farewell to friends and says there is nothing like living among them. He hopes someday to return.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: emigration separation homesickness
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H653, p. 211, "The Happy Green Shades of Duneane" (1 text, 1 tune)

Happy Land (I Want Some Peas)

DESCRIPTION: "I want some peas and I want some rice, Oh Happy Land, I want some pretty girl to be my wife, Oh Happy Land."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1962 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)
KEYWORDS: playparty courting
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5, p. 539, "Happy Land" (1 short text, 1 tune)
NOTES [37 words]: The current description is the whole of the Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 fragment. Although I suspect this to be part of another game song, the short Brown text is too brief to allow identification. - RBW

File: McSc144

File: HHH653

File: BrS5539
Happy Land of Canaan, The

DESCRIPTION: "Down in Harper's Ferry Section there was an insurrection, John Brown thought the negroes would sustain him. But old Governor Wise put his specs upon his eyes For to send him to the happy land of Canaan." The rebels defy the abolitionist northerners

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1916 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)

KEYWORDS: Civil war rebellion death war slavery

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
October 16-18, 1859 - John Brown and 20 others (15 of them, including Brown's three sons, are white) capture the arsenal at Harper's Ferry, Virginia, hoping to gather the weapons needed for a slave rebellion. Forces led by Robert E. Lee soon attack the rebels; only Brown and four others live to be captured and placed on trial

Dec 2, 1859 - Hanging of John Brown at Charlestown, Virginia

FOUND IN: US(Ap,So)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 363-364, "The Happy Land of Canaan" (1 text)
Randolph 226, "The Happy Land of Canaan" (3 texts (one Unionist), 1 tune)
Thomas-BalladMakingInMountainsOfKentucky, p. 81, (no title) (1 fragment, perhaps of this piece or perhaps another "Happy Land of Canaan" variant, but it uses that line and dates from the slavery era)
cf. Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #845-#851, p. 57, "Happy Land of Cannaan No. 3" through "No. 6" plus "A New Version" and "Happy Land of Kanaan" (14 total references); #1125, p. 77, "John Beoqn" (2 references)
Roud #7705

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bull Run (War Song)" (floating lyrics)

SAME TUNE:
Execution of Hicks ("All you people far and near") (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets p. 39)
Uncle Snow ("Oh, my name is Uncle Snow," by Ben Cotton) (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets p. 161)
Union Happy Land of Canaan ("Oh I'm almost 79 and I'll tell you in my rhyme") (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets p. 163)
("You Rebels come along and listen to my song") (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets p. 194)

NOTES [114 words]: The "Governor Wise" in the first stanza of both Randolph's and Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety's texts is Henry A. Wise (1806-1876), Governor of Virginia 1856-1860 and later a Confederate Brigadier. As ex-governor, he was strongly pro-secession, and worked hard to push his state and his successor in that direction.

Last updated in version 3.5

File: R226

Happy Marriage, The

DESCRIPTION: "How blest has my life been, what joys have I known, since wedlock's soft bondage made Jessie my own." The singer looks fondly back on life and children. Though his wife is growing old, he finds happiness at home and tells others they should do the same.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1853 (Scots Musical Museum)

KEYWORDS: love husband wife marriage children age

FOUND IN: Ireland Britain

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H753, p. 501, "The Happy Pair" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST HHH753 (Full)
Roud #9464

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Contented Wife and Answer
Happy Morning
DESCRIPTION: "Weep no more, Marta/Martha. Weep no more, Mary. Jesus rise from the dead, Happy morning. Glorious morning, glorious morning, My Savior rise from the dead, Happy morning." "Doubt no more, Thomas...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad Jesus
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 10, "Happy Morning" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11852
File: AWH010B

Happy or Lonesome
DESCRIPTION: "Come back to me in my dreaming, come back to me once more.... When the spring roses are blooming, I'll come back to you." "Absence makes my heart fonder, Is it the same for you? Are you still happy, I wonder, or are you lonesome too?"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (recording, Burnett & Rutherford)
KEYWORDS: love separation
FOUND IN: US
ST RcHOL (Full)
Roud #11518
RECORDINGS:
Burnett & Rutherford, "Are You Happy or Lonesome" (Columbia 15187-D, 1927; on BurnRuth01)
The Carter Family, "Happy or Lonesome" (Bluebird 5650=Victor ???, 1934)
Steve Ledford, "Happy or Lonesome" (Bluebird 7742, 1938)
SAME TUNE:
"My Sweetheart in Tennessee" (recorded by Burnett & Rutherford, Columbia 15187-D, 1927; on BurnRuth01)
NOTES [78 words]: Charles K. Wolfe calls this a parlor song which gained favor with old-time musicians, but does not list the author.
The Burnett and Rutherford recording is the earliest mention I can find of the piece. Curiously, the duo recorded only two songs in that session: "Happy or Lonesome" and "My Sweetheart in Tennessee" -- with nearly-identical tunes. One suspects the latter of being something Burnett just fixed up to have something to put on the flip side of the disk. - RBW
File: RcHOL

Happy Roon' the Ingle Bleezin'
DESCRIPTION: The miser spends his time "watchin' ower [his riches] wi' cautious e'e." On the other hand, "the sons of social pleasure Spend the nicht in harmony." Friendship brings us together "happy roon' the ingle [fireplace]"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1911 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: drink nonballad friend
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan3 549, "Happy Roon' the Ingle Bleezin'" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6025
File: GrD3549

Happy Wanderer, The
DESCRIPTION: "I love to go a-wandering along the mountain track, And as I go, I love to sing, my knapsack on my back." The singer extols the joys of hiking and hopes to continue to do so

Happy We Are All Together

DESCRIPTION: "Happy we are all together, Happy we are e'en now." "Here around the ingle blazing, We're so happy and free... Friendship warms both you and me." Isn't friendship better than the miser's gold? He will be judged someday

Happy, Frisky Jim

DESCRIPTION: Assorted nonsense about Jim's family and neighbors: "I'm my daddy's only son, Gay and lively, full of fun, Brother's twice as old as me, So we're twins, you plainly see." Jim's girl, whose "mouth is like a big bull calf," also figures prominently

Harbour Grace

DESCRIPTION: "Harbour Grace is a very nice place And so is the Bay of Islands, So we give three cheers for Carbonear When the boys comes home from swillin'." Disconnected verses about George and Lizer, going to town and sea, and Mackety Bay
Harbour Grace Affray

DESCRIPTION: "On the fourteenth day of August, being a great deal of talke, The day it was appointed, the Orange had to walk." 98 Irish Catholics meet 700 Protestants. Pat Callaghan is shot. The Irish counter-attack. The Orangemen flee. The singer praises Irishmen

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1994 (Thomas and Widdowson)
KEYWORDS: religious battle death
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
ADDITIONAL: Kenneth S. Goldstein, "A Report on Continuing Research into 'Treason Songs': A Widdowson, editors, Studies in Newfoundland Folklore: Community and Process,, Breakwater Books, 1991, pp. 147-148, "Rebellion in Harbour Grace" (1 text) NOTES [23 words]: In Newfoundland, this was sometimes regarded as a "Treason Song." For background on Treason Songs, see the notes to "The Prooshian Drum." - RBW
Last updated in version 4.5
File: ThWi147

Harbour Le Cou

DESCRIPTION: "As I rowed ashore from my schooner close by, A girl on the beach I chanced to espy" who lives in Harbour Le Cou. The sailor courts and wins girl until they meet his "old comrade" who sends "regards to your missus and wee kiddies two"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs; MUNFLA/Leach)
LONG DESCRIPTION: A sailor takes up with a girl in Harbour Le Cou, but has his amorous plans thwarted by a ship-mate who inquires (within hearing of the girl) about the health of the sailor's wife and children. The girl tears into the sailor and he flees, warning others to beware not only of pretty girls but also of old comrades.
KEYWORDS: courting infidelity seduction separation humorous children husband sailor
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar,Newf)
REFERENCES (6 citations):
Peacock, pp. 198-199, "Harbour Le Cou" (1 text, 1 tune)
Doyle-OldTimeSongsAndPoetryOfNewfoundland, "Harbour Le Cou" (1 text, 1 tune): p. 26 in the 3rd edition, p. 31 in the 4th, p. 23 in the 5th
Harco Mine Tragedy
DESCRIPTION: "It happened in December, in 1941," shortly after Christmas, when the Harco Mine explodes. Mr. Dietz comes out to call for help. Rescuers try to pump in air. The bodies of eight men are eventually found.
AUTHOR: probably Mary Dooley of Harco
EARLIEST DATE: 1942 (sent to McIntosh)
KEYWORDS: mining death disaster
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 455-456, "Harco Mine Tragedy" (1 text)
File: CAFS2455

Hard Rock Dann
DESCRIPTION: "The sun was setting in the West, One evening late in May." Hard Rock Dann and his companion are dying of thirst. In time, a note is found asking that his body be taken back to Comstock for burial.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Book of Nevada Poems, according to Cohen)
KEYWORDS: death mining travel burial
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 610-611, "Hard Rock Dann" (1 text)
File: CAFS2610

Hard Time in Old Virginnie
DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Hard Time in Old Virginnie." Verses: "Summer comin' again." "Comin' in the rainbow." "Comin' in the cloud." "My old missus promise me" "When she die she set me free." "She love so long" "Till her head got bald."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1963
KEYWORDS: hardtimes freedom slave nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Courlander-NegroFolkMusic, p. 116, (no title) (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Raise a Ruckus" (floating lyrics)
cf. "Old Marse John" (floating lyrics)
NOTES [10 words]: Described by Courlander as a pestle song for pounding rice. - RBW
File: CNFM116A
Hard Times and Old Bill

DESCRIPTION: "Old Ailey Bill came home from court" and stops at a bar (?) "to have some sport. And it's hard times and poor old Bill." Will McNealey hides under a bed, sees what happens, steals a frying pan, sells it, and beats his wife

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (collected by Henry from C. L. Franklin)

KEYWORDS: abuse escape husband wife commerce

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry-SongsSungInTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 11, "Hard Times and Old Bill" (1 text)

NOTES [30 words]: For the life of me, I can't tell what this is about. I suspect that it is based on a real incident, but that several verses have been lost from Henry's seemingly unique text. - RBW

File: MHAp011.

---

Hard Times Come Again No More

DESCRIPTION: "Let us pause in life's pleasures and count its many tears While we all sup sorrow with the poor." The singer describes sad people suffering from poverty, and begs, "Hard times, come again no more."

AUTHOR: Stephen C. Foster

EARLIEST DATE: 1854 (broadside, LOCSheet sm1854 760350; not copyrighted until January 17, 1855)

KEYWORDS: poverty hardtimes

FOUND IN: US Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (7 citations):
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 588, "Hard Times Come Again No More"; Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 589, "Hard Times Come Again No More" (2 texts)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #852, p. 57, "Hard Times Come Again No More" (1 reference)
Emerson-StephenFosterAndCo, pp. 86-87, "Hard Times Come Again No More" (1 text)
Messleri-ListenToTheMockingbird, pp. 86-88, "Hard Times Come Again No More" (1 text)
Heart-Songs, pp. 82-83, "Hard Times Come Again No More" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #121, "Hard Times, Come Again No More" (1 text)

DT, HRDTIMES*

Roud #2659

RECORDINGS:
Edison Quartette, "Hard Times Come Again No More" (CYL: Edison 9120, 1905)
L. M. Hilton, "Hard Times Come Again No More [Mormon version]" (on Hilton01)

BROADSIDES:
*Bodleian, Harding B 11(866)[few words missing or illegible], "Hard Times Come Again No More" ("Let us pause in life [sic] pleasures and count its many tears"), J.B. Hodge (Sunderland), 1850-1861; also Harding B 11(3352), Harding B 11(1477), Harding B 11(1478), Harding B 11(1479), Firth c.16(246), Harding B 11(1687) , Harding B 11(1686), "Hard Times Come Again No More" LOCSheet, sm1854 760350, "Hard Times Come Again No More", Firth, Pond, & Co. (New York), 1854; also sm1882 21586, "Hard Times Come Again No More" (tune) LOCSinging, as105130, "Hard Times Come Again No More" ("While we seek mirth and beauty and music light and gay"), Firth, Pond, & Co. (New York), no date; also as105130, sb20165b, "Hard Times Come Again No More"

SAME TUNE:
Sad Times. The Burning of the Steamboat New Jersy, on the Delaware, on the Night of March 15, 1856. Sixty-Two Persons Hurried into Eternity by Water and by Fire (by Ned Buntline) (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets p. 138)
Sorrow Shall Come Again No More ("What to me are earth's pleasures, and what its flowing tears") (words by Rev. W. Kenney) (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets p. 148)

NOTES [266 words]: It is perhaps more a comment on the folk revival than on this song to note that it is easily the most popular Foster song with revival singers. It wasn't especially popular at the time, and Spaeth, p. 116, regards it as an "adequate potboiler."

According to notes in TaylorEtAl, p. 19, "Stephen once told his brother, Morrison, that Oh! Boys, Carry Me 'Long, and Hard Times Come Again No More were based on snatches of Negro melodies he heard in a Negro church to which he was taken in childhood by the family nurse, Olivia Pise."
They are the only songs in which Foster admittedly used actual Negro material."
Howard, p. 82, also refers to Olivia Pise, but calls her a "bound girl" -- in other words, a family slave, even though she was living in a free state. Whatever that tells you about the Foster family.
Emerson, notes that Stephen Foster's parents lost their home very early in Foster's life, and suggests that "Foster would compose so many songs about home in part because he seldom knew one for long." That is perhaps more true than usual for this song, since Foster's father was failing fast at the time it was written (and, as it turned out, his mother would die the day after it was copyrighted). Morneweck, p. 464, describes it as topical: "'Hard Times' is wholly a song of the people; it was probably composed in November or December of 1854, when Stephen saw many of his own good friends among the helpless victims of hard times right in the neighborhood of his home. That winter in Pittsburgh and Allegheny was a time of great distress owing to the shutting down of the mills." - RBW

Bibliography

- Emerson: Ken Emerson,Doo-Dah! Stephen Foster and the Rise of American Popular Culture, Da Capo, 1997?
- Howard: John Tasker Howard,Stephen Foster, America's Troubadour, 1934 (I use the 1939 Tudor Publishing edition)
- Morneweck: Evelyn Foster Morneweck (Stephen Foster's niece),Chronicles of Stephen
  Foster's Family, University of Pittsburgh Press, 1944

Last updated in version 6.0
File: DThrdtim

Hard Times in Dixie
DESCRIPTION: "Hear the mournful music swell, It's hard times in Dixie. Hear Rebellion's fun'ral knell...." Rations are short in the Confederacy; the South is gloomy. Grant, Lincoln, Butler are making the Confederacy crumble. The singer hopes traitors will suffer AUTHOR: Words: "M. K." / Music: "Eugarps" (possibly a pseudonym for M. K. Sprague?)
EARLIEST DATE: 1864 (sheet music published by W. W. Whitney, according to Silber-
-SongsOfTheCivilWar)
KEYWORDS: Civilwar political food hardtimes nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 340-342, "Hard Times in Dixie" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: SCWF340

Hard Times in Old Virginia
DESCRIPTION: Response is "Hard time in old Virginia." Leader lines include "Old Virginia," "My old missus was a rich old lady," "Seven children around her table." Also verses like "my old missus promise me ... When she died she'd set me free"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1942 (Parrish-SlaveSongsOfTheGeorgiaSeasIslands)
KEYWORDS: floatingverses nonballad shanty
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Parrish-SlaveSongsOfTheGeorgiaSeasIslands, p. 234, "Hard Time in Ole Virginny" (1 text)
RECORDINGS:
John Davis and the Georgia Sea Island Singers, "Hard Times in Ol' Virginia" (on LomaxCD1713)
File: Parp234

Hard Times in the Mill (I)
DESCRIPTION: Complaints of life in the mills (e.g. "Worked in a cotton mill all my life, Ain't got nothin' but a barlow knife"). The wages are poor, the bosses hard, and the conditions brutal.
Chorus: "Hard times in (this old mill), Hard times (everywhere)."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (recording, Lester Smallwood)
KEYWORDS: work hardtimes factory technology boss miller
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation): Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 274-275, "Hard Times in the Mill" (1 text, 1 tune)
RECORDINGS:
Lee Brothers Trio, "Cotton Mill Blues" (Brunswick 501, rec. 1930)
Mike Seeger, "Cotton Mill Blues" (on MSeeger02)
Pete Seeger, "Hard Times in the Mill" (on PeteSeeger13)
Lester Smallwood, "Cotton Mill Girl" (Victor V-40181, 1930; recorded 1928)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Winnsboro Cotton Mill Blues" (floating lyrics)
cf. "Hard Times in the Mill (II)"
cf. "Pickle My Bones in Alcohol" (floating lyrics)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Hard Times in This Old Mill
Cotton Mill Blues

NOTES [119 words]: This is obviously very similar to "Hard Times in the Mill (II)" -- but since the versions I've seen have different metrical patterns, and have no words in common except "hard times in," I tentatively classify them separately.
This version is recognized by longer lines in the verse (see sample above) and the non-repeating chorus. - RBW
I'm not sure I'd split these two songs. The verses tend to be floaters (e.g., the "Barlow knife" one, which shows up in fiddle tunes), and the metrical differences aren't that big. I guess I'd want to see all the verses. There's a 1962 recording by Hedy West with the Barlow knife verse in it. - PJS
It's the usual problem of the ordinary versus the extreme versions. Sigh. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.5
File: SBoA274

Hard Times in the Mill (II)

DESCRIPTION: About bad conditions in the mills (e.g. "Ev'ry morning at half past five, You got to get up dead or alive"). The food is poor, money tight, "the boss is cussin' and the spinners cryin'."
Chorus: "Hard times in the mill, my love, hard times in the mill."

AUTHOR: Possibly Dorsey Dixon
EARLIEST DATE:
KEYWORDS: work hardtimes factory technology boss miller
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Arnett-IHearAmericaSinging, p. 145, "Hard Times in the Mill" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, p. 142, "Hard Times in the Mill" (1 text)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 369-370, "Hard Times in the Mill" (1 text)
RECORDINGS:
Seena Helms, "Hard Times" (on HandMeDown2)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hard Times in the Mill (I)"
NOTES [152 words]: This is obviously very similar to "Hard Times in the Mill (I)" -- but since the versions I've seen have different metrical patterns, and have no words in common except "hard times in," I tentatively classify them separately.
This version is recognized by shorter lines in the verse (see sample above) and the repeating chorus. - RBW
I'm not sure I'd split these two songs. The verses tend to be floaters (e.g., the "Barlow knife" one, which shows up in fiddle tunes), and the metrical differences aren't that big. I guess I'd want to see all the verses. There's a 1962 recording by Hedy West with the Barlow knife verse in it. - PJS
It's the usual problem of the ordinary versus the extreme versions. Sigh.
To add to the fun, there are at least three different mill working songs called "Cotton Mill Blues" (a variant title for this family), first recorded by Wilmer Watts, Daddy John Love, and Tommy Scott. - RBW
Hard Times of Old England, The

DESCRIPTION: Singer tells that the trade has gone; if you go to a shop without money, you can't buy. If you ask for a job, there is none; tradesmen walk the street looking for work; soldiers and sailors have come home to starve. He hopes the hard times will not last.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1820 (broadside, Bodleian, Harding B 17(321a))

KEYWORDS: poverty commerce unemployment work hardtimes starvation England worker

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Copper-ASongForEverySeason, pp. 204-205, "Hard Times of Old England" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 224, "The Hard Times of Old England" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, HRDTMENG*

Roud #1206

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 17(321a), "The Tradesman's Complain" ("Draw near brother tradesmen, listen to my song ...") J. Pitts, London, 1802-1819

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Rigs of the Time" (subject)

NOTES [125 words]: Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland seems to think that this song arose in the recession following a war, since sailors and soldiers were returning home to find no work. But the British military did not institute a true draft until World War I; the size of the military stayed relatively constant. And economic trouble was constant in the late eighteenth and early nineteenth century; the population was growing faster than the system could expand. So this could be just a song of falling standards of living.

However, the first known broadside, by Pitts, appeared around the time of the Napoleonic Wars, so Kennedy's guess appears pretty good (thanks to Abby Sale for pointing this out, and ultimately to Malcolm Douglas for figuring it out). - RBW

Last updated in version 4.0

File: K224

Hard to Be a Nigger

DESCRIPTION: "Well, it makes no difference How you make out your time. White man sho' to bring a Nigger out behind. Ain't it hard (x3) to be a nigger?" "Nigger makes do cotton, White folks get de money." The singer complains about unequal pay and unequal justice

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1934 (Lomax)

KEYWORDS: discrimination Black(s) hardtimes nonballad work

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 233-234, "Hard to Be a Nigger" (1 text)
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 282-283, "AInt' It Hard to Be a Right Black Nigger?" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 473 "White Folks Go to College" (1 fragment, at least tangentially related to this song); also 480, "Hard Times" (1 text, massively composite: Chorus from "Lynchburg Town" and verses from "Old Bee Makes the Honey Comb" and the "White Folks Go to College" version of "Hard to Be a Nigger")
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, pp. 227-228, "Ain't It Hard to Be a Nigger" (1 text plus a possible fragment)
Roud #15555

File: LxA233

Hard to Rise Again

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Satan comes like a busy old man, Haly, haly, hallelu, He gets you down at the foot of the hill, Hard to rise again." Verses warn that the devil is a conjurer who'll conjure you;
Satan's a snake in the grass who'll get you at last.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1899 (Barton-OldPlantationHymns)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious Devil
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Barton-OldPlantationHymns, p. 11, "Hard to Rise Again" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: Bart011A

Hard Traveling
DESCRIPTION: "I been doin' some hard travelin', I thought you knowed." The singer describes the hard times he's met on his travels: "Workin' in a hard rock tunnel," "Workin' that Pittsburgh steel," facing the lonely task of following Highway 66
AUTHOR: Woody Guthrie
EARLIEST DATE: 1940 (recording, Woody Guthrie & Almanac Singers)
KEYWORDS: work nonballad loneliness hardtimes rambling train prison farming work worker hobo
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 226, "Hard Travellin'" (1 text, 1 tune)
Seeger-AmericanFavoriteBallads, p. 89, "Hard Traveling" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 59, "Hard Traveling" (1 text)
DT, HARDTRAV*
Roud #13926
RECORDINGS:
Woody Guthrie, Cisco Houston & Sonny Terry [Saunders Terrell], "Hard Traveling" (on WoodyFolk)
Pete Seeger, "Hard Travelling" (on PeteSeeger18)
File: LoF226

Hard Trials
DESCRIPTION: "The foxes have holes in the ground... And everything has a hiding place, but we poor sinners have none. Now ain't them hard trials?..." Unrelated verses, often floating, about religious life, fidelity to denominations, the Devil, justice, death
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1874 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute)
KEYWORDS: religious death Devil floating verses
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 600-602, "Hard Trials" (1 text, 1 tune, composite)
Roud #7554
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Methodist Pie" (floating verses)
cf. "Lonesome Valley (I)" (floating verses)
NOTES [45 words]: It's not clear, from the Lomax notes, whether this song actually exists on its own. Of their eight stanzas, they themselves admit to importing four. Three of the others float. The chorus is commonplace. So I am tempted to regard this as simply a Lomax assembly job. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.0
File: LxA600

Hard Up and Broken Down
DESCRIPTION: "Once I had money plenty and friends too, by the score... But now I'm poor and lonely... No one seems to know me now because I'm broken down." He has wasted his fortune, and now his old friends ignore him
Hard Working Miner, The

DESCRIPTION: "I'm a hard-working man, you can see by my hands, Although I am friendly and free, A dollar a day is very small pay For a man with a large family." The singer describes his hard work in the mines and looks forward to seeing his family.

EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Spencer)

KEYWORDS: mining hardtimes family money

REFERENCES (3 citations):
- Foner-AmericanLaborSongsOfTheNineteenthCentury, p. 198, "The Hard Working Miner" (1 text)
- DT, HRDWRKM

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Jock Stewart (The Man You Don't Meet Every Day)" (tune, form)

File: DThrdwrk

Harding Campaign Song

DESCRIPTION: "I'm from Ohio, dear old Ohio, Oh, there's nothing quite so fine As that Buckeye state of mine. "It's the land of Grant and Sherman... And you'll hear from President Harding before this year is through." The only man who can stop it might be Jimmie Cox.

AUTHOR: Ernest R. Ball (source: Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection)

EARLIEST DATE: 2010 (Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection); presumably written 1920

KEYWORDS: political nonballad

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- 1920 - Warren G. Harding of Ohio defeats James M. Cox, also of Ohio, for president

FOUND IN:
- REFERENCES (1 citation):
  - Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection, p. 55, "Harding Campaign Song" (1 text)

File: Grim055

Harding's Defeat

DESCRIPTION: Fragment: "Come all you good people the truth I'll relate/Concerning of Harding's most cruel defeat/Concerning bad conduct was used, they say/That caused us to be defeated on that very day"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1918 (Cecil Sharp collection)

KEYWORDS: army battle fight war
NOTES [249 words]: Making even an educated guess about the subject of this song is difficult, given that we have only one stanza. The collection date obviously precludes World War I and all later wars, as well as references to Warren G. Harding. I'd say the Spanish-American War is also out, because the informant would have remembered more. The Civil War is an obvious possibility, but this is a Southern song, and there were no Confederate generals named Harding. There were a couple of Union general officers, but neither suffered an obvious defeat.

There is the confusing case of the American ship Defence in the Revolutionary War. Samuel W. Bryant's The Sea and the States, p. 83, mentions an American ship Defence, commanded by a Captain Harding -- but Bryant describes only a victory won by this ship. The Revolutionary War also featured a privateer Defence which suffered was sunk in 1779. Privateers of course had notoriously bad discipline. But if the data in Lincoln P. Paine's Ships of the World is correct, these two ships named Defence cannot have been the same vessel.

I'm stumped. My guess is that "Harding" is an error for some other name. Hardee, maybe -- confederate Lt. General William J. Hardee was a competent officer whose ineffective forces made it impossible to interfere with Sheman's March to the Sea. Alternately, there is John Hardin, 1753-1792, a Virginian who moved to Kentucky and was heavily involved in Indian fighting until killed in 1792. This may be the best bet. - RBW

File: ShAp2204

Hardtack and a Half, A

DESCRIPTION: "Don't talk about your hardships, Don't talk of them to me"; he has voyaged to the Pacific, where "you have to go it On a hardtack and a half." Sailors work hard and face danger; the singer warns that the job is not worth the poor food and bad pay

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1870 (log of the Pacific)

KEYWORDS: whaler travel hardtimes food

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 56-58, "A Hardtack and a Half" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #27502

File: HGam056

Hardy Sons of Dan, The

DESCRIPTION: "For to score a goal there was none so bold, As the hardy Sons of Dan," named for Dan O'Connell. They won the Belturbet Tournament in 1889 and their second team won another tournament at Derrylin.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1980 (IRHardySons)

KEYWORDS: sports

FOUND IN: Ireland

Roud #17895

RECORDINGS:
Red Mick McDermott, "The Hardy Sons of Dan" (on IRHardySons)
Marge Steiner, "The Hardy Sons of Dan" (on Steiner01)

NOTES [84 words]: Notes to IRHardySons: 'Drumlane, or Droim Leathan, is just a few miles south of Belturbet, in Co. Cavan. The 'Drumlane Sons of O'Connell' formed in 1886, and faded out of existence, probably in the inter-war years. They re-formed in 1966, and its present ground, O'Connell Park, opened in 1986. The GAA (Gaelic Athletic Association) was founded in Thurles, Co Tipperary, on the 1st November 1884, and Drumlane joined in 1888."
For background on Dan O'Connell see the notes to "Daniel O'Connell" (II). - BS

Last updated in version 4.4

File: RcHaSoDa
Hardyknute

DESCRIPTION: "Stately stepp'd he east the wall, And stately stepp'd he west." The hero had thirteen sons; nine are dead. The Norse king comes to invade. Hardyknute is called upon to fight. Others also serve at the Battle of Largs, and the Norse are defeated

AUTHOR: Elizabeth Wardlaw (1677-c.1727, according to Whielaw-Ballads)
EARLIEST DATE: 1724 (Ramsay)
KEYWORDS: battle Scotland
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Oct 2, 1263 - Battle of Largs

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Chambers-ScottishBallads, pp. 335-345, "Hardyknute" (1 text)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads, pp. 205-209, "Hardyknute" (1 text)
Michael Brander, _Scottish and Border Battles and Ballads_, 1975 (page references to the 1993 Barnes & Noble edition), pp. 221-230, "Hardyknute or The Battle of Largs" (1 text)
James Johnson, Editor, _The Scots Musical Museum_ [1853 edition], volume III, #280, p. 289, "Hardyknute; Or, the Battle of Largs" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST MBra221 (Partial)
Roud #8180
NOTES [24 words]: It is widely (I believe universally) agreed that this is not a folk song, but it appears in some old collections, so it goes in the Index. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.0
File: MBra221

Hare of Kilgrain, The

DESCRIPTION: The hunter goes out in pursuit of sport. The hare tells its story of how the dogs pursued it. It leads them on a long chase, and proclaims that it did humans no harm, but at last the hounds catch and kill their innocent prey

AUTHOR: James Sloan?
EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (Sam Henry collection; reportedly written c. 1770)
KEYWORDS: animal death hunting
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H12, p. 31, "The Hare of Kilgrain" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2883
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Innocent Hare" (theme: fatal hare hunt)
cf. "The Granemore Hare" (theme: fatal hare hunt)
cf. "The White Hare" (theme: fatal hare hunt)
NOTES [44 words]: The Henry text appears to be composite; the first two verses are in praise of the hunt and Richard Hunter at its head. The perspective then shifts to the hare, forced to flee and run and at last die.
Nimrod was "a mighty hunter before the Lord" (Genesis 10:8-10). - RBW
File: HHH012

Hare's Dream, The

DESCRIPTION: "On the twenty-seventh of January," the hare is awakened from its dream as the hounds come hunting. The trapped hare complains that the hunters let the fox go free while taking the hare; "All the harm e'er I done was crop the heads o' green kale."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: animal hunting food dog
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H172, pp. 31-32, "The Hare's Dream" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #3574
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bold Reynard the Fox (Tallyho! Hark! Away!)" (lyrics, theme)
cf. "The Innocent Hare" (theme: fatal hare hunt)
cf. "The Hare of Kilgrain" (theme: fatal hare hunt)
cf. "The Granemore Hare" (theme: fatal hare hunt)
cf. "The White Hare" (theme: fatal hare hunt)
cf. "Donagh Hill" (form, hunting theme)
NOTES [58 words]: For the complex relationship between this song and "Bold Reynard the Fox (Tallyho! Hark! Away!)," see the notes to that song.
There is a broadside, NLScotland, Ry.III.a.6(020) "Hare's Dream," unknown, n.d. It is not related; the "Hare" in this case is an Irish-born criminal apprehended in Scotland who dreams of what happened after his crimes. - RBW
File: HHH032A

Hare's Lament, The
DESCRIPTION: An old hare, hiding from poachers and sent by "Queen" Mother Mouse, asks old Pat Bashon for shelter. They recall old times when he chased and fooled the poachers. He goes to the poachers' court and informs for twenty pounds. Happy ending for "haries"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: escape help poaching animal
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan3 500, "The Hare's Lament" (1 text)
Roud #5985
File: GrD3500

Hares on the Mountain
DESCRIPTION: The singer avers that if young women ran like hares on the mountain, if he was a young man he'd go hunting. Likewise if they sang like birds in the bushes he'd beat the bushes, etc. ad (possible) nauseum
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1836 (Samuel Lover's novel _Rory O'More_. See NOTES)
KEYWORDS: sex lyric nonballad animal bird
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South)) Ireland US(NE,SE)
REFERENCES (14 citations):
Bronson (44), "The Twa Magicians" -- the appendix includes 11 versions (#2-#12) which are this song
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads (44), "The Twa Magicians" (3 versions, of which #2 and #12 are this song)
Reeves/Sharp-TheldiomOfThePeople 38, "Hares on the Mountains" (4 texts)
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 63, "Hares on the Mountains" (1 text)
Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 55, "Hares on the Mountain"; 64, "Sally My Dear" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 224, "If Pretty Maids Could Sing" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 357)
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 63, "Hares on the Mountains" (1 text)
Sharp-OneHundredEnglishFolksongs 63, "Hares on the Mountains"; 64, "O Sally, My Dear" (2 texts, 2 tunes) {Bronson's #2, #12}
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 169, "Blackbirds and Thrushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 50, "Blackbirds and Thrushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 173, "Sally My Dear" (1 text)
DT, HARESMTN* SALLYDR*
ADDITIONAL: Samuel Lover, Rory O'More (London, 1839 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 109-110, ("Oh! if all the young maidens was blackbirds and thrishes [sic]") (1 text)
Roud #329
RECORDINGS:
Dickie Lashbrook, "Blackbirds and Thrushes" (on FSB2CD)
Pete Seeger, "Sally My Dear" (on PeteSeeger06, PeteSeegerCD01) (on PeteSeeger14)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Roll Your Leg Over" (form, theme)
cf. "Creeping and Crawling" (tune)
cf. "The Twa Magicians" [Child 44]
NOTES [109 words]: It has been theorized that this song descends from "The Twa Magicians" [Child 44] (so, for instance, Bronson, who prints this piece as an appendix to that ballad). Frankly, I don't see it. More likely is the connection with "Creeping and Crawling (The Knife in the Window)," with which it shares a tune. But even they have separate plots. - RBW
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads: "Sometimes attributed to Samuel Lover (1797-1865) as he printed it in his novel Rory O More, but is probably an older ballad rewritten. He was a versatile genius, poet, artist, novelist, folk-lorist and antiquarian." See my speculation on Lover for "Widow Machree (II)." - BS
Last updated in version 6.1
File: ShH63

Hark from the Tomb

DESCRIPTION: "Hark from the tomb a doleful sound, My ears attend the cry, Ye living man, come view the ground Where you must shortly lie," "Grant us the power of quickening grace To fit our souls to fly, Then when we drop this dying flesh We'll rise above the sky"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1836 (Methodist Hymnal)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad death
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Randolph 638, "Hark from the Tomb" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Abernethy-SinginTexas, pp. 112-114, "Hark! from the Tomb" (1 text, 1 tune, a reprint of a shape note version)
Roud #7563
NOTES [46 words]: Sometimes credited, seemingly on inadequate evidence, to John or Charles Wesley. In the Sacred Harp, where it bears the tune "Plenary," the words are said to be by Isaac Watts, with the tune by A. Clark. The Missouri Harmony uses the tunes "Funeral Thought" and "New Durham." - RBW
Last updated in version 4.5
File: R638

Hark the Robbers

DESCRIPTION: "Hark the robbers coming through, coming through, coming through, Hark the robbers... My fair lady," "What have the robbers done to you?" "You have stole my watch and chain." "Off to prison you must go." "Here's a prisoner we have got"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1895 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)
KEYWORDS: playparty robbery prison
FOUND IN: Britain(England(All)) Ireland New Zealand
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, pp. 32-33, "(Here's a prisoner we have got)," "(What have the robbers done to you)" (2 texts)
Roud #13172
File: SuSm032
Hark, Hark, the Dogs Do Bark
DESCRIPTION: "Hark, hark, the dogs do bark, The beggars are coming to town, Some in rags, and some in jags, And one in a velvet gown."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1844 (Halliwell)
KEYWORDS: dog animal begging clothes travel
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (4 citations):
- Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 140, "Hark, Hark" (1 text)
- Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #84, pp. 84-85, "(Hark, hark, the dogs do bark)"
- Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel, p. 55, "Hark, Hark, the Dogs Do Bark" (1 text)
- Dolby-OrangesAndLemons, p. 30, "Hark, Hark, the Dogs Do Bark" (1 text)
Roud #19689
ALTERNATE TITLES:
- Rowley Poley
NOTES [106 words]: Reportedly first found in the 1788 Tommy Thumb's Song-Book, but I have been unable to verify this.
One hypothesis is that the "beggars" referred to here are the followers of William III of Orange, hangers-on who showed up after the Glorious Revolution of 1688. If we want to give it a political context of a foreign monarch, though, I'd think George I (reigned 1714-1727) a better bet -- he was more foreign, and had a more useless company. Another hypothesis links it with the Dissolution of the Monasteries and the monks and nuns who lost their livelihood and were forced to beg. I can't claim to find any of this very convincing. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.3
File: 002140

Hark, Sweet Maid, the Trumpet's Sound
DESCRIPTION: "Hark, sweet maid, the trumpet's sound, And honor calls to war, Now Love I leave, perhaps for wounds...." The writer asks the girl not to sigh; he has devoted his life first to fame, and he must fight for American liberty
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales; written before 1783)
KEYWORDS: love soldier separation patriotic
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales, p. 339, "(no title)" (1 text)
File: TNY339A

Hark! Listen to the Trumpeters
DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "They look like men (x3) of war; Armed and dressed in uniform, They look like men of war." Verses: "Trumpeters... call for volunteers" Officers enlist men to march to Canaan. The singer will enlist. "We need no cowards." Jesus is the general
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1844 (c. 1830?) (Camp-Meeting Chorister)
KEYWORDS: army recruiting war freedom nonballad religious soldier
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
- Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, pp. 180-181, "They Look Like Men of War (The Enlisted Soldiers)" (1 text, 1 tune; p. 145 in the 1901 edition)
- ADDITIONAL: Camp-Meeting Chorister (Philadelphia: W.A. Leary, 1844 (also c.1830) ("Digitized by Internet Archive")], #108 pp. 102-103, ("Hark! Listen to the Trumpeters")
- Zion's Praises (Lamont: Herald Publishing House, 1903 ("Digitized by Internet Archive"), #181, "Listen to the Trumpeters"
- William Booth, Salvation Army Songs (London: The Salvation Army Book Department, 1911 ("Digitized by Internet Archive")), #532 p. 374, ("Hark! listen to the trumpeters")
Roud #15230
Hark! The Herald Angels Sing

DESCRIPTION: "Hark! The herald angels sing, Glory (be) to the new-born King." In praise of the baby Jesus, the "incarnate deity, pleased as man with man to dwell." The song offers both praise and thanks for the coming of Jesus

AUTHOR: Words: Charles Wesley (1707-1788) (adapted by George Whitefield) / Music: Felix Mendelssohn (1808-1847)

EARLIEST DATE: 1739 ("Hymns and Sacred Poems")

KEYWORDS: Christmas nonballad religious

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (9 citations):
- Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, pp. 67-68, "Ark, Ark, the 'Eavenly Angels Sing" (1 short text, 1 tune, which appears to be a badly damaged remnant of this song; the informant was 87)
- Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #211, "Hark! The Herald Angels Sing" (1 text)
- Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 264, "Hark! The Herald Angels Sing" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 381, "Hark! The Herald Angels Sing" (1 text)
- Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, pp. 269-270, "Hark! The Herald Angels Sing"

ADDITIONAL: John Julian, editor, _A Dictionary of Hymnology_, 1892; second edition 1907 (I use the 1957 Dover edition in two volumes), p. 487, "Hark, how all the welkin rings" (2 parallel texts, one Wesley's and one closer to the "common" version)

Charles Johnson, One Hundred and One Famous Hymns (Hallberg, 1982), pp. 46-47, "Hard, the Herald Angels Sing" (1 text, 1 tune)

Ian Bradley, _The Penguin Book of Carols_ (1999), #32, "Hard, the Herald Angels Sing" (1 text); cf. #31, "Hark, How All the Welkin Rings" (1 text)

Roud #8337

SAME TUNE:
- Uncle Joe and Aunty Mabel (File: EM374)
- Beecham's Pills (Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 37)
- Make New Friends But Keep The Old (partial tune) (DT, NEWFRNDS*, GSFRIEND*)

NOTES [426 words]: In the Sacred Harp, this is given the tune "Cookham." It's not the standard Mendelssohn melody.

The original Charles Wesley text might come as a surprise; the title line is "Hark how all the welkin rings, 'Glory to the king of kings,'" then turns to more familiar lines. This text can be found, e.g., in the _Penguin Book of Carols_. Julian, p. 487, has a detailed comparison of the Wesley text and the "improved" version. Some of these changes even have theological implications -- e.g. Wesley wrote one line as "Veil'd in flesh, the Godhead see" (which is the way I've always heard it), but one text makes this "Veil'd in flesh the Godhead HE."

Even Methodists tend to sing the version adapted by M. Madan.

Nor was Madan's the last word; one George D. Elderkin turned this into a thorough mess that begins "Hark! the herald angels sing, Jesus, the light of the world"; if you want to expose yourself to that, see Warren-Spirit, pp. 145-147.

The "welkin" is the firmament or the dome of heaven; George Whitefield apparently changed it (and made sundry lesser changes) not because the word was archaic because it didn't fit his theology; Wesley was of course Arminian (meaning that human beings actually had some role in gaining, or at least accepting, salvation), but Whitefield was pure Calvinist, meaning that he believed in salvation by God's caprice, with no amount of human action having anything to do with it. (As you can probably tell, I am not a Calvinist.)

It was a fellow by the name of William Hayman Cummings (1831-1915), who had performed under Mendelssohn's direction, who mated the Wesley/Whitefield words with the Mendelssohn melody, publishing the result in 1856. Only then did the song become popular. McKim, p. 31, says that Mendelssohn had written the tune for a male chorus and orchestra; "Festgesang an die Kunstler" was written (slightly prematurely) to celebrate the four hundredth anniversary of printing with movable type. Since Mendelssohn died, while still in his thirties, in 1847, he did not see the words fitted to his tune. Which is perhaps just as well; according to Stulken, p. 162, Mendelssohn did not think the tune suitable for sacred use.

Reynolds, p. 82, says that the text had previously been published with the tune "Hendon," also used for "Ask ye what great thing I know."

According to Julian, p. 1569, Charles Wordsworth translated this into Latin as "Audite! cantant Angeli praeconium."

For the life of Charles Wesley, author of (some of) the lyrics of this piece, see the notes to "Jesus Lover of My Soul." - RBW

Bibliography

- Julian: John Julian, editor, A Dictionary of Hymnology, 1892; second edition 1907 (I use the 1957 Dover edition in two volumes)

Last updated in version 6.0
File: FSWB381C

Harmless Young Jim

DESCRIPTION: Jim says to a girl, "My name it is harmless Young Jim" and offers to "take you to the bakery and buy you a bun." She resists. He persists. They marry and have a son. "I'm sure I'd been better to leave her alone"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: courting marriage sex childbirth bawdy wordplay food
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 282-283, "Harmless Young Jim" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9968
RECORDINGS:
Mrs. George Decker, "Harmless Young Jim" (on PeacockCDROM)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Blackberry Grove" (innuendoes)
cf. "Buttercup Joe" (innuendoes)
File: Pea282

Harness up Yo' Hosses

DESCRIPTION: "Harness up yo' hosses, Hey, o hey! Harness up yo' hosses, We'll teach you how ter drive 'em, Hey, oh hey! We'll fight fur Uncle Sam."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Brown)
KEYWORDS: horse work fight Civilwar
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 373, "Harness up Yo' Hosses" (1 fragment)
Roud #11748
NOTES [52 words]: Brown's text is too short for certainty, but it seems reasonable to assume that this refers to the American Civil War and the way "contrabands" (escaped or captured slaves) were treated: The Federals quickly began to use them as teamsters, and by the middle of the war was enlisting them as soldiers as well. - RBW
Harp of Old Erin, The
DESCRIPTION: "The Harp of Old Erin will be heard once again, And will twine with the Shamrock in every green glen, And the round tower and wolf-dog in sunshine will be With Home Rule for Ireland and Ireland free"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads)
KEYWORDS: Ireland patriotic political
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads, p. 231, "The Harp of Old Erin" (1 fragment)
NOTES [13 words]: The current description is all of the OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads fragment. - BS

Harp on the Willow, The DESCRIPTION: "Come brethren and sisters, and hear me relate, And I will inform you of my present state." The singer trusted Jesus, but now feels rejected, "My harp on the willow seems to be hung." The singer begs to be restored to the former state of grace
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1940 (Randolph)
KEYWORDS: religious request harp
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Randolph 655, "The Harp on the Willow" (1 text)
Roud #7576
NOTES [39 words]: This song contains assorted allusions to Psalm 137 (e.g. the harp on the willow, Psalm 137:2), but they seem almost incidental to the plot -- the piece just uses them as the coin of the realm, rather than actively adopting the psalm. - RBW

Harp or Lion
DESCRIPTION: The singer sees in the news that Irishmen "despise their country's story, All they love is England's glory, Ha-ha-ha!" Shame on O Neill, Emmet, Tone and Ninety-eight. We should replace "our old green banner" with "the mangy British lion! Ha-ha-hah!"
EARLIEST DATE: 1899 (_Songs and Poems_ by T.D.S., according to OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads)
KEYWORDS: England Ireland humorous nonballad patriotic
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 47, "Harp or Lion" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9763
NOTES [20 words]: Sullivan is the author of a number of Irish patriotic poems, of which "God Save Ireland" is probably the best-known. - RBW

Harp That Once Through Tara's Halls, The
DESCRIPTION: "The harp that once through Tara's halls The soul of music shed Now hangs as mute on Tara's walls As tho' that soul were fled." Tara's glory is fled, and the only sign that freedom still exists "Is when some heart, indignant, breaks."
AUTHOR: Thomas Moore (1779-1852)
EARLIEST DATE: 1846 (Moore-IrishMelodies-1846)
KEYWORDS: harp music freedom nonballad
Harrison Campaign Song

DESCRIPTION: "A farmer there was, who lived at North Bend"; he regrettfully leaves his log cabin to go to Washington. Coming to the White House, he sets everyone astir. When they prove unable to dislodge them, he warns them to get hard cider by March fourth

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1912 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)

KEYWORDS: political

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Dec 2, 1840 - William Henry Harrison defeats Martin Van Buren
Mar 4, 1841 - Harrison (the first Whig to be elected President) is inaugurated. He gives a rambling inaugural address in a rainstorm and catches cold
April 4, 1841 - Harrison dies of pneumonia, making him the first president to fail to complete his term. After some hesitation, Vice President John Tyler is allowed to succeed as President

Harrison Town
DESCRIPTION: The singer (warns against bad company which led him to break the law). He now has been captured and faces prison. He hopes that his horse, which served him so well, will be well cared for. (He promises to live a reformed life with his girl when released)

Harrowing Time
DESCRIPTION: A bothy ballad describing spring harrowing. "Cauld winter it is now awa', And spring has come again."
Harry Bale (Dale, Bail, Bell) [Laws C13]

DESCRIPTION: The orphan Harry Bahel is at work in a sawmill when he is dragged onto the saw. He dies the next day and is buried as his siblings grieve

AUTHOR: Charles Bahel?

EARLIEST DATE: 1918 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)

KEYWORDS: orphan death burial technology lumbering grief

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
April 1879 - Death of Harry Bahel, at age 19, in Arcadia Township, Lapeer County, Michigan

FOUND IN: US(MW,So) Canada(Mar,Ont)

REFERENCES (14 citations):
Laws C13, "Harry Bale (Dale, Bail, Bell)"
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 418-419, "Harry Bale" (1 text, in which the hero is called "Harry Dale")
Fowke-LumberingSongsFromTheNorthernWoods #33, "Harry Bale" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 80, "The Little Shingle Mill (The Death of Harry Vail)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Rickaby-BalladsAndSongsOfTheShantyBoy 27, "Harry Bail" (1 text)
Rickaby/Dykstra/Leary-PineryBoys-SongsSongcatchingInLumberjackEra 27, "Harry Bail" (1 text)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 113, "Harry Bail" (1 text plus 2 excerpts and mention of 1 more, 1 tune)
Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks 61, "Harry Bail" (1 text, 1 tune)
Beck-TheyKnewPaulBunyan, pp. 141-144, "Harry Bahel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Beck-LoreOfTheLumberCamps 75, "Harry Bail" (1 text, 1 tune)
Finger-FrontierBallads, pp. 33-35, "Harry Bale" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 412-413, "Harry Bahel (Bail)" (1 text)
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, p. 222, "Harry Bale" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 700, HARYBALE

Roud #2217

CROSS-REFERENCES:

NOTES [67 words]: Two of Gardner and Chickering's informants, John B. Redhead and William Rabidue, both of whom worked in lumber mills in the general vicinity, credit this to Harry Bahel's brother Charlie (Rabidue, who supplied Gardner and Chickering's main text, also mentions a Johnny Coffey). There does not seem to be any actual proof of this.

Beck-LoreOfTheLumberCamps cites a copy of Harry Bahel's tombstone. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2

File: LC13

Harry Dunn (The Hanging Limb) [Laws C14]

DESCRIPTION: Harry Dunn has gone to work in the woods of Michigan despite his mother's advice. One day he dreams that there is trouble at home. On that very day he is killed by a falling branch. His parents are shocked to death when his body arrives

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (Rickaby-BalladsAndSongsOfTheShantyBoy)
Harry Flood's Election Song

DESCRIPTION: "Ye lovers of trade and every handicraft" strike up the band for Harry Flood. "Our freedom's declared, we'll chase dull sorrows, All cares we'll banish to feast and banquet." Listeners are urged to toast Harry Flood

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1771 (OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads)

KEYWORDS: Ireland nonballad political

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 86, "Harry Flood's Election Song" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #9770

NOTES [169 words]: OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads: "This fragment of an election song for the famous Henry Flood (1732-1791) undoubtedly dates back at least to 1770." - BS

It is interesting to speculate on just when Flood or his supporters would have used this song. He did not run for office very often; when he first entered the Irish parliament, there was no upper limit on how long a parliament could sit.

He first became a member of parliament in 1759, sponsored by a landowner interest. A fine orator, he argued vigorously for reforms and increased rights for the Irish (at least for Protestants). In 1775, though, Flood was induced to join the establishment as vice-treasurer, and he was no longer in position to oppose the existing order. He left the government in 1781, eventually purchasing a seat in the British parliament. (His gifts as a speaker and lawyer had made him rich), but he was no longer particularly important as a reformer; his causes were taken over by Henry Grattan (for whom see "Ireland’s Glory"). - RBW

File: OLCm086
Harry Hayward Song, The

DESCRIPTION: "Minneapolis was excited, And for many miles around, For a terrible crime committed." "Kit" goes riding, and is found shot and beaten to death. The rest of the song thunders at the criminal

AUTHOR: probably Joseph Vincent Brooks

EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (Minneapolis Journal); probably published 1895

KEYWORDS: homicide

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
December 1895 - Execution of Harry Hayward for the murder of Kitty Ging

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
- Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, p. 96-99, "(The Harry Hayward Song)" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 463-464, "The Fatal Ride" (1 text)

ADDITIONAL: Shawn Francis Peters, _The Infamous Harry Hayward: A True Account of Murder and Mesmerism in Gilded Age Minneapolis_, University of Minnesota Press, 2018, pp. 259-260, "(no title)" (1 text)
- Walter N. Trenerry, _Murder in Minnesota_ (Minnesota Historical Society Press, 1985), pp. 154-155, "(no title)" (1 text)

Roud #22300

NOTES [4187 words]: I'm not sure I've ever seen a murder ballad with fewer facts mixed in with more moralizing. The version printed by Burt-AmericanMurderBallads has only a partial name of the victim, no name for the murderer, no real background, no date, and no aftermath. And not much poetry, either.

Burt-AmericanMurderBallads states that Harry Hayward was (and so would remain as of 2020), the last man legally hanged (as opposed to lynched) in Minnesota. This statement is incorrect; the death penalty was not abolished until 1911 (Blegen, p. 439), and according Trenerry pp. 223-227, there were ten executions after Hayward's date with a hempen necktie, and all are described as hangings. The Hayward case did produce a change, though; many legislators, including one of Hayward's attorneys, passed a law banning public hangings -- Hayward was hung on an indoor rather than an outdoor scaffold, with no press coverage (Peters, pp. 222-223). The crime itself gets little historical attention today; it's not mentioned in Blegen, nor in Norman K. Risjord's _A Popular History of Minnesota_, nor in William E. Lass's _Minnesota: A History_. As of when I first indexed the song, there wasn't even any mention of it on the Minnesota Historical Society's web site that I could find, although I eventually managed to locate a photo of a well-dressed, vaguely handsome young man with a mustache.

This was in strong contrast with the press coverage at the time, which was lurid, and which resulted in at least one contemporary book on the subject, _Harry Hayward_ by Edward H. Goodsell, 1896; it seems to consist mostly of court testimony and transcribed interviews (Goodsell was Hayward's cousin and heard Harry's final confession), but it does have two photos of Hayward, one of his brother Adry, one of Kitty Ging, one of the actual murderer Claus Blixt, and a few others, mostly people involved in prosecuting the crime. It also has a laughable appendix by W. A. Jones, M.D., "A Mental Scientist," about the physiology of Hayward's brain, which labels Hayward "a degenerate." (The Introduction also talks about Hayward's psychology, declaring "if society is to shield itself against another Harry Hayward it must bring some more scientific analysis to bear on the subject than the artless prattle of the motto book." A century and a quarter later, I write this sentence on the day of yet another mass shooting, so that didn't work too well....)

In April 2018, long after the first draft of this entry was written, Shawn Francis Peters published _The Infamous Harry Hayward: A True Account of Murder and Mesmerism in Gilded Age Minneapolis_. This is now clearly the key reference, but this entry was originally written based on the account in Trenerry. I have supplemented it from Peters.

In 1894, Harry Hayward and Katherine "Kitty" Ging were both 29 years old and unmarried. Hayward is said to have been handsome (a statement his photograph bears out), vain, and a fan of high living (Peters, pp. 49-50). He was the son of William W. Hayward, who owned and managed the "Ozark Flats" or "Bellevue Hotel" (Trenerry, p. 135) -- a building then just two years old. It's still there today, although I can't see either name on it; it appears the ground floor has been heavily remodeled and as of 2018 contains a coffee shop and a bar/restaurant. Hayward was "a professional gambler, a ne'er-do-well, and an associate of petty crooks" (Trenerry, p. 135); at his trial, he admitted to never learning a trade, and allowed that he had not had real work for years (Peters, p. 166). He was said to be extremely good with woman, and was around them a lot (Peters, pp. 49-51). He also dealt in counterfeit money, as well as "green goods," which was a scam to exchange good money for bad, or no money at all (Peters, pp. 94-96); this apparently allowed him to keep gambling after he would otherwise have been bankrupt. He had never really held a steady job; his family was sufficiently well-off that his father gave him a building, which he sold to finance his gambling. According to Goodsell, p. 4, he several times declared, "Money was my God."

There seems to be some uncertainty about Ging's legal name. Trenerry calls her "Katherine" and "Kitty"; Peters, "Catherine" and "Kittie." She had come to Minnesota from her family home in New York, and worked as a seamstress and clothing designer; she was apparently quite good at it, but certainly not becoming rich or widely renowned.

Hayward met Kitty Ging in early 1894, and later that year, she moved into Ozark Flats. She worked as a dressmaker, with her niece as an employee, but the niece knew little about her private life (Peters, p. 6).

It appears that Kitty Ging, perhaps tempted by promises of marriage, gave Hayward both money and her body. (The former seems certain. The forensics of 1894 would of course have been unable to prove that Hayward was the one responsible for her not being a virgin. Trenerry's language is very decorous, Peters, p. 5, says explicitly that she was found not to have been pregnant.) On December 3, 1894, a man named William Erhardt got off a streetcar near Lake Calhoun (as it was then called; the name was recently changed to Bda Maka Ska) around 8:25 and prepared to walk home (Peters, p. 1). He was almost run over by a fast-driving buggy, then shortly after came across a body -- the body that would prove to be that of Catherine Ging. It was still warm (Peters, p. 2). He called police; officers Peter Fox and Charles Moore were the first to arrive. It took much longer for a doctor to show up to confirm that she was dead. (Peters, p. 3; Trenerry, p. 137, says the doctor arrived first).

It took some time to identify her; she seems to have carried no identification, although the name "Ging" was eventually found on one document (Peters, p. 4). What really tipped the police off when a buggy she had rented returned empty to its livery stable (the horse knew its way home) and showed signs of violence (Peters, p. 5). With that hint in hand, it was possible to identify the dead woman as Catherine Ging (Peters, p. 6).

She had been shot in the head -- behind the right ear, to be specific (Peters, p. 20), and the body was then dumped from a cart and run over.

Hayward arrived at home soon after the murder and set out to "help" the police. He helped identify the body -- and set up a constant moan about the money she allegedly owed him (Trenerry, pp 138-139; Peters, pp. 14-15). All that talk about money, and his agitation, left the police suspicious (Peters, p. 15). But the newspapers, at least, identified several other suspects -- a couple of ex (or perhaps not-so-ex)-beaus, a girlfriend of one of the other men (Trenerry, p. 140). But all of them had an alibi.

Of course, so did Hayward. At the time of Ging's murder, he had been at a play with another woman (Peters, p. 14) -- and was seen by others while there (Peters, p. 16). What's more, he had spent most of the day out on the town with a friend (Trenerry, pp. 140-141).

Still, there were oddities about his relationship to Ging. She had two $5000 life insurance policies, and Hayward had induced Ging to name him the beneficiary; these were said to be securities for the loan he had allegedly lent her to help her with her business (Peters, p. 16). The loans were said to total $9,500 (although, since they were between private parties, that is a little uncertain; Peters, p. 60) and the only explanation he had for where he had gotten the money was that he had won it at gambling (Peters, pp. 33-34; Trenerry, p. 144, claims that the money was mostly counterfeit, and as we shall see, there is strong evidence that he did deal in counterfeit money). He did at least supply some evidence that he and Ging had had financial dealings (Peters, p. 34).

The treatment of Hayward would probably not pass muster today. The mayor of Minneapolis, William H. Eustis, personally intervened in the case and questioned Hayward (Peters, p. 26), although he of course had no right or reason to do so. Hayward was subjected to extraordinary questioning in the days after the murder even though there was no reason to connect him to the crime except for his financial dealings with Ging (Peters, p. 28). He spent most of December 4 being questioned before being released on December 5 (Peters, p. 29).

As suspicions grew, various people came forward to testify that Hayward had asked them if life insurance could be made out in the name of a non-relative, if it covered murder, and how best to kill a person (Peters, p. 48).

Peters also claims he engaged in a bit of arson-for-profit (Peters, p. 59; according to p. 69, this was his first use of his associate Claus Blixt in a crime, and of course Harry used it to strengthen his control over Blixt, who now had something to lose if he blabbed), and even staged a robbery of Ging that didn't net him much (Peters, p. 60).

Hayward, who never gave a hint to police of any guilt, couldn't keep quiet to others. He had talked to his not-too-clever older brother Adry about killing Ging -- plus supposedly he had discussed methods for murdering someone long before he chose his victim (Trenerry, p. 143). On November 30, before the murder, Adry had talked to a lawyer about Harry's plans -- but the lawyer thought Adry was crazy and did not act at the time (Peters, pp. 44-45).

On December 5, though, the police caught a break. The lawyer who had talked to Adry came forward with his tale. So the police talked to Adry. And Adry told what he knew (Peters, p. 48; Peters, p. 102, says the lawyer was there and urged him to talk); the excuse Adry gave for not doing something earlier was that Harry had mesmerized him (Trenerry, p. 149; Peters, p. 103; Peters adds that the recent publication of George du Maurier's novel Trilby had made the idea of a person exerting a malevolent influence commonplace). That gave the police grounds to arrest Hayward on December 6 (Peters, p. 97). They took in Adry for good measure (Peters, p. 45; although the two were imprisoned together for a time, Adry was eventually moved to a Saint Paul jail; Peters, p. 101).

An employee of the Ozark Flats building, janitor Claus A. Blixt, who managed the Ozark Flats furnace, was arrested the next day (Trenerry, p. 142). He was an immigrant from Sweden who arrived in the U.S. as a young boy around 1860 (he wasn't himself sure of the year; Peters, p. 46). He was not a very reputable type, having had three wives and a wide variety of jobs. Some people think he wasn't too bright, either, and when he was arraigned, his behavior was so strange that there were questions about whether he was in his right mind (Peters, pp. 105-106. His current wife had actually brought him to the attention of the police (Peters, pp. 46-47), and also told them that he had been away from home at the time of the murder (Trenerry, p. 149). Hayward and Blixt were charged with murder on December 13 (Peters, p. 105).

Hayward's solid alibi proved Hayward himself did not commit the murder. Rather than do the deed himself, as the song said, he "found another" to commit the actual killing. The contention was that he had induced Blixt to do the deed (getting him thoroughly drunk to help him along).

Blixt, like Hayward, was subjected to unfair questioning (including showing him an account that made it look as if Harry Hayward had confessed); again, mayor Eustis was involved (Peters, pp. 84-85). Nor did he have a lawyer at the time; indeed, the court case would later have to be delayed until he could find one (Peters, p. 106). Unlike Hayward, Blixt cracked after they threatened his wife.

Blixt would claim that Hayward had himself actually made an attempt to kill Ging, but failed to manage it (Trenerry, p. 145) -- I assume because there were witnesses around. Hayward also, according to Blixt, complained about the way she was always pawing him. A frustrated Hayward, on the day of the murder, decided to make Blixt do the crime, ordering him to drink a whole bottle of whiskey and do the deed that night (according to Peters, p. 75, Blixt managed to dump most of the whiskey -- and, at his trial, Blixt seemed to claim that Hayward had poisoned him; he talked about being sick for many days after the murder; Peters, p. 139). Blixt, in explaining why he went along, also recorded Hayward staring him down and giving him orders -- and threatening to have a gang member murder Blixt (Trenerry, p. 146). Blixt apparently didn't think to ask why Hayward couldn't just have the gang member murder Ging. Hayward also hinted that Blixt's wife could be in trouble if Blixt backed out (Peters, p. 75).

Hayward also promised Blixt $2000 from the insurance money (Trenerry, p. 146). This wasn't the only mention of Harry's alleged gang; Harry, when trying to talk Adry into committing murder, claimed that he had been instrumental in three previous killings (Peters, p. 67; Blixt also had a version of this, in which Hayward committed "only" two murders plus a maiming; Peters, p. 69). If anyone followed up on that testimony to see if Adry or Blixt was telling the truth, it doesn't seem to have been recorded; the newspapers speculated about murders that might have been committed by Hayward (Peters, pp. 90-91), but nothing came of that.

What happened between 7:00 and 9:00 that December night can only be reconstructed from the testimony of Blixt, Adry Hayward, and others. The account on pp. 146-147 of Trenerry seems impossibly complicated: Hayward arranged for Ging to meet Blixt, he told Adry what he was up to, he made noise at Ging's apartment, he met with the woman who was to be his alibi, and he made a spontaneous decision to go the theater!

Blixt, by his own account found it hard to commit the murder, but finally did it, then ran the cart over the body and fled for home. He seems to have abandoned the cart about two miles from the murder scene and walked the rest of the way home, stopping at a bar along the way to try to calm himself down (Peters, pp. 80-81). Blixt made it home around 10:00 p.m. and threw the cartridges he hadn't used in the shooting into the furnace (Peters, p. 82). He soon told Hayward that the deed was done; after that, they would not talk until they faced each other in court (Peters, p. 89).

Blixt's lawyer came up with an interesting variant of the insanity defense: He admitted that Blixt had done it, but claimed that Hayward had hypnotized Blixt, as well as giving him some magic chemical to make it easier for Hayward to control the man (Peters, pp. 107-108). The lawyer did not explain why, if Hayward hypnotized Blixt, he did not order Blixt to forget the fact.

Harry himself lost his original lawyer early on; apparently he told the lawyer the truth about what happened, and the lawyer was too sickened to stay on the case (Peters, pp. 113-114). But his father doted upon Harry so much that he brought in an extremely high-powered attorney, William Wallace Erwin -- even selling the Ozark Flats building to pay him! (Peters, pp. 112-113). The case was so big that it had to be transferred from the courthouse to a labor hall to admit all the spectators (Peters, p. 116).

It's interesting that the state decided to try Hayward and Blixt separately; both cases were offered to the judge on the same day, according to Peters, p. 118, and he took Hayward's first. (Another version has it that the prosecutors wanted to postpone Blixt's trial to make sure he would testify against Hayward, which certainly sounds logical.)

Curiously, Hayward was charged once with inducing Blixt to shoot Ging and once with committing the murder himself. The judge dismissed the second charge after the trial concluded; although Hayward was, in effect, tried on two counts, the jury ended up deliberating on just one (Peters, p. 178).

The trial lasted 46 days and involved the testimony of 136 witnesses (Trener, p. 149), although obviously most of them could only testify to peripheral matters; only Blixt and Adry Hayward could really testify to the crime. Hayward's attorney tried to get Adry Hayward's testimony excluded on the grounds that he was insane (they even had Hayward's mother take the stand on this point -- and to try to prove to the jury that the family believed Harry, not Adry; Peters, pp. 158-159), but the judge rejected all their evidence based on distant relatives and such (Peters, p. 131). Furthermore, they put Harry's father on the stand to claim Adry had talked about robbing trains (Peters, pp. 160-161), but of course he had no supporting evidence.

Harry's attorney also tried to break Blixt down, but it seems to me that the very fact that Blixt was not very bright stood him in good stead; he didn't have the imagination to get caught up in lawyer Erwin's elaborate hypotheticals and wild alternative theories! (Peters, pp. 145-146). When Adry Hayward came to the stand, Erwin tried to break him down, too, and make him look crazy, but again, it didn't work (Peters, pp. 149-151). This was surely important, because the jury might have been disinclined to believe the foreigner Blixt. As lawyer Erwin pointed out, Blixt was a confessed murderer -- hardly an unbiased witness (Peters, p. 187, etc.). It didn't matter.

The trial went badly enough that the defense eventually decided to put Harry on the stand himself (Peters, p. 162). Harry's version was Adry and Blixt had killed Ging (Trener, p. 151; Peters, pp. 131-132; 161-162). And the newspapers thought that he was not convincing in his delivery (Peters, p. 167). Worse, toward the end of the trial, in his anger, he threatened his own brother's life at the trial (Peters, pp. 168-169).

In the end, the testimony of Adry and Blixt plus the miscellaneous other evidence was enough for conviction (the judge actually told the jury to consider whether Adry's testimony corroborated Blixt's; Peters, p. 179). On March 8, 1895, the case went to the jury. They returned a verdict of first degree murder after less than three hours including time for lunch (Trener, p. 151; Peters, p. 180).

Judge Smith had never sentenced a man to death before, and it apparently was an emotional moment for him, but he did it (Peters, p. 186).

After Hayward's conviction, he made various non-legal attempts to get out of prison. One was a simple escape attempt, but another was an attempt to have confederates murder Adry, write a fake confession, and try to make it look like a suicide (Peters, pp. 195-197). None of it worked, of course.

There was an appeal, which delayed the execution, but it was denied, and Hayward went to the gallows on December 11, 1895 (Trener, p. 152). He gave a long confession shortly before his death (Trener, p. 153); this is reproduced by Goodsell. It took many hours to gather it all, and it describes many of his misdeeds, including, yes, additional murders, these committed with his own hand (Peters, pp. 231-237). It was called a confession, but Goodsell declares on p. 7, "Harry Hayward's ante-mortem statement can hardly be called a confession. There was no contrition, no regret, no remorse" -- a statement Trener agrees with. He was a man obsessed with money, thrilled by gambling, and clearly promiscuous, and he saw nothing wrong with that; he was willing to do what it took to feed his habits; as he said, "Money was always foremost in my mind, and girls next, and then my disposition to travel" (Peters, p. 234).

Toward the end, he reported, "Although I believe there is no God, and stand prepared to meet anything that comes after death square in the face, I think that if there is a God he certainly will not blame me for these things, as I have honestly followed the dictates of my conscience" (Peters, pp. 241-242).
There had been some discussion of Harry's mental state (Peters, p. 205). He grew more disturbed after the conviction, and when Adry visited him (at Harry's invitation), he tore into him (Peters, pp. 207-209). A third brother, Thaddeus, doubted the truth of his final interview (Peters, p. 243). He showed other signs of delusions and mental disorder. This led some to discuss a commutation of Harry's death sentence to life imprisonment -- but apparently at least some of Harry's tantrum was play-acting in hopes of just that (Peters, pp. 210-211. Peters, starting on p. 215, has an extended discussion of whether Harry was a psychopath. This is the one area where Peters did not do proper research -- psychopathy is not a recognized psychiatric diagnosis, and Peters fails to offer the correct diagnosis of Antisocial Personality Disorder. I'll spare you the details.)

It should be noted that Antisocial Personality Disorder (unlike, say, schizophrenia) is not a defense against murder charges, since those who suffer from APD do not experience delusions. There is no question but that Harry met the "McNaughton standard" of moral culpability -- he knew what murder was, and that society opposed it (Peters, p. 214). By the standards of the time, he certainly deserved execution.

That was the fate he met in the early morning (shortly after 2:00 a.m.) of December 11, 1895. His last words were directed to one of the deputies running the hanging: "Now, Meegarden go ahead. Keep up your courage, gentlemen. Pull her tight. I'll stand pat" (Peters, p. 249). Sadly for Hayward, the execution was botched -- I would guess that there wasn't room, in the indoor execution chamber, for a good drop. Hayward's neck was not broken; he was strangled. It took thirteen minutes for him to stop breathing (Peters, p. 250).

There were stories at the time that someone had smuggled away Hayward's body and resurrected it; Trenerry says that this account was still in circulation in 1962 (Trenerry, p. 154). I've never heard it, so the tale presumably died in the half century since then. But he seems to have managed to have an affair while in prison (Peters, pp. 217-220) -- and he also tried to claim the life insurance payment for Kitty Ging! (Peters, p. 220). Others -- notably Kitty's twin sister Julia -- also claimed the insurance, but since Hayward was the only listed beneficiary, the final result was that no one collected (Peters, p. 221).

Apparently someone managed to make an Edison cylinder of Hayward talking in the days before his death; it reveals his ongoing anger (Peters, pp. 228-229; p. 229 has a photo of the cylinder). After Hayward was convicted, it was Blixt's turn to go on trial. He had earlier pleaded not guilty to murder, but when the case came before the judge (a different judge than the one who tried Hayward), Blixt changed his plea to guilty (Peters, p. 189). That left the interesting question of the sentence. Blixt, not Hayward, was the actual murderer, so his actual crime was worse -- but he hadn't wanted to do it, so Hayward's intentions were worse. The prosecutors begged the judge to give Blixt a lighter sentence. The judge thought the crime deserved death. But, in the end, Judge Pond sentenced Blixt to life imprisonment (Peters, pp. 190-191). There was an attempt to lynch him on the way to the prison, but he made it (Peters, p. 193) to Stillwater Prison (where, incidentally, the Younger Brothers were also incarcerated at this time). He went insane some time before his death, according to Trenerry, p. 154, although Peters doesn't mention this. (Sort of makes you wonder about the hotel where Adry and Harry Hayward lived and Blixt worked, doesn't it? Was there perhaps a mercury source somewhere nearby?"

It's hard to believe this feeble piece of poetry could be traditional, but Trenerry's text, from the 1924 Minneapolis Journal, differs substantially from Burt-AmericanMurderBallads's in the later stanzas. I doubt we can find out much more about Trenerry's version; the Minneapolis Journal, from which it is derived, ceased publication before I was born. Burt-AmericanMurderBallads does not mention the fact, but the tune appears to be "The Fatal Wedding," which was published and became very popular just a few year before the Ging murder. Although Burt-AmericanMurderBallads does not mention it, it appears we can finally reconstruct the history of the song. Dunn, p. 141, describes an advertisement in the Brainerd Weekly Journal of a song called "The Fatal Ride": "It was written by one 'Marius' to words by Joseph Vincent Brookes who... was formerly in the restaurant business in [Brainerd] and locally celebrated as a 'tragic poet.' The front page of this song describing the notorious murder in Minneapolis of Kitty Ging by Harry Hayward was said to have been decorated 'with a very fine picture of the buckskin horse and carriage that were used when Miss Ging rode to her death.'"

The description is surely of this song, although neither Dunn nor I have been able to locate the sheet music. But the evidence seems sufficient to list Brookes as the probable author of the words. Peters, p. 47, has a photo of Blixt around the time of the crime. P. 11 has a photo of Ging. P. 30 has a photo of the horse and carriage in which she took her final ride, as well as some newspaper engravings based on those photos. It appears Trenerry reproduces some of the latter as well. - RBW

Bibliography
Harry Lumsdale's Courtship

DESCRIPTION: "First when Harry cam' to Clatt," he asks bonnie Jean, "wilt thou go Up to Auchindoir we’ me?" Jean and her mother hesitate. Harry decides to turn to Betty Brown. After he leaves, Jeannie says, "O for him back again!"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1908 (Greig/Duncan4)

KEYWORDS: love courting mother rejection separation

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (4 citations):
- Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #32, p. 3, ("O Jeannie will ye go, Go to Auchindoir wi’ me?") (1 fragment)
- Greig/Duncan4 766, "Harry Lumsden," Greig/Duncan8 Addenda, "Harry Lumsden" (2 texts)
- Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 427-429, "Harry Lumsdale's Courtship" (1 text)

ADDITIONAL: James Hogg and William Motherwell, editors, The Works of Robert Burns (Glasgow, 1841 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol. II, pp. 197-200, ("First when Harry came to Clatt") (1 text)

Roud #6186

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Highland Harry

NOTES [175 words]: Ord-BothySongsAndBallads describes this as the original for Burns's "My Harry Was a Gallant Gay" (aka "Highland Harry.") This strikes me as unlikely. The common material is a single verse, near the end of Ord's text and clearly not integral to it; it seems more likely that "Highland Harry" is a genuine traditional song and that Ord's obscure poem has picked up its chorus. - RBW

Burns says, "The chorus I picked up from an old woman in Dunblane; the rest of the song is mine." The quote is from Cunningham [probably The Complete Works of Robert Burns 1835] in Hogg and Motherwell. That "chorus" is from "Harry Lumsdale's Courtship."

Hogg and Motherwell tell the story that Harry "was the second son of a Highland chieftain who came down to the Garioch, a district in Aberdeenshire, and made love to Miss Jeanie Gordon, daughter to the laird of Knockhaspie. This lady ... was afterwards married to her cousin Habichie Gordon [who later "lopped off several of Lumsdale's fingers" when the couple accidentally met, leading to Lumsdale's death]. - BS

Last updated in version 2.6

File: Ord427

Harry Lyle's Last Train Ride

DESCRIPTION: "On a cold and dark stormy evening Just before the close of day, There came Harry Lyle and Dillard, And with Anderson they rode away." They travel far, then the train goes off the rail into the river. Harry suffers a fatal head wound. Listeners are warned

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1966 (Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol1)

KEYWORDS: train wreck death

FOUND IN: US(Ap)
Harry Orchard

DESCRIPTION: "Harry Orchard is in prison, The reason you all know; He killed Frank Steunenberg...." "He set his bomb out carefully." "Harry blamed the Wobblies." "The chiefs were brought to Denver... Bill Haywood and George Pettybone Were brought to Idyho."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Burt-AmericanMurderBallads)

KEYWORDS: homicide execution punishment IWW trial execution sabotage

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1897-1901 - Frank R. Steunenberg's term as governor of Idaho
Dec 30, 1905 - Steunenberg killed by a bomb blast at his home. Harry Orchard, his accused murderer, would spend the rest of his life in prison.
1906-1907 - Trials of the IWW officials for complicity in Steunenberg's murder

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 93-95, "(The Song of Harry Orchard)" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, p 585, "The Song of Harry Orchard" (1 text)
Roud #4105

NOTES [5955 words]: There is a good Wikipedia article about Harry Orchard; there is also a huge book (800+ pages!) about the whole assassination and trial. J. Anthony Lukas, Big Trouble: A Murder in a Small Western Town Sets Off a Struggle for the Soul of America. Orchard's memoir, The Confessions and Autobiography of Harry Orchard (1907), is out of copyright and is available on Google Books and in print in a lot of cheap photocopy editions, although the consensus seems to be that it is utterly unreliable -- and 80% of it covers the period before the assassination anyway. There is also Harry Orchard: The Man God Made Again, by Orchard and Leroy Edwin Froom, which sounds deadly and is from 1952, so it's still under copyright. Frank Steunenberg Jr. eventually published The Martyr of Idaho about his father in 1974; I have not seen it, but one wonders what the son could remember after all that time....

Frank Steunenberg had been involved in Idaho state politics literally from the beginning; he was a delegate to Idaho's constitutional convention, and he was a member of the very first state legislature (Lukas, p. 39; Riffenburgh, p. 263). Curiously, he was a Democrat, even though his father and brothers were Republicans (Lukas, pp. 39-40) -- but that may have been smart, given that Idaho would not vote for a Republican for President until 1904. He early on obtained a spot as Secretary to the Democratic State Committee, which proved a stepstone to the governorship (Lukas, p. 40).

Interestingly, after his term as governor (1897-1901), he seemed to lose his touch. A Senate run failed, and the state Democratic party fell in behind other leaders. He had to scramble so hard to find money that he became part of a timber syndicate that eventually wound up under criminal investigation; he might have ended up on trial if he hadn't been dead by then (Lukas, pp. 744-745). Steunenberg, during his term as governor of Idaho, had made difficulties for the Western Federation of Miners -- a group that had already suffered in and been effectively driven out of Colorado (Riffenburgh, p. 254). He was certainly heavily involved in business; he and his brothers owned and managed a bank, and Frank also owned a large farm, plus he lived on another, smaller, farm with a very large house and a servant (Lukas, pp. 16-17). And he had a lot of real estate involvement. Lukas, p. 39, estimates his net worth at $55,000 -- and that's 1905 gold dollars, so he would be worth substantially more than a million dollars today.

I find it interesting that the wife he had married in 1885, Eveline Belle Keppel, was his first cousin (Lukas, p. 30) -- and she ended up a religious fanatic; some of her relations thought she had "gone off the deep end," and it is said that she had given up "conjugal relations" with her husband because of her faith (Lukas, p. 88). Steunenberg himself did not follow in her religious bent, but one wonders if he might not have had a tendency toward fanaticism in pursuit of wealth.

Idaho's economy was largely driven by mining. The Pinkertons -- who by this time were more a corporate security firm than an investigative agency -- had been involved in the Idaho mining region since the early 1890s, when agent Charles Angelo Siringo infiltrated the mine organizations (Lukas, p. 102). He had helped tip the owners off to an upcoming labor action that had looked like it would work -- until President Benjamin Harrison had sent in the troops (Lukas, p. 103). The outgunned miners had seen little choice but to form a larger union, the Western Federation of Miners (Lukas, p. 104).

It was in this volatile climate that Frank Steunenberg had run for governor. The Populists were strong in the state -- they had actually taken the state in the 1892 Presidential election (PresElections, p. 1784) -- so the Democrats and Populists formed a fusion ticket in 1896, with the Democrats being allocated the governorship and several down-ballot offices and the Populists being allowed the state's one congressman and being promised the senate seat (Lukas, p. 107) if the combined party won the legislature, which at that time was still responsible for naming Senators. Steunenberg was a Democrat, not a Populist, but he was a believer in Free Silver, so the Free Silver forces that supported William Jennings Bryan thought they could accept him (Lukas, p. 107). It was a big year for the fusion ticket; they took more than 75% of the Presidential votes (PresElections, p. 1874), and Steunenberg's margin was comparable (22096 to 6441); the fusion ticket also won all but one seat in the state legislature (Lukas, p. 108). That proved to be the easy part for the coalition.... The labor violence continued in northern Idaho, and the Populists and Democrats split. Steunenberg won re-election in 1898, but this time, it was a close contest (Lukas, p. 109; Riffenburgh, p. 263, attributes his survival to pro-Silver Republicans who backed him against their party).

When the Western Federation of Miners had struck against the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mine Company in 1899, and blew up a mine plant (Lukas, pp. 113-115, Riffenburgh, p. 263), "Steunenberg obtained Federal troops [most of the National Guard was away fighting the Spanish-American War] under the command of Gen. H. C. Merriam, and martial law was declared. Many union participants fled to British Columbia or Montana, but hundreds of miners were gathered up and put in 'bullpens'.... With the presence of the troops, the WFM was nearly forced out of existence. No one could work in the mines unless they signed an oath declaring that they did not belong to the WFM and that they had not participated in the bombings" (Peterson, p. 111). Merriam, who had served since the Civil War, brought in eight companies of Black troops plus some odds and ends to control the violence (Lukas, pp. 117-118). He, and the governor's political operatives in charge, acted with extraordinary repressiveness, depopulating a whole miners' town and sending hundreds upon hundreds of men to what was, in effect, a concentration camp (Lukas, pp. 143-147). The miners had been violent; the response was, by the sound of it, even worse. And Steunenberg, although he denied that he was opposed to organized labor, told a reporter that he intended to "totally eradicate from this community a class of criminals who have for years been committing murders and other crimes in open violation of the law" (Lukas, p. 147). And yet, when the actual criminal justice system started to look at the rounded-up miners, it charged only thirteen and convicted only ten, and those on minor charges (Lukas, p. 149). Undoubtedly there were some men who should have been charged with sabotage and destruction of property, but most of those imprisoned were innocent.

Of course, a few minor convictions were not very satisfying, so Steunenberg and others insisted on trying for something bigger. Helped by a $32,000 contribution by the mine owners to the prosecution, and despite a complete lack of direct culpatory evidence, the first man tried, "[Paul] Corcoran got seventeen years at hard labor -- an object lesson in the dangers of aggressive unionism in the Steunenberg era" (Lukas, p. 149. Fortunately, the eight who were next in line to be tried managed a mass escape; Lukas, p. 150).

Steunenberg, the former populist, considered fair-minded, now showed a completely different face, telling a congressional investigation committee that looked into the violence: "I assume responsibility for every arrest that was made in Shoshone County, whether by General Merriam or anybody else" (Lukas, p. 153). Over the next several weeks, Steunenberg received many death threats (Lukas, pp. 153-154). But nothing happened for the next several years.

On December 30, 1905 (ironically, shortly after he renewed his life insurance), Steunenberg was returning to his home in Caldwell, Idaho. Passing through the gate, "As he turned to close it, an explosion split the evening calm, demolishing the gate, the eight-inch-thick gatepost, and the nearby fencing, splintering yards of boardwalk, scooping shallow oval hole in the frosty ground, and hurling the governor [who was no lightweight] ten feet into his yard" (Lukas, p. 50).

His 13-year-old daughter Frances saw the explosion and rushed to his side, with her mother following shortly after. A neighbor also came. The governor was still barely alive; he asked for "Mama" (probably meaning his wife), asked who shot him, and asked to be carried in out of the cold. But he was too heavy to move, and his lower body on the right side was effectively destroyed; both his ankles were broken, and his right arm all but severed (Lukas, p. 53). Moving him would be dangerous (Lukas, p. 51). Eventually they found a blanket, and enough people showed up to get him inside (Lukas, p. 52). I don't know if it's Lukas's overblown rhetoric or actual incompetence, but it sounds like it took a long time to find a doctor. Not that it would likely have mattered. Three events eventually showed up, but there was nothing they could do given the knowledge of the time. Steunenberg died at 7:10 p.m. on December 30, 1905 (Lukas, p. 53). His murder was thought to be in retaliation for his anti-labor activities as governor.

Examination showed that debris from the explosion had flown as far as two hundred yards. Various groups raised a $25,000 dollar reward fund (Riffenburgh, p. 260). Idaho didn't have much in the way of law enforcement (Lukas, p. 74), resulting in a lot of private investigators getting into the act, but very many people joined up to encircle Steunenberg's home town of Caldwell. Several people were harshly investigated based primarily upon their appearance (Lukas, pp. 55-73).

One of those caught in the dragnet was a man who at first called himself Tom Hogan but was better known outside Idaho as Harry Orchard. According to Lougee, p. 113, Orchard was implicated "rather easily." He reportedly had been hanging around town for some time, spending money and doing nothing to earn it except for talking about purchasing land or sheep (Lukas, p. 68; Riffenburgh, p. 260). Apparently a woman he had been spending time with, Lizzie Vorberg, saw him come in white-faced after the explosion; she suggested that his hotel room be searched. There were enough signs of bomb-making in the room that "Hogan" was taken into custody (Lukas, pp. 69-70).

Later, a search of his baggage revealed ordinary items such as clothing and business cards with Hogan's name -- but also several guns (not too unusual in 1905 Idaho!), explosives -- and two pairs of shoes, one of them still wet, which proved to be the same size and have the same nail pattern as some footprints near exploded Steunenberg gate. There was also correspondence involving the leadership of the Western Federation of Miners (Lukas, p. 92).

Hogan, already a strong suspect, was now considered the likely murderer. But Hogan had no particular connection with Steunenberg. Was there a connection to the miners' union? Under questioning, he admitted to "really" being not Hogan but "Harry Orchard." After first claiming that he had a venereal disease and that he was looking for a place to try to recover, he also admitted knowing the leaders of the Western Federation of Miners. He claimed, however, that the bomb-making materials found in his lodging were instead Plaster of Paris with which to make loaded dice (Lukas, p 95). If you're getting the impression that Orchard's testimony was erratic, you are definitely on to something. Others also thought he was "volatile"; some reporters thought him "sick, depressed, deranged, or flatly insane"; even the Pinkerton detective James McParland worried about him committing suicide (Lukas, p. 409). In the course of the William Haywood trial, it came out that Orchard had several relatives, probably including a grandfather, with mental illnesses (Lukas, p. 700). Lukas thinks this issue to be "silliness," but we now know that most mental disorders have strong genetic component. Orchard clearly didn't have a major mental illness, but it really does seem as if his contact with reality was a little shaky.

Clearly it was a case for detectives. The Thiel detective agency, the most famous other than the Pinkertons, quickly became involved, having been hired by the mine owners, meaning the state got their services at no charge (Riffenburgh, p. 251). But they didn't have much luck extending the case beyond Orchard, so Idaho governor Frank Gooding brought in the Pinkertons (Riffenburgh, p. 267). At this time, the Pinkertons had three departments, based in New York, Chicago, and Denver (Lukas, p. 157), so it was Denver manager James McParland (occasionally spelled McPharland, and he used the spelling "McParlan" in his early years in the United States; Lukas, p. 188; Riffenburgh, p. 166) who got the call. Already he was famous for cracking the Molly Maguires (and, incidentally, the model for "Birdy Edwards" in the Sherlock Holmes story "The Valley of Fear"; for the Molly Maguires and McParland's work, see the notes to "Muff Lawler, the Squealer" [Laws E25]). It should be noted that he had perjured himself in those trials (Riffenburgh, p. 156. Riffenburgh, p. 345, demonstrates that McParland also perjured himself in the case of Steve Adams, which was related to the Steunenberg case). Also, when he married in 1879, he had robbed the cradle -- he was 35, his bride 19 (Riffenburgh, p. 166). He had also worked to cheat his sister-in-law out of an inheritance, and ended up losing a court case to her about it (Riffenburgh, pp. 169-170). Not someone I'd want chasing after my daughter, believe you me!

McParland's first major move was to go to work on Orchard (Chace, p. 174). He was not the first Pinkerton on the scene, but McParland proved the key figure. Having managed, by means that would surely be regarded as criminal today, to get Orchard isolated and mistreated (Riffenburgh, pp. 267-268), then showed up to reason with the prisoner. He pointed out to Orchard that those who turned states' evidence in criminal trials often came out much better than those who did not (Lukas, p. 195) -- and McParland should know, because of all the trials he had helped initiate! He also played "good cop," arranging for Orchard to get better treatment in prison (Lukas, p. 196). And he told Orchard that, while the evidence had him dead to rights (which wasn't really true), the murder wasn't really his fault; the men who planned the assassination bore more moral responsibility (Lukas, p. 197). Clearly he went all out to make Orchard trust him -- and it worked. He also gave the impression, which was false, that a confession to him would assure Orchard's safety. (Remember, the Pinkertons were a private agency; they were not the justice system! They could not offer a plea bargain.)

After their second meeting, Orchard asked McParland to come back the next day (Lukas, p. 199) -- and McParland ended up coming for five straight days, eventually bringing a stenographer. What he got was an incredible confession -- 64 pages written in shorthand! Orchard confessed to killing Steunenberg, and seventeen sundry others; to trying to assassinate the governor of Colorado and several other state officials there, plus the President of the Bunker Hill and Sullivan Mining Company. All this was done at the behest of the Western Federation of Miners, notably President Charles H. Moyer, Secretary/Treasurer William "Big Bill" Haywood, and one George A. Pettibone. He also listed three immediate accomplices, Jack Simpkins (who was already suspected), Steve Adams, and Vincent St. John (Lukas, pp. 199-200).

Lougee, p. 113, adds that Orchard turned out to be to be Canadian and a bigamist. It didn't take long for Moyer, Hayward, and Pettibone to realize that they were being trailed, and they started hiding -- so McParland arranged for a false report on the investigation to appear in the newspapers to get them off their guard (Lukas, pp. 243-244).

Idaho authorities couldn't arrest the suspects because they weren't in Idaho but in Colorado, and they had been in Colorado at the time of the murder, so Idaho couldn't claim they had fled the state and demand extradition (Lukas, p. 244). They sought extradition anyway, although the paperwork they came up with would not fool anyone who actually looked at it. McParland and the Idaho authorities proceeded to kidnap Moyer, Haywood, and Pettibone -- capturing them in Colorado and putting them on a sealed special train that ran through areas where the courts were closed for the weekend (Lougee, p. 113; Chace p. 175). So concerned was McParland about avoiding the law that he demanded the train go through Cheyenne, Wyoming, at the dangerous speed of 30 miles per hour, and he put armed guards on the train to fight off anyone who tried to get aboard (Lukas, p. 266).

The illegal precautions worked. Moyer, Haywood, and Pettibone arrived "safely" in Idaho, and were indicted for murder on March 6, 1906 (Chace, p. 176). McParland continued his psychological warfare by imprisoning them on death row (Lukas, p. 271). And Idaho's Supreme Court granted the prisoners no redress, basically saying that it didn't matter how the prisoners had been taken; they were in Idaho now, and tough luck that they had been taken unlawfully (Lukas, p. 277). Nor would the very conservative United States Supreme Court step in (Lukas, p. 284). The only way the accused could get off was by being cleared at trial.

But Idaho had a law: You couldn't convict a man on the uncorroborated testimony of an accomplice (in this case, Orchard). The state needed at least one more witness -- either Adams or Simpkins. Simpkins seems to have vanished without a trace; apparently it still isn't known what happened to him (Riffenburgh, p. 276). So, at the time they kidnapped their suspects, they also located Steve Adams (who was in Oregon) and set out to bring him back (Lukas, p. 256). As they had with the union officers, they sent an illegal extradition request, but Adams's lawyer told him not to fight it. So he was taken to Idaho (Lukas, p. 294). In a bit of blatant stupidity, the authorities confined him with Orchard (Lukas, p. 295), which raised the obvious possibility of witness contamination. But it arguably worked out well for the state, since Orchard told Adams about the state wanting testimony to convict the mine bosses (Riffenburgh, p. 286).

Which was indeed what the state wanted: the authorities suborned perjury, telling Adams, when his lawyer wasn't present (Riffenburgh, p. 287), that they would hang him if he didn't testify against the labor leaders. He "confessed." To McParland, with detailed prompting from McParland; although Adams mentioned several genuine crimes, he seemed unable to give many details without help (Lukas, pp. 296-297).

Meanwhile, Idaho was bringing in the really big guns to lead the prosecution; James H. Hawley was probably the most experienced lawyer Idaho had, and future Senator William E. Borah the most financially successful (Lukas, pp. 288-290; Borah was also, according to Lukas, p. 291, a womanizer so flagrant that he was reported to have fathered a child on Theodore Roosevelt's daughter Alice, and he would later be indicted in the timber fraud scheme that also involved Steunenberg). The state was so intent on winning a conviction that it broke the budget; the state had to issue emergency "deficiency certificates" (short-term, high-interest, unsecured bonds -- basically, junk bonds) to pay its legal costs (Lukas, pp. 346-347). The situation was so unprecedented that the banks didn't trust the state to repay them, since the state legislature hadn't authorized them (Lukas, pp. 347-348). The bank that bought the largest share of them was run by the mine owners (Lukas, pp. 350-351) -- in essence, the mine owners were paying for the prosecution of the WFM leaders. What's more, mine owners in Colorado were supplying money as well (Lukas, p. 375). Legally, it may not have been vigilante justice, but morally, it came close. Even President Theodore Roosevelt was concerned about the way the state was handling things, making him less willing to support the state should unrest arise, even though he disliked the union agitation (Lukas, pp. 368-369) and clearly thought the WFM leaders guilty. McParland even planted a spy in the defense's legal team, although he was a support staffer, not a lawyer (Lukas, p. 439). The same fellow, "Operative 21," also was invited onto the Socialist Party's Canyon County Central Committee (Lukas, p. 440), and also spent a lot of time in bars (Lukas, p. 446); one wonders how he found time to report to McParland! Another operative was trying to find witnesses who could be brought in to testify for the defense and turn on them (Lukas, p. 447). Both sides were trying to get information on anyone in the county who might end up in the jury pool. The infiltrators weren't discovered until well into jury selection (Lukas, pp. 536-537), when it sounds as if they had to get out of town fast.

It is interesting to note that Idaho Governor Gooding was afraid of assassination (perhaps with justice) -- so he hired as one of his several bodyguards a convicted criminal nicknamed "Four Gun Jack," who was free pending appeal, as a bodyguard (Lukas, p. 357). Apparently Gooding had no trouble being around criminals -- it was just union men who bothered him. Despite all that pressure, he won re-election during the run-up to the trial (Lukas, p. 406). McParland also decided he needed a bodyguard, although he was able to use one of his Pinkerton colleagues (Lukas, p. 433).

While all this was going on, Harry Orchard was languishing in prison -- and getting visits from the Revered Newell Dwight Hillis and the Reverend Edwin S. Hinks. Hinks became Orchard's "spiritual advisor", and nudged Orchard in the same direction that McParland had earlier -- and Orchard responded by turning to Christianity (Lukas, pp. 495-497). A lot of criminals, of course, "convert" in hopes of better treatment, but Orchard, who seems to have been impressionable and highly erratic, appears to have genuinely converted.

It will perhaps tell you something about the Pinkerton Agency at this time that they did not rely on the Idaho's prosecutors; McParland hung around to assist, and in no small part to manage, the prosecution (Lukas, p. 516).

Clarence Darrow, however, was by now leading the defense -- he said that he would have liked to avoid it, given the strength of the opposition, but "I do not see how I can get out of it" given the unfairness of the prosecution (Lukas, p. 329). And the union leaders also had cash, supplied by contributions by the miners' organizations -- eventually the WFM made a formal assessment of its members (Lukas, p. 379). Darrow promised to defend Adams (possibly offering financial inducements as well, although it was never proved; Lukas, pp. 331-332) and convinced him to recant. The maneuvers which followed are almost incomprehensibly complex, with writs flying all over the place, including one instance of Adams being freed by one judge and immediately being arrested again on a different charge (Lukas, pp. 334-335).

The authorities decided to try Adams for the murder of one Fred Tyler, but this trial was held in Wallace, Idaho -- smack in the heart of mining country; the prosecutors ran out of peremptory challenges striking people they thought pro-miner and had to accept a jury that had some "doubtful" members (Lukas, p. 501). The case came down to what Adams said he had done versus what a Pinkerton detective claimed he had admitted to (Lukas, pp. 501-502). Darrow convinced a majority of the jury to acquit (7-5, according to a juror who talked to McParland; Lukas, p. 503). Despite the hung jury, the state decided to keep Adams on the hook -- but they also were working to exploit disagreements between Haywood and Moyer, who were confined together (Chace, p. 177). Of the three IWW officials, Haywood was perhaps the most likely to have been involved; he was originally an officer of the Western Federation of Miners, and later presided over the founding of the IWW. The authorities thought their case against him the strongest, so he was tried first. In the final trial, the state had two judges leave the case before it finally was tried by Judge Fremont Wood (Lukas, p. 453) -- who apparently was regarded as fair by both sides (Lukas, p. 454). Wood promptly granted a change of venue -- although only from Caldwell to Boise (Lukas, pp. 453-455). This was probably a pretty good compromise -- the prosecution wanted to try the case in Steunenberg's hometown, the defense wanted it somewhere where there hadn't been much publicity. Boise was not too far from Caldwell, and had heard about the case, but it hadn't consumed every news cycle. Plus it was a decent-sized city where many of the lawyers in the case were based; the case wouldn't be quite as zoo-like as it would have been in Caldwell. Even so, they had to rearrange the courthouse to try to make room for everyone who wanted to be there; the capacity was increased from 250 to 300 spectators, with the principals crowded very close together even in the heat of a warm summer (Lukas, p. 520).

On May 9, 1907, the trial got underway, with the judge denying a defense motion to see the evidence against Haywood (Lukas, p. 521).

Darrow, of course, managed everything to his advantage. He even brought in Haywood's wife
Nevada Jane Minor (the subject of the Utah Phillips song "Nevada Jane") and their daughters Vernie and Henrietta. Haywood and Nevada Jane (contrary to the Phillips song) were apparently not close at all -- but Nevada Jane was wheelchair-bound, and actress Ethel Barrymore observed of Darrow, "He has all the props, an old mother in a wheelchair and a little girl with curls draped around Haywood" (Chace, p. 178). Hayward's mother was also there, as was Nevada Jane's nurse, and Henrietta would often cling to her father (Lukas, p. 524). The prosecution had evidence of Hayward's infidelity, but couldn't present it because the witnesses, although they didn't like Hayward, weren't willing to testify (Lukas, p. 525. Of course, it was irrelevant anyway, but that was unlikely to stop them!).

Jury selection took all of May and a few days into June -- it lasted so long that the state legislature actually put its thumb on the scale, passing a law to increase the number of peremptory challenges (elimination of jurors for arbitrary reasons) for the prosecution, making it easier for them to get the jury they wanted (Lukas, pp. 527-530). Lukas does not state the exact number of jurors questioned, but they were on their third pool when the defense used its last peremptory challenge, meaning that at least 180 were questioned to get twelve jurors (Lukas, pp. 537-538). Twenty were stricken peremptorily, meaning that at least 80%, or 150+, were rejected for cause (either bias or incompetence). They ended up with a jury that was (of course) all white and male, all but one over fifty (mostly late fifties or sixties), and all current or former farmers (Lukas, p. 538). It was a narrow range of occupations -- no one on the jury had ever worked for wages! -- but of course they weren't going to take any miners or unionists, and there weren't too many other occupations in nineteenth century Idaho.

The trial proper finally began on Tuesday, June 4, 1907 -- and Darrow was picking on Hawley from the very beginning (Lukas, p. 550), making him look both pompous (which he probably was) and stupid in his opening statement. The prosecution didn't really even make a specific charge against Haywood; mostly it listed all the things Harry Orchard had done. So Darrow asked to postpone his opening statement, and the prosecution got started by calling witnesses to describe the assassination. This took only a few hours, since there wouldn't be any real argument on this point; on June 5, the prosecution got down to business and called Harry Orchard (Lukas, p. 551).

The prosecutors had been very careful. There had been fears that Orchard would be assassinated, but they kept him safe -- and dressed him up so carefully that the old scruffy petty criminal could not be recognized (Lukas, pp. 551-553; Riffenburgh, p. 326). Orchard proceeded to tell a tale of a drifter's life, which culminated in him becoming a sort of hired assassin for the Western Federation of Miners (Lukas, p. 556). He claimed that, in 1905, Haywood, Moyer, and Pettibone had hired him, and four others including Steve Adams, to assassinate Steunenberg.

(This, to me, raises a big hole in Orchard's story. Orchard's record as an assassin, by his own admission, was miserable. Why, if the WFM had so many violent miners available -- and it appears they did -- would the bosses hire an untrustworthy incompetent like Orchard? It makes no sense.)

The defense lawyers apparently had an internal argument about who would question Orchard, and Darrow lost; Edmund F. Richardson cross-examined Orchard for 26 hours -- and failed to crack him (Lukas, pp. 561-563); it appears that Orchard had already drafted a memoir, and that of course meant that he had his story all sorted out. But, of course, Orchard was just one witness. Could he be corroborated?

The prosecution called additional witnesses and brought various writings into evidence, but not one actually connected Haywood with the murder. When the prosecution rested, defense lawyer Richardson rose to request a summary judgment; the prosecution hadn't proved its case (Lukas, pp. 561-566). Judge Wood rejected the motion -- he explained later that he thought that Orchard was telling the truth but he didn't think the state had produced enough corroboratory evidence. This should have caused him to dismiss the case, but he didn't want to make it look as if he was being easy on the defense. So the case went on (Lukas, pp. 566-567; Riffenburgh, pp. 328-329).

Nonetheless, things were looking bad for the prosecution.

A key element of the defense was to bring in an ex-Pinkerton employee to show just how deeply the Pinkertons had infiltrated the Western Federation of Miners. Had the WFM come up with the plot against Steunenberg -- or had the Pinkertons? No one actually said the latter, but the idea clearly hung in the air (Lukas, p. 688).

McParland, who had orchestrated the whole case, was getting justifiably worried. He needed something new, and tried to get Moyer, who was up on the same charges as Haywood, to crack.
But the sheriff in charge of the prisoners was a fair man and would not apply the pressure McParland wanted (Lukas, pp. 689-693). Moyer did eventually testify -- but as a defense witness, and he performed well and is thought to have helped Haywood's cause (Lukas, pp. 696-697). Haywood himself was the last major witness. He admitted to strong disagreements with Steunenberg's policies, denied ever attacking Steunenberg the man, denied Orchard's plots. And, when cross-examined by Borah, he not only didn't give an inch, he seemed to intimidate and outwit the prosecution lawyer a few times (Lukas, pp. 697-700).

"When the defense completed its case on Saturday, July 13, many thought the efforts had done more harm than good" (Riffenburgh, p. 331) Closing arguments took days, with Darrow giving an amazing argument for the defense and Borah by all accounts a great speech for the prosecution. It took Judge Wood most of an hour to give the jury their instructions (Lukas, p. 720), stressing the need for corroboration and that people were innocent unless proven guilty. The jury argued overnight, and well into the next day. Darrow, Haywood, and Co. were very afraid that this spelled doom; when they were called back, Darrow even told Haywood to prepare for the worst. There was a last-minute mixup when the jury foreman gave the judge an empty envelope. But when it was all straightened out, Haywood was found not guilty (Lukas, p. 722).

Despite the fears on the Haywood team, there had been little chance of conviction; the initial jury vote was 8 for acquittal, 2 for conviction, 2 abstentions (Lukas, p. 723); in the heat and the crowding, the majority eventually talked around the doubters. It sounds to me as if it was really a "Scotch Verdict," that is, "Not proven" -- the jury felt that the state had not offered sufficient evidence to support Orchard's claim, and since Idaho law explicitly said that an informer's testimony had to be corroborated, the prosecution had not met the standard for conviction.

Between paying the Pinkertons and paying for the prosecution, Idaho was out a lot of money (there had been a time when Governor Gooding had worried it would come out of his pocket, until out-of-state sources helped out; Riffenburgh, p. 297), so they weren't willing to give up just because Haywood got off. So they went after George Pettibone, who was more a technical person than a union leader; supposedly he created the materials for Orchard's bomb. Darrow was sick, so the union brought in Judge Orin Hilton (Lougee, p. 114), who would later unsuccessfully defend Joe Hill in his appeal in Utah. Hilton, perceiving that the evidence against Pettibone was weak but that the opposing lawyer was brilliant, decided not to mount a defense, and so deprived the prosecutor of the right to rebut!

And it worked. Pettibone too got off in January 1908 (Lougee, p. 115), and the state gave up on Moyer (Chace, p. 179; Lukas, p. 748, who adds that Moyer promptly pushed Haywood out of the WFM). The state arguably had the last laugh on Pettibone, who had contracted tuberculosis in prison and died not long afterward (Riffenburgh, p. 347) -- but he was officially not guilty. In the long run, the Steunenberg affair was very damaging for the unions, but the leaders were safe. Then it was finally time to go after Orchard. He alone was punished, being convicted in March 1908 and sentenced to death -- a sentence that was commuted to life imprisonment because of his religious conversion. (According to Riffenburgh, p. 348, Orchard changed his plea from not guilty to guilty, against the advice of counsel -- because the charges he faced meant an automatic death penalty. It was not a plea bargain; the full charges stood. Judge Wood perforce sentenced him to death, with a recommendation to the Board of Pardons for mercy, and the Board granted it.)

Although eventually eligible for parole, he elected to spend the rest of his life (nearly fifty years) in prison rather than live on his own, dying in 1954 at age 88 (Lukas, p. 748). Imprisoned during World War I for opposing the war, Haywood would eventually skip bail and flee to the Soviet Union, leaving his wife behind; having bigamously married another wife, died there in 1928 at the age of 59 (Weir/Hanlan, p. 223).

So did Haywood and Moyer actually order the murder? According to Riffenburgh, pp. 337-339, the jurors all thought so, but concluded that the prosecution didn't prove it beyond doubt. Lukas, pp. 750-754, argues based on letters by others who knew them that they did. But I wonder. Everything still comes down to Harry Orchard's testimony. Without denying Orchard's sincerity on the stand, I really, really question his mental stability. Even ordinary people can create false memories if they are exposed to unexpected information. This process is can be much easier in the case of the disordered. Did Orchard tell his own story, or McParland's? I just don't know. And I doubt we'll ever know.

Among those who covered the trial was Upton Sinclair; it is said that the last chapter of The Jungle alludes to it (Lukas, p. 450).

This is item dE48 in Laws's Appendix II. - RBW

Bibliography

- Chace: James Chace, 1912: Wilson, Roosevelt, Taft & Debs -- the Election That Changed the Country, Simon & Schuster, 2004
• Lukas: J. Anthony Lukas, Big Trouble, 1997 (I use the 1998 Touchstone paperback)
• Lougee: Kenneth Lougee, Pie in the Sky: How Joe Hill's Lawyers Lost His Case, Got Him Shot, and Were Disbarred, iUniverse, 2011
• Peterson: F. Ross Peterson, Idaho: A Bicentennial History, American Association for State and Local History/W. W. Norton, 1976
• Riffenburgh: Beau Riffenburgh, Pinkerton's Great Detective, Bloomsbury, 2013 (I use the 2014 Penguin paperback)
• Weir/Hanlan: Robert E. Weir and James P. Hanlan, editors, Historical Encyclopedia of American Labor, 2 volumes, Greenwood Press, 2004

Last updated in version 6.0
File: Burt093

Harry the Tailor
DESCRIPTION: Harry seeks a wife. He tickles Dolly, the dairymaid. She shoves him into the well. The farmer hauls him out. He accused the farmer of knocking him in; the farmer throws buttermilk at him. He tells his mother "If this is your courtin', the devil take all"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1877 (Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland)
KEYWORDS: courting accusation abuse farming humorous mother
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, p. 455, "Harry the Tailor" (1 text)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Bk 8, "Harry the Tailor" (1 text)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 131, "Harry the Tailor" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, HRRYTAIL*
Roud #1465
RECORDINGS:
Bill Westaway, "Harry the Tailor" (on FSBFTX13)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Friar in the Well" [Child 276] (plot)
File: BeCo375

Harry's Courtship
DESCRIPTION: "Harry courted modest Mary... Harry was country neat as could be, But his words were rough, and his duds were muddy." She asks about what he has in the way of pottery. She demands an easy life. He declares he will court Margery instead
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1877 (Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland)
KEYWORDS: courting rejection humorous clothes
FOUND IN: Britain(England)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, pp. 375-376, "Harry's Courtship" (1 text)
ST BeCo375 (Partial)
Roud #2470
File: BeCo375

Hartford Wreck, The
DESCRIPTION: A train is wrecked on near Hartford, Vermont. Passenger Joseph Maigret is fatally injured and discusses his fate with his son.
Harvard Student, The (The Pullman Train)

DESCRIPTION: As the train pulls into a village, a girl gets on and openly sits next to the "tall and stout and swell" (Harvard student). He gets "soot" in his eye; she offers to remove it. They enter a tunnel, and after kissing sounds her earring is found in his beard.

AUTHOR: Louis Shreve Osborne?

EARLIEST DATE: 1871 (Harvard Advocate)

KEYWORDS: courting train humorous

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (6 citations):
- Randolph 391, "The Harvard Student" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 218-320, "The Harvard Student" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 391)
- Spaeth-ReadEmAndWeep, pp. 109-110, "The Eastern Train" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Cohen-LongSteelRail, pp. 50-52, "In the Tunnel" (1 text)
- Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 9-10, "In the Tunnel" (1 text)

ADDITIONAL: Harold Nestler, "Songs from the Hudson Valley" (article in _New York Folklore Quarterly_, Volume V, #2, Summer 1949), pp. 87-88 "The Eastern Train" (1 text)

Roud #7617

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Pullman Train
Riding Down from Bangor

NOTES [304 words]: According to Cohen, the 1871 printing in the Harvard Advocate is credited to "S. O. L." It was printed under the title "In the Tunnel." He speculates that "S. O. L." might be a distortion of the initials of poet Louis S. Osborne, who attended Harvard at the time. His speculation has external support. Having read Cohen's comments, I went looking for works of Louis Shreve Osborne's. I found exactly one in Granger's Index to Poetry, that being "Riding Down from Bangor," in Hazel Felleman's The Best Loved Poems of the American People, p. 515. Which proves to be this very poem. But it may be that Felleman followed the same line of logic; her attributions are not very reliable. I think, on the whole, we have to list this as a "probable" case of authorship.

Jim Dixon brings to my attention "The Kiss in the Railway Train" (words by Watkin Williams, music by C. H. Mackney, published by B. Williams, 1864 -- i.e. seven years before the earliest date which I can currently demonstrate for this song), which occurs in the Roud Index as V20269, typically titled "Riding in a Railway Train." Jim mentions some thematic similarities but also differences: "it is told in the first person by the young woman; instead of her earring being transferred to him, his false moustache is transferred to her! And he turns out to be a purse-snatcher. Also, the verse structure is much different." He wonders about the relationship. I do, too -- I don't think there is direct literary dependence, but there probably is thematic dependence -- there was some story or poem or something which stands behind both pieces. "The Kiss in the Railway Train" almost sounds like a parody of this mixed with "The Charming Young Widow I Met on the Train." But that's all speculation. Further research is left as an exercise for the reader. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.4
File: R391

Harvest

DESCRIPTION: "Manitoba, Manitoba, Fair thy fields of harvest stand, Mellow light of early autumn Stealing down across the land." It is a land of homesteads where once the buffalo roamed. The people should raise a song of harvest

AUTHOR: Words: Jessie Louise Hetherington / Music: S. Ferretti (1817-1874) (Source: MacLeod-SongsOfOldManitoba)
EARLIEST DATE: 1900 (according to MacLeod-SongsOfOldManitoba)
KEYWORDS: Canada home patriotic nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
MacLeod-SongsOfOldManitoba, #15, pp. 88-90, "Harvest" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #25767
File: Macl015

Harvest Home (III), The

DESCRIPTION: "Let us see how your liquors be." Each lad and lass try the brown ale and strong beer "and welcome the harvest home" Everyone dances to a fiddler's tune. The brown beer drives care away.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1873 (Lake; see note)
KEYWORDS: harvest dancing drink fiddle music party
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 230, "Welcome the Harvest Home!" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 473)
Roud #1294

An article describing beer-making quotes the last two lines of this song as "The nut brown beer that will drive away care, And welcome the harvest home" (source: Webster's Third New International Dictionary of the English Language Unabridged, 1976).

There seems to be a dance game here: "Now Jack and Sue proposed a dance, It was agreed upon by chance, That they should ha' it on the grass, And the fiddler play them a tune.... Now just before the dance was done, 'Thou art out,' says Dick, -- 'Thou art a liar,' says John, 'The fiddler played it wrong,' says Tom, 'So we'll ha' it o'er again,' Then every lad took forth his lass, And gently led her on the grass...." - BS

Last updated in version 2.6
File: WT230
Harvest Home Song (I)

DESCRIPTION: Singer toasts the master of the house, his health and prosperity, and the mistress; listeners are urged to drink up. Cho: "So drink, boys, drink! And see that you do not spill/For if you do, you shall drink two, for that is our master's will"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1846 (Dixon-AncientPoemsBalladsSongsOfThePeasantryOfEngland)

KEYWORDS: farming harvest ritual drink party nonballad worker

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (8 citations):
Dixon-AncientPoemsBalladsSongsOfThePeasantryOfEngland, Song #14, pp. 190-191, "Suffolk Harvest-Home Song" (1 text)
Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs, pp. 150-151, "Harvest Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 591, "Harvest Home - To the Children of the House"; Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 591, "Harvest Home - To the Master"; Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 591, "Harvest Home - To the Mistress 1"; Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 591, "Harvest Home - To the Mistress 2"; Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 591, "Harvest Home - To the Mistress 3" (5 texts)
Cologne/Morrison-WiltshireFolkSongs, pp. 66-67, "The Harvest Home" (1 text, 1 tune)
Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #21, "Harvest Home Song" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT, MILLDEE3

ADDITIONAL: Enid Porter, _The Folklore of East Anglia_, Batsford, 1974, p. 67, "(no title)" (1 short text)
Jacqueline Simpson, _The Folklore of Sussex_, B. T. Batsford, 1973, pp. 128-129, "(We've plougher, we've sowed)"; "(Here's a health unto our Maister)"; "(Now we've drank our Maister's health)" (3 short texts, the latter two at least, and possibly all three, being this)

Roud #310

RECORDINGS:
Tony Wales, "The Woodcutter" (on TWales1)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
ct. "All of a Row" (theme, floating lyrics)

NOTES [51 words]: This was sung as part of a harvest-supper ritual; each person's cup would be filled as the song was sung around the table. Variants salute other rural occupations, such as woodcutting (cf. the Wales recording). This can be distinguished from other harvest-home songs by the "Drink, boys, drink" chorus. - PJS

File: RcHaHS1

Harvest Home Song (IV -- Your Hay Is Mow'd)

DESCRIPTION: "Our oats they are hoed and our barley's reaped, Our hay is mowed and our hovels heaped. Harvest home! Harvest home! We'll merrily roar out our harvest home!" "We cheated the parson; we'll cheat him again." "'We'll drink off our liquor while we can stand" AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1691 (Purcell's "King Arthur"; see NOTES)

KEYWORDS: harvest drink party

FOUND IN: Britain(England)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, pp. 376-378, "Harvest-Home Song," "Harvest Home" (2 texts, minimally related; either may go back to "Harvest Home Song (I)" but as copied appear distinct)

Roud #310

NOTES [219 words]: Josh Andre writes to us about this song,
"[W]hen I saw the words 'Harvest Home,' I was reminded of Henry Purcell's semi-opera (spoken play with interspersed opera-like vocal and instrumental music) King Arthur, which has a pastoral song which begins with the words 'Your hay it is mow'd.' As I looked at each of the index entries for 'Harvest Home Song,' I discovered that the description of 'Harvest Home Song (IV)' matches the lyrics of 'Your hay it is mow'd' very closely, with just a few word differences.
"King Arthur, which has the song being sung by a chorus of peasants led by the god Comus (as part of an Act V 'victory masque'), was first performed in 1691. The index entry gives an earliest date of 1846, which I assume is the date of the earliest known version of the text and/or melody of the piece as a folk song. [It was the date it was printed in Dixon. - RBW.] I wonder, did Purcell -- and John Dryden, the librettist -- compose an original 'harvest song' that passed into the oral tradition and/or was reprinted as a 'folk' piece, or was there a pre-existing song that they appropriated for their play?"

I can't answer that certainly, but if the song didn't change in two hundred years, I'd guess that the Purcell version is original and Dixon picked it up, after which Bell copied Dixon. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.5
File: CeCo376

Harvest Home, The
DESCRIPTION: "Come, ye jolly lads and lasses, Ranting round in pleasure's ring... Blythe and merry we have been, Blythe and merry let us be." The workers are not gathered to gain "warldly gear" but to celebrate now that the harvest is over
AUTHOR: John Anderson of Upper Boyndlie (source: Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast)
EARLIEST DATE: 1911 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: work music party
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #164, p. 2, "The Harvest Home" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan3 632, "The Harvest Home" (1 text)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 272-273, "The Harvest Home" (1 text)
Roud #5595
NOTES [14 words]: Greig: .. written about the middle of last century, or perhaps somewhat earlier." - BS

Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD1101

Harvest Shearin', The
DESCRIPTION: "Farewell, love, for I maun leave you" "Don't you hear the colonel crying, Run brave boys, keep colours flying." "No more we'll go to the harvest shearin'" or hear the blackbird. Farewell father, mother, sister, comrades and dearie.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan1)
KEYWORDS: farewell war nonballad family friend lover soldier
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan1 101, "The Harvest Shearin'" (4 texts, 3 tunes)
Roud #1301
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Fareweel, Lassie, I Maun Leave Ye
Love Farewell

File: GrD1101

Harvest Song (I)
DESCRIPTION: "When we arise all in the morn for to sound our harvest horn" we'll sing and drink.
Our master has us work until Phoebus sets in the west Our master is kind so we will follow his orders Our mistress is as good.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1911 (collected from Jack Dade by Butterworth/Vaughan Williams)
KEYWORDS: harvest drink nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 55-56, "Harvest Song" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 446)
Harvey Duff

DESCRIPTION: "Harvey Duff, keep the step, Oh, what's up with you"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c.1881 (Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)
KEYWORDS: nonballad police
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 78, "Harvey Duff" (2 fragments, 1 tune)
NOTES [310 words]: The tune seems to me to be close to "The Worms Crawl In."
Zimmermann discusses the arrests in 1881 of children, one six years old, for whistling the tune. He has other reports of people attacked or arrested by police for whistling "Harvey Duff" and of animals reportedly famous for their ability to mimic the tune.
"The arrests for whistling in Newcastle became a national controversy and 'Harvey Duff'" was whistled at every crossroads and every Land League gathering in the country." (source: "Hugh Murray Gunn" and Harvey Duff" quoting Freeman's Journal, February 12, 1881 at Gaelscoil O Doghair site.
As for words... one typical] fragment is included as the description, Zimmermann says "it is likely that many occasional squibs were set to this short air -- and soon forgotten."
Tim Coughlan, Now Shoon the Romano Gillie, (Cardiff,2001), p. 155 refers to the following text "used by the urchins of Dublin to taunt the police ... Harvey Duff, don't take me, Take the fellow behind the tree." "The words would be repeated until either the law gave chase or the game was abandoned for lack of action." - BS
For background on Dion Boucicault, see the notes to "Cruiskeen Lawn." - RBW
Last updated in version 5.1

Harvey Logan [Laws E21]

DESCRIPTION: Harvey Logan, pool player, gambler, and brawler, comes to the attention of the police after a gaming fight. Arrested following a gun battle, he escapes from Knoxville by taking the jailer hostage and riding off on the sheriff's horse
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (recording, Byrd Moore)
KEYWORDS: gambling prison escape
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
June 8, 1904 - Probable date of the death of Harvey Logan
FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE)
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Laws E21, "Harvey Logan"
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #41, "Harvey Logan" (1 text)
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 326-328, "Harvey Logan" (1 text, 1 tune)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 195-196, "Harvey Logan" (1 text)
DT 790, HARVLOGN
Roud #2250
RECORDINGS:
Dock Boggs, "Harvey Logan" (on Boggs1, BoggsCD1)
Byrd Moore, "Harvey Logan" (Gennett 6549, 1928)
NOTES [2748 words]: If anyone was born to be a habitual criminal, it was probably Harvey Logan. Most of the little we know about his early years seems to come from census records, so there is a lot missing, but Wilson, pp. 2-3, says that the family came from Kentucky, where father William Henry Neville Logan was born in 1834 and mother Eliza Jane Johnson was born in 1838. Their first child, James, was born in Kentucky in 1860; soon after they moved to Iowa. Children born after that were Henry ("Hank") in 1862, Harvey in 1867 (O'Neal, entry on Logan, says 1865, in Tama, Iowa), daughter Arda ("Allie") in 1868 (although Wilson on p. 15 implies she was born in 1863), John in 1870, and Lorenzo ("Lonie" or "Lonnie") in 1872. They also had a number of children stillborn or died as infants.

The father then moved to a farm in Missouri -- possibly not all at once; father William and eldest son James may have departed, or even fled the family. We know that William and James were in the Albany, Missouri jail in 1880; the crime they committed is unknown, but William seems to have been both irresponsible and reckless.

Mother Eliza died in childbirth around 1876, not yet age 40. With an unreliable father and a dead mother, the children had to be taken in by relatives -- and may have had to locate them themselves; Wilson thinks that Arda Logan, not yet fifteen years old, may have reached out to an aunt. Because none of their relatives had much money, the children had to be split up, generally two to a household. Harvey and Johnny are believed to have ended up in one home.

James, the oldest brother, despite his early troubles, became a successful businessman, dying in California in 1925 (Wilson, p. 4). Hank also seems to have been responsible (Wilson, p. 3). But Harvey, Johnny, and Lonnie all ended up in trouble. Harvey was "reserved and talked slowly" (unlike the outgoing Lonnie and the impulsive Johnny; Wilson, p. 3); O'Neal says he was very dour and a heavy drinker. It's hard to imagine Harvey playing fiddle, e.g. (although he proved to be deeply devoted to music while in prison, he once "squeaked with delight" when a fiddler played there; Wilson, p. 163), but Lonnie was a good fiddler and was popular as a result (Wilson, p. 24); he also played banjo (Wilson, p. 98).

Harvey turned violent at a young age, almost killing another child during a baseball game after the other boy apparently called him by a racial slur (Wilson, p. 5; the Logans were part-Welsh, and most of them had dark hair and eyes).

Although some have thought that Logan adopted the pseudonym "Curry" after George "Flatnose" Currie, a later associate, Wilson, p. 8, thinks he took it at this early date, when he and Hank started their travels -- Hank may have been trying to escape an unhappy marriage, and so started calling himself "Curry" so as to be harder to trace. Since Harvey was younger, and was with his brother, he became "Kid Curry" (Wilson, p. 12). Wilson adds, p. 57, that Logan also used the surnames Roberts, Howard, and Jones as an outlaw -- indeed, he seems to have used new names constantly.

Interestingly, in these early years, Harvey was actually saving lives, saving Jim Thornhill from drowning (a debt that was repeatedly repaid, as Thornhill seems to have helped Harvey for the rest of his life) and bringing home Robert Coburn after he had been crushed by his horse (Wilson, pp. 12-13). No doubt Harvey's strength helped get the horse off Coburn; he was said to be very strong and fast on his feet (Wilson, p. 12).

Over the next few years, younger brothers Johnny and Lonnie also headed west (Wilson, p. 14; O'Neal, gives the simpler story that, at age 19, Harvey headed west with Johnny and Lonnie). They opened a ranch in 1888, with what O'Neal describes as stolen cattle, although their land claims seem to have been legitimate (Wilson, p. 24). O'Neal suggests they worked as hired guns for a time (fighting in the Johnson County War, for which see the notes to "The Blood-Stained Diary"), although the chronology in Wilson does not take Harvey to Wyoming until after the fighting was over in that area. There is a photo of Harvey, Lonnie, and Johnny in the photo insert preceding p. 113 of Wilson; it of course has several other photos of Harvey as well, including one with his girlfriend Annie Rogers. (Probable real name, Beulah Phinburg; Wilson, p. 167.) (It's not clear exactly what Logan's relationship was with Rogers; Wilson, p. 122, says he encountered her at "Fanny Porter's local bordello." Did he hire her service? Did he help guard the bordello? Little is known about her, as we shall see.)

Johnny Logan got into a fight in this time, and was shot so badly that his arm had to be amputated; there are stories that Harvey committed his first murder to avenge his brother, but this cannot be proved (Wilson, pp. 26-27). Apparently there were several criminal complaints filed against one or another "Curry" in this period, but juries would not convict. Did the jurors like the Logans? Were they afraid of them? There is no way to know (Wilson, p. 30). But it seems as if Hank was keeping his younger brothers under relative control -- until he contracted tuberculosis. He died at the age of 31, and the rest of the Logans were on their own (Wilson, p. 31). The other brothers would have been in their early to mid-twenties.

In 1895, Harvey's brother Johnny was killed in a very Logan way -- he ordered a neighbor to leave the area. When the neighbor didn't, Johnny came a-shooting, on horseback, with a revolver in one hand and his reigns tied to his stump; little surprise that his intended victim, John Winters, shot more accurately! (Wilson, pp. 42-45). Thereafter Harvey became even more brutal, killing three sheriffs around the west and joining the gang" of outlaws associated with "Butch" Cassidy. Captured at least once, charged with a botched bank robbery, he escaped before he could be tried (Wilson, pp. 63-64).

The Cassidy/Sundance gang was known as "The Wild Bunch." It was not a fixed group, but "One was Harvey Logan, a rough cowboy and cattle thief originally from Iowa, but who had lived in Missouri, Texas, Colorado, and numerous other parts of the West. In 1895 Logan fled to Wyoming from Landusky, Montana, after killing the man for whom the town had been named. One story was that Pike Landusky had started a brawl over Logan's attraction to his daughter -- only for her to acknowledge after her father's death that she was pregnant by Logan's brother Lonnie. Also known by the alias Kid Curry, Logan was the smallest of the bunch -- at five feet seven and a half inches and about 145 to 150 pounds -- but he was also the most violent, and before he joined up with the Wild Bunch he and Lonnie had ridden with the feared train robber and murderer Tom 'Black Jack' Ketchum" (Riffenburgh, p. 226).

Logan certainly took part in many robberies alongside other members of the "Wild Bunch." In 1897, in Montana, they were planning a raid, but were overtaken by a posse and Logan was wounded. Several, including Logan and Sundance, were taken captive, but raiders broke them out on October 31 (Riffenburgh, p. 227). Some of the freed men were recaptured, but Logan and Sundance stayed free (Riffenburgh, p. 228). Ironically, the charges against the others were dropped.

It is believed, although it can't be proved, that Logan was one of the robbers involved in the Wilcox Train Robbery of June 2, 1899, one of the most famous of all time, in which the robbers damaged a train bridge and blew up the safe in a mail car, then made their escape (Riffenburgh, pp. 229-230; Wilson, pp. 80-83)).

On May 27, 1900, Harvey and two companions lulled two deputies and killed them. On August 29, he robbed and blew up another train (Riffenburgh, p. 237).

Harvey's brother Lonnie was among the first gang members to be taken out. In early 1900, he went to visit an aunt in Dodson, Missouri, where the Pinkertons located him and came to gather him in. He spotted them and fled but was killed as he ran (Riffenburgh, p. 233; Wilson, pp. 100-101).

Harvey Logan, meanwhile, continued his wild behavior. On November 21, 1900, he, Butch Cassidy (real name Robert Leroy Parker), the Sundance Kid (Harry Longabaugh), Will Carver, and Ben Kilpatrick posed for a photo (which can be seen on p. 190 of O'Neal and in the photo inserts in Riffenburgh and Wilson). That may not have been so smart, since the Pinkertons discovered it and used it to make wanted posters (Riffenburgh, p. 240).

The posters didn't cause any problems for most notorious of the Wild Bunch. On February 20, 1901, "Sundance" and his partner Etta Place fled to Argentina; Cassidy probably went with them (Riffenburgh, p. 240). The Pinkertons traced them down, but no one was willing to pay them to try to bring them home; had they been content with their takings, they could have lived out their lives. Instead, they went back to their criminal ways and were killed in 1908 (Riffenburgh, p. 241). At that, they outlived many of the other gang members, including Logan.

Logan had had the chance to go with them, but seemingly refused. He apparently wanted to stay with Annie Rogers and continue as a robber (Wilson, p. 124). This was of course a plan that was effectively guaranteed to result in his eventual death or imprisonment. A Pinkerton named Lowell Spence was now assigned specifically to Logan, although he took a long time to catch up with him (Wilson, pp. 128-129).

In March 1901, Logan killed Oliver Thornton, a neighbor of fellow Wild Buncher Ben Kilpatrick's family. In July, they robbed another train (Riffenburgh, p. 240). Logan appears to have headed south after that, picked up Annie, and gone on on a tour of the South with her, disposing of his captured (non-negotiable, since unsigned) notes on the way. In October 1901, he and Annie took a room in Nashville, registering as "Mr. and Mrs. Logan" (Wilson, p. 143), though there is no record of an actual marriage ceremony. Wilson blames her for taking a lot of the stolen money to a bank to exchange it for clean money. The bankers were immediately suspicious and called authorities (Wilson, p. 144). She was promptly taken into custody, giving her name as "Maud Williams." She was arrested and charged (Wilson, pp. 144-145). There was pretty strong evidence against her -- some of the signatures that had been forged on stolen bank notes appeared to be hers -- but Logan (by then in prison himself) gave a deposition that admitted knowing her but denying that she took knew where the money came from; that plus evidence of ill-treatment in prison caused her to be judged not guilty and released (Wilson, p. 164). It's not clear what eventually became of her; she seemingly tried to sneak Logan a hacksaw blade through an intermediary (Wilson, p. 166), but that failed and she seems to have stopped trying after that. There are no certain records of her thereafter (although there are a lot of contradictory reports); it is at least possible that she gave up on prostitution and went back to her family (Wilson, pp. 166-167).

Logan, who was still free when she was captured, apparently didn't even see her after this, but skipped town to get more of the (stolen) money to hire a lawyer for her (Wilson, p. 145; on p. 146 he lists some of the statements she made -- some true, mostly not -- because a lawyer wasn't around to tell her to keep quiet). But even with Annie in custody, more of the stolen money was being spent -- some in Nashville, some in other places. So it was clear that Logan was still on the loose.

Later in the year, back in Tennessee, he was in a bar in Knoxville when he got into a fight over a game of pool. Two officers moved in to break up the fight. He shot and injured two policemen, both of whom suffered problems for the rest of their lives (Wilson, p. 162), but was injured himself (Wilson, pp. 150-151). With bloodhounds on his tail (Wilson, p. 152), he was eventually captured in Jefferson City, Tennessee (Wilson, p. 154). He was found with about $2300 in cash, almost all of it stolen (Wilson, p. 155).

Logan doesn't seem to have expected to survive. To two policemen who had been relatively kind to him, he gave away a gold ring and his pocket watch (which contained a photo of him with Annie; it would be used against her). He also described his world view to a Knoxville Sentinel reporter: "I never harmed an innocent or helpless man or woman. I believe those large corporations are squeezing the life out of people, and it does no harm to take a few thousand or even a few million from them. When a man gets out and takes his life in his hands and on his nerve robs an express car, he earns what he gets" (Wilson, p. 156).

But Logan got lucky, in a way; he was wanted in several states and on Federal charges, which led to conflicts of jurisdictions (Wilson, p. 165). I would guess that the fact that he went on trial in Tennessee saved him from the gallows. The defense lawyers, in fact, apparently expected him to get off on the Federal charges, but he was found guilty on 10 of 19 counts (Wilson, p. 168). Given a long prison sentence, he escaped in 1903 shortly before being moved to a federal prison, tricking one guard, catching him with the wrapping wire taken from a broom, and then pulling a gun on a second and on a prison employee, using one of them as a human shield, then getting away on the sheriff's horse (Wilson, pp. 168-170).

What happened to Logan after that is not absolutely clear (not that his deeds in the period before his imprisonment are entirely known!); Wilson, p. 175, says, "There are several versions regarding what Logan did next and how and when he died."

The most accepted version is this: On June 7, 1904, he tried to rob another train. He and his confederates were hunted down, and Logan was injured in a shootout. Rather than be taken captive again, he shot himself in the head and died (Riffenburgh, p. 240; O'Neal, p. 184, also mentions him dying after this unsuccessful train robbery attempt, although he omits the suicide and mentions stories of other possibilities). Wilson, p. 182, mentions the same story but says it leaves loose ends -- and it's certainly true that Logan doesn't seem like the type to commit suicide. The body of the man who killed himself was photographed four times, and a death mask made; Pinkerton agent Spence said it was Logan (Wilson, p. 191), and once he came to that conclusion, found others to corroborate the identification. The body, which had been buried, was exhumed and examined -- and was said by some to be missing scars that Logan was known to have had (Wilson, p. 192). But the body was significantly decomposed; some say that this made identification by means of scars impossible (Wilson, p. 193). I think the bottom line is that we just don't know what happened to Logan, though it is not unlikely that he was the man who died on that day. There is no substantial evidence of his existence after 1904 -- but, of course, he was always changing the name he used. If everyone was convinced he was dead, then they would never identify him....

It doesn't really matter in the context of the song anyway, since it opens with Logan in Knoxville in the gambling fight and ends with his escape. At a very basic level, it has the details right, although a lot of the song sounds like it comes from generic bad man ballads. It's not obvious, to me at least, why anyone wrote a song about this little fragment of his life.

The above doesn't begin to cover all of Logan's robberies and murders. Wilson, pp. 204, says that "the National Criminal Investigation Bureau describes him as having had the longest criminal record ever known in the United States until 1910, and that he had accumulated rewards of forty thousand dollars for his crimes." There seems no pattern to his actions, other than the desire to make money; he was just "mean*. But this will give the general idea.

There are at least five books about Logan: Donna B. Ernst, Harvey Logan: Wildest of the Wild Bunch; Frank Bruce Lamb, Kid Curry: The Life and Times of Harvey Logan and the Wild Bunch; Gary A. Wilson, The Life and Death of Kid Curry : Tiger of the Wild Bunch (cited here); Sylvia
Lynch, Harvey Logan in Knoxville; and Mark Smokov, He Rode with Butch and Sundance: The Story of Harvey Kid Curry Logan. There are obviously even more about The Wild Bunch. I haven't read most of them; these were not gentleman robbers or in any way interesting. - RBW

Bibliography

- O'Neal: Bill O'Neal, Encyclopedia of Western Gunfighters, 1979. A general work, and as with most such things it appears to have a few details wrong, but a handy source for dates and such

Last updated in version 6.0

File: LE21

Harwich Naval Force Song

DESCRIPTION: "Don't send away the Dido, Don't send her out to see, If you send away the Dido, Then down comes Parkestone Quay."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1987 (Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy)

KEYWORDS: ship navy

FOUND IN: Britain(England)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

- Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy, p. 81, "Harwich Naval Force Song" (1 short text)

NOTES [197 words]: Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy's informant L. B. Horton said that the Dido was the depot ship for the destroyers based at Harwich in the First World War. Jane's Fighting Ships of World War I (1919; I use the 1990 Studio Editions reprint with modern foreword by Captain John Moore, RN), p. 62 lists the Dido as an 1896 cruiser of the Eclipse class. That, by 1914, made her ancient (she was actually slower than contemporary battleships, which meant she was completely useless at sea). Little wonder she was used as an accommodations ship. It seems most unlikely that she would ever actually have been sent to sea.

Although I have no reason to doubt that this song refers to the Dido of World War I, there was also a cruiser Dido in World War II; that one actually fought (she was the name ship of a class of anti-aircraft cruisers built in the late 1930s and early 1940s, according to M. J. Whitley, Cruisers of World War II: An International Encyclopedia, Arms and Armour Press, 1995, p. 112). This Dido spent some time in the Home Fleet, so she could have been at Harwich for a while (Whitley, p. 114), but probably not long enough for her to become a fixture! - RBW

Last updated in version 5.1

File: Tawn061

Haselbury Girl, The (The Maid of Tottenham, The Aylesbury Girl)

DESCRIPTION: A girl on the way to market meets a rakish young man, who proceeds to tie up her garter, which costs her her maidenhead. In many versions, she asks his name, and he refuses to answer.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1656 (printed in Choyce Drollery: Songs and Sonnets... Never Before Printed [London])

KEYWORDS: bawdy sex clothes courting

FOUND IN: US(SE,So) Britain(England(Lond,South))

REFERENCES (5 citations):

- Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 176, "The Haselbury Girl" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Reeves/Sharp-TheldiomOfThePeople 41, "The Hazelbury Girl" (1 text)
- Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 49, "Jackie Rover" (1 text)
- Randolph/Legman-RollMeInYourArms I, pp. 162-168, "The Maid of Tottenham" (3 texts, 2 tunes)

DT, HASLBURY* MAIDTOTN* UPSNDOWN

Roud #364
RECORDINGS:
Pop Maynard, "The Aylesbury Girl" (on Voice15)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Knight and the Shepherd's Daughter" [Child 110]
cf. ""The Next Market Day"

ALTERNATE TITLES:
To Market, To Market
Tottingham Fair
The Salisbury Girl
The Ups and Downs
Jack the Rover

NOTES [29 words]: Legman's notes in Randolph/Legman-RollMeInYourArms I, p. 167, terms this "a carefree reduction" of "The Knight and the Shepherd's Daughter" (Child 110). The evidence is thin. - EC

Last updated in version 2.6

File: K176

---

Hash o' Bennygak (Hash o' Benagoak)

DESCRIPTION: Bothy ballad. Humorous description of characters working on a farm. Singer says if you want to find him, he'll be on a herring boat

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1962 (collected from Maggie McPhee)

KEYWORDS: farming work humorous moniker nonballad worker

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland 106, "The Hash o' Bennygak" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1527

File: McCST106

---

Hat McGinnis Wore, The

DESCRIPTION: "'Good evening to you one and all, Good luck to what I say... I'm going to introduce to you bright memories of your, The relics of old days and scenes, The hat McGinnis wore.'" McGinnis was killed by the Shannon. Respect his hat lest his ghost haunt you

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1993 (Scott-ACollectorsNotebook-31TraditionalSongs)

KEYWORDS: death clothes ghost

FOUND IN: Australia

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scott-ACollectorsNotebook-31TraditionalSongs, pp. 26-27, "The Hat McGinnis Wore" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Roud #22613

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Hat Ned Kelly Wore" (derivative song)

NOTES [42 words]: The obvious temptation is to regard this as a version of "The Hat My Father Wore" -- after all, they're both about Irishmen and old hats. It's hard to be certain, since Scott's is the only version and it's pretty short, but I think this is separate. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.5

File: ScCo1027

---

Hat Me Old Man Wore, The

DESCRIPTION: "Good evening to you one and all, Good luck to you I say... I've brought with me a relic Of past happy days of yore." The singer tried to wear it in the Navy, and was not allowed, but he kept it as a good luck piece. Others should not touch it

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy)
Hat My Father Wore, The

DESCRIPTION: Paddy Miles comes from Ireland to America. On St Patrick's day he wears the hat "wore for more than ninety years ... From my father's great ancestors." He plans to return to Ballymore with "the hat my father wore"

AUTHOR: Daniel Macarthy (source: broadside LOCsheet sm1876 01751)

EARLIEST DATE: 1876 (broadside, LOCsheet sm1876 01751)

KEYWORDS: emigration return clothes America Ireland father

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Greig/Duncan8 1538, "The Hat My Father Wore" (4 texts, 2 tunes)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #168, p. 2, "The Hat My Father Wore" (1 text)
Dean-FlyingCloud, p. 64, "The Hat Me Father Wore" (1 text)
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 165, "The Hat My Father Wore" (2 texts)
Vikár/Panagapka-SongsNorthWoodsSungByOJAbbott 26, "The Hat Me Father Wore" (1 short text, 1 tune)

Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 206, "The Hat Me Father Wore" (1 text)

Roud #4796

RECORDINGS:
Angus "The Ridge" MacDonald, "The Hat My Father Wore" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(1119), "The Hat My Father Wore ("I'm Paddy Miles an Irish boy"), Jones (Sheffield), n.d.

LOCsheet, sm1876 01751, "The Hat My Father Wore!," E. H. Harding (New York), 1876 (tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
"The Sash My Father Wore (I)" (form)
"The Sash My Father Wore (II)" (many lines)
"The Hat Me Old Man Wore" (parody which shares many of the same ideas)

SAME TUNE:
The Hat Me Old Man Wore (File: Tawn096)

NOTES [367 words]: Zimmermann: "It has been noted that 'much of the pugnacity has gone from the music played on the 12th day of July' [S.H. Bell Erin's Orange Lily, p. 14]; there is a tendency to replace the most violent ballads by innocuous songs such as 'The Ould Orange Flute' or 'The Sash my Father Wore'. 'The Ould Orange Flute' appeared on nineteenth century broadsides. The other song ['The Sash my Father Wore'] is more recent; it was probably the paraphrase of a non-political song, 'The Hat my Father Wore'. A nationalist version, quite different in character but singable to the same tune, appeared in Shan Van Vocht, August 1896." The "Donagh MacDonagh Song Collection" at tripod.lycos site includes a version of "The Hat My Father Wore" that has the singer exiled "For the joining of the Brotherhood in the year of '64"; the tune for MacDonagh's version is "The Sash my Father Wore." It is clear that "The Sash" is an adaptation of "The Hat," or vice versa. The author is in question. The sheet music, LOCsheet sm1876 01751, states "words by Daniel Macarthy" with no attribution for the tune. Greig/Duncan8 says "Cf. Walton's Treasury of Irish Songs and Ballads (Dublin, 1947), p. 105. The song was written by Johnny Paterson."

Weldon Thornton, Allusions in Ulysses: An Annotated List, (Chapel Hill, 1982), p. 92, refers to both claims as songs which must be substantially the same and goes no further to resolve the claims. - BS

According to Spaeth, A History of Popular Music in America, p. 331, William ("Billy") Jerome and Jean Schwartz in 1909 published a song "The May My Father Wore on St. Patrick's Day." That can hardly be the original of this, but I don't know how the one influenced the other.

The song appears in Harrigan & Hart's Skidmore Guards Songster, which hints that Edward Harrigan (for whom see "Babies on Our Block") might have written, or rewritten, it, but I don't find it among the songs composed by David Braham in John Franceschina, David Braham: The American Offenbach, Routledge, 2003, so the Harrigan songster just adds to the confusion. Presence in that particular songster doesn't prove anything, though, since it included several pieces not by Harrigan. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: BrdHMFW

Hat Ned Kelly Wore, The

DESCRIPTION: "Good evening to youse one and all, Good luck to what I say... I've brought to you the relics boys, of the good old days of yore, You'll curse the day you trampled on the hat Ned Kelly wore." The singer has searched far but has never found the like

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1993 (Scott-ACollectorsNotebook-31TraditionalSongs)

KEYWORDS: clothes outlaw

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

1855 - Birth of Ned Kelly

1880 - Execution of Kelly. His last words are reported to have been "Such is life."

FOUND IN: Australia

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Scott-ACollectorsNotebook-31TraditionalSongs, p. 26, "The Hat Ned Kelly Wore" (1 short text, 1 tune)

Roud #22612

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Kelly Was Their Captain" (subject) and notes and references there

cf. "The Hat McGinnis Wore" (probable source)

NOTES [53 words]: Scott's informant said there was more to this song, which he could not remember. I wonder if it described Kelly's hat -- and if it WAS a hat. One trick Kelly tried as an outlaw was creating a very primitive suit of armor (more like a set of tin cans than actual medieval armor). Could the hat be the helmet from that? - RBW

Last updated in version 4.5

File: ScCol026

Hateful Mary Ann

DESCRIPTION: A confused piece, with hints of stage origin. The singer waits for her love, who is much delayed. She fears bad weather has caused him to stop "with that hateful Mary Ann" "And it's all for the chilly, driving rain. At last he arrives (to her reproaches?)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: love courting betrayal storm

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 144, "Hateful Mary Ann" (1 text)

Roud #6564

File: BrII144

Haud Awa, Bide Awa

DESCRIPTION: He asks that she accept him, a shepherd who would "row ye in his tartan plaid," and Highland soldier with a house and meadow and wealth to share with her. She rejects him and "winna gang wi' you" He says he'll leave. She stops him. They agree to marry.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (Greig/Duncan4)

KEYWORDS: courting farming money dialog soldier

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #79, pp. 1-2, "Oh, Haud Awa"; #140, pp. 1-2, "Haud Awa, Bide Awa"; "Folk-Song in Buchan," p. 15, ("Haud awa, bide awa, Haud awa frae me,
Haud Awa' Frae Me Donald (I)

DESCRIPTION: Donald offers Eppie a plaid, ring and kiss, praises his own thigh and claymore, offers a silver brooch and coracle, cheese and butter, no work or spinning. She rejects each offer: "Ye are nae a match for me." In that case, he says, he'd never marry her.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1776 (Herd)
KEYWORDS: courting bragging rejection dialog humorous
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig/Duncan4 857, "Haud Awa' Frae Me Donald" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 495, "Haud Awa'" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Haud Awa, Bide Awa" (format and some lines of dialog)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Hielan' Donald
NOTES [17 words]: Greig/Duncan4 quoting Duncan: "Learnt from his mother sixty-five years ago. Noted December 1906." - BS
Last updated in version 3.2
File: GrD4857

Haud Awa' Frae Me Donald (II)

DESCRIPTION: Donald asks Jenny to "come awa' wi' me." He asks why she no longer favours him. She says "some fickle mistress you may find will jilt as fast as thee." He claims the report of his infidelity is false and that he spread it. She tells him to prove it.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1776 (Herd)
KEYWORDS: courting infidelity lie rejection dialog
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 494, "Haud Awa'" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Haud Awa, Bide Awa" (format and some lines of dialog)

ALTERNATE TITLES:

NOTES [112 words]: Greig/Duncan3 cites different interpretations. Maybe it refers to 1645, "when contingents were gathering to the Battle of Alford." Duncan says "the verses given seem to me much more like the celebration of some kind [of] gathering for sport or merry making.... The words do not suggest the ballad style of the seventeenth century."
And nobody mentioned the 1745 Jacobite rebellion? With someone going to Skye, and the Laird going to France? Amazing. - RBW

Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv, of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Indego (620) is at coordinate (h0-1,v5) on that map [roughly 28 miles W of Aberdeen]. - BS

Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD3620

Haughs o' Newe, The
DESCRIPTION: "As I gaed up the haughs o' Newe And through Strathdon upon my pony," the singer meets a maid so pretty that she makes him lightheaded. She turns him down; he cannot dance and speaks no Gaelic. He wishes he could do more to impress her
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan6)
KEYWORDS: love courting rejection
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig/Duncan6 1238, "The Haughs o' Newe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 135, "The Maid of Don" (1 text); p. 193, "The Haughs o' Newe" (1 text)
Roud #6781
File: Ord193

Haughs o' Cromdale, The
DESCRIPTION: "As I came in by Auchindoun, a little wee bit frae the toon... To view the Haughs o' Cromdale," the singer hears that the Highland army has been defeated. But Montrose refuses to accept defeat, and in a second battle heavily defeats the English
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1819 (Hogg-JacobiteRelicsOfScotlandVol1)
KEYWORDS: patriotic Scotland Jacobites battle
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Apr 30, 1690 - Battle of Cromdale
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (7 citations):
Hogg-JacobiteRelicsOfScotlandVol1 2, "The Haughs of Cromdale" (1 text, 1 tune)
Buchan/Moreira-TheGlenbuchatBallads, pp. 83-85, "Haughs O Cromdale" (1 text)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #96, p. 1, "The Haughs o' Cromdale" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan1 113, "The Haughs of Cromdale" (2 texts, 5 tunes)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads, pp. 546-548, "The Haughs of Cromdale" (1 text)
Michael Brander, _Scottish and Border Battles and Ballads_, 1975 (page references to the 1993 Barnes & Noble edition), pp. 187-189, "The Haws o' Cromdale" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #5147
RECORDINGS:
John MacDonald, "The Haughs O' Cromdale" (on Voice08)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 25(814), "The Hearts of Campbell" ("As I came in from Auchindown"), W. Stephenson (Gateshead), 1821-1838; also Harding B 11(480), "The Hearts of Campbell"; 2806 c.14(66), "The Haughs of Crumdel"
Murray, Mu23-y1:070, "Haughs o' Crumdal," James Lindsay (Glasgow), 19C
NLScotland, RB.m.143(024), "Haughs o' Crumdale," unknown, c. 1890
SAME TUNE:
The Herald's Approach (per broadside Murray, Mu23-y1:070)
On the Restoration of the Forfeited Estates 1784 (_Scots Musical Museum_ #298, to the tune "As I came in by Auchindown")
NOTES [608 words]: Historical accuracy is rarely to be found in folksong, but this piece comes close to taking the cake. There was only one Battle of Cromdale, in which Williamite army of Thomas Livingstone beat the Jacobites under Buchan easily. Montrose (1612-1650) was not involved in any way, having been executed some 40 years before!

John Prebble, Glencoe, Martin Secker & Warburg, 1966 (I use the 1968 Penguin edition), p. 90, says that Hugh Mackay, the Williamite commander in Scotland, "sent Sir Thomas Livingstone against Buchan [who had raised a standard of rebellion on behalf of James II] with twelve hundred horse and foot, and some levies from Clan Grant and Clan Mackay. The Jacobite leader was a brave and romantic fool. He made no proper reconnaissances, and posted too few sentinels. In the first dawn of May, while his army was still sleeping upon the haughs of Cromdale, Livingstone's six troops of dragoons galloped out of the mist, swinging their swords. It was a rout, not a battle.... Buchan [escaped] without hat, coat or sword. Four hundred Highlanders were taken prisoner and the rest went home in disgust."

That being the case, there have been various attempts to determine what battle the song is actually about. The best guess is the Battle of Auldern, May 9, 1645. Montrose, typically, had won a battle at Inverlochy in February, only to see most of his army dissolve. (A large part of his force was MacDonalnds, and they were very inconsistent allies.) By May, the Covenanters felt strong enough to attack him. They managed an initial surprise, but Montrose won the day with a counterattack.

In some ways, the story of the song reminds me more of the raid on Dundee a month earlier (April 4-6), though that wasn't much of a battle -- but it did involve an attempt to attack Montrose, which miscarried. This was called a victory in London, but Montrose obviously was around to fight again a month later.

In neither case, though, did the result change the strategic situation much. Auldern came only a few weeks before the Battle of Naseby (June 14), and that much bigger and more important battle settled Charles I's hopes for good and all (though it was a while before people realized that).

Auldern does seem the best fit, but given the strange situation, I would not consider the connection proved. In particular, why conflate it with Cromdale? The latter was not a significant battle in any way; most short histories don't so much as mention it.

The song, despite its inaccuracy, has survived well, but that seems to be mostly because of its excellent tune, beloved by pipers. - RBW

Yates, Musical Traditions site Voice of the People suite "Notes - Volume 8" - 1.3.03 regarding John MacDonald's version of "The Haughs O' Cromdale": "It was a complete shambles, prefiguring the Battle of the Boyne fought two months later, and the present song reflects events very much the way they happened. Curiously enough, the first song called The Haughs o' Cromdale to be printed (Jacobeite Relics, 1819, vol.1 song 2) makes the battle a Jacobite victory, and brings in the long-dead Montrose to retrieve the day. John's song, recorded 150 years later, is certainly older than the Jacobeite Relics rewrite." There are not two songs, but only one (though an argument can be made that the radical difference in outcome would justify splitting them): Hogg's -- and the broadsides' -- version has the reporter "in tartan trews" report the victory for Montrose; MacDonald's reporter simply states

For MacDonalds' men, Clan Ronald's men,
MacKenzie's men, MacGelvey's men,
And the highland men and the lowland men
Lay dead and dying in Cromdale. - BS

 Last updated in version 3.2

File: BrHauCro

Haughs o' Gartly, The

DESCRIPTION: "Lang Lowrie o Bucharn He wis there wi's tree o' arn [alder stick] He said he wid them a' govern Upon the Haughs o' Gartly"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan3)

KEYWORDS: sports

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Greig/Duncan3 647, "The Haughs o' Gartly" (1 text)

Roud #6070

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Haughs o' Cromdale" (tune, per Greig/Duncan3)

NOTES [80 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan3 entry.
Greig/Duncan3 quoting a 1906 letter to Duncan: "[The Haughs o' Gartly] is a description of a New Year game of shinty." "Shinty" is "shinny" or -- in my day -- a pickup hockey game, not necessarily on ice.

Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv, of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Gartly (647) is at coordinate (h4,v4) on that map [roughly 32 miles WNW of Aberdeen]. - BS

Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD3647

Haul 'Er Away (Little Sally Racket)

DESCRIPTION: Shanty, with internal chorus "Haul 'er/ em away... Haul 'er away... Haul 'er away With a haul-ey-hi-o, Haul 'er away." Verses are about the "little" girls ashore ("Little Sally Racket," "Little Daisy Dawson" etc.) and their (sexual) exploits

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas)

KEYWORDS: shanty bawdy sex whore

FOUND IN: Britain

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 315-317, "Haul 'Er Away" (2 texts, 2 tunes) [AbEd, pp. 237-239]
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 86, "Little Sally Racket" (1 text)
DT, Haulrawy

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Cheer'ly Man" (form, lyrics)
cf. "Tiddy High O!" (character of Sally Rackett)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Haul 'Em Away
Haul Him Away
Sally Rackett

NOTES [158 words]: A. L. Lloyd, in the notes to the recording "A Sailor's Garland," reports that this shanty (to a tune known in Jamaica as "Mr. Ramgoat" or "Hill and Gully") was discouraged in American vessels, though the British allowed it to be sung.

The song shares its verse form, and some lyrics, with "Cheer'ly Man," but the choruses are distinct enough that we split them rather tentatively. Lloyd, among others, lumps them.

To haul, in nautical terminology, of course means to pull on a rope. "Haul away," according to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, A Seaman's Pocket Book, London, June 1943, designed for sailors newly taken into the Royal Navy in World War II; (I use the 2006 MJF Books edition), p. 42, is "an order to haul steadily until further orders." - RBW

For tunes to "Mr. Ramgoat" and "Hill and Gully" Murray, p. 9, "Hill and Gully" and p. 39, "Miss Ramgoat." The tunes are similar but not identical. Both songs are in the Index. - BS

Last updated in version 3.7
File: FSWB086A

Haul Am Day

DESCRIPTION: Call and response. Mother has gone to the mountain to bring home yellow plantain. "Haul am day," is the response.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1954 (Elder-FolksongsFromTobago)

KEYWORDS: work food nonballad worksong children mother

FOUND IN: West Indies(Tobago)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Elder-FolksongsFromTobago 36, "Haul Am Day" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [44 words]: Elder-FolksongsFromTobago: "As the lumber-men toil in the deep forest pulling the heavy logs out to level ground where sawyers will cut them up into board, they sing the praise of the mother who works as hard as the men to bring home the best to the children." - BS

Last updated in version 3.7
File: ElTo036
Haul Away, Boys, Haul Away

DESCRIPTION: Shanty. "Oh, Haul away an' let's get goin', boys. Haul away, boys, haul away! Oh, Haul away for merchant's money, boys. Haul away, boys, haul away!" No particular story line, but several verses have references to Cuba and sugar.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas)
KEYWORDS: shanty worksong animal
FOUND IN: West Indies
REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 357-358, "Haul Away, Boys, Haul Away" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Abrahams-DeepTheWaterShallowTheShore, pp. 111-113, "Haul Away, Haul Away" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Old Bee Makes the Honey Comb" (lyrics)

NOTES: To haul, in nautical terminology, of course means to pull on a rope. "Haul away," according to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, A Seaman's Pocket Book, London, June 1943, is "an order to haul steadily until further orders." - RBW

Last updated in version 4.0
File: Hugi357

Haul Away, Joe

DESCRIPTION: Shanty, characterized by, "Away, haul away, haul away, Joe" (or "...haul away, pull"). Some versions tell a story: the sailor has trouble with his Irish girl and goes to sea, or suffers grief from a Yankee girl, or otherwise suffers at women's hands.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1917 (what appears to have been a fragment of the chorus appears in the diary of Mary Bray, probably in 1859; see A. A. Hoehling _Ships that Changed History_, p. 18)
KEYWORDS: shanty sailor courting
FOUND IN: US(MA,MW,NE,SE)
REFERENCES (20 citations):
- Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 4-5, "Haul Away, Joe" (2 texts, 1 tune)
- Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, pp. 76-78, "Haul Away, Joe" (1 composite text, 1 tune)
- Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen, pp. 41-42, "Haul Away, Joe" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 75-78, "Haul Away, Joe" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 358-361, "Haul Away, Joe" (1 text plus several fragments, 3 tunes) [AbEd, pp. 270-272]
- Sharp-EnglishFolkChanteys, XXVII, p. 32, "Haul Away, Joe" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 138-139, "Haul Away, Joe" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 780, "Haul Away, Joe" (1 short text, 1 tune)
- Terry-TheShantyBook-Part1, #28, "Haul Away, Joe" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, pp. 93-94, "Haul Away, Joe" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 208-209, "Haul Away, My Rosy" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Shay-AmericanSeaSongsAndChanteys, pp. 30, "Haul Away, Joe" (1 text plus some loose verses, 1 tune)
- Warner-FolkSongsAndBalladsOfTheEasternSeaboard, p 36, "Haul Away Joe" (1 text)
- Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 145, "Haul Away, Joe" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 87, "Haul Away Joe" (1 text)

DT, HAULJOE*

Frederick Pease Harlow, _The Making of a Sailor, or Sea Life Aboard a Yankee Square-Rigger_, 1928; republished by Dover, 1968, pp. 272-273, "Haul Away, Joe" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roger deV. Renwick, _Recentering Anglo/American Folksong: Sea Crabs and Wicked Youths_, University Press of Mississippi, 2001, pp. 87-88, "Haul Away, Joe" (1 text)

Moses Asch and Alan Lomax, Editors, _The Leadbelly Songbook_, Oak, 1962, p. 77, "Haul Away, Joe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Haul Away, Old Fellow, Away

DESCRIPTION: Halyard shanty. French verses with English choruses "Haul away, old fellow, away." Sailor tells of meeting and falling in love with a girl, but she's too fine for him; sailors only get the trollops. He's sick of it all and is going to ship out far away.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Hayet, _Chansons de bord_)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage shanty love farewell
FOUND IN: France Britain
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 361-363, "Haul Away, Old Fellow, Away" (2 texts, French & English, 1 tune)
Hugill-SongsOfTheSea, p. 95, "Haul Away, Old Fellow, Away" (2 texts, French & English, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES: cf. "Haul Away, Joe" (similar chorus)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
C'est en passant sur l' pont de Morlaix
NOTES [58 words]: To haul, in nautical terminology, of course means to pull on a rope. "Haul away," according to the Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty, A Seaman's Pocket Book, London, June 1943, designed for sailors newly taken into the Royal Navy in World War II; (I use the 2006 MJF Books edition), p. 42, is "an order to haul steadily until further orders."

Haul on the Bowline

DESCRIPTION: Shanty. Characteristic line: "Haul on the bowline, the bowline haul!" The lyrics may relate to the singer's friendship with Kitty in Liverpool (or elsewhere), or perhaps complain about a sailor's life.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1869
KEYWORDS: shanty nonballad sailor
FOUND IN: US(MA,NE) Canada(Mar,Newf) Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (22 citations):
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 9-10, "Haul on the Bowline" (1 text, 1 tune)
Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, pp. 75-76, "Haul on the Bowline" (1 text, 1 tune)
Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen, pp. 42-43, "Haul on the Bowline" (1 text, 1 tune)
Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 95-96, "Haul the Bowline" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 354-357, "Haul the Bowline" (2 texts, 2 tunes) [AbEd, pp. 266-269]
Sharp-EnglishFolkChanteys, XXXVII, p. 42, "Haul on the Bow-line" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, p. 105, "Haul upon the Bowline"; pp. 108-109, "We'll Haul the Bowlin'" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 139-140, "Haul the Bowline" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 167, "Haul on the Bo'line" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cox-FolkMusicInANewfoundlandOutport, p. 54, "'Jolly Poker' and 'Haul on the Bowline'" (1 short text, 1 tune, with one verse of this and one of "Johnny Boker (I)"
Greig/Duncan1 1, "Haul Away Your Bowline" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, p. 131, "Haul on the Bowline" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fowke/Mills/Blume-CanadasStoryInSong, pp. 12-13, "Haul on the Bowline" (1 text, 1 tune)
Smith/Hatt/Fowke-SeaSongsBalladFromNineteenthCenturyNovaScotia, p. 33, "Haul the Alabama Bowline" (1 text)
Bone-CapstanBars, pp. 38-39, "Haul on th' Bowlin'" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Terry-TheShantyBook-Part1, #29, "We'll haul the bowlin'" (1 text, 1 tune)
Shay-AmericanSeaSongsAndChanteys, p. 27, "Haul on the Bowline" (1 text, 1 tune)
Heart-Songs, p. 459, "Haul on the Bowlin'" (1 text, 1 tune)
Darling-NewAmericanSonster, p. 310, "Haul on the Bowlin'" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 87, "Haul on the Bowline" (1 text)
DT, HAULBWLN* HAULBWLN2*
Roud #652
RECORDINGS:
Joseph Hyson, "Haul the Alabama Bowline" (on NovaScotia1)
Richard Maitland, "Haul the Bowline" (AFS, 1939; on LC26)
Stanley Slade & chorus: "Haul On the Bowlin'" (on Lomax41, LomaxCD1741)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Haul Away the Bowline

NOTES [289 words]: Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman says of this song, "Its unusual antiquity is shown by the fact that not since the sixteenth or early seventeenth century has the term 'bowline' been used for any rope on which a shanty would be sung."
Bone-CapstanBars makes this statement even stronger; "'Haul on th' bowlin'... is probably the oldest song we know at sea. The bowline has not been an important rope since, in about 1500, staysails were put in use to hold a ship on a wind. Before that date, the bowline was doubtless of stout cordage to haul the weather leech of a square-sail forward when the old carrack was sailing with the wind abeam. But, although a bowline of sorts was used in modern square rig, it could be set taut by a hand or two."
The above statements are true if the bowline is indeed a rope (and it would normally be a rope that is hauled). We might mention however that a bowline is also "a quick method of putting a temporary eye in the end of a rope, such as a hawser, or a line passed round a man working over the side. Two hands are required" (Seaman'sPocket, p. 49). So perhaps to haul on a bowline is to haul on something secured by a bowline knot?
Also, StoryKirwinWiddowson, p. 59, note a Newfoundland usage, "A length of rope used esp[ecially] to fasten a load of wood on a sled and for hauling"; they cite a mention of a bowline in the song familiar Newfoundland song "Tickle Cove Pond," where people are told to haul on the bowline with all their might. Perhaps Newfoundland preserved an older usage?
Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland claims, without citing a source, that it "is said to have been a favorite in the time of Henry VIII" (1509-1547). Shay reports the same, again without a source. - RBW

Bibliography

- Seaman'sPocket: Lords Commissioners of the Admiralty,A Seaman's Pocket Book, London, June 1943, designed for sailors newly taken into the Royal Navy in World War II; (I use the 2006 MJF Books edition)
- StoryKirwinWiddowson: G. M. Story, W. J. Kirwin, and J. D. A. Widdowson, Haul, Haul, Haul, Boys

DESCRIPTION: "Haul, haul, haul, boys, haul and be lively, Haul, oh haul, boys, haul. She will come, she must come; haul, boys, haul. (x2) Well, it seems to me like the time ain't long; Haul and be lively, haul, boys, haul."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: fishing work nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 226, "Haul, Haul, Haul, Boys" (1 text)

NOTES [27 words]: The editors of Brown suggest that this is a fishing adaption of "Haul Away, Joe." Certainly possible -- but there is nothing compelling about the suggestion. - RBW

Hauling Logs on the Maniwaki

DESCRIPTION: To the "Derry Down" tune, the singer tells of setting out for the Maniwaki -- a difficult trip. Once the loggers arrive in camp, the song settles in to a routine of describing the members of the crew

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (Fowke)

KEYWORDS: logger work lumbering moniker

FOUND IN: Canada(Que)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fowke-LumberingSongsFromTheNorthernWoods #20, "Hauling Logs on the Maniwaki" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #4384

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Derry Down" (tune) and references there

Hauling Wood to Bangor

DESCRIPTION: Singer gets up at five to haul wood to Bangor; he arrives and gets drunk. His father comes to find him. A fiddler plays "The Bells of Old Ireland" and the men dance. To the old women: "Perhaps you done as bad yourself And perhaps a damn sight worse"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland)

KEYWORDS: lumbering dancing drink music humorous

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 31-32, "Hauling Wood to Bangor" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #12475

Haunted Hunter, The

DESCRIPTION: Singer, walking toward camp, is joined by a snowshoed figure who leaves no tracks. The singer falls in a snowdrift, to be found with hair bleached white. The other trappers recognize the signs of an encounter with the haunted hunter; all leave the area.
Haunted Wood

DESCRIPTION: A white man builds a home near "Haunted Falls." One day when he is away, Indians cast his wife to die on the rocks and burn his home with his children inside. "Now the old man wanders lonely... And the people... Call this place Haunted Wood."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (collected from Buck Lee; printed in JournalOfAmericanFolklore 1954); a related song was in existence by 1863; see NOTES
KEYWORDS: death homicide Indians(Am.) revenge family
FOUND IN: US(Ro)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 41, "Haunted Wood" (1 text, 1 tune)
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 144-146, "(Haunted Wood)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Logsdon-WhorehouseBellsWereRinging 34, pp. 190-194, "Haunted Falls" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #5503
RECORDINGS:
Eva Ashley Moore, "The Haunted Woods" (on Ashley02)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Minnehaha, Laughing Water" (approximate subject)
cf. "Petit Rocher" (plot)
NOTES [4394 words]: Speculation about this song has involved hanging some very big coats on some very small pegs.
The first speculation seems to have been Burt-AmericanMurderBallads's (later cited by Logsdon-WhorehouseBellsWereRinging), who quotes her informant's guess that the song derives from the 1862 Sioux Uprising -- now officially designated the Dakota Conflict by Minnesota government agencies.
There are severe problems with this assumption. "Haunted Wood" takes place in woods near a waterfall in the mountains. But Minnesota has no mountains; the highest point in the state, although called "Eagle Mountain," is merely a medium-sized hill, 2301 feet above sea level -- and it is in an area occupied by the Ojibwe, not the Dakota. Nor were there forests in Dakota country -- northern and eastern Minnesota were forested at the time of the Dakota Conflict, but the Dakota were prairie nomads; they never lived in the Big Woods!
Nor does the plot of the song seem to match anything that happened in Minnesota. The Dakota Conflict began with a massacre -- but it doesn't sound like this massacre. Indeed, Karolevitz, p. 64, says that killing women and children went against Dakota tradition, although there were certainly instances of it during the Conflict. But there was also at least one famous instance of Dakota men giving up their personal possessions to ransom women and children taken captive by militant Santees (Karolevitz, p. 66).
We should note that our records of the Dakota Conflict are surprisingly patchy, due (I think) mostly to bad communications. At a time when Civil War armies transported forces by rail and communicated with each other by telegraph, almost all messages in the Dakota Conflict were carried by messenger, and railroads had no influence at all -- most of Minnesota was still beyond the rails. The first major history of the state, Folwell's, is constantly stressing the rides people made to carry news (e.g. pp. 115, 147). There was a severe shortage of Springfield rifle muskets (Folwell, p. 158), and entrenching tools were even more rare. The whole thing sounds more like the French and Indian War than the Second Bull Run campaign then being fought in Virginia. Most estimates of casualties seem to have been pure guesses. Phisterer lists six battles of the Dakota Conflict on pp. 110-115, but in half the cases describes them only as "Fight with Indians" or "Organizations not recorded."

The roots of the Dakota Conflict went back almost sixty years. It was in 1805 that Zebulon Pike "bought" the region at the confluence of the Mississippi and Minnesota rivers (near the heart of what is now the Twin Cities) from the local Indians for a little money and a lot of alcohol and trinkets (Beck, pp. 3-4). Fort Snelling, the first European settlement in the state apart from some old fur trade posts, was built beginning in 1819; at the time, it was the only American government post northwest of a line running from Fort Howard on Green Bay through Fort Crawford at Prairie du Chien, Wisconsin to Fort Atkinson at the junction of the Missouri and Platte rivers (see the map in Blegen, p. 98). At the time, Americans hadn't even surveyed the Minnesota River; that was done by Major Stephen Long in 1823 (Risjord, pp. 46-48). In 1825, the federal government tried to create a peaceful boundary between the Dakota (Sioux) and Ojibwe (Chippewa). It failed (Beck, p. 4).

The real encroachments on Indian territory began in 1837, when the Dakota were forced to give up all their lands east of the Mississippi (Beck, p. 4; Risjord, p. 56). Then the Federals came up with the idea of reservations. It was the only way to make enough land available to meet migrants' demands. In 1849, when Minnesota became a territory, there were only about 4000 whites in the region. Nine years later, when Minnesota became a state, there were over 150,000 (Beck, p. 5).

This was possible only because the Dakota had been bullied into making territorial concessions. By 1858, the Dakota were confined in a tiny area along the Minnesota river from its headwaters to a point somewhat west of New Ulm (see map in Blegen, p. 268). The whole thing was administered from two agencies (known, logically enough, as the Upper and Lower Sioux Agencies). In return for these concession, the Dakota were supposed to receive a regular annuity. That, plus a conversion to an agricultural lifestyle, was supposed to allow them to live on a territory far smaller than their old nomadic range.

If you ignore the fact that it was destroying Dakota culture, which, frankly, would have had to happen soon anyway, because of population pressure -- even before the great European influx, Beck, p. 15, notes that the big game in Minnesota was largely hunted out; the Dakota, contrary to myth, did not live an environmentally sustainable lifestyle -- the terms were sort of fair. Except for the footnotes. The Indians were tricked into giving up a large part of their annuity to settle alleged claims by whites (Risjord, p. 65). This meant that their income, which should have been reasonably sufficient, kept them in poverty. Jackson, p. 162, observes that "many more... would have entered on the agricultural life had the Government provided ways and means for them to do so." Beck, p. 15, adds that the government had neither improved the land nor supplied the instructors and material to let the Dakota do so themselves; not only did this lack cause resentment, it also caused many Dakota to go back to their old ways.

Even Harpers, p. 283, writing from the perspective of 1866 and with a clear desire that native culture be eradicated, admits that "It was unfortunate, however, that the patronage which the government bestowed upon the Indians was frequently dispensed through agents who took many opportunities to defraud the beneficiaries." Charles Flandrau, one of the members of the first Minnesota Supreme Court, who also had done some work as an Indian Agent, commented, "Had I been an Indian, I would have rebelled too" (Karolevitz, p. 64).

An Episcopal Bishop, Henry A. Whipple, who had been in Minnesota since 1859, wrote to a new Indian agent, "[The Indians'] history with us has been one of robbery & wrong. Dishonest agents or careless servants have made way with his money, corrupt whites have polluted his home, wife & daughters & blasted his home by the accursed fire water.... An American might blush to ask how it happens that the English govt. have not had an Indian war in Canada this century? how it is we have a new one every year? ... The fault is our own" (Meier, p. 98).

Whipple later wrote, in his preface to Jackson (p. viii), "The Indian Bureau is often unable to fulfil the treaties, because Congress has failed to make the appropriations. If its agents are not men of the highest charavter, it is largely due to the fact that we send a man to execute this difficult trust at a remote agency, and expect him to support himself and family on $1500 a year. The Indian Bureau represents a system which is a blunder and a crime.... The Indian is the only human being within our territory who has no individual right in the soil. He is not amenable to or protected by law."

Beck, p. 67, tells us that the Dakota were often desperate enough to prostitute their daughters and wives to the soldiers at Fort Ridgely in exchange for food and clothing. On p. 128, he notes that the number of White settlers in the Minnesota Valley roughly tripled from 1860 to 1862, putting even more of a squeeze on the Dakota.
During the conflict, Chief Little Crow would send a message to Henry Hasings Sibley (of whom more below) declaring (as Sibley wrote to his wife), "the reason the war was commenced was because he could not get the provisions and other supplies due the Indians, that the women and children were starving, and he could get no satisfaction from Major Galbraith, the U. S. Agent" (Meier, p. 102).

This was because, in 1862, the annuity payments were late (Carley, p. 6. It wasn't the first time, either; in 1854 and 1855, the payments had been both too late and smaller than promised; Beck, p. 56). It had been a hard winter, and the Dakota were going hungry. The Agencies refused to give them food until the payment came, and trader Andrew Myrick callously declared that they should "eat grass or their own dung" (Lass, p. 128. When Myrick's body was later found, the mouth was stuffed with grass; Jones, p. 212). Even then, many of the Dakota opposed going to war. Folwell thinks that the whole war could have been avoided had the money arrived on time (cf. discussion in Blegen, p. 267). But some young hotheads could take no more.

According to Blegen, p. 260, "On Sunday, August 17, [1862,] four young devil-may-care Wahpetons attached to a Mdewakaton camp were returning from a deer hunt in the Big Woods. They happened to pass the farmstead of a settler in Meeker County [between Litchfield and Willmar]. Their almost incredible names were Killing Ghost, Breaking Up, Runs against Something When Crawling, and Brown Wing; and the farmer... [was named] Robinson Jones. The Indians... decided to kill Jones, went to his house, first requested liquor, were refused, then followed him to the neighboring house of one Howard Baker, where Mrs. Jones was visiting. There... the Sioux hunters first engaged in a seemingly innocent target practice with the white men. The game was a ruse. The white men did not reload after firing at the target; the Sioux did so immediately, then took aim and shot down Baker, Jones and his wife, and a man named Webster, who chanced to be there on a search for land.... The Indians rushed back to the first farm and shot a girl, while the wives of Baker and Webster and some children saved their lives by hiding."

It will be evident, since none of the husbands involved survived, that this could not be the source for "Haunted Wood."

There were few trained troops in Minnesota at the time; most had been transferred east or south to fight the Confederates. The regulars were long gone (something that didn't help Indian relations; most regulars had been replaced by volunteers, who tended to dislike the Dakota more than the regulars, according to Beck, p. 127), and even volunteers were being pulled away as quickly as possible. Malvern Hill, the last of the Seven Days' Battles, had been fought on August 5. Second Bull Run took place on August 30. Antietam followed in September. Braxton Bragg invaded Kentucky in late August. (Jones, p. 191, thinks the Union failures of this period contributed to the Dakota decision to rebel, although his chronology is a few weeks off.)

This meant that, apart from a few under-strength companies, and a larger collection of untrained and unequipped recruits, every available soldier was on the front lines of the Civil War. It has been estimated that there were 7000 Dakota braves in the state at the time. Had they all been organized and properly led, they might very well have taken over the whole western half of Minnesota. As it was, they pushed many settlers off of their homes, sometimes violently. But they failed to take Fort Ridgely, or New Ulm, or most of the other key sites where battles occurred.

Some of the killings of settlers qualify as atrocities (e.g. Jones, p. 203, tells of a child having her leg torn off and being left to die), but most were fairly clean. Stephen Osman, formerly of the Minnesota Historical Society, tells me that the Uprising involved quite a few acts of torture by the Dakotas, but this ended quickly (and I have to note that few of the atrocity stories seem to have been verified). On pp. 109-110, Folwell tells of the slaughter in battle of a company of the Fifth Minnesota on August 18, but those were soldiers. Folwell does observe that many of those who were attacked in the area were German settlers (p. 111). On p. 115, he notes the killing of "nearly... fifty peaceable German settlers" near Milford. The song "Minnehaha," cited below, seems to imply a slaughter of Germans or Scandinavians.

But Folwell also notes that women generally were not killed. Similarly, there was a famous massacre at Lake Shetek in southwestern Minnesota, but men were the primary casualties; Carley, pp. 23-24, lists only widows, not widowers, so again, there were no men who survived their families. Jones, pp. 194-199, tells many stories of attacks on August 18, but again, it was either men or whole families being killed; he tells only one story (p. 198) of a woman (Mrs. Joseph Stocker) being killed when her husband survived. Even in that instance, there seem to have been no children involved.

Still, Jackson, p. 163, states that "For three days the hostile bands, continually re-inforced, went from settlement to settlement, killing and plundering. A belt of country nearly two hundred miles in length and about fifty in width was entirely abandoned by the population, who flocked in panic to the towns and forts."
As soon as the Dakota chief Little Crow heard about the Robinson Jones murders, he tried to calm things down. Accused of cowardice by the young braves, he took charge of the uprising, but warned his people that "Yes, [the whites] fight among themselves, but if you strike at one of them, they will all turn upon you and devour you and your women and little children, just as the locusts in their time fall on the trees and devour all the leaves in one day. You will die like rabbits when the hungry wolves hunt them down in the hard moon" (Blegen, p. 261). He proved right.

After a month and a half of shifting fortunes, the Union finally managed to assemble the equivalent of a brigade to take on the Dakota. On September 23, at Wood Lake near Granite Falls, Union forces under Henry Sibley met those of Little Crow. The "battle" was not very well organized (Blegen, p. 274, calls it a "confused and random engagement"; Lass, p. 131, says it was an "awkward standoff punctuated by intermittent gunfire"); Risjord, p. 98, speaks of a "general melee... [in which the Dakota] withdrew after two hours, leaving fourteen dead on the field, among them Mankato, Little Crow's most valuable lieutenant.") Carley, pp. 62-63, says that the whole thing came about because soldiers from the Third Minnesota (which had been forced to surrender to the Confederates and had returned to Minnesota without its officers) went foraging and ran into the Dakota. This let the Union forces stand largely on the defensive -- a tremendous advantage given the technology of the time. They suffered seven killed and 33 wounded.

Little Crow and his forces retreated. Sibley did not really pursue; he wanted the Indians alive, so he could recover their captives (Jones, p. 217). Most of the captives were eventually released.

The Uprising was over. The retribution would follow.

No one knows how many Minnesotans were killed. Folwell p. 391, lists contemporary estimates that from 500 to 800 Europeans were killed, and on p. 392 seems to support an estimate of 644 as being roughly correct. Jackson, p. 163, says "Nearly a thousand were killed." Utley/Washburn, p. 203, declare that "fully eight hundred whites died violently in atonement for the wrongs done the Santee." Carley, p. 1, thinks the number between 450 and 800 but seems to favor the lower end of that range. Karolovitz, p. 64, mentions estimates from 490 to 800. The 800 number may be based on Harper's, p. 283.

Little Crow would eventually be killed in a raid in 1863 (Blegen, p. 281; Utley/Washburn, p. 204, say he was "shot down by a settler while picking berries") but that was after the Minnesota phase of the rising was crushed. The Indians may have had fewer losses at the time, but in the long run, they suffered severely. Carley, p. 1, says that no accurate estimate of Dakota losses in the war can be made; Dakota witnesses later admitted to 21 losses, but it is known that they carried off their injured and dead, and many surely died who were not counted.

In the aftermath, some 1700 Dakota were taken prisoner and held in a concentration camp below Fort Snelling. A military commission "tried" them, but each "trial" lasted only minutes; Lass, p. 132, says that the commission sometimes settled forty cases in a day. It condemned fully 303 to death; Carley, p. 70. President Lincoln, to his great credit, ordered that all but 39 of them be spared; Carley, p. 72. One was later granted clemency, but the other 38 were hung on December 26, 1862; Carley, p. 73.

The remaining Sioux were then mostly forced out of the state, carted by steamship to the Dakotas, and later to Nebraska and other places (Lass, p. 133). The result was a new conflict in the Dakota Territory in 1863 (Jackson, p. 164), with occasional raids into Minnesota. Henry Sibley (who earned a brigadier's commission for his work, according Utley/Washburn, p. 204; although Phisterer, p. 278 notes that the commission dated from September 29, 1862, and expired in 1863) -- eventually led a long campaign through the Dakota region in 1863, adding to the tragedy (Carley, pp. 88-89; Beck, pp. 156-157). Back then, it was called "Manifest Destiny." These days, we have another term: "Ethnic cleansing." The Dakota remember it with bitterness to this day; I have heard them tell the tales of their anger and grief for those confined and often left to die by the banks of the Minnesota River.

Tales of massacres grew in the telling. The local newspapers had printed many false stories of Indian crimes even before the Uprising (Beck cites instances on pp. 46, 132 and elsewhere). During the Uprising, the New York Tribune at one time claimed that the towns of St. Peter, Henderson, and Glencoe had been burned. But of these three, only St. Peter was close to the conflict zone, and even it was some distance "behind the lines." During the conflict, the Yankton Dakotian called for revenge for those who has "seen their wives and husbands, fathers, and mothers and children, butchered before their eyes" (Karolovitz, p. 65) -- even though the conflict apparently had not reached that part of South Dakota.

Bottom line: "Haunted Wood" does not fit conditions in Minnesota during the Dakota Conflict and does not appear to describe an actual incident of that conflict.

That isn't the end of the story, though. Because there is a possible ancestor of this song which has strong Minnesota ties. At the time the Index was begun, there was no evidence that it had gone into tradition, but it has now turned up in the Rickaby collection. But I'm leaving the rest of this as-is for now.

According Dunn, pp. 124-125, "[T]here is at present no reason to doubt that Frank Wood's 'Minnehaha' was the first song by a Minnesota to find local publication.... It followed Wood's initial composition by eight months, appearing in October, 1863. The words -- 'Minnehaha, laughing waters, cease thy laughing now for aye' -- were written by Richard H. Chittenden, a captain in the First Wisconsin Cavalry, who took part in the Sioux Uprising. The song is dedicated 'To the memory of the victims of the Indian Massacre of 1862.' It deals in lurid words the terrors of the Indian revolt and was as close to the Civil War as any of the local music came."

Dunn, p. 124, also notes that Wood was Minnesota's "first song writer"; he published at least eight songs and one march, and taught piano in Saint Paul until he died in 1899. Few of his songs had any success.

Except, perhaps, for "Minnehaha." I have found no certain copy of this (even Dunn did not seem to have access to the sheet music), but there is an item in the John A. Nelson papers at the Minnesota Historical Society, an anonymous poem called "Minnie-ha-ha!" The singer begs Minnehaha Falls to stop laughing ("Minnehaha" is usually said to be from Dakota words meaning "Laughing Waters" -- although it seems in fact to be a generic Dakota word for a waterfall). The poet asks them to "Give me back my Lela's tresses," says, "See that smoke that was my dwelling," and asks, "Have they killed my Hans and Otto?"

The poem is printed on page 100 of Meier. Looking at this version, I find few verbal resemblances to "Haunted Falls," but the two songs are almost certainly about the same incident. In addition, Bessie Stanchfield collected a song "Minnehaha, Laughing Water" from Elma Snyder McDowell of Saint Cloud in the 1940s (I think). Stanchfield's papers in the Minnesota Historical Society archives are fragmentary and do not seem to have a full text, but it seems clear that it was the same song as in Meier. So this song appears to have had some slight hold on Minnesota tradition.

The problem is, as the above outline of the tale of the Uprising reveals, the "Minnehaha" song no more appears to refer to any actual event of the Dakota Conflict than does "Haunted Wood."

Minnehaha Creek runs through the western Twin Cities, and Minnehaha Falls is right in the middle of the city of Minneapolis and only a couple of miles from Fort Snelling, the first permanent site of American government in Minnesota. And the name "Minnehaha Falls" is attested on pp. 244-235 of Mayer/Heilbron as having been in common use in August 1851 (before Longfellow published "The Song of Hiawatha"). There are important Indian sites in the area, but all had been abandoned; by the time of the Dakota Conflict, there can't have been many Indians in the vicinity.

Blegen in fact has a map of the "hot spots" of the Dakota Conflict on p. 268, and none are closer to the Twin Cities than Mankato, which would be at least a two day march on foot. The chief battles of the early part of the war were even farther away up the Minnesota River, at Fort Ridgely between New Ulm and Redwood Falls (Folwell, pp. 125-130) and at New Ulm itself (Folwell, pp. 133-143). But Fort Ridgely was defended by soldiers; there were no children there. At the "First Battle of New Ulm" (another German community), only a single 13-year-old girl was killed. At the "Second Battle," 26 European men were killed and others wounded, but there were few if any female casualties.

Thus these battles cannot explain the story of "Minnehaha" any more than they can explain "Haunted Wood."

Folwell, p. 124, in fact notes that most of the refugees from the first stage of the conflict headed for the Twin Cities (then three cities, Minneapolis, Saint Anthony, and Saint Paul). Anyone who reached Minnehaha Falls would have been safe.

Plus I haven't found any references to Minnehaha Falls being called haunted. Unless the idea is somehow linked to "The Death of Minnehaha" in Longfellow's "Song of Hiawatha." Longfellow's poem seems to have inspired a number communities to adopt the name "Minnehaha." But Longfellow's poem was published only in 1855. That is stretching coincidence to the breaking point.

So we're back where we started. "Minnehaha" may have inspired "Haunted Wood" (I suspect it did), but it still isn't true. On the other hand, so many stories were swirling around that it is perfectly possible that someone told a similar tale to whip up hatred against the Dakota.

I would add that I don't think the rewrite of "Minnehaha" which produced "Haunted Wood" was done by a Minnesotan. It really doesn't sound like a Minnesota story to me, and I live in Minnesota. That's not proof, of course -- not after a century and a half. But I do note that "Haunted Wood" (as opposed to "Minnehaha, Laughing Waters") is found mostly in the west, and not in Minnesota.

If we assume that "Minnehaha, Laughing Waters" is the source, we can at least try to see what it might have described. There are other places called Minnehaha around the country. One is a county in South Dakota -- the county containing South Dakota's largest city Sioux Falls, in fact. Sioux Falls, on the Big Sioux River, was settled in 1857 (Karolevitz, p. 41) and temporarily abandoned during the Dakota Uprising (Beck, p. 152, which notes that all but three buildings of the new town were burned in a raid). Could the "Minnehaha" of "Minnehaha, Laughing Waters" be the falls of the Big Sioux in Minnehaha County, rather than Minnehaha Falls in Minneapolis? This would explain much. And the author of the poem might not want to call the Big Sioux River after his enemies, and so use a different name. Alternately, there is a Minnehaha district in Pennsylvania, near Philadelphia, associated with an obscure folk Pennsylvania folk song, "Minnehaha (A Lament)." This is a region with woods and falls, although there doesn't seem to be any record of "Haunted Woods" there.

Consider too the Spirit Lake Massacre of 1857. A band of outcast Dakota, led by one Inkpaduta, attacked several households near Spirit Lake, Iowa on March 8-9. According to Beck, p. 43, "When they finished, thirty-four people, mostly women and children, were dead and four other women taken prisoner." (Karolevitz, pp. 41-42, however, says that 42 were killed and four women taken captive; Folwell, p. 402, says that "some thirty" were killed and three taken captive. Although Folwell shows a map of the sites raided on p. 403, and most of the names are English, not German, making "Hans" and "Otto" unlikely names for the children.) Inkpaduta's Dakota went on to attack Springfield, Minnesota (not the same site as the modern town of Springfield; it's on the Des Moines River just north of the Iowa border) on March 26. Army attempts to catch up with him failed (Blegen, p. 265); he fled into Dakota Territory -- perhaps giving the other Dakota more reason to think they could ignore White justice.

Spirit Lake is closer to South Dakota, and to Sioux Falls, than to the Twin Cities. Inkpaduta probably went very close to Sioux Falls in his flight -- and a defensive work was built there to defend against him (Karolevitz, p. 42). All in all, I rather suspect that it was one of the events at Spirit Lake, not the Dakota Conflict itself, which inspired this song.

Reinforcing this is the fact that Inkpaduta was reported to be roaming around the Yellow Medicine River in July 1862 (Beck, pp. 127-128). Stories of his outrages five years earlier would readily mix with the reports of the actual troubles of 1862.

I emphasize that all of this is extremely speculative. Still, I think the likelihood high that "Haunted Wood/Haunted Falls" is a rewrite of "Minnehaha, Laughing Waters," with the local Minnesota references deleted, perhaps to justify some local action against Indians. - RBW

Bibliography

- Blegen: Theodore C. Blegen, Minnesota: A History of the State (1963; I use the 1975 University of Minnesota edition with a new final chapter by Russell W. Fridley, but this is merely an appendix to the Blegen book; it is actually placed after the index!). A very large single volume, considered one of the two great histories of the state (Folwell being the other). It is clearly more sympathetic with the Dakota than Folwell.
- Carley: Kenneth Carley, The Dakota War of 1862: Minnesota’s Other Civil War, revised edition, Minnesota Historical Society Press, 1976. Although devoted entirely to the Dakota Conflict, this is a thin book (102 pages), heavily illustrated; there is probably less text here than in Folwell, although the perspective is far more enlightened.
- Harpers: Alfred H. Guernsey and Henry M. Alden, Harper's Pictorial History of the Great Rebellion in the United States, 1866 (I use the facsimile published by The Fairfax Press as Harper's Pictorial History of the Civil War; this is undated but was printed in the late Twentieth Century)
- Jackson: Helen Jackson, A Century of Dishonor: A Sketch of the United States Government's Dealings with Some of the Indian Tribes (no copyright date listed; I use the 1994 Indian Head/Barnes & Noble edition). I've no idea how far to trust this; it has no index, no footnotes, and a completely inadequate table of contents. So you can't read it and look something up to verify it.
- Karolevitz: Robert F. Karolevitz, Challenge, the South Dakota Story, Brevet Press, 1974 (I Hava Nagila

DESCRIPTION: Modern Hebrew: "Hava nagila (x3) venis mecha. Hava neranena (x3), venis mecha. Uru, uru achim, Uru achim belev sameach." Hearers are urged to be merry AUTHOR: unknown (reworked by Abraham Z. Idelsohn; see NOTES)

EARLIEST DATE: 1915 (tune collected by Idelsohn, who apparently set the words in 1918)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):

NOTES [227 words]: Not exactly a folk song by origin, but now so popular that it may qualify in practice. And its roots are "folky." Frankly, however, I included it only because I found the following information on p. 16 of Irene Heskes, Passport to Jewish Music: Its History, Traditions, and Culture, originally published as #33 in Contributions to the Study of Music and Dance, 1994 (I use the 1995? Tara Publications paperback edition):

"Abraham Z. Idelsohn [1882-1938] was especially drawn to the works of Hebrew poets, particularly Chayim Nachim Bialik (1873-1934), some of whose poems he set to music.... He compiled a first songster in order to bring good Jewish music into the schools., adapting for educational use many Jewish folk melodies, one of which he renamed as Hava Nagilah (Let us be merry). It was derived from a Hasidic nigun (tune) sung by the follower of the celebrated Hasidic leader Rabbi Yisroel (1797-1850) or Sadigora (Krillovitz), also known as the Rizhiner rebbe (rabbi)."

If I understand Heskes correctly (the text is not very clear), the text of Hava Nagila was first published in Folksongs of the Eastern Jews (Volume 9, p. 200, song #716). Idelsohn had earlier published the tune, without text, as his #155. He had collected it in 1915. But he did not copyright the combination of text and tune, so he is rarely credited with the piece. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.5
File: DThavana

Have Courage My Boy to Say No

DESCRIPTION: Singer exhorts his son, leaving home, to take a righteous path, despite temptation: he should shun "bright ruby wine," for "poison it stings like a viper," as well as "vile gambling dens," rather trusting in God. Refrain: "Have courage, my boy, to say no"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1938 (recorded by Dixon Bros.)

KEYWORDS: virtue warning gambling drink wine nonballad religious

FOUND IN: US(Ro,SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

DT, SAYNO

Roud #5263

RECORDINGS:
Have Two Prisoners Here in Jail

DESCRIPTION: "(Here we) have two prisoners in jail (x3), Turn about, ladies, turn, turn, turn, Turn about, ladies, turn." "Stole a farmer's pretty little girl." "What will it take to set them free." "Yankee dime (or "Hug and a kiss") will set them free."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (Owens, Swing and Turn, according to Spurgeon-WaltzTheHall-AmericanPlayParty)
KEYWORDS: playparty prison reprieve money
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Spurgeon-WaltzTheHall-AmericanPlayParty, p. 112, "Here We Have Two Prisoners in Jail" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #12437
File: Spurg112

Have You Any Bread and Wine (English Soldiers, Roman Soldiers)

DESCRIPTION: "Have you any bread and wine, My fairy and my forey, Have you any.... Within the golden story?" More and more wine is requested, until the questioner is told to go away. The two sides declare allegiance to their lords, then prepare for a fight

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1900 (Thornley)
KEYWORDS: food drink playparty nonballad fight
FOUND IN: Britain(England(North,West),Scotland(Aber)) US(MW,NE,SE) Ireland
REFERENCES (9 citations):
Greig/Duncan8 1600, "We Are All King George's Men" (3 texts, 2 tunes)
Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 40-42, "My Fairey and My Forey" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hammond-SongsOfBelfast, pp. 24-25, "The Rovers Meet the Winders" (1 text, 1 tune)
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 65, "Romans and English" (4 texts, 1 tune)
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #178, "Have You any Bread and Wine?" (2 texts)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5, p. 507, "Yankee Soldiers" (1 short text, 1 tune)
JournalOfAmericanFolklore, E.J. Ladbury, "Scrapes of English Folklore, VIII. Worcestershire," Vol. XXXV, No. 3 (Sep 1924), #10 pp. 266-267 "The Roman Soldiers" (1 text)
JournalOfAmericanFolklore, Leah Rachel Clara Yoffie, "Three Generations of Children's Singing Games in St. Louis," Vol. LX, No. 235 (Jan 1947), #18 pp. 25-26 ("Will you give us bread and wine, bread and wine, bread and wine") (2 texts)
ST Lins040 (Partial)
Roud #8255
ALTERNATE TITLES:
With Eerie and With Orie
NOTES [232 words]: Hammond-SongsOfBelfast: "This song is represented in hundreds of versions all over these islands, a conventionalized confrontation between two factions. According to Lady Gomme in her magnificent collection of 1894 [Alice B Gomme, Children's Singing Games], the game owes its origins to the ritual forays of the Border country. When two classes of mill worker arranged a ritual encounter in a Belfast street, they obeyed the rules of the games, confrontation without contact. In this example, the rovers were aggressors, the winders in retreat." The Hammond-SongsOfBelfast version has the rovers issue a challenge, the rovers advance, the winders reply, the rovers advance again and the winders reply again. Rovers advance with "Ha! Ha! You had to go... riding on a donkey" [as in some versions of "Hieland Laddie"]; winders reply with "Raddy daddy and we're not beat yet.... A button for your marley." This seems to have degenerated from something like text Ab of Greig/Duncan 8 1600, "We Are All King George's Men" in which King George's men and King William's men alternate declaring allegiance, having wine, challenging to battle, pointing to a battlefield, and calling for support; Greig/Duncan's text B, "With Eerie and With Orie," with no wine, has a pattern similar to Hammond-SongsOfBelfast: only the sides alternating pointing to a battlefield and challenging to fight remains. - BS

Last updated in version 5.3
File: Lins040

Have You Heard Geography Sung?
DESCRIPTION: "Oh, have you heard Geography sung? For if you've not 'tis on my tongue. Oceans and seas and gulfs and these All covered over with little green islands."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1880 (copied by Agnes E. E. Kemmerer; see NOTES)
KEYWORDS: nonballad
FOUND IN: US(MA,SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-ASongCatcherInSouthernMountains, p. 75, (no title) (1 fragment)
ST ScaSC075 (Full)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Geography Song
NOTES [51 words]: The tiny fragment in Scarborough seems to be the only surviving traditional version of an actual nineteenth century school song. Timothy Warke in 2014 sent me a scan of a version copied out by Agnes E E Kemmerer of Limeport, Pennsylvania (between Allentown and Philadelphia); it is dated January 28, 1880. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.5
File: ScaSC075

Have You Not Heard (Our Dear Savior's Love)
DESCRIPTION: "Have you not heard of our dear Savior's love? And how he suffered like a harmless dove?" The singer is reminded that friends are hard to find when one is sentenced to death. Hearers are warned to go to church and to avoid drunkenness and other sins
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1899 (collected from William Philipps Family, according to Raven)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad warning
FOUND IN: Britain(England(West))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
ADDITIONAL: Jon Raven, _The Urban and Industrial Songs of the Black Country and Birmingham_, Broadside, 1977, pp. 164-165, "Have You Not Heard of Our Dear Savior's Love (Christmas Carol)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2116
File: HRUI164

Have You Seen My Baby
DESCRIPTION: "Somebody tell me have they seen my baby I want to know which way did the girl go." She left last night and didn't come back. Now I'm up working hard ... down to the barnyard ... trying to make a living for the cold hard winter time"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1969 (USMississippi01)
KEYWORDS: love parting farming work nonballad lover
FOUND IN: US(SE)
RECORDINGS:
Sonny Boy Watson, "Have You Seen My Baby" (on USMississippi01)
NOTES [51 words]: Though this is treated as a single track on USMississippi01 and, though the playing is continuous, Sonny Boy Watson's tune changes and makes this seem like two songs: the first about his baby leaving and the second about working the farm and thinking, "There must be something better further up the road." - BS
Haven of Rest, The

DESCRIPTION: "My soul in sad exile was out on the (sea/deep), So burdened with sin and distress(ed), When I heard a sweet voice saying, 'Make me your choice,' And I entered the haven of rest." The song describes how faith in Jesus brings rest and calm

AUTHOR: Henry L. Gilmour

EARLIEST DATE: 1890 (according to Morgan)

KEYWORDS: religious Jesus home

FOUND IN: US(NE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Beck-FolkloreOfMaine, pp. 218-219, "Haven of Rest" (1 text)

Roud #4727

NOTES [22 words]: According to Morgan, Henry L. Gilmour was a dentist who took a season off each year to work as a musician and singing evangelist. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.6

File: BeMe218

Hawai'i Aloha (Beloved Hawaii)

DESCRIPTION: Hawaaiian. "E Hawai'i, e ku'u one hanau e." "Oh Hawaii, O sands of my birth, my native home." The singer urges listeners to rejoice in Hawaii. He hopes for God's blessing on the island and describes its beautiful features

AUTHOR: Lorenzo Lyons (died 1886)

EARLIEST DATE: 1970 (Elbert & Mahoe, Na Mele o Hawai'i Nie, according to Cohen)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage nonballad home

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, p. 690, "Hawai'i Aloha (Beloved Hawaii)" (1 Hawaiian text plus English translation)

File: CAFS690A

Hawco, the Hero

DESCRIPTION: Jim Hawco drops his load of wood on the railroad track believing that the train has already passed by. Suddenly, the train comes and he risks his own life to take the wood off. He is arrested for his mistake but found in court to be a hero instead.

AUTHOR: M. A. Devine (1857-1915)

EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Murphy, Songs of Our Land, Old Home Week Souvenir)

KEYWORDS: recitation train rescue trial

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Doyle-OldTimeSongsAndPoetryOfNewfoundland, "Hawco, the Hero" (1 text): p. 75 in the 2nd edition

ADDITIONAL: James Murphy, compiler/publisher, "(Old Colony Song Book: Newfoundland)," James Murphy, 1904 (available from the Memorial University of Newfoundland web site; the cover is missing, but I suspect it is a copy of "Songs of Our Land"), p. 73, "Hawco the Hero" (1 text)

Roud #7298

RECORDINGS:
Charles Dawe, "Hawco the Hero" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

NOTES [77 words]: According to Doyle, the song is about a true incident that happened in Harbour Main in Conception Bay around 1905. The song also uses the names of judges that were active during the time of the incident. - SH

Note that the date must in fact have been 1904 or earlier, since the poem was published by Murphy in that year. Murphy attributes the poem to M. A. Devine but offers no hint that it is based Hawg Foot
DESCRIPTION: "Shove that hog foot further under the bed, Juliann, don't you hear me? Wish to God that hog was dead! Juliann, don't you hear me." "Here comes Josh, now set him a cheer." "Howdy, Josh, have you got any news?" They try to hide the hog from Josh
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Richardson/Spaeth-AmericanMountainSongs)
KEYWORDS: animal food
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Richardson/Spaeth-AmericanMountainSongs, pp. 82-83, "Hawg Foot" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13914
File: Rich082

Hawkie Is a Schemin' Bird
DESCRIPTION: "Hawkie is a schemin' bird, He schemes all round the sky, He schemes into my chicken house And makes my chickens fly." Remaining verses and chorus seem to float.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)
KEYWORDS: bird chickens hunting floating verses
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 192, "Hawkie Is a Schemin' Bird" (1 text, with the "Hawkie" first stanza, a chorus from "Lynchburg Town," and verses such as "Went up on a mountain To give my horn a blow" and "Climbed up on a mountain... To sweeten Liza Jane")
File: ScaNF192

Hawking
DESCRIPTION: "Now shut your mouths, you loafers all; You vex me with your twaddle"; the singer advises that they get some "damaged rags" and hawk (peddle) them. Other occupations have their burdens, but hawking doesn't require skills, land, or anything else
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1970 (AndersonStory)
KEYWORDS: commerce work
FOUND IN: Anderson-StoryOfAustralianFolksong, pp. 104-106, "Hawking" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: AnSt104

Hawthorn Green, The
DESCRIPTION: The ballad explains that while a hawthorn's freshness returns even when cut almost to the root a maiden's beauty, once lost, is not refreshed.
AUTHOR: unknown (see NOTES)
EARLIEST DATE: 1790 (Ritson); the Cotton manuscript is from no later than the early seventeenth century
LONG DESCRIPTION: A maid marvels that a hawthorn remains so green and asks the tree its secret. The hawthorn explains that the dew renews it year after year even if its flowers and branches are taken. On the other hand a maid "when your beauty once does go Then it will never more be seen." The maid had "thought herself so fair and clean, Her beauty still would ever grow green" but now fears that her already lost virginity will be obvious to anyone who sees her. The next year the maid does not return to talk to the hawthorn again.
Hawwer reche (Raking Oats)

DESCRIPTION: German game song. "Es reijert un schneejet, 'Sis kalt schtaermich Wedder...." "It rains and it snows, The weather is cold and stormy, The farmer comes home And gets some cider. Who will rake the oats?" The singer misses his lost sweetheart

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage playparty food love separation

FOUND IN: US(MA)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends, p. 110, "Hawwer reche (Raking Oats)" (1 German text plus non-poetic translation, 1 tune)

File: KPL110

---

Hay-o-My-Lucy-o

DESCRIPTION: "Hay-o-my-Lucy-o, bonnie, bonnie Lucy-o, I'd give this world and all I know, To change and swing my Lucy-o. Here we go topsy-turvy, Round the room we go, hay-o-Lucy-o, Change and swing my Lucy-o."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1916 (Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana)

KEYWORDS: courting playparty nonballad

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 51-52=Wolford/Richmond/Tillson-PlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 177-178, "Hay-o-My-Lucy-o" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #7895

File: W0lf051
Hayes's Band

DESCRIPTION: "Old Sam, you haven't got a man (x3) That wouldn't follow old Hayes's band. Better pay your taxes early in the morning, Better pay your taxes early in the day, Better pay your taxes early in the morning, And follow old Hayes's band."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1876 (Helmick's Republican Campaign Songster, according to Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection)

KEYWORDS: political nonballad

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1876 - The Hayes/Tilden election. Samuel Tilden certainly won the largest share of the popular vote, and probably should have won the Electoral College as well, but Republican maneuverings resulted in Rutherford B. Hayes becoming President

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection, p. 76, "Hayes Campaign Song" (1 text)

File: Grim076

---

Hayseed (I)

DESCRIPTION: The hayseed finishes his work and decides to go on a spree. He goes to town and takes an expensive ("five dollars a minit"!) room in a hotel. Before going to bed, he blows out the gas -- and dies of the fumes

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)

KEYWORDS: death corpse technology money

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 50, "Hayseed" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT, HAYSEED*

Roud #12498

NOTES [81 words]: The story of a visitor from the country blowing out the gas in a hotel and dying of the fumes seems to be common. According to Charlie Maguire, it really did happen at least once, to an Indian chief from the Itasca area named Busticogan, who died in 1910 (according to a historian named Bill Marshall). Details are hard to come by, and Busticogan has become largely a figure of cheap folklore. In any case, Busticogan was not on a spree; he was trying to obtain help for his people. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.5

File: San050

---

Hayseed Like Me, A

DESCRIPTION: "I once was a tool of oppression And as green as a sucker could be, And monopolies bundled together To beat a poor bum like me." The newly energized singer promises to strike back: "The ticket we vote next November Will be made up of hayseeds like me."

AUTHOR: Words: Arthur L. Kellogg?

EARLIEST DATE: 1890 (Farmer's Alliance, October 4, 1890 edition, according to Welsch-NebraskaPioneerLore)

KEYWORDS: political poverty hardtimes derivative

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, p. 60, "A Hayseed Like Me" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 489-490, "The Hayseed" (1 text)
Welsch-NebraskaPioneerLore, p. 67, "The Hayseed" (1 text)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 359-360, "Hayseed Like Me" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 117, "The Hayseed" (1 text)

ADDITIONAL: Nebraska Folklore, Pamphlet Eighteen, "Farmers' Alliance Songs of the 1890's," Federal Writers' Project, 1938, p. 1, "(no title)" (1 short text)

Roud #12497

RECORDINGS:
He Ain't Gonna Jump No More

DESCRIPTION: "'Is everybody happy?' cried the Sergeant looking up. "Our hero feebly answered 'Yes,' and then they hooked him up. Various problems prevent his parachute from opening, "and he ain't gonna jump no more." "Glory, glory, what a hell of a way to die."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead)

KEYWORDS: death soldier technology

FOUND IN: Canada

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead, p. 122, "He Ain't Gonna Jump No More" (1 text, tune referenced)

Roud #29393

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "John Brown's Body" (tune) and references there

cf. "He'll Never Fly Home Again" ("Glory, glory what a hell of a way to die" chorus) and references there

cf. "I'd Like to Find the Sergeant" (subject of death by parachute)

File: Hopk122

He Arose from the Dead

DESCRIPTION: Story of the crucifixion, burial, and resurrection of Jesus. He tells his disciples to meet him in Galilee; he is crucified; Mary comes running to see him, the angels roll away the stone, and he arises from the dead

AUTHOR: Unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1883 ("The Story of the Jubilee Singers; with their songs")

KEYWORDS: execution resurrection death burial Bible religious Jesus

FOUND IN: US(So, SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Warren-EveryTimeIFeelTheSpirit, pp. 49-51, "He Arose" (1 text, 1 tune)

RECORDINGS:
Willie & Minder Coleman, "He Rose" (AFS 5089 A1, 1941)
Fisk Jubilee Singers, "He Arose" (on Fisk01)
Blind Lemon Jefferson, "He Arose from the Dead" (Paramount 12585 [as Deacon L. J. Bates], 1927/Hervin 93004, 1929; on Jefferson01, JeffersonCD01)
Rev. D. C. Rice & congregation "He Arose Them from the Dead" (Vocalion 1520, 1930)
Congregation of the Wesley Methodist Church, "He Rose From The Dead" [fragment] (JohnsIsland1)
Rev. S. J. "Steamboat Bill" Worell, "He Rose From the Dead" (Vocalion 1089, 1927)
Unidentified church parishioners, "Moaning" (AFS 4767 A1, 1941)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Christ Was Born in Bethlehem" (lyrics)

NOTES [19 words]: The common version of this may have been adapted by Blind Lemon Jefferson, but it appears to be older. - (PJS, RBW)

Last updated in version 3.8
He Brought Me from a Long, Long Way
DESCRIPTION: "Oh, he brought me from de rocking of my cradle, he brought me from a long long way (x2)." "Oh, he shoed my feed for a journey, And he brought me from...." "Oh, he clothed me when I was nacked." "He brought me from the rocking of my cradle."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Killion/Waller-ATreasuryOfGeorgiaFolklore)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Killion/Waller-ATreasuryOfGeorgiaFolklore, pp. 246-247, "He Brought Me from a Long, Long Way" (1 text)
Roud #18153
File: KiWa246

He Came from the North
DESCRIPTION: "He came from the North and his words were few, But his voice was kind and his heart was true... So I married the man of the North Countrie." No one is happier with her love than she is with him. She wishes others knew of him
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster,)
KEYWORDS: marriage nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster,, p. 169, "He Came from the North" (1 text)
Roud #6548
File: HMHS169A

He Hey, Why Do We Pay?
DESCRIPTION: "When I was a youngster my father said, Boy, you're the kind of a fellow the girls will annoy. He hey, why do we pay for something we can't carry away?" Three hundred barmaids weep for the singer. Many people lock their daughters away from him
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Niles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe)
KEYWORDS: sailor sex bawdy royalty father
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Niles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe, pp. 120-122, "(He Hey, Why Do We Pay?)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #27883
NOTES [8 words]: I think we need a keyword, "Utterly obnoxious." - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: NiMo120

He Is King of Kings
DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "King of kings, Lord of lords, Jesus Christ, first and last, No man works like him." Verses: "He built a platform in the air, He meets the saints from everywhere." "He pitched a tent on Canaan's ground, And broke the Roman kingdom down."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute); 1893 (see notes)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious Jesus
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
DESCRIPTION: "He knows, he knows, my blessed Savior, he knows (x2)." "He knows when I'm up and he knows when I'm down." "He knows when I'm weak and he knows when I'm strong." "He knows when I'm sick and he knows when I'm well. "He knows when I'm right...."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (Arnold-FolkSongsofAlabama)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Arnold-FolkSongsofAlabama, p. 163, "He Knows" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #16302

File: Arno163

He Lies in the American Land

DESCRIPTION: A man emigrates to America, leaving wife and children back in Europe. When he sends for them, they arrive to find only his grave; he has been killed in the steel mill. She cries out to him; his voice tells her not to wait, for he lies in the American land

AUTHOR: Andrew Kovaly

EARLIEST DATE: 1947 (collected from the author; Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends; reportedly written in the early 1900s)

KEYWORDS: emigration separation reunion death work wife children worker technology foreignlanguage

FOUND IN: US(MA)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends, pp. 437-438, "Odpoivam v Americkej pode (I Lie in the American Land)" (1 Slovak text plus non-poetic English translation, 1 tune)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 155-156, "I Lie in the American Land" (1 Slovak text with English translation)
Foner-AmericanLaborSongsOfTheNineteenthCentury, p. 287, "I Lie in the American Land" (1 text)

RECORDINGS:
Pete Seeger, "He Lies in the American Land" (on PeteSeeger13, AmHist2, PeteSeeger48)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "I Have a Father in My Native Land" (theme)

NOTES [180 words]: Many, perhaps most of the workers who made steel in the two great centers of South Chicago and western Pennsylvania were eastern European immigrants. - PJS
I don't know if this is an authentic folk song; Paul thinks so, or he would not have submitted it.
Certainly it has the genuine folk sensibility; it's almost a modern revenant ballad. It appears that the original meaning of the last line is "I lie in the American land," but I use the "He Lies..." title because that's the way Pete Seeger recorded it. Seeger, on p. 117 of Where Have All the Flower Gone, recalls learning the song while singing for the International Workers' Order (IWO) near Pittsburg in 1947. A man came up to him and said that he used to make up songs when he was young. Seeger asked the man to teach one to him. The man said that Seeger wouldn't understand; it was in Slovak. But Seeger's companion, Dr. Jacob Evanson, knew Slovak, and was able to take down text and tune. The man was Andrew Kovaly. Seeger eventually came up with a singable translation, which is how most people know the song today. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.1
File: RcHLITAL

He Lookit Up into Her Face
DESCRIPTION: A man looks at a woman's face. She smiles. He thinks "I'll maybe you beguile."
She blushes. He knew then "that her hert was a' my ain"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan7)
KEYWORDS: seduction nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan7 1357, "He Lookit Up into Her Face" (1 text)
Roud #7235
File: GrD71357

He Mele No Kane (The Water of Kane)
DESCRIPTION: Hawaaian. "He u-i, he ninau, E u-i aku anu au ie oe." "A query, a queston, I put to you: Where is the Water of Kane?" The Water of Kane is to the eat, it is on the mountains, it is on the sea. The singer asks the Water of Kane to give life
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Emerson, "The Hula," Unwritten Literature of Hawaii, according to Cohen)
KEYWORDS: nonballad foreignlanguage
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsAREgionalEncyclopedia2, p. 687, "He Mele No Kane (The Water of Kane)" (1 Hawaiian text plus English translation)
File: CAFS687B

He Never Came Back
DESCRIPTION: Stories of people who "never came back." The first is a soldier lost at Bull Run.
The rest are humorous: A waiter who never returned with a patron's steak, a swain who never returned with a ring for an old maid, a mother-in-law set loose in a balloon AUTHOR: William Jerome?
EARLIEST DATE: 1892 (Delaney)
KEYWORDS: humorous separation family technology soldier oldmaid
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
July 21, 1861 - First battle of Bull Run fought between the Union army of McDowell and the Confederates under Johnston and Beauregard
Aug. 29-30, 1862 - Second battle of Bull Run, fought between the Union army of Pope and the Confederate army of Lee
FOUND IN: US(SE,So)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Randolph 399, "He Never Came Back" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 368-371, "He Never Came Back" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 399)
He Ngeri (A Jeering Song)

DESCRIPTION: Maori, "E noho ani i toku kainga i Nii Tireni." "I am living in my home in New Zealand." The singer suggests that the "mad drunkards set off to Europe" and declares that "The King [of the Maoris] shall encircle the whole island."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1868 (Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ)

KEYWORDS: political royalty rebellion New Zealand

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ, p. 34, "He Ngeri" (1 short text plus English translation)

File: BaRo034

He Plays Comic Music Across the Broadgate

DESCRIPTION: "He plays comic music across the Broadgate But some of the notes are rather difficult to get He's got an ammunition for watering flowers." He makes ladies' shoes and charges six shillings and sixpence.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan7)

KEYWORDS: nonballad music

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Greig/Duncan7 1449, "He Plays Comic Music Across the Broadgate" (1 fragment)

File: GrD71449

He Set Me Free

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "He set me free, He set me free, He broke the bonds of prison for me, I'm glory bound my Jesus to see. Glory to God He set me free." Jesus freed the singer from sorrow and "listened to me" Now I'm working daily and praying: "homeward bound"

AUTHOR: Albert E. Brumley (source: Dyen, see notes)

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Dyen, see notes)

KEYWORDS: nonballad religious Jesus

FOUND IN: US(SE)

RECORDINGS:

Chuck Wagon Gang, "He Set Me Free" (OKeh 06596, 1941)

Miccosukee Church of God of Prophecy, "He Set Me Free" (on USFlorida01)

NOTES [177 words]: Dyen: '"He Set Me Free' ... was composed and published by white gospel songwriter Albert E. Brumley in 1939, and which served as the inspiration for Hank Williams's 1948 hit, 'I saw the Light' (Doris J. Dyen, "Looking Back/Looking Forward: Sacred Group-Singing Traditions," USFlorida01 liner notes, p. 168). Compare the recordings of USFlorida01 and the "Chuck Wagon Gang," The Miccosukee Church of God of Prophecy cross-rhythmic clapping is a marker of Black religious "shout" (see for example, William T. Dargan, Lining Out the Word (Chicago: Center for Black Music Research, 2006), pp. 58, 130, 206). "Bishop Beckwith begins the gospel song, 'He Set Me Free.' .... The church members respond by joining the singing, accompanying themselves on their instruments and with handclapping and foot-tapping. Near the end of the song, everyone stops singing but the instrumental accompaniment continues. Then, as the instrumental rhythm stops, all in the congregation shout 'Praise the Lord' three times, each time raising their arms upward" (Dyen, pp. 167-168).

Last updated in version 4.2
File: RcHeSMeF

He Swore by the Toenails of Moses
DESCRIPTION: "And he swore by the toe nails o' Moses That he'd like all who dared to oppose us"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan8)
KEYWORDS: nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan8 1894, "He Swore by the Toenails of Moses" (1 fragment)
Roud #13563
NOTES [108 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan8 fragment. - BS
Just in case you were wondering, there are no Biblical references to Moses's toenails -- nor to anyone else's, really. Even the word "toes" occurs only 13 times in the King James Bible (several of them perhaps inaccurately). The closest approach is in Leviticus chapter 8, where blood is placed upon the big toe in a ritual sequence. Also, women are to trim their nails in a purification ritual in Deuteronomy 21:12.
Perhaps the reference is to Exodus 3:5, where Moses is commanded to take off his sandals in the presence of the burning bush. Or, more likely, it's just a joke. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.5
File: GrD81894

He That Will Not Merry, Merry Be
DESCRIPTION: "He that will not merry, merry be": "May he in Bridewell be shut up ... May he be plagued with a scolding wife ... May he be obliged to drink small beer ... May he be buried in the church-yard And me put in his stead [with his mistress]."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1733 (Ramsay [Logan says his copy is from Ramsay 1724 but I don't find it there - BS])
KEYWORDS: drink humorous nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Logan-APedlarsPack, pp. 297-298, "He That Will Not Merry Be" (1 text)
Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, "The Merry Fellows; or, He That Will Not Merry, Merry Be" (1 text)
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 51, "Now We've Met Let's Merry, Merry Be" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Gl 149)
Robert Bell, editor, Ancient Poems, Ballads and Songs of the Peasantry of England (London, 1857 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 239-240, "The Merry Fellows" or "He That Will Not Merry, Merry Be" (2 texts)
ST WT051 (Partial)
Roud #615
CROSS-REFERENCES:
He Took Her by the Lily-White Hand

DESCRIPTION: Perhaps the remains of a play-party song: "He took her by the lily white hand and lifted her over the gutter, With a kiss for you and a kiss for me and a kiss for the governor's daughter."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (Creighton and Senior)

KEYWORDS: playparty courting

FOUND IN: Canada (Mar)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp. 260, "He Took Her by the Lily-White Hand" (1 text, 1 tune)

File: CrSe260A

He Was a Friend of Mine

DESCRIPTION: "He was a friend of mine (x2), Never had no money to pay his fine..." "He died on the road, Never had no money to pay for his board." "He never done no wrong, He was just a poor boy a long way from home." "I stole away and cried...."

AUTHOR: reportedly Bob Dylan, Dave Van Ronk, Eric Von Schmidt

EARLIEST DATE: 1962 (recording, Bob Dylan)

KEYWORDS: rambling friend death

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 60, "He Was A Friend of Mine" (1 text)
DT, FRNDMINE

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Shorty George"

NOTES [17 words]: In 1964 Roger McGuinn rewrote the song as a tribute to the recently assassinated President Kennedy. - PJS

File: FSB060

He Was Boasting of His Shearing

DESCRIPTION: "He was boasting of his shearing Up in Jimmy Homlan's Bar...." This strange little fellow "tried to murder Hogan" for doubting his exploits. At last the quarrelling is silenced by the free availability of beer

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1968

KEYWORDS: drink fight bragging Australia

FOUND IN: Australia

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, p. 201, "He Was Boasting of His Shearing" (1 text)

File: MA201

He Wears a Bonnet for a Hat

DESCRIPTION: The singer warns "there's nane o' you been gude to me" but it would pay to treat her well. When her wealthy lover comes in bonnet, napkin, and jacket to install her in the hall in fancy clothes she might be able to help her listeners with a peck of meal.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1876 (Christie)
He'd Be There

DESCRIPTION: "I think I heard Brother Johnson say He'd be there." Repeat until someone comes up with a new name, e.g. "I think I heard Sister May say, He'd be there." And keep it up ad tedium

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Smith-SouthCarolinaBallads)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Smith-SouthCarolinaBallads, p. 86, "He'd Be There" (1 text, just barely a song)

File: ReSm086A

He'll Never Fly Home Again

DESCRIPTION: "I was flying flipping Albacorea at forty flipping feet, I was flying through the flipping snow... And I made my flipping landfall on the Firth of Flipping Forth. Gory, gory, what a hell of a way to die." A pilot crash landed: "He'll never fly home again"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead)

KEYWORDS: soldier death technology derivative

FOUND IN: Canada

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead, p. 118, "He'll Never Fly Home Again" (1 text, tune referenced)

Roud #29399
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "John Brown's Body" (tune) and references there
cf. "He Ain't Gonna Jump No More" ("Glory, glory what a hell of a way to die" chorus)
cf. "I'd Like to Find the Sergeant" ("Glory, glory what a hell of a way to die" chorus)
cf. "I Was Chasing One-Elevens" ("Glory, glory what a hell of a way to die" chorus)
cf. "There's a Fuck-up on the Flight Deck" (subject: the defects of the Fairy Albacore)

NOTES [451 words]: Crash landings were a significant problem for the British air force: British weather of course resulted in lousy visibility, and many British bases were newly built, hard to locate -- and often close to hills or buildings. Flights of eight hours or more, much of the time under enemy attack, meant pilots were often exhausted when they got home. High casualty rates meant that many pilots were green, so they weren't very good at landing anyway. And the RAF started the war with a lot of frankly lousy aircraft that no competent air force would have put in the air. Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead says that there were versions of this for many different types of aircraft, and I believe it. But the Albacore is a particularly fit airplane to be singled out. When the war began, the standard British carrier torpedo bomber was the Fairey Swordfish, a biplane with a top speed of 138 miles per hour that was so old that even the British knew that the "stringbag" needed to be replaced (Munson, p. 68). So they came up with the Fairey Albacore. Which was, ahem, another biplane. In 1940. The Albacore was slightly faster than the Swordfish, and had a slightly longer range, and had an enclosed cockpit (more comfortable for the pilot), but otherwise, it was such a flop that the Swordfish "remained in service alongside, and eventually outlasted, the [Albacore]" (Munson, p. 62).
Brown, p. 60, reports, "In retrospect, the Albacore epitomised the ascendancy of the conventionalists over the visionaries; the least adventurous approach that could possibly have been made to solving the problem of replacing the venerable and patently obsolescent Swordfish. That the authorities should have opted to perpetuate the biplane configuration at a time when the imminence of its final demise in all operational roles was surely obvious to all is difficult to comprehend today, forty years on." He adds that the defects of the Albacore were its lack of maneuverability, its unresponsive controls, and its large size that made it harder to handle and easier for enemy gunfire to hit. It was a good plane as long as there were no enemies around, but too easy a target in combat.
Munson, p. 62, adds, "Production ceased in 1943 after 803 Albacores had been built, but by the end of that year all but two squadrons had been re-equipped with Barracudas or American Avengers. One of the squadrons, however, handed on their Albacores to the R.C.A.F., by whom they were employed in the D-day landings of June 1944." Fortunately for the Canadians, there were few Axis fighters to take advantage of the Albacore's pitiful lack of speed; for this plane, at least, the conditions of British landing fields were danger enough! - RBW

Bibliography:

He's a Bonnie, Blue-Eyed Laddie

DESCRIPTION: "For I will dress you in tartans And ribbons sae braw, 'Cause your daddie he's a soldier In the bold Forty-Twa. He's a bonnie, blue-eyed laddie, He's the flooer o' them a', An' he jined yon gallant regiment Ca'd the bold Forty-Twa."

AUTHOR: unknown

KEYWORDS: soldier father children clothes

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Porter/Gower-Jeannie-Robertson-EmergentSingerTransformativeVoice #12, p. 128, "He's a Bonnie, Blue-Eye Laddie" (1 short text, 1 tune)

File: RPG012
He's a Dark Man

DESCRIPTION: "He's a dark man, he's a black man He's nae match for me He'd scarcely be linin' To the lad that likes me"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan4)
KEYWORDS: courting rejection
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan4 751, "He's a Dark Man" (1 fragment)
Roud #3869
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Mailin" (theme) and references there
NOTES [129 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan4 fragment. - BS
Greig/Duncan4 suggests the fragment be compared to Crawford's "The Mailin," which. Roud lumps the two with Kinloch 22 "Court Her and Leave Her." In looking at the Kinloch item (#XXII), I was reminded of Cox's "Black Phyllis," which begins, "And then came black Phyllis, his charger astride, And took away Annie, his unwilling bride." And "that" is sounds like it could be linked in plot to this (this piece being Annie's words as she rejected the black man). If we took all these fragments, we could probably build a pretty good ballad. Which is not proof they belong together, however. Ballad links are not transitive; if A links with B, and B with C, there is no reason to think A has been mixed with C. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.6
File: GrD4751

He's a Fine Man, Johnnie Gollacher

DESCRIPTION: "He's a fine man, Johnnie Gollacher, He's a fine man to me; He's a fine man, Johnnie Gollacher, Gin he wad come for me"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1917 (Greig/Duncan4)
KEYWORDS: courting
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan4 752, "He's a Fine Man, Johnnie Gollacher" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #6179
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "To a Meeting One Evening" (tune, per Greig/Duncan4)
NOTES [11 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan4 fragment. - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD4752

He's a Ragtime Soldier

DESCRIPTION: "He's a ragtime soldier, Ragtime soldier, Early on parade every morning, Standing to attention with his rifle in his hand. He's a ragtime soldier, As happy as the flowers in May (I don't think!), Fighting for his King and his Country... a shilling a day"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang)
KEYWORDS: soldier clothes money
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang, p. 58, "He's a Ragtime Soldier" (1 text)
Roud #10506
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Ragtime Lover" (tune)
File: BrPa058A
He's Comin' This Away
DESCRIPTION: "Yonder comes my Lord (x2), He's comin' this away (x2), Yonder comes my Lord (x2), He's comin' this away (x2)." "A Bible in his hand...." "He's come to judge the world, Livin' an' the dead...." "Yonder comes that train...." "My mother's on that train...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute)
KEYWORDS: religious train death mother
FOUND IN: US(SE,So)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, p. 219, "Oh, Yes, Yonder Comes My Lord" (1 text, 1 tune; p. 112 in the 1901 edition)
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, pp. 259-260, "He's Comin' This Away" (1 text)
File: ScaNF259

He's Got the Money Too
DESCRIPTION: The singer describes being engaged to someone who is a fine person -- and rich, too: "Oh don't I love my honey, And won't I spend his money? I'm as happy as a flower that sips the morning dew, For I've got a little (feller) and he's got the money too!"
AUTHOR: C. T. Lockwood?
EARLIEST DATE: 1875 (sheet music, LOCSheet, sm1875 03568)
KEYWORDS: courting marriage money
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Randolph 299, "I Know a Little Feller" (1 text)
Roud #7827
RECORDINGS:
Uncle Dave Macon, "She's Got the Money Too" (OKeh 45552 [w. Sam McGee], 1931; rec. 1930) (Bluebird 7549, 1938)
BROADSIDES:
LOCsheet, sm1875 03568, "And He's Got the Money Too," Brainard's Sons (Cleveland), 1875
ALTERNATE TITLES:
She's Got the Money Too
I Went Down to New Orleans
NOTES [69 words]: LOCSheet, sm1875 03568 lists this as by C. T. Lockwood, but it's not clear if he wrote the whole thing, or the tune, or just the arrangement.
Randolph reports his (single-stanza) text as a fragment of a piece called "I Went Down to New Orleans." The recordings I've heard (Macon's and other folk revival versions) don't seem connected -- but that may be a case of Uncle Dave free-associating about the song. - RBW
File: R299

He's Got the Whole World in His Hand(s)
DESCRIPTION: "He's got the whole world (right) in his hand (x3); He's got the whole world in his hand." The number of additional verses probably approximates the number of English speakers on earth; most are spiritual, but you can probably imagine some that aren't
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 168, "He's Got the Whole World in His Hand" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 361, "He's Got The Whole World In His Hands" (1 text)
Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, p. 273, "He's Got the Whole World in His Hand" DT, WHOLWRLD
Roud #7501
RECORDINGS:
He's My Rock, My Sword, and Shield

DESCRIPTION: Jesus is my rock, sword, shield, lily of the valley and bright morning star. "Makes no difference what you say I'm going on my knees and pray, I'm going to stay right here until my Jesus comes." Other verses end with "I'm going to wait...

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1963 (recording, Original Blind Boys of Alabama)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious Jesus
FOUND IN: US(SE)
RECORDINGS:
Fannie Bell Chapman and Family, "He's My Rock, My Sword, and Shield" (on USMississippi01)
The Original Blind Boys of Alabama, "Rock, Sword and Shield" (1963, on "You'll Never Walk Alone," Vee Jay VJLP 5029)
The Selah Singers, "He's My Rock, Sword and Shield" (2000, on "Capitol From the Vaults (Vol. 5: The Roots of Rock 'N' Roll)," Capitol 72435-28292-2 4)
Ethel Waters, "Gospel Medley" (1960, on "His Eye is On the Sparrow," Word W-3100=LP)

NOTES [81 words]: Golden Gate Quartet, "He's My Rock, My Sword, My Shield" is not this hymn (1996, on Golden Gate Quartet Radio Transcriptions ... 1941-1944," Document DOCD-5502). It is close to the hymn indexed as "What Could I Do," but it's not that hymn either. It does have lines in common with "He's My Rock, My Sword, and shield": "He's my rock my sword my shield" and "He's the lily of the valley" but the first two lines of the only verse are "Tell me what could I do without the Lord," repeated. - BS

Last updated in version 5.1

File: RchHMRMSS

He's Nae Very Bonnie

DESCRIPTION: "He's nae very bonnie, but he's awfu' guid, And that's the chap that a girl should wed; Beauty's like flowers, it soon doth fade, They bloom to-day, and to-morrow dead"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan8)
KEYWORDS: courting marriage beauty nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan8 1863, "He's Nae Very Bonnie" (1 short text)
Roud #13587

NOTES [10 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan8 text. - BS

Last updated in version 2.5

File: GrD81863

He's Owre the Hills, an' He's Whistlin' Bonny

DESCRIPTION: The singer thinks about Johnny and their time together. "He's far awa, but he's nae forgettin' He has my he'rt, an' I winna che't him ... he may coort, but he daurna mairry.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan6)
KEYWORDS: love separation nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan6 1111, "He's Owre the Hills, an' He's Whistlin' Bonny" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Roud #6840

File: GrD61111
He's the Lily of the Valley

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "He's the lily of the valley, Oh, my Lord (x2). King Jesus in his chariot rides, Oh, my Lord, With four white horses side by side, Oh my Lord." Verses: The singer wears "gospel shoes" and "you can wear them if you choose"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (Marsh)
KEYWORDS: Bible nonballad religious Jesus
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
  Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, p. 145, "He's the Lily of the Valley" (1 text, 1 tune)
  J.B.T. Marsh, The Story of the Jubilee Singers (London: Hodder and Stoughton, 1903 ("Digitized by Internet Archive")), #41 p. 97, "He's the Lily of the Valley" (1 text, 1 tune)

ADDITIONAL: Roud #12146
CROSS-REFERENCES:
  cf. "Peter Was a Fisherman" (theme) and notes there
NOTES [21 words]: In Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute's verses, every alternate line is "Oh my Lord" - BS

Last updated in version 4.0
File: Dett145

He's the Man for Me

DESCRIPTION: Singer plans to go to the mining areas, marry a rich senorita, wear fine clothes, and live without working. If necessary, he will divorce her and, although morally opposed to it, live by stealing

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1858 (Put's Golden Songster)
KEYWORDS: marriage theft clothes nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads, p. 132, "(no title)" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
  cf. "Rosin the Beau" (tune)
NOTES [9 words]: Pity we don't have keywords "laziness" and "loafing." - PJS

File: RcHtMfM

Head, Shoulder, Baby

DESCRIPTION: Rope-skipping game. "Head, shoulder, baby, one two three, (x3), Knee and ankle, baby, one two three (x3)." And similarly with other body parts.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads)
KEYWORDS: nonballad playparty
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads, p. 132, "(no title)" (1 text)

File: ByGo132

Healin' Waters

DESCRIPTION: "Healin' waters done move (x2), What's de matter now?" "Healing waters done move (x2), Come to Jesus!" "... Soul gittin' happy now!" "...Hallelujah!"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Health to the Company, A (Come All My Old Comrades)

DESCRIPTION: Singer, preparing to emigrate, gives a toast: "Come all my old comrades, Come now let us join, Come blend your sweet voices in chorus with mine.... So here's a health to the company, and one to my lass... For we may and might never all meet here again."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1875 (Greig/Duncan8; Ord claims a report from 1836
KEYWORDS: emigration drink farewell
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar) Britain(Scotland(Aber)) Ireland
REFERENCES (10 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #59, pp. 1-2, "The Donside Emigrant's Farewell" (1 text plus 2 fragments)
Greig/Duncan8 1516, "The Emigrant's Farewell to Donside" (13 texts, 10 tunes)
Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp. 222-223, "Come All My Old Comrades" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 59, "Come All Ye Old Comrades" (1 text, 1 tune)
Pottie/Ellis-FolksongsOfTheMaritimes, pp. 152-153, "Come All Ye Old Comrades" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 350-351, "The Emigrant's Farewell to Donside" (1 text plus sundry stanzas, 1 tune)
Tunney-StoneFiddle, p. 172, "Kind Friends and Companions" (1 text, 1 tune)
Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster 50, "We May and Might Never All Meet Here Again" (1 text, 1 tune)
Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 29, "Good Friends and Companions" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, HLTHCOMP*
Roud #1801
RECORDINGS:
Marge Steiner, "Friends and Companions" (on Steiner01)
Belle, Sheila, and Cathie Stewart, "The Parting Song" (on SCStewartsBlair01)
NOTES [127 words]: There is a broadside, NLScotland, L.C.Fol.70(41b), "Drink and be Merry, or The Bold 42!" (There was a puir lassie, I pity her lot"), Poet's Box (Dundee), c. 1890, which has this chorus, but the rest is about a girl saying goodbye to a soldier off to the wars. It's not clear which is earlier, but the broadside is quite commonplace. - RBW

Lines, by no means in all versions, that may be unique to this song are "There is an old proverb I believe it is true That 'Love is more precious than the gold of Peru" (Greig/Duncan6 1516A-C,K-M and Greig #59; Ord-BothySongsAndBallads; Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia text B); Tunney's version is: "I have read that old proverb, I have read it so true My love she's as far [sic] as the bright morning dew." - BS
Last updated in version 5.0
File: CrSe222

Hear Dem Bells!

DESCRIPTION: "All day I works in de cotton an' de corn... Waiting for Gabriel to blow his horn, So I won't have to work any more." "Hear dem bells -- oh, don't you hear dem bells? Dey's ringing out de glory of de dawn." "I sings and shouts wid all my might."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)
KEYWORDS: work religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 229, "Hear Dem Bells!" (1 text)
File: ScNF229A
Hear that Rumbling

DESCRIPTION: "(Hear/I heard) that (rumbling/lumbering) (up/down) in the (ground/sky)." With many variants and floating material, the listener is told to reform, asked to pray for the singer, admonished to wait for Jesus, etc.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1920 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 577, "Hear that Rumbling (I Heard a Mighty Rumbling)" (2 texts plus a fragment)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 577, "Hear that Rumbling (I Heard a Mighty Rumbling" (3 tunes plus text excerpts)

Roud #11895

File: Br3577

Hear the Angels Singing

DESCRIPTION: "Sing all the way (x3), Hear the angels singing." Verses: We're marching to heaven with Jesus but those Christians are "idling on the battle line." The singer will is sure of going to heaven and loves to shout and sing. "Jesus died for you and me"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1874 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute)

KEYWORDS: nonballad religious Jesus

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolk SongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, p. 206, "Hear de Angels Singin'" (1 text, 1 tune; p. 246 in the 1874 edition)

Roud #15272

File: Dett206

Hear the Lambs a-Crying

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Hear the lambs a-crying (x3), O Shepherd, feed my sheep." Verses: Jesus asks Peter "feed my sheep." Jesus is crucified and "hangs three hours in dreadful pain." The singer wants to leave "this vain world" and follows Jesus's road.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1874 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute)

KEYWORDS: Bible nonballad religious floatingverses Jesus sheep

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, pp. 224-225, "Hear de Lambs a-Cryin'" (1 text, 1 tune; pp. 210-211 in the 1874 edition)

Roud #12257

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Blood-Stained Banders" (chorus lines)

NOTES [271 words]: In the verses, every alternate line is "O shepherd, feed my sheep."
Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute includes the floater "If I had wings like Noah's dove, I'd fly away to the heavens above." The Biblical reference is John 21:17: "He saith unto him the third time, Simon, son of Jonas, loveth thou me? Peter was grieved because he said unto him the third time, Lovest thou me? And he said unto him, Lord, thou knowest all things; thou knowest that I love thee. Jesus saith unto him, Feed my sheep" (King James). - BS

The incident the song alludes to is a good deal more complicated than the above quote above shows. Jesus twice asks (in 21:15, 16) if Peter loves him with (Christian) love (using the verb π, "agapao") and Peter answers that he feels ordinary love (, "phileo") toward Peter. Then, the third time (21:17), cited above, Jesus asks if Peter loves ("phileo") him, and thus induces Peter to say that he loves Jesus ("agapao"). But none of this is evident in the King James translation. Also, the better Greek manuscripts say Peter was son of , John, not son of , Jonas (and are followed by, e.g., the New Revised Standard Version). This is a variant in the texts of the manuscripts, not a translational variant; five of the six oldest manuscripts read "John," but almost all manuscripts after the seventh century read "Jonah/Jonas"). Also, Jesus was on the cross for six hours, not three hours -- from the third hour to the ninth hour of the day; see Mark 15:25, 34. Three hours was the period there was said to be darkness on the land (Mark 15:33). - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: Dett224

Hearken, Hearken

DESCRIPTION: A man and woman court seven years. His mother threatens to disown him "if you marry one that's below your station." The woman says "children ought to obey their parents" He marries her anyway, adores his wife and "never minds what his mother told him"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1911 (Greig/Duncan5)

KEYWORDS: courting love marriage money mother

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #177, pp. 1-2, "Hearken, Hearken" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan5 1000, "Hearken, Hearken" (1 text)

Roud #6288

NOTES [58 words]: Greig #177 includes a version of "Rise Up Quickly and Let Me In (The Ghostly Lover)" - ("Hearken, hearken, and I will tell you") -- with a first verse virtually shared with "Hearken, Hearken": "Hearken, hearken, and I will tell you Of a lad and a country lass; Seven long years they've been a-courting, Many a jovial hour betwixt them passed." - BS

Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD1000

Hearse Song (II), The

DESCRIPTION: "Did you ever think as the hearse roll by That the next trip they take they'll lay you by, With your boots a-swinging from the back of a roan..." The soldier will inevitably end in the hands of the grave-diggers; the soldier's body will rot in the ground

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Niles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe)

KEYWORDS: war death soldier burial

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Niles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe, pp. 188-190, "The Hearse Song" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #15546

NOTES [29 words]: Roud lumps this with "The Worms Crawl In," with which of course it shares its initial words. But I would consider this a separate song though derived from the same original. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: NiMo188

Heart Cry from the West, A

DESCRIPTION: "By Pacific's wave I'm sighing for my homeland, I long to breathe her healthful airs again." "The sunset floods the golden gate with glory... Yet the heart within me cries for my home'neath northern skies... Take me back... To the hils... of Newfoundland"

AUTHOR: Words: D. Carroll / Music: P. Sheehan (source: Doyle4)

KEYWORDS: homesickness Canada nonballad
Heart of Oak

DESCRIPTION: In praise of the British Navy that can drive off any foe: "Heart of oak are our ships, Jolly tars are our men: We are always ready. Steady, boys, steady, We'll fight and we'll conquer again and again."

AUTHOR: Words: David Garrick/Music: Dr. William Boyce

EARLIEST DATE: 1759 ("Harlequin's Invasion")

KEYWORDS: navy sailor patriotic ship nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(England)

REFERENCES (6 citations):
- Chappell/Wooldridge-OldEnglishPopularMusic II, pp. 189-191, "Heart of Oak" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Ashton-RealSailorSongs, #92, "Hearts of Oak" (1 text)
- Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, pp. 155-156, "Heart of Oak" (1 text, 1 tune)
- DT, HEARTOAK*
- Aline Waites & Robin Hunter, _The Illustrated Victorian Songbook_. Michael Joseph Ltd., 1984, pp. 212-213, "Heart of Oak" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bold Hawke" (context of the Battle of Quiberon Bay)

SAME TUNE:
- Liberty/The Liverty Song ("Come join hand in hand, brave Americans all") (by John Dickinson) (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, pp. 14-15, 26; Darling-NewAmericanSongster, p. 340; Rabson-SongbookOfTheAmericanRevolution, pp. 6-8)
- Come Shake Your Dull Noddles [parody of The Liberty Song] (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 30; Rabson-SongbookOfTheAmericanRevolution, p. 9)
- The Massachusetts Liberty Song [parody by Benjamin Church of The Liberty Song, and once printed from the same staff notation!] (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 31)
- A New Liberty Song ("Come rouse up my lads and join this great cause") (by J. W. Hewlings) (Rabson-SongbookOfTheAmericanRevolution, p. 10)
- A Refugee Song ("Here's a bumper, brave boys, to the health of our King") (Rabson-SongbookOfTheAmericanRevolution, p. 11)

NOTES [233 words]: This may not, at first glance, seem a folk song -- but it is one of Great Britain's leading patriotic songs; Morison, p. 165, says that "British throats went hoarse bawling out 'Heart of Oak'" in 1759, the year of England's greatest success in the Seven Years' War (Morison quotes the song on p. 170).

It appears that the song and the furor were inspired by the English success at Quiberon Bay, in which Admiral Hawke's British squadron demolished a French fleet and ended any possibility of France invading Britain. (Herman, p. 290. For Hawke and his various victories, see the notes to "Bold Hawke.")

The song is quite correct in describing British ships as built of oak. Oak was the preferred wood for ships because it resisted rot -- presumably because of the tannic acid found in it. It didn't last forever, but other woods usually wore out sooner (Cordingly, p. 18).

It is ironic to note that what is believed to have been the first American pro-independence song was set to this tune; in 1768. John Dickinson published what was called the "Song for American Freedom." We do not, however, seem to know what the song was actually about; Fisher, pp. 20-21, notes that an advertisement for Dickinson's song survives, but no copy of the text itself has been preserved.

According to Waites & Hunter, this was originally written by David Garrick for a pantomime called "Harlequin's Invasion." - RBW

Bibliography
Heart that Forms for Love, A

DESCRIPTION: The young man reports that he is tired of the single life. He has seen his love in dreams, but does not know where she is. He describes her looks. He declares he will seek her everywhere: "I'll mount old Barney... And find my Delsenia as soon as I can."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1942 (Randolph)
KEYWORDS: courting separation dream
FOUND IN: US (So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Randolph 675, "A Heart that Forms for Love" (1 text)
Roud #7367
NOTES [44 words]: Randolph conjectures that the proper title of this piece is "A Heart that Yearns for Love." I'd suggest "A Heart that Mourns for Love."
"Delsenia" makes me think of "Dulcinea," as in Don Quixote's girlfriend. Sounds awfully literary for an Ozark Folksong, though. - RBW

Hearts Like Doors Can Ope' With Ease

DESCRIPTION: "Hearts like doors will open with ease To very little keys, And they are these: 'I thank you sir' and "If you please."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1884 (J. S. Ogilvie, "One Thousand Popular Quotations... Suitable for Writing in Autograph Albums")
KEYWORDS: nonballad
FOUND IN: US (MW)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore, p. 126, "(Hearts like doors will open with ease)" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: J. S. Ogilvie, _One Thousand Popular Quotations Comprising the Choicest Thoughts and Sayings of Eminent Writers of All Ages, Together With Nearly Three Hundred Original and Choice Selections, Suitable for Writing in Autograph Albums_, J. S. Ogivie, Publisher (New York & Chicago), 1884 (available on Google Books), p. 111 f Part I and p. 72 of Part II, "Hearts, like doors, can ope' with ease" (2 texts)
NOTES [46 words]: Hymnary.org reports that this was printed in the 1936 "Hymnal for Boys and Girls" with the tune being the Larghetto from Beethoven's second symphony. I have no idea if Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore's informant, who learned it in the nineteenth century, knew it to that tune. - RBW

Hearts of Gold

DESCRIPTION: The sailor compares sea life with that on land. The landlubbers work at the plow, go home at night, and sleep with their wives; the sailors work all hours and face storms. The sailor declares his life is better, and tells the girls to appreciate it

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1832 (Journal from the _Bengal_)

Last updated in version 5.1
File: ChWII189

Heart that Forms for Love, A

DESCRIPTION: The young man reports that he is tired of the single life. He has seen his love in dreams, but does not know where she is. He describes her looks. He declares he will seek her everywhere: "I'll mount old Barney... And find my Delsenia as soon as I can."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1942 (Randolph)
KEYWORDS: courting separation dream
FOUND IN: US (So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Randolph 675, "A Heart that Forms for Love" (1 text)
Roud #7367
NOTES [44 words]: Randolph conjectures that the proper title of this piece is "A Heart that Yearns for Love." I'd suggest "A Heart that Mourns for Love."
"Delsenia" makes me think of "Dulcinea," as in Don Quixote's girlfriend. Sounds awfully literary for an Ozark Folksong, though. - RBW

Hearts Like Doors Can Ope' With Ease

DESCRIPTION: "Hearts like doors will open with ease To very little keys, And they are these: 'I thank you sir' and "If you please."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1884 (J. S. Ogilvie, "One Thousand Popular Quotations... Suitable for Writing in Autograph Albums")
KEYWORDS: nonballad
FOUND IN: US (MW)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore, p. 126, "(Hearts like doors will open with ease)" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: J. S. Ogilvie, _One Thousand Popular Quotations Comprising the Choicest Thoughts and Sayings of Eminent Writers of All Ages, Together With Nearly Three Hundred Original and Choice Selections, Suitable for Writing in Autograph Albums_, J. S. Ogivie, Publisher (New York & Chicago), 1884 (available on Google Books), p. 111 f Part I and p. 72 of Part II, "Hearts, like doors, can ope' with ease" (2 texts)
NOTES [46 words]: Hymnary.org reports that this was printed in the 1936 "Hymnal for Boys and Girls" with the tune being the Larghetto from Beethoven's second symphony. I have no idea if Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore's informant, who learned it in the nineteenth century, knew it to that tune. - RBW

Hearts of Gold

DESCRIPTION: The sailor compares sea life with that on land. The landlubbers work at the plow, go home at night, and sleep with their wives; the sailors work all hours and face storms. The sailor declares his life is better, and tells the girls to appreciate it

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1832 (Journal from the _Bengal_)

Last updated in version 5.1
File: ChWII189
Hearts of Oak (II -- A New Sea Song)

DESCRIPTION: "Hearts of oak who wish to try Your fortunes on the sea, And Briton's enemies defy...." Sailors are offered two months' pay as a bounty. They are offered a good ship and captain -- plus prize money. "Can British Tars wish more?"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1867 (broadsides published by J. Harkness)

KEYWORDS: sailor money

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ashton-RealSailorSongs, #85 insert, "A New Sea Song" (1 text)

Roud #22234

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 c.15(278), "Jolly Tar," J. Harkness (Preston), 1840-1866; also Harding B 20(165), J. Harkness (Preston), 1840-1866

File: AshS0851

Heathen Chinese, The

DESCRIPTION: "I've a very sad pitiful story to tell you, Although it's a common one too... But alas! there is no work for a white man to do; They're hiring the Heathen Chinese." The singer tells of his poor family; he will join the Knights of Labor to stop the Chinese

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: labor-movement poverty foreigner

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1869 - Establishment of the Knights of Labor by Uriah S. Stephens 1879 - Terence V. Powderly becomes Grand Master Workman of the Knights, opening membership to the unskilled -- and to minorities
1886 - Haymarket Riot causes the decline of the Knights of Labor

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 233, "The Heathen Chinese" (1 text)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 233, "The Heathen Chinese" (1 tune plus a text excerpt)

Roud #15777

NOTES [510 words]: Bret Harte wrote a piece, "Plain Language from Truthful James," generally called "The Heathen Chinee." This is a tale of a Chinese man who has peculiar success at cards and is punished for it. It does not appear to be directly related to this piece but may well have helped inspire it.

The Haymarket Riot is one of those events that seems to have been viewed very differently by different sources. Jameson, writing not long after the event, gave this summary on p. 299: Haymarket Massacre (Chicago), an Anarchist riot, originating in labor troubles which culminated in an open-air meeting in Haymarket Square, May 4, 1886. Violent speeches were made by the Anarchists Spies, Parsons, and Fielden. A bomb was thrown among the police, causing great loss of life. Spies, Parsons, Fischer, Engel, Schwab, Lingg, and Niebe were arrested and tried. The first four were hanged November 11, 1887. Fielden and Schwab were imprisoned for life. Lingg committed suicide. Governor Altgeld, of Illinois, pardoned Fielden and Schwab in 1893.
Schlesinger, p. 361, says that some 180 police were in attendance for the event. The weather was rainy and the crowd already starting to break up as a result when they arrived. The bomb killed seven and wounded more than fifty. "No one seems to know who committed the dreadful crime."
Reportedly eight were arrested for murder -- evidently the seven listed by Jameson and one other.
Terror is said to have swept the country, but there is no mention of organized labor.
I must say that, in reviewing this entry, I have no idea why I noted the Haymarket Riot. It is not mentioned in the song. It perhaps gives us a hint at the last possible date for the song, but we could be fairly sure it was before 1888 anyway.
Jameson, p. 131, notes a series of treaties in 1844, 1858, and 1868 had opened the doors for immigrants from the far east; 105,000 Chinese were identified in the 1880 census. An attempt to restrict immigration was passed by congress in 1879 but vetoed by President Hayes. In 1880, an agreement was reached with China to limit immigration. This also made it harder for those who left the United States for China to return. Another Exclusion Act was vetoed by President Chester A.
Arthur, but then he allowed another Act to become law when it was clear that his veto would be overridden (Karabell, pp. 84-85). This 1882 law was informally called the "Chinese Exclusion Act" (Weir/Hanlan, p. 84). In 1888, immigration was stopped entirely. In 1892, laws were passed permitting expulsion of the Chinese. Chinese exclusion was a major issue in the 1888 presidential election, when Harrison was accused of not being firm on the issue (Wesser/Schlesinger, pp.
1647-1648). Thus the song almost certainly dates from before 1888. My guess is that it dates from after the Panic of 1873 but before 1880.
The mention of the Knights of Labor is significant, because they were strongly opposed to Chinese immigration (Weir/Hanlan, p. 85).
Restrictions on Chinese immigration were not entirely repealed until 1943 (Weir/Hanlan, p. 86).

Bibliography

- Jameson: J. Franklin Jameson, Dictionary of United States History 1492-1895, Puritan Press, 1894
- Karabell: Zachary Karabell, Chester Alan Arthur [a volume in the American Presidents series
- Weir/Hanlan: Robert E. Weir and James P. Hanlan, editors, Historical Encyclopedia of American Labor, 2 volumes, Greenwood Press, 2004 editor; Fred L. Israel, associate editor, History of American Presidential Elections 1789-1968, volume II (covering 1848-1896), Chelsea House, 1971

Last updated in version 6.1
File: Br3233

Heather Down the Moor (Among the Heather; Down the Moor)

DESCRIPTION: The singer wanders "down the moor" and meets a beautiful girl. He courts her "the live-long day," and she stays with him even as her flocks wander. At the end, she leaves him. He wishes he could find her again and make her his "queen among the heather"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Journal of the Irish Folk Song Society, according Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster)

KEYWORDS: love courting beauty separation sheep

FOUND IN: Ireland Britain(Scotland(Bord))

REFERENCES (5 citations):

Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H177, pp. 271-272, "O'er the Moor among the Heather" (1 text, 1 tune)
Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster 3, "Heather on the Moor" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlайн-MoreIrishStreetBallads 6, "Doon the Moor" (1 text, 1 tune) McMorland/Scott-HerdLaddieOTheGlen, pp. 79, 152, "Owre the Muir Amang the Heather" (1 text,
1 tune)
DT, HTHRMOOR*
Roud #375

RECORDINGS:
Roisin White, "Among the Heather" (on IRRWhite01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Queen Among the Heather" (plot, lyrics)
cf. "The Magpie's Nest" (lyrics)
cf. "Banks of Sullane" (theme)

NOTES [160 words]: This song is very close to "Queen among the Heather" (Kennedy #141, etc.); they have similar plots and occasional common lyrics. There will be versions where it is almost impossible to tell which is which. I thought about listing them as one song. (Roud lumps them.) But on consideration, this song has two characteristics rarely seen in "Queen among the Heather."
First, this song tends to follow a complex stanza pattern:
One morn in may, when fields were gay,
Serene and pleasant was the weather.
I chanced to roam some miles from home
Among the bonnie bloomin' heather
Down the heather
O'er the moor and through the heather.
I chanced to roam some miles from home
Among the bonnie bloomin' heather
Down the moor.
"Queen among the Heather" usually has simple four-line stanzas.
"Heather down the Moor" also tends to end with the lines
But if I were a king, I would make her a queen,
The bonnie lass I met among the heather
Down the moor. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.4
File: HHH177

Heather Jock

DESCRIPTION: "Heather Jock's noo awa' (x2), The muircock noo may crousely craw, Since Heather Jock's noo awa'." Jock can hide anywhere, and steal anything; bad from his youth, he also plays music on the sabbath. Now he is caught and on his way to Botany Bay

AUTHOR: credited by Ford to Dr. James Stirling

EARLIEST DATE: 1843 (Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong)

KEYWORDS: thief transportation

FOUND IN: Ireland Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H39, pp. 123-124, "Heather Jock" (1 text, 1 tune)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 276, "Heather Jock" (1 text)
Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 131-135, "Heather Jock" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greig/Duncan2 255, "Heather Jock" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #2339

BROADSIDES:
NLScotland, L.C.Fol.178.A.2(093), "Heather Jock," unknown, c. 1875; also L.C.Fol.70(132b), c. 1890

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Donald Caird" (tune, according to Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong; see Notes)

NOTES [103 words]: The tune here is not quite "Bobby Shaftoe" (or relatives such as "Katie Beardie"), but it sounds to me as if it might be derived from that type. Even though Jock was apparently a scourge of the community, you can't help but feel that the singer admired him.

Ford gives extensive notes regarding John Ferguson, who reportedly inspired the song. He is said to have been placed on trial in 1812 and transported for life, primarily for stealing cattle. - RBW

For a possible lead on the tune see Mudcat Cafe thread "Lyr Add: Donald Caird's Come Again (Walter Scott)" at http://mudcat.org/thread.cfm?threadid=16763#158078 - BS

Last updated in version 3.2

File: HHH039
Heathery Hills, The

DESCRIPTION: "I mind it well, and I see it yet" The singer recalls past days meeting Rory on the Heathery Hill. She misses her mother and her father's fields. "The city holds no pleasure" and she would give it up for a summer eve with Rory on the Heathery Hill.

AUTHOR: Ethna Carbery (Mrs. Seamus MacManus, Anna Johnston) (1866-1902) (source: _A Celebration of Women Writers_ on the University of Pennsylvania Library site)

EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Ethna Carbery, _The Four Winds of Erinn_, according to _A Celebration of Women Writers_ on the University of Pennsylvania Library site)

KEYWORDS: homesickness love separation lyric nonballad lover mother

FOUND IN: Ireland Britain(Scotland(Bord))

Roud #5295

RECORDINGS:

*Brigid Tunney, "The Heathery Hills" (on IRTunneyFamily01)

NOTES [132 words]: IRTunneyFamily01: Brigid Tunney explains that she learned the song from her sister; it was among the songs she learned in Glasgow and brought back to Ireland on her annual return. - BS

According to Patrick C. Power, _A Literary History of Ireland_ (Mercier, 1969), p. 160, Ethna Carbery, a native of Belfast, took Donegal as her theme; her "fame rests on one volume alone -- The Four Winds of Erinn. This was published posthumously in 1902. She essentially belongs to the nationalistic ballad tradition which goes back to the Nation writers."

According to Kathleen Hoagland, _1000 Years of Irish Poetry_, p. 775, Carbery's true name was Anna Johnston McManus. (I have no idea why she needed a pen name after her death.) Her one song work well-known in folk circles is "Roddy McCorley." - RBW

File: RcHeaHil

Heave and Go, My Nancy O

DESCRIPTION: Capstan shanty. "Come all ye jolly sailors bold. Heave and go, my Nancy O! Listen till my tale is told. Heave and go, my Nancy O!" English version of a Danish shanty. No particular story line to the verses, but some make reference to Danish place names.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1888 (L. A. Smith, _Music of the Waters_)

KEYWORDS: shanty sailor foreignlanguage

FOUND IN: Denmark Britain

REFERENCES (1 citation):

*Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, p. 319, "Heave and Go, My Nancy O" (1 text)

ALTERNATE TITLES:

Om Dannebrog Man Ved

NOTES [54 words]: This was quoted from L.A. Smith's _Music of the Waters_ where it was included as a translation of a Danish shanty. It may have some connection with a song that Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman found "Pull Away Now, my Nancy O!" but Smith didn't give a tune. The Danish version was called "Om Dannebrog Man Ved." - SL

File: Hugi319

Heave Away (IV)

DESCRIPTION: "Heave him up, O he yo, Butter and cheesefor breakfast, O he yo, The steward he's a making swankey.""Heave away... Duff for dinner, duff for dinner, Now I see it... Hurrah for the Cape Cod girs." "Now I don't... Round the corner Sally, Up she comes..."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1846 (Ross, Etchings of a Whale Cruise)

KEYWORDS: food nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):

*Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp, 44-45, "Heave Away" (1 text)

Roud #27503

File: HGam044
Heave Away Cheerily

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: Sing me lads cheerily, Heave me lads cheerily, Heave away cheerily o-ho! For the gold that we prize an' for sunnier skies, away to the south'ard we go!

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1912 (JFSS)
KEYWORDS: shanty money
FOUND IN: Britain US
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 43-46, "Heave Away Cheerily" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 310-311, "Heave Away Cheerily O!" "As Off to the South'ard We Go" (2 texts, 2 tunes) [AbEd, pp. 232-233]
ADDITIONAL: Frederick Pease Harlow, _The Making of a Sailor, or Sea Life Aboard a Yankee Square-Rigger_, 1928; republished by Dover, 1988, pp. 249-250, "Heave Away Cheerily (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #932
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Off to the South'ard We Go

NOTES [49 words]: Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas gives the second text, "As Off to the South'ard We Go," as a variant of "Heave Away Cheerily" and quotes it from vol. 5 of the Journal of the Folk Song Society where was taken down by a Mr. Piggot from the singing of shantyman J. Perring of Dartmouth in 1912. - SL

Last updated in version 3.3
File: Hugi310

Heave Away, Boys, Heave Away (I)

DESCRIPTION: Shanty. "Heave away, heave away, for the merchant's money, Ch: Heave away boys, heave away!" Verses mostly about money, "Heave away for the buckra's silver," etc...

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas); the Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates version is from 1867 but might be any of several "Heave Away" songs
KEYWORDS: shanty worksong money
FOUND IN: West Indies
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, p. 308, "Heave Away, Boys, Heave Away" (2 texts, 2 tunes; the "a" text is this piece; "b" is "Heave Away, Boys, Heave Away (II)") [AbEd, pp. 230-231]
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 61, "Heave Away" (1 short text, 1 tune)
NOTES [213 words]: Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas says this (and the other "Heave Away, Boys, Heave Away") are halyard shanties, despite the use of the word "heave" in the chorus. - SL
The easiest way to distinguish the two may be the fact that this one is in 2/4; "Heave Away, Boys, Heave Away (II)" is in 3/4.
The fragment in Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates is so short as to be almost unclassifiable; Roud sticks it in with "Heave Away, Me Johnnies," but that seems to be simply a case of a catchall entry. I classify it here because the form fits better here than elsewhere.
One line in the Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates text occurs occasionally elsewhere: "I'd rather court a yellow gal than work for Henry Clay." Henry Clay was, of course, one of the most important American politicians of the early nineteenth century, who was only fifteen years dead at the time Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates picked up their text. So it might be about him, or perhaps about someone who opposed his presidential ambitions. It might also be about a different Henry Clay.
On the other hand, given that it is a sea song, there is a possibility that the line should not read "for Henry Clay," but rather "on the Henry Clay," referring to one of the ships by that name. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.4
File: Hugi308

Heave Away, Boys, Heave Away (II)

DESCRIPTION: Shanty. "Oh I love the sailor an' the sailor loves me. Heave away, boys, heave away! He comes to my window ev'ry mornin' at three. Heave away, boys, heave away."
Heave Away, Me Johnnies

DESCRIPTION: Shanty. Characteristic line: "Heave away, me johnnies/jollies, heave away, ay!"
The sailor lists some of the ports the ship has been sent to, but now rejoices to be returning to (Liverpool) and its girls.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman)
KEYWORDS: shanty
FOUND IN: US(MA) Canada(Newf) Britain(England(West))
REFERENCES (10 citations):
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 61-64, "Heave Away" (3 texts, 1 tune, but only the last text goes with this piece; the others are "Yellow Meal")
Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen, pp. 93-94, "Heave Away" (1 text, 1 tune)
Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 14-17, "Heave Away My Johnnies" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 303-308, "Heave Away, Me Johnnies" (3 texts, 3 tunes)
[AbEd, pp. 226-230]
Sharp-EnglishFolkChanteys, XXVI, p. 30, "Heave Away, My Johnny" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 49, "Heave Away!" (1 text, 1 tune)
Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs 105, "Heave away, my Johnny" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gundry-CanowKernow-SongsDancesFromCornwall, p. 41, "Heave Away, My Johnny" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, HEAVJHN* HEAVEJH2*
ADDITIONAL: Captain John Robinson, "Songs of the Chantey Man," a series published July-August 1917 in the periodical _The Bellman_ (Minneapolis, MN, 1906-1919). "We're All Bound Away" is in Part 1, 7/14/1917.
Roud #616
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Yellow Meal (Heave Away; Yellow Gals; Tapscott; Bound to Go)" (tune, meter, chorus)
cf. "Yellow Gals (Doodle Let Me Go)" (style)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
We're All Bound to Go
NOTES [36 words]: This song is probably identical in origin to "Yellow Gals (Doodle Let Me Go)," and perhaps also akin to "Yellow Meal." As, however, those songs have taken on a completely separate plot, I treat them separately. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.5
File: Doe063

Heave Her Up and Bust Her

DESCRIPTION: "The St. Clair River is thirty miles long, Heave 'er up, lads, Heave 'er high, An' we'll set our canvas to this merry song, Heave 'er up and bust her." The sailors head for Lake Huron, talking about the tasks of sailing the lakes

AUTHOR: unknown
Heave on the Trawl (The Smacksman)

DESCRIPTION: "Once I was a schoolboy and learned my ABCs; No I am a smacksman and I plough the raging seas... Let's heave on the trawl, When we get our fish on board we'll have another haul." A description of the tasks of working on a fishing smack

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (recorded by Sam Larner)
KEYWORDS: fishing ship sailor work
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
  Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs 135, "The Smacksman" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, pp. 164-165, "(Oh, once I wuz a schoolboy") (1 text)
Roud #1788
File: PaSe135

Heave, My Boys, Away

DESCRIPTION: Shanty. "Walk 'er round for we're rollin homeward. Heave me boys together! The bully ol' ship is a-lyin windward, Heave me boys away!" Verses have simple rhymes on sailing themes. Full ch: "Heave 'er an' we'll break 'er, For the old ship's a-rollin home"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Bradford & Fagge, _Old Sea Chanties_)
KEYWORDS: shanty ship sailor
FOUND IN: Scandinavia Britain
REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 528-529, "Heave, My Boys, Away" (1 text, 1 tune) [AbEd, pp. 384-385]
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hob-y-derri-dando" (very similar tune)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Capstan Bar
NOTES [22 words]: Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas learned this from Swedish sailors, and says he has no idea how popular it was in British ships. - SL
File: Hugi528

Heaven Bell a-Ring

DESCRIPTION: "My Lord, my Lord, what shall I do? And a heaven bell ring and praise God." "What shall I do for a hiding place?" "I run to the sea, but the sea run dry." God's promises to the faithful are briefly summarized; listeners are advised to listen

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
  Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 20, "Heaven Bell A-Ring" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 322-323, "Heaven Bell a-Ring" (1 text)
Roud #12065
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Sinner Man" (lyrics)
Heaven Bells Are Ringing (I)
DESCRIPTION: "Heaven bells are ringing and I'm (my mother is, my Jesus is) going home" (3x) "Climbing up Zion's hill." "Heaven bells are ringing and the sinner has lost a home"(3x). "Climbing up Zion's Hill"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1899 (Barton-OldPlantationHymns)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious Jesus
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Barton-OldPlantationHymns, p. 20, "Heaven Bells Ringin, And I'm A-Going Home" (1 text, 1 tune)
RECORDINGS:
Wade Mainer and Sons of the Mountaineers, "Heaven Bells Are Ringing" (1939, Bluebird B 8203, 2009, "J.E. Mainer Classic Sides 1938-1941," JSP Records CD JSP77124C)
NOTES [77 words]: The description is based on the Barton-OldPlantationHymns text.
The Mainer version verse is "If you don't mind and hurry you'll be too late... Climbing up Zion's hill" - BS
Phillips's chorus for "Climbing up Zion's Hill" is "I'm climbing up Zion's Hill, I'm climbing up Zion's hill, Climbing, climbing, Climbing up Zion's Hill" (Philip Phillips and Wm. B. Bradbury, The Silver Bells (Chicago: Alfred L. Sewell, 1867 ("Digitized by Internet Archive")), p.21) - BS
Last updated in version 4.0
File: Bart020A

Heaven Bells Are Ringing (II)
DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "The heaven bells are ringing, Archangels are singing, Heaven bells are ringing, In the morning." Verses: "Oh come my dearest sister (mother, father, ...), And don't you want to go, And sit along side of Jesus, And don't you want to go?"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1893 (Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious Jesus
FOUND IN: West Indies(Bahamas)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories 25, "The-r Heaven Bells Are Ringin'" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [29 words]: The description is based on the Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories text.
Perhaps the verses don't float but the "don't you want to go" response is common in hymns and other songs. - BS
Last updated in version 4.2
File: Edwa025

Heaven Bells Are Ringing In My Soul
DESCRIPTION: Repeated alternate line: "Heaven bells are ringing in my soul." Chorus: "Heaven bells are ringing. Sing-sol-singing.... Going away to see my Jesus. Going away to see my Lord...."
Verse: The singer is going to see heaven; you can't get there without grace
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1899 (Barton-OldPlantationHymns)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Barton-OldPlantationHymns, p. 10, "Heaven Bells Ringin' In My Soul" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: Bart010

Heaven Bells, The
DESCRIPTION: "O Mother, I believe (x3) That Christ was crucified." "Oh, don't you hear the heaven bells a-ringing over me? A-ringing over me? Oh, don't you hear the heaven bells a-ringing over me? It sounds like judgment day."

Heaven is a Beautiful Place (I)

DESCRIPTION: "Heaven is a beautiful place, I know (x2). If you want to go to heaven on time, Sure got to plumb the line." "Ain't no sorrow in heaven I know...." "Ain't no (murders/gamblers/etc.)
in heaven...." ""Loving union in heaven I know...."

AUTHOR: unknown

Heaven is a Beautiful Place (II)

DESCRIPTION: "Elisha has done and seen the beautiful place. Heaven is a lovely place I know, I know." "Elisha done seen the sight, And said he didn't need any light. He has gone on to Heaven to rest. Heaven is a beautiful place, I know."

AUTHOR: unknown

It's not at all clear to me why Elisha is singled out in this song; he reported no visions of heaven, and it was Elijah, not Elisha, who was carried up into heaven (2 Kings 2). Elisha simply died and was buried in an ordinary manner (2 Kings 13).

It's true that Elisha was responsible for an astonishing number of miracles (including one after his death) -- but they were not really "inspiring" miracles; the result reads almost like a Davy Crockett story, but with miracles rather than animals: Where Davy might kill a bear and defeat a wildcat, Elisha would cure a leper and feed a multitude.... - RBW
File: Br3579B

Heaven Is Shining, The
DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "The heaven is shining, shining, The heaven is shining full of love."
Verses: the singer bids friends farewell: "going to leave you all." Death says, "this very day, you must go." If he had it to do over, he would avoid the road to sin.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1874 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute)
KEYWORDS: death nonballad religious
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, pp. 94-95, "Oh, de Hebben Is Shinin'" (1 text, 1 tune; p. 219 in the 1874 edition)
Roud #15223
NOTES [53 words]: In Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute's verses, every alternate line is "The heaven is shining full of love." One of Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute's verses floats from "Oh Death (III)," asking Death to "spare me yet another day." - BS
Last updated in version 4.0
File: Dett094

Heaven's a Long Way Off
DESCRIPTION: "This world is all so dark and cold, That' I've been a long time mourning, But the streets of heaven are paved with gold, Its light is upon me dawning. But heaven's a long way off (x3) And I've been a long time mourning." The singer warns of the grave
AUTHOR: unknown ("arranged" by Septimus Winner)
EARLIEST DATE: 1882 (The Song Wave)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad warning
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
ADDITIONAL: H. S. Perkins, H. J. Danforth, and E. V. DeGraff, _The Song Wave_, American Book Company, 1882, pp. 114-115, Heaven's a Great Way Off" (1 text, 1 tune)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Heaven's a Great Way Off
NOTES [53 words]: Although I have never seen a traditional collection of this, The Song Wave calls this a "Slave Camp Hymn" arranged by Septimus Winner -- who is known to have worked with other Black material. So I'm including the song, very tentatively. For more on Septimus Winner, see the notes to "Listen to the Mockingbird." - RBW
Last updated in version 2.6
File: BdHaGWOf

Heaven's My Home
DESCRIPTION: "Come all ye dear children and help me to sing, I'm going to Jesus, he's Heaven's great king. He died to atone for the sins of the world; His banner is flying, his sails are unfurled. Heaven's my home (x2), I'm going to Jesus, for Heaven's my home."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #86, "Heaven's My Home" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Roud #5025
File: Morr086
Heavenly Aeroplane, The
DESCRIPTION: "One of these days about twelve o'clock... The sinner's going to tremble and cry with pain And the Lord will come in his aeroplane." Jesus will take the saved on a very smooth, easy passage to heaven in the aeroplane.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Thomas)
KEYWORDS: religious pilot technology Jesus travel
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
  Thomas-BalladMakingInMountainsOfKentucky, pp. 214-215, "The Aeroplane Song" (1 text)
  Randolph 660, "The Heavenly Aeroplane" (1 text)
Roud #7384
File: R660

Heavenly Sunlight (Heavenly Sunshine)
DESCRIPTION: A hymn praising Jesus who allows us to "Walk... in sunlight all of my journey" and who will never forsake us. Chorus: "Heavenly sunlight (x2) / Flooding my soul with glory divine / Hallelujah, I am rejoicing / Singing his praises, Jesus is mine"
AUTHOR: words: George H. Cook / music: Henry J. Zelley
EARLIEST DATE: 1899
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Cazden/Haufrecht/Studer-FolkSongsOfTheCatskills 80, "Heavenly Sunshine" (1 text, 1 tune, combined with #81, "My Lord Knows the Way")
ST FSC080 (Partial)
NOTES [26 words]: Not to be confused with the Carter Family song "Sunshine in the Shadows" or "Sunshine in the Mountains," which is also properly titled "Heavenly Sunshine." - RBW
File: FSC080

Heavy-Hipped Woman (Black Gal II)
DESCRIPTION: "Quit yo' long-time talkin' bout yo' heavy-hipped woman, she done gone, she done gone." "My woman, she keeps on grumblin', Bout a new pair of shoes." Verses about poverty, work, prison, courting, a runaway woman, almost anything else.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934
KEYWORDS: courting work prison railroading hardtimes poverty courting separation loneliness floatingverses
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
  Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 13-14, "Heavy-Hipted Woman" (1 text, 1 tune)
  DT, HEAVYHIP*
Roud #6714
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Black Gal (I)" (lyrics)
NOTES [78 words]: Since this is one of those wonderful Lomax accumulations of unrelated verses (from, e.g. "Take This Hammer"/"Swannanoah Tunnel"), it's hard to tell what the real story of this song is. I hope you can identify its relatives.... For a while I lumped this with "Black Gal (I)"; this follows Roud. But "Black Gal (I)" has a much stronger plot than this, which is mostly a complaint song. I suspect that song may have inspired this, but I would now consider them distinct. - RBW
File: LoF294

Heavy, Heavy Hangs Over Your Head
DESCRIPTION: "Heavy, heavy hangs over your head, What are you going to do with it?"
Hecketty Pecketty
DESCRIPTION: "Hecketty Pecketty needles and pins" Sorrow begins when a woman marries. Man's love is all "my eye" [nonsense]. You wash and brew and mend his socks while he's out drinking. The singer prefers to remain an old maid.

Hecklin' Kame, The
DESCRIPTION: "I'm come to borrow yer hecklin' kame [Greig/Duncan8: comb for dressing flax]," Answer: "I'll heckle my hemp and gie ye'it again"

Notes
Hecketty Pecketty:

Hecklin' Kame, The:
1. The Greig/Duncan8 notes relate this song to "The Bob O' Dumblane." See James Kinsley, editor, Burns: Complete Poems and Songs (shorter edition, Oxford, 1969) #513, p. 634, "The Bob o' Dumblane" (1 text, 1 tune): "Lassie, lend me your braw hemp heckle, And I'll lend you my thrilling kame: My heckle is broken, it canna be gotten, And we'll gae dance the Bob o' Dumblane. Twa geed to the wood, to the wood, to the wood, Twa gaed to the wood -- three cam hame: An't be na weel bobbit, weel bobbit, we'll bobbit, An't be na weel bobbit, we'll bob it again." From James Hogg, The Forest Minstrel, editors PD Garside and Richard D. Jackson (Edinburgh, 2006) ,p. 320: "Thomas Crawford ... says that the term 'The Bob of Dumblane' always had an equivocal sense because it refers to both the marriage festivity with its accompanying high jinks, and the sexual act itself."
Hector MacDonald

DESCRIPTION: Hector joins the army and defeats Afghans in Kandahar. At Omdurman "in his great roll of glory It added the crown to his wide-world fame." "Now the great soldier's brave soul has departed ... he died broken hearted"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan1)

KEYWORDS: battle death Africa nonballad soldier

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan1 141, "Hector MacDonald" (1 text)
Roud #5774

NOTES [828 words]: Greig/Duncan1: "Hector Macdonald (1853-1903) became a hero in Britain, and particularly in Scotland, following the spectacular part he played in the battle of Omdurman fought in the Sudan on 2 September 1898. He shot himself when about to be court-martialled on a charge which has never been divulged but is presumed to have been one of homosexuality."
For an account of MacDonald's part on September 2 see Winson Churchill, _The River War_ (London, 1997), pp. 209-218. Churchill: "All depended on MacDonald, and that officer, who by valour and conduct in war had won his way from the rank of a private soldier to the command of a brigade, was equal to the emergency" [p. 215]. See also Wikipedia article _Battle of Omdurman_ - BS Byron Farwell, _Queen Victoria's Little Wars, 1972_ (I use the 1985 Norton edition), p. 207. says that MacDonald first came to be noticed two dozen years before his death, in Afghanistan. As Lord Roberts traveled with a small escort in 1879, his force was attacked by Afghans. "In the sharp engagement that followed, Roberts was struck by the bravery and leadership shown by a colour sergeant of the 92nd. His name was Hector MacDonald and during the course of the action one of his men had called out to him, 'We'll make ye an officer for this day's work, Sergeant!' And another added, 'Aye, and a general too!' Roberts gave MacDonald a battlefield commission....."
He certainly didn't seem destined to be an officer in the very class-conscious British army, being a draper's assistant who had run away from home to become a soldier (Farwell, p. 247). And, indeed, he was more than nine years in the ranks before his promotion, and was still only a lieutenant in 1881, when he fought at Majuba Hill (for which see the song of that name). MacDonald was so determined that, once all else had failed, he actually fought the Boers with his fists, but finally was taken prisoner (Farwell, p. 250). Soon after, he was selected by General Evelyn Wood to be one of the two dozen officers Wood took to Egypt to rebuild the Egyptian army (Farwell, p. 282).
Initially he served as a battalion commander of Sudanese troops (Farwell, p. 332) -- another job looked down on by the snobs. He seems to have been known at this time as "Fighting Mac" (Farwell, p. 333). In 1898, as Kitchener went to fight in Sudan, Macdonald (then a colonel) was given command of a brigade of local troops (Farwell, p. 334). The Battle of Omdurman came about because Kitchener, without knowing it, planned to march across the front of a major force of dervishes. MacDonald was rather far from the main body when the Africans attacked. He calmly swung his brigade to face them, and beat off a force estimated at 20,000 (Farwell, p. 338). Farwell credits MacDonald solely with the victory; he thinks Kitchener botched his part. David Chandler, general editor; Ian Beckett, associate editor, _The Oxford History of the British Army_, 1994 (I use the 1996 Oxford paperback edition), p. 208, also mentions his noteworthy work at Omdurman, which "enable[d] Kitchener to complete the rout of the enemy and enter Omdurman in triumph."
Other battles in which Macdonald served included Gemaizah, Toski, Tokar, Firket, and Hafir (Farwell, p. 334).
"The fate of the crofter's son was [sad]. Macdonald further distinguished himself in the Boer War and he eventually became a major-general, but in 1903, while commanding the British forces in Ceylon, he was charged with being a practicing homosexual. He went to London to defend himself, but was ordered back to Ceylon to face a court of inquiry. He got no further than Paris. There in a hotel room this officer, so brave under the fire of Afghans, Dervishes and Boers, shot himself" (Farwell, p. 338).
MacDonald would have been 61 in 1914 -- still young enough, probably, for field service. I can't help but wonder what would have happened if he, rather than the excitable John French (one year older) or the unimaginative Douglas Haig (eight years younger) had commanded the British in France.
This is all the more so since there were apparently legends about his death, and perhaps even his return to fight for Britain; according to Christina Hole, _English Folk Heroes: From King Arthur to Thomas a Becket_, 1948? (I use the 1992? Dorset Press reprint), p. 25, "Such theories [about sleeping heroes] cannot now survive the natural span of a life.... but that they spring up as spontaneously in modern as in earlier times can hardly be denied by any who remember toe loss of Lord Kitchener, or the many curious stories which followed the deaths of Sir Hector Macdonald and Adolf Hitler."

Hole describes this theory on pp. 36-37. One version makes the German general Mackensen to be MacDonald in disguise! She suggests that this was because MacDonald received a very low-key funeral, without military honors. Presumably this was because he was a suicide and a probable homosexual, but it led to rumors that he wasn't really dead. - RBW

Hector Protector

DESCRIPTION: "Hector Protector was dressed all in green; Hector Protector was sent to the Queen. The Queen did not like him, No more did the King, So Hector Protector was sent back again."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1844 (Halliwell)

KEYWORDS: clothes royalty travel rejection

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (3 citations):

- Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 207, "Hector Protector" (1 text)
- Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #215, p. 145, "(Hector Protector was dressed all in green)"
- Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel, p. 57, "Hector Protector" (1 text)

NOTES [289 words]: Although this seems to be old, attempts to figure out what it means strike me as largely unsuccessful. The Opies don't even try to offer an explanation. Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel mentions Oliver Cromwell, the Lord Protector 1653-1658, but of course there was no King or Queen at the time, and so he concludes that the Lord Protector must be Richard Duke of York (died 1460), who was Lord Protector in the reign of Henry VI when that king went insane; Richard was hated by Queen Margaret of Anjou, who pulled Henry VI along with her during his more lucid moments, so the description more or less fits -- but it's a long time from the 1450s to the printing of the rhyme by Halliwell.

Katherine Elwes Thomas, who had a more fertile imagination than a whole college full of creative writing students, suggests that the poem refers to Henry VIII's "rough wooing" of Scotland, in which he tried to force the Scots to marry their baby queen Mary to his son Edward VI; her candidate for Hector Protector is Edward Seymour, then Earl of Hertford, later Duke of Somerset. Somerset was Protector after Henry VIII died, but, again, he wasn't a Hector. And he wasn't a Protector when he invaded Scotland. To be sure, neither the Queen Mother of Scotland nor King Henry VIII liked him much after his wooing failed while causing a lot of damage to Scotland, but surely the sense here is that King and Queen are monarchs of the same nation. And while Henry VIII lived three generations after Henry VI (he was in fact the great-grandson of Richard of York), that's still a long time for a rhyme to survive.

There is also the fact that neither Richard of York nor Edward Seymour was named Hector, but maybe the poet was just looking for an easy rhyme. - RBW

Heel and Toe Polka

DESCRIPTION: Descriptions of how to dance the polka and other dances: "First the heel And then the toe And that's the way the polka goes." Or, "Heel and toe, we always go," etc. Similarly, "First the toe and then the heel, That's the way to dance a reel."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (Montgomerie)

KEYWORDS: dancing nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

- Montgomerie/Montgomerie-ScottishNurseryRhymes 110, "(First the heel)" (1 text, with the curious tag line "And we'll meet Johnnie Cope in the morning")
Heelin' Bill

DESCRIPTION: "Contestants galore and fans by the score Set roostin' the gates of Saint Pete...." The various rodeo riders who have died are recalled. Finally we see "amongst them all, on old Fireball. There set ol' Heelin' Bill."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951
KEYWORDS: cowboy death recitation moniker
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1937 - Death of Pete Knight
1950 - Death of "Heelin" Bill Nix
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ohrlin-HellBoundTrain 36, "Heelin' Bill" (1 text)
NOTES [18 words]: The number of famous bronc riders listed in this song probably tells us something about the profession.... - RBW
File: 0hr036

Heenan and Sayers [Laws H20]

DESCRIPTION: Heenan travels from America to fight the British boxers. Sayers draws first blood, but Heenan is ahead after thirty-seven rounds, and the British stop the fight

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1870 (Journal of the Pacific)
KEYWORDS: fight injury
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
April 17, 1860 - Boxing match between John C. Heenan and Tom Sayers Events mentioned in some versions of the song:
c. 1541-1596 - Life of Sir Francis Drake
June 17, 1775 - Battle of Bunker Hill (fought on Breed's Hill, and won by the British, though at heavy cost)
Oct 19, 1781 - Cornwallis surrenders at Yorktown
Sapt 10, 1813 - Perry defeats the British at the Battle of Lake Erie
FOUND IN: US(MA,MW,NE,Ro) Ireland Australia
REFERENCES (17 citations):
Laws H20, "Heenan and Sayers"
Rickaby-BalladsAndSongsOfTheShantyBoy 49, "Heenan and Sayers" (2 texts)
Rickaby/Dykstra/Leary-PineryBoys-SongsSongcatchingInLumberjackEra 49, "Heenan and Sayers" (2 texts)
Dean-FlyingCloud, pp. 24-25, "Heenan and Sayers" (1 text)
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 9, "The British-American Fight" (1 text, 1 tune)
Beck-FolkloreOfMaine, "Heenan and Sayers (The Bold Benicia Boy)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #189, "Johnny Bull" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Finger-FrontierBallads, pp. 48-49, "Heenan and Sayers" (1 text)
O'Connor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, pp. 76-77, "Heenan and Sayers" (1 text)
Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia, pp. 214-215, "Heenan and Sayers" (1 text, 1 tune, "reconstructed" by the collector)
Fahey-Joe-Watson-AustralianTraditionalFolkSinger, [p. 8, page headed "HEEAN AND SAYERS"], "(Heenan and Sayers)" (1 text)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 321, "Heenan and Sayers" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads, pp. 253-255, "Heenan and Sayers" (1 text, tune referenced; OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 26)
Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 205-206, "Uncle Sam and Johnny Bull" (1 text, badly jumbled, 1 tune)
Huntington-FolksongsFromMarthasVineyard, pp. 25-26, "Uncle Sam and Johnny Bull" (1 text, 1 tune, containing the fight but no mention of Heenan or Sayers)
NOTES [764 words]: John C. Heenan (Johnny Morrissey's last opponent) was born in New York but was called "the Benicia Boy" after Benicia, California, where he lived during his late teens. His match with Tom Sayers, which was stopped after more than three dozen rounds (different sources say 37 or 42), is said to have been the last of the (official) bare-knuckle boxing matches.

Tom Sayers was so successful as a boxer that his ability to land a blow had already entered the realm of proverb at the time of the Crimean War.

According to Roger Ellis, Who's Who in Victorian Britain, 1997 (I use the 2001 Stackpole Books edition), p. 207, "TOM SAYERS (1826-1865), prize fighter, was the last famous figure in the old bare-fisted ring; two years after his death the Marquess of Queensberry devised rules which transformed boxing."

Ellis adds that "Sayers, at between 10.2 and 10.12 stone, was a middleweight, and, measuring only 5' 8" , was normally outreached. But he carried much of his weight around his shoulders and neck" and had persistence and was hard to batter. He once fought a bout that lasted 109 rounds!

The weight difference in the Heenan and Sayers fight was substantial; Ellis says Heenan was 6'2" and weighed 14 stone.

If you are wondering about all those historical references which appear to have nothing to do with the Heenan/Sayers fight, they are all appropriate to the Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl text, sung by "Yankee" John Galusha. This text is so distinct from all other "Heenan and Sayers" versions I've seen that I am tempted to list it as its own song. But it does have some common lyrics; it probably doesn't deserve a separate listing.

[Abraham Lincoln Papers] at the Library of Congress American Memory site: "Outside of the politicians there is in this city very little care or talk about party or candidates. Heenan & Sayers eclipsed the Charleston Convention ..." Letter from Orville H. Browning to Abraham Lincoln, June 29, 1860, re prospects in Pennsylvania.

America Singing at the Library of Congress American Memory site does not have this ballad but has eight other distinct ballads about Heenan and Sayers:

- LOCSinging, as201320, "Heenan the Champion of the World," H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878; also sb20189b, "Heenan, Champion of the World"
- LOCSinging, as201310, "Heenan the Champion of the World," H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878; also sb20189a, "Heenan the Champion of the World"
- LOCSinging, as100200, "The American Eagle and British Lion" or "Yankee Heenan and English Sayers," unknown, n.d.
- LOCSinging, sb20171a, "Happy Land of Canaan," H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878; also cw102250, "Happy Land of Canaan"
- LOCSinging, sb20170a, "Happy Land of Canaan," H. De Marsan (New York), 1861-1864; also cw102250, "Happy Land of Canaan"
- LOCSinging, sb10143b, "Great Champion Prize Fight," H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878
- LOCSinging, sb20190b, "Heenan the Pride of America," H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878
- LOCSinging, sb10021a, "Ballad in Answer to Sayers, England's Pride," H. De Marsan (New York), [imprint: 1860] [before the fight]

Bodleian Library site Ballads Catalogue does not have this ballad but has six others about Heenan:

- Bodleian, Firth b.25(587/588)[could not be downloaded], "A New Song on Heenan and King," J.F. Nugent & Co. (Dublin), 1850-1899
Bodleian, Harding B 18(234), "Heenan the Champion of the World" (New York), H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878
Bodleian, Harding B 18(235), "Heenan the Pride of America," H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878 attributed to A. Scott
Bodleian, Firth c.19(19), "The English Prize-Fighter and the American Champion," J.F. Nugent & Co. (Dublin), 1850-1899 about the fight with Sayers
Bodleian, Harding B 26(247), "Heenan's Arrival in England," unknown, n.d. before the fight with Jem Mace
Broadsides LOCSinging as201320 and Bodleian Harding B 18(234) are duplicates, [as are] broadsides LOCSinging sb20190b and Bodleian Harding B 18(235). - BS
Last updated in version 5.2
File: LH20

Heifer, The
DESCRIPTION: The heifer, a fabulous creature "with horns upon her heels," does incredible damage till the owner determines to sell her. She begs that she not be killed; she is the spirit of Lord Leitrim. The company determines to blow up the heifer
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: animal Devil commerce humorous
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H675, pp. 24-25, "The Heifer" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13347
NOTES [16 words]: I'm sure this is political in some sense or other, but I can't tell the nature of the beast. - RBW
File: HHH675

Heigh Me Know
DESCRIPTION: Chorus: Heigh me know, bombye [overseer?] me takey. Jenny goes to the market to buy the singer "varrow prantin" [?]. The neighbors know Jenny's been "a bad gal"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1833 (_Service Afloat_ quoted by Abrahams)
KEYWORDS: accusation sea work slavery shanty
FOUND IN: West Indies (Virgin Islands)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Abrahams-DeepTheWaterShallowTheShore, p. 11, "Heigh Me Know" (1 fragment)
File: WIS011f

Heights of Alma (I), The [Laws J10]
DESCRIPTION: The British and French land outside Alma. They attack and rout the Russians (most versions give the primary credit to the British, and especially the Scots), forcing them back to Sevastopol. Both sides suffer heavy casualties AUTHOR: James Maxwell?
EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Ford); c.1854 (broadside, NLScotland RB.m.143(159))
KEYWORDS: war battle patriotic
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sept 14, 1854 - Anglo-French landing near the mouth of the Alma
Sept 20, 1854 - Battle of Alma. The allies win an expensive victory over the Russians
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland) US(MW) Canada(Mar,Newf,Ont) Ireland
REFERENCES (14 citations):
Laws J10, "The Heights of Alma"
Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 249-251, "The Heights of Alma" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greig/Duncan1 158, "The Battle of Alma" (1 fragment)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H123, p. 90, "The Heights of Alma"
(1 text with variants, 1 tune)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 90, "The Heights at Alma" (1 text, 1 tune)
Peacock, pp. 1000-1001, "The Heights of Alma" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 67, "Battle of Alma" (1 text, 1 tune)
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 55, "The Battle of Alma" (1 text, 1 tune)
Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 74, "The Heights of Alma" (1 text)
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 73, "The Heights of Alma" (1 text, 1 tune)
Dean-FlyingCloud, pp. 40-41, "The Heights of Alma" (1 text)
Dallas-TheCruelWars-100SoldiersSongs, pp. 214-215, "The Heights of Alma" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 394, HGHTALMA*
Roud #830
RECORDINGS:
O. J. Abbott, "The Heights of Alma" (on Abbott1)
Cyril O’Brien, "The Heights of Alma" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Johnson Ballads 2336, "The Battle of Alma" ("You loyal Britons pray draw near"), unknown, n.d.; also Harding B 26(41)[faded to almost total illegibility], Firth c.14(47)[faded to almost total illegibility], "The Battle of Alma"; Harding B 19(88), 2806 b.9(245), "Bloody Alma"
Murray, Mu23-y1:116, "The Battle of Alma," James Lindsay (Glasgow), 19C
NLScotland, RB.m.143(159), "The Battle of Alma," unknown, c.1854
CROSS-REFERENCES:
| cf. "The Victory Won at Richmond" (meter, lyrics) |
| cf. "The Waggoner" (meter, lyrics) |
| cf. "The Kilties in the Crimea" (subject) |
| cf. "Grand Conversation on Sebastopol Arose (I)" (subject: British boasting about the Crimea) |
| cf. "Grand Conversation on Sebastopol Arose (II)" (subject: Battle of Alma) |
| cf. "Here's to the Army and Navy" (subject) |
| cf. "The Battle of Alma" (subject) |
NOTES [2876 words]: Bodleian Library site Ballads Catalogue has other broadsides about the battle:
Bodleian, 2806 c.14(62), "We'll Hae Nane but Hielan' Bonnets Here!" ("Alma field of heroes, hail"!), unknown, n.d.
Bodleian, Harding B 26(43), "Battle of Alma" ("Oh boys have you heard of the battle, the allies have gained on the shore"), J. Harkness (Preston), 1840-1866; Harding B 12(246), "Battle of Alma" Bodleian, Harding B 26(42), "The Battle of Alma" ("Come all you true-bred Irishmen, and listen unto me"), unknown, n.d.
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi: ":[This version] differs in words and tune from any published version we have seen. It may possibly have been altered by Jared MacLean [the singer] himself."
This version does share two verses with Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 74; lacking Mackenzie’s chorus it still has the same pattern and seems close enough to me for this to be considered Laws J10.
Greig/Duncan1 has the one verse augmented by "Hey, Menschikoff, are ye waukin' yet?
Sebastopol bells, are ye ringing yet? Gin ye were waukin, I wad wait, An' meet ye on the banks o'
Alma' and sung to the tune of "Johnny Cope." - BS
The Crimean War probably doesn't set a record for strange beginnings (there was, after all, the War of Jenkins's Ear), but it came close: It started with a conflict over who had keys to which rooms in churches in the Holy Land (Binkley, pp. 168-171). But this involved politics in the Ottoman and Russian Empires plus the various Catholic states, and that meant Napoleon III was involved, and the British were trying to reform the Ottoman Empire, and mash it all up, and you ended up with a war.
A singularly inefficient war. The Russians were fighting the Turks by 1853. Britain and France allied with the Turks in March 1854, and sent off their armies to the east. "An Anglo-French expeditionary force appeared at Varna in June to drive out the Russians, but the Russians had already gone.
Without even seeing the enemy the expeditionary force lost a fourth of its numbers through sickness" (Binkley, p. 174).
Finally, in the fall of 1854, the allies managed to locate some real live Russians in the Crimea, and set out to attack them. The English commander was Lord Raglan, who had fought against Napoleon forty years earlier (and had lost an arm; see Woodham-Smith, p. 131), but he was now 65 years old and perhaps lacking in initiative (Woodham-Smith, p. 156).

According to Hibbert, p. 2, he was so like the Duke of Wellington that they were sometimes thought to be father and son (they differed by about twenty years in age). After brief service as a very junior officer, Lord Fitzroy Somerset, as he was then known, joined Wellington's staff, and served on it for some forty years, until Wellington died. His life was amazingly limited. Hibbert, pp. 4-5, reports these traits: "His private life... was happy and successful, He was devoted to his wife and to his four young children. He was not rich, but had enough to spend between three and four thousand a year... He loved hunting and shooting and good food and the company of good-looking women and the pleasures of society. And like so many members of that society he cared little for the changing world outside it. Science and mechanics, which were beginning already to change the whole life of Europe [and the weapons their armies used, and hence military tactics] meant nothing to him. Nor did painting, nor music; nor did books. In fact in the great mass of his private correspondence only once does he mention having read one.... Even politics interested him only when they impinged upon the Army. In the six years that he sat as a High Tory Member for Truro he never once spoke in the House. He nonetheless was made the first Lord Raglan in 1852 (Hibbert, p. 6).

The British didn't really have much choice about picking such inferior commander; all their officers were either ancient or inexperienced or both -- or had earned their experience in India, which made them socially inferior; see Farwell, p. 69. Plus the British still followed the rule of commission by purchase (Hibbert, p. 8), which was to foist upon them such fools as Lord Lucan and Lord Cardigan of Light Brigade infamy; purchasing of commissions was not eliminated until 1871 (Chandler/Beckett, p. 188). This lack of competent officers was to cost them dearly in the course of the war. Hibbert, p. 16, says that four officers were considered for command of the expeditionary force -- and that only Raglan was under seventy. Compared to the alternatives, he may actually have been a good choice.

Give Raglan this much credit, at least: It was he who pushed the British army to adopt rifle muskets rather than smoothbores (Hibbert, pp. 18-19). These would utterly change the nature of war, and Raglan probably didn't understand them -- but they were a big advantage to the side that had them, since they had a much greater range than smoothbores, and they could actually hit a target. To add to Raglan's age and conservatism, and the general incompetence of the British staff system, was the fact that Raglan was sick. Heat and dysentery affected him no less than his men (Hibbert, p. 21) -- and he was older and permanently crippled.

At the beginning of the war, Raglan's failings didn't matter. His stubbornness was important to getting the British and French to actually take action (Hibbert, p. 21), which had the secondary benefit of getting them out of the disease pits of their first landing place near Varna (Hibbert, pp. 29-31). Sadly, that didn't really get the armies to do anything useful; British forces had not coordinated their plans with that of the French under Saint Arnaud. (Liaison between the two forces was terrible -- indeed, even within the armies, commanders were hardly willing to work together. Part of it was political, but most of it was sheer personal jealousy.) This was one of the reasons it took so many months to get the forces actually on their way to the Crimea. To add to the absurdity of it all, the time spent in Bulgaria was completely wasted; no one used the time to gather useful intelligence. The Allies would be going into the Crimea blind (Hibbert, p. 33).

No one had even managed to gather decent information on a landing site; in the end, Raglan and his staff cruised the shoreline north of Sebastopol and simply picked a likely-looking spot (Hibbert, pp. 37-38).

Even the landing was a botch, despite being unopposed; although a buoy had been set out to delimit the British and French landing areas, the buoy somehow moved in the night before the landing, so the French had the entire beach and the British had to take their landing craft and hunt for a new spot to go ashore (Hibbert, p. 40). The landing took place September 14, 1854. By the time the rains began that afternoon, men were already collapsing -- some of them dying -- on the beach due to the stress of trying to travel while sick (Hibbert, p. 41).

When the song says the British troops spent the first night on the "cold, cold ground," it is no less than the truth; their tents had been sent back aboard ship after the landing (Hibbert, p. 42, attributes this to the impossibility of the weary troops to carry them, though I wouldn't be surprised if the staff botched things up again).

The British were so disorganized that it took them four days to get moving; the French had been ready two days earlier. Even after all that waiting, most men were not supplied with water for their canteens -- worsening their problems with the day's heat (Hibbert, p. 45). They also did not have time to cook their rations.

After a cavalry mix-up, the Russians settled in to their position of "enormous strength" on the Alma River. "...the Russians withdrew from the ridges of Bulganak, and the British army came up on them to advance to bivouac for the night in order of battle. When darkness came the men, most of them too exhausted even to eat, fell to the ground, permitted at last to sleep... Beyond the river, on steep ridges with rise to a formidable height, an untouched Russian army lay encamped" (Hibbert, p. 51). The troops would also have to cross the Alma, but at this time of the year, the water was low and it was a relatively minor obstacle; there were many fords (Hibbert, p. 54).

It is estimated that the 38,000 Russians faced 65,000 Allies (30,000 French, 26,000 British, and 9,000 Turks fought at the Alma, although both sides were starting to suffer severely from disease, and the European allies didn't let the Turks do much). The allies also had an advantage in armaments: The British forces, as noted, had rifle muskets, while almost all of the Russians still had the old smoothbore muskets, which couldn't hit anything beyond a few dozen yards (Wawro, p. 10).

The battle of Alma took place on September 20, 1854. The Russians occupied a position they thought impregnable, but they left parts of it essentially unoccupied (Woodham-Smith, pp. 180-182; Hibbert, p. 54). The allies marched south toward them; with the French on the right (east), with the sea guarding their flank; the British were on the left, with their left flank in the air (not that the Russians were going to leave their strong position to attack it).

According to Hibbert, pp. 56-57, the French commander St. Arnaud, apparently proposed that the French attack on the seaward side while the British tried to outflank the Russians on the landward side. Lord Raglan did not bother arguing with the sick man, but he didn't exactly do as planned, either.

By good luck rather than coordination, the French and British managed a sort of an attack en echelon (Hibbert, pp. 58-59, blames it on the nearsightedness of a British division commander, who couldn't see what he was doing and drifted off-line). The Russians could have made the British pay by attacking their flank -- but they made no move. Instead, the British advance -- though it stalled for some time, forcing the soldiers to face artillery fire they could not answer (Hibbert, p. 61) -- progressively involved the Russian forces and at last brought extra force into play on the Russian flank, causing it to break. (I'm vastly oversimplifying here, but the see-saw battle that actually happened really requires a map to explain.) Raglan's oblique movement had cost heavy casualties, but had -- potentially -- won the war. (Only to have the victory dissolve in more failure of coordination.)

Casualties figures at Alma are uncertain, particularly since many men were dying of cholera all the while. Initial reports had 1755 Russians killed, 362 British, and 60 French (!). Of these, only the Russian figure is possible. Warner, p. 33, gives figures of 6000 Russians, 2000 British, and French negligible -- though he also quotes a contemporary officer's letter claiming 2000 British and 5000 French casualties (Warner, p. 39), while on p. 40 he lists 342 British soldiers killed while noting that conditions for the injured were so bad that most of them would die and on p. 44 quotes a contemporary as saying there were 1400 French losses including those from disease.

After this much time, no reliable figures will ever be known, but it is a reasonable guess that at least 5000 men died. In any case, battle casualties in the Crimea were a joke; men were dying of disease so fast that many formations just melted away. Disease casualties far outnumbered those caused by fighting.

The song is generally fairly accurate about details: There was a downpour on the night after the landing, the British troops were without tents (the French were better off), meaning that the men did sleep on the ground. They were hardly better off on the day before Alma: The day the men marched to the Alma was indeed very hot and dry (Woodham-Smith, p. 170). The dry ground above the Alma River was indeed very high and a potentially strong defensive position (I seem to recall reading that at some points it rose 300 feet above the river) -- though it was not fully fortified (Warner, p. 29). The song is wrong about one thing: the landing took place on September 14, not September 18 as found in several versions (the confusion probably came about because, while the army landed starting September 14, it just sat there for four days. The advance toward the Alma began September 18; Hibbert, pp. 44-45).

The comment, "Scottish lads in kilts and hose Were not the last, you may suppose" is nothing less than the truth; according to Palmer, p. 101, "To the Russians, Sir Colin Campbell's kilted Black Watch and Cameron Highlanders seemed an irresistible force, 'the savages without trousers,' as the mortally wounded General Karganov alluded to them with grudging admiration." According to Woodham-Smith, pp. 187-188, it was the Highlanders who won the battle, taking the redoubt that anchored the Russian line despite extremely heavy fire. It was the second time the British had taken the position (the Russians had weakened it by pulling out its artillery, according to Hibbert, p. 70; they had a very strong tradition of not allowing guns to fall into enemy hands), but they had been driven out the first time (due in part to mistaken orders and the almost-standard confusion of battle; Hibbert, p. 72). The Highlanders took it and held it.

The song also says "The shot it flew like wind and rain When we the battery strove to gain." Again, this may be based on an eyewitness report; while crossing the river, a sergeant said many men were "shot down with grape and cannister -- which came amongst us like hail -- while attempting to cross [the Alma]" (Hibbert, p. 66).

Versions of this song give chief credit to different regiments for the victory at Alma; Ford's and Henry's texts mentions the "Thirty-third and the Fusiliers," but chief credit is probably due (as even the Ford and Henry texts imply) to Sir Colin Campbell's Highland Brigade: 42nd Highlanders (Black Watch), 78th Highlanders (Seaforth, though this regiment was not given honours for Alma) and 93rd Highlanders (Sutherland).

The additional stanzas in some of the Sam Henry variants mention "Prince Metchnikoff"; this is General Prince Alexander Sergeievich Menshikov/Menschikov/Menschikoff (1789-1869; the variant spellings of course arise because his name is written in the Cyrillic alphabet, but no source I've checked spells it the way Henry does). He was commander of Russian forces in the Crimea until his recall for reasons of health during the Sebastopol siege. Menshikov proved an utter disaster to the Russians (Warner, p. 42, says that "Raglan was inept, Menshikov was more so"); before the war, he had been sent to the Turks as an ambassador. His orders gave him little leeway to avoid war, but he did nothing to use what leeway he had.

The Henry text says that Menshikov left his coach at Alma. This is not true, but there was a Russian review before the battle, and many fine gentlemen and ladies turned out. Many of them fled, leaving coaches and picnic baskets behind.

Jacques Letoy de Saint Arnaud (1796-1854), who helped put Napoleon III on the French throne and was rewarded with a marshal's baton, was the overall commander of Allied forces in the battle, but this wasn't much to his credit; Raglan's movement, which was expensive but which won the battle, was against his orders.

Saint Arnaud did not die in combat at Alma, as the Henry text implies; instead, he was sick (one source suggests heart disease and cholera, another stomach cancer) at the time of the engagement, and died nine days later.

His timing was abominable. Had the allies moved straight on Sebastopol after winning at Alma, they might have taken it by siege -- but Saint Arnaud and others delayed things (Woodham-Smith, p. 191), and then wasn't around to straighten things out; the invaders instead tried a flank march around an army that was too disorganized even to have a flank at this time (Woodham-Smith, p. 192). The delay would cause great misery, at Balaclava, Inkerman, Sebastopol, and all the lands around, where men died of cholera, bad food, and all the other ills that plagued the ill-supplied Crimean armies.

Sam Henry twice credits this song to James Maxwell (fl. 1870), a schoolteacher from near Dungiven, to whom he credits several other songs. I'm not particularly confident of this; the other two Maxwell songs ("Adieu to the Banks of the Roe" and "Dungiven Priory Church") are poor pieces, different in style and quality, with no such historical allusions. I suppose Maxwell could have been a One Hit Wonder, but I'd like better proof of authorship.

Whoever the author was, he appears to have had access to Raglan's remarks on the battle; Raglan spoke of "the hill opposite, over which the Russians fled, quite thick with dead and wounded... the work of the Highland Brigade."

For further information about the Crimean War and the Sebastopol campaign, see "The Famous Light Brigade."

We might also note that "Alma" gives strong evidence of being molded on some earlier piece, though I haven't managed to locate such an exemplar. Neither does Laws mention such a piece. But the fact that the Alma form was used for "The Victory Won at Richmond" (1860s) and "The Waggoner" (internally dated to some time prior to 1840) clearly implies the existence of a "proto-Alma" ballad. - RBW

Bibliography

- Binkley: Robert G. Binkley, Realism and Nationalism 1852-1871 (Harper, 1935; I used the 1963 reissue)
- Farwell: Byron Farwell, Queen Victoria's Little Wars (1972; I used the 1985 Norton edition)
- Hibbert: Christopher Hibbert, The Destruction of Lord Raglan, (1961; I used the 199
Heir of Linne (I), The [Child 267]

DESCRIPTION: The Heir wastes his money in gambling and wild living, (sells his lands,) and falls into poverty. He remembers a (letter/key) to be used only when he is in need. It tells him where to find a treasure; the Heir is once again rich -- and now wiser

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1750 (Percy Folio)

LONG DESCRIPTION: "The Lord of Linn wastes his substance in riotous living. John of the Scales persuades him to sell his estate. He wastes the purchase money too, and is soon in great distress. He goes to Edinburgh and begs, and is abused. Bethinks him of a bill his father had left him, only to be looked at in dire necessity. Looks at it now, and is informed of a fresh store of money. Fills his wallet from it. Goes to John of the Scales' house, is rudely treated by John's wife, but spoken for by one of the guests. John mockingly offers to resell the estate for 20 shillings less than he gave for it. The heir takes him at his word, and pays down the money. John's wife is much crestfallen. The kind guest is rewarded. The heir vows to be more careful."

KEYWORDS: money gambling drink poverty begging

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (17 citations):
- Child 267, "The Heir of Linne" (3 texts)
- Bronson 267, "The Heir of Linne" (4 versions)
- Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 267, "The Heir of Linne" (2 versions: #1, #3)
- Hales/Furnival-BishopPercysFolioManuscript, volume I, pp. 174-179, "The Heir of Lin" (1 text)
- Percy/Wheatley-ReliquesOfAncientEnglishPoetry II, pp. 147-150, "The Heir of Linne" (1 text)
- Ritson-AncientSongsBalladsFromHenrySecondToTheRevolution, pp. 217-225, "The Heir of Linne" (1 text)
- Chambers-ScottishBallads, pp. 275-284, "The Heir of Linne" (1 text)
- Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #72, p. 1, "The Heir o' Linne" (1 text)
- Greig/Duncan2 273, "The Heir o' Linne" (3 texts, 2 tunes) {A=Bronson's #2, B=#3}
- Dixon-ScottishTraditionalVersionsOfAncientBallads IV, pp. 30-36, "The Heir of Linne" (1 text)
- Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 637-641, "The Heir of Linne" (1 text)
- Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads, p. 81, "The Heir of Linne" (1 text fragment)
- Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 80, "The Heir of Linne" (1 text)

NOTE: Katherine Briggs quotes a summary of the ballad as follows: "The Lord of Linn wastes... He goes to Edinburgh... He goes to John of the Scales' house... The kind guest is rewarded. The heir vows to be more careful."
Still, Bronson links the tune loosely with "The Boom o' Cowdenknowes" -- which would make sense if someone were translating a text and fitting it to a British tune. - RBW

Hales and Furnivall is the source for Percy/Wheatley-ReliquesOfAncientEnglishPoetry and Child 267B. It is included here because it is referenced in the notes to Percy's ballad, "The Heir of Linne (II)." The Long Description is a quote of Percy's marginal notes to the Hales and Furnivall text, included here to provide a base, from Percy's point of view, to his new song. - BS

(As Hales and Furnivall commented tartly, volume I, p. 174, Percy "polished [his text] till he could see his own face in it." - RBW

_Last updated in version 5.3_

File: C267

Heir of Linne (II), The

DESCRIPTION: The heir's father has his drinking son make a deathbed promise that involves a trick: when the son has lost everything and is desperate enough to commit suicide, it will provide him the means to win back his land and convince him to stay sober.

AUTHOR: Thomas Percy

EARLIEST DATE: 1765 (Percy)

LONG DESCRIPTION: The Lord of Linn wastes his substance in riotous living. His father realizes he cannot stop his son's drinking. He builds a cottage, has his son promise not to sell it, and to go there when at the end of his rope. John of the Scales persuades the heir to sell his estate. He wastes the purchase money too, and is soon in great distress. In desperation he goes to the cottage. He finds a gibbet and rope and hangs himself. The gibbet and ceiling collapse and he is surrounded by falling gold. Having returned as from the brink of death, the heir swears never to drink again, and sets out with his newfound gold to regain his land. He goes to John of the Scales' house, is told to leave by John's wife, but is spoken for by one of the guests. John mockingly offers to resell the estate for 100 marks less than he gave for it, which John is sure cannot be paid. The heir takes him at his word, and pays down the money. When the price is paid the ex-holder complies unhappily. John's wife is much crestfallen. The kind guest is rewarded. The heir vows to be more careful.

KEYWORDS: money gambling drink poverty bargaining promise trick death suicide gold father derivative

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Percy/Wheatley-ReliquesOfAncientEnglishPoetry II, pp. 138-147, "The Heir of Linne" (1 text)
Davis-TraditionalBalladsOfVirginia 41, "The Heir of Linne" (1 text)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads, pp. 81-84, "The Heir of Linne" (1 text)

ADDITIONAL: Francis James Child, English and Scottish Ballads (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1860 ("Digitized by Google"), Vol. VIII, pp. 60-70, "The Heir of Linne" ("Lithe and listen, gentlemen, To sing a sing I will beginne") (1 text)
Roud #111
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Heir of Linne (I)" [Child 267] (source)
cf. "The Drunkard's Legacy" (source)

NOTES [1445 words]: With the exception of Davis [all] the texts cited are Percy's. Here's what Child had to say of Percy's rewritten Heir of Linne, "the heavily-expanded version printed in the Reliques": "Percy... revised and completed [Child 267]A 'by the insertion of supplemental stanzas,' 'suggested by a modern ballad on a similar subject.' In fact, Percy made a new ballad, and a very good one, which, since his day, has passed for 'The Heir of Linne.''' [vol. V, p. 12]. [Hales and Furnivall, in their text of the Percy folio, commented that Percy had "polished [the original text] until he could see his own face in it." - RBW]

Child had included the text of Percy's "new ballad" in Francis James Child, English and Scottish Ballads (Boston: Little, Brown and Company, 1860 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol. VIII, pp. 60-70, "The Heir of Linne"; he also printed there the text later included as Child 267B. The point is not whether or not Percy's creation is "a very good one" -- as Child wrote in 1860 -- but that he did not include it as a Child 267 text in 1894, although he did include one of Percy's sources as Child 267A. (For an unfavorable review of Percy's version see John W. Hales and Frederick J. Furnivall, Bishop Percy's Folio Manuscript (London: N Trubner & Co, 1867 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol. I, p. 174).

Davis: "The Virginia text evidently belongs to the version published by Percy.... This version is practically Child A [quoting Percy] 'revised and completed by the insertion of supplemental stanzas suggested by a modern ballad on a similar subject.' Except for the introduction of the lonesome lodge, the rope, and the hundred marks instead of twenty pounds, the Virginia text might pass as a much compressed variant of Child A. "Coffin repeats Davis's summary: '[The Virginia text] is close to Child A, though much compressed and corrupted by some of the additions made by Percy and taken by him from The Drunkard's Legacy....' [Tristram P Coffin, The British Traditional Ballad in North America (Philadelphia, The American Folklore Society, 1950), p. 142].

I think Davis and Coffin understate the degree to which the Virginia text relies on Percy and is independent of Child 267A [that is, Hales and Furnivall]. Davis has no line that is not from Percy, though sometimes modernized. Many of those lines repeated from Percy are not in Child A at all. The following table maps lines shared and not shared among Hales and Furnival, Percy and Davis. Where the corresponding lines are similar but "polished" by Percy, to use Hales Nad Furnival's disparaging term, the Percy line is marked with a percent sign %. Exclamation point marks line sets with sequence changes made by Percy.

"H&F" is from Hales and Furnival (the original for Child 267A), "Percy" is from Percy/Wheatley-ReliquesOfAncientEnglishPoetry (Percy's recomposition of his Hales and Furnivall text), and "Davis" is the version collected in Virginia. Be careful -- if you are checking line numbers for yourself -- to use those sources.

<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>H&amp;F</th>
<th>Percy</th>
<th>Davis</th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>110.01-010</td>
<td>11.001-10%</td>
<td>11.01-004</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.011-012</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.013-016</td>
<td>11.025-028%</td>
<td>11.01-04</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11 017-018</td>
<td>11.029-030%</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.019-020</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.021-024</td>
<td>11.037-040%</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.025-028</td>
<td>%</td>
<td>11.01-04</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.029-030</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.031-032</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.033-034</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.035-036</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.037-040</td>
<td>%</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.041-048</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.049-052</td>
<td>Davis 11.05-08</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.053-060</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.061-068</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.069-076</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.077-079</td>
<td>Davis 11.09-11</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11 054-055</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.080-080</td>
<td>Davis 11.12-12</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.081-088</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.089-092</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.093-096</td>
<td>Davis 11.13-16</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.097-128</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.129-134</td>
<td>Davis 11.17-18</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.135-138</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.139-139</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.140-140</td>
<td>Davis 11.24-24</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.141-146</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.147-152</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.152-152</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.153-154</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.155-158%</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.159-160</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.161-168</td>
<td></td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.169-171</td>
<td>Davis 11.25-27</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.172,174!</td>
<td>Davis 11.28,30!</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.173-176!</td>
<td>Davis 11.29-32!</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.177-184</td>
<td>Davis 11.33-40</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.185-186</td>
<td>Davis 11.41-42</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.187-190</td>
<td>Davis 11.43-46</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>11.191-192</td>
<td>Davis 11.47-48</td>
<td></td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>
Where Percy "polished" a Child 267A line, it is without exception, polished the same way in Davis. For example:

H&F ll.013-016
sayes, "how dost thou, Lord of Linne, doest either want gold or fee?
wilt thou not sell thy lands soe brode to such a good fellow as me?"
Percy ll.025-026
Sayes, Welcome, welcome, lord of Linne
Let nought disturb thy merry cheere;
Iff thou wilt sell thy landes soe broad,
Good store of gold Ile give thee heere.
Davis ll.01-04
"Welcome, welcome, Lord of Linne,
Let naught disturb your merry cheer;
If you will sell your lands so broad,
Good store of gold I'll give thee here."

Finally, where the lines in Percy are in a different sequence than in Child 267A, Davis follows Percy.

H&F ll.90-95
then be-spake a good fellowe
which sate by Iohn o the Scales his knee,
Said, "have thou here, thou heire of linne,
40 pence I will lend thee, -- some time a good fellow thou hast beene, --
& other 40 if neede bee."
Percy ll.169-176
Then bespake a good fellowe,
Which sat at John o' the Scales his bord;
Sayd, Turn againe, thou heire of Linne;
Some time thou wast a well good lord:
Some time a good fellow thou hast been,
And sparedst not thy gold and fee;
Therfore Ile lend thee forty pence,
And other forty if need be.
Davis ll.25-32
Thus bespake a good fellow,
Which sat at John o' Scales his board,
Said, "Turn againe, thou heir of Linne,
Some time thou was a real good lord.
"Some time a good fellow thou hast been
And spared not your gold and fee;
There for I'll lend thee forty pence,
Another forty if need be.
There remains the question of the influence of "The Drunkard's Legacy" on Percy's text. We have Dixon's text "taken from an old chap-book, without date or printer's name," and Child's slightly different text "from a Broadside among Percy's Papers." In any case, there is no copy in Hales and Furnivall. Judging by Percy's text and "The Drunkard's Legacy," it seems more likely that Percy was remembering the plot of "The Drunkard's Legacy" rather than looking at that text. Not all "The Drunkard's Legacy" 184 lines -- whether using Child's text or Dixon's -- affected Percy's song of 216 lines.

Dixon ll.001-012
Dixon ll.013-056
Dixon ll.057-080
Percy ll.013-052
father realizes he cannot stop his son's drinking. He builds a cottage, has his son promise not to sell it, and to go there when at the end of his rope. Father dies.
Dixon ll.057-080
Percy ll.081-088
son finds a gibbet and rope and hangs himself; the gibbet and celling collapse and he is surrounded by falling gold
Dixon ll.113-124
Percy ll.135-146
son swears never to drink again and sets out with his newfound gold to regain his land
Dixon ll.125-128
Percy ll.161-168
he visits the current holder of his land and is told to go away
Dixon ll.129-152
Percy ll.185-198
tricks the current holder of his land to return it at a bargain price, which the holder is sure cannot be paid
Dixon ll.153-164
Percy ll.195-198
when the price is paid the ex-holder complies unhappily
Dixon ll.165-184
With all this overlap in plot it is surprising to me that only one line comes close to being shared:
Dixon l.100: Did place the rope about his neck
Percy l.121: Then round his necke the cord he drewe

The longdescription gives an idea of how much each source contributed to the final text. It combines the longdescription from "The Heir of Linne" [Child 267] - which was made up of Percy's marginal notes to his copy of Child 267A - and the parts of the plot contributed by "The Drunkard's Legacy," as noted above. - BS

Last updated in version 5.3
File: C267Perc

Helen and Edwin

DESCRIPTION: Helen is jilted by Edwin for a richer girl. Helen dies of a broken heart after asking that her corpse be brought to the wedding. At the wedding Edwin dies of shame. Warning to young men: "remember Edwin's awsum fate An' fear tae meet him there"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1828 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2)

KEYWORDS: grief love wedding infidelity burial corpse death money warning

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Bord))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 126, "Helen an' Edwin" (1 text)
Roud #15102

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Babes of the Wood" (tune, per Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2)
cf. "Sarah Scott" (theme: girl, jilted by lover for money, dies of a broken heart)
cf. "The Deluded Lover" (theme: girl is jilted by lover for money)
cf. "Fair Annie" [Child 62] (theme: girl is jilted by lover for money)
cf. "Lord Thomas and Fair Annet" [Child 73] (theme: girl is jilted by lover for money)
cf. "The Butcher Boy" [Laws P24] (theme: girl is jilted by lover for money)
cf. "Love Has Brought Me to Despair" [Laws P25] (theme: girl is jilted by lover for money)
cf. "I Know My Love" (theme: girl is jilted by lover for money)
cf. "Tavern in the Town" (theme: girl is jilted by lover for money)
cf. "You Girls of Equal Station" (theme: girl is jilted by lover for money)

File: LyCr2126

Helen of Kirconnell

DESCRIPTION: The singer laments, "I wish I were where Helen lies." The two had been together when Helen was shot and died. The singer pursues and kills her slayer, then promises to be true forever. The rest of the song is a wish to join his love in death

AUTHOR: (published by Robert Burns)
Earliest Date: 1797 (Scots Musical Museum_ #155); seemingly also in Herd
Keywords: courting love death revenge
Found in:
References (10 citations):
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 227, "Helen of Kirkconnell" (1 text)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 152, "Helen of Kirconnell" (1 text)
HarvardClassics-EnglishPoetryChaucerToGray, pp. 324-325, "Helen of Kirconnell" (1 text)
Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex, ZN1856, "My sweetest sweet and fairest fair"
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #589, p. 39, "Fair Helen" (1 reference)
DT, HELNLIES

Additional: James Johnson, Editor, _The Scots Musical Museum_ [1853 edition], volume II, #155, p. 163, "Where Helen Lies" (1 text, 1 tune)
The Illustrated Book of Scottish Songs from the Sixteenth to the Nineteenth Century, (London, 1854 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 159-160, "Helen of Kirkconnell"
William & Susan Platt, _Folktales of the Scottish Border_, published 1919 as _Stories of the Scottish Border_, republished by Senate Press, 1999, pp. 96-98, "Fair Helen of Kirconnell" (1 text)
Walter de la Mare, _Come Hither_, revised edition, 1928; #424, "Helen of Kirconnell" (1 text)
ST OBB152 (Full)
Roud #8191

Cross-References:
cf. "Alas And Did My Savior Bleed" (tune)

Alternate Titles:
I Wish I Were Where Ellen Lies

Notes [38 words]: Under the title "Fair Helen," this is one of the handful of traditional songs in Palgrave's Golden Treasury (item CXXXV). This song, or the folktale that underlies it, is said to have inspired Wordsworth's "Ellen Irvin." - RBW

Last updated in version 4.1
File: OBB152

Heligoland

Description: "We'll all go up to Heligoland, To get the Kaiser's goat. In our little pogie boat, Up Kiel canal we'll float. And when we meet the German fleet, We'll make them understand, That we'll knock the Hell-igo Out of Helligo, into Heligoland."

Author: unknown
Earliest Date: 1929 (Niles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe)
Keywords: sailor ship war navy
Found in:
References (1 citation):
Niles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe, pp. 31-32, "Heligoland" (1 short text, tune referenced)
Roud #27870

Cross-References:
cf. "The Son of a Gambolier" (tune & meter) and references there

Notes [88 words]: Heligoland island was a major German naval base in World War I, and the Kiel Canal cut across the Jutland/Denmark Peninsula, allowing German naval vessels to cross from east to west without facing attack from the British naval forces in the North Sea. Thus to attack Heligoland and the Kiel Canal was to raid right into the heart of German power. The area was heavily mined, hence the need for the "pogie boats" as minesweepers. But it never happened; the British navy was never strong enough to sail that close to Germany. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: NJM030

Hell and Heaven (I've Been Buked and I've Been Scorned)

Description: "I been 'buked and I been scorned, Childrens... I been talked 'bout sure as you're born." The singer tells how to drive Satan away with the gospel, how he will ride to heaven with Jesus, and declares that he will enjoy himself there

Author: unknown
Hell Broke Loose in Georgia

DESCRIPTION: "Ain't no hell in Georgie (x4)." "Little Indian goes Georgie (x4)." "Ride old buck to water (x4)"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1962 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)

KEYWORDS: travel nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 775, "Hell Broke Losse in Georgia" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Roud #13955

RECORDINGS:
Fiddlin' John Carson, "Hell Broke Loose in Georgia" (Okeh 45018)

File: BrS5775

Hell in Texas

DESCRIPTION: The Devil, bored with Hell, decides it's time to expand the franchise. The sandiest place available is Texas; the Devil acquires a lease from God after negotiating the water rights. The Devil adds tarantulas, cacti, etc. and opens for business

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1910

KEYWORDS: Devil humorous Hell

FOUND IN: US(So,SW)

REFERENCES (9 citations):
Randolph 196, "Hell and Texas" (1 text, 1 tune)
High, pp. 41-42, "Hell & Texas Song" (1 text)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 397-399, "Hell in Texas" (1 text, 1 tune)
Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys, pp. 77-79, "Hell in Texas" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 27, "Hell in Texas" (3 texts -- one each for Texas, Arizona (this one properly filing with "Arizona") and Alaska, 1 tune)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 523-524, "Hell in Texas" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 681-683, "Alaska, or Hell of the Yukon" (1 text, the Fife's Alaska version)
DT, HELLTEXS*

Roud #5104

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Arizona" (theme)

NOTES [64 words]: This song and "Arizona" clearly are related; one probably suggested and influenced the other. But there is no way to clearly demonstrate which came earlier, so I list them separately.

Thorp says he found five versions of this, with at least three different authors listed. Clearly there was a lot of rewriting along the way, He thinks the original was "The Birth of New Mexico." - RBW
Hell-Bound Train, The

DESCRIPTION: The drunk passes out and dreams of the hell-bound train. The Devil is the engineer. When he announces that Hell is the next stop, the riders beg for mercy; the Devil replies with a list of tortures they face. The drunkard awakens and reforms

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1910 (Railroad Men's Magazine, according to Cohen)

KEYWORDS: train Devil Hell drink

FOUND IN: US(MW,So) Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (14 citations):
Cohen-LongSteelRail, pp. 638-644, "The Hell-Bound Train" (1 text plus extensive excerpts and portion of "Ride on the Black Valley Railroad" and a broadside print of "Railroad to Hell"; 1 tune)
Randolph 599, "The Hell-Bound Train" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 210, "The Hell-Bound Train" (1 text, 1 tune, the latter allegedly by Lomax himself)
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 125, "The Hell-Bound Train" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ohrlin-HellBoundTrain 15, "The Hell-Bound Train" (1 text, 1 tune)
Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys, pp. 79-81, "The Hell-Bound Train" (1 text)
Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks 94, "The Hell-Bound Train" (1 text)
Beck-LoreOfTheLumberCamps 91, "The Hell-Bound Train" (1 text)
Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 163-164,246, "The Hell-Bound Train" (1 text, 1 tune)
Finger-FrontierBallads, pp. 110-113, "The Hell-Bound Train" (1 text, 1 tune)
Shay-BarroomBallads/PiousFriendsDrunkenCompanions, pp. 168-169, "The Hell-Bound Train" (1 text, 1 tune)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, p. 263, "The Hell Bound Train" (1 text)
DT, HELLBOND* HELLBND2*
ADDITIONAL: Martin Gardner, editor, _Famous Poems from Bygone Days_, Dover, 1995, pp. 7-8, "The Hell-Bound Train" (1 text)
Roud #5103

RECORDINGS:
Frank Hutchison, "Hell Bound Train" (OKeh 45452, 1928) (Velvet Tone 2366-V, 1931)
Sunset Jubilee Singers, "The Hellbound Train" (Hub 3004, n.d.) [Note: I'm not certain this is the same song, but I'm playing the odds]
Joseph Walsh, "The Hell-Bound Train" (on MREIves01)
NOTES [103 words]: Lomax editions suggest "J. W. Pruitt(e)" as the author of this piece. One of Randolph's sources mentions a "Tom Gray." I wouldn't bet much on either attribution. - RBW
In the Beck version, Tom Gray is the protagonist, rather than the author (the song is in third person). - PJS
Cohen notes a strong similarity in concept to "Ride on the Black Valley Railroad," credited to I. N. Tarbox and printed in 1876. For more on this, one should see Cohen.
This song apparently inspired a short story by Robert Bloch, also entitled "The Hell-Bound Train." It won a Hugo award as the best science fiction short story of 1958. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0

File: R599

Hello Ma Baby

DESCRIPTION: The singer says hello to his "sugar," his "old-time gal," and asks "why don't you write me?" She says hello to her "sugar," her "old-time boy," but she wouldn't marry him, "even for a fardin'"

AUTHOR: Joseph E Howard and Ida Emerson (according to LOCSoundRecording, berl 1305)
EARLIEST DATE: 1899 (Spencer on LOCSoundRecording, berl 1305); 1906 (Jekyll-JamaicanSongAndStory)

LONG DESCRIPTION: The singer has never met his "honey," the "ragtime gal" he talks to "across the telephone" but every morning he has Central "fix me up along the line." He tells her to "send me a kiss by wire" and "tell me I'm your own"; else "you'll lose me" and be left alone. She tells him
Hello Stranger

DESCRIPTION: "Hello, stranger, put your loving hand in mine." Floating verses describing singer's grief because her sweetheart is in prison.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (recording, Carter Family)

KEYWORDS: loneliness separation prisoner floating verses

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dunson/Raim/Asch-AnthologyOfAmericanFolkMusic, p. 114 "Hello Stranger" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #15144

RECORDINGS:
Carter Family, "Hello Stranger" (Decca 5479, 1938; Montgomery Ward 8027, 1939; recorded 1937)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "I'm Going To Cross That Ocean By Myself" (lyrics)

File: ADR114

Hello, Central, Give Me Heaven

DESCRIPTION: "Papa, I'm so sad and lonely... Since dear Mama's gone to heaven." The child says that Papa has never smiled, and decides to call Heaven to talk to Mama. A voice at the other end says to kiss Mama through the telephone

AUTHOR: Charles K. Harris

EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Source: Spaeth, A History of Popular Music in America)

KEYWORDS: technology death father mother children

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Stout-FolkloreFromIowa 40, pp. 56-57, "Hello, Central, Give Me Heaven" (2 texts plus a fragment)
Neely/Spargo-TalesAndSongsOfSouthernIllinois, pp. 250-251, "Hello Central, Give Me Heaven" (1 text)
Spaeth-WeepSomeMoreMyLady, pp. 250-251, "Hello, Central, Give Me Heaven" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #4336

File: Stou040

Hello, Hello Sir

DESCRIPTION: "Hello, hello, sir! Meet me at the grocer. No, sir! Why, sir? Because I have a cold, sir. Where did you get the cold,... At the north Pole.... What were you doing there... Catching polar bears. How many did you catch? One, two... ten. Old Dutch cleanser

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1947 (Yoffie, according to Coffin & Cohen)

KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad commerce

FOUND IN: US(SW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Additional: Tristram P. Coffin and Hennig Cohen, _Folklore in America: Tales, Songs, Superstitions, Proverbs, Riddles, Games, Folk Drama and Folk Festivals_, Doubleday, 1966, p. 188, "A Ball-Bouncing and Rope-Jumping Song" (1 text)

Roud #19189

File: CoCo188

Hello, Hello, Who's Your Lady Friend?

DESCRIPTION: "Jeremiah Jones a lady's man was he.... Till he found a wife..." -- but on their honeymoon, a voice says, "Hello! Hello! Who's your lady friend? Who's the little girlie by your side? I've seen you with a girl or two." Everywhere, he gets the same question

AUTHOR: Lyrics: Hubert Worton David & Bert Lee / Music: Harry Fragson

EARLIEST DATE: 1913 (recorded by Harry Fragson)

KEYWORDS: courting marriage wife humorous

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang, p. 214, "(no title)" (1 text, which includes only the chorus)

File: BrPa214C

Hello, Somebody

DESCRIPTION: Shanty. Characteristic line: "Hello, somebody, hello!" "There's somebody knocking at the garden gate...." "Somebody wants to know my name...."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1933

KEYWORDS: shanty

FOUND IN: US(MA)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, p. 46, "Hello, Somebody" (1 text, 1 tune)

Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 256-257, "Hello, Somebody!" (1 text, 1 tune) [AbEd, pp. 186-187]

ST Doe046 (Partial)

Roud #9441

File: Doe046

Help Me Drive

DESCRIPTION: Hammering song. "Help me drive 'er, Uh! Help me drive 'er, Uh! Help me drive 'er, Uh! ah, home. Uh!" "Little Mary... ah, home!" "To de mountain... ah, home!"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)

KEYWORDS: worksong

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 218, "Work-Song" (1 short text, 1 tune)

File: ScaNF218

Help Me to Raise Them

DESCRIPTION: Response lines: "wo o honey" twice, "See you when the sun goes down." Verse call lines are repeated (see notes): "Won't you help me to raise them"; "The weight's on the mate's boat / captain's boat / donkey now." Some verses float (see notes)
MENHADEN CHANTEYS

A few hundred-thousand two-pound menhaden have been caught in a huge "purse seine" suspended between two small boats; no singing while rowing or catching; quiet is at a premium. The problem is for a twenty-man crew to pull the net together so its contents can be handled by a donkey-steam-engine-driven dip-net and dumped into the hold of the mother ship (GarrityBlake-FishFactory; Anderson; Frye pp. 143, 181-188, 215; Hinson pp. 12-14).

The singing is to coordinate the pulling between sung lines. "Crewmen emphasized that singing or 'blowing' of chanteys was not simply helpful; the chanting was necessary to generate the collective power and euphoria for raising hundreds of pounds of fish. Fishermen described working shoulder to shoulder as one, singing to make 'heaven and earth come together,' while focused trancelike on the 'money' in the net. While singing, crewmen lost all track of time, surroundings, and aching muscles" (GarrityBlake-FishFactory pp. 104-105).

"Help Me to Raise Them" might be sung:
"will you help me to RAISE 'EM BOYS" "O HO HONEY" (chatter) ...
Lower case is the precentor chanteyman lining out the verse; upper case is the crew; "(chatter)" is directions called out by the crew about hauling. You sing and prepare to work and you work while the crew chatters about how to "raise them," that is, the fish. The verse continues:
"will you help me to RAISE 'EM BOYS" "O HO HONEY" (chatter) "will you help me to RAISE 'EM BOYS" "SEE YOU WHEN THE SUN GOES DOWN" (chatter).

"Lining out" is not as it is in classical "Dr. Watts" hymn style, where the precentor deacon says a line or verse before the congregation sings. For the chantey, the lining out is just a few words identifying which of the many verses the crew knows is to be sung. Not enough to define the line exactly: the precentor chanteyman needs only a word or two and once the crew knows which line is to be sung they know how it is to be sung. As illustrated in the notes to "Goin' Home," the words of the line may vary from crew to crew. (I wish I knew whether "Dr. Watts" lining out is practiced in the churches the fishermen attend; alternatively, is their style of lining out just an obvious way to handle these chanteys?)

The You Tube video of The Northern Neck Chantey Singers performing "Help Me to Raise Them" (at "Won't You Help Me to Raise 'Em - Northern Neck Chantey Singers" at https://www.youtube.com/watch?v=d5lx98vxU&t=8s, accessed November 20, 2016) shows how the work is coordinated.

Unlike the deep-water chantey singing, harmony is an important part of menhaden chantey singing. "That what make the chantey so beautiful, is the pretty harmony,' a crewman told me. 'One person can't do it. You gotta have bass, baritone, tenor, then lead voice, see. All them boys get hooked up together, you got something pretty. Make you feel good. Make you pull good'" (GarrityBlake-FishFactory p. 103). This is clear in the two on-the-job menhaden recordings we have of "Evalina" and "Drinking of the Wine" (VaWork). (One non-chantey harmonized work song is the T.C.I. Section Crew recording of "Section Gang Song"; however, we can't tell from that recording how the work was coordinated with the song).

The USMenhaden01 version of "Swing Low, Sweet Chariot" shows the church harmony and work song harmony to be similar. That carries over to the performance of hymn as chantey; examples include "My Way Seems So Hard" and "Drinking of the Wine." "Drinking of the Wine" is an example of a hymn that has found a place as a work song in many environments, though sung differently to match the work. So Parrish-SlaveSongsOfTheGeorgiaSeaIslands writes that its "swinging rhythm ... made it a favorite with the chain-gang for cutting weeds along the highway" (Parrish-
The menhaden chantey performances of "Drinking of the Wine" do not approach a "swinging rhythm" (VaWork, USMenhaden01, USMenhaden02). There was no thought that singing hymns at work was inappropriate. Allen commented -- in 1867 -- on how many of the work songs heard on the Sea Islands were hymns; in fact, he writes, "it is often, indeed, no easy matter to persuade them to sing their old (secular) songs, even as a curiosity, such is the sense of dignity that has come with freedom" (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates p. x). The twentieth century oyster-shucking songs on VaWork -- "I Don't Want Nobody Stumbling Over Me," "Sit Down, Servant, and Rest A Little While," and "Wade in the Water" -- are all religious songs.

One hundred years later secular, sometimes bawdy, songs are also used as work songs. If a song has verses easily recognized when lined out, and repeats lines, it may be used as a menhaden chantey. Listen, for example to the USMenhaden01 renditions of "I Wish I Was Single Again" and "Mama Liza Jane" (that is, "Li'l Liza Jane"). On the other hand, there is a general format and tune that seems especially suited for menhaden chanteys shared by "Biting Spider," "Drinking of the Wine," "Evalina," "Going Back to Weldon," "Goin' Home," "Mule on the Mountain," "My Ways Do Seem So Hard," "Poor Lazarus" and "Section Gang Song." The verse structure is illustrated and discussed in the notes to "Goin' Home."

Lines float freely from one menhaden chantey to another and from other songs to the chanteys. The Frye and LomaxCD1708 versions of "Help Me to Raise Them" include "I've got a gal in Georgia/Baltimore" from the "Mama Liza Jane" chantey; Frye adds "the streetcar runs right by her door" shared with the "Sweet Rosie Annie" chantey. The USMenhaden01 text has "Her name is Evalina boys" and LomaxCD1708 has "she shakes like jelly boys" from the "Evalina" chantey. Hurston's "Mule on de Mount" (pp. 269-270) seems a compilation of a number of menhaden chanteys including "Evalina" and "Goin' Home." A pair of verses from GarrityBlake-FishFactory and LomaxCD1708 are "I got a letter this morning boys" and "I couldn't read it for crying boys." A close set is in American Ballads and Folk Songs: "Ev'y mail day, mail day I git a letter, 'My Son, come home, my Lawd, son come home" and "I cain't read her, read her letter for cryin', My time's so long, my Lawd, my time's so long" (Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs pp. 84-86, "Goin' Home", cf. also Warner #173). Finally, there are lines that seem to have floated to "Help Me to Raise Them" from other Black sources: LomaxCD1708 and USMenhaden01 have "I got a long tall yellow gal"; Frye has "She's long and tall" and "I want to see her"; GarrityBlake-FishFactory has "Mary had a baby" and "It was a sweet little baby."

Floating lines from outside the genre are in other menhaden chanteys as well. For example, the Anderson, USMenhaden01 and USMenhaden02 versions of "Mama Liza Jane" -- itself an import -- all include "When she goes walking down the street... All the little birdies go tweet tweet tweet", apparently taken from Bobby Day's 1958 "Rock-In Robin" (Class 229); the USMenhaden02 version has a whole section of "Papa's Going to Buy Me a Mockingbird," as well as a section of "Joe D" (Grinder, see Jackson) calls, which adds time in the armed forces as a likely source. The GarrityBlake-FishFactory version of "Help Me to Raise Them" has a modification of the title of Furry Lewis's 1928 "I Will Turn Your Money Green" (Victor 38506).

Reference to recordings is not surprising: menhaden chanteys seem a twentieth century phenomenon and the fishermen were not isolated at all from the rest of twentieth century United States. For example, Frye, GarrityBlake-FishFactory, VaWork and USMenhaden01 all have a version of the work song "Poor Lazarus"; the work song "Goin' Home" is in those sources as well as USMenhaden02; Hurston writes that "Mule on the Mountain" is "the most widely distributed and best known of all Negro work songs" (p. 269). And, illustrating exposure to "the outside," the "Christian Automobile" recorded by the Bright Light Quartet -- all menhaden fishermen -- on LomaxCD1708 covers the the Dixie Hummingbirds 1957 recording (Peacock 5-1780). The songs as recorded have been "cleaned up," either by the singer or the collector: "Now understand that chantey singing was done on the water. There wasn't anybody out there but the fish, the sea gulls, and the men. So, consequently you could sing about anything you want to. So you can understand that these songs that we gie would really be quite colorful. Well, this is Sunday ... so we can't get as colorful as we really would like to ...." (Dr. Elton Smith Jr, VFL). Perhaps the reference "I have a girl in Baltimore, The streetcar runs right by her door" is an inside joke as those lines were often the least "colorful" part of a well-known obscene set (Perrow, #iv.30.1 p. 156, footnote). - BS

Bibliography

- Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates: William Francis Allen, Charles Pickard Ware and Lucy McKim Garrison, Slave Songs of the United States (New York: A. Simpson & Co, 1867 ("Digitized by Google"))

- Burnette: May Burnette, "Sweet Mollie", Accesion No. 9936, Box 4, Special Collections, University of Virginia Library
- GarrityBlake-FishFactory: Barbara J. Garrity-Blake, The Fish Factory (Knoxville: University of Tennessee, 1994)
- Jackson: Bruce Jackson, "What Happened to Jody", JAFL, Vol. 80, No. 318 (Oct-Dec 1967 (available online by JSTOR))
- Warner: Anne Warner, Traditional American Folk Songs from the Anne and Frank Warner Collection (Syracuse: Syracuse University Press, 1984)

Last updated in version 4.2
File: FrGBHMRT

Hempseed I Set (Divination Rhyme)

DESCRIPTION: "Hemp-seed I set, hemp-seed I sow, The young man that I love, Come after me and mow, I sow, I sow, then, my own dear, come hoe, come hoe, then mow and mow." A girl sows hemp in a churchyard (on Halloween?) to find someone to marry her soon

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1878 (Latham, according to Simpson; also in Halliwell)

KEYWORDS: courting farming

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #401, pp. 192-193, "(Hemp-seed I set)"
- Jacqueline Simpson, _The Folklore of Sussex_, B. T. Batsford, 1973, p. 122, "(Hempseed, I sow thee)" (1 text)

Roud #19644

File: Simp122

Hen and the Duck, The

DESCRIPTION: "The hen to herself said one beautiful day, Cluck, cluck, The day is so fine we'll step over the way And call on my neighbor and friend Madam Duck." The hen warns her chicks not to join the ducklings in the water -- but the chicks don't listen and drown

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1934 (Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan)

KEYWORDS: bird chickens death drowning river

FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 199, The Hen and the Duck"" (1 text)
Hen Cackle

DESCRIPTION: Characterized by the structure, "The old hen cackled... The next time she cackled...." E.g. "The old hen cackled, she cackled in the lot, The next time she cackled, she cackled in the pot." Material floats freely.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (recording, Fiddlin' John Carson)

KEYWORDS: bird nonballad food floatingverses

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, p. 252, "Old Hen Cackled and the Rooster's Going to Crow" (1 text)
Fuson-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands, p. 157, "The Hen Cackled" (first of 12 single-stanza jigs) (1 text, perhaps from this though it's just a floating verse)

Roud #11058

RECORDINGS:
DeFord Bailey, "Old Hen Cackle" (Vocalion 5190, 1927)
Fiddlin' John Carson, "The Old Hen Cackled and the Rooster's Goin' to Crow" (OKeh 4890, 1923)
Bill Chitwood & Bud Landress, "Hen Cackle" (Brunswick 2811/Silvertone 3050, c. 1925; rec. 1924)
Coleman & Harper "Old Hen Cackle" (Perfect 12751, 1931) (Oriole 8095, 1931)
Homer Davenport & the Young Brothers, "The Old Hen Cackled and the Rooster Crowed" (Silvertone 4009, 1925; Challenge 110 or 304, 1927 [both Challenge records as The Three Howard Boys])
George Edgin's Corn Dodgers, "Corn Dodger No. 1 Special" (Columbia 15754-D, 1932)
Fruit Jar Guzzlers, "Cacklin' Hen" (Paramount 3116/Broadway 8108, 1928)
Whit Gayden, "Hen Cacklin' Piece" (Victor V-40315, 1930)
J. D. Harris "The Cackling Hen" (OKeh 45024, c. 1926; rec. 1925)
The Hillbillies, "Cackling Hen" (Vocalion 5020, c. 1926)
Earl Johnson & his Dixie Entertainers, "Hen Cackle" (OKeh 45123, 1927)
Clayton McMichen & his Georgia Wildcats, "The Old Hen Cackled" (Varsity 5064, c. 1942/John Davis 3512, n.d.)
Short Creek Trio, "The Old Hen Cackled and the Rooster Crowed" (Silvertone 8178, 1928)
Gid Tanner & Riley Puckett, "Hen Cackle" (Columbia 110-D, 1924)
Gid Tanner & his Skillet Lickers, "Hen Cackle" (Columbia 15303-D, 1928); "Cacklin' Hen and Rooster Too" (Columbia 15682-D, 1931)
Gordon Tanner, Smokey Joe Miller & Uncle John Patterson, "Medley: Cumberland Gap/Gid Tanner's Bucking Mule/Hen Cackle" (on DownYonder)
Tennessee Ramblers, "Cackling Pullet" (Brunswick 225, 1928; Supertone S-2083, 1930)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
-cf. "Cluck Old Hen"

NOTES [142 words]: This merges almost continuously with "Cluck Old Hen," and readers may want to check both. The line "The old hen cackled and the rooster's going to crow" is highly characteristic of this song.

According to The Old-Time Herald, Volume 11, #10, April-May 2009, p. 26, "[Ralph] Peer recorded Carson -- grudgingly, country music lore has it -- in conditions that were less than ideal. The sound of Carson's record, Peer would later say, was 'pluperfect awful.' Nevertheless, a test pressing of 500 of Carson's debut -- "Little Old Log Cabin in the Lane" on the A-side and "The Old Hen Cackled and the Rooster's Going to Crow on the reverse -- sold out in the space of an afternoon." Although this was not the first "country" recording waxed, it began the southern music boom. For more on this, see the notes to "The Little Old Log Cabin in the Lane." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: Rc0HCRGC
Hen's March, The

DESCRIPTION: "Tick, tick, tick, tick, tick-a-lairy ... And the aul' hen cries out, 'Tick-a-lairy""

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan8)

KEYWORDS: nonballad nonsense bird

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan8 1664, "The Hen's March" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #13044

NOTES [24 words]: Greig/Duncan8: "There are more words describing all the actions of the hens."
The current description is based on the Greig/Duncan8 fragment. - BS

Last updated in version 2.5

File: Grd81664

Henhouse Door (Who Broke the Lock?)

DESCRIPTION: Floating verses: "Down in the henhouse, down on my knees/I thought I heard a chicken sneeze" "Hen... told the rooster, I love you best... you're a pop-eyed liar...." Ch.: "Who broke the lock? I don't know/Who broke the lock on the henhouse door..."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1894 (recording, Standard Quartette)

LONG DESCRIPTION: Floating verses: "Down in the henhouse, down on my knees/I thought I heard a chicken sneeze" "Hen and a rooster went out west/Hen told the rooster, I love you best/Rooster told the hen, you're a pop-eyed liar/Saw you in the alley with the big Shanghai" "My old hen's a good old hen/Ain't laid an egg since I don't know when" etc. Chorus: "Who broke the lock? I don't know/Who broke the lock on the henhouse door..."

KEYWORDS: jealousy theft farming floatingverses humorous nonballad animal chickens

FOUND IN: US(SE,So)

RECORDINGS:
Alabama Washboard Stompers, "Who Broke the Lock" (Vocalion 1587, 1931)
H. M. Barnes & his Blue Ridge Ramblers, "Who Broke the Lock on the Hen-House Door" ((Brunswick 310, 1929/Supertone S-2052/Brunswick [UK] 1027, 1930)
Jack Bland's Rhythmakers aka Jack Bland & his Rhythmakers, "Who Broke the Lock" (Banner 32605/Melotone M-12513/Oriole 2593/Perfect 15694, all 1932, on Protobilly; Columbia 35841, 1940)
Bryant's Jubilee Quartet, "Who Stole De Lock Off De Henhouse Door" (Gennett 6608/Champion 15543 [as Southland Jubilee Singers]/Supertone 9081 [as Dixie Jubilee Choir]/Supertone 9293 [as Dixie Jubilee Singers], all 1928); "Who Broke De Lock" (Banner 32173/Oriole 8060/Perfect 175 [as Famous Garland Jubilee Singers]/Romeo 5060/Conqueror 7749, all 1931)
[Sam] Cousins & [Ed] De Moss, "Who Broke the Lock (Berliner 3012, 1898; on Protobilly)
Vance Dixon & his Pencils, "Who Stole the Lock" (OKeh 8891, 1931)
Dunham Jazz Singers, "Who Stole the Lock" (Columbia 14609-D, 1931)
The Georgia Browns, "Who Stole De Lock" (Melotone M12615, 1933; on Protobilly)
Otto Gray & his Oklahoma Cowboys, "Who Broke the Lock" (Vocalion 5479, c. 1931/Polk P9017, n.d./Panachord [UK] 25449, 1933)
Dick Hartman & his Tennessee Ramblers, "Who Broke the Lock?" (Montgomery Ward M-4914, 1936)
Texas Jim Lewis, "Who Broke the Lock" (Vocalion 3754/Perfect 7-12-55 [as Texas Jim Lewis' Lone Star Cowboys], 1937)
Frank Luther, "Who Broke the Lock" (Decca 5322, 1935)
Riley Puckett, "Riley's Hen House Door" (Bluebird B-7373, 1938)
Standard Quartette, "Who Broke the Lock on the Henhouse Door?" (CYL: Columbia, no #, rec. 1894)

Washboard Rhythm Kings, "Who Broke the Lock" (Victor 23283, 1931)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Talking Blues" (floating verses)
cf. "Cluck Old Hen" (floating verses)
cf. "The Chicken Song (I Ain't Gonna Take It Settin' Down)" (floating verses)
cf. "The Golden Axe" (floating verse)

NOTES [18 words]: The Bryant's Jubilee Quartet recordings are a perfect illustration of why
Hennessy Murder, The
DESCRIPTION: "Kind friends, if you will list to me, A sad story I'll relate, 'Tis of brave Chief Hennessy And how he met his fate." The song mentions the time of his death, and opines that his killers were working with Satan
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Burt-AmericanMurderBallads)
KEYWORDS: homicide police
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1890 - Death of New Orleans Chief of Police David Hennessy
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 165-166, "The Hennessy Murder" (1 text, 1 tune); also "Hennessy Avenged" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, p. 347, "The Hennessy Murder" (1 text)
NOTES [7 words]: This is item dF58 in Laws's Appendix II. - RBW

Henpecked Man, The
DESCRIPTION: "I'm the most henpecked man in town, I used to have lots of fun..." until his wife discovers him having an affair when he forgets to have receipts for the errands he allegedly was running. She makes sure he can't do it again. He warns against lies
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (recording, Kelly Harrell)
KEYWORDS: husband wife adultery hardtimes trick lie clothes
FOUND IN: US
Roud #13148
RECORDINGS:
Kelly Harrell, "The Henpecked Man" (Victor 23689, 1929; on KHarrell02)
NOTES [65 words]: I've never seen a version of this other than Harrell's, but it sounds traditional. The problem may be that no man would sing it for a collector. Alfred Steagall's guitar accompaniment on this song is fascinating -- somewhere between ragtime and Mississippi John Hurt. I've heard nothing else like it on a recording of this era. I wonder if Steagall didn't influence later guitar stylists. - RBW

Henry and Mary Ann (Henry the Sailor Boy)
DESCRIPTION: Mary Ann bids Henry to stay with her. He refuses, and also refuses her offer to come with him. He goes to sea, where he performs valiantly and saves the Captain's life. When he comes home, the Captain gives him fifty pounds; the couple get married
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1853 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 26(246))
KEYWORDS: love separation sailor money
FOUND IN: Ireland Canada(Mar,Newf)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H37, pp. 485-486, "Henry, the Sailor Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Tunney-WhereSongsDoThunder, pp. 96-97, "Henry and His Maryanne" (1 text)
Peacock, pp. 899-900, "Young Henry" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 32, "My Mary Ann" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #2284
Henry and Nancy

DESCRIPTION: Henry courts Nancy. Her parents lock her in their castle. Nancy writes Henry a letter. He dreams of her and wakes to find her letter. He goes to the castle, kills her, and kills himself. Her parents blame themselves. Nancy's ghost blames her mother.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: courting love homicide suicide dream father mother ghost prison
FOUND IN: Canada (Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 675-676, "Henry and Nancy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9943
RECORDINGS:
Mike Kent, "Henry and Nancy" (on Peacock CDROM) [one verse only]
File: Pea675

Henry and Servilla

DESCRIPTION: Broadside. Henry and Servilla are in love, but her mind changes; "perhaps it was a better match. Within the mother's eye." Henry is bidden not to return. Henry intercepts her on her way to school, and shoots her then himself.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Burt-AmericanMurderBallads)
KEYWORDS: love courting betrayal homicide suicide
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
January 13, 1854 - Murder/suicide of Servilla (Jones?) and Henry
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 45-47, "Henry and Servilla, or the Death Bridal -- being a graphic account of the New Boston Tragedy" (1 text, slightly shortened)
NOTES [95 words]: What I want to know is, why didn't someone shoot the mother who named her daughter "Servilla"?
This is as bad as it sounds, being littered, e.g. with small caps:
One had a DAUGHTER, just sixteen....
He loved SERVILLA long and well,
(Surely it was not strange,)
And happy was he in her love,
But ah! THERE CAME A CHANGE!
He took the maiden by the hand,
"YOU SHALL BE MINE," he said;
Then drew a pistol from his breast
AND SHOT HER THROUGH THE HEAD.
On second thought, I want to know why Henry didn't shoot the so-called "poet" who would inflict "that" on the world. - RBW
File: Burt045
Henry Clay Beattie (I)

DESCRIPTION: Beattie is convicted of murdering a girl, but denies his guilt. His family tries to get him to confess, lest he "go to [his] doom with a lie." At last he confesses. On a Friday morning he is executed in the electric chair

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (recording, Kelly Harrell)

KEYWORDS: death homicide prison punishment execution Hell

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Nov 24, 1911 - Execution of Henry Clay Beattie

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Bronner/Eskin-FolksongAlivePart1 25, "Henry Clay Beattie" (2 texts, 1 tune)

Roud #13147

RECORDINGS:

Kelly Harrell, "Henry Clay Beattie" (Victor 20797, 1927; on KHarrell02)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Henry Clay Beattie (II)" (subject)

NOTES [239 words]: The use of the electric chair as a means of execution obviously dates this song to the few decades before Harrell's recording. This would seem to imply that it is based on actual events. But I found no references to Beattie until Paul Stamler found an online auction of a publication entitled The Great Beattie Murder Case: Henry C. Beattie Jr., Life and Crime. Sensational story of the life of Beulah Binford, 'the woman in the case.'"

How far one can trust anything with a title like that is an open question, but Lyle Lofgren has found supporting evidence. He reports, "Henry Clay Beattie, Jr. (1884 - 1911), of Richmond, VA, married Louise Owen in 1910. In 1911, a few months after their first child was born, Henry and Louise went for a late-night drive. It ended with Louise dead, shot at close range with a shotgun. Henry reported that they were accosted by highwaymen - he had miraculously escaped. But lots of people knew that Henry was also involved in a long-term liaison with Beulah Binford, described as a woman of 'questionable reputation.' [I've also read a claim that she didn't know he was married.] He was indicted for murder."

A newspaper report of the testimony in the case can be found at http://tinyurl.com/tbdx-HCBeattie. Lyle suggests that this was originally published as a newspaper poem or broadside. Norm Cohen found out much more information in researching the case; see "Henry Clay Beattie (II)." - RBW

Last updated in version 2.7

File: RcHCB

Henry Clay Beattie (II)

DESCRIPTION: "Come on, honey, let's go for a spin. You won't need a wrap, just jump right in. No, don't take the baby, we won't go far..." because Beattie soon pulls off the road and shoots his wife. The singer points out that Beattie is bound for the electric chair

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Gordon collection)

KEYWORDS: death homicide prison punishment execution technology

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Nov 24, 1911 - Execution of Henry Clay Beattie

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 204-205, "Henry Clay Beattie" (1 text)

Roud #13147

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Henry Clay Beattie (I)" (subject)

NOTES [59 words]: Roud lumps this with "Henry Clay Beattie (I)," which was recorded by Kelly Harrell -- but, as Cohen points out, the two songs are completely distinct although based on the same incident. Cohen has extensive notes on the improbably story, and prints a cover of a sensationalist book written about it. Cohen also wrote a journal article on the subject. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.7

File: CAFS1204
Henry Clay Songs

DESCRIPTION: Tunes in favor of "The Statesman, the Patriot, Clay" during his presidential campaigns. Sung to popular tunes such as "Rosin the Beau," they include "The Mill-Boy of the Slashes" and "Old Hal of the West"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE:

KEYWORDS: political nonballad derivative

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

1777 - Birth of Henry Clay in Hanover County, Virginia -- a region known as "The Slashes," hence the song title "The Mill-Boy [=miller-boy] of the Slashes"

1824 - Clay's first campaign for President (in the first election where popular votes are recorded, Andrew Jackson is the clear winner in the voting, but no one wins in the Electoral College. John Quincy Adams is elected president by the House of Representatives, due mostly to backing from Clay)

1832 - Clay's second campaign for President. He is defeated by Andrew Jackson

1844 - Clay's third campaign for President, producing both ""The Mill-Boy of the Slashes," with its erroneous reference to Van Buren (who failed to earn the Democratic nomination) and "Old Hal o' the West." Clay is defeated by James K. Polk.

1852 - Death of Henry Clay

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (5 citations):

Spaeth-ReadEmAndWeep, pp. 39-40, "The Mill-Boy of the Slashes" and "Old Hal o' the West" (2 texts, filed under "Old Rosin, the Beau," tune referenced)

Hudson-FolksongsOfMississippi 84, p. 211, "Henry Clay" (1 short text, to the tune of "Old Dan Tucker," with many floating elements)

Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticsAndPresidents, p. 246, "Here's a health to the wokingman's friend" (1 short text); pp. 310-311, "Here's To You Henry Clay" (1 text); p. 312, "Hurrah for Henry Clay" (1 text, 1 tune, a copy of a broadside); p. 314, "Hurrah for Henry Clay" (1 text, not the same as the preceding)

ADDITIONAL: John Siegenthaler, _James K. Polk_, Times Books, 2003, p. 91, (A single stanza of a Clay campaign song beginning "Hurrah for Henry Clay" and ending "And Polk will soon burst his boiler")

Roud #4495

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Rosin the Beau" (tune) and references there

cf. "The Coon Song (I)" (subject; Henry Clay and the 1844 election)

NOTES [810 words]: This is a lumping entry, for all the various political songs associated with Henry Clay and his sundry campaigns for president. They're all of separate origin, but since they had tenuous hold on tradition (at best), it seemed easier to put them all here. (I excluded one, "The Coon Song (I)," as it does seem to have been traditional).

My old high school history text described the period of 1830-1850 as the era of Clay, John C. Calhoun, and Daniel Webster. This is a little unfair; no matter how weak President Martin van Buren and John Tyler were, there is no questioning the importance of Andrew Jackson and James K. Polk!

Nonetheless, Clay was one of the greatest voices of the era, and the single most important force behind the Whig party -- one might almost say he was the Whig party, since it died almost the moment he did.

These days, he is usually remembered either for his many compromises, ending finally with the Compromise of 1850, or for his many presidential campaigns. But he was more. Holt's massive work gives this description on, p. 25: "Clay was five years the senior of Webster, his great rival in the anti-Jackson camp. Whereas the granite-like Webster inspired awe and admiration, the irresistibly appealing Kentuckian inspired love, affection, and often rapturous adoration from virtually everyone he met... Clay was a brilliant conversationalist, sparkling, witty, playful. Tall and thin, with a sandy complexion, a shock of brunette hair... gray, laughing eyes, and a straight, thin-lipped mouth that broke readily into a smile, the gracious, fun-loving clay charmed both men and women wherever he went. Neither as profound nor as learned as Webster, he exuded emotion and charisma when he addressed public audiences."
Jameson, p. 416, has this to add: "Mill-boy of the Slashes, a designation applied to Henry Clay, who was born in humble circumstances in the portion of Hanover County, Virginia, known as the "Slashes," and, like other farm-boys, used to ride to mill."

Schlesinger, p. 12, says this of Clay:
"No man in American had a greater gift for exciting intense personal enthusiasm than Clay. A splendid orator, with a sure understanding of the crowd, he was endowed with a magnificent and garish imagination, which caught up and expressed the inarticulate popular feelings in their vague longing, their vulgarity and their wonder. He made Federalism a living vision, replacing the dry logical prose of Hamilton with thrilling pictures of a glorious future. The blaze of nationalist suggest a new and disarming name -- the American System -- and under Clay's solicitous care, this rebaptized Federalism slowly won its way to the inner councils of the government."

And yet, if Clay's vision resembles the modern American government, in the short term, he was largely a failure. Depending on how you count, he ran for President from three to five times -- the most by any serious candidate prior to Franklin Roosevelt. But the results were far from successful (see Hammond Atlas, p. U-59):

1824 -- the famous four-way election and the "corrupt bargain" that made John Quincy Adams President. Andrew Jackson won 43% of the popular vote, and 99 electoral votes; Adams has 31% of the vote and 84 electoral votes. William H. Crawford earned 13% of the vote and 41 electoral votes. Clay had 13% of the vote and 37 electoral votes. The election went to the House of Representatives. Clay, being the fourth place finisher, was eliminated from the contest. He threw his support to Adams, who thus (in the first election to feature direct vote count for President) because the first President elected with less than a plurality of the vote.

1832 -- Jackson, who had won the rematch with Adams in 1828, ran for re-election against a variety of candidates: Clay, Floyd, and the anti-Mason Wirt. Jackson won 55% of the vote, and 77% of the electoral vote; Clay won only 25% of the popular vote.

1840 -- By this time, the anti-Jackson, non-Democratic party had a name: They were Whigs. They had run three candidates in 1836, and lost to Martin van Buren. In 1840, Clay made noises about availability, but the Whigs nominated William Henry Harrison (one of their candidates in 1836) -- and won.

1844 -- With Harrison dead, the Whigs at last nominated Clay (the first time he was the sole candidate of the non-Democrats); he earned 48% of the vote to James K. Polk's 50%, but Polk won 62% of the electoral votes.

1848 -- Once again Clay made himself available; once again the Whigs nominated at general (Zachary Taylor) and won the Presidency for the last time. Nor was this his last noble failure. In 1850, an old man of 72, he managed to put together the Compromise of 1850. He died in 1852 -- and, in 1854, Stephen A. Douglas introduced the Kansas-Nebraska Act, thereby destroying the Compromise and opening the door for Civil War. - RBW

Bibliography

- Hammond Atlas: (no author listed), The Atlas of United States History (Hammond; I'm using the edition copyrighted 1977 though I imagine there have been others)
- Jameson: J. Franklin Jameson, Dictionary of United States History 1492-1895, Puritan Press, 1894
- Schlesinger: Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr., The Age of Jackson, Little Brown, 1945

Last updated in version 3.5
File: SRW039

Henry Connors [Laws M5]

DESCRIPTION: Dejected Henry tells his story. A serving man, he fell in love with his master's daughter. The girl's mother aids the match, but the father is opposed. When the two plan to flee to Scotland, the father plants evidence against Henry and has him transported

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1911 (broadside, Bodleian Bod21727 2806 c.15(291))
KEYWORDS: servant courting father emigration transportation betrayal trick love
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf) Ireland
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Henry Downs

DESCRIPTION: "Many an Orange villain fell Beneath the hand of Downs" "The trembling tyrants did propose A partial amnesty" which took "unsuspecting clowns" out of the battle. Downs continued to fight. In Dublin he was taken by Sirr, tried, condemned, and hanged.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1887 (Madden's _Literary Remains of the United Irishmen of 1798_, according to Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

KEYWORDS: rebellion execution trial Ireland patriotic police

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
April 1799 - Henry Downs is hanged at Malahide after being taken by Major Sirr in a Dublin alehouse. (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 125, "Henry Downs" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
"Edward (III) (Edward Fitzgerald)" (character of Major Sirr)
"The Man from God-Knows-Where" (character of Major Sirr)
"The Major" (character of Major Sirr)

NOTES [106 words]: For more about Major Sirr see "Edward" (III), "The Man from God-Knows-Where," "The Major" and the notes to "Who Killed Cock Robin?" (II).

Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 adds some information illuminating the events here. There was an amnesty and it was accepted by many insurgents. Downs, while a member of Joseph Holt's guerilla band, killed Jonathan Eves, mistakenly taking him to be an informer. He broke with the guerillas on this account. He came close to killing Major Sirr while being taken. Moylan reports Madden, in _Literary Remains of the United Irishmen of 1798_, believed that Downs was executed for shooting Eves. - BS

File: Moyl125

Henry Green (The Murdered Wife) [Laws F14]

DESCRIPTION: Henry Green threatens suicide if Mary Wyatt will not marry him (she is unsure about the idea because he is rich and she is poor). Soon after the marriage, he poisons her. She forgives him before she dies, but he is sentenced to death

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)

KEYWORDS: homicide marriage poverty execution poison

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1845 - Marriage of Marry Ann Wyatt and Henry Green (Feb 10, 1845), followed by the murder of Mary Ann Wyatt Green (Feb 18) and execution of Henry Green (Sep 10)
Henry Joy

DESCRIPTION: The singer from Ulster tells how he left his wife and children to follow Henry Joy McCracken. They are defeated at Antrim. Henry Joy is taken to Belfast by the redcoats and hanged in the barrack square.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1998 (Franke Harte and Donal Lunny, "1798 the First Year of Liberty," Hummingbird Records HBCD0014 (1998))

KEYWORDS: battle rebellion Ireland execution patriotic

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
July 17, 1798 - Henry Joy McCracken, a founder of the United Irishmen, is executed outside the Market House in Belfast (source: notes to Franke Harte and Donal Lunny, "1798 the First Year of Liberty," Hummingbird Records HBCD0014 (1998))

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 110, "Henry Joy" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Henry Joy McCracken (I)" (character of Henry Joy McCracken) and references there

NOTES [98 words]: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815: "This song possibly dates from the early 19th century" - BS

The ballad is recorded on one of the CD's issued around the time of the bicentenial of the 1798
Irish Rebellion. See:
Franke Harte and Donal Luny, "Henry Joy" (on Franke Harte and Donal Luny, "1798 the First Year of Liberty," Hummingbird Records HBCD0014 (1998)) - BS

Henry Joy McCracken was one of the most admirable of the United Irishmen. Sadly, he was no soldier, and his attempt to fight the British at Antrim a disaster; for details, see the notes to "Henry Joy McCracken (I)." - RBW

File: Moyl1110

Henry Joy McCracken (I)

DESCRIPTION: "It was on the Belfast mountains I heard a maid complain... Saying, 'Woe is me... Since Henry Joy McCracken died on the gallows tree.'" Henry fought against the English, but was taken; now only his ghost comes got her. She dies and is buried

AUTHOR: attributed by different writers to P. J. McCall, William Drennan, and T. P. Cunning (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads)

KEYWORDS: rebellion Ireland love death burial execution ghost

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- June 7, 1798 - Henry Joy McCracken, a founder of the United Irishmen, leads several thousand men against Antrim, but is driven off. The Ulster phase of the 1798 rebellion is completely defeated by June 13, and the leaders later executed

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (4 citations):
- Galvin-IrishSongsOfResistance, pp. 34-35, "Henry Joy McCracken" (1 text, 1 tune)
- OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 60, "Henry Joy McCracken" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 109, "Henry Joy McCracken" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Leyden-BelfastCityOfSong 39, "Henry Joy McCracken" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Roud #3008

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Henry Joy" (subject)
- cf. "Henry Joy McCracken (II)" (subject)
- cf. "McCracken's Ghost" (subject)
- cf. "The Social Thistle and the Shamrock" (written by McCracken)

NOTES [685 words]: OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads writes about finding the tune in 1913 in George Petrie [1789-1866], The Complete Petrie Collection, "The song here given was written by P. J. McCall [1861-1919], author of 'Boolavogue."

Leyden-BelfastCityOfSong's source is OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 60. - BS

The ballad is recorded on two of the CD's issued around the time of the bicentenial of the 1798 Irish Rebellion. See:
- Tim Lyons, "Henry Joy McCracken" (on "The Croppy's Complaint," Craft Recordings CRCD03 (1998); Terry Moylan notes)
- Franke Harte and Donal Luny, "Henry Joy McCracken" (on Franke Harte and Donal Luny, "1798 the First Year of Liberty," Hummingbird Records HBCD0014 (1998)) - BS
- Pakenham, p. 172, says of McCracken (1767-1798) that he was "a remarkable man -- in may way the most attractive of all the original United brotherhood of Ireland." A Presbyterian, he tried to promote learning and social justice (not something that interested most Irish leaders); Smyth, p. 117, describes him as part of the 'often socially radical' faction of the United Irishmen. He was also religiously tolerant (his brothers, Golway, p. 68, had attended the opening of Belfast's first Catholic Church in 1784, along with other members of the Belfast volunteers, as a gesture of ecumenicalism. McCracken himself, according to Golway, p. 69, actually supported Catholics when they were attacked by Protestants.)

McCracken, it appears, was not inherently opposed to British rule; he simply thought that Ireland could not achieve the social order he felt desirable without independence. Sadly, British justice cared little for nobility of character. And, as a leader of troops, McCracken was contemptible. And several of his senior officers were in contact with the British General Nugent. McCracken, in attacking Antrim, made no provisions to guard against reinforcements. Nor could he make any real use of his ancient, ill-mounted cannon. The result was a complete defeat for the United Men at Antrim.
Four days later, the remnants of the United forces abandoned their camp at Donegore Hill. As an army, that was the end of them.

McCracken had not expected to command the Ulster army. Robert Simms had originally commanded the troops in County Antrim. But he wasn't going to fight without the French. He resigned, leaving McCracken in command (Golway, p. 84). McCracken had no military experience. A veteran army might have survived an ignorant commander. But the troops were as raw as he. They scared the British, but they posed little real danger.

McCracken himself escaped the rout, and hid in the home of his "lover" Mary Bodle (by whom he apparently had an illegitimate daughter; see Golway, p. 85). Contrary to what is reported in "Henry Joy McCracken (II)," Steward, p. 240, says that a patrol simply stumbled on him -- but one of them had bought cloth from him and recognized him. What followed is confused -- apparently some of the men of the patrol wanted to free him -- but he ended up in custody. Golway, pp. 87-88, says that his trial began on July 16, and he was hung July 17 after refusing an offer to turn informer. Stewart, p. 241, says the court-martial began July 17 (the contradiction is probably a matter of how the phases of the McCracken case are labelled).

Stewart, p. 242, notes that McCracken's father and sister Mary Ann were present at the trial. The officer in charge, in an act of blatant cruelty, spoke to the father and told him that McCracken could live if he would reveal the name of his commander. Stewart reports the incident as follow: "Pollock called Henry over and made the same offer to him. McCracken said, 'I will do anything which my father knows is the right thing for me to do.' 'Harry, my dear,' said his father, 'I know nothing of the business, but you know best what you ought to do.' At this McCracken said, 'Farewell, Father,' and walked back to the table."

The trial took place the same day, and although it was hard to find witnesses, McCracken was found guilty and ordered to be executed immediately. McCracken was hung at 5:00 p.m. on July 17 (Stewart, p. 245). - RBW

Bibliography

- Golway: Terry Golway, For the Cause of Liberty, Simon & Schuster, 2000

_Henry Joy McCracken (II)_

DESCRIPTION: McCracken is betrayed for 50 pounds by Niblock. Why is there no song from 1798 to mark his hanging on High Street, Belfast? He is buried in Clifton Street cemetery with his sister Mary.

AUTHOR: Mrs Eileen Keaney (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (written 1964, published _Ceol_ vol. 2, no. 1, according to Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

KEYWORDS: rebellion betrayal execution patriotic burial

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

FOUND IN:
- REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 111, "Henry Joy McCracken" (1 text, 1 tune)
- CROSS-REFERENCES:
  cf. "Henry Joy McCracken (I)" (character of Henry Joy McCracken) and references there

NOTES [119 words]: For background on Henry Joy McCracken, one of the most admirable but perhaps not the most competent of the 1798 rebels, see the notes to "Henry Joy McCracken (I)." According to Terry Golway, For the Cause of Liberty, pp. 85, 87-88, his sister Mary Ann (1770?-1866) had tried to smuggle him out of the country before his death, but he was captured before arrangements were completed.
She kept on having ideas. She tried to come with him to the gallows. (Interestingly, he apparently gave no last speech.) After his hanging, she tried to have a doctor revive him, naturally without success. She then helped care for his illegitimate (?) daughter Maria. Mary Ann McCracken never married, and died in Maria’s house. - RBW

Henry K. Sawyer [Laws G5]

DESCRIPTION: Henry K. Sawyer is fatally burned when he is trapped under a derailed train. He is taken from the wreck, but all he can do is bid farewell to his wife before he dies.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Flanders/Ballard/Brown/Barry-NewGreenMountainSongster)

KEYWORDS: train wreck farewell death

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
June 8, 1848 - Henry Sawyer, superintendent of repairs for the Bangor and Oldtown Railroad, is fatally injured when his train derails

FOUND IN: US(NE)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Laws G5, "Henry K. Sawyer"
Flanders/Ballard/Brown/Barry-NewGreenMountainSongster, pp. 58-60, "Henry K. Sawyer" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 6-7, "Henry K. Sawyer" (1 text)
Cohen-LongSteelRail, p. 272, "Henry K. Sawyer" (notes only)
DT 757, HENRSAWY
Roud #3249

NOTES [19 words]: Flanders/Ballard/Brown/Barry-NewGreenMountainSongster declares this "the second oldest song of railroad life." - RBW

Last updated in version 3.0

File: LG05

Henry Martyn [Child 250]

DESCRIPTION: Henry Martin (Martyn), the youngest of three brothers, is chosen by lot to turn pirate "to maintain his brothers and he." Martin overhauls a merchant ship; he either sinks her or is himself mortally wounded.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1825 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 28(181))

KEYWORDS: brother pirate

FOUND IN: Britain(England(All),Scotland(Aber),Wales) US(Ap,MW,NE,Ro,SE,So,SW) Canada(Mar,Newf)

REFERENCES (35 citations):
Child 250, "Henry Martyn" (5 texts, 1 tune) {Bronson’s #42}
Bronson 250, Henry Martyn" (50 versions+2 in addenda)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 250, "Henry Martyn" (5 versions: #8, #12, #31, #33, #36)
Broadwood-EnglishTraditionalSongsAndCarols, pp. 30-31, "Henry Martin or Salt Seas (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 78-79, "Henry Martin" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Gl 117)
Kidson-TraditionalTunes, pp. 29-32, "Henry Martin" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
OShaughnessy-YellowbellyBalladsPart1 22, "Henry Martin" (1 text, 1 tune)
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 87-89, "Henry Martin" (1 text, called by the singer "Andy Bardan")
Randolph 31, "Andrew Bardeen" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson’s #50}
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 48, "Andrew Bardeen" (1 text, 1 tune)
Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 24, "Henry Martyn" (2 texts, 2 tunes) {Bronson’s #16, #47}
Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection, pp. 70-71, "The Jolly Scotch Robbers" (1 text, with "Andrew Brattan" as the hero)
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, pp. 107-108, "There Were Once Three Brothers" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 81, "The Three Scotch Robbers" (1 text plus a fragment, 2 tunes) {Bronson's #6, #10}

Flanders-Olney-BalladsMigrantInNewEngland, pp. 72-74, "Andrew Marteen"; pp. 201-203, "Andrew Batan" (2 texts, 2 tunes) {Bronson's #31, #46}

Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks, pp. 80-81, "Andrew Martine" (1 text, which seems rather defective although no gaps are shown)

Flanders-AncientBalladsTraditionallySungInNewEngland4, pp. 15-44, "Sir Andrew Barton" "but including Henry Martyn" (11 texts plus a fragment, 10 tunes; in every text but "L," the robber is Andrew Bardeen or something like that, but many of the texts appear more Henry Martin-like) {K=Bronson's #2 tune for Child #167; B=#46, C=#31 for Child #250}

Cox-FolkSongsSouth 150, "Henry Martin" (1 text)

Davies-MoreTraditionalBalladsOfVirginia 37, pp. 290-299, "Henry Martyn" (1 text)

Smith-SouthCarolinaBallads, #XIII, pp. 156-158, "Andrew Bartin" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #42}

Joyner-FolkSongInSouthCarolina, pp.38-39 "Andrew Bartin" (1 text)

Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #14, "Andrew Bardeen" (1 text, 1 tune)

Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales, pp. 37-38, "(Elder Bardee)" (1 text)

Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp. 86-87, "Henry Martyn" (1 text, 2 tunes) {Bronson's #3, #4}

Karpeles-FolkSongsFromNewfoundland 22, "Henry Martin" (3 texts, 3 tunes)

Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 13, "Bolender Martin" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #17}

Frank-NewBookOfPirateSongs 3, "Henry Martin" (2 texts, 1 tune; the text is composite and neither tune direct associated with it; #2 in the first edition); also 4, "Andrew Bardeen" (1 text, 1 tune, from Moore; #4 in the first edition)

Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 615-616, "Henry Martyn" (1 text)

Friedman-Viking/PenguinBookOfFolkBallads, p. 358, "Henry Martyn" (2 texts, 1 tune) {Bronson's #36}

Sharp-OneHundredEnglishFolksongs 1, "Henry Martin" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #36}

Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 26, "Henry Martin" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #40}

Silver/Silver-FolksingersWordbook, p. 215, "Henry Martin" (1 text)

DT 250, HENRMART- HENRMRT3

ADDITIONAL: Maud Karpeles, _Folk Songs of Europe_, Oak, 1956, 1964, pp. 36-37, "Henry Martin" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #104

RECORDINGS:

Warde Ford, "Andrew Batan" (AFS 4194 B1, 1938; on LC58, in AMMEM/COWELL) {Bronson's #8 under "Sir Andrew Barton"}

A. L. Lloyd, "Henry Martin" (on ESFB1, ESFB2)

Sam Larner, "The Lofty Tall Ship" {on SLarner01, Voice12}; "Henry Martin" [on SLarner02] [I do not know that the two Larner recordings are in fact different -- these two compilations drew from the same collection of field tapes -- but as the titles are given as different I thought it prudent to separate them. - PJS]

Lawrence Older, "Elder Bordee" (on LOlder01)

Pete Seeger, "Elder Bordee" (on PeteSeeger29)

Phillip Tanner, "Henry Martin" [on FSB5]; "Young Henry Martin" [on Voice02] [one of these recordings, which may be the same, is Bronson's #33]

Tony Wales, "Henry Martin" (on TWales1)

BROADSIDES:

Bodleian, Harding B 28(181), "Henry Martin," W. Armstrong (Liverpool), 1820-1824; also Firth c.12(87), Harding B 11(1367), Harding B 11(4096), 2806 c.16(273), Harding B 17(295a), Harding B 11(4207), Firth b.26(253), Firth c.26(210), "Henry Martin"

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Sir Andrew Barton" [Child 167] (plot, lyrics)

ALTERNATE TITLES:

Elder Bordee

NOTES [271 words]: This ballad cannot always be distinguished in practice from "Sir Andrew Barton" [Child 167]; see also the discussion under that song. - RBW

Having looked at the lyrics to "Elder Bordee," I'd place it somewhat closer to "Henry Martyn" than to "Sir Andrew Barton" [even though the Lawrence Older recording lists it as Child #167]; it's shorter, and it doesn't include the theme of the complaining merchants. Frankly, I think Child goofed when he split these ballads. - PJS Child had the "advantage," if such it can be called, of seeing only British versions. Those are distinct enough. I've yet to see such clear distinctions in American versions.
Checking through the sources available to me, here are the "votes" of the various scholars:
Barry: One ballad (but with some rather farfetched conjectures about its evolution) Belden: Apparently two (but based on the close similarities of the "Henry Martin" texts, which really proves only that this is a distinct family)
Bronson: One ballad (apparently, but based mostly on others' comments)
Child: Two ballads (probably), with "Andrew Barton" the elder and the source Coffin: One ballad, following the arguments from Barry.
Davis: Two ballads
Frank: Two ballads, but with "Henry Martin" descended from "Andrew Barton" (and he prints a version which he seems to think is an intermediate) Gray: Apparently one ballad, since he connects his single short text to both songs
Sharp: Two ballads
Joyner: One ballad (by implication, since he prints his version under both numbers)
Editors who print texts from their collections but state no clear opinion: Cox, Eddy, Flanders, Randolph
- RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: C250

Henry Munroe
DESCRIPTION: At Ballynahinch General Nugent attacks the rebels under Clokey and Munroe.
Having exhausted ammunition, Munroe escapes. Betrayed by a woman, he is taken and executed.
"His head was put up" but retrieved by rebels. Young Teeling is also killed at Killala.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c.1893 (Young's _Ulster in '98_, according to Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)
KEYWORDS: betrayal battle execution rebellion Ireland
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
June 13, 1798 - Battle of Ballynahinch (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 85, "Henry Munroe" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "General Monroe" (subject) and references there
cf. "The Frenchmen" (character of Bartholomew Teeling) NOTES [269 words]: While sympathetic to the Defender cause the song blames the rebels "In attacking the Government when their strength it was so; It caused many to die like brave Henry Munroe."
"Teeling" is apparently Bartholomew Teeling hanged with Matthew Tone in Dublin (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 p.87 re "The Frenchmen") - BS
For Munroe/Monroe, see the notes to "General Monroe."
Smyth, pp. 118-119, describes a whole Teeling family. Luke Teeling was the patriarch, an Ulster linen merchant; he bankrolled some revolutionary publications. His son Charles H. Teeling is described as "The chief architect of the revamped Defenders." Charles's older brother Bartholomew journeyed on foot across most of Ireland, apparently campaigning against the British.
A third Teeling, George, seems to have been slightly less active.
Stewart, p. 23, declares "The Teelings were Catholics in comfortable circumstances, and active liberals who had ardently supported the volunteers."
Charles Teeling, though not much past twenty (Stewart, p. 23, says he was only 18), was imprisoned in 1796 during the mass arrests of rebels in that year; eventually to be released on bail because he was ill (Stewart, p. 57). His role thereafter seems to have been minor. Bartholomew fled to France in 1797 (Smyth, p. 159), to return (and die) with Wolfe Tone.
Pakenham, esp. p. 344, mentions two Teelings, Bartholomew and Matthew. The index cites Bartholomew once, and Matthew three times. But the first two references to Teeling do not mention his first name, and the third could be a conflation of Bartholomew Teeling and Matthew Tone. -
RBW
Henry Stewart
DESCRIPTION: "Our gallant captain to us did say, 'We had better give ourselves up to pray ...' We had scarce lost sight of the Scottish shore When the sea most furiously began to roar." Only Captain Henery Stewart and one man more live to land ashore.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick)
KEYWORDS: death sea ship shore storm wreck Scotland
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 99, "Henry Stewart" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #2773
NOTES [16 words]: The current description is based on the Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick fragment. - BS
File: CrSNB099

Henry's Worry Blues
DESCRIPTION: Henry worries night and day about women. His baby "worries me on every hand... because she can"; "she mistreats me both night and day... to pass the time away." He bid her goodbye, prayed for and "got another woman now tie my troubles away"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (recording, Henry Townsend)
KEYWORDS: shrewishness love farewell separation nonballad lover
FOUND IN:
RECORDINGS:
Henry Townsend, "Henry's Worry Blues" (Columbia 14529-D, 1929; on USChartersHeroes)
NOTES [18 words]: Three line blues: the first line is repeated -- more or less -- and the last line completes the thought. - BS
Last updated in version 5.2
File: RcHeWoBl

Her Age It Was Red
DESCRIPTION: "It's a long time ago I remember it well, All alone in the poorhouse a maiden did dwell.... Her age it was red and her hair was 19." Her lover asks her to fly away by starlight. Her father shoots him with "a horse pistol raised from a colt."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1917 (Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd)
KEYWORDS: humorous wordplay love death father home
FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Bush-FSofCentralWestVirginiaVol2, pp. 20-21, "Hindside Afore" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gilbert-LostChords, pp. 105-106, "Her Age It Was Red" (1 text)
Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #147, "Belinda" (1 text)
Roud #7014
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Her Bonny Blue E'e

DESCRIPTION: The singer describes the beautiful girl "doon by the burn brae," and admits to thinking of her bonny blue eyes when he should be saying his prayers. But he is going across the sea; he must leave her for another to wed. He wishes her happiness

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love beauty separation emigration
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
   Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenry/PeopleOfThePeople H71, pp. 246-247, "Her Bonnie Blue E'e" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13336
NOTES [21 words]: Sam Henry claims this is a Scottish song. The only evidence for this is the dialect. The plot seems more typically Irish. - RBW

Her Bright Smile Haunts Me Still

DESCRIPTION: "It's been a year since last we met, We may never meet again. I have struggled to forget, But the struggle was in vain. For her voice lives in the breeze...." The sailor lives, dreams, and ornately alludes to the memory the sweetheart he left behind

AUTHOR: Words: J. E. Carpenter / Music: W. T. Wrighton
EARLIEST DATE: 1870 (Journal of the Pacific); reportedly written 1864
KEYWORDS: love separation nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (7 citations):
   Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 157, "Her Bright Smile Haunts Me Still" (1 text plus a songster version, 1 tune)
   Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen, pp. 165-166, "Her Bright Smile" (1 text, 1 tune)
   Spaeth-WeepSomeMoreMyLady, pp. 31-32, "Her Bright Smile Haunts Me Still" (1 text, 1 tune)
   Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 290-291, "Her Bright Smile Haunts Me Still" (1 text, 1 tune)
   Heart-Songs, pp. 380-381, "Her Bright Smile Haunts Me Still" (1 text, 1 tune)
   Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #871, p. 58, "Her Bright Smiles Haunt Me Still" (3 references)
DT, BRITESML*
Roud #4353
RECORDINGS:
   Eleazar Tillett and Martha Etheridge, "Her Bright Smile Haunts Me Still" (on USWarnerColl01)

Her Hair Was Like the Raven's Wing

DESCRIPTION: "Her hair was like the raven's wing, And her neck was like the swan"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan4)
KEYWORDS: beauty hair
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
   Greig/Duncan4 717, "Her Hair Was Like the Raven's Wing" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #6155
NOTES [64 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan4 fragment. - BS
A quick google search shows that these similies are extremely common (the name "swan-neck" goes back at least as far as Edith Svanneschals, "Edith Swan-Neck" the beloved mistress -- perhaps wife -- of King Harold II of England, who died at Hastings); I suspect the source of this
Her Hair Was o' a Darkish Brown

DESCRIPTION: "Her hair was o' a darkish brown, Her eyes o' a bonnie blue, Her cheeks were like the roses red, And the curls hung roun' her broo"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan6)
KEYWORDS: beauty hair
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan6 1209, "Her Hair Was o' a Darkish Brown" (2 fragments, 1 tune)
Roud #6797

NOTES [11 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan6 fragment. - BS

Herd Laddie o the Glen

DESCRIPTION: Shepherds and sheep are not what they used to be. Sheep now have more hair and less wool. In winter now both sheep and shepherds wear fancy plastics to keep from the wet and cold. "Yon auld herd and his plaidie you will ne'er see again."

AUTHOR: Willie Scott (source: McMorland/Scott-HerdLaddieOTheGlen)
EARLIEST DATE: 1989 (McMorland/Scott-HerdLaddieOTheGlen)
KEYWORDS: ordeal nonballad sheep shepherd
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Bord))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
McMorland/Scott-HerdLaddieOTheGlen, pp. 124-126, 155, "Herd Laddie o the Glen" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #5128

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bonny Strathyre" (tune, per McMorland/Scott-HerdLaddieOTheGlen)

File: McSc124

Herd Laddie, The (The Herdie)

DESCRIPTION: "Oh for the innocent days I hae see, When a' my young thoughts they were happy and keen." In those days he herded the cattle and swam with "wee Jenny," then used their clothes for beds. He recalls other details of his early life

AUTHOR: William Scott of Fetterangus (1785-?) (source: Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast)
EARLIEST DATE: 1832 (Scott, Poems, Chiefly in the Buchan Dialect, according to Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast)
KEYWORDS: courting animal sex home work
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #6, p. 1, "The Hirdie"; #3, p. 1, "The Hirdie" (1 text plus 1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan3 429, "The Herd Laddie" (7 short texts, 6 tunes)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 269-270, "The Herdie" (1 text)
Roud #5594
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Hills of Glenorchy" (tune, per Greig)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Herd Loon

NOTES [72 words]: Greig: "'The Hirdie,' another of his [Scott's] songs, is perhaps as well-known as 'Johnnie Sangster.' A verse will recall it to many readers:...." It was well-known enough that Greig
Herd Laddie's Lament

DESCRIPTION: "A wee laddie sat wi' the tear in his e'e," and complains of his life: His feet are sore, wrapped in unrepairable shoes; he has no money for a new pair. His clothes are just as bad, he is hungry and worked too hard. He wishes for a better master

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (Ord-BothySongsAndBallads)
KEYWORDS: work poverty clothes hardtimes
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 274, "The Herd Laddie's Lament" (1 text)
Roud #5596
File: 0rd269

Herdie Derdie

DESCRIPTION: "Herdie Derdie, blaw your horn, A' your nowt's [cattle] among the corn; First ane, and syne twa, Herdie Derdie beats them a"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1881 (Gregor, Notes on the Folk-Lore of the North-East of Scotland, according to Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: farming nonballad animal
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig/FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #159, p. 2, "Herdie Derdie" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan3 431, "Herdie Derdie" (2 texts)
Roud #5947
NOTES [50 words]: Greig/Duncan3 quotes Gregor with other lines ("... Sic a hird a nivir saw, Here aboot or far awa..." and, sometimes the last line of "Deel blaw the hirdie's plaid awa"). - BS Looking at the lyrics of this, I wonder if "Herdie Derdie" is indeed an animal, or perhaps a "Yowie wi' a Crookit Horn." - RBW
Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD3431

Here Are the Lady's Knives and Forks

DESCRIPTION: "Here are the lady's knives and forks, Here is the lady's table, Here is the lady's looking-glass, And here is the baby's cradle."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1842 (Chambers, according to the Opies)
KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 295, "Here are the lady's knives and forks" (1 text)
Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #605 n. 65, pp. 240-241, "(Here are my lady's knives and forks)"
Dolby-OrangesAndLemons, p. 161, "Here Are the Lady's Knives and Forks" (1 text)
Roud #19714
CROSS-REFERENCES:
  cf. "Here Is the Church"
File: 002295
Here at Thy Table, Lord, We Meet

DESCRIPTION: At the communion table, "Thy body is the bread we eat, Thy precious blood the wine." Christ's "bitter torments" are recounted. "Well thou mayest claim that heart of me, Which owes so much to thine"

AUTHOR: Probably Samuel Stennett

EARLIEST DATE: 1787 (Rippon's _Selection_, according to Julian)

KEYWORDS: ritual nonballad religious Jesus

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
ADDITIONAL: C.G. Sommers and John L. Dagg, _The Psalms and Hymns of Dr. Watts arranged by Dr Rippon_ (Philadelphia: David Clark, 1839 ("Digitized by Internet Archive")) #1201 ("Here at thy table long we meet") (1 text)

RECORDINGS:
Rosa and Joseph Murray, "Here at Thy Table, Lord, We Meet" (on USSeasland03)

NOTES [96 words]: The Murrays say this hymn is sung very slowly at communion. - BS
Sommers and Dagg attribute this to Isaac Watts, but John Julian, editor, _A Dictionary of Hymnology_, 1892; second edition 1907 (I use the 1957 Dover edition in two volumes), p. 1092, attributes it to Samuel Stennett (1727?-1795). Internet sources list the same author. So I have followed that.
The confusion probably arises because Rippon's 1787 work in which the poem appears is entitled _A selection of Hymns from the best authors, intended as an Appendix to Dr. Watt's Psalms and Hymns_ (Julian, p. 964). - RBW

Last updated in version 4.1

File: RcHaTLWM

Here Beside Dwells a Rich Baron's Daughter (The Juggler)

DESCRIPTION: A baron's daughter says that she "would have no man that for her love sought her." Many try and fail, but a "juggler" creates the illusion of wealth and beauty and beds her. She awakes to see him as he is, and rejects him; he enchants her again

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1537 (Richard Hill MS., Balliol Coll. Oxf. 354)

KEYWORDS: nobility love rejection magic trick sex bawdy MiddleEnglish

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (7 citations):
Sidgwick/Chambers-EarlyEnglishLyrics CL, pp. 251-253, "(no title)" (1 text)
Brown/Robbins-IndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse, #1194.5
DigitalIndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse, #1957

ADDITIONAL: Roman Dyboski, _Songs, Carols, and Other Miscellaneous Poems from the Balliol Ms. 354, Richard Hill's Commonplace Book_, Kegan Paul, 1907 (there are now multiple print-on-demand reprints), #98, pp. 115-116 "(The Juggler and the Baron’s Daughter" (1 text)
R. T. Davies, editor, _Medieval English Lyrics: A Critical Anthology_, 1963, #175, pp. 284-286, "The magician and the baron's daughter" (1 text)

MANUSCRIPT: {MSRichardHill}, _The Richard Hill Manuscript, Oxford, Balliol College MS. 354_, fp. 509

NOTES [91 words]: This is attested only in Richard Hill's manuscript, and there is no evidence it is a song (it has a chorus, "Draw me nere, draw me nere, Draw me nere, e joly juggelege": "Draw me near, draw me near, Draw me near, the jolly juggler" -- but it also has a very un-folk-like "bob" of four or five syllables at the end of each verse). But if it is a song, it sounds very folk-like to me, and the Hill Manuscript is very "folky," so I have very tentatively included the piece.
In this case, we should probably understand a "juggler" to be a magician. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.3

File: MSHBDRBD

Here Come I John Funny

DESCRIPTION: Traditional fee-collecting song for a Christmas play: "Here come I John Funny, I'm the man who collects the money. It's money we want and money we'll have; If you don't give us money we'll sweep you all out."

Here Comes a Lusty Wooer

DESCRIPTION: "Herecomes a lusty wooer, My a Dildin my A Daldin, Here comes a lusty wooer, Lilly bright and shine, A." "Pray who do you woo for?" "For your fairest daughter." "Then there she is for you."

Here Comes a Queen from Dover

DESCRIPTION: "Here comes a Queen from Dover, This very night came (D)over, Shall she be attended or no? No be Queen be not offended... For you shall be attended. By all the respects that we owe... Oh, is your bottle out.... So come down and choose your lassie."

Here Comes Solomon and All His Glory

DESCRIPTION: "Here comes so-and-so Riding on a pretty [royal] pony Standing by [looking for] the house of glory" on so-and-so's wedding [washing] day. The singer would take Lily by the hand and give three cheers for so-and-so's daughter.
The line "Here comes Solomon in all his glory" is reminiscent of Song of Songs 3:7-11, but the royal pony is more likely a reference to 1 Kings, chapter 1. As David lay dying, his sons Adonijah and Solomon disputed the succession. David supposedly declared that Solomon, the younger son, should succeed (1 Kings 1:28-37). The actual evidence for this is thin -- really just Solomon's propaganda. What is certain is that Solomon was proclaimed King, and rode King David's Mule (1 Kings 1:38). This was one of the acts which made him King. Too bad that he proved a spendthrift who did nothing to strengthen the kingdom, which broke up immediately after his death. - RBW

Here Comes Susie

DESCRIPTION: "Here comes Susie, Strutting like a floozie, Here comes Susie, All day long." "Here comes another one, Just like the other one, Here comes another one, All day long." "This way Valerie (x3), All day long."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (List-SingingAboutIt-FolkSongsInSouthernIndiana)

KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
List-SingingAboutIt-FolkSongsInSouthernIndiana, pp, 89-90, "Here Comes Susie" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #16803

NOTES [50 words]: There is no agreement about the origin and age of the word "floozie." But all sources seem to agree that it did not become common until the middle third of the twentieth century, so this song and game cannot be much older than the version printed by List-SingingAboutIt-FolkSongsInSouthernIndiana. - RBW

Here Comes the Teacher

DESCRIPTION: "Here comes the teacher with a (great big/hickory) stick, Now it's time for arithmetic. One and one are two, two and two are four. Now it's time for spelling. R-a-t spells rat.... Charlie Chaplin went to France To teach the girlies how to dance.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1949 (McIntosh-FolkSongsAndSingingGamesofIllinoisOzarks)

KEYWORDS: nonballad travel dancing humorous

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
McIntosh-FolkSongsAndSingingGamesofIllinoisOzarks, p. 102, "(Here comes the teacher with a great big stick)" (1 text)

Roud #19422

File: McIn102C

Here Comes Uncle Jesse

DESCRIPTION: "Here comes Uncle Jesse, walking down the street, With his horse and buggy And buckles on his feet. Now if you want a fellow, I'll tell you what to do, Just get some salt and pepper, And put it in your shoe, All gone girl, shake that stuff...."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (collected from Ottie Brails Ford and children by John A. Lomax)

KEYWORDS: playparty horse clothes food courting

FOUND IN: US(MA,So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads, pp. 129-130, "Here Comes Uncle Jessie" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #18726

File: ByGo129
Here I Am Amongst You
DESCRIPTION: "Here I am amongst you and I'm here because I'm here, And only twelve months older than I was this time last year." Unusual life advice: "Never throw a brick at a drowning man." Men don't always want more, e.g. a man with a black eye doesn't want another
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 2010 (Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman)
KEYWORDS: humorous nonballad age drowning injury money
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 33, "Here I Am Amongst You" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #5278
File: GrHo033

Here I Brew and Here I Bake
DESCRIPTION: "Here I brew and here I bake, And here I make my wedding-cake, ANd here I must break through." (Or: "Here I bake and here I brew, And here I lay my wedding-shoe, And here I must and shall break through.")
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren)
KEYWORDS: cook marriage playparty
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #27, "Here I Brew, and Here I Bake" (2 short texts)
File: Newe027

Here Is a Letter, Fair Susannah
DESCRIPTION: Susannah receives a letter from the merchant that courts her. She says she will remain true to her sailor William: "he ploughs the sea Though he be married I will die a maiden"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Greig/Duncan6)
KEYWORDS: courting love parting sailor
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan6 1092, "Here Is a Letter, Fair Susannah" (1 fragment)
Roud #6830
NOTES [16 words]: Roud assigns the same number to fragments Greig-Duncan6 1092 and 1114, "High in the Highlands." - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD61092

Here Is the Church
DESCRIPTION: "Here is the church, and here is the steeple. Open the doors and here are the people. Here is the parson going upstairs And here he is a-saying his prayers."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren)
KEYWORDS: clergy playparty
FOUND IN: New Zealand US(MW)
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 102, "Here is the church, and here is the steeple" (1 text)
Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #605, p. 240, "(Here is the Church)"
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #79, "The Church and the Steeple" (1 text)
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 182, "(Here's the church, and here's the steeple)" (1 text)
Here Is to Sweet Ireland

DESCRIPTION: "Here is to sweet Ireland, the land of my birth, The land of the Shamrock, the best land on earth. The Irish were Irish when England wasn't much, And still will be Ireland, when England turns Dutch." By next summer, the Germans will have beaten England.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1949 (Nestler)
KEYWORDS: Ireland patriotic war
FOUND IN: US(NE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):

ADDITIONAL: Harold Nestler, "Songs from the Hudson Valley" (article in _New York Folklore Quarterly_, Volume V, #2, Summer 1949), p. 102, "Here Is to Sweet Ireland (1 text)

NOTES [66 words]: Nestler says this song is from World War I, and the fact that England is at war with Germany obviously implies that it dates from one of the World Wars. But, during World War I, many Irish voluntarily fought for Great Britain, and the British, although they never looked like they were winning, rarely appeared to be losing, either. Which makes me wonder if this wasn't tweaked in World War II. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.4

File: Nest102A

Here Lies de Body uv Po' Little Ben

DESCRIPTION: "Here lies de body uv po' little Ben. We ain't gwyne to see 'im in I dunno when. 'Twas hard to part, but it could 'a' been wuss, 'Case Ben mou'ter been a no-'count cuss." Other verses may float

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Brown)
KEYWORDS: death burial floatingverses
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):

Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 440, "Here Lies de Body uv Po' Little Ben" (1 short text, with a second stanza probably from "Watermelon on the Vine")

Roud #11779

File: Br3440

Here Sits the Queen of England

DESCRIPTION: "Here sits the Queen of England in her chair, She has lost the love that she had last year; So rise upon your feet, and kiss the first you meet, For there's many around your chair."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren)
KEYWORDS: royalty love playparty
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):

Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #14, "Here Sits the Queen of England" (1 text)

File: Newe014
Here Stands an Old Maid Forsaken
DESCRIPTION: Kissing game: "Here stands an old maid forsaken, She's of a contented mind, She's lost her own true lover And wants another as kind; She wants another a kind, sir, I'll have you all to know, She's very well provided for With 45 strings to her bow (x2)."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland)
KEYWORDS: love courting oldmaid playparty
FOUND IN: US(NE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 15-16, "Here Stands an Old Maid Forksaken" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST Lins015 (Full)
Roud #8065?
File: Lins015

Here We Are Again
DESCRIPTION: "Here we are, here we are, Here we are again, There's Pat and Mac and Tommy and Jack and Joe. Where there's trouble brewing, when there's something doing, Are we down-hearted? No, let 'em come... Never mind the weather, Now then, all together, Here...
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang)
KEYWORDS: soldier nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang, p. 214, "(no title)" (1 text)
Roud #10778
File: BrPa214A

Here We Come (Jamestown, Virginia)
DESCRIPTION: "Here we come." "Where from?" "(Jamestown Virginia." "What's your trade?" "Lemonade." "Give me some." The leader then sets out a pair of initials of another player, and indicates an action with the same initials
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren)
KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad food wordplay
FOUND IN: US(MA,MW)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #179, "Jamestown, Virginia" (1 text)
Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads, p. 108, "Lemonade" (1 text)
Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore, pp. 118-119, "(Here We Come)" (1 text)
Roud #19436
File: Newe179

Here We Come A-Wassailing
DESCRIPTION: "Here we come a-wassailing Among the leaves so green." Chorus: "Love and joy come to you And to you your wassail too, And God bless you and send you a happy new year." The singers remind the listeners that they are not beggars, and bless them
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1868 (Husk)
KEYWORDS: request ritual drink food begging nonballad wassail
FOUND IN: Britain(England(North)) US(Ap,MW)
REFERENCES (11 citations):
Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs, pp. 14-15, "The Wassail Bough" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gardham-EastRidingSongster 4, "Here We Come A Wassailing" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ritchie-SingingFamilyOfTheCumberlands, p. 166, "Wassail Song" (1 fragmentary text, 1 tune)
Here We Come with a Dan, Dan, Dan ("Riding the Stang" verse)

DESCRIPTION: "Here we come wi' a dan, dan, dan! It's neither for my cause nor thy cause I ride this stang, but for (name) his wife he did bang."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1994 (Kellett), but certainly much older

KEYWORDS: crime punishment ritual

FOUND IN: Britain(England(North))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

NOTES [35 words]: This verse was apparently used as part of a ritual designed to ruin the reputation of an adulterer or wife-beater; he was paraded about while verses like this were hurled at him. For more details, see Kellett. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.2

File: HWcWADD

Here We Go in Mourning

DESCRIPTION: "Here we go in mourning, In mourning is my cry, I have gone and lost my true love, And surely I must die." "It's yonder he comes, And it's How do you do? And it's how have you been since I parted from you?" "Come now and let's go and get married."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: courting playparty mourning

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Here We Go Round the Mulberry Bush

DESCRIPTION: "Here we go round the mulberry bush, the mulberry bush, the mulberry bush, Here we go round... So early in the morning." "This is the way we wash our clothes." "This is the way we bake the bread." And so forth, through many household tasks

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1834 (Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)

KEYWORDS: work nonballad play party

FOUND IN: US(MA,MW,NE) Canada(Ont) New Zealand

REFERENCES (13 citations):
Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 56-57=Wolford/Richmond/Tillson-PlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 215-216, "Here We Go Round the Mulberry Bush" (1 text, 1 tune)
Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 38-40, "Mulb'ry Bush" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henry-SongsSungInTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 244, (no title) (1 short text)
Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads, pp. 110-111, "Mulberry Bush" (1 text, 1 tune)
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 66, "The Mulberry Bush" (5 texts)
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #23, "We Go Round the Mulberry Bush" (1 text, 1 tune)
Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #638, p. 253, "(Here we go round the bramble bush)"
Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel, p. 61, "Here We Go Round the Mulberry Bush" (1 text)
Dolby-OrangesAndLemons, p. 126, "Here We Go Round the Mulberry Bush" (1 text)
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, pp. 28-29, "(Here we go round the mulberry bush)" (1 text, opening with "Here We Go Round the Mulberry Bush" and continuing with "This Is the Way We Wash Our Clothes")

DT, MULBERBS

Roud #7882

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Gathering Nuts in May" (tune)
cf. "This Is the Way We Wash Our Clothes" (lyrics)
cf. "She Washes the Dishes Three Times a Day" (form)
cf. "The Old Soap-Gourd" (form)
cf. "A Young Lady Sat Down to Sleep" (lyrics, form)

NOTES [104 words]: Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland reports this to the tune "Nancy Dawson," also used for "Nuts in May," and they do use the same tune in my experience, though I've never heard it called "Nancy Dawson."

Dolby-OrangesAndLemons mentions a suggestion by R. S. Duncan that this was about Wakefield Prison and the female prisoners there, who had a mulberry tree -- but this really strikes me as a children's song, not some sort of political piece!

There is another song, indexed as "This Is the Way We Wash Our Clothes," which shares lyrics and feeling with this. But it's a doll-dancing song; I've very tentatively split them. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.3

File: Lins038

Here We Go Up (Hey My Kitty)

DESCRIPTION: "Here we go up, up, up, up, Here we go down, down, downy; Here we go over and over and over, And here we go round, round, roundy." "O, my kitty, my kitty, my kitty, O my kitty my dearie, Never was such a kitty as this, Never so far nor neary."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1740 (Tea-Table Miscellany, according to Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes)

KEYWORDS: nonballad animal lullaby
Here We Go Zootie-O (Zoodiac)

DESCRIPTION: "Here we go zootie-o [or "zoodiac"], zootie-o, zootie-o, Here we go zootie-o, All night long." "Step back Sally, Sally, Sally, Step back Sally, All night long." "(Going down/Walking through) the alley, alley, alley, Going through... All night long"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads)

KEYWORDS: playparty courting travel

FOUND IN: US(MA)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads, p. 130, "Here We Go Zootie-O" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #24170

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Zoodiac

File: ByGo130

Here, Jola, Here

DESCRIPTION: Used for cornhusking, but perhaps a hunting song: "Jola was a coon dog, Here, Jola, here." "Jola was a possum dog, Here, Jola, here." "Jola was a rabbit dog, Here, Jola, here." "Jola was a bird dog, Here, Jola, here."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: dog nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 207, "Here, Jola, Here" (1 text)

File: Br3207

Here's a Chorus

DESCRIPTION: "Here's a chorus; -- Irish slaves -- End your quarrels." Remember Emmet and Tone. "Union makes the nations great, End your quarrels." Remember the graves of 1798. "Steel is true and God is just, Chains or laurels"

AUTHOR: R.D. Williams (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

EARLIEST DATE: 2000 (Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

KEYWORDS: rebellion nonballad political Ireland

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Here's a Health to All Good Lasses

DESCRIPTION: "Here's a health to all good lasses, Pledge it merrily, fill your glasses, Let a bumper toast go round, May they live a life of pleasure, Without mixture, without measure, For with them true joys are found"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1824 (_The Lyre_); before 1839 (broadside, Bodleian Johnson Ballads 2996)

KEYWORDS: love drink nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 52, "Here's a Health to All Good Lasses" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 340)
- _The Lyre_ (Edinburgh, 1824 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 149, "Glee" ("Here's a health to all good lasses") (1 text)

Roud #1235

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Johnson Ballads 2996, "Here's a Health to All Good Lasses" ("Here's a health to all good lasses"), J. Catnach (London), 1813-1838; also Firth b.27(104), Firth b.27(125) [some words illegible], Johnson Ballads fol. 412 View 2 of 2, Harding B 11(4161), Harding B 17(126b), Firth b.34(275) View 2 of 2, Harding B 11(3143), "Here's a Health to All Good Lasses"; Firth b.26(541), "Glee"

NOTES [35 words]: Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 340 is assigned to both "Here's a Health to All Good Lasses" and "Come, Ye Friends of a Social Life"; 341 appears not to have been assigned. The editor has been notified (11/28/2009). - BS

Last updated in version 2.6

File: WT052

Here's a Health to King George

DESCRIPTION: "You drink to your friends and I'll drink to mine." "Health to King George ... Success to his arms ... down with the pride of France and of Spain ... Let each man drink a bumper ... Success to old England and God bless the King"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames)

KEYWORDS: drink music nonballad patriotic

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 49, "Here's a Health to King George" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Gl 97)

Roud #1232

File: WT049

Here's a Health to Lord Ronald MacDonald

DESCRIPTION: An old woman drinks "a health to [ne'er do well] Lord Ronald McDonald That wears the huden [homespun] grey coat And another to [ruined] aul Leddy Jannet [who eloped with him]. That spins the yarn o'ot." (The bracketted comments are a spoken commentary)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1910 (Greig/Duncan4)

KEYWORDS: elopement nonballad clothes
Here's a Health to My Molly

DESCRIPTION: The singer gives a "health to my Molly where ever she be She is worthy of company better than me." If he were a sailor and she a fleeing fish he'd net her. "Of all the pretty maidens lovely Molly's for me"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1955 (IRRCinnamond03)

KEYWORDS: love lyric

FOUND IN: Ireland

Roud #6996

RECORDINGS:

Robert Cinnamond, "Lovely Molly" (on IRRCinnamond03)

Here's a Health to Our Sailors

DESCRIPTION: The singer toasts sailors and soldiers and to "yon bonnie lad" that has left her alone to rock her baby in Caledonia [Scotland].

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan6)

KEYWORDS: love separation nonballad baby sailor

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Greig/Duncan6 1110, "Here's a Health to Our Sailors" (1 text)

Roud #6839

Here's a Thing

DESCRIPTION: "Here's a thing, A very pretty thing. What's to be done With this very pretty thing?"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)

KEYWORDS: playparty

FOUND IN: New Zealand

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p.145, "(Here's a thing)" (1 text)

Here's Adieu to All Judges and Juries

DESCRIPTION: "Here's adieu to all judges and juries, Justice and Old Bailey too; Seven years you've transported my true love, Seven years he's transported you know." The singer wishes he had wings of an eagle to return to Polly. He vows to be rich if he ever returns

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1857 (broadside, Bodleian Johnson Ballads 2079); Anderson estimates his broadside as c. 1820

KEYWORDS: love separation transportation

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Here's Adieu to Old England

DESCRIPTION: The singer is leaving parents and sisters and "London city where I took great delight" to join the convoys; "with our twenty-six pounders we will fight blow for blow" and "never will yield"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: navy war separation nonballad patriotic
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 1002-1003, "Here's Adieu to Old England" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9941
RECORDINGS:
Freeman Bennett, "Here's Adieu to Old England" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
File: Pea1002

Here's Away to the Downs

DESCRIPTION: The huntsman calls out the hounds. He names the hounds as they hunt. He would call back the hounds to increase the sport but the footmen call them on. The joy is in the hunt, not in shooting, snaring, or the death of the quarry.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames)
KEYWORDS: hunting moniker dog
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 65-66, "Here's Away to the Downs" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Gl 39)
Roud #1243
File: WT065

Here's First to Those Farmers

DESCRIPTION: The singer lists rogues: farmers selling corn, the "thief in a mill", bakers, butchers, landlords who serve bad beer, and shoemakers. We would be happy to see them all hanged.
Here's Sulky Sue

DESCRIPTION: "Here's Sulky Sue, What shall we do? Turn her face to the wall Till she comes to."

AUTHOR: unknown

KEYWORDS: playparty

FOUND IN: New Zealand

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 131, "(Here's Sulky Sue)" (1 text)
Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 492, "Here's Sulky Sue" (1 text)

Roud #19754

File: SuSm131S

Here's Tae the Kaim and the Brush

DESCRIPTION: The singer toasts "him that's won my hert But winna tak my han' ... Deep in love but daurna marry." He was a stable boy but now he's "in a foreign land" If he were here "I wadna smile tae you ava"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan6)

KEYWORDS: love separation nonballad servant hair

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan6 1109, "Here's Tae the Kaim and the Brush" (1 text)

Roud #6838

File: GrD61109

Here's the Tender Coming

DESCRIPTION: "Here's the tender coming, Pressing all the men, Oh! dear, hinny, What shall we do then? Here's the tender coming, Off at Shields Bar....." Despite attempts to avoid the pressgang, "They tyuek maw bonny laddie, Best iv all the crew."
Here's to a Long Life

DESCRIPTION: "Here's to a long life and a merry one, A quick death and a painless one, A pretty wife and a loving one, A long cold drink... and perhaps another one."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 2009 (Garland-FacesInTheFirelight-NZ)
KEYWORDS: drink death wife nonballad
FOUND IN: New Zealand
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Garland-FacesInTheFirelight-NZ, p. 291, "(Here's to a long life)" (1 short text, perhaps a toast rather than a song)

Here's to the Army and Navy

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, boys, have you heard of the battle, The allies brave had on the shore... The total defeat of the Russians was echoed with joy everywhere." "Then here's to the army and navy, In Russia they're on the advance." The allies gloriously win at the Alma

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Dallas-TheCruelWars-100SoldiersSongs)
KEYWORDS: battle soldier navy
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sept 14, 1854 - Anglo-French landing near the mouth of the Alma
Sept 20, 1854 - Battle of Alma. The allies win an expensive victory over the Russians
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dallas-TheCruelWars-100SoldiersSongs, pp. 211-213, "Here's to the Army and Navy" (1 text, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Heights of Alma (I) [Laws J10]" (subject) and references there
cf. "Rosin the Beau" (tune) and references there

Here's to the Black Watch

DESCRIPTION: The Black Watch fought in Japan, India, and Waterloo. "Let foreign countries think of us, and if they want to war, They will soon be taught a lesson by the gallant Forty-twa." "Here's to the Black Watch"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1910 (Greig/Duncan1)
KEYWORDS: army Scotland nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #158, p. 3, "The Gallant Forty-Twa" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan1 71, "Here's to the Black Watch" (1 text)

Roud #5798
CROSS-REFERENCES:
Here's to the Grog (All Gone for Grog)

DESCRIPTION: The singer describes his "nobby, nobby" coat, breeches, etc. All are decrepit, but will not be replaced, for "It's all gone for grog, Jolly, jolly grog... I've spent all my tin with the lassies drinking gin, And across the western ocean I must wander."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Sharp MS.)
KEYWORDS: clothes drink poverty hardtimes sailor
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond,North,South),Scotland(Aber)), Canada(Mar), Australia
REFERENCES (8 citations):
Greig/Duncan3 580, "Ale and Tobacco" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 296, "Good Brown Ale and Tobacco" (1 text fragment) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 426)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 274, "Here's to the Grog" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 287, "All Through the Beer" (1 text)
Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy, p. 132, "This Old Hat of Mine" (1 fragment, which has this chorus though it's too short to properly identify)
Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 64, "Western Ocean" (1 text, 1 tune)
Paterson/Fahey/Seal-OldBushSongs-CentenaryEdition, pp. 238-240, "Across the Western Ocean I Must Wander" (1 text)
DT, HEREGROG*
Roud #475
RECORDINGS:
Liam Clancy, "All For Me Grog" (on IRLClancy01)
A. L. Lloyd, "All for Me Grog" (on Lloyd5, Lloyd12)
Tom Newman, "My Old Hat That I Got On" (on Voice13)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Nobby Hat
My Jolly, Jolly Tin

NOTES [55 words]: Although some versions of this song make no reference at all to the sea, the singer's references to grog (which is technically rum mixed with water) label him as a sailor; only a seaman would speak of grog as opposed to some other sort of alcoholic beverage. Creighton thinks the song might have originated as a music hall piece. - RBW

Here's to Ye A' and a Happy New Year

DESCRIPTION: "Here's to the lassie that aye proves sae true Here's tae the lad that's aye fill'd in beer ... I'll toss o'er this glass and I'll drink it with cheer For a health tae ye a' and a Happy New Year"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: drink
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan3 638, "Here's to Ye A' and a Happy New Year" (1 text)
Roud #6074
File: K274
Here's to You As Good As You Are (The Bullockies' Toast)

DESCRIPTION: "Here's to you as good as you are, Here's to me as bad as I am, But as bad as I am and as good as you are, I'm as good as you are and as bad as I am."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1975 (Fahey-Joe-Watson-AustralianTraditionalFolkSinger)

KEYWORDS: drink nonballad wordplay

FOUND IN: Australia

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fahey-Joe-Watson-AustralianTraditionalFolkSinger, [p. 20, page headed "Drinking Song"], "(no title)" (1 short text)
Roud #22622
File: FaWHTYAG

Here's Your Mule

DESCRIPTION: "A farmer came to camp one day, With milk and eggs to sell, Upon a mule that would often stray." The animal disappears, and "ev'ryone he met in camp [said] 'Mister, here's your mule.'" Various tricks are used to prolong his search

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1862 (sheet music published by C. D. Benson, according to Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar)

KEYWORDS: farming animal trick Civilwar

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 223-224, "Here's Your Mule"; p. 224, "How Are You, John Morgan?" (1 text plus a parody, 1 tune)

SAME TUNE:
How Are You, John Morgan? (File: Salt089)

NOTES [134 words]: The phrase in this song, "Mister, here's your mule," is best-known from its use in "Goober Peas"; it is usually treated as a joke about the fancy horses ridden by some officers, but E. Lawrence Abel, Singing the New Nation: How Music Shaped the Confederacy, 1861-1865, Stackpole, 2000, pp. 162-163, has another explanation. A sutler (called "Pies" of all things) worked near Jackson, Tennessee, and had a mule which drew his wagon. On one occasion, the soldiers hid the mule, then pretended to search for it, occasionally shouting out, "Mister, here's your mule." Supposedly they eventually returned it, and the phrase went into the soldiers' lexicon. Possible, of course, but it really sounds like an explanation after the fact.

Clearly this song is either the source or another version of the story. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.3

File: SCWF222

Herlong's Train

DESCRIPTION: "Hand me down my walking cane this morning, Oh, hand me down my walking cane so soon... See if I can't catch old Herlong's Train, this morning, this morning so soon." "I got me a wife and a sweetheart too... My wife don't love me but my sweetheart do."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida)

KEYWORDS: train derivative love

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #11, "Herlong's Train" (1 short text, 1 tune, apparently localized to Micanopy, Florida)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsAREgionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 322-323, "Herlong's Train" (1 text)
Roud #5017

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hand Me Down My Walkin' Cane" (lyrics)

NOTES [48 words]: This is pretty definitely a localized version of "Hand Me Down My Walkin' Cane" designed to promote local pride. But since Cohen picked up Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida's version and listed it as a separate song, I've done the same to make it easier to find all the versions
Hermit of Killarney, The

DESCRIPTION: On Killarney's bank the singer sees a hermit who says "Adieu, adieu, thou faithless world, thou wert not made for me!" The hermit's pitiful condition is recounted. He criticizes the world's pomp, state, and ambition and laments his own credulity. He dies.

AUTHOR: George Ogle (1739-1814) (source: Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)

EARLIEST DATE: 1839 (Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)

KEYWORDS: dying nonballad river

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland, pp. 199-204, "The Hermit of Killarney" (1 text)

NOTES [135 words]: Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland quotes Mr Weld who believes the inspiration for this song may be "an Englishman, of the name of Ronayn. The spot which he selected for his retreat was this small island, which yet retains his name; and when first I visited Killarney (1800), the ruins of his little habitation, planted in the midst of rocks very near the water, were still visible." Croker also quotes John Bernard Trotter's reference to this "celebrated song." - BS

Sir George Ogle the Younger (c. 1740-1814) was a poet and politician born in county Wexford. He served in the Irish parliament in the 1790s, and was briefly a Tory representative to Westminster.

His best-known works are considered to be "Banna's Banks" (in the Index as "The Banks of Banna") and "Molly Astore" (in this index as "Gramachree"). - RBW

File: CrPS199

Hermit of St. Kilda, The

DESCRIPTION: "And is the Percy yet so loved By all his friends and thee? 'Then bless me, Father,' said the youth, For I thy guest am he."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1908 (Greig/Duncan8)

KEYWORDS: reunion father

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan8 1789, "The Hermit of St. Kilda" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #12994

NOTES [328 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan8 fragment.

This apparently refers to Stallir, "a devout Hermit of St Kilda," who built a house on the remote rocky island of Borerra a few miles from St Kilda off the north-west coast of Scotland (source: James Wilson, A Voyage Round the Coasts of Scotland and the Isles (Edinburgh, 1842 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol II., p. 57).

Greig/Duncan8: "Words of ballad from Chambers' Miscellany." That's not definite enough for me to find. Is this in one of many volumes of Chambers's Miscellany of Instructive and Entertaining Tracts by William and Robert Chambers? Is it The Book of Days: a Miscellany...." by Robert Chambers? Something else? - BS

St. Kilda and Borerra are well to the west of the Hebrides, the most isolated rocks in all of Britain, but the mention of "the" Percy bothers me -- this sounds like a reference to the Percy earls of Northumberland, not some hermit. The Percies, who ruled a very large earldom very remote from London, were constantly involved in rebellion (the first one, Henry, and his son Harry Hotspur were involved in the overthrow of Richard II; the second, third, and fourth all had their hands in the Wars of the Roses, mostly on the Lancastrian side). As a result, they were always getting deposed, or at least in trouble. So a son might at any moment go into hiding.

The wild thought that came to me, the second time I read this entry, is that the father is in fact Henry Percy, First Earl of Northumberland, and the son is Harry Hotspur. Hotspur was killed in 1403 (in rebellion against Henry IV, whom he had earlier helped place on the throne), and Henry the Father lived until 1408 -- but this was a period when no one believed anyone was dead (e.g. there were constant rumors that Richard II was still alive), so maybe a rumor arose that Harry Hotspur survived the Battle of Shrewsbury and returned in disguise to his father.

Pure, wild, crazy speculation, of course. - RBW
Hermit, The
DESCRIPTION: "A hermit who dwelt in the Solitudes crossed me" and stops the singer, saying, "No rest but the grave for a Pilgrim of Love." He urges the singer to rest until after the "burning noon passes." The ending is apparently lost
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1975 (Fahey-Joe-Watson-AustralianTraditionalFolkSinger)
KEYWORDS: travel
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fahey-Joe-Watson-AustralianTraditionalFolkSinger, [p. 20, page headed "Drinking Song"], "The Hermit" (1 short text)
File: FaWTHerm

Hermitage Castle
DESCRIPTION: The bloody history of the castle is recalled, the "river runs as broon" as blood. Once "the willing slave of love A queen cam riding doon... From Jedburgh to Hermitage That bright October day." Now "a ghostly band" repeats the ride.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1989 (McMorland/Scott-HerdLaddieOTheGlen)
KEYWORDS: love reunion Scotland royalty ghost
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
16 Oct 1566 - Bothwell's mistress, Mary Queen of Scots, rides from Jedburgh to Hermitage Castle to "consult with" the wounded Bothwell (source: see Notes).
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotl(And(Bord))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
McMorland/Scott-HerdLaddieOTheGlen, pp. 56, 150, "Hermitage Castle" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #21744
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Tramps and Hawkers" (tune, per McMorland/Scott-HerdLaddieOTheGlen) and references there NOTES [83 words]: For a reference to Mary's ride see Antonia Fraser, Mary Queen of Scots (New York: Dell Publishing, 1969), pp. 274-275.
For a general historic reference see the Wikipedia "Hermitage Castle" entry (1 October 2013). - BS
Mary's relationship with Bothwell was one of the key reasons for her overthrow, so this song covers one of the most important events of her reign. Which probably explains why there is a ghost story -- I seem to recall a lot of Scottish tales of ghosts associated with Mary. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.2
File: McSc056

Hero of the Coast
DESCRIPTION: "Now you've heard of old Ned Kelly And other outlaws of fame, But now we have a new one, Stan Graham is his name." He shoots four policemen and heads for the bush. The army is called out to hunt him. It's too bad he can't fight the Japanese
AUTHOR: Jim S. Case
EARLIEST DATE: before 1945 (source: Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ)
KEYWORDS: outlaw New Zealand police army
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ, pp. 156-157, "The Hero of the Coast" (1 text, tune referenced)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Yellow Rose of Texas" (portion of tune)
File: BaRo156
Heroes, British Heroes

DESCRIPTION: "We sing of these soldiers and sailors, The deeds they have done on the foam, But what of the lads that work in the mine? Little of these do we know. They are heroes, British heroes." They face danger and death with no warning, and often die without hope

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1954 (MacColl-ShuttleAndCage-IndustrialFolkBallads)

KEYWORDS: mining death

FOUND IN: Britain(England(North))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
MacColl-ShuttleAndCage-IndustrialFolkBallads, pp. 12-13, "Heroes, British Heroes" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, BIRTHERO*

File: MacCS12

Herring Gibbers, The

DESCRIPTION: "It's all about the herring gibbers and how they get along." The packers and gibbers wake and cannot find their pants or socks. Some others laugh at the joke. The song names the captain, second hand, cook and one leaving Newfoundland.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Peacock)

KEYWORDS: fishing sea ship derivative moniker

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 132-135, "The Herring Gibbers" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Roud #667

RECORDINGS:
Mrs. Freeman Bennett, "The Herring Gibbers" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
Joshua Osborne, "The Herring Gibbers" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Lumber Camp Song" (theme and tune)

NOTES [101 words]: Peacock re [the Lumber Camp Song]: "The Herring Gibbers [could be] the original version. However, considering the fact that the lumbering version has been traced back at least a hundred years I am inclined to give it priority" - BS
The Lumber Camp Song is also much more widespread, making it a better candidate for parodying. Roud resolves the question by lumping the two.
Peacock's versions refer to the "second hand" Sandy/Stanley Royle. A "second hand" in Newfoundland dialect is the officer who would elsewhere be referred to as the "first mate" or "executive officer" -- the #2 officer of the ship. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: Pea132

Herring in Salt, A

DESCRIPTION: "I hae laid a herring in saut Lass, gin ye lo’e me, tell me now." The singer gives reasons for her to "tell me now": "I hae brew’d a forpit o’ maut," "a calf that will soon be a cow," "a house upon yon moor," ... but "I canna come ilka day to woo"

AUTHOR: James Tytler (1747-1805) (source: broadside NLScotland L.C.Fol.70(127b))

EARLIEST DATE: 1776 (Herd); 1843 (Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong) [see NOTES]

KEYWORDS: courting farming humorous derivative food

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig/Duncan4 890, "I Hae Laid a Herrin’ in Saut" (1 text, 1 tune)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, pp. 335-336, "Lass Gin Ye Lo’e Me" with Herd's ("I hae layen three herring a’ sa’t" ) (1 text)
Roud #6138

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Johnson Ballads fol. 25, "A Herring in Salt" ("I ha’e laid a herring in salt"), J. Catnach (London), 1813-1838
NLScotland, L.C.Fol.70(127b), "Lass, Gin Ye Lo’e Me," Poet's Box (Glasgow), 1856
Cross-References:

cf. "I Hae Layen Three Herrings a Sa't (I Cannot Come Every Day to Woo)" (probable original)

Notes [246 words]: NLSScotland commentary to broadside L.C.Fol.70(127b): "This broadside not only gives the reader the song, as reworked by James Tytler [1747-1805] in the 'Scots Musical Museum' (c. 1790) but also [like Whitelaw] gives the older version of 'Lass, gin ye Lo'e Me', as it appeared in Herd's 'Ancient and Modern Scottish Songs' (1776). The first line of Tytler's version is, 'I hae laied a herring in saut', and the older version begins, 'I ha'e layen three herrings a-sa't'."

Not all of the arguments presented by the singer are entirely convincing. "I hae a hen ... That ilka day lays me an egg" but the hen has "a hapitie leg." "I hae a cheese upon my shelf" but "soon wi' mites 'twill rin itself." The house is big enough that "three sparrows may dance upon the floor." Money may not run fast and free: "a penny to keep, and a penny to spen'.'" The Herd fragment is hardly more convincing and also speaks more of potential than present wealth: the calf would be a cow, as in Tytler, and a grice would be a sow. As in Tytler, the suitor is too busy to "cum ilka day ... to lilt and to woo." - BS

This is clearly Tytler's rewrite of "I Hae Layen Three Herrings a Sa't (I Cannot Come Every Day to Woo)"; I could argue for lumping them, since the two are very close in content. Steve Roud seems to be moving both songs, originally #8543 and #6138, to the latter number. But because this is a deliberate rewrite, I'm keeping them separate. Perhaps best to see both listings, though. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2

File: GrD4890

---

Herring Loves the Moonlight, The (The Dreg Song)

Description: "The herring loves the moonlight, The mackerel loves the wind; But the oyster loves the dredging song, For she comes of a gentle kind." The oysters are called, and hearers are urged to buy them.

Author: unknown

Earliest Date: 1962 (Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose), with related materials going back to at least 1776 (Herd)

Keywords: food fishing

Found In:

References (3 Citations):

- Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #870, p. 325, "(The herring loves the merry moonlight)"

- DT, DREGSONG?

Additional: Lady Caroline Kerrison, edited with notes by Lucy Toulmin Smith, _A commonplace Book of the Fifteenth Century: A Religious Play and Poetry, Legal Forms, and Local Accounts_, privately printed, 1886, p. 11, "(no title)" (1 short text)

- Roud #8628?

Cross-References:

- cf. "Quo' the Haddock to the Skate" (lyrics)?
- cf. "The Fox Loves the Valley" (lyrics)

Notes [398 words]: This is rather a conundrum, though it may be the fault of one or another of the Fisher Family (probably Archie). There is, in Herd, a song beginning "I rade to London yesterday," and continuing

- Hay-cock, quo' the seale to the eel,
- Cock nae I my tail wee?
- Tail-weel, or if hare,
- Hunt the dog frae the deer,

This was recorded by Cilla Fisher. A similar song is indexed as "Quo' the Haddock to the Skate."

The version in the Digital Tradition ends with

- The oysters are a gentle kin,
- They winna tak unless you sing.
- Come buy my oysters aff the bing,
- To serve the sheriff and the king,
- And the commons o' the land,
- And the commons o' the sea;

Hey benedicte, and that's good Latin.

Murray Shoolbraid's Digital Tradition notes imply that this is from another source.

And Archie Fisher has recorded that as "Dreg Song." But he prefices it with a verse quoted as a Mother Goose rhyme by the Baring-Goulds (#870): "The herring loves the moonlight...." But this is from Walter Scott. There is, however, a very similar rhyme in Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes (#206): "The hart he loves the high wood, The hare she loves the hill; The knight he loves his bright sword, The lady loves her will," which is thematically similar to some of the tales related to "The Marriage of Sir Gawain" [Child 31]."

The Toulmin Smith book cited above gives the earliest form of the poem about the hart, from New Haven, Yale University, Beinecke Library MS. 365 [olim Ipswich County Hall deposit, Hillwood; prior Brome Hall, Suffolk], copied in the fifteenth century:
The hart lovyt e wood, the hare lovyt e hyll;
The knyth lovyt hys sword, the carlf lovyt hys byll;
The fowlle lovyt hys folly, the wysseman lovyt hys skyll,
The properte of a shrod qwen ys to have hyr wyll.
(Toulmin Smith, p. 11) i.e.
The hart loves the wood, the hare loves the hill,
The knight loves his sword, the churl loves his bill (bull?);
The fool loves his folly, the wise man love his skill,
The properte of a shrewd (?) queen is to have her will.
This is followed by a series of anti-feminist puzzles encoded in a very simple cipher.
This manuscript is also one of three copies of "The Salutation Carol"; see that entry for background on the manuscript.
So I don't know what genuinely goes with what. For the moment, I'm lumping the whole mess here.
For another example of this sort of verse, see "The Fox Loves the Valley." - RBW
Last updated in version 5.3

Hesitation Blues

DESCRIPTION: "Well, standing on the corner with a dollar in my hand, Lookin' for a woman who's lookin' for a man, Tell me, how long do I have to wait...?" The women want to see the money before they become friendly. The singer grumbles about sex

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (recording, Esther Bigeou)
KEYWORDS: sex whore money
FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 507, "I Got de Hezotation Stockings and de Hezotation Shoes" (1 short text, with a verse and chorus from "Hesitation Blues" and a verse from "Wanderin")
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 507, "I Got de Hezotation Stockings and de Hezotatin Shoes" (1 tune plus a text excerpt)
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, pp. 276-277, (no title) (1 text, beginning "Ships in de ocean, rocks in de sea, Blond-headed woman Mak a fool out of me" but with chorus "Tell me how long I'll have to wait! Oh, tell me, honey, don't hesitate!")
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 75, "Hesitation Blues" (1 text)
Roud #11765

RECORDINGS:
Allen Brothers, "Can I Get You Now" (Vocalion 02890, 1935)
Jesse Ashlock w. Bill Boyd & his Cowboy Ramblers, "Must I Hesitate?" (Bluebird B-6351, 1936)
Esther Bigeou, "Hesitating Blues" (OKeh 8065, 1923)
Milton Brown & his Musical Brownies, "The Hesitation Blues" (Decca 5266, 1936)
(Columbia 15240-D, 1928; Velvet Tone 2496-V/Clarion 5436-C [both as Clayton & Parker], 1932; rec. 1927; on KMM)
Sam Collins, "Hesitation Blues" (Gennett 6379, 1927; Champion 15472, 1928; Bell 1173/Supertone 350/Silvertone 5181?, all n.d.; rec. 1927)
Walter "Buddy Boy" Hawkins, "Voice Throwing Blues" (Paramount 12802, 1929; on TimesAint01)
Jim Jackson, "Hesitation Blues (Oh! Baby, Must I Hesitate?)" (Vocalion 1477, 1930)
Sara Martin (& Eva Taylor), "Hesitation Blues" (OKeh 8082, 1923)
Wingy Manone & his orchestra, "Hesitation Blues (Oh! Baby Must I Hesitate)" (Bluebird B-6394, 1936)
Reaves White County Ramblers, "Hesitation Blues" (Vocalion 5217, 1928)
Arthur Smith Trio, "Hesitating Blues" (Bluebird B-8101, 1939)
Cas Wallin, "Hesitation Blues" (on FarMtns4)
cf. Charlie Poole and the North Carolina Ramblers, "If the River Was Whiskey" (with verses from this song and "Rye Whiskey"; Columbia 15545-D, 1930; on CPoole02)
NOTES [99 words]: W. C. Handy produced a song, "The Hesitating Blues" (copyright 1915; see Handy/Silverman-BluesAnAnthology, pp. 100-103) which uses this key line, but it is much more elaborate and with a different plot; I suspect they are separate songs, with one inspiring the other. Though the Brown text shows how mutable such blues can be. - RBW
The Esther Bigeou recording gives the writing credit to Handy; the Sara Martin (note the different title) attributes the song to Billy Smythe & Scott Middletonn. Is it the same song? Are they variants? We need to hear the actual records to sort all this out. - PJS
Last updated in version 4.3
File: FSWB075

Hesleys, The
DESCRIPTION: Stories about the outcast Hesley family. Mrs. Hesley throws a man's boots in the street for refusing to board with her. She steals sheep. Her daughter cannot not find a husband even when she goes to Newark. And so forth
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1958
KEYWORDS: family
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cazden/Haufrecht/Studer-FolkSongsOfTheCatskills 163, "The Buck Sheep-The Hesleys" (1 text+fragment, 1 tune)
ST FSC163 (Partial)
File: FSC163

Hevey's Mare
DESCRIPTION: "The Major," Jemmy at his side, takes Hevey's mare so that he need not chase traitors on foot. Sirr's need was sufficient to name Hevey criminal. But Hevey complains in court. "Adieu to all our seizures ... Loyalty now has few pleasures"
AUTHOR: "Ierne" (R.R. Madden) (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)
EARLIEST DATE: 1887 (Madden's _Literary Remains of the United Irishmen of 1798_, according to Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)
KEYWORDS: humorous horse police theft
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 169, "Hevey's Mare" (1 text)
NOTES [140 words]: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 makes "The Major" in this song Major Sandys. Maybe so. In other songs about Jemmy O'Brien (see the notes to "The Major") "The Major" is Town Major Sirr [for whom see, e.g., "The Major" - RBW]. Here is Moylan quoting P.J. McCall: "In turning their prisoners to pecuniary account Sirr and Sandys played into each one another's hands. The Major made the arrests, turned over the prisoners to Sandys and O'Brien (Jemmy the Informer), and the latter duly worked upon their hopes and fears ... [to obtain either] goods or money..... Heavey's liberation cost him a mare..." This, from "Who Killed Cock Robin?" (ll):
Who stole the brewer's mare?
His worship turning round,
This soft impeachment owned,
He stole the brewer's mare! - BS
Madden's pen-name of "Ierne" is one of the sundry ancient names for Ireland. - RBW
File: Moyl169

Hewery, Hiery, Hackery, Heaven
DESCRIPTION: Counting-out rhyme: "Hewery, hiery, hackey, heaven, Hack a bone, crack a bone, ten or eleven, Baked, stewed, fried in the sun, Twiddlelem, twiddlelelm, twenty-one."
Hexhamshire Lass, The

DESCRIPTION: "Hey for the buff and the blue, Hey for the cap and the feather, Hey for the bonny lass true That lives in Hexhamshire." The singer wishes he could have the girl; he cannot sleep without her, and says his heart will break

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1812 (Bell)
KEYWORDS: love rejection
FOUND IN: Britain(England(North))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Stokoe/Reay-SongsAndBalladsOfNorthernEngland, pp. 64-65, "The Hexhamshire Lass" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, (HEXHMLAS)
Roud #3182
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Katie Cruel (The Leeboy's Lassie; I Know Where I'm Going)" (lyrics)
cf. "Aye Wauking, O" (some verses)
NOTES [35 words]: Fragments of this seem to have made their way into Burns's "Ay Waukin Oh" (1790), but it's not really clear if this piece mixes Burns's source with something like "Katie Cruel" or if Burns reworked this song. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.5
File: StoR064

Hey Arise and Come Along

DESCRIPTION: The singer, in California, thinks about his girl in Canada. It's a fine sailing day and the boat is taking him far from Canada. Tell his girl that if he returns he will "drive her in great style" He arrives in Quebec [?] and drinks a health to Canada.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario)
KEYWORDS: love parting money sea ship America Canada nonballad
FOUND IN: Canada(Ont)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario 30, "Hey Arise and Come Along" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2317
NOTES [90 words]: The Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario text makes more sense if the sequence of verses is reversed: the singer would leave Quebec to make his fortune and sail to California.
Fowke: "This is a Canadian version of a well known Scottish song, 'Farewell to Fiunary'. ... [Except for the 'The wind is fair' verse, the] rest of the Canadian words are quite different. ... They were probably composed at the time of the great gold rush of 1849 when Ontario lads, like others the world over, headed for California to seek their fortunes." - BS
Last updated in version 2.6
File: FowOn030

Hey Baby Right Away

DESCRIPTION: "You told me you'd marry." The singer wants to go to the courthouse and get the license read. "Right away baby, right away, Hey, honey right away."

AUTHOR: unknown
Hey Betty Martin

DESCRIPTION: "Hey Betty Martin, tip-toe, tip-toe, Hey Betty Martin, tip-toe fine." Other verses, if there are any, are usually equally simple and may relate to dancing

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag), but clearly older, since a parody appeared in the 1840s

KEYWORDS: dancing nonballad playparty

FOUND IN: US(NE,So)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 158, "Hey Betty Martin" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Botkin-TreasuryOfNewEnglandFolklore, pp. 587-588, "Hey, Betty Martin!" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 280, "Hey Betty Martin" (1 text)
Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, p. 85, "High, Betty Martin" (1 fragment, 1 tune)

Roud #15418

SAME TUNE:
The Abortive Van Buren Convention ("Pretty little Martin, tiptoo, tiptoo") (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 286)

File: San158

Hey Bonnie Laddie, Mount and Go

DESCRIPTION: A lady asks a sailor/robber to take her with him. He had loved her before but her parents married her to an old man. He takes her on a ship. The old man sends sailors to bring her back but they are driven off. Now she is rich and the old man grieves.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1827 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1)

KEYWORDS: age elopement abandonment escape money sea ship sailor outlaw

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber,Bord))

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #158, p. 2, "Mount and Go" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan7 1361, "Hey Bonnie Laddie, Mount and Go" (10 texts, 9 tunes)
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1 57, "Lady Beltrees" (1 fragment)
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 129, "The Beltrees Sang" (1 fragment); 146, "Ramillies" (1 text)

DT, MOUNT&GO*

ADDITIONAL: D.I. Harker, editor, Songs from the manuscript collection of John Bell (Warwickshire, 1985), pp. 341-342, "Mount and Go" ("The lady looked over the castle wal") (1 text)

Roud #3860

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hynd Horn" (tune, per Greig/Duncan7)
cf. "Shule Agra (Shool Aroon[n], Buttermilk Hill, Johnny's Gone for a Soldier)" ("I'll sell my rod, I'd sell my reel" lyrics)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Waters Wan
My Parents Hae Married Me Owre Young

NOTES [366 words]: Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1 is a fragment that does not appear in Greig or any of the Greig/Duncan7 texts. If not for the very similar first verse of the Harker text I would not have put the Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1 fragment here. The Harker first verse is "The lady looked over the castle wal[li] And there she spied her marners all And there she spied them one and all Saying go an ile go with you laddie." The Harker text then continues with the usual story: "My father married me when I was young...." Harker's first verse still seems to me to be out of place, rather belonging after she describes her unsatisfying life with the old man.
I could have lumped the Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 129 fragment with "Shule Agra." The fragment is "I'll sell my rock I'll sell my reel An' I will sell my spinnin wheel An' I will sell my fleckit cow An' follow the laddie wi the red an' blue," The fourth line is against that. Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 146 clinched it for me. The second verse there has the same - allowing for dialect -- first two lines, a "Shule Agra"-like third line ("And I'se buy thee a kep o' steill") and a fourth line of "And thou gang wi' me, laddie." The pattern, if not the exact words, are also in Greig/Duncan7 1361F, 1361I and 1361J; for example; "It's I will leave my guid peat-stack And sae will I my guid kail-yard And sae will I my guid aul' laird And I'll fly the plains wi' my laddie O." My point is that the verse in Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 fits the intent (?) of the ballad though it may have replaced lines with floaters from "Shule Agra." Stretching the point, having found the verse already in a border version of "Hey Bonnie Laddie, Mount and Go," it seems reasonable to me to assume the Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 129 fragment was originally in that ballad also. - BS

Last updated in version 2.6
File: GrD71361

Hey Bonnie May, wi' Yer True Lovers Gay
DESCRIPTION: A lover is offered to a boy/girl. She/he is rejected ("I'll set him on yon thorn tree," for example): "He's fit for anither but he's nae fit for me." This is repeated until an acceptable lover is offered: "I'll tak' him in my arms twa"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1828 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2)
KEYWORDS: courting sex rejection nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber,Bord))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig/Duncan8 1576, "Hey Bonnie May, wi' Yer True Lovers Gay" (1 text)
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 201, "Hey Willie Wine" (1 text)
Roud #12968
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Jenny Jenkins" (theme)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Hey Wullie Wine
The Wadds
NOTES [6 words]: For general info see Gomme 1.207-210 - BS
Last updated in version 2.6
File: GrD81576

Hey Diddle Diddle
DESCRIPTION: "Hey diddle diddle, the cat and the fiddle, The cow jumped over the moon; The little dog laughed to see such sport, And the dish ran away with the spoon."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1844 (Halliwell)
KEYWORDS: animal dog music fiddle nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 213, "Hey Diddle Diddle" (1 text)
Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel, p. 65, "Hey Diddle Diddle" (1 text)
Dolby-OrangesAndLemons, p. 127, "Hey Diddle Diddle, the Cat and the Fiddle" (1 text)
Roud #19478
NOTES [222 words]: The Opies list no fewer than six proposed meanings for this rhyme, and Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel comes up with another, putting it in the reign of Richard III (in which case the Cat is Sir William Catesby and the Dog is Viscount Lovell, from the line "The Cat, the Rat [Richard Ratcliffe], and Lovell our dog, Rule old England under the Hog] Richard III's emblem was a boar]." He also mentions a link to Elizabeth I. None of these makes much sense.
In one of his earliest attempts to examine what the lost archetypes of nursery rhymes might have been like, J. R. R. Tolkien dramatically expanded this as "The Man in the Moon Stayed Up Too Late," found in The Lord of the Rings and as #5 in the Adventures of Tom Bombadil which first appear in 1923 (source: Tom Shippey, The Road to Middle-Earth, revised edition, Houghton-Mifflin, 2003, p. 36), which I believe means that either it or Tolkien's other "Man in the Moon" poem, "The Man in the Moon Came Down Too Soon" (his attempt to "explain" the nursery rhyme of that name) was the first published example of the Middle-Earth writings.

George MacDonald also fiddled with the poem; he made a sort of expanded combination of the two "moon" rhymes in "The True History of the Cat and the Fiddle" in the chapter "Another Early Bird," chapter 24 of At the Back of the North Wind. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.3
File: 002213

Hey Donal, How Donal

DESCRIPTION: Donald meets "a bonnie wee lass" who says "when you think that no-one sees Donal come and kiss me." "I kissed her till her gums were sair" and she complained about his whiskers. He proposed; she accepted, as her mother had accepted her father's proposal.

AUTHOR: unknown (see NOTES)
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan4)
KEYWORDS: courting marriage humorous father mother
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan4 910, "Hoch Donal" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Roud #6258
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Love and Freedom" (lyrics)
NOTES [132 words]: The "Official Website for Sir Harry Lauder" has a version of "Hey Donal!" attributed to Alex Melville and Harry Lauder. The first two verses and chorus are the same as Greig/Duncan4 910B, with some difference in spelling and punctuation. The third verse has Miss MacKie telling Donal to leave quickly because, if her mother finds him there, "ye're a croaker." The third verse of Greig/Duncan4 has the question and answer about mother, viz., "She said My mither's done too true the very same as I will do She took my father and I take you we'll baith take ane anither." - BS
Roud lumps this with Mary Brooksbank's "Love and Freedom," which uses a few words of the chorus, but the plot of Brooksbank's song is quite different, and so are most of the words; I do not hesitate to split them. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.5
File: GrD4910

Hey Everybody

DESCRIPTION: Rope-skipping game: "Hey everybody, Gather round Madison town. Like two up, Two back. False turn, Birdland twice, Kick that bird, Then spit that bird."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads)
KEYWORDS: nonballad playparty
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads, p. 131, "(no title)" (1 text)
Roud #19953
File: ByGo131

Hey for the Birds o Benothie

DESCRIPTION: "Hey for the birds o Benothie, An' hou for the Bissats o Ferald."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1873 (Harris Manuscript)
KEYWORDS: bird
Hey How Johnny Lad

DESCRIPTION: "Hey how, my Johnny Lad, ye're no sae kind's ye sud hae been." The singer complains that Johnny had the opportunity to meet her as her parents were away, but he never arrives. She concludes she needs a more ardent lover.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1776 (Herd)

KEYWORDS: courting abandonment

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
- Greig/Duncan7 1351, "Hoch Hey, Johnny Lad" (1 text, 1 tune)
- ADDITIONAL: David Herd, editor, Ancient and Modern Scottish Songs, Heroic Ballads, etc. (Edinburgh, 1870 (reprint of 1776)), Vol II, pp. 215-216, ("Hey how Johnny lad, ye’re no sae kind’s ye sud hae been")

Roud #7148

BROADSIDES:
- NLScotland, L.C.Fol.178.A.2(110), "Och Hey, Johnnie Lad," unknown, c. 1840

NOTES [80 words]: This is found in the fourth volume of the Scots Musical Museum, but it is not known whether it is by Burns or whether he touched it up. The NLSScotland broadside is dramatically different from the SMM version.

The NLSScotland, L.C.Fol.178.A.2(110) version follows Tannahill in which the man explains that it was just a misunderstanding -- he was waiting in the wrong place -- and he invites her to another tryst to "seek the joys we tint yestreen." Herd agrees with the Description. - BS

Last updated in version 2.5

File: BrHHJL

Hey Little Lassie

DESCRIPTION: "Hey, little lassie, will you have me?" He has leather gloves and wooden shoes -- though leather shoes are best. He's from the east, she's

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: c.1938 (Tobitt, according to Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)

KEYWORDS: clothes dancing playparty

FOUND IN: Britain(England(North))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 103, "Hey Little Lassie" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #13503

NOTES [31 words]: Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame: "This is a Swedish game which is played at Brownies and occasionally in the playground. It appeared in Janet E Tobitt's Singing Games for Recreation ...." - BS

Last updated in version 2.6

File: OpGa103

Hey Lizzie Lass

DESCRIPTION: The singer is waiting in the snow and cold for Lizzie to let him in. He says he'd be quiet and "wadna waken up ane o' your kin." Then, "I hear your fit on the floor" and his "fanciful fears" leave.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast)
Hey Nevuh, Looka Dey

DESCRIPTION: "Hey neevuh look-a dey." "Dey da clean." "Dey da clean look-a dey."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 2014 (USSealsland03)

KEYWORDS: nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

RECORDINGS:
Rosa and Joseph Murray, "Hey Nevuh, Looka Dey" (on USSealsland03)

NOTES [89 words]: I have no idea what this song is about. The phrases are repeated many times. The cross-rhythmic clapping is typical of Gullah "shout" hymns (William T. Dargan, Lining Out the Word (Chicago: Center for Black Music Research, 2006), pp. 58, 130, 206). On the other hand cross-rhythmic clapping accompanies some Gullah children's games ("John's Island South Carolina: Its People & Songs," Folkways FS CD 3840 (1973, recorded 1970)).

Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates p. xxvi has one clue: "day-clean is used for day break." - BS

Last updated in version 4.1

File: RcHNeLDa

Hey the Mantle!

DESCRIPTION: "Early in the morning whan the cat crew day, Hey the mantle! how the mantle! Our gudeman saddl'd the bake-bread and fast rade away...." As he travels, he sees many marvels

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1827 (Kinloch)

KEYWORDS: humorous talltale clothes travel

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Kinloch-TheBalladBook XII, pp. 45-47, "Hey the Mantle!" (1 text)
ST KinBB12 (Full)
Roud #8149

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Four and Twenty Tailors" (style)

File: KinBB12

Hey Tutti Taitie

DESCRIPTION: "Landlady, count the lawin, The day is near the dawin; Ye're a' blind drunk, boys, And I'm but jolly fou. Hey tutti taiti, How tutti taiti, Hey... wha's fou now?" "Weel may we a' be, Ill may we never see, God bless the king And the companie. Hey tutti..."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1805 (Scots Musical Museum)

KEYWORDS: drink royalty nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lyle/McAlpine/McLucas-SongRepertoireOfAmeliaAndJaneHarris, p. 161, "Hey Tutti Taitie" (1 text, a combination of "Hey Tutti Taitie" and something that looks like "The Land o’ the Leal")
Roud #8687

File: HLMM161C
Hey You Copycat
DESCRIPTION: "Hey you copycat, You dirty rat."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)
KEYWORDS: playparty animal
FOUND IN: New Zealand
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 132, "(Hey you copycat)" (1 text)
File: SuSm132D

Hey, Boys! Up Go We!
DESCRIPTION: "When maize stands more than ten feet high, And bursting cobs a yard or more," the harvesters head out to the field. Others hunt, but the singer will farm and keep livestock. The singer wishes good health for George [IV] and the governor
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1829 (words, in the Sydney Gazette of June 16)
KEYWORDS: farming royalty nonballad food work
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Anderson-StoryOfAustralianFolksong, pp. 19-21, "Hey, Boy! Up We Go!" (1 text, 1 tune, a newspaper text with a tune of the same name that may or may not go with it)
File: AnSt019

Hey, Boys! Up Go We! (Australian)
DESCRIPTION: "When maize stands more than ten feet high, And bursting cobs a yard or more... why, then, 'tis, 'Hey, Boys! up go we!" When it is wheat harvesting time, kangaroo hunting time, peach season, or time to toast King George, the chorus is repeated
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (Anderson-FarewellToOldEngland)
KEYWORDS: farming nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Anderson-FarewellToOldEngland, pp. 167-169, "Hey, Boys! Up Go We! " (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hey, Then, Up Go We (Hey Boys Up Go We)" (lyrics)
File: AnFa167

Hey, Bully Monday
DESCRIPTION: Alternate lines are a chorus, "Hey boy." The shantyman sings: "Walk down sal' pond" "Hey, Bully Monday... He go walk sal' pond." "We go out down sal' pond."
AUTHOR: unknown
KEYWORDS: work shanty
FOUND IN: West Indies(St Vincent)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Abrahams-DeepTheWaterShallowTheShore, pp. 94-96, "Hey, Bully Monday" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [31 words]: Abrahams quotes a blackfish whaler, "You have to work hard in sal' pon' becau' you bring a large whale you have to bring plenty salt to salt the whale. Have to work 'pon de sal' pon'." - BS
Last updated in version 4.0
File: AWIS094
Hey, Ho, Nobody Home

DESCRIPTION: "Hey, ho, nobody home, Meat nor drink nor money have I none, Yet will I be merry...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1973
KEYWORDS: nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 231, "Ho-Hum, Nobody's Home" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 412, "Hey, Ho, Nobody Home" (1 text)

FILE: FSWB412G

Hey, Jock ma Cuddy!

DESCRIPTION: "Heg-beg" [old version] -- or "ma cuddy" [recent version] -- is on this side of the dyke and on the other side. If you touch it it will bite you or make you "very uneasy" [Chambers].
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1824 (Mactaggart)
KEYWORDS: animal nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Bord))
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 112, "Hey, Jock ma Cuddy!" (2 texts)
ADDITIONAL: "Rhymes upon Natural Objects" in Robert Chambers, Selected Writings of Robert Chambers (Edinburgh, 1847 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 173, ("Heg-beg adist the dike, and Heg-beg ahint the dike, If ye touch Heg-beg, Heg-beg will gar ye fyke") (1 text)
Ewart Simpkins John [sic], Examples of Printed Folk-lore Concerning Fife - With Some Notes Clackmannan and Kinross-shires (? , 2007 [date of author's preface is 1914, written in Edinburgh, and signed "Jno. E. Simpkins"; this is apparently a reprint] ("Digitized by Google")), p. 306, ("Hey Jock, my cuddy") (1 text)
John Mactaggart, The Scottish Gallovidian Encyclopedia (London, 1876 [second edition, based on 1824 edition] ("Digitized by Google")), p. 10, ("Heg Beg adist the dyke -- and Heg Beg ayout the dyke -- Gif ye touch Heg Beg -- Heg Beg -- will gar ye byke") (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hokey Pokey (II)" (tune, per Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)
NOTES [50 words]: Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame has "cuddy" as "a snappish donkey" but also quotes an Mactaggart's riddle for "nettle" that seems the ancestor of the rhyme. Chambers also claims a "nettle" riddle for his "Heg beg" version. For a nettle riddle assertion for the more recent version see "Ewart Simpkins John." - BS
Last updated in version 2.6

FILE: OpGa112

Hey, Rufus

DESCRIPTION: "Hey Rufus, hey boy, Where in the world you been so long? Hey buddy, hey boy, Well, I been in the jungle, ain't goin' there no more."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1963
KEYWORDS: worksong nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Courlander-NegroFolkMusic, pp. 85-86, "(Hey Rufus)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #10994

FILE: CNFM085

Hey, Then, Up Go We (Hey Boys Up Go We)

DESCRIPTION: "Know this, my brethren, Heaven is clear, and all the clouds are gone: The righteous man shall flourish now, good days are coming on. Then comes my brethren and be glad, and eke rejoice with me... And hey then up go we"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1681 (broadside, Bodleian Vet. A3 c.29(6))
KEYWORDS: religious death nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(England,Scotland)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Hogg-JacobiteRelicsOfScotlandVol1 9, "Hey, Then, Up Go We" (6 texts, 1 tune)
Chappell/Wooldridge-OldEnglishPopularMusic I, pp. 204-208, "Hey, Then Up Go We" (1 tune, partial text)
Roud #V19592
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Vet. A3 c.29(6), "A proper new Brummigham ballad to the tune of Hey then up go we" ("Know now my brethren heaven is clear"), unknown (London), 1681
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hey, Boys! Up Go We! (Australian)" (lyrics)
SAME TUNE:
Good Fellows all come lend an ear/The Good Fellows Consideration (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN1002)
Here is a crew of jovial Blades/The Good Fellow Frolick, Or, Kent Street Club (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN1126)
I walking near a Prison a Wall [sic]/ The Jesuits Exaltation (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN1343)
As Tom met Roger upon the Road/Tom and Rogers Contract (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN315)
A thumping lusty country lad/ Love in a Mist (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN2613)
Come listen young lovers/The Country Lass for me (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN662)
Come lovers all both great and small/ The Country Lass for me (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN669)
Come ye merry men all, of Watermans-hall/The Thames Uncas'd (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN703)
Where have you been, you drunken Dog/A Dialogue between a Baker and his Wife (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN2903)
Come, England, make a joyful Day/ England's Joy, For the Taking of the Chimney-Money (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN574)
Now now the Papists all go down/ Popery's Downfal, and The Protestants Uprising..Crowning of King William and Queen Mary (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN1951)
A Country Lad and bonny Lass/Have-at a Venture (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN726)
A frolick strange I'le to you tell/The Westminster Frolick, Or, the Cuckold of his own procuring (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN924)
A story strange I will declare/News from Crutchet- Fryers (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN2399)
Young maidens all, to you I call/Crafty Maids Invention (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN3183)
I am a Maiden in my prime/The Wanton Maidens Choice (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN1209)
You Batchelors that single are/Advice to Batchelors (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN2993)
Brave Bristol boys, where e're you be/The Brave Boys of Bristol (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN433)
Walking one Evening in a Grove/The Jesuits Lamentation (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN2723)
Since women they are grown so bad, I'le lead a single life/The Politick Countryman (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN2364)
Fair maids draw near to me awhile/The West Country Maids Advice] (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN845)
You Dukes and Lords, and English Knights/.. Great Victory at Sea/ ..by Admiral Russel, May 1692 (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN3007)
See how the Tories drives their trade/A New Ballad, With the Definition of the Word Tory (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN2328)
The wanton Girls of Graves-end Town have now quite lost my heart/A Farewel to Graves-end (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN2724)
Now, now King James of high renown/.. Gratulation of King James the Second (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN1947)
The Lady Marquess and her gang are most in favour seen/Animadversions on the Lady Marquess (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN1594)
Come, come, my roaring ranting boys/The Merry Boys of Christmas (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex
Hi Ho Jerum

DESCRIPTION: "There was a rich man and he lived in Jerusalem, Glory hallelujah hi ro je-ru-m." The rich man rejects a request for help from a "human wreckium." The poor "wreckium" dies and goes to "Heavium"; the rich man ends up in "Hellium"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: Early 1950s (recording, Sam Hinton)

LONG DESCRIPTION: Macaronic song with pseudo-Latin phrases, e.g. "The rich man died, but he didn't fare so wellium/He couldn't get to Heaven, so he had to go to Hellium." In some versions, it's a retelling of the Dives and Lazarus tale: the poor man at the rich man's gate asks for bread; the rich man calls a "policium"; when they die, the poor man goes to Heaven, the rich man goes to Hell. Chorus inevitably includes the line, "Glory Hallelujah, Hi-Ho-Jerum" or similar.

KEYWORDS: poverty, humorous warning, hardheartedness, death, begging, Hell

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 184, "There Was a Rich Man Who Lived in Jerusalem" (1 text, tune referenced)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 25, "The Rich Man and the Poor Man" (1 text)
DT, RICHPOOR*

ADDITIONAL: _Sing Out_ magazine, Volume 33, #1 (1987), pp, 28-29, "Hi-Ho-Jerum" (1 text, 1 tune, as sung by Sam Hinton and learned from Dr. Norris Rakestraw)
Roud #4571

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Lazarus and the Rich Man" (theme)
cf. "Dives and Lazarus" [Child 56] (theme)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Hi Ro Jerum

NOTES [42 words]: This, obviously, is Jesus's parable of the rich man and Lazarus, with the names removed and a trace of feeble humor added. For background, see the other Lazarus songs. - RBW

This song has bawdy variants; I'm surprised they didn't turn up in Cray. - PJS

Last updated in version 2.4

File: FSWB025

Hi Yo Dinkum Darkey

DESCRIPTION: "No more hoein' corn, No mo' diggin' taters, No mo' blackin' boots, No mo' darkey waters. Jingle, lingle, gingle jee, hi yo dinkum darkey (x2)."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (Arnold-FolkSongsofAlabama)
Hi-ne-mah Tov
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Cray-AshGrove)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cray-AshGrove, p. 25, "Hi-ne-mah Tov" (1 text, 2 tunes [presented on a single staff, so it's hard to tell where one stops and the other starts])
File: CrAGr25B

Hi, Bara Manishee
DESCRIPTION: Travellers' cant. "Hi, bara manishee, will ye bing wi' me?" Translated: "Hi, bonnie lassie, will you go with me?/Hi, bonnie laddie, I didn't know your face/Will you come, will you hurry... to the camp?/If you don't get food, you'll get some drink"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1963 (collected from Charlotte Higgins)
KEYWORDS: courting drink food foreignlanguage nonballad Gypsy migrant
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland 131, "Hi, Bara Manishee" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6330
File: McCST131

Hibberty Bibberty
DESCRIPTION: "Hibberty bibberty I salliberty, Pompalary jig, Every man who has no hair Ought to/Is bound to wear a wig."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)
KEYWORDS: playparty hair
FOUND IN: New Zealand
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 99, "(Hibberty bibberty I salliberty)" (1 text)
File: SuSm099A

Hibernia's Lovely Jean
DESCRIPTION: The singer returns to Ireland from fighting in Spain, where he meets Hibernia's Lovely Jane. He says that her beauty exceeds that of goddesses or legendary beauties. But her parents will not let her marry a soldier. The singer despairs
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1890 (Kenedy)
KEYWORDS: love soldier separation father mother beauty
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H467, p. 428, "Hibernia's Lovely
Hicarmichael

DESCRIPTION: The sheriff goes to arrest Hicarmichael on a Sunday; as the sheriff reads the warrant, Hicarmichael shoots him dead. Hicarmichael is arrested and taken to Knoxville. The singer warns listeners not to live a "wrecked" life.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1963 (recording, Dillard Chandler)

LONG DESCRIPTION: The sheriff goes to arrest Hicarmichael, a black man, on a Sunday; as the sheriff reads the warrant, however, Hicarmichael shoots him dead. Hicarmichael is eventually arrested and taken to Knoxville. The singer warns listeners not to live a "wrecked" life, nor to take life, for they cannot give it, and that money will not save them before God.

KEYWORDS: violence warning crime homicide law prison punishment death police Black(s)

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

RECORDINGS:
- Dillard Chandler, "Hicarmichael" (on Chandler01)

Hickety (Buck Buck, Horny Cup, How Many Fingers; Mingledy, Mingledy)

DESCRIPTION: Guessing game. A player holds up a number of fingers and says "Hickety hickety horny cup, How many fingers do I hold up?" or "Buck, buck, how many horns do I hold up?" Another player guesses. Game may repeat, with punishments, until the number is guessed.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1894 (Gomme)

KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain US(Sc)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Arnold-FolkSongsOfAlabama, p. 87, "Hickety" (1 short text, 1 tune)
- Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #93, "How Many Fingers?" (1 text)

Roud #16287

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Hully Gull" (theme)

File: ARno087

Hickman Boys, The (The Downfall of Fort Donelson)

DESCRIPTION: "Oh Hickman boys, I'll say to you, Our fate is awful, but it's true." "On the banks of the Cumberland Lay the bodies of a thousand men." "We fought them up till Saturday night, At length the North did rain a shower." The singer hopes to live in peace.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1949 (collected from E. T. Brown by Boswell)

KEYWORDS: Civilwar death soldier river

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- Feb 12-16, 1862 - Siege and fall of Fort Donelson

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Wolfe/Boswell-FolkSongsOfMiddleTennessee 55, pp. 92-94, "The Hickman Boys (The Downfall of Fort Donelson)" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 267, "The Tennessee Boys" (1 text)

Roud #4902

NOTES [978 words]: Localizing this song is by no means easy. The Wolfe/Boswell-FolkSongsOfMiddleTennessee text has only five specific references: The name "Hickman boys," a reference to a conflict between North and South (which tells us nothing except that it comes from the Civil War), and mentions of a fight on a Saturday night on the banks of the Cumberland leading... to a thousand casualties.

The Cohen text, from a Wehman print, is no better; it refers to action in Tennessee, to a Thursday march, to a Saturday fight, to surrender, to North and South, to ten thousand casualties, and to the Cumberland.

The reference to the Cumberland is no help; since the Tennessee front was one of the most active of the entire war, the reference might be to almost anything from the siege of Fort Donelson at the beginning of 1862 to the Battle of Nashville at the end of 1864.

Wolfe did find another version of the song with a reference to "General Buckener," i.e. Simon Bolivar Buckner (1823-1914). This is not proof, but it is strong evidence that the battle involved is the Siege of Donelson.

Jefferson Davis in 1861 appointed Albert Sidney Johnston to defend the Confederate west, from the Appalachians to the Mississippi (with some authority beyond). Ideally he would have liked to have his line run along the Ohio River, but in practice -- given that he had only about 70,000 men and the Federals at least half again as many (McPherson, p. 394) -- he ended up with a line running around the Tennessee/Kentucky border. From the standpoint of defence, this had the disadvantage that two easily navigable rivers, the Tennessee and the Cumberland, ran right through it (Anders, p. 80).

Johnston's response was logical: He built forts to stop any thrusts by Yankee river fleets: Fort Henry on the Tennessee and Fort Donelson on the Cumberland.

Meanwhile, General Ulysses S. Grant was looking at those forts, and at his river ironclads, and he managed to gain permission to attack them (McPherson, p. 395).

Fort Henry was easy. It was unfinished, and the portions that had been completed were badly built (McPherson, p. 396). It flooded in early 1862. The Confederate commander, Lloyd Tilghmann (1816-1863), realizing that his position could not be held against a strong force, sent his infantry away to reinforce Fort Donelson (Anders, p. 81) and prepared to hold off the Union gunboats as long as possible with artillery alone. It wasn't long. Flag Officer Foote's riverboats forced its surrender on February 6, 1862 (Woodworth, pp. 76-77; Boatner, p. 394).

No one is quite sure why Johnston did what he did next. One hypothesis is that he felt that he needed to construct a new line south of the Cumberland, and tried to make sure Fort Donelson would hold until he could do so (this is the explanation in Boatner, p. 395). The other possibility is that he wanted to fight his big fight at Fort Donelson (an idea mentioned on p. 398 of McPherson). He ended up making an uneasy compromise, pulling back along most of his line -- but sending two divisions to Fort Donelson (Boatner, p. 395). These were the divisions of Buckner and Floyd; they joined the division sent by Tilghmann (now under Pillow, since Tilghmann had been taken prisoner at Fort Henry).

This proved a mistake, although the real mistake was putting the wrong officers in charge. Flag Officer Foote had taken his riverboats from Fort Henry on down the Tennessee and come up the Cumberland to Donelson -- which was, however, much stronger and better-sited than Henry. It easily fought off the gunboats (Anders, pp. 84-85), giving Foote a wound from which he never recovered (Boatner, p. 287). If Donelson was to be taken, it would have to be done by Grant's infantry.

The troops arrived on February 12, 1862 (Boatner, p. 395). The Confederates, who were at least as numerous as the Yankees around them, decided to attack. They had every advantage. Grant had left the field to confer with Foote without leaving anyone else in charge (Woodworth, p. 94), and the Federals were hit by snowy weather (possibly mentioned in the song) for which they were mostly unprepared -- they had thrown away their blankets in the previous day's heat (McPherson, p. 400; Boatner, p. 396). The Confederate attack easily swept the Union forces aside; the Confederate way of escape was open (Anders, p. 85) -- indeed, they might have been able to destroy Grant's army (Boatner, p. 396). But the bemused General Floyd, who was in charge, halted the attack, and when Grant returned, he restored the situation.

The estimate in the song is about right: Nearly 1000 men, Yankee and Rebel, had been killed, with three times that many wounded (McPherson, p. 401).

There wasn't much left for the Confederates to do but to surrender. Except that General Floyd, the senior Confederate commander, and General Pillow, his #2, were both afraid of what would happen to them if they were captured. So Floyd turned his command over to Pillow and escaped by steamboat. General Pillow then turned command over to Buckner, and also made his escape. More usefully, Nathan Bedford Forrest got out with his troops. General Buckner, unlike his superiors, was willing to face the consequences of his actions (McPherson, p. 401). He didn't like Grant's demand for unconditional surrender (Woodworth, p. 117) -- but he made the deal.

The Confederates never really recovered their position in the west (Woodworth, p. 119). Albert Sidney Johnston would go on to die at Shiloh (Boatner, p. 440), and it is quite possible that the Federals could have won the war in the summer of 1862 if their generals had not thrown away all their advantages due to excessive caution.

Wolfe/Boswell-FolkSongsOfMiddleTennessee suggests that "Hickman Boys" is not a reference to a family named Hickman but to residents of Hickman County, Tennessee, many of whose residents were at Fort Donelson. - RBW

Bibliography

- Boatner: Mark M. Boatner III, The Civil War Dictionary, 1959 (there are many editions of this very popular work; mine is a Knopf hardcover)
- Woodworth: Steven E. Woodworth, Nothing But Victory: The Army of the Tennessee 1861-1865, Vintage Civil War Library, 2005

Last updated in version 2.7
File: BoWo055

Hickory Dickory Dock

DESCRIPTION: "Hickory Dickory Dock, A mouse ran up the clock, The clock struck one, The mouse fell down...." Other time-related verses may be added.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1744 (Tom Thumb's Pretty Song Book)
KEYWORDS: animal nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 217, "Hickory, dickory, dock" (1 text)
Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #8, p. 31, "(Hickory Dickory Dock)"
Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel, p. 70, "Hickory, Dickory, Dock" (1 text)
Dolby-OrangesAndLemons, p. 100, "Hickory, Dickory, Dock" (1 text)
Roud #6489
NOTES [42 words]: Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel mentions a suggestion that this refers to Richard Cromwell, the son of Oliver Cromwell, the Lord Protector of England 1658-1659 (succeeding his father). As usual, this is only an hypothesis, and not a particularly convincing one. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.3
File: BGMG008

Hicks the Pirate

DESCRIPTION: "A mournful tale heart rending To you kind friends I will relate" of an oyster sloop which had a pirate aboard. Hicks killed the captain an two boys, and took their money, they fled to shore. Taken and brought to trial, Hicks is hung "on Bedloe’s Island."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1860 (broadside, according to Frank-NewBookOfPirateSongs)
KEYWORDS: pirate money ship punishment execution
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Jul 13, 1860 - Execution of Albert Hicks for piracy (source: Frank-NewBookOfPirateSongs)
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Frank-NewBookOfPirateSongs 27, "Hicks the Pirate" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #V28365
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Rose Tree" (tune)
File: Fran027
Hiddle Diddle Dirdie

DESCRIPTION: "Hiddle diddle dirdie, When I was a herdie." Apparently the cattle ran to the corn, the herder ran home and got a bannock. The laird took his plaid, leaving him out in the cold.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan8)

KEYWORDS: clothes farming food animal

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan8 1633, "Hiddle Diddle Dirdie" (1 text)

Roud #13069

File: GrD81633

Hide Away (Jonah and the Whale)

DESCRIPTION: Bible tales with warnings for sinners who don't heed: "Get your baggage on the deck and don't forget to take your check For you can't steal on board, hide away." Verses concern Jonah and the whale, Moses and Pharoah, (Daniel, Noah, etc.)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1920

KEYWORDS: Bible religious warning humorous

FOUND IN: US(MW,So)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Randolph 286, "Jonah and the Whale" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 346, "Jonah and the Whale" (6 text and/or fragments, but only the "C" text is this piece; "A" and "B" are "Jonah and the Whale (Living Humble)" and "D"-"F" are "Who Did Swallow Jonah?")
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 346 "Jonah and the Whale" (3 tunes plus text excerpts, of which "C" is this piece)
Richardson/Spaeth-AmericanMountainSongs, p. 72, "There Was an Ole Fish" (1 text, 1 tune, probably a conflation -- Roud files it with #7786, "Hide Away (Jonah and the Whale)," but the form is "Few Days")

ADDITIONAL: [no author listed], Scenes & Songs of the Ohio-Erie Canal, Ohio Historical Society, 1971, "The Gospel Boat" (1 text, 1 tune; there are six verses, with the first two being traditional and the last four written by Pearl R. Nye. Nye's version does not mention Jonah -- it seems to be a river song -- but it has the "Hide away" chorus)

Roud #7786

RECORDINGS:
Ford & Grace, "Hide Away" (OKeh 45157, 1927)
McCravy Brothers, "Hide Away" (Victor V-40104, 1929)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Jonah and the Whale (Living Humble)" (subject)
cf. "Jonah and the Whale (IV)" (subject and stanza form)
cf. "Wake Up, Jonah (Jonah III)" (subject)
cf. "Who Did Swallow Jonah?" (subject)
cf. "Going to Live Humble to the Lord" (chorus: "Live humble ....")

NOTES [108 words]: There is another Jonah song, now indexed as "Jonah and the Whale (IV)," which I initially included with this song. It uses the same (somewhat uncommon) metrical pattern, and it's on the same theme; as long as I knew only one version of the other one, I suspected they were a single song. But having seen more versions, I suspect this to be a humorous rewrite of that. All the texts, of course, are based on the Biblical book of Jonah. The humorous versions exaggerate; Cox's text stays fairly close to the actual content of chapters 1 and 2 of Jonah (except for, at times, calling the fish a "whale"; the Hebrew Bible emphatically says "fish"). - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: R286

Hidi Quili Lodl Quili

DESCRIPTION: "Hidi, quili, lodi, quili, Hidi, quili, quackeo, If you'd a-been as I'd a-been, You would a-been so pretty, o!" (Someone) maakes a song, "heels in the path and toes in the grass, Don't take nothing but a dollar and half."

Hie Bonny Lassie

DESCRIPTION: A poor shepherd says "Hey, bonnie lassie, blink o'er the burn." He tells all he would do when "we'll be married and lie in ae bed": turn her sheep for her, give her his dog, knife, and half-year's fee and sell one of his two lambs to buy her a head-piece.

AUTHOR: Rev. James Honeyman (died c.1779) (source: Whitelaw and Greig/Duncan4)
EARLIEST DATE: 1843 (Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong)
KEYWORDS: poverty courting marriage farming nonballad dog sheep
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig/Duncan4 881, "Hey, Bonnie Lassie" (3 texts, 1 tune)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 298, "Hie, Bonnie Lassie" (1 text)

Roud #6136
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 25(835), "Hie bonny lassie" ("Hie bonnie lassie, come over the burn"), unknown, no date

NOTES [59 words]: Servants and farm hands were typically hired for half a year. The offer here is for all the silver earned in that half year. See, for example, "The Hiring Fair at Hamiltonsbaun" which describes the practice in Ireland, and "Blackberry Grove" for England; the Scottish practice followed a similar calendar. See also, "Bad Luck Attend the Old Farmer." - BS
Last updated in version 3.2
File: GrD4881

Hielan' Donal'

DESCRIPTION: Hielan' Donal kisses Katie Ronal' while she picks camomile. She says she wouldn't have him. He asks her to go to the hills with him where he had a big house and livestock. She declines. When he turns to leave she changes her mind and goes with him.

AUTHOR: Bell Robertson
EARLIEST DATE: 1910 (Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast)
KEYWORDS: elopement flowers
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #143, p. 2, "Hielan' Donal'" (1 text)
Roud #1917

NOTES [13 words]: Written by Bell Robertson based on the "Hielan' Donal' Kissed Katie" verse. - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: Gre143

Hielan' Donal' Kissed Katie

DESCRIPTION: "Hielan' Donald kiss't Kitty, Comin through the Narrow Wyn" or among the camomile. She wore a striped coat and woolen gown; he kissed her when everyone was sleeping.
Hielan' Hills, The

DESCRIPTION: "The Hielan' hills are high high The Hielan' miles are long But Hielan' whisky is the thing To mak a body strong." "She'll tak a glass" or five or six "what business that tae you." A whisky "is the thing To paint it [her nose] like the rose"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: drink nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan3 558, "The Hielan' Hills" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6032
File: GrD3558

Hieland Laddie

DESCRIPTION: Used by sailors as they stowed cotton or lumber. "Were you ever in Quebec? Bonnie Laddie, Hieland Laddie, Stowing timber on the deck, Bonnie Hieland Laddie"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1846 (Erskine-TwentyYearsBeforeTheMast)
KEYWORDS: nonballad shanty work
FOUND IN: US(MA,SE) Britain(Scotland) Canada(Que) West Indies(St Vincent)
REFERENCES (15 citations):
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 50-51, "Highland Laddie" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, p. 102, "Bonbie Highland Laddie (1 text, with localization to the Great Lakes, including mentions of Marquette and Grand Marais)
Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen, p. 95, "Highland Laddie" (1 text, 1 tune)
Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 72-73, "Riding on a Donkey" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 143-150, "Heiland Laddie," "Donkey Riding," "My Bonnie Highland Lassie-O" (5 texts, 5 tunes plus fragments) [AbEd, pp. 115-121]
Sharp-EnglishFolkChanteys, XXVI, p. 30, "Heave Away, My Johnny" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gatherer-SongsAndBalladsOfDundee 27, " Bonnie Laddie, Hieland Laddie" (1 text, 1 tune, derived from a folk revival singer)
Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, pp. 55-56, "Donkey Riding" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fowke/Johnston-FolkSongsOfCanada, pp. 38-39, "Donkey Riding" (1 text, 1 tune)
Erskine-TwentyYearsBeforeTheMast, p. 297, "(Were you ever in Boston town)" (1 text)
Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 64, "Donkey Riding" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 96, "Hieland Laddie" (1 text)
DT, DONKEYRD* HIELND* HIELND3* HIELNDLD*
Roud #4691
RECORDINGS:
Pete Seeger, "Hieland Laddie" (on PeteSeeger26)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Belle-a-Lee" (floating lyrics)
Hieland Rory
DESCRIPTION: This song is about the wedding of Hieland Rory and Mary Morrison. The songs sung and played are listed. "The piper he got drunk" so a fiddler was brought in for the dancing.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1971 (recording, Jimmy McBeath)
KEYWORDS: wedding dancing drink music party
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
Roud #5146
RECORDINGS:
Jimmy McBeath, "Hieland Rory" (on Voice14)
File: RChieRor

Higgledy Piggledy, My Black Hen
DESCRIPTION: "Higgledy piggledy, my black hen, She lays eggs for gentlemen, Gentlemen come every day To see what my black hen doth lay, Sometimes nine and sometimes ten, Higgledy piggledy, my black hen."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1853 (according to Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes)
KEYWORDS: Bird chickens food
High Barbaree [Child 285; Laws K33]

DESCRIPTION: (Two) ships meet a pirate man-o-war. In the ensuing battle, the pirate is sunk, disabled, or taken.

AUTHOR: unknown (the "High Barbaree" recension is by Charles Dibdin)

EARLIEST DATE: 1670 (the title is mentioned 1611; a fragment is found in 1634)

KEYWORDS: battle navy ship pirate

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South,West),Scotland(Aber)) Ireland US(MA,NE,NW,SE)

REFERENCES (37 citations):
Child 285, "The George Aloe and the Sweepstake" (1 text)
Bronson 285, "The George Aloe and the Sweepstake" (15 versions)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 285, "The George Aloe and the Sweepstake" (2 versions: #6, #10)
Laws K33, "High Barbaree"
Greig/Duncan1 38, "The Coasts of Barbary" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #12}
Shay-AmericanSeaSongsAndChanteys, pp. 91-92, "The High Barbaree" (1 text, 1 tune)
Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen, p. 153, "High Barbaree" (1 text, 1 tune)
Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 161-162, "High Barbaree" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 419-4212, "High Barbaree" (3 texts, 3 tunes) [AbEd, pp. 320-321]
Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, pp. 133-135, "High Barbaree" (1 text, 1 tune)
Barry/Eckstorm/Smyth-BritishBalladsFromMaine pp. 413-418, "High Barbary" (1 text plus 2 songster and 1 broadband version)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 118, "High Barbaree" (1 short text)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 118, "High Barbaree" (1 excerpt, 1 tune)
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #21, "High Barbaree" (2 texts, 2 tunes) {Bronson's #2, #9}
Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 25, "The Queen of Russia and the Prince of Wales" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #14}
Flanders/Brown-VermontFolkSongsAndBallads, pp. 229, "New Barbary" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
{Bronson's #8}
Flanders-AncientBalladsTraditionallySungInNewEngland4, pp. 176-187, "The Coast of Barbary" (4 texts plus 3 fragments, 5 tunes) {F=Bronson's #8}
Thompson-APioneerSongster 7, "The Bold Pirates" (1 text)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 665-667, "The George Aloe and the Sweepstake"; pp. 777-778, "High Barbaree" (2 texts)
Friedman-Viking/PenguinBookOfFolkBallads, p. 399, "The George Aloe and the Sweepstake"; p. 407, "High Barbaree" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 131, "The 'George-Aloe'" (1 text)
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 142, "Barbaree" (1 text, 1 tune)
Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales, pp. 38-39, "(The Bold Pirates)" (1 text)
Grigson-PenguinBookOfBallads 79, "The Salcombe Seaman's Flaunt to the Proud Pirate" (1 text)
Sharp-OneHundredEnglishFolksongs 12, "The Coasts of High Barbary" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #1}
Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 5, "The Coasts of High Barbary" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #1}
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 212-213, "The High Barbaree" (1 text, 1 tune) Ashton-RealSailorSongs, #11, "The Sailor's onely Delight. Shewing the brave Fight between the George-Aloe, the Sweepstake, and certain Frenchmen at Sea" (1 text)
Shay-BarroomBallads/PiousFriendsDrunkenCompanions, pp. 102-104, "High Barbaree" (1 text, 1 tune)
Frank-NewBookOfPirateSongs 5, "The George Aloe and the Sweepstake" (1 text, 1 tune; composite; #5 in the first edition); also 6, "High Barbaree" (4 texts, 1 tune; #6 in the first edition)
Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs 8, "The Sailor's Only Delight" (1 text)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 100-101, "High Barbaree" (1 text)
Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 166, "The Coasts of High Barbary" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 91, "High Barbaree" (1 text)
Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex, ZN953, "The George-Aloe and the Sweep-stake too" DT, HIGHBARB* HIGHBRB3*
Roud #134
RECORDINGS:
Almanac Singers, "The Coast of High Barbary" (General 5017B, 1941; on Almanac02, Almanac03, AlmanacCD1)
Bob Roberts, "High Barbaree" (on LastDays)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 4o Rawl. 566(183), "The Saylors Only Delight; shewing the brave fight between the George-Aloe, the Sweepstake, and certain Frenchmen at sea" ("The George-Aloe, and the Sweep-stake too"), F. Coles (London), 1663-1674; also Douce Ballads 2(196b), "The Seaman's Only Delight: shewing the brave fight between the George-Aloe, the Sweepstakes and certain Frenchmen at sea" LOCSinging, as102370, "Coast of Barbary," L. Deming (Boston), n.d.
CROSS-REFERENCES:
ct. "The Sailor's Joy" (tune, broadsides Bodleian 4o Rawl. 566(183) and Douce Ballads 2(196b))
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Blow High, Blow Low
NOTES [512 words]: Scholars continue to debate the relationship between Child's text "The George Aloe..." and the better-known "High Barbaree." Laws considers them separate, as does Roud (listing "The George Aloe" as #6739 and "Barbaree" as #134, which will give you some idea of their relative popularity); Coffin, in Flanders-AncientBalladsTraditionallySungInNewEngland4, reports that "High Barbary" retains "little of [its] model beyond the plot outline and the Barbary refrain."
I, obviously, think them the same. (Or, more correctly, regard them as separate recensions, but see no point in separating two songs so often filed together, particularly given the rarity of "The George Aloe.") Bronson doesn't even note the difference.
Frank Shay and Coffin, among others, reports that "High Barbaree" was written by Charles Dibdin (1745-1814), who wrote a number of songs for the Royal Navy (including "Blow High Blow Low"). If so, it seems likely that he was inspired by "The George Aloe..."; I do not consider this by itself reason to separate the two (again, most especially since certain publications do not distinguish them).
For more on author Charles Dibdin, see the notes to "Blow High Blow Low."
The first known text of "The George Aloe..." is found in the Shakespeare/Fletcher play "The Two Noble Kinsmen" (perhaps written c. 1611; printed 1634), Act III.v.59-66 (a section generally attributed to Fletcher):
The George Alow came from the south,
From the coast of Barbary-a;
And there he met with brave gallants of war,
By one, by two, by three-a.
Well hail'd, well hail'd, you jolly gallants!
And whither now are you bound-a?
O let me have your company
Till [I] come to the sound-a." [The word "I" is missing in the quarto print; conjectured by Tonson.]
Child can find no historical records of a voyage of these ships, particularly in the vicinity of Barbaree. But it is noteworthy that, in the 1540s, Henry VIII had a ship called the Sweepstake.
According to Rodger, p. 181, this ship and three others were set to patrolling Scotland in 1543 (?). And the enemy ship in "The George Aloe" was French, and the English squadron kept a French fleet from joining with the Scots.
We also find a ship called the Sweepstake in commission in the 1580s, commanded by Captain Diggory Piper; she was a privateer who took at least a couple of Spanish ships. This is interesting because Piper seemed to inspire music; there is a "Captain Diggory Piper's Galliard" mentioned on p. 343 of Rodger.
I won't say that either event inspired this song, but it might have influenced the name of the ship.
In addition to the Shakespeare mention, there is a 1611 item in the Stationer's Register with this name. Rollins, #955, p. 87, gives this entry: "George Aloo and the Swiftestake, Item the second parte of the (Mch. 19, 1611, III, 456, Rich. Jones). [The Sailor's onely Delight: Shewing the brave fight between George-Aloe, the Sweep-stakes and certain French-men at Sea. To the tune of The Saylor's Joy.... Beg. 'The George-Aloe and the Sweep-stake too,' R[oxburghe] B[allads] VI, 409." - RBW

Bibliography

---

High Blantyre Explosion, The [Laws Q35]

DESCRIPTION: The singer tells of meeting a young girl mourning her lover, John Murphy. Murphy, only 21, was killed in the mines of High Blantyre in a great explosion. She transplants the daisies they walked among to his grave and waters them with her tears

AUTHOR: John Wilson? (source: broadside, NLScotland L.C.Fol.70(46b))

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (collected by A. L. Lloyd); c.1877 (broadside, NLScotland L.C.Fol.70(46b))

KEYWORDS: mining death love flowers

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- Oct 22, 1877 - Explosion at the Dixon Colliery in High Blantyre near Glasgow. Over two hundred are killed

FOUND IN: US(MA) Britain(Scotland) Ireland

REFERENCES (7 citations):
- *Laws Q35, "The High Blantyre Explosion"
- Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster 6, "The Blantyre Explosion" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Morton/Maguire-ComedayGodDayGodSendSunday 27, pp. 69-70,115,167, "The Blantyre Explosion" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends, "The High Blanter Explosion" (1 text, 1 tune)
- MacColl-PersonalChoice, p. 59, "The Blantyre explosion" (1 text, 1 tune)
- DT 543, BLANTYRX
- Roud #1014

BROADSIDES:
- NLScotland, L.C.Fol.70(46b), "The Sorrowful Lamentation of Jane Sneddon for the Loss of her Lover, John Murray, in the Disaster at High Blantyre," unknown, c.1877

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "The Collier Lad (Lament for John Sneddon/Siddon)" (theme, characters?)

NOTES [65 words]: Broadside NLScotland L.C.Fol.70(46b) is "signed" by "John Wilson, B.S.,G." - BS
And that broadside poses rather a conundrum, because of the name "Sneddon." The broadside is clearly this song (though unusually full), but the name might well be derived from "The Collier Lad (Lament for John Sneddon/Siddon)." Since both are on the same theme, I have to suspect some sort of connection. - RBW

High Country Weather

DESCRIPTION: "Alone we are born AND die alone, Yet see the red cold cirrus over snow mountains shine. Upon the upland road ride east, stranger; Surrender to the sky your heart of anger."

AUTHOR: Words; James K. Baxter / Music: Neil Colquhoun

EARLIEST DATE: 2010 (Colquhoun-NZ-Folksongs-SongOfAYoungCountry)

KEYWORDS: travel nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Colquhoun-NZ-Folksongs-SongOfAYoungCountry, p. 98, "High Country Weather" (1 text, 1 modern tune)

File: C0L2098

High Germany (I)

DESCRIPTION: Young man, conscripted into the war in Germany, bids his sweetheart come with him. She demurs, saying she is not fit for war. He offers to buy her a horse, and also to marry her by and by. She laments the war (and/or her pregnancy)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1830 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(2899))

KEYWORDS: love war soldier

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1714 - Hannoverian succession causes Britain to become involved in German wars

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South),Scotland(Aber)) Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (11 citations):
Greig/Duncan 196, "High Germany" (14 texts, 11 tunes)
Sharp-OneHundredEnglishFolksongs 56, "High Germany" (1 text, 1 tune)
Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 72, "High Germany" (1 text, 1 tune)
Reeves/Sharp-TheldiomOfThePeople 43, "High Germany" (2 texts)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 447, "In High Germany" (1 text)
Peacock, pp. 679-680, "High Germany" (1 text, 1 tune)
Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 192-193, "A Song of Love (High Germany)" (1 badly garbled text, 1 tune)
Dallas-TheCruelWars-100SoldiersSongs, pp. 79-80, "Higher Germany" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 279, "High Germany" (1 text)
Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex, ZN3231, "O cursed be the wars that ever they began" (?)
DT, WARGRMNY* WARGRMN2*

Roud #904

RECORDINGS:
Jim Bennett, "High Germany" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
Phoebe Smith, "Higher Germany" (on PhSmith01, HiddenE)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(2899), "High Germany" ("O Polly love, O Polly love, the rout it is begun"), T. Birt (London), 1828-1829; also Harding B 11(1536), Harding B 17(127b), Firth c.14(154), Harding B 25(836), Firth c.26(222)[some words illegible], Harding B 11(829), "[The] High Germany"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "William and Nancy I" [Laws N8]
cf. "The Banks of the Nile (Men's Clothing I'll Put On II)" [Laws N9]
cf. "The Manchester Angel"
cf. "Across the Blue Mountain" (floating lyrics)
cf. "The Wars o' Germanie" (lyrics, theme)
High Germany (II)

DESCRIPTION: A soldier has been called up and must leave his pregnant sweetheart. She would follow him "through France, Spain and even Ireland." He warns of the hardships and that her parents will be angry. She insists. He agrees to take her and will marry her first.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1839 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(3897))

KEYWORDS: love marriage request army war parting pregnancy France Ireland Spain lover soldier

FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond,South))

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 64, "High Germany" (1 text)
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #90, "High Germany" (1 text, 1 tune)
Purslow-TheConstantLovers, p. 104, "The True Lovers" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #1445

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(3897), "The True Lovers" or "The King's Commands Must Be Obey'd" ("Abroad as I was walking alone"), J. Catnach (London), 1813-1838; also Harding B 15(335b), Harding B 11(3898), 2806 c.18(317), "The True Lovers" or "The King's Commands Must Be Obey'd"; Harding B 15(161b), "The King's Commands Must Be Obeyed" or "The True Lovers"

NOTES [114 words]: There is no statement here about cross-dressing but she "will go For to fight ... [any] daring foe." - BS

The two songs we index as "High Germany" both involve soldiers leaving sweethearts, and I suspect they frequently mix. I will not guarantee that all versions are properly filed. Roud seems to have a few confused versions, too. A characteristic of this song is that it usually starts with a line such as "Abroad as I was walking, and a-walking alone"; the other opens with lines such as "O Polly, dear Polly, the rout it is begun" or "Busk, my bonnie Betsy, busk, and buckle braw" or "O, cursed be the wars love that ever they began." And, yes, I know that's not much to go on! - RBW

Last updated in version 4.2

File: ReCi064

High in the Highlands

DESCRIPTION: Highlanders clip sheep, Lowlandlers feed cattle. The singer says a local lad "has a fancy for me" but she prefers someone farther away. She wants paper, pen, and ink "and I'll write a letter to my dear Willie"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan6)

KEYWORDS: love separation nonballad sheep

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Greig/Duncan6 1114, "High in the Highlands" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #6830

NOTES [18 words]: Roud assigns the same number to fragments Greig-Duncan6 1092 "Here Is a Letter, Fair Susannah," and 1114. - BS

_Last updated in version 2.5_

File: GrD61114

---

High O

DESCRIPTION: "In come another one, High O! A mighty pretty little one, High O! Then get about, go! High O! Then get go about! High O!"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Killion/Waller-ATreasuryOfGeorgiaFolklore)

KEYWORDS: playparty travel nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Killion/Waller-ATreasuryOfGeorgiaFolklore, p. 223, "High O" (1 short text)

File: KiWa223H

---

High O, Come Roll Me Over

DESCRIPTION: Shanty. "One man to strike the bell, High-O, come roll me over." Verses continue with "Two men to man the wheel", "Three men to'gallant braces," "Four men to heave the lead<" and so forth, to Ten men to dip the ensign" and perhaps beyond

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas)

KEYWORDS: shanty worksong cumulative

FOUND IN: Britain US

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, p. 169, "High O, Come Roll Me Over" (1 text, 1 tune) [AbEd, p. 136]
Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, p. 106, "Oh, Come Roll Him Over" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #8294

File: Hugi169A

---

High Road to St. Paul's, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer tells about the men building the road and bridges from Sally's Cove to St Paul. "Such needed employment it is a God-send To provide for these families those hard-working men." He is among the workers down with the flu and "nothing to do"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports)

KEYWORDS: work disease technology

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 171-173, "The High Road to St. Paul's" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #25322

File: Guig171
High Rocks o' Pennan, The

DESCRIPTION: "Cauld blaws the wind o'er the high rocks o' Pennan" as the singer laments the absence of Jamie, gone to America. She discusses their parting, at which he complained that the laws are too strict. He promises to fetch her once he has the money

AUTHOR: John Anderson (d.c.1870) (source: Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast)

EARLIEST DATE: 1875 (Greig/Duncan6)

KEYWORDS: love separation emigration crime

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #21, p. 1, "The High Rocks of Pennan"; #23, p. 2, "High Rocks of Pennan" (1 text plus 1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan6 1121, "The High Rocks o' Pennan" (6 texts plus a single verse on p. 548, 5 tunes)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 342-343, "The High Rocks o' Pennan" (1 text)
Roud #3944

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Lass o' Glenshee" (tune, per Greig/Duncan6)

NOTES [48 words]: This is the only emigration song I can recall where the singer's main reason is the laws against poaching. The overall feeling reminds me a lot of "Teddy O'Neill" (to which it can be sung), but I doubt there is dependance. - RBW

Greig: ".. written in the early [eighteen-]forties ...." - BS

Last updated in version 2.6

File: 0rd342

High Society Girl, The

DESCRIPTION: "Granny, get your hair cut, paint your face and shine, Granny get your hair cut short like mine... Granny, get your dress cut short like mine." The girl urges granny to adopt modern ways, such as going to movies and swimming alongside the boys

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1953 (Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric)

KEYWORDS: humorous technology

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 130, "The High Society Girl" (1 text, tune referenced)
Roud #11340

NOTES [78 words]: Evidently written in the 1920s to heap scorn on young flappers and other too-modern young women. Yet it appears that it was performed more for its humor value; it's less a complaint than an observation that what works for the young simply may not be possible or enjoyable for the old. Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric comments that there are many songs that criticize the changes adopted by young people, but "this one is perhaps the best. It is surely the funniest." I agree. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.3

File: Brne130

High Times in Our Ship

DESCRIPTION: "It's of Martin Hurley, you bet he's not slack, He gets the two Daltons to work his cod trap." They meet rough water but get a good haul. The song continues with episodes showing "high times in our ship."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Peacock)

KEYWORDS: fishing sea ship nonballad

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 136-137, "High Times in Our Ship" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9964

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Martin Hurley

File: Pea136
High Times in the Store

DESCRIPTION: Low on bread, the singers stop at the store at Lance au Loop hoping for help. The shopkeepers complain that they are expected to give bread away. "These are two sturdy old fellows, gives nothing away"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast)
KEYWORDS: bargaining rejection shore hardtimes commerce food
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 84, "High Times in the Store" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST LLab084 (Partial)
Roud #9976
NOTES [13 words]: L'Anse au Loup is on the lower Labrador coast on the Strait of Belle Isle. - BS
File: LLab084

High Water Everywhere

DESCRIPTION: Flood drives Charley from town to town: Sumner, Greenville, Leland, Tallahatchie... "the whole round country ... river has overflowed ... levee broke" "I'm going back to the hill country, won't be worried any more"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (StuffDreams2)
KEYWORDS: travel river disaster flood nonballad
FOUND IN:
Roud #21695
RECORDINGS:
Charley Patton, "High Water Everywhere - Part 1" (on StuffDreams2)
NOTES [29 words]: Three line blues: the first line is repeated -- more or less -- and the last line completes the thought.
This is probably a reference to the great Mississippi flood of 1927. - BS
Last updated in version 5.2
File: RcHiWaEv

High-Toned Dance, The

DESCRIPTION: "Now you can't expect a cowboy to agitate his shanks In the etiquettish fashion of aristocratic ranks." The singer is out of his depth at a dance in Denver. Still, the ladies enjoy the chance "To see an old-time puncher at a high-tone dance."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (recording, Wilf Carter)
KEYWORDS: cowboy dancing humorous
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 104, "The High-Toned Dance" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11094
RECORDINGS:
Wilf Carter, "The Cowboy's High-Toned Dance" (Bluebird [Canada] B-4991, 1935)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Mormon Cowboy (I)" (plot)
File: FCW104

High-Toned Southern Gentleman

DESCRIPTION: "Down in the sunny Southern clime, the curious ones may find, A ripping tearing gentleman of an uncommon kind." He drinks heavily, wears fancy clothes, plays euchre, goes into debt. Verses often break into extended non-metrical speeches

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1863 (F. J. Child, War Songs for Freemen, according to Silber-Highbridge (Through Every Age, Eternal God)

DESCRIPTION: Shape note hymn: "Through every age, eternal God, thou art our rest, our safe abode; High was thy throne ere heav'n was made Or earth thy humble footstool laid." "Death, like an overflowing stream, Sweeps us away; Our life's a dream, an empty tale..."

AUTHOR: Words: Isaac Watts

EARLIEST DATE: 1707

KEYWORDS: religious Bible nonballad death

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 155, "Highbridge" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #15052

RECORDINGS:
- Singers from Stewart's Chapel, Houston, MS, "Stratfield" (on Fasola1)

NOTES [70 words]: This is set to the tune "Highbridge" in the Missouri Harmony but to "Stratfield" in the Sacred Harp. There is a second Sacred Harp version, opening with the "Death, like an overflowing stream" stanza, which has the most evocative tune-name "Exit." The "Death like an overflowing stream" stanza is in the Missoury Harmony with the tune Amanda. For more on Isaac Watts, see the notes to "O God, Our Help in Ages Past." - RBW

Last updated in version 4.5

File: San155

Higher That the Mountain Is, The

DESCRIPTION: "The higher that the mountain is, The lower grows the grass, The bonnier that the lassie is, She needs the tocher less." "The aulder that the crab tree grows, The sourer grow the plumbs...." Reportedly a psalm warmup/practice tune

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1859 (letter to Aytoun from the Harris family)

KEYWORDS: nonballad humorous beauty

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Lyle/McAlpine/McLucas-SongRepertoireOfAmeliaAndJaneHarris, p. 128, "(The higher that the mountain is)" (1 short text)

Roud #18042

File: HLMM027

Highgrader, The

DESCRIPTION: "Way out in the State of Nevada, In a mining camp far out of the way," a hobo appears with "a look on his face That said... 'Nearer, my God, to Thee.'" He preaches for a hundred days and leaves. The singer marvels at his heavy burden

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1942 (Southern Folklore Quarterly, according to Cohen)
Highland Balou, The

DESCRIPTION: "Hwe, balou, my sweet young Donald, picture o' the great Clanranald, Brawlie kens our wanton chief, Wha got my young Highland thief." The mother hopes the babe will go forth and steal a "naigie" and a "Carlisle coo" and return home

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1800 (Scots Musical Museum)
KEYWORDS: children mother travel animal

Highland Harry

DESCRIPTION: Highland Harry's banished and the singer mourns she'll "never see him back again!" She wishes some "villains [were] hangit high" so he could return. He had "rush'd his injur'd prince to join; But, Oh! he ne'er came back again!"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1821 (Hogg-JacobiteRelicsOfScotlandVol2)
KEYWORDS: rebellion exile nonballad Jacobites

Highland Heather

DESCRIPTION: "The heather's queen o' mountain flowers." The singer compares the heather to the red and white rose, the lily, daisy and forget-me-not. "Search roon the world -- she beats them a'."
Highland Jane

DESCRIPTION: The singer overhears another cry, "I have lost my bonny bride, My bonny blooming hielan' Jane." He describes her beauty. She was taken away soon after marriage. He hopes that death will soon take him as well

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan6)
KEYWORDS: death separation marriage mourning
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South),Scotland(Aber)) Ireland
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig/Duncan6 1240, "My Blooming Highland Jane" (1 text)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H477, p. 140, "Hielan' Jane" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 641, "My Blooming Highland Jane" (1 text)
Roud #2554
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth c.13(191), "Highland Jane" ("As [I] walked out one morning fair"), R. McIntosh (unknown), no date
File: HHH477

Highland Lad and Lawland Lass, The

DESCRIPTION: A couple argue. He is bound to fight for Charles. She is unhappy that he would leave her so freely. He assures he he will be true and finally convinces her that he should go. She sends him off to fight for Charles, "procure renown" and return to her.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1821 (Hogg-JacobiteRelicsOfScotlandVol2)
LONG DESCRIPTION: The Highland Lad says "the pipers play" and it is time "for freedom and our prince to fight." Jenny complains that he would "so freely part." He says king and country outweigh his love. She says Whigs will mock her for trusting him. He says he will always be true and when he returns "Charles shall reign, and she's be mine." She concedes that she would not want "your manly courage stay." He praises "your charms, your sense, your noble mind" and says his "sole delight shall br My prince's right and love of thee." She sends him off to "procure renown, And for your lawful king his crown" before he returns to his Jenny.

KEYWORDS: dialog political Jacobites separation
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Hogg-JacobiteRelicsOfScotlandVol2 106, "Lawland Lassie" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greig/Duncan1 123, "Lowland Lassie" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Highland Laddie" (tune and structure)
NOTES [181 words]: The alternate lines for the male part are "[My] bonny lassie, Lawland lassie" and for the female part "[My] bonny laddie, Highland laddie."
The Greig/Duncan1 and Burns texts are almost identical.
Greig/Duncan1: "This text combines stanzas found in two separate songs, both sung to the tune 'Bonny laddie, Highland laddie'... St. 1 occurs in 'A Song' beginning 'The bonniest lad that e'er I saw' and sts. 2-3 occur in 'The Highland Lad and Lawland Lass' beginning 'Trumpets sound and cannons roar'." I have kept it with the latter since the Greig/Duncan1 version retains the dialog form. - BS
The Burns and Grieg/Duncan forms may be alike, but they are much worn down from the full form found in the description. The Burns form has only six stanzas -- two for the girl, then two for the guy, then two more for the girl. What's more, it never mentions Charles. That, to be sure, may have been a factual correction, since Bonnie Prince Charlie's father was still alive at the time of the 1745 rebellion -- even had the revolt succeeded, Charles would not have been King for many years. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD1123

Highland Lad, The
DESCRIPTION: he singer says "I'll follow up my Highland lad." "I've been in Inverness Commend me to the Highland lad He wears the Highland dress." She describes his uniform: scarlet coat, green philabeg [kilt], sky-blue ribbons
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: clothes nonballad soldier
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan3 528, "The Highland Lad" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6007
File: GrD3528

Highland Laddie (II), The
DESCRIPTION: "Princely is my lover's weed, Fu' his veins o' princely blude." "Brows wad better fa' a crown" "a hand the sceptre bruiks," "a hand the broad sword draws." "He'll wake the snorers round the throne, Till frae his daddie's chair he blaw"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1810 (Cromek)
KEYWORDS: rebellion return nonballad Jacobites
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Hogg-JacobiteRelicsOfScotlandVol2 63A, "The Highland Laddie" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [142 words]: The alternate lines are minor variations on "Bonnie laddie, Highland laddie." In this case the subject is clearly Bonnie Prince Charlie himself.
"Cromek died [1812] shortly after the issue [1810] of Remains of Nithsdale and Galloway Song, which was mostly written by Cunningham, though palmed upon Cromek as recovered antiques." (source: J. Ross, The Book of Scottish Poems: Ancient and Modern, (Edinburgh, Edinburgh Publishing Co, 1878), "Allan Cunningham 1784-1842," p. 738; other sources agree)
Cromek: "The Highland Laddie seems to be the son of James VII [the 'Old Pretender' James Francis Edward Stuart]; in other "Highland Laddie" fragments that Cromek prints it's clear that Charlie is the Highland laddie.
Cromek: "It is printed from the recitation of the young girl who contributed 'Derwenwater' [but see the note above on Cunningham]." - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: Hog2063A

Highland Laddie (III), The
DESCRIPTION: "I canna get my mare ta'en, Master had she never nane, Take a rip an' wile her hame, Nought like heffing by the wame"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1821 (Hogg-JacobiteRelicsOfScotlandVol2)
KEYWORDS: nonballad horse
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Highland Maid, The

DESCRIPTION: "Again the laverock seeks the sky And warbles dimly seen... Nae mair can cheer this heart forlorn, Or charm the Highland Maid." "My true love fell by Charlie's side." Her home is lonesome, her sleep troubled; the girl hopes to join him in the grave

AUTHOR: William Blair (b.1800) (source: Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast)

EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (Greig/Duncan1)

KEYWORDS: Jacobites death battle soldier separation

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
- Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #44, p. 2, "The Highland Maid" (1 text)
- Greig/Duncan1 130, "The Highland Maid" (5 texts, 4 tunes)
- Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 297, "The Highland Maid" (1 text)

Roud #2183

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "The Harp that Once through Tara's Halls" (tune)

NOTES [77 words]: Greig/Duncan1 has the tune as "The Maid in Bedlam," "originally called 'Will ye go to Flanders' ... found in Ireland and called 'Molly Astore' ... also 'Grammachree.'"

Greig: "'The Highland Maid' I have always heard sung to a tune which is practically the same as 'The Harp that once through Tara's Halls.'" - BS

Ord-BothySongsAndBallads repeats the attribution of this to William Blair, but lists him as being born in 1880. This is clearly an error in date. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.4

File: Ord297

Highland Mary

DESCRIPTION: "Ye banks, and braes, and streams around The castle o' Montgomery, Green be your woods... For there I took the last fareweel O' my sweet Highland Mary." The singer recalls their love and their parting and laments her death

AUTHOR: Words: Robert Burns

EARLIEST DATE: 1792 (original publication)

KEYWORDS: love courting separation farewell death

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- 1786 - Romance between Robert Burns and Mary Campbell. They met in spring and pledged faith at their parting in May; Campbell died that autumn, probably of typhus

FOUND IN: Britain(England(North),Scotland(Aber)) Canada(Mar) Ireland

REFERENCES (7 citations):
- Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #76, p. 2, ("Ye banks and braes and streams around"); "Folk-Song in Buchan," p. 19, ("Ye banks and braes and streams around") (1 text plus 1 fragment)
- Kidson-TraditionalTunes, pp. 84-86, "Highland Mary" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
- Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, p. 161-162, "Highland Mary" (1 texts, 1 tune, including 3 stanzas not part of the Burns poem)
- Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 262-263, "Highland Mary" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #2269, p. 153, "Sweet Highland Mary. A Favorite Scotch Ballad" (1 reference)

DT, HIGHMARRY

ADDITIONAL: James Kinsley, editor, Burns: Complete Poems and Songs (shorter edition, Oxford, 1969) #389, pp. 526-527, "Highland Mary" (1 text, 1 tune, from 1792)

Roud #1095

RECORDINGS:
Highland Muster Roll, The

DESCRIPTION: "Little wat ye wha's coming" (x4). "Duncan's coming, Donald's coming, Colin's coming, Ronald's coming, Dougal's coming, Lauchlan's coming." All the Jacobite supporters are listed. They will be victorious: "At ilka stroke they'll fell a Whig"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1800 (Scots Musical Museum)

KEYWORDS: Jacobite nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (2 citations):
MacColl-PersonalChoice, pp. 40-41, "The Highland muster roll" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT, HLANDMST*

Roud #9746

File: MPCHiMuR

Highlanders' War-Cry at the Battle of Alma, The

DESCRIPTION: The Highlanders fight "where the Gaul and the Briton their legions unite To tread on the neck of the Czar." Their war cries "give wings to the slaves of the Czar." "And the tyrants shall tremble to hear That 'Cry' in the battle again"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1908 (Greig/Duncan1)

KEYWORDS: war death Russia nonballad patriotic

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sept 20, 1854 - Battle of Alma. The allies win an expensive victory over the Russians

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan1 159, "The Highlanders' War-Cry at the Battle of Alma" (1 text)

Roud #5828

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Heights of Alma (I) [Laws J10]" (subject) and references there

NOTES [77 words]: Greig/Duncan1: "The Royal Highlanders, the Cameron Highlanders and the Sutherland Highlanders under the command of Sir Colin Campbell played a prominent part of the battle." - BS

For background on the Battle of Alma, see "The Heights of Alma (I)" [Laws J10]. For Sir Colin Campbell (the one and only competent general in the Crimea) and his Highland Brigade, see also "The Grand Conversation on Sebastopol Arose (II)" and especially "The Kilties in the Crimea." - RBW

Last updated in version 2.4

File: GrD159

Highlands! The Highlands, The

DESCRIPTION: "Though bleak be your clime and though scanty your fare My heart's in the Highlands, oh! gin I waur there!" The singer thinks about his mother in her cottage "croonin', 'Haste ye back, Donald, to leave us na mair."

AUTHOR: unknown
Highwayman Outwitted, The [Laws L2]

DESCRIPTION: A highwayman stops a merchant's daughter. When she dismounts, her horse runs home with her money. He abuses her and strips her, then has her hold his horse as he bundles up his gains. She jumps on the horse and rides home, still naked but with his money

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1820 (broadside, Bodleian 2806 c.18(142))

KEYWORDS: outlaw escape clothes

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf) Britain(England(Lond,South))

REFERENCES (10 citations):
Laws L2, "The Highwayman Outwitted"
Logan-APedlarsPack, pp. 133-136, "The Maid of Rygate" (1 text)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 448, "Highwayman" (1 text)
Hamer-GreenGroves, pp. 16-17, "The Merchant's Daughter and the Highwayman" (1 text, 1 tune)
OShaughnessy-MoreFolkSongsFromLincolnshire 12, "The Rich Farmer's Daughter" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 21, "The Highway Robber" (1 text)
Peacock, pp. 226-228, "The Rich Merchant's Daughter" (1 text, 2 tunes)
MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland 89, "The Highwayman Outwitted" (1 text, 1 tune)
Purslow-TheConstantLovers, pp. 40-41, "The Highwayman Outwitted" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 682, HIOUTWIT
ST LL02 (Full)
Roud #2638

RECORDINGS:
Mike Kent, "The Rich Merchant's Daughter" (on PeacockCDROM)
Wiggy Smith, "There Was a Rich Farmer at Sheffield" (on Voice11)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 c.18(142), "The Highwayman Outwitted by the Farmer's Daughter," J. Pitts (London), 1802-1819; also Harding B 11(92), Firth c.17(17), "The Lincolnshire Farmer's Daughter"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Crafty Farmer" [Child 283; Laws L1]

NOTES [130 words]: It's just possible that this has a real-life origin, though I doubt it: David Brandon, in Stand and Deliver! A History of Highway Robbery, pp. 29-31, reports that one Isaac Atkinson held up a young woman, who -- apparently thinking he wanted something harder to recover than her money -- threw a bag of coins in the ditch. Atkinson, instead of either pursuing his seduction or doing anything to control the girl, simply jumped off his horse to pick up the coins. The girl then flew away on her horse, and by chance his horse followed. She was able to report where she had left him, and he was taken and hanged.

Brandon, however, cites no sources; I almost wonder if his tale wasn't based on this song, or perhaps on something like "The Crafty Farmer" and/or "Lovely Joan." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: LL02
Hikin' Down de Main Line

DESCRIPTION: "Hikin' down the main line, Gasoline burner don't stop here, don't stop here."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1919 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)

KEYWORDS: travel technology

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 742, "Hikin' Down de Main Line" (1 short text, 1 tune)

NOTES [31 words]: The description is based on the Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 text. Clearly there must be more to it, but I don't recognize the fragment as part of anything else. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.1

File: BrS5742

---

Hill and Gully

DESCRIPTION: Jamaican patois: chorus "hill an' gully ride-a, hill an' gully" (2x). Each verse line is followed by "hill an' gully." Roughly: bend down low/ hill and gully/ low down best you be down/ hill and gully/ better mind or you tumble down/ hill and gully.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (Murray-FolkSongsOfJamaica)

KEYWORDS: game nonballad worksong injury Devil

FOUND IN: West Indies(Jamaica)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
- Murray-FolkSongsOfJamaica, p. 9, "Hill and Gully" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Olive Lewin, "Rock It Come Over" - The Folk Music of Jamaica (Barbados: The University of the West Indies Press, 2000), p. 82, "Hill an' Gully" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Noel Dexter and Godfrey Taylor, _Mango Time - Folk Songs of Jamaica_ (Kingston: Ian Randle Publishers, 2007), p. 52, "Hill and Gully" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Jim Morse, _Folk Songs of the Caribbean_ (New York: Bantam Books, 1958), pp. 98-99, "Hill an' Gully" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Martha Warren Beckwith and Helen Roberts, _Folk-Games of Jamaica_ (Poughkeepsie: Vassar College, 1922 ("Digitized by Internet Archive")) #32 pp. 39-41, "Hill and Gully Riding" (2 texts, 2 tunes)

RECORDINGS:
- Edric Connor with the Caribbeans and Earl Inkman, "Hill an' Gully" (on WIEConnor01)
- The Charms, "Hill and Gully" Island (1964, 45 rpm WI-154 B)

NOTES [277 words]: Lewin: "Most Jamaicans know 'Hill an' Gully Rider' as a work song. It, however started life as a rather athletic game played by men and boys in western [hilly] Maroon [free black] towns."

The description follows Murray-FolkSongsOfJamaica and Dexter/Taylor. Morse has a similar verse: "an' you fall down, low down/ hill an' gully/ an' de low down Debil glad/ hill an' gully/ an' he laffin' wen you tumble down/ hill an' gully." Lewin's continues along the same line: if you fall you'll break your neck; if you beak your neck you'll go to hell; if you go to hell the devil will laugh. Lord Composer has "bend down low down/.../ and then you dance right round down/.../ and if you broke your neck you gonna hell/..."

Murray has this as a game song. Dexter/Taylor has it as a work song. Lewin has it as "a Maroon [free black] play song; a plantation work song"; she describes the game. Both Walker and Lord Composer have the "if you fall down you'll go to hell" verse and Walker's version clearly seems to be a game ("if you broke it then you go again"). The Charms's ska version -- "careful how you go, mind your back and fore" -- can be read as dance -- "back to back, belly to belly" -- or sex instruction; no fall down or go to hell.

There is a dancehall version by Yellowman which, after the dedications, I cannot translate from Jamaican patois; I'm not surprised that I hear nothing there -- except the chorus -- that sounds like Hill o' Callivar, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer advises to "Ask her for to be your wife and tak' her at her will And tak' her for a ramble on the Callivar Hill." The site "wad mak' your heart contented." He's old now but he'd "drink the health o' Scotland yet and Forbes Arms Hotel."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: courting nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan3 507, "The Hill o' Callivar" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #5992
NOTES [40 words]: Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv, of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Coiliochbhar Hill (507) is at coordinate (h1-2,v5) on that map [near Alford, roughly 28 miles W of Aberdeen]. - BS

Hills Above Drumquin

DESCRIPTION: "Drumquin, you're not a city, but you're all the world to me." The singer has seen the Scottish Highlands and Lowlands but "always toiled content" because at the end of the day his heart goes back to Drumquin.

AUTHOR: Felix Kearney (source: Tunney-WhereSongsDoThunder)
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (Tunney-WhereSongsDoThunder)
KEYWORDS: nonballad lyric
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Tunney-WhereSongsDoThunder, pp. 68-70, "Hills Above Drumquin" (1 text)
Roud #9320
NOTES [5 words]: Drumquin is in County Tyrone. - BS

Hills and Glens, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer was born "on North River's sloping bank" and lived 40 years among "the hills and glens around St Ann's. He taught, opened a store, and loses two sons and a cousin in the army "killed in France ... while fighting the Germans"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs)
KEYWORDS: war death soldier children
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 210, "The Hills and Glens" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2726
NOTES [12 words]: Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs: "The war referred to is that of 1914-1918" - BS

Hills o' Ballyboley, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer recounts the pleasures of life in Ballyboley: The birds, the flowers, the friends. He says that no such flowers grow elsewhere. Even now, grown old, he remembers the beauties of the place
Hills o' Gallowa', The
DESCRIPTION: The singer and his lassie "softly slid the hours awa' Till dawnin" If he were with her "amang the hills o' Gallowa" he would blythely steer through life in spite of the world’s gloom. "Oh bury me ... amang the hills o' Gallowa"
AUTHOR: Thomas Cunningham (1776-1854) (source: Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong)
EARLIEST DATE: 1843 (Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong)
KEYWORDS: love Scotland nonballad lover burial
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig/Duncan3 504, "The Hills o' Gallowa" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, pp. 115-116, "The Hills o' Gallowa" (1 text)
Roud #5989
File: GrD3504

Hills o' Trummach, The
DESCRIPTION: "The hills o' Trummach pe ill to clim' Pe ill to clim' pe ill to clim', The hills o' Trummach pe ill to clim', Tre hoey an' tre hoey."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan3 531, "The Hills o' Trummach" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6010
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Braes o' Mar" (tune, per Greig/Duncan3)
NOTES [10 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan3 entry. - BS
Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD3531

Hills of Connemara (Mountain Tae, Mountain Tay)
DESCRIPTION: Moonshiners are told, "Gather up the pots... Run like the devil from the excise man." The excise men come to the still, but they come to drink "all night, Drinkin' up the tae till the broad daylight"
AUTHOR: Sean McCarthy
EARLIEST DATE: 1971 (McCarthy)
KEYWORDS: drink nonballad
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
DT, HILLCONN*
RECORDINGS:
Hector Maclsaac and Jerome Downey, ("Keep your eyes well peeled today") (on NFHMaclsaac01)
NOTES [132 words]: Hector Maclsaac and Jerome Downey sing two verses ("keep your eyes well peeled today...." and "A kettle to the butcher and a quart to John....") and the chorus ("Gather up
Hills of Cumberland

DESCRIPTION: The singer meets "the Rose of Cumberland" who invites him to sit and talk; she babbles. He explains that he is from a nearby village "where there are maidens just as handsome" and advises her to let her beauty speak for her rather than her mouth.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland)

KEYWORDS: courting beauty rejection

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 110-111, "Hills of Cumberland" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #12458

NOTES [55 words]: This is a Prince Edward Island song not to be confused with the similar ballad Bodleian, Harding B 11(1205), "The Blooming Rose of Cumberland," W. Stephenson (Gateshead); , 1821-1838 ; also Harding B 25(220), "The Blooming Rose of Cumberland." Cumberland Hill is near Dundas near the east coast of Kings, Prince Edward Island. - BS

Hills of Dan, The

DESCRIPTION: "The world is not one garden spot Or pleasure ground for man; Few are the spots that intervene Such as the Hills of Dan." The singer recalls the weather and the friends now buried; though he departs, he hopes in the end to "rest Amid the Hills of Dan"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1947 (Greensboro Daily News)

KEYWORDS: home nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 403, "The Hills of Dan" (1 text)
Roud #11759

NOTES [17 words]: Although the only collections of this seem to be from North Carolina, it really sounds Irish to me. - RBW

Hills of Donegal, The

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, Donegal, the pride of all, My heart still turns to thee...." The singer describes how he left Donegal, looking back the while, and sailed away via Lough Foyle. He wishes he could return to his old home

AUTHOR: James Moore ?
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: homesickness emigration

FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H196, p. 120, "The Hills of Donegal (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #10685
CROSS-REFERENCES:
Hills of Glensuili, The

DESCRIPTION: An exile curses "those tyrannical laws that bind our native land" and thinks about the birds, fields, and dances of Glensuili. He has left his harp there to remind those left behind of him. He hopes "the time soon come around when I'll return"

AUTHOR: Michael and Brigid McGinley (source: notes to IRPTunney02)

EARLIEST DATE: 1963 (IRPTunney02)

KEYWORDS: exile separation Ireland nonballad patriotic harp

FOUND IN: Ireland Britain(Scotland(Aber)) Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Tunney-WhereSongsDoThunder, pp. 97-99, "The Hills of Glensuili" (1 text)
- McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen 36, "Glenswilly" (1 text, 1 tune)

RECORDINGS:
- The McNulty Family, "Hills of Glenswilly" (on "Irish Show Boat," Coral Records CRL 57368 LP (1961))
- Bernard Nash, "The Hills of Glenswilly" (on ITMA/CapeShoreNL)
- Paddy Tunney, "The Hills of Glenswilly" (on IRPTunney02)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "The Hills of Tandragee (I)" (form, lyrics, tune)

NOTES [217 words]: Loch Suili and Gleann Suili (Glenswilli), mentioned in the song, are in Donegal, Ireland.

This is the same song, with only place names and a few words changing the political viewpoint, as "The Hills of Tandragee (II)." The tunes of McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen 36, and Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster 41, "The Hills of Tandragee" are very similar. Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster: "Here's a fairly modern Orange song ['The Hills of Tandragee'], and a great favorite among 'the brethren' because they can all join in on the last line of each verse. Dick Bamber, who gave it to me, is generally credited as the writer, but he tells me this is not correct. An old lady who lived beside him in Ballylisk near Tandragee, 'wrote it years ago.' It is a parody of a song she had on an old 78 r.p.m. record called 'The Hills of Glenswilly'. Just how long ago she wrote it he doesn't remember, but he says she gave it to him and he was the first to sing it in public. Now it's an Orange standard." These songs are not to be confused with "Craiganee," sometimes called "The Hills of Tandragee"; there is no love interest here.

Also collected and sung by Kevin Mitchell, "The Hills of Glen Swilly" (on Kevin and Ellen Mitchell, "Have a Drop Mair," Musical Tradition Records MTCD315-6 CD (2001)) - BS

Last updated in version 4.5

File: TST097

Hills of New Hampshire

DESCRIPTION: "Far away on the hills of old New Hampshire Many years ago we parted Ruth and I." Now she sleeps in the village churchyard "on the hills of my old New Hampshire home." "Now my heart lies buried with her"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA/Leach)

KEYWORDS: love home parting separation death mourning lover

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

Roud #18211

RECORDINGS:
- Clare O'Driscoll, "Hills of New Hampshire" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

File: RcHiNeHa

Hills of Ohio, The

DESCRIPTION: "The hills of Ohio, how sweetly they rise, In beauty of nature to blend with the Hills of Tandragee (I), The

DESCRIPTION: The singer says to those who see him leave Tandragee that he hopes the Orange flag will soon fly over its hills. He thinks about the birds and fields of Tandragee. He hopes for peace in Ulster and that "the time soon come around when I return"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1970 (Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster)

KEYWORDS: emigration farewell Ireland nonballad patriotic

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster 41, "The Hills of Tandragee" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #2884

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Hills of Glensuili" (form, lyrics, tune)

NOTES [167 words]: This is the same song, with only place names and a few words changing the political viewpoint, as "The Hills of Glensuili." The tunes of McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen 36, "Glenswilly," and Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster 41 are very similar.

Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster: "Here's a fairly modern Orange song, and a great favorite among 'the brethren' because they can all join in on the last line of each verse. Dick Bamber, who gave it to me, is generally credited as the writer, but he tells me this is not correct. An old lady who lived beside him in Ballylisk near Tandragee, 'wrote it years ago.' It is a parody of a song she had on an old 78 r.p.m. record called 'The Hills of Glenswilly'. Just how long ago she wrote it he doesn't remember, but he says she gave it to him and he was the first to sing it in public. Now it's an Orange standard."

These songs are not to be confused with "Craiganee," sometimes called "The Hills of Tandragee"; there is no love interest here. - BS

File: MorU041

Hills of Tennessee, The

DESCRIPTION: "How we jolly boys did play In the month of merry May As gathered flowers flowing by the stream... When we played among the hills of Tennessee." Those days are long gone, but the singer still recalls his boyhood and how happy he was

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric)

KEYWORDS: home youth nonballad

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 92, "The Hille of Tennessee" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #11386

File: Brne092
Hills of Tyrone, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer recalls watching the sun rise this morning in Tyrone. He is already far away, ready to sail away. He reports that his heart is breaking at leaving home, friends, girl. He says he will always regard it as the fairest place on earth.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: emigration farewell
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
   Henry/Huntingdon-Herrmann-SamHerrmannSongsOfThePeople H609, p. 199, "The Hills of Tyrone" (1 text, 1 tune)
   Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday 4, pp. 6,101,156, "Behind Yon Blue Mountain" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2925
File: HHH609

Hilo March

DESCRIPTION: Hawaiian. "'Auhea wale 'oe e ka 'ala tuberose." "Heed, O fragrance of tuberose." The sweet smell sings to the heart. The singer tells of the beauties of Hilo. He greets the Pu'ulena wind. He says, "Wait until the princess comes."

AUTHOR: Joseph K. Ae'a
EARLIEST DATE: 1970 (Elbert & Mahoe, Na Mele o Hawai'i Nie, according to Cohen; the music at least is reported to have been written 1881)
KEYWORDS: Hawaii home beauty royalty
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
   Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 691-692, "Hilo March" (1 Hawaiian text plus English translation)
File: CAFS2691

Hilo, Boys, Hilo

DESCRIPTION: Halyard shanty. "The blackbird sang unto the crow, Ch: Hi-lo boys Hi-lo! I'll soon be takin' you in tow, Ch: Oh! Hilo somebody below." Other verses have the birds talking to each other or to the crew.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas)
KEYWORDS: shanty worksong bird
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
   Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 254-255, "Hilo, Boys, Hilo," "Hilo, Come Down Below" (2 texts, 2 tunes) [AbEd, pp. 185-186]
   Terry-TheShantyBook-Part1, #20, "Hilo Somebody" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #8291
CROSS-REFERENCES:
   cf. "The Crow Song (I)" (lyrics)
SAME TUNE:
   Shallow Brown (II) (File: Hugi257)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
   Hilo Somebody Below
   Hilo Somebody Hilo
NOTES [47 words]: Both [of Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas's] versions are of Negro origin and likely began as cotton-hoosier's songs. - SL
Several verses, indeed, appear to be derived from "The Crow Song (I)." One suspects that this is an adaption of that for use at sea -- or perhaps the reverse. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.8
File: Hugi254
Hind Etin [Child 41]

DESCRIPTION: Lady Margaret is lured by a sound to Elmond's Wood, where (Akin/Etin) keeps her while she bears 7 sons. The eldest seeks to know why his mother is sad, then accomplishes (a reunion with her family, a pardon for his father, and) a churching for all.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: c. 1818 (Buchan/Moreira-TheGlenbuchatBallads); Danish versions are said to date to the sixteenth century

KEYWORDS: pregnancy captivity children escape

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (14 citations):
Child 41, "Hind Etin" (3 texts)
Bronson 41, "Hind Etin" (2 versions)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 41, "Hind Etin" (2 versions: #1, #2)
Chambers-ScottishBallads, pp. 193-200, "Hynde Etin" (1 text)
Buchan/Moreira-TheGlenbuchatBallads, pp. 205-209, "Young Aiken" (1 text)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #157, p. 1, "Young Aiken" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan2 331, "Young Aiken" (2 texts, 1 tune) {Bronson's #2}
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 141-148, "Hind Etin" (2 text -- 1 from Danish)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 36, "Hynd Etin" (1 text)
Grigson-PenguinBookOfBallads 21, "Hind Etin" (1 text)
Buchan-ABookOfScottishBallads 28, "Hind Etin" (1 text)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads, pp. 125-127, "Young Aiken" (1 text)
Morgan-MedievalBallads-ChivalryRomanceAndEverydayLife, pp. 51-57, "Hind Etin" (1 text)
DT 41, HINDETIN*

NOTES [75 words]: The notes in Buchan/Moreira-TheGlenbuchatBallads, following Child, observe that the British versions of this ballad are far less supernatural than the Scandinavian equivalents. This makes it interesting to note that, although child calls the kidnapper "Etin," most of the handful of field collections call him "Aiken." Was Hind Etin originally thought of as an etin (troll)? And was he then naturalized? I doubt we can answer this with certainty. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.1

File: C041

Hind Horn [Child 17]

DESCRIPTION: Jean gives Hind Horn a ring that will tell him if her love remains true. When the ring fades, he sets out for court disguised as a beggar. He shows her the ring, and her love returns. "The bridegroom has wedded the bride but... Hind Horn took her to bed"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1825 (Motherwell)

KEYWORDS: magic love wedding

FOUND IN: US(Ap,NE,So) Britain(England(South),Scotland(Aber)) Canada(Mar,Newf,Ont)

REFERENCES (42 citations):
Child 17, "Hind Horn" (9 texts, 1 tune) {Bronson's #23}
Bronson 17, "Hind Horn" (23 versions plus 2 in addenda)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 17, "Hind Horn" (6 version: #2, #4, #4,1, #21, #22, #23)
Buchan/Moreira-TheGlenbuchatBallads, pp. 59-63, "Hyn Horn" (1 text)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #80, pp. 1-2, "Hynd Horn"; #172, p. 1, "Hynd Horn" (3 texts)
Greig/Duncan5 1022, "Hynd Horn" (17 texts plus 2 fragments on pp. 621-622, 13 tunes)
Barry/Eckstorm/Smyth-BritishBalladsFromMaine pp. 73-80, "Hind Horn" (1 text (with two variant forms) plus a fragment, 2 tunes); pp. 479-481 (additional notes and fragments) {Bronson's #4, #5}
Flanders/Olney-BalladsMigrantInNewEngland, pp. 47-48, "Hind Horn" (1 short text, properly titled "The Jolly Beggar," which might be "Hind Horn" [Child #17] or "The Jolly Beggar" [Child #279] or a mix; 1 tune) {Bronson's #18}
Flanders-AncientBalladsTraditionallySungInNewEngland1, pp. 223-225, "Hind Horn" (1 short text, properly titled "The Jolly Beggar," which might be "Hind Horn" [Child #17] or "The Jolly Beggar" [Child #279] or a mix; 1 tune) {Bronson's #18}
Gainer-FolkSongsFromTheWestVirginiaHills, pp. 22-23, "In Scotland Town Where I Was Born" (1
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 9, "I Gave My Love a Gay Gold Ring" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp. 11-17, "Hind Horn" (3 texts plus 2 fragment, 3 tunes) {C=Bronson's #17, E=#22}
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 5, "Hind Horn" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 5, "The Beggarman" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #21}
Karpeles-FolkSongsFromNewfoundland 4, "Hind Horn" (1 text, 2 tunes) {Bronson's #2}
Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 72-73,246,252, "The Old Beggar Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-21FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 19-22,83, "The Old Beggar Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 55, "The Old Beggar Man (Hind Horn)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario 32, "The Old Beggar Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 96-100, "Hind Horn" (2 texts)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 35, "Hynd Horn" (1 text)
Niles-BalladBookOfJohnJacobNiles 12, "Hind Horn" (1 text, 1 tune, plus a single stanza which might be this ballad -- but could be something else)
Gummere-OldEnglishBallads, pp. 260-262+357, "Hind Horn" (1 text)
Buchan-ABookOfScottishBallads 44, "Hind Horn" (1 text)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads, pp. 134-136, "Hynd Horn" (1 text)
Morgan-MedievalBallads-ChivalryRomanceAndEverydayLife, pp. 57-59, "Hind Horn" (1 text)
HarvardClassics-EnglishPoetryChaucerToGray, pp. 59-61, "Hind Horn" (1 text)
DT 17, HINDHORN HNDHORN2* HNDHORN3*

ADDITIONAL: Edith Fowke, "American Cowboy and Western Pioneer Songs in Canada" in The Western Folklore, Vol. XXI, No. 4 (Oct 1962 (available online by JSTOR)), pp. 249-250, ["The Cowboy's Wedding Ring"] ("A cowboy with his sweetheart stood beneath a starlit sky") (1 text)
RELATED: Versions of the Romance "King Horn"
--
Jennifer Fellows, _Of Love and Chivalry: An Anthology of Middle English Romance_, Everyman/J. M. Dent, 1993, pp. 1-41, "King Horn" (1 text, of 1532 lines, based mainly on Cambridge MS. Gg. 4.27.2)

Ronald B. Herzman, Graham Drake, and Eve Salisbury, editors, _Four Romances of England: King Horn, Havelock the Dane, Bevis of Hampton, Athelston_, TEAMS (Consortium for the Teaching of the Middle Ages), Medieval Institute Publications, Western Michigan University, 1999, pp. 17-56, "King Horn" (1 text, of 1545 lines, based mostly on Cambridge MS. Gg. 4.27.2)
Donald B. Sands, editor, _Middle English Verse Romances_, Holt Rinehart and Winston, 1966, pp. 15-54, "King Horn" (1 text, of 1540 lines, somewhat cleaned up, based mostly on Cambridge MS. Gg. 4.27.2)

J. Rawson Lumby, editor (1866), revised (1901) by George H. McKnight, _King Horn, Flori3 and Blauncheflur, The Assumption of our Lady_, Early English Text Society/Oxford University Press, 1901 (reprinted 1962), pp. 1-69, "King Horn" (showing the three manuscripts in parallel)
Walter Hoyt French and Charles Brockway Hale, _Middle English Metrical Romances_, Prentice-Hall, 1930, pp. 25-70, "King Horn" (1 text, nominally of 1530 lines, based mostly on Cambridge MS. Gg. 4.27.2)

John Edwin Wells, _A Manual of the Writings in Middle English 1050-1400_, 1916 (references are to the 1930 fifth printing with three supplements), pp. 8-11, "(King Horn)" and "Horne Childe and Maid Rimhild" (prose summaries of the two romances)
Brown/Robbins-IndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse, #166
DigitalIndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse #312

MANUSCRIPT: {MSAuchinleck}, The Auchinleck Manuscript, Edinburgh, National Library of Scotland MS. Advocates 19.2.1, folios 317v-323v "Horn childe and maiden rimhild"
MANUSCRIPT: Oxford, Bodleian Library, MS. Laud misc. 108 (Bodleian 1486), folio 219
MANUSCRIPT: Cambridge, University Library MS. Gg.4.27 (Part 2), folio 11
Roud #28

RECORDINGS:
Edmund Doucette, "The Old Beggar Man" (on MRElves01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Kitchie-Boy" [Child 252] (lyrics)
cf. "The Bird's Courting Song (The Hawk and the Crow; Leatherwing Bat)" (tune)
SAME TUNE:
The Bird's Courting Song (The Hawk and the Crow; Leatherwing Bat) (File: K295)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Pale Ring
The Jeweled Ring
The Beggar at the Wedding

NOTES [2627 words]: Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario: "A North American adaptation of the "Hind Horn" story has turned up in Ontario as "The Cowboy's Wedding Ring": the text appears in Western Folklore."

In that text the parting sweethearts promise to be true. Jack gives Nell half of a broken ring: each keeps the half of the ring engraved with the other's name. Jack shows up at Nell's wedding three years later and joins with her father to "drink a toast to this fair young man and his lovely bride." Jack drops his half of the ring into Nell's glass. When she sees Jack's half of the ring she says "It's you, my cowboy sweetheart back, and my Jack I'll wed tonight."

Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads is from William Motherwell, Minstrelsy: Ancient and Modern (Glasgow: John Wylie, 1827 ("Digitized by Microsoft")), pp. 36-43, "Hynd Horn." Motherwell says, "An imperfect copy of this very old Ballad appeared in 'Select Scottish Songs, Ancient and Modern,' edited by Mr Cromek [included by Child as 17.D]; but that gentleman seems not to have been aware of the jewel he had picked up, as it is passed over without a single remark. We have been fortunate enough to recover two copies from recitation, which, joined to the stanzas preserved by Mr Cromek, have enabled us to present it to the public in its present complete state." - BS

For Bronson's proposed relationship between this song and "The Whummil Bore" [Child 27], see the entry on the latter piece.

Briggs describes the tale of "Two Irish Lads in Canada"(found in volume A.2., pp. 499-501) as a "modern version" of "Hind Horn."

Literary historians have connected this ballad with the thirteenth century romance "King Horn" (who lost his kingdom to Saracens, then won it and his sweetheart back after heroic adventures) -- but if so, there has been a lot of folk processing along the way.

Child mentions the romance, but notes that the ballad contains only the "catastrophe" of the written epic; Wells, p. 12, considers the ballad to be taken from the "banquet scene of Horne Childe" (the other Horn romance). The Horn legend found in "King Horn" appears in various forms. CHEL1, p. 304, declares it "a viking story plainly adapted to romantic ends." "King Horn" itself is listed as "the earliest of the extant romances in [Middle English]" (Dickins/Wilson p. 29). Similarly Sands, p. 15, "With the tale of Horn and the fair Rymenhild we have the earliest extant English romance. This distinction it can claim; other distinctions, especially technical and esthetic, are hard to come by. Yet Horn possesses considerably more interest than a good number of competent pieces: it can be regarded as the prototypic Middle English romance," Bennett/Gray, p. 135. say "The oldest extant romance is probably King Horn: oldest both in its manuscript form and in date of composition." This probably explains why it is so often cited.

According to Herzman/Drake/Salisbury, p. 11, it used to be dated c. 1225, but recent studies make it later. But even if the more modern date of perhaps c. 1280 is accepted, that still gives it pride of date. There even seems to be a reference to it in another romance; according to Bennett/Gray, p. 125, an item called the "'Laud' Troy Book" mentions near the end Of Havelok, Horne and of Wade, in romances that of hem ben made.

(Many other romance heroes are also mentioned, e.g. Bevis [of Hampton], Guy [of Warwick], Sir Gawain, Tristan, Percival, and Roland, so the references in this line are presumably to "Havelock the Dane," "King Horn," and an unknown epic of "Wade." Wade seems to have been an important character in Old English and Germanic folklore, according to Wilson, pp. 16-19, but all that survives is scattered references.)

The complaints about the form of "King Horn" may arise from its antiquity. Derek Pearsall, on p. 26 of Brewer, suggests, "The couplet of Horn is a unique non-alliterative derivative from the alliterative first-half-line, blended with the French trimeter to give a standard line of three stresses, though two and four occur in special contexts. This development of alliterative verse is already well advanced in La amon's Brut, and Horn thus stands midway between La amon, the debt to whom is explicit in a number of borrowed phrases, and the later couplet.... Where they modify the metre of the oldest text, the two later manuscripts of Horn (Laud 108 and Harley 2253) always move toward four-stress regularity, but the clipped, short-breathed lines of the Cambridge Horn, with their sparse, abrupt syntax and lack of articulation, are the perfect complement of the narrative's literary quality and may be considered a deliberate choice."

CHEL1, pp. 287-288, declares, "King Horn is singular in its verse, an example of one stage in the development of modern English metres. It is closely related in prosody to Layamon's Brut, and might be described as carrying through consistently the rhyming couplet, which Layamon interchanges with blank lines. The verse is not governed by the octosyllabic law; it is not of Latin origin; it has a strange resemblance to the verse of Otfrid in Old High German and to the accidental riming passages in Old English.... There is no other romance in this antique sort of verse."

Alternately, it may simply be massively corrupt; so apparently Rosamund Allen. Anne Scott, on p. 39 of Brewer, reports that "The short, alliterating couplets in the poem which occur in the Cambridge and Oxford versions and its terse, rhythmical style give the poem a songlike quality and have led both early and later critics to liken the poem to a ballad." It is not, however, anything like an English ballad, and would not fit a standard tune.

Mehl, p. 49, makes the observation that although it is found in three early manuscripts, "The later collections that contain a greater number of romances have not included it." This implies that its early popularity faded -- or that it went into the hands of the folk at a very early date, which would explain why the ballad is so unlike the romance. Fellows, p. xi, quotes Rosamund Allen to the effect that the three manuscripts are a literary miscellany from Herefordshire, probably made by an amateur copyist; part of a mixed collection of religious and secular narratives; and an addition to a collection of saints' lives -- suggesting that perhaps the story was considered to go with the tales of saints.

Wilson, p. 27, suggests that the story of Horn is based on an actual historical event, but if so, it has been lost from actual history. CHEL1, p 287 elaborates: "It has been suggested that the original Horn was Horm, a Danish viking of the ninth century who fought for the Irish king Cearbhall, as Horn helped King Thurston in Ireland against the Payns, i.e. the heathen invaders with their giant champion. Also, it is believed that Thurston, in the romance, may be derived from the Norwegian leader Thorstein the Red, who married a grand-daughter of Cearbhall. But, whatever the obscure truth may be, the general fact that Horn's wanderings and adventures are placed in scenery and conditions resembling those of the ninth and tenth centuries in the relations between Britain and Ireland."

"Perhaps -- but none of that has gone into the ballad."

The romance of "King Horn" exists in three manuscripts (Dickens/Wilson, p. 30; Sands, p15):

Cambridge University Library Gg.4.27.II (late XIII century, according to Dickens/Wilson; c. 1250 according to Sands), Bodleian Laud Misc. 108 (early XIV century, according to Dickens/Wilson), and B.M. Harley 2253 (written by a scribe who can be shown to have been active in 1314 and to still have been working until at least 1346, based on his other works; Fein, p. 8), the latter the famous source of the "Harley Lyrics." The Cambridge manuscript is, however, considered by Sands to be the best as well as the oldest copy; so too Fein, p. 6 (Dickens/Wilson prefer Harley). The original composition is dated c. 1225 based on the language; the dialect seems to place it in the south or the midlands (Sands p. 15).

The legend also appears in a French epic, "Hornet Rimel," and there is a second English version, probably of the fourteenth century, called "Horne Childe" (Dickins/Wilson, p. 29) or "Horne Childe and Maiden Rimnild" (Mehl, p. 48). Benet, p. 516, says that "Horne Childe" is "generally called The Geste of King Horn."

The nominal author is a certain Mestre Thomas." (However, Bennett/Gray, p. 135, argue that "the later and longer Anglo-Norman romance of Horn by one Thomas is clearly related to [i.e. derived from] some version of this poem." (This point is, naturally, disputed.) What is certain is that "Horne Childe" is a tail rhyme romance (Mehl, p. 52), and as far as I know no tail rhyme romance has ever been clearly linked to a traditional song. In any case, the general feeling is that "Horne Childe" is not as well constructed as "King Horn," even if it is better poetry. For a bibliography of works on "Horne Childe," see Rice, p. 295, who calls it "Horn Child." It is, interestingly, one of the shortest bibliographies in her book; "Horn Child" does not seem to have been much valued by scholars. The much fuller bibliography for King Horn occupies pp. 307-314, which lists 18 editions although many of them are not really publicly available.

Sands, p. 15, makes the interesting note that "King Horn" "lacks chivalrous ideas" -- a hint, perhaps, of folk rather than courtly origin. Keen, p. 131, observes that it shows some aspects typical of tales of the period: "Medieval authors had a passion for disguises; the irony of the situation in which enemies or livers met incognito seems to have endlessly delighted them. So one will find Hind Horn coming to the presence of his beloved Rimenheld in the guise of an old woman... and Ippomedon tourneying before his lady in a series of disguises." Similarly Herzman/Drake/Salisbury, p. 13: "The story contains unexplained actions and situations that can only be explained because the poet is referring, sometimes incompletely, to folk tale sources. One folk-tale non sequitur" Barron notes is that Horn gives no particular reason for hiding his true identity. And John Speirs sees misty connections to mythology in the symbol of Horn himself -- to the Horn of Plenty and ultimately the Holy Grail."

According to GA:arnett-IHearAmericaSinging/Gosse, volume i, p. 115, "King Horn is another romance with a Scandianvian groundwork going back to the time of the expeditions of the Danish Vikings before their conversion to Christianity." CHEL1, p. 218, also lists the legend as being of Danish origin, naturalized in the period around 1200. Dickens/Wilson, pp. 29-30, amplify this: "the story is usually supposed to be based on events which took place during the Anglo-Saxon conquest or the Viking raids. This is plausible enough, but any basis in fact that there might originally have been can now distinguished from the mass of folk-tale with which it has been overlaid, nor is it possible to localize the events." We might conjecture, however, that the "Suddene" of the poem (although often interpreted as some such place as the Isle of Wight, according to Sands, p. 16) is in fact Sweden. (Which in turn hints that Horn might be the Scyld Scieving of Beowulf, but that has little to do with the matter of this ballad.)

GA:arnett-IHearAmericaSinging and Gosse, p. 115, add that the piece has "no great poetical merit." Herzman/Drake/Salisbury, p. 12, suggest that it is unusually well plotted, but AS POETRY it isn't much. In support of this we might note that the meter is so irregular that scholars have not even managed to agree on whether it's supposed to be trochaic or iambic! Bennett/Gray, p. 135, have a possible explanation for this, describing the piece as consisting of "just over 1,500 short and rather jerky lines in a metre probably deriving -- like Layamon's Brut -- from the old English alliterative measure."

Sands, p. 16, explains this on the grounds that it is "a transitional piece. It contains the rhymed couplet introduced from the French, but does not lengthen the two- and three-stress lines taken over from the Old English half-line into the usual tetrameter line of later romances. It hovers between the older trochaic rhythm and the coming iambic and never really favors one over the other, a feature perhaps which prompts Kane to remark that the prosody 'sometimes looks and possibly is incompetent.'" - RBW

The magic stones of the ring in "King Horn" make the wearer invulnerable; Horn is to look at the ring just to remind him of her (French/Hale, "King Horn," ll. 541-576) He happens to return to Westernesse after seven years when "word began to springe Of Rymenhilde wedding" (French/Hale, ll. 1007-1018). The rest of the story, including the return of the ring in the wine horn (French/Hale, ll. 1159-1170) agrees well enough with the plot, for example, of Child 17B. The magic stones of the ring in "Horn Childe and Maiden Rimnild" have the property of changing color, as in the ballad, when Rimnild changes her mind or loses her maidenhead (Mills, ll. 565-576) It happens that when seven years have passed that Horn notices that the stones have changed color (Mills, ll. 836-840). Here too, the ring is returned in a wine cup (Mills, ll. 994-996). Child notes the similarities in plot between the ballad and "Horn Childe and Maiden Rimnild." However, he denies that "the special approximations of the ballads to the romance of Horn Child oblige us to conclude that these, or any of them, are derived from that poem." He goes on further to say "It is often assumed, without a misgiving, that oral tradition must needs be younger than anything that was committed to writing some centuries ago; but this requires in each case to be made out; there is certainly no antecedent probability of that kind." - BS

Several other ballads also derive loosely or from Middle English romance, or from the legends that underlie it, examples being:
* "King Orfeo" [Child 19], from "Sir Orfeo" (3 MSS., including the Auchenleck MS, which also contains "Floris and Blancheflour")
* "The Marriage of Sir Gawain" [Child 31], from "The Weddnyge of Sir Gawe and Dame Ragnell" (1 defective MS, Bodleian MS Rawlinson C 86)
* "Blancheflour and Jellyflorice" [Child 300], from "Floris and Blancheflour" (4 MSS, including Cambridge Gg.4.27.2, which also contains "King Horn," and the Auchenleck MS, which also contains "Sir Orfeo")

Of these ballads from romances, this is the only one that really seems to have gone solidly into tradition ("Sir Orfeo" came from tradition, but in circumstances that make a minstrel origin a strong possibility). Child has a very extensive discussion of the relationship between this ballad and the literary romances.

Incidentally, it appears that some of the language of "King Horn" influenced J. R. R. Tolkien. Not surprising; he lectured on the text of the romance at Oxford in 1927 (ScullHammond, p. 139). I have not yet found any traces of what he said -- which is singularly unfortunate, given that he knew both the romances and the folklore of ballads so well; he might well have had much to say about the piece. TolkienLetters, p. 361, says that Tolkien used "Westerness" as a translation of "Numinor," which he declared was "known to [him] only in MS. C [the Cambridge manuscript] of King Horn. (Line 161 in Sands (p. 21) and Herzman/Drake/Salisbury (p. 21); line 171 in Lumby (p. 8), which shows that the other two (inferior) manuscripts of the romance read "westnesse." - RBW Greig: "The tune to which 'Hynd Horn' is sung seems to be the original form of 'Logan Braes,' and is associated with many other songs and ballads. As far as my records show, it is the most common folk-tune we have." - BS

Bibliography

- Bennett/Gray: J. A. W. Bennett, Middle English Literature, edited and completed by Douglas Gray and being a volume of the Oxford History of English Literature, 1986 (I use the 1990 Clarendon paperback)
- Briggs: Katherine Briggs, A Dictionary of British Folk-Tales in the English Language, Part A: Folk Narratives, 1970 (I use the 1971 Routledge paperback that combines volumes A.1 and A.2)
- Dickins/Wilson: Bruce Dickins & R. M. Wilson, editors, Early Middle English Texts, 1951; revised edition 1952
- French/Hale: Walter Hoyt French and Charles Brockway Hale, editors, Middle English Metrical Romance, Prentice Hall, 1930
- GArnett-IHearAmericaSinging/Gosse: Richard GArnett-IHearAmericaSinging and Edmund Gosse, English Literature: An Illustrated Record four volumes, MacMillan, 1903-1904 (I used the 1935 edition published in two volumes)
- Herzman/Drake/Salisbury: Ronald B. Herzman, Graham Drake, and Eve Salisbury, editors, Four Romances of England: King Horn, Havelock the Dane, Bevis of Hampton, Athelston, TEAMS (Consortium for the Teaching of the Middle Ages), Medieval Institute Publications, Western Michigan University, 1999
- Mills: Maldwyn Mills, Horn Childe and Maiden Rimild, Middle English Texts Series, 1988
- Sands: Donald B. Sands, editor, Middle English Verse Romances, Holt Rinehart and Winston, 1966
- Wells: John Edwin Wells, A Manual of the Writings in Middle English 1050-1400, 1916 (references are to the 1930 fifth printing with three supplements)

_Last updated in version 5.3_

_File:_ C017

Hingin' on the Nail

DESCRIPTION: The singer, forty-four, has spent her life "hinging on the nail." She thinks she's not too bad looking though "the shadow o' my former sel'." She doesn't care about looks or brains "if only he would act his part, and ease me aff the nail"

AUTHOR: Alexander G Murdoch (1843-1891) (source: Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #160)
EARLIEST DATE: 1877 (Murdoch's _The Laird's Lykewake and Other Poems_, according to Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #160 and Greig/Duncan7)
KEYWORDS: oldmaid
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #89, p. 2, "Hingin' on the Nail" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan7 1380, "Hingin' on the Nail" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Roud #6271
File: GrD71380

Hiram Hubbert [Laws A20]
DESCRIPTION: Hiram Hubbard is captured and brought to trial. Although he is not guilty of anything, he is tried and convicted on the evidence of his captors. He makes a will and is summarily shot. (He is reported to have been ninety miles from the crime scene.)
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1909
KEYWORDS: trial execution lastwill trial Civilwar
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Laws A20, "Hiram Hubbert"
Combs/Wilgus-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernUnitedStates 48, pp. 171-172, "Hiram Hubbert" (1 text)
Ritchie-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 77, "Hiram Hubbard" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roberts-SangBranchSettlers, #32, Hiram Hubbard" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 367, HIRAMHUB*
Roud #2208
RECORDINGS:
Jean Ritchie & Doc Watson, "Hiram Hubbard" (on RitchieWatson1, RitchiteWatsonCD1)
NOTES [94 words]: Reported to be "an echo of the guerilla warfare in the [Kentucky/Tennessee?] Highlands during the Civil War" (indeed, the Ritchie text refers explicitly to rebels) This strikes me as not unlikely. These regions were filled with Unionists who did not like the fact that their states had put them into the Confederacy. It took the Union two years to get troops to Knoxville. Until they did, there was generally trouble between the locals and the Confederate government.
I have not located any actual references to a Hiram Hubbard who was executed in this period. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.2
File: LA20

Hireman Chiel, The
DESCRIPTION: A baron's son disguised as a laborer wins the heart of a young lady. Her parents do not approve, but they escape together and at last the young man reveals his station.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Greig/Duncan5)
LONG DESCRIPTION: A baron's son, told by his father to marry, disguises himself as a laborer to find a lady who will marry for love. He sees a beauty at a castle gate, and gets himself hired by the grieve. The lady falls in love (of course), and writes him a letter to arrange a meeting. They meet, declare their love, and arrange to meet again by night, with the young man's assurances not to wrong her honor. They begin meeting every night, and her parents become suspicious. She tells the young man of her father's threats to hang him, and he scoffs at them. But they are overheard and confronted by her mother. The young man departs, telling the mother her daughter is still marriageable. A nobleman courts and wins the young lady, but as they are going to be married the young man reappears and the two lovers escape. The father pursues them to the young man's home. His identity revealed, the young man asks the father's blessing, saying, "Seven years I served for her sake, But now I've got my fee."
KEYWORDS: courting disguise nobility worker love virginity family Hiring Fair at Hamiltonsbawn, The

DESCRIPTION: At the Hamiltonsbawn hiring fair the singer hires for six winter months to Tom McCann. After one good meal, the food "no human eye could stand," the work is hard, the fleas unbearable at night. "My trousers got too wide ... my hair got like a wig"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1970 (Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster)

KEYWORDS: humorous hardtimes farming food bug work clothes bug

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster 23, "The Hiring Fair at Hamiltonsbawn" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #2890

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bad Luck Attend the Old Farmer" (subject: hiring fair servant's half-year term hard times)

NOTES [79 words]: Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster: "If you travel the road from Armagh City to Tandragee, you pass through the snug town of Hamiltonsbawn.... Hiring fairs were in full swing up to fifty years ago and the one at 'the Bawn' is remembered as recently as forty years ago [c.1929].... May and November seem to have been the months favoured for 'hiring'; no doubt because May marked the beginning of the harvest season and November heralded preparation of the ground and planting." - BS

File: MorU023

Hiring Fair, The

DESCRIPTION: On the way to Strabane, or Antrim, singer meets a maid on the way to the hiring fair. He offers his umbrella to keep her from the rain. They stop for drinks and miss the fair. They spend the night, marry next day, and have been happy since.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (IRTunneyFamily01); c.1845 (broadside, NLScotland L.C.1270(018))

KEYWORDS: courting marriage drink work travel

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (3 citations):
McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen 39, "The Hiring Fair" (1 text, 1 tune)
Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster 24, "The Hiring Fair" (1 text, 1 tune)
Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday 14, pp. 34-35,106,162, "The Strabane Hiring Fair" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #2516

RECORDINGS:
Michael Gallagher, "The Hiring Time" (on IRTunneyFamily01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Feeing Time (I)" (plot)
NOTES [64 words]: This follows the same general story line as "The Maid of Lismore" but ends happily. - BS
The similarity to "The Feeing Time (I)" is even greater; it's essentially the same plot, and there are some common lyrics as well. They maybe the same song; Roud lumps them. But it clearly falls into Scottish and Irish families, so -- with some hesitation -- I've allowed them to stay separate. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2
File: RcHiriFa

Hiring Fairs of Ulster, The

DESCRIPTION: In May there are hiring fairs for servants in Ulster. Plough boys, dairy maids, cowboys and shoe boys, labouring boys and kitchen maids are interviewed by farmers. "The servants' wages now should rise" to offset rising prices

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Hayward-UlsterSongsAndBalladsOfTheTownAndCountry); 19C (broadside, Bodleian 2806 c.7(31))

KEYWORDS: work nonballad money

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 25, "The Hiring Fairs of Ulster" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hayward-UlsterSongsAndBalladsOfTheTownAndCountry, pp. 89-90, "The Hireing Fairs of Ulster" (1 text)
Roud #6533

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 c.7(31), "The Hireing Fairs of Ulster" ("Good people all attention [sic] pay"), P. Brereton (Dublin), c.1867
LOCSinging, as105370, "The Hireing Fairs of Ulster," P. Brereton (Dublin), n.d.

NOTES:
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Hiring of the Servants" (subject)
cf. "Copshawholm Fair" (subject)
NOTES [12 words]: Broadsides LOCSinging as105370 and Bodleian 2806 c.7(31) are duplicates. - BS

Last updated in version 2.5
File: OLCOM25

Hiring of the Servants, The

DESCRIPTION: "The time of the hiring is coming." Working conditions on Irish farms are hard and "not like the day of the good old time." Farmers are warned that Ireland's youth are going to England for better wages; "You must double their wages or give up your land"

AUTHOR: Patrick O'Sullivan (source: broadside Bodleian 2806 c.8(218))

EARLIEST DATE: 1976 (recording, Jamesy McCarthy)

KEYWORDS: farming England Ireland nonballad

FOUND IN: Ireland

Roud #12936

RECORDINGS:
Jamesy McCarthy, "Come To the Hiring" (on Voice20)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 c.8(218), "The Hiring of the Servants" ("Young men and maidens draw near for awhile"), unknown, n.d.

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Spailpin Fanac" and references there
cf. "The Hiring Fairs of Ulster" (subject)

File: RChirOTS

Hirrum Tirrum

DESCRIPTION: The singer would visit a lass at night. She says her modesty won't permit that. He convinces her she has nothing to fear. She leaves the door open for him so he can come at any hour. They go to bed. "I stole her virgin bloom, And then I left her alone"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan4)
KEYWORDS: seduction sex virginity dialog nightvisit abandonment
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan4 773, "Hirrum Tirrum" (5 texts, 3 tunes)
Roud #6189
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Rise and Let Me In Come Canny!
NOTES [16 words]: Greig/Duncan4: "From Peter Murray at Tillyorn about sixty years ago. Noted 24th July 1907." - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD4773

His Lordship Had a Coachman

DESCRIPTION: His Lordship discharges coachman John. John claims to be the finest coachman alive. To demonstrate, "I'll drive you all around Belfast town, And I won't go through a street." His Lordship agrees John can keep his job if he succeeds. John keeps his job.

AUTHOR: Fred Ginnet (source: Leyden-BelfastCityOfSong)
EARLIEST DATE: 1989 (Leyden-BelfastCityOfSong)
KEYWORDS: humorous wordplay servant unemployment
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Leyden-BelfastCityOfSong 9, "His Lordship Had a Coachman" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [123 words]: Leyden-BelfastCityOfSong: "The song dates from 1888 when the Lord Mayor was Sir James Horner Haslett." The trick to the song is that it "takes us all around Belfast without going through a single street!" So, the tour goes up Rugby Road, down Agincourt Avenue, South Parade, Carrickfergus Way, King Street Mews, Glengall Place, and the like. - BS
Jonathan Bardon, A History of Ulster, Blackstaff Press, 1992, first mentions Haslett on pp. 382-383 as MP for West Belfast, defeated in the "home rule" election of 1886 by Catholic votes. He became Lord Mayor not too long after, for he greeted Queen Victoria when she visited the city in 1888. He later went back to parliament as the member from North Belfast, and died in office in 1905. - RBW
File: Leyd009

His Name So Sweet

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, Lord, I just come from the fountain (x3) His name so sweet." "Poor sinner, do you love Jesus, Yes, yes, I do love my Jesus, Poor sinner, do... His name so sweet." "Class leader, do you love Jesus?" "Sidin' elder, do you love Jesus?" "Brother, do..."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1997 (Warren-EveryTimeIFeelTheSpirit)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Warren-EveryTimeIFeelTheSpirit, p. 52, "His Name So Sweet" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: WarSp052

History of Prince Edward Island, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer tells of the "dismal fate" of the Island. He complains that the rich folk of Canada have "made us slaves and sold Prince Edward Isle." He tells of a time of troubles and of many leaving their homes. At last he too must depart

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland)
KEYWORDS: Canada lament exile political patriotic Hit Him

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1975 (Fahey-Joe-Watson-AustralianTraditionalFolkSinger)

KEYWORDS: ship punishment nonballad

FOUND IN: Australia

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fahey-Joe-Watson-AustralianTraditionalFolkSinger, [p. 2, page headed "I asked Joe..."], "(no title)" (1 short text)

File: FaWaHitH

Hitler Has Only Got One Ball

DESCRIPTION: To the tune of the Colonel Bogey march: "Hitler has only got one ball, Goering has two, but they are small. Himmler has something sim'lar, But poor Goebbels has no balls at all."

AUTHOR: unknown (music by Lieutenant F. J. Ricketts, also known as Kenneth J. Alford, 1881–1945)

EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead)

KEYWORDS: nonballad injury

FOUND IN: Canada

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead, p. 186, "Hitler Has Only Got One Ball" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #10493

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Colonel Bogey March" (tune)
cf. "Comet" (tune)

File: Hopk186
Hitler in Bits
DESCRIPTION: "This is the year of forty-one." Hitler "made a Poland that we could not understand"; we hope he comes to Newfoundland. "He thought he was going to rule us" "I suppose he will be over ... And he'll go back to Germany with his yellow planes in bits"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA-Leach)
KEYWORDS: war nonballad patriotic
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
Roud #30129
RECORDINGS:
Frank Shanahan, "Hitler in Bits" (on MUNFLA-Leach)
File: ML3H1iB1

Hitler's Song
DESCRIPTION: Overnight Old Nick grows a mustache on Hitler. Convinced that this miracle assures him "we'll conquer the world" he starts the war "like a wild maniac." He and his friends are doomed: "when we get through The pieces we leave will be too small to mend"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports)
KEYWORDS: war humorous nonballad patriotic Devil
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 177-181, "Hitler's Song (sung to the tune of the 'Squid Jiggin' Ground')" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #25323
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Squid-Jiggin' Ground" (tune)
File: Guig177

HMS Ariel Song
DESCRIPTION: "Air-i-el, Shades of Hell, What a place to live in. Rain all round, Weather bound, Gone to ground and never be found For years and years, Confirms our fears That we're forgotten numbers. Here are we till eternity...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1969 (Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy)
KEYWORDS: navy hardtimes derivative
FOUND IN: Britain(England)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy, p. 107, "HMS 'Ariel' Song" (1 text, tune referenced)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. Heykens's "Serenade No. 1" (tune)
cf. "Pump, Suck, Blow" (tune)
File: Tawn078

HMS Exeter Song
DESCRIPTION: "When the Exeter went on patrol, We all put our woolies on, But south of the border is more in our line, Or the land of the Rising Sun.... But a certain marine down the fore magazine Said, 'Buet mon droit, bless 'em all."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1987 (Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy)
KEYWORDS: ship clothes travel navy
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Mar 1, 1942 - Sinking of HMS Exeter
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
NOTES [152 words]: According to M. J. Whitley, Cruisers of World War II: An International Encyclopedia, Arms and Armour Press, 1995, p. 94, HMS Exeter, the only cruiser of her class, was laid down at Devonport on August 1, 1928, launched July 18, 1929, and completed July 27, 1931; she was sunk March 1, 1942. She was a heavy cruiser, but a rather under-gunned one (the result of British naval economies), with just six 8" guns (a normal heavy cruiser would have eight or more) and a design speed of 32 knots.

This song is largely right: even though Exeter was a British ship, she spent most of her World War II career in the southern hemisphere, first while chasing the German Graf Spee and then in the south Pacific defending the Malay Barrier from Japan. It was there that she was sunk in the aftermath of the Battle of the Java Sea. For a fuller overview of her career, see the notes to "The Sinking of the Graf Spee." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.1

File: Tawn066

Ho for California (Banks of Sacramento)

DESCRIPTION: The "plot" of the song varies widely, according to its use by pioneers, sailors, or gold-diggers. The chorus is fixed: "(Then) Ho! (boys), Ho! To California go! There's plenty of gold in the world, we're told, on the banks of the Sacramento"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1849 (Journal of William F. Morgan of the La Grange)

KEYWORDS: gold shanty travel

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1849 - California gold rush

FOUND IN: US(MA,MW,NE) Australia Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (22 citations):
- Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 125, "California" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 70, "Ho, Boys, Ho" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 68-70, "Sacramento" (3 texts, 2 tunes, though the last of these derives its verses from "Rolling in the Dew (The Milkmaid)"
- Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen, pp. 105-106, "Sacramento" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, pp. 39-40, "Banks of Sacramento" (1 composite text, 1 tune)
- Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 109-110, "Banks of Sacramento" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 106-114, "California," "Sacramento" (7 texts-1 in German, 3 tunes) [AbEd, pp. 95-100]
- Hugill-SongsOfTheSea, p. 11, "Sacramento" (1 text, 1 tune); p. 149, "De Hamborger Viermaster" (2 texts, German & English, 1 tune)
- Shay-AmericanSeaSongsAndChanteys, pp. 82-83, "The Banks of Sacramento" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, p. 69, "Sacramento" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, pp. 110-111, "California"; 111, "The Banks of Sacramento" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
- Smith/Hatt/Fowke-SeaSongsBalladFromNineteenthCenturyNovaScotia, p. 37, "On the Banks of the Sacramento" (1 text)
- Lomax/Lomax-FolkSongUSA 42, "Sacramento" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Meredith/Covell/Brown-FolkSongsOfAustraliaVol2, p. 91, "Banks of the Sacramento" (1 fragmentary text, in which the singer seeks girls rather than gold; 1 tune)
- Huntington-SongsTheWhalemenSang, pp. 174-176, "The California Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 655-656, "Ho! For California!" (1 text)
- Silber/Silber-FolkSingersWordbook, p. 88, "Sacramento" (1 text)
- Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, pp. 158-159, "(De) Camptown Races--(Sacramento)"
- DT, SACRMNTO* SACRMN2*

Frederick Pease Harlow, _The Making of a Sailor, or Sea Life Aboard a Yankee Square-Rigger_, 1928; republished by Dover, 1988, p. 320, "Banks of Sacramento" (1 text, 1 tune)
Stewart Gordon, _A History of the World in Sixteen Shipwrecks_, ForeEdge, 2015, p. 176, "(no title)" (1 text)
Roud #319
RECORDINGS:
Logan English, "Sacramento" (on LEnglish02)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Ten Thousand Miles Away" (tune)
cf. "A Capital Ship" (tune)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Californi-O
Blow, Boys, Blow for Californi-O
Der Hamborger Veermaster
Der Hamborger Vullrigger
NOTES [80 words]: Possibly created and certainly popularized by the Hutchinson Family (who published a text in their 1855 songbook), versions of this song are found throughout the U.S., and are well-known among sailors.
The texts are diverse (Hugill, for instance, has a version in which a sailor courts a girl and winds up with a venereal disease), but most seem to be related to the California gold rush. The tune is a variation on "Camptown Races," perhaps in turn based on "A Capital Ship." - RBW
Last updated in version 5.2
File: E125

Ho! For a Rover's Life; or The Song of the Pirate
DESCRIPTION: "Ho! for a rover's life, Battle and stormy strife! Fearless he braves Wild wind and waves." The pirate courts "the dark-eyed maid" with his guitar. He sets out to attack a ship; the enemy is a warship, and he is killed crying "Stand to your guns!"
AUTHOR: John H. Hewitt (1801-1890) (source: Frank-NewBookOfPirateSongs)
EARLIEST DATE: 1843 (sheet music, according to Frank-NewBookOfPirateSongs)
KEYWORDS: pirate courting death music
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Frank-NewBookOfPirateSongs 57, "Ho! For a Rover's Life; or The Song of the Pirate" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #V39487
File: FrPi057

Hob-Y-Derri-Dando
DESCRIPTION: Welsh shanty often sung mixing English verses and the Welsh chorus. The translation of the Welsh version has a chorus something like "Jane, sweet Jane, full of charm, the birds are singing merrily."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas)
LONG DESCRIPTION: Welsh shanty often sung mixing English verses and the Welsh chorus. The translation of the Welsh version has a chorus something like "Jane, sweet Jane, full of charm, the birds are singing merrily." The most common English verses featured nonsense rhymes about "Davy Davy" from Nevin and various members of his family. However other versions also borrowed from "Sally Brown" among others. The English verses sung to this were also often put to the tune of another Welsh shanty, "Mochyn Du.
KEYWORDS: shanty foreignlanguage
FOUND IN: Britain Wales
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 525-528, "Hob-Y-Derri-Dando" (4 texts-English & Welsh, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Mochyn Du" (English verses often interchanged with this)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Hob-Y-Derrin-Dando
Hoban Boys, The

DESCRIPTION: On the night of October 27, a hurricane blows in. The next day, the singer sees the wrecks of the Minnie and Lilly & Jim. The singer's own Mayflower has been towed to St Pierre and looted; they pay the fee to the French, clear customs, and head home.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1976 (Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou)
KEYWORDS: sea ship storm wreck
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 51, "The Hoban Boys" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #28979
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Old Mayflower" (theme of wreckers) and references there

NOTES [688 words]: "The Hoban Boys" text mentions no year. My guess is that it refers to the October 28, 1921 storm but, while there is documentation for damage by that storm in Trinity Bay and Conception Bay (Fred Martin's site has a list of those losses) and Robert Parsons mentions damage at Hermitage Bay and Fortune Bay, I find no information about losses in between, at Placentia Bay.

Northern Shipwrecks Database, and that database's owner -- David Barron -- also has no specific information about ships lost on that date; he recommends I review microfilm of local papers for that week. I contacted a Placentia Bay newspaper, The Southern Gazette, but they have no information about the storm (they started publication in 1975) and thought "only the Telegram or the defunct Daily News would have recorded that info." The Telegram has not responded to my inquiry. Neither Ms. Lehr nor Ms. Best could pin down the year for this storm; Ms. Best, noting that "sometimes dates in songs are imperfectly remembered and passed on, as you will no doubt realise" wondered why I would take the dates mentioned in the ballad so literally. Obviously, that's a good point. Even for such a famous sinking as "The Loss of the Atlantic," for which I've seen six distinct versions, Ranson [Songs of the Wexford Coast] p. 88 has the sailing date from Liverpool April 18 -- rather than March 20 -- for a wreck that occurred on April 1; Ranson's other version has the sailing from Queenstown on March 21 -- as should be -- but the departure from Liverpool as March 14.

Any further research will have to be done in Newfoundland. - BS

The place names in the song make it clear that the location is indeed the Placentia Bay. The gale apparently took place October 27 and after. The ships involved are said to be the Minnie (lost on Woody Island), the Lilly and Jim (or Lily and Jim, or some such), the Mayflower, and two ships that were not involved but might rescue the survivors, the Argyle and the Daisy.

The Argyle is the best hint. The most noteworthy Newfoundland ship named Argyle was one of the members of the Alphabet Fleet (for the Alphabet Fleet, see the notes to "The Wreck of the Steamship Ethie"), which was placed in service in 1900, and which served in Placentia Bay (Hanrahan, p. 3). she was in service until 1946 (Hanrahan, p. 199). That doesn't quite guarantee that the events in the song took place between 1900 and 1946, but it's the way to bet.

The name Daisy is not as clear a hint, but there was a tug Daisy which served in St. John's in 1880 (Power, p. 45). These tugs tended to be utility vessels, so I wouldn't be surprised if it's the same ship, moved to Placentia Bay when she got older. This would tend to imply a relatively early date. So does the mention of paying a fee to the French. The French had settled the western parts of Newfoundland in the period before the American Revolution, and even after Britain took over the island, the French had rights on the "French Shore." It wasn't until 1904 that the French gave up their last rights in the region (Noel, p. 34). So I think a case could be made for a date before 1904.

Galgay/McCarthy2, p. 105, has a list of thirteen ships lost on October 28, 1921. As Ben said, none were lost in Placentia Bay, but they were lost on both sides of her, and some of the names might have inspired the names in this song: D. P. Ingram, Jean and Mary, Passport, Prospector, Pansy, Natoma, Brothers, Willis Martin, Dianthus, A. Hardy, Cactus, Gordon, and Galatea.

"The Old Mayflower" also mentions a ship named Mayflower being looted. Whether that describes the same event as this I do not know.

Because the event took place in October, the Minnie involved is presumably not the Minnie which was wrecked on Kelly's Island, January 6, 1886 (Galgay/McCarthy3, p. 160), nor the Minnie Parsons, which was lost on an unknown date in the Strait of Belle Isle, not Placentia Bay (Galgay/McCarthy1, p. 87). Similarly, the Lilly is not the HMS Lily wrecked near Point Amour, Labrador in September, 1889 (Galgay/McCarthy3, pp. 119-128). - RBW

Bibliography

- Galgay/McCarthy1: Frank Galgay and Michael McCarthy, Shipwrecks of Newfoundland and Labrador, [Volume I], Harry Cuff Publishing, 1987
- Noel: S. J. R. Noel, Politics in Newfoundland, University of Toronto Press, 1971

Last updated in version 6.1
File: LeBe051

Hobbies, The

DESCRIPTION: In praise of hobbies, "for each has a hobby from cobbler to king." Some have unfortunate hobbies (e.g. "The hobbies of scolds are their husbands to tease," ) some have the hobbies of courting: "The Americans'... hobby is Madison, peace, and free trade."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1908 (Greig/Duncan8)
KEYWORDS: political sports patriotic nonballad
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1809-1817 - Presidency of James Madison
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #50, p. 1, "Hobbies"; #51, pp. 2-3, "Hobbies" (1 text plus 2 fragments)
Greig/Duncan8 1914, "Hobbies" (3 texts)
Arnett-IHearAmericaSinging, p. 36-37, "The Hobbies" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #5632
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Imphm" (tune, per Greig/Duncan8)
cf. "The Wee Window" (tune, per Greig/Duncan8)
NOTES [18 words]: Greig quoting his correspondent in 1908: "I have sung it hundreds of times during the last 50 years..." - BS
Last updated in version 2.6
File: Arn036

Hobbleton and Jinnikie

DESCRIPTION: "Hobbleton and Jinnikie Be kind to Peter Din." "Ye needna ca' me b.a. [Greig/Duncan8: black arse], Ye never saw my skin"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan8)
KEYWORDS: bawdy nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan8 1723, "Hobbleton and Jinnikie" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13141
File: GrD81723

Hobie Noble [Child 189]

DESCRIPTION: The singer tells how Hobie, an Englishman exiled to Scotland, was convinced by the traitor Sim of the Mains to raid England. Warned of Noble's coming, the land-sergeant (whose brother Noble had killed) takes him. Noble is hanged at Carlisle

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1775 (Percy)
KEYWORDS: borderballad fight punishment execution revenge

REFERENCES (7 citations):
Child 189, "Hobie Noble" (1 text)
Chambers-ScottishBallads, pp. 49-53, "Hobie Noble" (1 text)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 516-519, "Hobie Noble" (1 text)
Friedman-Viking/PenguinBookOfFolkBallads, p. 252, "Hobie Noble" (1 text)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads, pp. 381-384, "Hobie Noble" (1 text)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 139, "Hobie Noble" (1 text)

DT 189, HOBINOBL
Roud #4014

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Jock o the Side" [Child 187] (characters)

NOTES [110 words]: According to James Reed, The Border Ballads, University of London/The Athlone Press, 1975, p. 70, "Beyond what we learn of him from this ballad and from Jock o' the Side [which also mentions him in some versions], little is known of Hobie Noble. A 'Hobbe Noble' is mentioned as dwelling 'within the Nyxsons' in a letter to Burghley of 1583, and Edmund Bogg (without offering evidence) says that he was born at Crew Tower, a pele [small fortified dwelling] about two miles north of Bewcastle. It is just possible that he is the 'Hobbe of Cumcrooke, an English outlaw "reset" some time in both countries -- for whose apprehension I shall do my diligence.'" - BW

Last updated in version 5.3

Hobo Bill's Last Ride

DESCRIPTION: "Riding on an eastbound freight train, speeding through the night, Hobo Bill, a railroad bum, was fighting for his life." Bill dies alone and is found with a smile on his face, but none mourn; "he was just a railroad bum who died out in the cold."

AUTHOR: Waldo O'Neal (born 1908, according to Cohen)
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (recording, Jimmie Rodgers)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-LongSteelRail, pp. 393-396, "Hobo Bill's Last Ride" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #7513

RECORDINGS:
Gene Autry, "Hobo Bill's Last Ride" (Gennett 7290/Champion 16073/Supertone 9702, 1930; Superior 2769, 1932)
Frank Marvin, "Hobo Bill's Last Ride" (Banner 773/Domino 4601/Jewel 6024/Challenge 785/Romeo 1388/Conqueror 7592 [all as Frankie Wallace], 1930) (Brunswick 474, rec. 1930)
Jimmie Rodgers, "Hobo Bill's Last Ride" (Victor 22421, 1930; rec. 1929/Montgomery Ward 4210)
Hank Snow, "Hobo Bill's Last Ride" (RCA Victor 20-4095, 1951)

File: LRai393

Hobo from the T & P Line, The

DESCRIPTION: Singer, a hobo, gets a job in (Wellford). He courts the boss's daughter; the boss calls him "a bummer, all dressed up." Bidding farewell to the daughter, he sets off down the road with tears in his eyes, vowing to return

AUTHOR: Almoth Hodges & Bob Miller?
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (recording, Almoth Hodges w. Bob Miller's Hinky Dinkers)

LONG DESCRIPTION: Singer, a hobo, lands in (Wellford), is hired by a boss who gives him easy work and treats him well. He and the boss's daughter court; the boss calls him in, saying, "They say you're a bummer, all dressed up." Singer tells boss he does his work well; if the boss doesn't like it, he'll leave. Bidding farewell to the daughter, he sets off down the road with tears in his eyes, vowing to return
KEYWORDS: grief courting love rambling work boss worker hobo
FOUND IN: US(SW)
Roud #17631
RECORDINGS:
Almoth Hodges with Bob Miller's Hinky Dinkers, "The Hobo from the T & P Line" (Brunswick 399 [in two parts], probably 1930; rec. 1929; Part 1 is on Rose1)
Clayton McMichen, "Bummin' on the I. C. Line" (Varsity 5097, 1930s)
Mary Sullivan, "The T & P Line" (AFS 5099 A, 1941; on LC61)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Farmer's Boy [Laws Q30]" (plot) and references there
NOTES [8 words]: The "T & P" was the Texas and Pacific Railroad. - PJS
Last updated in version 5.0
File: RcTHFTPL

Hobo's Grave, The
DESCRIPTION: Singer comes upon a hobo's grave. The wolves howl over it; the box cars roll on, but the hobo, his father's only son, his mother's pride, lies at rest. There's no stone to mark the spot, no one to watch over it, "none to direct the money or the cheque"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1957 (recording, Tom Brandon)
KEYWORDS: loneliness grief burial death mourning hobo
FOUND IN: Canada(Ont)
Roud #4825
RECORDINGS:
Tom Brandon, "The Hobo's Grave" (on Ontario1)
NOTES [80 words]: The lyrics sound like a commercial "hobo song" from the 1920s, or perhaps a poem, but so far I haven't been able to locate a source from that period. Tom Brandon says he learned it from his brother, who worked in northern Ontario in the 1930s.
The reference to "the money or the cheque" suggests the hobo may have been a "remittance man," perhaps an English ne'er-do-well shipped off to Canada and supported by an allowance so that he wouldn't embarrass his wealthy family. - PJS
File: RcHobGra

Hobo's Last Ride (I), The
DESCRIPTION: A hobo lifts his dying partner Jack into a boxcar, then reminisces about their past. He is keeping his promise to take Jack back home to be buried. He sighs for the old days and "for his pal so cold/Who was taking his last long ride"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (recording, Buell Kazee)
LONG DESCRIPTION: A hobo lifts his dying partner Jack into a boxcar, then reminisces to him as they ride about the places they've been and the lines they've ridden. He is keeping his promise to take Jack back home to be buried, and laments the doctor who was "too busy with the wealthy folks/To doctor a worn-out bum." As the train rolls east, he sighs for the old days and "for his pal so cold/Who was taking his last long ride"
KEYWORDS: grief poverty rambling train travel burial death dying friend hobo
FOUND IN: US(SE) Canada
Roud #9847
RECORDINGS:
Buell Kazee, "The Hobo's Last Ride" (Brunswick 330, 1929; Supertone S-2056, 1930)
Goebel Reeves, "The Hobo's Last Long Ride" (MacGregor 858, n.d.)
Hank Snow, "The Last Ride" (RCA Victor, c. 1959)
Art Thieme, "The Hobo's Last Ride" (on Thieme03)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
NOTES [81 words]: Despite the obvious similarity in plot, this is an entirely separate song from "The Dying Hobo."
The Kazee and Reeves recordings use a tune that Kazee composed as a setting for a poem by A.
L. Kirby, which he said he found in a book of Northwest poems. Hank Snow's recording, cited above, uses a different tune, possibly composed by Ted Daffan. To confuse things, Snow recorded another song called "The Hobo's Last Ride," which we have indexed separately as "Hobo's Last Ride (II)."- PJS

Last updated in version 5.0
File: RcTHLR

Hobo's Lullabye
DESCRIPTION: "Go to sleep you weary hobo, Let the town drift slowly by. Listen to the steel rails humming, That's the hobo's lullabye." The hobo is urged not to think about tomorrow, to ignore the police (who will not be found in heaven), and to remember mother's love
AUTHOR: Goebel Reeves
EARLIEST DATE: 1934 (recording, Goebel Reeves)
KEYWORDS: hobo rambling lullaby
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 410, "Hobo's Lullabye" (1 text)
DT, HOBOULL *
Roud #16629
RECORDINGS:
Billy Cox & Cliff Hobbs, "The Hobo's Lullaby" (Vocalion 04924/Conqueror 9221, 1939; Conqueror 9352, 1940)
Goebel Reeves, "Hobo's Lullabye" (Champion 45181, 1936); (Vocalion 02828, 1934)
NOTES [34 words]: Although composed, this has become so popular that I think it qualifies as a genuine folk song. Woody Guthrie, for instance, was very fond of it, and many people must have learned it from his singing. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.3
File: FSWB410C

Hoboes Grand Convention, The
DESCRIPTION: "If you give me your attention, A few facts I will mention Concerning a convention That was held last fall." The hoboes gather in Montreal, and have a quiet convention, "For every bum was loaded To the neck with alcohol."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (Flanders/Brown-VermontFolkSongsAndBallads)
KEYWORDS: hobo party drink
FOUND IN: US(NE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Flanders/Brown-VermontFolkSongsAndBallads, pp. 51-52, "The Hoboes Grand Convention" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, HOBOCONV *
ST FlBr051 (Partial)
Roud #5445
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Hobos' Convention" (subject)
NOTES [23 words]: Unlike most hobo songs, this one is clearly unsympathetic to the hobos; it equates them directly with burns and indirectly with thieves. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.7
File: FlBr051

Hoboes of Maine, The
DESCRIPTION: "All brother Hoboes, I pray come along, I hope you will listen and join in my song." There were many young men traveling the state. They live lousy lives. The Police oppress them. They have "great hope That in some future day they will have further scope"
AUTHOR: Larry Gorman (1846-1917)
EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (Ives-LarryGorman)
Hoboken Fire, The

DESCRIPTION: "'Twas on a Saturday evening that the fire bells rang out, The North German Docks are burning! most every one did shout." It is "a picture no artist could paint" as three German ships burn at the docks. Listeners are urged to help the victims.

AUTHOR: Larry Lavake
EARLIEST DATE: 2008 (Cohen); original publication c. 1900
KEYWORDS: ship fire disaster death
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Jun 20, 1900 - Fire at the docks of the North German Lloyd Steamship Company pier in Hoboken, New Jersey
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 128-129, "The Hoboken Fire" (1 text)
File: CAFS1128

Hobos' Convention, The

DESCRIPTION: "You've heard of big conventions... Now get this straight, there's none so great, As when we hobos met." They gather in Portland, Oregon from all over the country. The singer tells of some of the other hobos, then catches a train.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Gordon collection, according to Cohen)
KEYWORDS: hobo party moniker
FOUND IN: US(NW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 639-640, "The Hobos' Convention" (1 text)
Roud #9843
CROSS-REFERENCES:
* cf. "The Hoboes Grand Convention" (subject)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Hobo Convention at Portland, The

Hoffnung, De

DESCRIPTION: Hugill lists this as a German version of "Long Time Ago." Translated text tells of a captain making a deal with the devil to get him to port on time. The Devil complies but then the Captain gets the best of him by splicing his tail to the anchor.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas)
KEYWORDS: shanty sailor Devil bargaining trick
FOUND IN: Germany
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 104-105, "De Hoffnung" (2 texts, German & English)
Hugill-SongsOfTheSea, p. 182, "De Hoffnung" (1 text, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
* cf. "A Long Time Ago" (tune, chorus)
Hog and Tarry

DESCRIPTION: "Hog an tarry, baloo bonny, Hog an tarry, hishy ba; Hog an tarry, baloo bonny, Hog an tarry, hishy ba"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan8)

KEYWORDS: lullaby

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan8 1555, "Hog and Tarry" (1 short text, 1 tune)

Roud #13516

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Blacksmith" (tune, per Greig/Duncan8)

NOTES [67 words]: Greig/Duncan8: "Spelling doubtful -- possibly should be 'Hogin': meaning unknown. No more words remembered, but one other verse says: 'He's a sailin' on the sea.'"
The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan8 text. - BS

How about "Whig and Tory"? Odd words for a lullaby, I grant, but I can imagine a Jacobite mother singing something about "Baloo, my bairnie, Whig and Tory cannae get ye...." - RBW

Last updated in version 2.5

File: GrD81555

Hog Drovers

DESCRIPTION: Playparty. "Hog drovers (x3) we air, A-courtin' your daughter so handsome and fair. Kin we get a largin' here?" The father turns them down. Others (gold miners, cowboys, etc.) ask for her hand. Most are rejected; one (a farmer?) may be acceptable

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1898 (Gomme)

KEYWORDS: courting playparty rejection father children

FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE,So)

REFERENCES (12 citations):
Randolph 555, "Hog Rovers" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5, pp. 517-520, "Hog Drovers" (4 texts, 4 tunes)
Hudson-FolksongsOfMississippi 148, pp. 296-297, "Hog Drovers" (1 text)
Hudson-FolkTunesFromMississippi 31, "Hog Drovers" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, pp. 155-156, "Hog-Drovers" (1 text, 1 tune)
Abermethy-SinginTexas, p. 94, "Hog Drovers" (1 text, 1 tune)
Spurgeon-WaltzTheHall-AmericanPlayParty, pp. 98-99, "Five Tinkers" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 207, "Hog Drovers" (1 text, 1 tune)
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame pp. 111-113, "(Hog-drivers, hog-drivers, hog-drivers we air)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #164, "Swine-herders" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Botkin-TreasuryOfAmericanFolklore, pp. 810-812, "Swine-Herders (Hog Drovers)" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST LoF207 (Full)

Roud #3596

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Three Dukes" (plot, lyrics)

NOTES [13 words]: Randolph reports that this is based on the Irish game "The Nine Daughters." - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: LoF207
Hog Rogues on the Hurricane

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, concerning of some gentlemen who lived down below, They followed hog stealing wherever they did go." The set out to catch an old spotted sow -- then steal several sheep. The locals are upset by the crime

AUTHOR: Tom Morgan?

EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (collected from Theophilus G. Hoskins)

KEYWORDS: hunting animal theft

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 114-115, "Hog Rogues on the Hurricane" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #15604
File: LoSi114

Hog-Eye Man (I), The

DESCRIPTION: The Hog-Eye Man [read: "The Vagina-hungry Man"] meets Sally or Jenny or Molly who is lying in the grass or the sand and who does good service with him.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1922

KEYWORDS: bawdy shanty sex

FOUND IN: US(Ap,So)

REFERENCES (12 citations):
Randolph/Legman-RollMelInYourArms l, pp. 401-404, "The Hog-Eye Man" (8 texts, 1 tune)
Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen, p. 104, "The Hog-Eye Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 54-55, "The Hog-Eye Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 269-272, "The Hog-Eye Man" (3 texts & several fragments, 3 tunes) [AbEd, pp. 199-200]
Sharp-EnglishFolkChanteys, V, p. 6, "The Hog-Eyed Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, pp. 58-59, "Hog's-Eye Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, pp. 410-411, "The Hog-Eye Man" (1 fragment, 1 tune, evidently bowdlerized)
Terry-TheShantyBook-Part1, "The Hog's-eye Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 123, "As I Went Down to Mas' Cornfield" (2 fragments, 1 tune, too short to really identify and filed here mostly because one of the informants through it unsuitable for public performance)
Bush-FSofCentralWestVirginiaVol5, pp. 17-18, "Sally Ann" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, HOGEYEMN*

Roud #331

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Sally in the Garden" (the "clean" version of this piece)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Ox-Eye Man
The Hogs-Eye Man
The Hawks Eye Man
Oh, Who's Been Here?

NOTES [138 words]: Ed Cray explains "hog-eye man" as one deeply interested in sex. Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag explains a "hog-eye" as the barges that traveled from the Atlantic ports around Cape Horn to San Francisco. A "hog-eye man" would therefore be a crewmember of such a barge.

Give the length of the voyage around the Horn in the 1850s, the two definitions may not be mutually exclusive.

This overlaps very much with "Sally in the Garden" -- so much so that Roud lumps them, and it is often hard to tell which song a fragment goes with; better to check both. - RBW

"Oh, Who's Been Here?" is quoted by Hugill, from a shanty which Cecil Sharp gave in the Journal of the Folk Song Society. Hugill only quotes one line, which has the same melody and very similar words as "Hog-Eye Man" though not the usual "Hog-eye" chorus. - SL

Last updated in version 6.0
Hog-Thorny Bear, The

DESCRIPTION: "I call the attention of each merry blade, Be still as a mouse and let nothing be said." Two men meet with a "bear." Taking guns, they beset it with axes and chase it up a tree. They chop down the tree and the dog catches the "bear" -- really a porcupine.

AUTHOR: Stephen Streeter (source: Flanders-ChapBook Flanders-VermontChapBook)

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Flanders/Ballard/Brown/Barry-NewGreenMountainSongster); reportedly written 1820

KEYWORDS: animal dog hunting humorous

FOUND IN: US(NE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Flanders/Ballard/Brown/Barry-NewGreenMountainSongster, pp. 219-221, "The Hog-Thorny Bear" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Flanders-ChapBook Flanders-VermontChapBook, pp. 34-37, "The Hog-Thorny Bear" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST FING219 (Partial)

Roud #4155

NOTES [7 words]: This is item dH35 in Laws's Appendix II. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.2

File: F1NG219

Hog-tub, The

DESCRIPTION: Singer is invited home by his "pretty young lass." She pushes him in the hog-tub and, had not a friend come by to save him, he would have drowned. He takes his love to a dance. He defends kissing: if bad it would not have approval of parsons and ladies.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1846 (Halliwell)

KEYWORDS: courting rejection rescue dancing Bible humorous

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (4 citations):
- Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 177-178, "She Bundled Me Into the Hog-tub" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 375)
- Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 298, "It's once I courted as pretty a lass" (1 fragment)
- Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #282, pp. 165-166, "/(It's once I courted as pretty a lass)"

ADDITIONAL: James Orchard Halliwell, The Book of Nursery Rhymes Complete (Philadelphia, 1846 ("Digitized by Google")), #116 p. 79, "(It's once I courted as pretty a lass)" (1 text)

Roud #1273

BROADSIDES:

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Kissing's No Sin (I)" (theme, lyrics)

NOTES [72 words]: Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 298, "It's once I courted as pretty a lass" has only the first verse. The description is from broadside Bodleian Firth b.33(36). - BS

There is a very complicated situation here, with "The Hog-Tub" sharing lyrics with "Kissing's No Sin (I)," which shares them with "The Mautman." I have no idea how these strands are to be disentangled. For more, see the notes to "Kissing's No Sin (I)." - RBW

Last updated in version 2.6

File: 002298

Hog's Heart, The

DESCRIPTION: A man is deceived that his wife is unfaithful. He sends a servant to kill her and bring back her heart but he brings a hog's heart instead. When the original deception is proven man and lady are reunited.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1856 (Thompson-APioneerSongster)
LONG DESCRIPTION: A merchant bets a shopkeeper that the merchant's wife is faithful. The shopkeeper tricks the merchant into believing his wife is not faithful. The merchant sends his servant to kill his wife and bring back her heart. The wife convinces the servant to bring back a hog's heart instead. To escape, wife dresses as a man and becomes a commander in the army. Returning, she has the merchant, servant, and deceiver arraigned before a magistrate where she reveals herself, the original deception is admitted, the deceiver commits suicide, merchant and lady are reunited, and faithful servant
KEYWORDS: accusation lie wager return reunion separation travel crime prison punishment cross-dressing suicide commerce England Russia husband wife servant
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Thompson-APioneerSongster 4, "The Hog's Heart" (1 text)
Roud #24145
BROADSIDES:
NOTES [388 words]: Thompson-APioneerSongster and [formerly] Roud make this Child 268 ["The Twa Knights"] on the basis of motif agreement rather than any textual agreement. Of the TMI motifs Thompson-APioneerSongster cites for this ballad only N15 ("chastity wager") applies to Child 268 [see the note below on motifs].
Halliwell says of this ballad that "it is of great curiosity, being founded on the same tale as Cymbeline, and from the close similarity of its story to the tale as related in 'Westward for Smelts,' 1620, it would appear that it was formed from the popular traditional version of the romance, not on the play (Halliwell 1850, p. 1). In his preface to Westward for Smelts Halliwell mentions a controversy about the 1620 edition and whether there might have been a now lost 1603 edition (Halliwell 1848, p. vi). The point is that if there were a 1603 edition Shakespeare might have read it before writing Cymbeline. The tale related in Westward for Smelts is "The Fish Wife's Tale of Stand on the Green" (Halliwell 1848, pp. 19-36). There are differences in plot between the ballad and story. In the tale no evidence of the murder is required or offered but, to keep the secret, the wife does have to dress as a man. This is a tale type ATU 880, "a man boasts of his wife" [see Hans-Jorg Uther, The Types of International Folktales, Suomalainen Tiedeakatemia, 2004, Vol. I, pp. 502-503]. Also, in the ballad, the deceiver is smuggled into the wife's room in a chest; in the story he simply hides under the bed.
Munro (Vol 2, p.1172) reviews arguments that the wager-theme [in Cymbelline] might have come directly from Decameron or Westward for Smelts, or that the source for Cymbelline and Westward for Smelts may have been "independent versions, each related to Boccaccio." The proof of the killing in the ballad is close to the scheme in Grimm #53, "Little Snow White": there the huntsman, required to return with Snow White's lung and liver, spares Snow White and returns a boar's lung and liver instead.
Thompson-APioneerSongster sees the following TMI motifs in the ballad: K512.2 "compassionate executioner: substituted heart," K521.4.1.1 "girl escapes in male disguise," K1342 "entrance into a woman's room by hiding in a chest," K2112.1 "false tokens of wife's unfaithfulness" and N15 "chastity wager." - BS
Bibliography

- (The) ATU: Hans-Jorg Uther, The Types of International Folktales, Suomalainen Tiedeakatemia, 2004
- Grimm: (Jacob Grimm, James Stern, editor,) The Complete Grimm's Fairy Tales, Pantheon Books, 1972
- Halliwell 1848: James Orchard Halliwell, editor, Westward for Smelts The Percy Society, 1848 ("Digitized by Google")
- Halliwell 1850: James Orchard Halliwell, editor, Pallatine Anthology: a Collection of Ancient Poems and Ballads Relating to Lancashire and Cheshire private circulation, 1850 ("Digitized by Microsoft")
- Munro: John Munro, The London Shakespeare, Simon and Schuster, 1957
- Payne 1903: John Payne, Stories of Boccaccio (The Decameron) The Bibliophiliast Library, Hogan's Lake

DESCRIPTION: "Come all you brisk young fellows that assemble here tonight, Assist my bold endeavors while these few lines I write...." The singer tells of the exploits of the logging gang Bill and Tom Hogan led to Hogan's Lake

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1957 (Fowke-LumberingSongsFromTheNorthernWoods)

KEYWORDS: logger work

FOUND IN: Canada(Que)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
- Fowke-LumberingSongsFromTheNorthernWoods #6, "Hogan's Lake" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Fowke/Mills/Blume-CanadasStoryInSong, pp. 174-176, "Hogan's Lake" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs 20, "Hogan's Lake" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST FMB174 (Partial)

Roud #3682

RECORDINGS:
- O. J. Abbott, "Hogan's Lake" (on Lumber01)

File: FMB174

Hogs in the Garden

DESCRIPTION: "Hogs in the garden, catch 'em, Towser; Cows in the corn-field, run, boys, run! Cats in the cream-pot, run, girls, run; Fire on the mountain, run, boys, run!"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: c. 1843 (Only True Mother Goose's Melodies)

KEYWORDS: animal

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #660, p. 260, "(Hogs in the garden, catch 'em, Towser)"

File: BGMG660

Hokey Pokey (I)

DESCRIPTION: We kneel on the carpet, then stand to choose a lover. The baby sits on its mother's knee crying for "hokey-pokey": a penny a lump, "that's the stuff to make you jump" and fall.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan8)

KEYWORDS: courting nonballad children

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Greig/Duncan8 1573, "Hokey Pokey" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #13519

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Here's Three Beggars" (tune, per Greig/Duncan8)
- cf. "This Pretty Girl of Mine" (one verse)

NOTES [59 words]: I would not consider this the same as the horrid "Hokey Pokey" game they inflicted upon us in elementary school in Minnesota in the 1960s. I have no idea if this song inspired that, or if the school version was just some well-intentioned teacher's nightmare project. It appears that song does have some traditional roots; see the "Hokey Pokey (II)." - RBW

Last updated in version 2.6
Hokey Pokey (II)

DESCRIPTION: "You put your right arm in, You put your right arm out, In, out, in, out, Shake it all about; You do the hokey pokey And you turn yourself around, And that's what it's all about"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (ewell)
KEYWORDS: playparty
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 110, "Okey Kokey" (1 text, 1 tune)
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #68, "Right Elbow In" (1 text)
Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel, p. 249, "The Hokey Cokey" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Looby Lou" (text) and references there
ALTENATE TITLES:
The Cokey Cokey
NOTES [269 words]: The words in the description, above, are usually associated with "Looby Lou."
"The buyers of so-called penny ices sold in the London Streets during the summer months are charged only a halfpenny; and the numerous vendors, usually Italians, need no cry... Parti-coloured Neapolitan ices, vended by unmistakeable natives of Whitechapel or the New Cut, whose curious cry of 'Okey Poke' originated no one knows how, have lately appeared in the streets. Hoke Pokey is of a firmer make and probably stiffer material than the penny ice of the Italians. ... (source: Andrew W. Tuer, Old London Street Cries (London, 1885 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 58). I have seen speculation that "Hokey Pokey" derives from "hokus pokus." - BS
Although the Opies call this "Okey Kokey," I have filed it under the name which was inflicted upon us in elementary school, since presumably I wasn't the only victim. Yes, this was a REQUIRED school activity. I don't know exactly when we were first forced to play it, but it was in my elementary school, which means 1972 or earlier. Don't ask me why we were pushed into it; I can only say that I hated this thing with a passion. And I never in my life saw any child play it on the playgrounds; it was something shoved at us in gym class. Talk about ruining a tradition!
According to Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel, p. 250, "The general belief is that Charles Macak, Taft Baker, and Larry LaPrise wrote the American version of the song, 'The Hokey Pokey,' in 1949 to entertain skiers at the Sun Valley resort in Idaho, USA." He goes on to list others who had claimed rights to the source song. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.3
File: OpGa110

Hol' Yuh' Han' (Hold Your Hand)

DESCRIPTION: Jamaican patois: The singer says that it's a long time since he has seen his girl and asks [chorus] that she let him hold her hand. "Peel-head John Crow" sits on a tree top peeling blossoms. Let's wheel and turn until we fall down.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (Murray-FolkSongsOfJamaica)
KEYWORDS: courting separation nonballad bird
FOUND IN: West Indies(Jamaica)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Murray-FolkSongsOfJamaica, pp. 29-30, "Hol' Yuh Han" (1 text, 1 tune)
Noel Dexter and Godfrey Taylor, _Mango Time - Folk Songs of Jamaica_ (Kingston: Ian Randle Publishers, 2007), pp. 76-77, "Dis Long Time Gal" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jim Morse, _Folk Songs of the Caribbean_ (New York: Bantam Books, 1958), pp. 114-115, "Hol' Yuh Han" (1 text, 1 tune)
RECORDINGS:
Edric Connor with the Caribbeans and Earl Inkman, "Hol' Yuh Han" (on WIEConnor01)
NOTES [58 words]: "Peel-head John Crow" refers to the turkey vulture. Jekyll has a Jamaican Annancy story that explains why John Crow has no feathers on his head (Walter Jekyll, Jamaican Hold 'im Joe

DESCRIPTION: Joe: hold my donkey; it wants water and candy; it's dandy. Singer works and people call him "copperhead"; resting on the beach people call him "sponger man." They say his donkey is bad; it's from Trinidad; he says it's good; it's brave like Robin Hood.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Jekyll-JamaicanSongAndStory)

KEYWORDS: sex animal nonballad worksong

FOUND IN: West Indies(Bahamas,Jamaica,Trinidad) Panama Canal Zone

REFERENCES (6 citations):

Jekyll-JamaicanSongAndStory 84, "Me donkey want water" (1 fragment, 1 tune)

Helen H Roberts, "A Study of Folk Song Variants Based on Field Work in Jamaica," Vol. XXXVIII, No. 148 (Apr-Jun 1925), #32 p. 177 "Hol' Him Joe" (1 fragment, 1 tune)

ADDITIONAL: Louise Cramer, "Songs of West Indian Negroes in the Canal Zone" in _California Folklore Quarterly_., Vol. V, No. 3 (Jul 1946 (available online by JSTOR)), pp. 251-252 "Hold Him Joe" (2 texts)

Noel Dexter and Geofrey Taylor, _Mango Time: Folk Songs of Jamaica_ (Kingston: Ian Randle Publishers, 2007), pp-38-39, "Hol' 'im Joe" (1 text, 1 tune)

RECORDINGS:

Louise Bennett, "Hol' 'm Joe" (on WILBennett01)

Blind Blake Higgs, "Hold 'im Joe" (on WIIHIGGS01)

Lord Fly and Dan Williams Orchestra, "Medley of Jamaican Mento-Calypsos (Linstead Market; Hol' him Joe;Dog war a mattuse lane; Manuel Road)" (1951, Motta MRS 02A, 2006, as "Medley: Linstead Market/Hold 'im Joe/Doh War A Matches Lane/Emanuel Road on "Take Me to Jamaica, Pressure Sounds CD PSCD 51)

Lord Lebby and the Jamaican Calypsonians, "Hol 'im Joe" (1955, on Kalypso 45/78 rpm RL102,2013, "Mento, Not Calypso," Fantastic Voyage CD FDVD163)

Sam Manning's Orchestra, "Hold Him Joe" (1926, on Columbia 2409-X, n.d., "Sam Manning Volume 1 (Recorded in New York 1924-1927)", "Jazz Oracle CD BDW 8028 [instrumental])

Macbeth the Great[Patrick McDonald] and Gerald Clark and the Band, "Me Donkey Wants Water" (1999, on "Calypso after Midnight," Rounder CD 11661-1841-2 [recorded 1946])

Macbeth the Great and Gerald Clark and His Original Calypsos,"My Donkey Want Water (Hold Him Joe)" (1946, on Musicraft 434 [recorded 1945; see Guild 115B])

The Sparrow, "Donkey Want Water" (2011, on "50's Calypso Music from Trinidad," Black Round Records MP3)

Ziggy Marley, "Hold Em Joe" (2009, on "Family Time," Tuff Gong/VP CD TGWCD 0004)

The Prince Brothers, "Hold Him Joe", (1978?, High Note EP (no number)

Yellowman and Fathead, "Donkey Want Water" (2009, on "The Trojan Dancehall Collection," Sanctuary)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Dingo Lay" (theme; some lines) and references there

cf. "Lemme Go, Melda Marcy" (sexual theme; some lines)

NOTES [133 words]: Notes on "Hold 'im Joe" and "Jump in the Line" will be included in a future version of the Index.
Each song was created in one tradition -- "Hold 'im Joe" is Jamaican and "Jump in the Line" is Trinidadian -- and later crossed into the other. That is not unique to these songs. Many of the songs thought of as "calypsos" are from Jamaica.

And some calypsos have been more popular in the form of what Jamaican reggae has become. What part has the West Indian population in New York played in the change? And what part was played in both islands by American soldiers during the second world war? And so on.

Without being exhaustive -- there are lots of books, articles, and collections of recordings on the subject -- I hope to show how the changes are reflected in the history of these two songs. - BS

Last updated in version 5.3
File: RcHoImJo

Hold My Hand, Lord Jesus

DESCRIPTION: "Hold my hand, Lord Jesus, hold my hand (x2), There's a race that must be run, And a vict'ry to be won. Every hour, give me power, to go through." The devotion of the singer to Jesus is emphasized

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl)

KEYWORDS: religious Jesus nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 169, "Hold My Hand, Lord Jesus" (1 text, 1 tune)
Warner-FolkSongsAndBalladsOfTheEasternSeaboard, pp. 17-18, 75, "Hold My Hand, Lord Jesus" (1 text, given twice)

DT, LORDJSUS*

Roud #7487

RECORDINGS:
Sue Thomas, "Hold My Hand, Lord Jesus" (on USWarnerColl01)

File: Wa169

Hold On, Abraham

DESCRIPTION: "We're going down to Dixie, to Dixie, to Dixie... To fight for the dear old flag.... Hold on, Abraham... Uncle Sam's boys are coming right along." The song catalogs soldiers and generals who are fighting to recover the South for the Union

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1915

KEYWORDS: Civilwar battle nonballad

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 529-530, "Hold On, Abraham" (1 text)

Roud #15567

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "We Are Coming, Father Abraham"

NOTES [441 words]: The chorus of this song implies kinship with "We Are Coming, Father Abraham," but the verses are completely different.

The mention of 600,000 enlistees does not exactly match any of Lincoln’s calls for enlistments (the closest was the 1861 authorization of a 500,000 man army; Phisterer, p. 4), but two levies in the summer of 1862 (one for 300,000 three year volunteers and one for 300,000 nine month volunteers; Phisterer, pp. 4-5) totalled 600,000 men.

A date of late 1862 also fits the list of generals mentioned in the song, all of whom were in senior posts in 1862 (but often replaced by 1863). Among those listed:
"General Grant": Ulysses S. Grant, eventual Union high commander, who by late 1862 had already captured Fort Henry and Fort Donelson as well fought as the bloody battle of Shiloh (Jameson, p. 274).

"Our Halleck": Henry W. Halleck, who never actually fought a battle as a Union general, but was Grant's theatre commander and received credit for all victories in the west. A good organizer, the one time he led armies in the field (Corinth campaign, late spring 1862), he showed so little initiative that he took almost a month to cover 20 miles in the face of slight resistance (Catton, p.
291). Despite this, he was promoted to command of all Union armies in July 1862 (McPherson, p. 488). He held the post until 1864, when Grant took over the job (Boatner, p. 367).

"Bold Kenney": There was no Union General Kenney (the index in Phisterer, p. 332, lists Kennedy, Kennett, Kent, no Kenney). The reference is probably to General Philip Kearny, who although only a division commander was probably the most aggressive and competent officer in the Army of the Potomac (Catton, p. 401; Freeman, volume II, p. 133). He was killed at Chantilly on Sept. 1, 1862 (Boatner, p. 449).

"General Burnside": Ambrose Burnside, commander of the Army of the Potomac in the final months of 1862. A complete incompetent, he lost the Battle of Fredericksburg and was returned to subordinate roles for the rest of the war (Jameson, p. 94).

"Picayune Butler": Benjamin F. Butler, called "Old Picayune" (apparently a reference to a female character, "Picayune Butler," in the minstrel song of that title; there was also a banjo player named John Picayune Butler; see "Picayune Butler, Is She Coming to Town"). Butler was a complete incompetent, but he managed to remain a general for years because of his political connections. In late 1862 he was commander of occupied New Orleans, and so brutal and corrupt that the southerners called him "Beast Butler" (Catton, p. 341) and accused him of stealing spoons with his own hands (Boatner, p. 109). - RBW

Bibliography

- Boatner: Mark M. Boatner III, The Civil War Dictionary, 1959 (there are many editions of this very popular work; mine is a Knopf hardcover)
- Catton: Bruce Catton, Terrible Swift Sword (being the second volume of The Centennial History of the Civil War), Doubleday, 1963 (I use the 1976 Pocket Books edition)
- Freeman: Douglas Southall Freeman, Lee's Lieutenants, 3 volumes, Scribners, 1942-1945
- Phisterer: Frederick Phisterer, Campaigns of the Civil War: Statistical Record of the Armies of the United States, 1883 (I use the 2002 Castle Books reprint)

Last updated in version 5.1
File: LxA529

Hold Out to the End

DESCRIPTION: "All them Mount Zion member, they have many ups and downs, But cross come or no come, for to hold out to the end. Hold out to the end, hold out to the end, It is my 'termination for to hold out to the end."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 57, "Hold Out to the End" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #12016
NOTES [37 words]: Inspired, I suspect, by chapter 13 of Mark, or its parallels -- Jesus's apocalypse shortly before his arrest. Mark 13:13 reads, in the King James translation. "He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved." - RBW

Last updated in version 2.4
File: AWG057A

Hold the Baby

DESCRIPTION: Leader: "Hold the baby." "Rock the baby." "What's the matter?" "He needs some water." "He's got a fever." "He needs some medicine." "He needs the doctor." "Oh mamma's baby"
Responders: "Hold 'im"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1983 (McIntosh1)
Hold the Fort

DESCRIPTION: "Ho, my comrades, see the signal, Waving in the sky: Reinforcements now appearing, Victory is nigh. 'Hold the Fort, for I am coming,' Jesus signals still...." The "great Commander" will defeat Satan's "mighty host."

AUTHOR: Philip P. Bliss (1838-1876)

EARLIEST DATE: 1870 (sheet music published by S. Brainard's Sons, according to Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar; it appeared in Bliss's collection _The Charm_ in 1871, according to Julian)

KEYWORDS: religious battle nonballad

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (4 citations):
- Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 358-359, "Hold the Fort" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Silber-SoldierSongsAndHomeFrontBalladsOfCivilWar, pp. 82-83, "Hold the Fort" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 363, "Hold the Fort" (1 text)
- DT, HOLDFRT2*

RECORDINGS:
- Chautauqua Preachers' Quartette, "Hold The Fort" (Columbia A1585, 1914)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Hold the Fort (Union Version)"

SAME TUNE:
- Storm the Fort, Ye Knights ("Toiling millions now are waking, See them marching on") (Foner, p. 154; Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 371-372)
- Storm the Fort ("Oh, my brothers, see the children, Crying in the street") (Foner, p. 269)
- Our Battle Song ("Hark! the bugle note is sounding Over all the land") (Foner, p. 269)
- Columbia's Daughters (by Harriet H. Robinson; Darling-NewAmericanSongster, p. 358)
- Workman's Hymn ("Look comrades, see the signal Waving in the sky") (by Alfred Green) (Foner, p. 130)
- Cooper Campaign Song ("Listen comrades! sore beleaguered, In the toils we lie") (by Mrs. S. M. Smith) (Foner, p. 136)
- Poll Your Vote ("Greenback voters, take fresh courage, Rouse and lead the way") (Foner, p. 136)
- Spread the Light ("Fellow-toilers, pass the watchword! Would you know your powers?") (Foner, p. 166)
- An Eight Hour Song ("Ho! my brothers! See the danger, Gath'ring fast and dread") (Foner, p. 225)
- George Campaign Song ("Ho! ye workmen, see the campaign Now is raging high") (Foner, p. 262)
- Campaign Song [1887] ("Say, boys, did you hear the thunder? Look out for a storm") (by J. W. Jackson) (Foner, p. 265)
- [Socialist parody by W. B. Creech] ("Ho! our comrades, see our emblem, Waving in the sky!") (Foner, p. 297)
- Our Cause ("Dedicated to Socialistic Comrades") ("Comraes, up! up! and be doing For our cause so just and grand") (Foner, p. 299)
- Round Our Banner ("Round our banner let us rally Hearts on fire with zeal") (Garfield and Arthur Campaign Song Book 1880, p. 7)
- Hurrah for General Garfield ("Patriots, to the standard rall Of the true and just") (Garfield and Arthur Campaign Song Book 1880, p.11)
- Victory Is Sure ("Rally round the flat again! The flag that Union bore!") (Garfield and Arthur Campaign Song Book 1880, p. 15)

NOTES [712 words]: Inspired by, though hardly based on, a Civil War event (with a text perhaps suggested in part by Isaiah 13:2). After Atlanta had fallen to the Union, General Sherman set up a supply dump at Allatoona. General John Bell Hood, the Confederate commander who had lost
Atlanta, decided to attack Sherman's communications. A Confederate force under General French attacked the base at Allatoona on October 5, 1864, and called upon Union General Corse to surrender. Soon after, General Sherman was said to have sent a simple message to Corse: "Hold the fort; I am coming." Corse held out, and Sherman's troops arrived in time to drive off French. The battle itself was minor; Woodworth, p. 585, devotes only a paragraph to it, saying, "On October 5, major elements of Hood's army struck a Union garrison of slightly fewer than 2,000 men under the command of John Corse at Allatoona Pass. Corse's little band of Army of Tennessee troops... succeeded in beating off a daylong series of assaults by several times their numbers of Confederates, inflicting ruinous casualties on the attackers. The approach of Sherman's main force finally compelled the Rebels to break off their efforts and withdraw." In total, there were just eight Union regiments of infantry and a battery of artillery involved (Phisterer, p. 194), from Illinois, Iowa, Wisconsin, and Illinois. But, as Boatner says on p. 8, the action was "best known for a number of dramatic incidents associated with it."

The garrison was originally smaller, according to Boatner, p. 8 -- 860 men under Lt. Colonel John F. Tourtellote of the Fourth Minnesota regiment. (Harpers, p. 671, gives the slightly higher total of 890 and says that they were "well protected by redoubts"). Brigadier General Corse was ordered to bring up about a thousand reinforcements when it appeared Hood's forces were on the prowl. French, upon arriving before the garrison and their fort, sent in a request for the Federals to surrender "to avoid a needless effusion of blood," to which Corse answered, "we are prepared for the 'needless effusion of blood' whenever it is agreeable to you."

The initial fighting took place outside the entrenchments, but Corse's men were forced back to their defenses early in the conflict. They had inflicted enough casualties, however, that French paused, allowing Corse to put his men in strong positions (Harpers, p. 682)
The Federals had a system of signal flags, and General Sherman sent multiple messages. One of them read "Sherman is coming. Hold out." A sloppy journalist reported this as "Hold the fort; I am coming," and composer Bliss took it from there.

Many of General Corse's men suffered; 707 out of 1944 were casualties. The Rebels reportedly lost 799 (Boatner, p. 9). Corse himself was wounded in the face, and was unconscious for a time as a result (Boatner, p. 9), but he managed a day later to get off another of his dramatic messages:

"I am short a cheek-bone and an ear, but am able to whip all hell yet" (Harpers, p. 672 n. 1). Sherman supposedly said that the signal corps, which had passed the messages between Corse and the main army, had done such good work in the campaign that it more than paid its entire expense from the time of its origination (Harpers, p. 672)

Corse's skill with words had its rewards. Corse, a brigadier general with limited experience, was breveted major general to date from the day of the conflict (Phisterer, p. 257), while Lt. Colonel Tourtellotte (whose troops had broken up one of the Confederate assaults, according to Harpers, p. 671) was made Colonel to date from that day (Carley, p. 148).

The event did have some deeper significance: It caused Sherman to realize that he was going to have problems with supplies as long as he was based in Atlanta and Hood was prowling around the railroad from Tennessee. It was this problem, according to Grant, p. 356, which inspired Sherman to plan and implement his famous "March to the Sea."

Philip P. Bliss, when he published this song in his 1871 collection The Charm, apparently used the tune name "Faithfulness" (Julian, p. 150). For more on Bliss, see the notes to "Let the Lower Lights Be Burning." Julian, p. 1613, also suggests seeing p. 105 of Ira D. Sankey's My Life for information on this song. - RBW

Bibliography

- Boatner: Mark M. Boatner III, The Civil War Dictionary, 1959 (there are many editions of this very popular work; mine is a Knopf hardcover)
- Carley: Kenneth Carley, Minnesota in the Civil War: An Illustrated History, Ross & Haines, 1961; reissued 2000 by the Minnesota Historical Society with a new introduction by Richard Moe and many more illustrations, but the reference here is to the first edition
- Grant: (Ulysses S. Grant), Personal Memoirs of U. S. Grant, Volume II, Charles L. Webster & Company, 1886
- Harpers: Alfred H. Guernsey and Henry M. Alden, Harper's Pictorial History of the Great Rebellion in the United States, 1866 (I use the facsimile published by The Fairfax Press as Harper's Pictorial History of the Civil War; this is undated but was printed in the late Twentieth Century)
- Julian: John Julian, editor, A Dictionary of Hymnology, 1892; second edition 1907 (I use the 1957 Dover edition in two volumes)
Hold the Fort (Union Version)
DESCRIPTION: Rewrite of traditional hymn: "Hold the fort, for we are coming/Union men be strong/Side by side we battle onward/Victory will come"
AUTHOR: Tune by Philip P. Bliss (1838-1876); words attributed to English transport workers, late 19th century and said to have been circulated by the Knights of Labor
EARLIEST DATE: 1955 (recording, Pete Seeger)
KEYWORDS: labor-movement nonballad worker derivative
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Seeger-AmericanFavoriteBallads, p. 20 "Hold the Fort" (1 text, 1 tune)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 372-373, "Hold the Fort" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 138, "Hold the Fort" (1 text)
DT, HOLDFORT*
ADDITIONAL: Jon Raven, _Victoria’s Inferno: Songs of the Old Mills, Mines, Manufactories, Canals, and Railways_, Roadside Press, 1978, p. 21, "Hold the Fort" (1 text, 1 tune)
RECORDINGS:
Pete Seeger, "Hold the Fort" (on PeteSeeger01)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hold the Fort" (tune) and references there
File: PSAFB020

Hold the Wind
DESCRIPTION: "Hold the wind (x3), Don't let it blow." "You may talk about me just as much as you please... I'm gonna talk about you on the bendin' of my knees." The singer assures us that (s)he, at least, has been redeemed, and plans to enjoy Heaven
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (recording, Sparkling Four)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 247, "Hold the Wind" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11946
RECORDINGS:
Famous Garland Jubilee Singers, "Hold the Wind" (Banner 32249, 1931; Conqueror 8354 [as Bryant's Jubilee Singers], 1934)
Rosa and Joseph Murray, "Hold de Wind" (on USSeaIsland03)
Southern University Quartet, "Hold the Wind" (Bluebird B-5846, 1935)
Sparkling Four, "Hold the Wind" (OKe 8741, 1929)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "On My Journey (II) [Mount Zion]" (floating verse)
File: LoF247

Hold the Woodpile Down
DESCRIPTION: Original and floating verses: "Saw my love the other night/Hold the woodpile down/Everything wrong and nothing was right...." Chorus: "But I was a-travelling, travelling/As long as the world goes round/For the backyard shine on the Georgia line/Hold...."
AUTHOR: Original Words: Edward Harrigan, Music: David Braham. Later verses probably written by Uncle Dave Macon EARLIEST DATE: 1887 (appearance in Harrigan-Braham musical "Pete"
LONG DESCRIPTION: Original and floating verses: "Saw my love the other night/Hold the woodpile down/Everything wrong and nothing was right/Hold the woodpile down"; "Gave her a little kiss to make her happy/Gave me a little love lick and in came her pappy"; "Come to town the other night/Heard a lot of noise and seen a big fight/Police running and jumping all round/Load of moonshine done come to town"; "Down in the packinghouse, stole a ham/Folks don't know how bad I am/Carried it home and I laid it on the shelf/I'm so bad, I'm scared of myself." Chorus: "But I was a-travelling, travelling/As long as the world goes round/For the backyard shine on the Georgia line/Hold the woodpile down."
KEYWORDS: courting drink humorous nonsense floating verses
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Finson-Edward-Harrigan-David-Braham, vol. II, #139, pp. 199-200, "Haul the Woodpile Down" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cohen/Seeger/Wood-NewLostCityRamblersSongbook, pp. 210-212, "Hold That Woodpile Down" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #4443
RECORDINGS:
Charles A. Asbury, "Haul the Wood Pile Down" (CYL: New Jersey Phonograph Company, no #, c. 1891; on Protobilly)
Uncle Dave Macon & his Fruit Jar Drinkers, "Hold That Wood-Pile Down" (Vocalion 5151, 1927; on Protobilly)
New Lost City Ramblers, "Hold That Woodpile Down" (on NLCR03)
Sam Patterson Trio, "Haul De Woodpile Down" (Edison 51644, 1925)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Roll the Woodpile Down" (chorus)
NOTES [1040 words]: This song is a conundrum. The verses are pure minstrel (Uncle Dave played minstrel shows in his youth), but the chorus is almost identical to that of "Roll the Woodpile Down," a chanty from African-American riverboat workers: "Rolling, rolling/Yes, rolling the whole world around/That brown gal of mine's down the Georgia line/And we'll roll the woodpile down." Other versions of "Hold the Woodpile Down" say, "Black gals shine on the Georgia line", which is closer to the chanty form. -PJS
I'll admit that, based only on the traditional versions, I would have classified this as a "Dave Maconised" version of "Roll the Woodpile Down" -- but Paul has probably examined the matter more than I have. However, the key point is that it seems to have originated with the Harrigan/Braham song "Haul the Woodpile Down." (For background on Harrigan and Braham, see the notes to "The Babies on Our Block.") This perhaps then gave rise to "Roll the Woodpile Down," which Dave Macon converted to "Hold the Woodpile Down."
Probably the song is mis-split. But I'm talking about the Harrigan song here, since it's enough of a mess that I don't want to fiddle any more.
Franceschina, p. 185, says that "The work song 'Haul the Wood Pile Down' is another fine example of [David] Braham's pseudo-spiritual numbers... with an imaginative juxtaposition of major and minor modes." As for what a work song is doing in a Broadway musical, the plot of "Pete" (premiered November 20, 1887; Moody, p. 260) will make that clear: "In Pete, Harrigan returned to the melodramatic entanglements of his early plays. Colonel Coolidge has inadvertently married twice. His first wife has given him a child unbeknownst to him. His second wife is after his fortune. He's called up to join his regiment, is killed, and when the second wife tries to claim the plantation, she's foiled by his child Mary Morgan with the assistance of Old Pete [who is black]. The telltale document is the original wedding license. The witnesses' names have been shot away, but Pete has retrieved the wad from the bullet, with the names! It took three hours and ten minutes to unravel the story, explore related sub-plots, exhibit both threatening and entertaining spectacles, and introduce slavery songs and spirituals" (Moody, p. 176). According to Moody, p. 173, it was a "new kind of play."
Franceschina, p. 184 describes the play this way: "Based on an earlier sketch, 'Slavery Days,' and set in Florida... Pete tells the melodramatic story of an African-American slave, Pete (Harrigan), whose master, Colonel Randolph Coolidge (Marcus Moriarty), has had a daughter by a secret marriage. When the colonel is killed in the Civil War, it falls to Pete to tell his daughter, Little May (Kate Patterson), what has happened to her father, and to protect her from the colonel's gold-digging wife, who wants to rob the girl of her rightful inheritance by questioning her legitimacy." The damaged marriage certificate is then described, but Pete "is beaten with a whip for his efforts [to reconstruct it] and left to bleed to death. Little May nurses him back to health and is thrown into a millpond for her kindness. Her charity does not go unrewarded, however, for Pete rescues her as she descends the millrace, proves her legitimacy, and vanquishes the villains for a happy ending.
"Local color was provided by the presence of Vi'let (Dan Collyer), a half-mad slave girl who engages in voodoo, and comedy was present in the personality of a New York alderman, Constantine Brannigan (Joseph Sparks), his maid and wife, Mary Duffy (Annie Yeaman), and his servant, Gasper Randolph (John Wild)."

Harrigan definitely worked to get into the part of Pete: "For another of his starring roles, that of an elderly ex-slave in Pete, Harrigan [who was based in New York] dispatched an emissary to the South, where he visited a few plantations, negotiated with some aged Negroes on them, and returned triumphantly with a trunkful of clothing that gave every evidence of having belonged to the sellers long before they had achieved freedom. Harrigan selected for himself from this beguiling wardrobe a pair of pants that was exactly what he had been looking for; it had been mended so often that it was all patches" (Kahn, p. 53).

FinsonCollected, volume I, p. xxx, has this to say about the drama:
"The faithful 'darkey' makes only one appearance in Harrigan's later output, but it is a notable one:
he and Braham arranged a whole musical entitled Pete (1887) around the theme. In an interview right before the premier Harrigan claimed:
Pete is not the hallelujah negro of the ordinary drama, nor is he the negro of the minstrel show. He is just such a negro as you find in the South to-day, and the characters around him are drawn from life. The play don't deal with slavery, except incidentally in the first act, the time of which is the day after the firing on Sumter, and it is not a war piece. The last three acts are placed 12 years after the close of the war, and the whole is wholly and simply domestic, portraying the life of negroes and white men in the south."

In another place, Harrigan referred to Blacks as "our African brother[s]" (Root, p. 58).

Finson goes on to add that "In reality Pete comes right out of contemporary popular song, which delighted in the fantasy who stays on the plantation after the war to help his former master, or in this case the master's kindhearted daughter" -- but adds that Harrigan had gone somewhat beyond the standard two-dimensional portrait of Blacks; "For one thing, African-Americans are portrayed as an ethnic group equal to any other, with their own culture and traditions of which they are proud.
I would say that, if "Pete" starts from a too-common trope, Harrigan has taken it in a new direction that does genuine credit to Pete -- he is not a fool, and while he is loyal to a white person of property, the loyalty is earned and is returned. If Pete is not equal to a white man, he is more equal than in most dramas of the era. The bad guys in the play are white.

I find it a fascinating example of racial attitudes that Harrigan made Pete the hero of this story, and a definite positive role model -- and played him in blackface. - RBW

Bibliography

- FinsonCollected: Jon. W. Finson, editor, Edward Harrigan and David Braham: Collected Songs, 2 volumes (Volume I: 1873-1882; Volume II: 1883-1896), being Volumes 7.1 and 7.2
- Franceschina: John Franceschina, David Braham: The American Offenbach, Routledge, 2003
- Kahn: E. J. Kahn, Jr., The Merry Partners: The Age and Stage of Harrigan and Hart, Random House, 1955
- Moody: Richard Moody, Ned Harrigan: From Corlear's Hook to Herald Square, Nelson Hall, 1980
- Root: Deane L. Root, American Popular Stage Music 1860-1880, 1977 (as a Ph.D. thesis);
  UMI Research Press, 1981

Last updated in version 5.2
File: CSW210

Hold to God's Unchanging Hand

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Hold to God's unchanging hand (2x), Build your hopes on things eternal, Hold to God's unchanging hand." Verses: Nothing on earth is permanent. If friends desert you "seek to gain heavenly treasures. They will never pass away"

AUTHOR: WORDS: Jennie Wilson / MUSIC: F.L. Eliland (music) (source: Date)
Hold Your Light

DESCRIPTION: "What make ole Satan da follow me so? Satan hain't nothin' all all for to do with me. (Run Seeker.) Hold your light (Sister Mary), Hold your light (Seeker turn back), Hold your light on Canaan's shore."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad Devil

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 10, "Hold Your Light" (1 text, 1 tune)
Joyner-FolkSongInSouthCarolina, p. 84, "Hold Your Light" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #11851

File: AWH010A

Hold-Up, The

DESCRIPTION: "Faith in me cuttle and stick in me buttle," the singer goes off to Dublin to look for work. A robber stops him and sticks a gun in his mouth. The singer steps back and knocks down the robber with his "shallallah," and goes on his way

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (Hoosier Folklore V, according to Dorson)

KEYWORDS: travel robbery humorous

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
 additional: Richard M. Dorson, _Buying the Wind: Regional Folklore in the United States_, University of Chicago Press, 1964, pp. 394-397, "The Hold-Up" (1 text, tune referenced)
Roud #2101

CROSS-REFERENCES:
 cf. "The Irish Washerwoman" (tune)
 cf. "Billy O'Rourke" (plot)
 cf. "The Railroad Corral" (tune and references for the "Irish Washerwoman" tune)

NOTES [17 words]: Roud lumps this with "Billy O'Rourke"; there is plot similarity, but I'm not sure about the text - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: RDBw394
Hole Hole Bushi (Japanese Work Song)
DESCRIPTION: Japanese. "Hawaii, Hawaii, Kite mirya Jigoku." "Hawaii, Hawaii... When I came what I saw was hell. The boss was Satan." The singer says that a letter from home in Japan made the work slightly less hard
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (Hawaii Herald, according to Cohen)
KEYWORDS: Hawaii work separation Devil nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, p. 692, "Hole Hole Bushi (Japanese Work Song)" (1 Japanese text plus English translation)
NOTES [90 words]: According to Kevin Phillips, William McKinley [a volume in the American Presidents series edited by Arthur M. Schlesinger Jr.], Times Books, 2003, pp. 105-106, by the McKinley administration (1897-1901), Japanese immigration to the Hawaiian Islands had become so large that they represented a quarter of the island’s population. (American citizens were about a twelfth.) In that context, the surprise is not that there were Japanese folk sons in Hawaii, but that there were so few -- according to Cohen, this is the only one known. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.7
File: CAFS2692

Hole In The Wall, The
DESCRIPTION: "On a Saturday night the crowd were invited to be there on Sunday to open the ball... I'll title the harbour 'The Hole In The Wall.'" The singer, a stranger on this shore, "saw at a glance that the girls they were plenty... We danced the whole night."
AUTHOR: Peter Leonard
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports; MUNFLA/Leach)
KEYWORDS: dancing party shore
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Doyle-OldTimeSongsAndPoetryOfNewfoundland, "The Hole In The Wall" (1 text, 1 tune): pp. 69-70 in the 3rd edition
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 52, "The Hole in the Wall" (1 text, 1 tune)
Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 182-184, "The Hole in the Wall" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #4416
RECORDINGS:
Harry Curtis, "The Hole in the Wall" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
NOTES [80 words]: Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou: The song "refers to the village of Little Bona in Placentia Bay." - BS
Peter Leonard is also credited with at least four songs in the Index, "The Hole in the Wall," "Soup Supper in Clattice Harbour," and "Tobias Murphy and Tom Hann," and this one, which seems to have been his "hit"; I would guess that this is because it was printed by Doyle. This should not be confused with the song "The Hole in the Wall" by Edward Harrigan and David Braham. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.0
File: Doyl3069

Holla Hi
DESCRIPTION: German, "Horch was kommt von draussen 'rein, Holla hi, Holla ho, Wird wohl mein Feinsliebechen sein." The singer thinks he sees his girlfriend, but she passes by. He will love whom he pleases. When she marries someone else, he will mourn
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Cray-AshGrove)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage love marriage
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cray-AshGrove, p. 24, "Holla Hi" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hollin, Green Hollin
DESCRIPTION: "Alone in the greenwood I must roam, Hollin, green hollin, A shade of green leaves is my home, Birk and green hollin." "Where nought is seen but boundless green." "A weary head a pillow finds." "Enough for me... To live at large with liberty."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (Montgomerie)
KEYWORDS: home rambling nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Montgomerie/Montgomerie-ScottishNurseryRhymes 116, "(Alone in the greenwood I must roam)"
(1 text)
NOTES [26 words]: This doesn't sound much like a folk song, but it apparently made some popular poetry anthologies, so I thought I'd better include it for future reference. - RBW
File: MSNR116

Holly and Ivy Girl, The
DESCRIPTION: "Come buy my nice fresh ivy And my holly boughs so green, I have the fairest branches That ever yet were seen. Come buy from me good Christians And let me home I pray...."
She, and God, will bless them if they buy her branches
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster)
KEYWORDS: commerce nonballad Christmas
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 206, "The Holly and Ivy Girl" (1 text)
Roud #3188
File: HMHS206B

Holly and the Ivy, The
DESCRIPTION: "The holly and the ivy, when they are both full grown, Of all the trees that are in the wood, The holly bears the crown." The holly's attributes are detailed; each ties to a reason Mary bore Jesus
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1861 (Sylvester's "Christmas Carols")
KEYWORDS: religious Christmas Jesus nonballad MiddleEnglish
FOUND IN: Britain(England(West))
REFERENCES (31 citations):
Dearmer/VaughnWilliams/Shaw-OxfordBookOfCarols 38, "The Holly and the Ivy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 383, "The Holly And The Ivy" (1 text)
Bronson 54, "The Cherry Tree Carol" (version #29 contains a scrap of "The Holly and the Ivy")
Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 103, "The Holly and the Ivy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wells-TheBalladTree, pp. 199-200, "The Holly and the Ivy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Rickert-AncientEnglishChristmasCarols, pp. 267-268, "The Holly and the Ivy" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, HOLLYIVY*
ADDITIONAL: Walter de la Mare, _Come Hither_, revised edition, 1928; #228, "The Holly and the Ivy" (1 text)
Ian Bradley, _The Penguin Book of Carols_ (1999), #78, "The Holly and the Ivy" (1 text)
(1 text)
RELATED: Versions of "Holly and Ivy Had a Great Party" --
Rickert-AncientEnglishChristmasCarols, p. 262, "Holly and Ivy Made a Great Party" (1 text)
Greene-TheEarlyEnglishCarols, p. xcix, "(Holvyr and Hevvy mad a gret party)" (1 text, which he does not consider a carol and does not include in his catalog)
Sidgwick/Chambers-EarlyEnglishLyrics CXXXIX, p. 237, "(no title)" (1 text)
NOTES [1130 words]: This clearly derives from the same roots as "The Holly Bears a Berry," and a strong case could be made that they should be considered one song. [Indeed, Kennedy lumps them. - PJS. As does Roud. - RBW] As, however, both are circulated in fairly fixed forms, I decided to separate them.

Jenkins, p. 32, for some reason quotes this song in connection with the 1464 marriage of England's King Edward IV and Elizabeth Woodville. She does not, however, justify the connection in any way I can see.

Simpson/Roud, p. 182, declare the holly "the most popular plant for Christmas decorations," and say that its folklore associations are primarily positive -- although some said it should not be brought into the house except at Christmastide. It was often planted by churches to guard against witches. They declare that it has been considered unlucky to cut down a holly tree since at least the fifteenth century.

Pickering, p. 140, mentions a legend that the cross of Jesus was made of holly, and that its berries became red in remembrance of his blood; supposedly they had previously been yellow.

Rickert-AncientEnglishChristmasCarols, who on pp. 262-268 has six holly-and-ivy songs, thinks it is a relic of nature worship and thinks there was a ritual in which young men played holly and girls ivy. Robbins, #51-52, pp. 46-47, has two more, and suggests (p. 242) that his song in praise of ivy is derived from a poem of praise to the Virgin Mary.

Opie/Tatem, p. 201, note that holly and ivy were often considered paired plants, either as a married couple or as rivals for dominance. According to Binney, p. 177, the holly was considered male and the ivy female. GreeneSelection, p. 33, quotes this interesting early verse about their rivalry (also in Rickert-AncientEnglishChristmasCarols, p. 262; Sisam, #219, p. 480; Boklund-Lagopolou, p. 209; Robbins, #50, pp. 45-46, with orthographic variants):
Holvyr [holly] and Heyvy [ivy] mad a gret party,
Ho xuld [should] have the maystre [mastery]
In londes qwer [where] thei goo.

Wells-TheBalladTree, pp. 198-199, quotes a "Holly Bears a Berry" ancestor which also seems to refer to this sort of rivalry (different version in Rickert-AncientEnglishChristmasCarols, pp. 265-266, which refers to both holly and ivy bearing berries; also in Ritson-AncientSongsBalladsFromHenrySecondToTheRevolution, pp. 114-115):

Nay, Ivy, hyt shal not be, iwys;
Let Holy hafe the mastry, as the manner ys.

This is found in the Richard Hill manuscript among others, so it may have had traditional currency. Parker, p. 81, says that the song is "not specifically [treated as] a Christmas carol." He suggests, "Perhaps the song was meant to be sung in mixed company as a sort of dancing 'challenge' to the ladies. It is followed in the manuscript by another song which, while it doesn't mention Christmas specifically, could be used at Christmas festivities; 'Bon jour a vous' challenges all comers to a song contest...."

Greene, p. xcix, suggests that both "Holver and Heivy made a grete party" and "Nay, Ivy, hyt shal not be, iwys" might be game-songs, the latter perhaps being one in which Ivy is excluded from the hall, i.e. loses the game. Whether true or not, he thinks it quite possible that both are true folk songs. I would probably give them separate listings except that it is possibly to list them here. GreeneSelection mentions an old Kentish custom of burning effigies of the "Holly-boy" and "Ivy-girl" at Shrovetide. Thus the linkage is widespread both in time and in space.

GreeneSelection, p. 34, points out that palm was generally not available in Britain, so ivy was often substituted on Palm Sunday. This gives another sort of link between holly and ivy: Holly was the plant associated with Jesus's birth, and Ivy with his passion.

The history of this song is vexed even if you ignore the link with "The Holly Bears a Berry."

GreeneSelection's #93 (p. 160)=Hirsh-MedievalLyric-MiddleEnglishLyricsBalladsCarols #50 begins Grene groweth the holy,
So doth the iwe
Thow wynter blastys blow never so hye,
Grene growth the holy.

(See also Douglas Gray, The Oxford Book of Late Medieval Verse and Prose, Oxford University Press, 1985, p. 175, "Green Groweth the Holly").

The song is a farewell to "myne owne lady... my speycyall." It appears in British Library MS. Additional 31922, and is credited to none other than Henry VIII. GreeneSelection, p. 49, suggests that Henry was turning the holly and ivy "from Christmas decorations into symbols of evergreen love." This obviously implies that they had been Christmas symbols from at least the early sixteenth century. On the other hand, Simpson/Roud, p. 183, declare that holly could be used in love divination, which might be the real reason Henry spoke of it. And ivy, according to p. 150 of Pickering, will bring dreams of future lovers if placed under the pillow.

Simpson/Roud, p. 195, and GreeneSelection, #34A (p. 92), both quote a fifteenth century item from British Library MS. Harley 5396:

Holy stond in the hall, fayre to behold;
Ivy dtond without the dore, she ys ful sore a-cold.
Holy and hys mery men, the dawnsyn and they syng;
Ivy and hur maydenys, they wypyn and they wryng.

Sisam, #202, p. 451, gives the title of this as "Holly and his Merry Men" and opens it with the chorus "Nay, Ivy, nay, it shal not be y-wis; Let Holy have the maistry, as the maner is."

These verses are very similar to GreeneSelection's #34B, from (Oxford), Balliol College MS. 354 (the Richard Hill manuscript), of the sixteenth century, which however is clearly related to "The Holly Bears a Berry":

Holy berith beris, beris rede ynouwgh;
The thristilcock, the popyngay daunce in every bow.
Welaway, sory ivy, whoat fowles hast thiw,
But the sory howlet, that syntigh, 'How, how?'
Vry berith beris as black as any slo;
Ther commeth the woode-colver and fedith her of tho.
She liftith up her tayll, and she cakkes or she go;
She would not for [a] hundred poundes serve Holy soo.

GreeneSelection's #35 and #36, and Sisam's #220, p. 480, are other fifteenth century carols in praise of ivy.

Another early carol, GreeneSelection's #7, "Letanundus exultet fidelys chorus, Alleluia," from the fifteenth century, does not mention holly or ivy in the text, but there are inscriptions at the beginning and end mentioning the two plants.
For the whole range of Middle English Holly and Ivy carols, see Greene-TheEarlyEnglishCarols #136-137, plus the Ivy carols #138-139.
Boklund-Lagopolou, pp. 209-211, quotes several of these holly-and-ivy carols, with discussion, observing on p. 211 that the holly (masculine) usually tops the ivy (feminine) -- but noting that most of these songs were taken down by men. She speculates that, if women had done more of the collecting, the ivy might have been more successful! - RBW

Bibliography

- Boklund-Lagopolou: Karin Boklund-Lagopolou, I have a yong suster: Popular song and Middle English lyric, Four Courts Press, 2002
- Jenkins: Elizabeth Jenkins, The Princes in the Tower, Coward McCann, & Geoghan, 1978
- Opie/Tatem: Iona Opie and Moira Tatem, editors, A Dictionary of Superstitions, 1989 (I use the 1999 Barnes & Noble edition)
- Pickering: David Pickering, The Cassell Dictionary of Folklore, Cassell, 1999

Last updated in version 5.3
File: FSWB383

Holly Bears a Berry, The

DESCRIPTION: "The holly she bears a berry as white as the milk/And Mary bore Jesus who was wrapped up in silk"; similarly "... berry red as the blood/...to do sinners good", "green as the grass/...who died on the cross."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Dunstan)

LONG DESCRIPTION: "The holly she bears a berry as white as the milk/And Mary bore Jesus who was wrapped up in silk", similar verses for "The holly bears a berry as red as the blood/...to do sinners good", "green as the grass/...who died on the cross." Cho.: "And Mary bore Jesus Christ our Saviour for to be/And the first tree that's in the greenwood it was the holly"

KEYWORDS: religious Christmas Jesus nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (10 citations):
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 91, "'Ma Grun War 'n Gelynen [The Holly Bears a Berry]"
(1 text, 1 tune)
Dearmer/VaughnWilliams/Shaw-OxfordBookOfCarols 35, "Sans Day Carol" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wells-TheBalladTree, pp. 198-199, ("Nay, Ivy, hyt shall not be, iwys") (1 text, which looks like a combination of this song with a poem about the rivalry between holly and ivy)
Bronson 54, "The Cherry Tree Carol" (version #27 contains "The Holly Bears a Berry")
Ritchie-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 42, "The Holly Bears a Berry" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greene-TheEarlyEnglishCarols, #135, pp. 93-94, ("no title") (2 texts, of which "A" is "Nay, Ivy, It Shall Not Be, Iwys," for which see "The Holly and the Ivy"; "B" is the forerunner of "The Holly Bears a Berry")
cf. Rickert-AncientEnglishChristmasCarols, pp. 264-265, "A Song on the Ivy and the Holly" (1 text, which contains several verses of this although in a different context)
Holly Bough, The/The Maid of Altibrine

DESCRIPTION: "In Altibrine there lives a maid, a maid of beauty rare, The violet or primrose with her never could compare." He praises her beauty, and offers to take her away. The girl (?) says that her dowry is too small. He says that the holly will never fade

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love courting beauty dowry
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
   Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H111, pp. 229-230, "The Holly Bough/The Maid of Altibrine" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7981
File: HHH111

Holly Twig, The [Laws Q6]

DESCRIPTION: The singer finds that his new wife is a scold and a nag. He recounts his misery day by day. After a few days he goes to the woods and cuts a (holly twig), (whipping her so hard her soul is sent to hell). (A devil/her father comes to take her back).

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1760 (_West Country Garlands_)
LONG DESCRIPTION: On Monday the singer marries; on Tuesday he cuts a holly stick; on Wednesday he beats her with the stick until it breaks. On Thursday she takes sick (presumably from the beating); he says if she isn't better by tomorrow the devil can take her. On Friday the devil takes her. On Saturday the bells toll her death and the singer is jolly. On Sunday he relaxes alone, saying "Here's good luck to a week's work's end."
KEYWORDS: husband wife abuse violence death
FOUND IN: Britain(England(West,Lond,South)) US(Ap,MW,SE,So)
REFERENCES (18 citations):
   Laws Q6, "The Holly Twig"
   Randolph 367, "I Married Me a Wife" (1 text, 1 tune)
   Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 184, "The Holly Twig" (2 texts)
   Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 184, "The Holly Twig" (1 excerpt, 1 tune)
Holmes Camp

DESCRIPTION: "It was early last April when the logging was done I went to Fort Francis to join in the fun. My intentions were good -- one drink and no more...." But he (and others) get drunk; he hits on a girl, is rejected, has a headache, vows not to get drunk again

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1963 (Fowke)
KEYWORDS: logger drink rejection
FOUND IN: Canada(West)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Fowke-LumberingSongsFromTheNorthernWoods #48, "Holmes Camp" (1 text, tune referenced)
Roud #4562
File: FowL48

Holy Church of Rome, The

DESCRIPTION: "As I roved out one morning being in the month of May," the singer "spied my heart's delight, the pride of Dunern Town." He asks her to marry, but he is Protestant and she is Catholic. They argue; she will only marry if he joins "the Holy Church of Rome"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1994 (Thomas and Widdowson)
KEYWORDS: love courting rejection religious
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
NOTES [144 words]: In Newfoundland, this was sometimes regarded as a "Treason Song." For background on Treason Songs, see the notes to "The Prooshian Drum."

This song is clearly Catholic (like all the Treason Songs printed by Goldstein), because it declares "For you know it was cursed Luther who did your church complete. It was Cranmer and old Cromwell who very well were known Who fell off like rotten branches from the Holy Church of Rome." (Henry VIII is not mentioned.)

Cranmer and Cromwell were indeed Henry VIII's allies in founding the Church of England -- but Luther absolutely was not, and indeed the Anglican church is not Protestant. Nor is it Reformed (Calvinist/Presbyterian). Anglicanism is its own thing. It is understandable that a Catholic would not understand this, but to refer to Luther in an argument about Anglicanism truly misses the point of Anglicanism. - RBW

Holy Dan

DESCRIPTION: "It was in the Queensland drought"; there is no water or grass. Bullock drivers watch their animals die. Most curse, but Holy Dan refuses to blaspheme as animal after animal dies. Finally, with one bull left, he swears -- and is drowned by a burst of rain

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Beatty)

KEYWORDS: animal death flood curse humorous

FOUND IN: Australia

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Ward-PenguinBookOfAustralianBallads, pp. 133-134, "Holy Dan" (1 text)
Stewart/Keesing-FavoriteAustralianBallads, pp. 83-84, "Holy Dan" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Bill Beatty, _A Treasury of Australian Folk Tales & Traditions_, 1960 (I use the 1969 Walkabout Paperbacks edition), pp. 304-305, "Holy Dan" (1 text)

Davey/Seal: Gwenda Beed Davey and Graham Seal, _A Guide to Australian Folklore_, Kangaroo Press, 2003, p. 154, "Holy Dan" (partial text)

NOTES [25 words]: This is a very popular Australian piece, recorded by Slim Dusty but with words anonymous. I have seen no evidence that it has entered tradition. - RBW

Holy Is the Lamb of God

DESCRIPTION: "O holy Lord, holy my Lord, holy Lord, Holy is the lamb of God. I was in the dark and I could not see... Till Jesus brought this light to me." "If you talk about shouting here below... Just wait till you get upon the other shore."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1938 (Chappell)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad Jesus

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 97, "Holy Is the Lamb of God" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [42 words]: The most famous reference to the Lamb of God is of course John 1:29, "Behold the Lamb of God, who takes away the sins of the world." Though the Lamb as an actual being, as opposed to a metaphor, is found in the Apocalypse only, starting at Rev. 5:6. - RBW

Holy Manna

DESCRIPTION: "Brothers, we have met together, And adore the Lord our God." The singer exhorts hearers to evangelize; "All is vain unless the spirit Of the Holy One comes down"; if it does, manna will be showered with it. Will the hearers ignore the needs of sinners?

AUTHOR: unknown
Holy Moses, What a Job

DESCRIPTION: Children's fishing rhyme: "Holy Moses, what a job! Catching conners by the gob."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1984 (Tizzard)

KEYWORDS: nonballad fishing

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

NOTES [78 words]: According to G. M. Story, W. J. Kirwin, and J. D. A. Widdowson, editors, Dictionary of Newfoundland English, second edition with supplement, Breakwater Press, 1990, p. 112, a "conner," also "cunner," was "The blue perch (Tautogolabrus aspersus), a bottom-feeding fish of inshore waters, esp. common around wharves and stages." This agrees with Tizzard's own description. There is also a verb "to connor," which is to catch connors; thus this is a connoring rhyme. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: Tizza176

Holy Nunnery, The [Child 303]

DESCRIPTION: Willie's parents vow that he shall not marry Annie. Told of this, Annie vows to become a nun and never kiss a man again. After seven years, Willie can bear no more; he dresses as a woman and goes to see Annie in the nunnery. She will not break her vow

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1828 (Buchan)

KEYWORDS: love separation father mother clergy disguise cross-dressing

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Child 303, "The Holy Nunnery" (1 text)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 686-689, "The Holy Nunnery" (1 text)

Roud #3886

File: C303

Holy Well, The

DESCRIPTION: Mary sends Jesus out to play. He meets a group of noble children, who scorn him as poor. Jesus bitterly runs home to Mary. She urges him to curse/damn them. Jesus, as the world's savior, realizes he cannot do so

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1828 (broadside, Bodleian Johnson Ballads 1484); a broadside thought to date from the eighteenth century calls it "old," and Rickert suspects it originated in the fifteenth century

KEYWORDS: abuse Jesus poverty
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South,West))
REFERENCES (7 citations):
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 690-691, "The Holy Well" (1 text)
Leather-FolkLoreOfHerefordshire, pp. 186-187, "The Holy Well" (1 text, 2 tunes)
Rickert-AncientEnglishChristmasCarols, pp. 84-86, "The Holy Well" (1 text)
Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 97, "The Holy Well" (1 text, 1 tune)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 110, "The Holy Well" (1 text)
Dearmer/VaughnWilliams/Shaw-OxfordBookOfCarols 56, "The Holy Well" (1 text, 2 tunes)
Grigson-PenguinBookOfBallads 9, "The Holy Well" (1 text)
ST L690 (Partial)
Roud #1697
RECORDINGS:
Wiggy Smith, "The High-Low Well" (on Voice11)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Johnson Ballads 1484, "The Holy Well" ("As it fell out one May morning"), T. Wood (Birmingham), 1806-1827; also Douce adds. 137(12), Harding B 7(10), "The Holy Well"
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Bitter Withy" (plot)
NOTES [361 words]: Holy wells are just what they sound like: wells which are considered holy for one reason or another. England has quite a few of them, especially in the Celtic regions of Cornwall and Wales, according to Nigel and Mary Kerr, A Guide to Medieval Sites in Britain, Diamond Books, 1988, p. 75. And those happen to be the areas of Britain where this song is attested (although the Kerrs note that many of these holy wells were probably regarded as magical even before Christianity penetrated the area).
The curiosity is the mention of them in Palestine. There are wells with historical significance, such as Beersheba, site of an agreement between Abraham and the Philistines (Genesis 21:22-34, with a parallel agreement between Isaac and the Philistines in Genesis 26:26-33). Chapter 4 of John also mentions Jacob's Well, held in great esteem by the Samaritans, and in Chapter 5 we hear that the pool of Bethzatha/Bethesda had healing powers -- but it isn't a well, and it doesn't seem to have been venerated. Jesus also used the pool of Siloam for a cure in John 9, but again, it isn't a well and it isn't described as holy.
Of some historical significance is the well of Bethlehem, which David wished he could drink from during his days in the wilderness (2 Samuel 23:13-17). This probably had the greatest historical significance of any of the wells.
But none of them are in Galilee, where Jesus grew up.
These and other sites eventually came to be considered pilgrimage sites by Christians (even though the identification of most of them is extremely, and I do mean EXTREMELY, dubious). But they weren't holy wells at the time (even if one believes that they are now). The whole concept is an anachronism.
Rickert has an answer for this; she says that many stories like this were known in writings such as the Vita Christi in British Library MS. Additional 29434. This would at least explain the anachronisms.
David C. Fowler, A Literary History of the Popular Ballad, Duke University Press, 1968, p. 51, connects this with a piece he calls "Childhood of Jesus," a medieval English poem; for more on it, see the notes to "The Cherry-Tree Carol" [Child 54]. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.1
File: L690

Home Again

DESCRIPTION: "Home again, home again, From a foreign shore, O it fills my heart with joy To be with friends once more." The sailor wept to leave home, but he rejoices to return. He sees friends and enjoys the music. He seeks no palace, just home
AUTHOR: Marshall Pike (source: Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang)
EARLIEST DATE: 1851 (sheet music)
KEYWORDS: home sailor return nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 289-290, "Home Again" (1 text, 1 tune)
Heart-Songs, p. 327, "Home Again" (1 text, 1 tune)
Home Brew Rag

DESCRIPTION: "Well, I've never been drunk but about one time, And it think it was on home brew; If you ever drink any brew yourself, You know just what it'll do.... Ick-poo, home brew, We know what we'll do." The singer proposes a little drink to test the brew

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (recording, Roanoke Jug Band)

KEYWORDS: drink

FOUND IN: US(SE)

ST RchBreR (Full)

Roud #17857

RECORDINGS:
Roanoke Jug Band, "Home Brew Rag" (OKeh 45393, 1929)
Lowe Stokes & His North Georgians, "Home Brew Rag" (Columbia 15241-D)

File: RchBreR

Home Brew Song, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer "makes the whiskey That some people calls home brew." He is arrested and taken for trial to Newcastle. Condemned by a woman's testimony, he is sentenced to $200 or 6 months. He chooses bug-ridden prison because "they feed on bread and tea"

AUTHOR: Frank O'Hara (Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi)

EARLIEST DATE: 1947 (Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi)

KEYWORDS: crime prison trial food drink humorous bug

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 21, "The Home Brew Song" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST MaWi021 (Partial)

Roud #9192

SAME TUNE:
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi: "The Home Brew Song was written in Prohibition Days by Frank O'Hara of Grey Rapids while he was serving a term in the County Jail for selling home brew." - BS

File: MaWi021

Home from the Fair

DESCRIPTION: "Come Nanny, come Polly, come Danny, come Bobby, keep house like good bairns while I go to the fair." The children may be rewarded if they avoid trouble. They have an accident with granny's tea. Mother gives them gifts anyway

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1971 (Palmer)

KEYWORDS: mother children gift home

FOUND IN: Britain(England(North))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #114, "Home from the Fair" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #1513

File: PECS114

Home I Left Behind, The

DESCRIPTION: "An Irish boy he sat alone by Susquehanna shore" thinking sadly of "the home he left behind." He recalls summer, dances, and a girl in Ireland. He and his widowed mother were driven from home "when landlord, bailiffs and police broke in our cottage door"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1987 (Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan)
Home in that Rock

DESCRIPTION: "I've got a home in(-a) that rock, don't you see, don't you see? Up between earth and sky, Thought I heard my savior cry, 'You've got a home....'" The fates of Dives and Lazarus are alluded to, or David, or Judas, or the happy fate of Noah

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Odum)

KEYWORDS: Bible religious

FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 608, "Little David" (1 short text)
Roberts-SangBranchSettlers, #46, "I Got a Hope in That Rock" 91 text, 1 tune
Hutson/Pinckney/Rutledge-SomeSongsTheNegroSang, pp. 302-303, "Home Een duh Rock" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 355, "Home In That Rock" (1 text)

Roud #12209

RECORDINGS:
Elder Charles Beck, "I Got a Home In That Rock" (Eagle 103, n.d.)
Biddle University Quartet, "I've Got a Home In That Rock" (Pathe 22400, 1920/Perfect 11225, 1925)
Birmingham Jubilee Singers, "Home in that Rock" (Columbia 14163-D, 1926)
Carolina Ladies Quartet, "I Got a Home in That Rock" (Champion 16662, 1933; Champion 45117, 1935; rec. 1931)
Carter Family, "God Gave Noah the Rainbow Sign" (Victor V-40110, 1929; Bluebird B-5272/Montgomery Ward M-4427/Electra-Disc 2146/Sunrise S-3353, 1933) (Conqueror 8693/ARC 6-11-59, 1936; rec. 1935)
J. E. Mainer's Mountaineers "Got a Home In That Rock" (Bluebird B-6539, 1936)
Otis Mote, "Home in the Rock" (OKeh 45429, 1930)
Paul Robeson, "I Got a Home In-a Dat Rock" (Victor 21109, 1927)
Smith's Jubilee Singers, "I've Got a Home in That Rock" (Sterling 1503, n.d.)
Marshall Smith, "Home in the Rock" (Columbia 15080-D, 1926)
Kid Williams & Bill Morgan [pseud. for Walter Smith & Lewis McDaniel], "When He Died He Got a Home in Hell" (Homestead 16094, c. 1929; Conqueror 7739, 1931)
NOTES [84 words]: The editors of Brown think that their "Little David" version is linked to "Little David, Play On Your Harp." That may perhaps have asserted some influence, but the final line, "He got [or "lost," in the case of Judas] a home in that rock, don't you see?" strikes me as the key characteristic.
The parable (not an actual historical event!) of the rich man ("Dives") and Lazarus is found in Luke 16:19-31. The story of Noah's flood is in Genesis 6-8, with the covenant of the rainbow in Gen. 9:12-17. - RBW

Home on the Mountain Wave, A

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Ha ha my boys, these are the joys of the noble and the brave, who love the life in the tempest's strife and a home on the mountain wave." Several verses basically describing the thrills of sailing, especially in stormy weather.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1860 (Broadside)
KEYWORDS: sailor storm foc's'le
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 214-216, "A Home on the Mountain Wave" (1 text)
Roud #9152

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 18(362), "Mountain wave", ("A bold brave crew and an ocean blue") T. M.
Scroggy (Philadelphia), n.d.

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Mountain Wave
A Bold Brave Crew

NOTES [17 words]: This is found on two broadsides in the Bodleian collection, published in New York and Philadelphia. - SL

Last updated in version 3.5
File: Harl1214

Home on the Range

DESCRIPTION: "Oh give me a home where the buffalo roam...." The singer praises the land of the west, "Where the sky is not cloudy all day." Details vary from version to version, and besides, you all know the song anyway....

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1873 (lyrics published in Smith County [KS] Pioneer)
KEYWORDS: cowboy home
FOUND IN: US(MW,So)
REFERENCES (20 citations):
Randolph 193, "Home on the Range" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Larkin-SingingCowboy, pp. 166-168, "Home on the Range" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-FolkSongUSA 62, "Home on the Range" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 108, "Home on the Range" (3 texts, 1 tune)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 496-497, "Western Home" (1 text)
Tinsley-HeWasSinginThisSong, pp. 212-215, "Home on the Range" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore, pp. 141-142, "Home on the Range" (1 text)
Shay-BarroomBallads/PiousFriendsDrunkenCompanions, pp. 134-135, O, Give Me a Home Where the Buffalo Roam" (1 text, 1 tune)
ArkansasWoodchopper, pp. 31-32, "A Home on the Range" (1 text, 1 tune)
Seeger-AmericanFavoriteBallads, p. 26, "Home On The Range" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 164, "Home on the Range" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 49, "Home on the Range" (1 text)
Saffel-CowboyPoetry, pp. 178-179, "Home on the Range" (1 text)
Emerson-StephenFosterAndCo, pp. 65-66, "Western Home" (1 text)
DT, HOMERANG

ADDITIONAL: Powder River Jack and Kitty Lee's _Songs of the Range: Cowboy Wails of Cattle Trails_, Chart Music, 1937, pp. 18-19, "Home in the West" (1 text, 1 tune, labelled the "Original version of 'Home on the Range'")
Kirke Mechem, "Home on the Range," article published 1949 in _The Kansas Historical Quarterly_; republished on pp. 51-83 of Norm Cohen, editor, _All This for a Song_, Southern Folklife Collection, 2009
John I. White, _Git Along, Little Dogies: Songs and Songmakers of the American West_, 1975 (page references are to the 1989 University of Illinois Press edition), pp. 153-166, "Where the Deer and the Antelope Play" (2 texts, 2 tunes, plus a copy of an early newspaper print and a history of the song)
William E. Studwell and Bruce R. Schueneman, _State Songs of the Unites States: An Annotated
Anthology_, The Haworth Press, 1997, pp. 36-37, "(no title)" (1 text, tune on pp. 115-116)
Roud #3599
RECORDINGS:
Jules Allen, "Home On The Range" (Victor 21627, 1928; Bluebird B-4959/Montgomery Ward M-4463, 1933)
Arkansas Woodchopper [pseud. for Luther Ossenbrink], "Home on the Range" (Gennett 7065/Supertone 9571, c. 1930)
Black Bros., "Home on the Range" (OKeh 45572, 1932)
Vernon Dalhart, "Home on the Range" (Brunswick 137, 1927)
Hank Keene, "Home on the Range" (Bluebird B-5241/Montgomery Ward M-4397, 1933)
Ken, Chuck & Jim, "Home on the Range" (Champion 16579, 1933; Montgomery Ward M-4988, 1936)
Frank Luther Trio, "Home on the Range" (Banner 32966/Perfect 12975 [both as Buddy Spencer's Trio], 1933; Conqueror 8273 [as Buddy Spencer Trio], 1934)
Frank Luther & Carson Robison, "Home on the Range" (Columbia 2642-D, 1932)
Ken Maynard, "Home on the Range" (Columbia test recording, c. 1930; on MakeMe, WhenIWas2)
Patt Patterson & Lois Dexter, "Home on the Range" (Perfect 12650, 1930 [as "A Home on the Range"]; Conqueror 7711, 1931)
Red River Dave [McEnery], "Home on the Range" (Sonora 1063, n.d.)
Roy Rogers, "Home on the Range" (RCA Victor 21-0077, 1949)
Pete Seeger, "Home on the Range" (on PeteSeeger17, CowFolkCD1)
SAME TUNE:
Toys, Beautiful Toys (Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, pp. 32-33)
Alaska: Home on the Snow (Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 243)
Frank Luther & Trio, "Home on the Range Part 5/Part 6" (Decca 1429, 1937)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Arizona Home
NOTES [434 words]: Various candidates have been proposed as the author of this piece, e.g. Daniel Kelley and Dr. Brewster Higley (1873; for this story, see Fuld), "C.O. Swartz... and other prospectors" (1885), and probably others. Given the feel of the piece, it seems likely that there is only a single author -- but I'd have a hard time saying WHICH single author. The matter is the chief topic of the article by Mechem cited in the references, who notes that there was a major lawsuit about the matter in the 1930s (p. 52 in the Cohen reprint). Mechem's conclusion is that the words were by Higley (1823-1911) and the music by Daniel E. Kelley (1843-1905).
The lawsuit is particularly interesting because it involved the Southern Music Publishing Company -- which happened to be run by Ralph Peer (see Barry Mazor, Ralph Peer and the Making of Popular Roots Music, Chicago Review Press, 2015, p. 155-157), the man responsible for recording the Carter Family and Jimmie Rodgers and others. "Home on the Range" had become incredibly popular in the early 1930s, and everyone thought it was public domain because John A. Lomax had published it two dozen years earlier in Cowboy Songs. But William and Mary Goodwin of Tempe, Arizona had copyrighted a version they called "Arizona Home" in 1905 -- and Peer controlled the copyright on that version. So he started seeking payment. In the course of the lawsuit, though, the Higley text turned up. That predated the Goodwin version and ended the lawsuit, although it didn't actually prove Higley the author.
Various adaptions have been published over the years, such as the Goodwins' "Arizona Home," but none depart far from the original form. Mechem's article also contains a copy of the February 26, 1876 Kirwin Chief, one of the first publications of the lyrics. It is on pp. 70-71 of the Cohen reprint.
Mechem, pp. 329-330, suggests that two early changes contributed significantly to the success of the song. He notes that the earliest texts all give the third line of the last verse as "I would not exchange my home here to range" and that the chorus began "A home, a home, where the deer and the antelope play." The former line was converted to "I would not exchange my home ON THE range," and the latter to "Home, home on the range, where the deer...." The former change altered the whole meaning of the song; the latter improved its singability.
The piece eventually became the state song of Kansas. According to Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore, p. 141, the bill that made it the state song also made it official, at least in Kansas, that it was by Higley and Kelley. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.2
File: R193
DESCRIPTION: Hearers are urged to join the Home Rule Movement. Mr Butt and other leaders are named. Gladstone thought that the church bill would suffice, "but Paddy wants to rule himself." America and France support Home Rule. Butt leads "his little band" of MPs.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1966 (Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)

KEYWORDS: Ireland nonballad patriotic political

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (3 citations):
- Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion, p. 61, "Home Rule" (1 fragment)
- Healy-MercierBookOfOldIrishStreetBalladsVol2, pp. 145-146, "Home Rule" (1 text)
- Fahey-Joe-Watson-AustralianTraditionalFolkSinger, [p. 21, page headed "Home Rule for Ireland"], "Home Rule for Ireland" (1 text)

Roud #V4329

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Harding B 13(340), "Home Rule for Ireland" ("Come all you sons of Erin"), unknown, n.d.; also 2806 b.10(224), Firth c.16(407)[first nine lines illegible], "Home Rule for Ireland"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "A Loyal Song Against Home Rule" (subject: the quest for Home Rule) and references there

NOTES [989 words]: Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion p. 61: "Constitutional agitation had been revived in 1869 through meetings demanding an amnesty for the Fenian prisoners. A 'Home Government Association for Ireland', created in 1870 [founded by Isaac Butt], became the 'Irish Home Rule League' in 1872 and soon met with great success as the Irish Parliamentary Party. Broadside ballads praised its leaders, and looked once more for encouragement from overseas." [see also "The Glorious Meeting of Dublin" and references there].

The leaders of the movement named in the broadside are, besides Butt, are John Martin and Shea, Dr Cummins and Galbraith; the "little band" of Home Rule MPs are not named.

The reference to Gladstone and the church refers to his 1869 move disestablishing the Church of Ireland in 1869 so that Catholic farmers did not have to pay tithes to that church. In 1885 Gladstone announced his support for Irish Home Rule. (sources: "Gladstone and Home Rule 1886" in Northern Ireland Timeline at the BBC site; "Gladstone and Ireland" at the History Learning site)

Zimmermann p. 61 is a fragment; broadside NLScotland L.C.1270(009) is the basis for the description. The NLS probable period of publication as 1840-1850 is obviously incorrect when the broadside refers to events after 1870. - BS

The initial organization of the Home Government Alliance was rather ironic, as it included Protestants upset about the disestablishment of the Protestant Church (Kee, p. 61; also the notes to "The Downfall of Heresy").

Isaac Butt himself was a non-Catholic: "While Gladstone was endeavoring to solve the Irish problem by reforms, a new effort to win independence by constitutional means was launched.... This was the home rule movement, founded in 1870 by Isaac Butt, the leading Irish barrister of the age, a man of large and colourful personality, a Protestant and formerly a unionist, who had been converted to nationalist by his experience of Irish suffering in the Great Famine and then by the courage and integrity of first the Young Irelanders and then of the Fenians."

If Kee is to be believed, the Home Rulers were right about Gladstone: "Gladstone seems at first to have imagined that he could solve the problem of Ireland forever by two measures: first, By disestablishing the Irish Protestant Church and, second, legislating to compensate a tenant financially on eviction" (p. 58). The first measure came into force in 1869, and was welcomed in Ireland (although hardly by Conservatives in England). The second took the form of the first Land Bill, passed in 1870. But it corrected only a few minor abuses: Evicted tenants had to be paid for improvements they had made, but they could still be evicted. Something stronger was needed.

The mention of the Church Bill dates the song after 1869. The lack of reference to the second Land Bill, and of Gladstone's Home Rule proposal, surely dates it before 1886 -- and the lack of reference to Parnell probably dates it very early in that period. Isaac Butt had been a moderately important figure since 1848, when he defended Smith O'Brien and some of his confederates. But it wasn't until 1869 that he became a major political force, urging a program of constitutional reform. Butt was convinced (correctly) that the Irish economy was badly mismanaged. The famine years of the 1840s "led Butt to realize that it was not enough simply to blame the laisez-faire policies of the government. It was the fundamentally unsound relationship between landlord and tenant that lay at the root of the trouble" (Lyons, p. 147).
Butt was entirely right about the economic program -- but, like many others after him, he confused political freedom with an efficient society. He didn't really have a program, except a parliament for Ireland. On that basis he managed to recruit a number of Irish MPs -- but he couldn't hold them together in Westminster (Kee, pp. 64-66. This was especially so since he had to work part-time, and wasn't really in position to head a party).

"In the general election of 1874 -- the first to be fought under the conditions of secret voting in accordance with the Ballot Act of 1872 -- Butt's new party won more than half of all Irish seats.... But his claim to separate nationhood for Ireland was not taken seriously by either British party" (Moody/Martin/Keogh/Kiely, pp. 246-247). From 1875, when Charles Stewart Parnell made his maiden speech declaring Ireland to be "not a geographical fragment but a nation," Butt was a spent force.

Home Rule nearly took care of Gladstone, too. He introduced the bill in 1886 -- and it split the Liberal party; a block of about fifty M.P.s, headed by Joseph Chamberlain, bolted (Massie, pp. 235-238). For about twenty years, Britain had what amounted to four political parties: Orthodox liberals (committed to social reform and home rule), Conservatives (opposed to social reform and home rule), the Irish delegation (which often split many ways; the most important faction, led by John Redmond, believed in home rule, though many were liberal on other issues), and the Chamberlainites (the "Liberal Unionists," who were liberal on social issues but adamantly opposed to Home Rule). It made Britain nearly ungovernable, except when the Chamberlainites managed to extract liberal concessions from the Conservatives. The Conservatives developed a policy of "killing Home Rule with kindness" (Kee, p. 111), but kindness wasn't really their specialty. A few years later, Parnell died (October 10, 1891), and Kee (p. 115) writes that "The chances of Home Rule for the next twenty years were buried with him"; see also the notes to "We Won't Let Our Leader Run Down." For the future course of the Home Rule movement, see the notes to "A Loyal Song Against Home Rule."

Chamberlain, in addition to splitting the liberal party and postponing home rule, had one more dubious gift to give to Britain: His younger son, Neville Chamberlain. - RBW

Bibliography

- Kee: Robert Kee, The Bold Fenian Men, being volume II of The Green Flag (covering the period from around 1848 to the Easter Rising), Penguin, 1972

Last updated in version 5.0
File: BrdHoRuI

Home to Dinner

DESCRIPTION: "Home to dinner ... There's the bell ... Bacon and potatoes . . . Ding dong dell"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames)
KEYWORDS: food nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 303, "Home to Dinner" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO G1 55)
Roud #1339
NOTES [13 words]: Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames: "Catch, formerly well known at Bibury." - BS
Last updated in version 2.6
File: WT303A
Home, Green Erin, O

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, come all you true born Irish men, I hope you will attend, I hope you'll pay attention to these few lines I've penned." The singer is forced to leave "green Erin, O." He must leave home, family, and the girl he loves for "Columbia."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Vikár/Panagapka-SongsNorthWoodsSungByOJAbbott)
KEYWORDS: emigration separation home
FOUND IN: Canada(Ont)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Vikár/Panagapka-SongsNorthWoodsSungByOJAbbott 43, "Home, Green Erin, O" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #23057
NOTES [73 words]: If there are versions of this other than O. J. Abbott's, I have not identified them, and Abbott's seems confused. If the emigrant's parents are "honoured," as in verse 4, why is he forced to leave? Rebellion? It's not mentioned. Religious persecution? There are mentioned of Luther, and of hedge priests, but both references seem to be damaged. Unless we can find another version, the details of this song are likely to remain a mystery. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.1
File: AbFo043

Home, Sweet Home (Australian Parody)

DESCRIPTION: "From towns great and small, and from country we come, From all sorts of 'places' we thus hasten home." The captain makes sure they stay there. They're abused and fed poorly while within the walls. In spite of all this, "there's no place like home"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (Anderson-FarewellToOldEngland)
KEYWORDS: home hardtimes derivative
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Anderson-FarewellToOldEngland, pp. 134-136, "Home, Sweet Home" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: AnFa134

Home, Sweet Home (Parody)

DESCRIPTION: "When you're having heaps of fun and getting full of beer, There's no place like home. When your feet get tangled up and you walk on your ear, There's no place like home." It's a place to fall down drunk, to suffer when others visit, to regret your wife

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric)
KEYWORDS: derivative hardtimes humorous drink baby wife injury
FOUND IN: US(MW,SE,So)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 152, "Parody of 'Home, Sweet Home'" (1 text)
Warner-FolkSongsAndBalladsOfTheEasternSeaboard, p. 21, "There's No Place Like Home Parody" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore, pp. 149-150, "There's No Place Like Home" (1 text, tune referenced)
Roud #4896 and 11351
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Brisk Young Bachelor (I)" (theme)
NOTES [38 words]: These are not really all the same parody, but they all share a common sort of idea: When something miserable happens to you, there is no place like home. Such songs will inevitably cross-fertilize, so I'm lumping them here. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.5
File: Brne152
Home! Sweet Home!

DESCRIPTION: "Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam, Be it ever so humble there's no place like home." The singer yearns to return to that "lowly thatched cottage" which brings peace of mind

AUTHOR: John Howard Payne (c. 1791-1852); Music: possibly Sir Henry Bishop (see NOTES)

EARLIEST DATE: 1823 (in the opera "Clara [or the Maid of Milan]")

KEYWORDS: home nonballad

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (17 citations):
Jackson-PopularSongsOfNineteenthCenturyAmerica, pp. 80-82, "Home! Sweet Home!" (1 text, 1 tune)
Dean-FlyingCloud, p. 120, "Home, Sweet Home" (1 text)
Gilbert-LostChords, p. 87, (no name; a partial text of a parody)
Krythe-SamplerOfAmericanSongs 3, pp. 40-61, "Home, Sweet Home" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #44, "Home, Sweet Home" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #895, p. 60, "Home, Sweet Home" (2 references)
Emerson-StephenFosterAndCo, pp. 57-58, "Home! Sweet Home!" (1 text)
Heart-Songs, pp. 374-375, "Home, Sweet Home" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 52, "Home Sweet Home" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 143-145, "Home, Sweet Home" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 254, "Home, Sweet Home" (1 text)
Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, pp. 274-275, "Home! Sweet Home!"

DT, HOMSWEET

ADDITIONAL: (no author listed), _The Vocal Companion_, second edition, D'Almaine and Co., 1837 (available from Google Books), p. 33, "Home! Sweet Home" (1 text, 1 tune)
Aline Waites & Robin Hunter, _The Illustrated Victorian Songbook_, Michael Joseph Ltd., 1984, pp. 16-18, "Home! Sweet Home" (1 text, 1 tune)
Harry Dichter and Elliott Shapiro, _Early American Sheet Music: Its Lure and Its Lore, 1768-1889_, R. R. Bowker, 1941, pp. 39-41, offers some history of the song and a list of several dozen early printings; plate 9 shows the cover of the earliest sheet music

Roud #13449

RECORDINGS:
The Breaux Freres, "Home Sweet Home" [in Cajun French] (Vocalion 2961B, 1934; on AAFM2)
Eleanora de Cisneros, "Home, Sweet Home" (CYL: Edison (BA) 28145, 1913; on Protobilly)
Elizabeth Cotten, "Home Sweet Home" (on Cotten03)
Edward Franklin, "Home Sweet Home" (Columbia 44, 1901)
Frank Jenkins, "Home Sweet Home" (Silvertone 5080, 1927)
Lester McFarland & Robert Gardner, "Home Sweet Home" (Brunswick 475, 1930)
Margarethe Matzenauer, "Home, Sweet Home" (Pathe Actuelle 027519, n.d.)
McMichen's Melody Men, "Home Sweet Home" (Columbia 15288-D, 1928)
Don Reno, "Home, Sweet Home" (King 1474, 1955; on Protobilly)
Royal Hawaiians, "Home Sweet Home" (Broadway 8100, c. 1930)
DaCosta Woltz's Southern Broadcasters, "Home Sweet Home" (Supertone 9162, 1928)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth b.28(7a/b) View 7 of 8, "Home, Sweet Home" ("Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam")
R. March and Co. (London), 1877-1884; also Harding B 25(854), Harding B 11(1564), Firth c.17(40), Harding B 11(2341), Harding B 11(4032), "Home, Sweet Home"
LOCSheet, sm1851 490710, "Home, Sweet Home" ("Mid pleasures and palaces though we may roam")
Firth, Pond and Co. (New York), 1851; also sm1851 670130, sm1852 510930, sm1852 692100, sm1883 17251, sm1883 21656, "Home, Sweet Home" (tune)
LOCsinging, as105460, "Home, Sweet Home," J. Andrews (New York), 1853-1859; also sb20169b, "Home, Sweet Home"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "There Is No Place in the Height of Heaven" (floating lyrics)
cf. "The Song That Reached My Heart" (recalls this song)
cf. "Home, Sweet Home (Parody)" (lyrics, form)

SAME TUNE:
Home, Sweet Home (Parody) (File: Brne152)
NOTES [497 words]: Krythe-SamplerOfAmericanSongs gives extensive notes on the career of John Howard Payne (1791-1852), actor, playwright, poet, minor American diplomat, expatriate, and man with absolutely no idea how to manage his affairs. This song was originally part of an operetta, "Clari, the Maid of Milan," which Payne sold for fifty pounds in 1823. (Rudin, p. 92, says the figure was 250 pounds. Given the way the music business worked back then, that in fact strikes me as a very good sum. Even fifty pounds isn't too bad.)

Jameson, p. 486, gives this biography of the lyricist:
Payne, John Howard (1792-1852), was an author and actor of considerable merit and fame at home and abroad. He is eminent as the author of "Home, Sweet Home," which he composed for his drama, "Clari, or the Maid of Milan." His renown as a song-poet was unsurpassed. He was U. S. Minister to Tunis from 1841 to 1845 [Tyler administration] and again from 1851 to his death [Fillmore administration].

Dichter and Shapiro, p. 39, note the curious fact that three different birth dates are cited for Payne (June 9, 1791; April 1, 1791; and June 8, 1792), and that he has three different death dates (between April 1 and April 10, 1852). Waites & Hunter add the interesting point that neither Payne nor Bishop "experienced the simple pleasures of home life"; Bishop was knighted but was "a noted reprobate, homewrecker and spendthrift," while Payne was too poor a businessman to really handle his own affairs.

Apparently these stories were widely exaggerated; Rudin, p. 91, reports popular accounts saying that "Payne often heard this song played in London, Paris, and other capitals of the world, while he himself wandered poor and unknown, with hardly a crust of bread to eat, and no place to lay his head." The obvious problem with a story like that is that destitute people would find it rather difficult to get to at least three European capitals, at least two of them separated by the English channel! (Although he did spend several decades in Europe, and was there when he wrote "Clari") Rudin, p. 92, points out that Payne "was never in actual want," and says that he was a friend of Washington Irving and Daniel Webster.

The music to the opera "Clari" was by Henry Rowley Bishop. Some have questioned, however, whether he wrote the music for this particular song. It has been claimed that it is an old French tune. The 1823 sheet music cited by Dichter & Shapiro says that it is "Composed & partly founded on a Sicilian Air by Henry R. Bishop." (Nettel, p. 155, reconciles these accounts by saying Bishop wrote the tune, but separately from the opera, and published it in a book of national songs.) The sheet music sold hundreds of thousands of copies, but of course none of the proceeds went to the composers. - RBW

Bibliography

- Nettel: Reginald Nettel, Seven Centuries of Popular Song, Phoenix House, 1956
- Rudin: Cecilia Margaret Rudin, Stories of Hymns We Love, John Rudin & Company, 1934 (I use the fourteenth printing of 1951)

Last updated in version 6.0
File: RJ19080

Homespun Dress, The

DESCRIPTION: "Yes, I am a southern girl, and glory in the same, And boast it with far greater pride than glit'ring wealth or fame...." The girl proudly boasts that, though her dress is homespun and her clothing poor, it is all southern and better than northern finery

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Southern Poems of the War)

KEYWORDS: clothes Civilwar patriotic

FOUND IN: US(SE,So)

REFERENCES (12 citations):
Belden-Ballads Songs Collected By Missouri Folklore Society, p. 360, "The Homespun Dress" (1 text)
Randolph 215, "The Southern Dress" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-Frank CBrownCollectionNC Folklore3 380, "The Homespun Dress" (2 texts plus a reprinting of a printed version)

Hudson-FolksongsOfMississippi 125, pp. 265-266, "The Homespun Dress" (1 text)
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #9, "The Homespun Dress" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #C154, p. 194, "Southern Girl and Parody" (1 reference)
Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, p. 68, "The Homespun Dress" (1 text, tune referenced) Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 229-230, "The Homespun Dress" (1 text, tune referenced) Arnett-IHearAmericaSinging, pp. 78-79, "The Homespun Dress" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT, CNFEDGAL*

ADDITIONAL: Alfred M. Williams, _Studies in Folk-Song and Popular Poetry_, Houghton Mifflin, 1894, pp. 67-69, "The Southern Girl's Song" (1 text)

Roud #4504

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Bonnie Blue Flag" (tune & meter) and references there
cf. "Young Ladies in Town" (theme)

NOTES [136 words]: The authorship of this piece is disputed; several sources list a Lt. Harrington, killed at Perryville (Oct 9, 1862); others credit the song to Carrie Bell Sinclair, whose name is listed on the Wolf broadside. The notes in Brown contain an extensive, but inconclusive, discussion, which consists mostly of citations of unauthoritative sources.

E. Lawrence Abel, _Singing the New Nation: How Music Shaped the Confederacy, 1861-1865_, Stackpole, 2000, pp. 126-127, discusses a major investigation of the question. Apparently some five hundred people attempted to claim the piece when a Dr. Lloyd offered a reward for helping him secure a complete text, and it eventually was submitted to a panel of judges. The conclusion was that the words were by Carrie Bell Sinclair. I do not know the basis for this conclusion. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.7

File: R215

---

Homestead Strike, The

DESCRIPTION: "We are asking one another as we pass the time of day Why men must have recourse to arms to get their proper pay." The union workers go on strike; the company hires Pinkertons to break it. The result is bloodshed

AUTHOR: J. W. Kelly?

EARLIEST DATE: 1940 (Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends)

KEYWORDS: labor-movement fight hardtimes strike

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
July 1, 1892 - Declaration of the Homestead Strike (one of many strikes taking place about this time). The Amalgamated Association of Iron and Steel Workers strikes Carnegie's Homestead Steel Works in Pennsylvania, trying to win the right to collective bargaining.
Relations between the Union and management has, until this time, been fairly good, but manager Henry Clay Frick decided the expiration of the current contract was a good opportunity to break the union. He cut wages and refused to negotiate.
July 6, 1892 - Frick brings in 300 Pinkertons (the "paid detectives" of the song) to battle the strikers and relatives (who number about 5000). Twenty people were killed in the ensuing battle, in which the Pinkertons were repelled (and, without exception, injured)
July 9, 1892 - Frick convinces Pennsylvania Governor Pattison to send in 7000 militia to break the strike
July 15, 1892 - Despite appeals from all over the world (including President Cleveland), the Homestead Mill is re-opened by scabs
Nov 14, 1892 - The Homestead workers give up their strike. They have made no real gains (except in public opinion), and many have lost their jobs to scabs

FOUND IN: US(MA)

REFERENCES (8 citations):
Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends, pp. 443-446, "The Homestead Strike" (1 text, 1 tune)
Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads, pp. 20-21, "The Homestead Strike" (1 text, 1 tune, with another text in the notes on pp 29-30)
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, p. 183, "The Homestead Strike" (1 short text, 1 tune, informant and date unknown)
Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection, p. 22, "The Homestead Strike" (1 short text)
The Homestead Strike was one of the bitterest labor disputes in American history, as shown by both this song and "Father Was Killed by the Pinkerton Men."

A contemporary account gives this summary description (Jameson, p. 310):

Homestead Riots. On the final refusal of the workingmen's association to accept certain changes in the wage scale, the proprietors of the Carnegie Steel Mills, at Homestead, PA., closed the works July 1, 1892. The employees declared a strike about the same time. A mob prevented the sheriff from placing pickets in the mills. July 6 a body of 300 Pinkerton detectives arrived. A bloody fight between these men and the strikers immediately took place, resulting in considerable loss on both sides. The Pinkertons surrendered. The Pennsylvania militia was then ordered out and remained at Homestead to protect the mills. Many of the strikers were arrested and indictments were found against them."

Note that this description (written no later than 1894) refers to the events as "riots."

(Incidentally, we think of the Pinkerton Agency as a detective organization, and that was certainly how they initially presented themselves, but as the company expanded, it became more and more what we would now call a contract security firm -- and an armed one, which existed to do the bidding of corporate managers, the "Pinkerton Protective Patrol" (Lukas, pp. 81-83); they sound very much like the sort of private security firms the United States has used in the twentieth century in places like Iraq to substitute for the U. S. military.)

The Homestead Iron Works was partly owned by Andrew Carnegie but was run by Henry Clay Frick (1849-1919), who was a robber baron's robber baron. PresElections, p. 1725, describes his behavior: "The management's contract with skilled workers was to expire on June 30 [.1892]. Despite apparent national prosperity, Frock lowered the wage rates of about one-sixth of the labor force in proposed new contracts. His refusal to negotiate, or accept full unionization produced a strike and over-reaction on both sides early in July. Strikers left the building talking of violence; management locked out employees. Barbed wire, observation towers, and private guards, later including Pinkertons, protected strikebreakers."

The strike was so bitter that Nevins/Commager, p. 327, refer to "a pitched battle on the banks of the Monongahela."

Unfortunately for workers, a quirk of fate turned the public against them. On July 23, a nut named Alexander Berkman attempted to assassinate Frick. Berkman injured but did not kill Frick, and the public blamed the union even though Berkman was a lone wolf who had nothing to do with the Homestead laborers (PresElections, pp. 1725-1726). Frick went on to give $25,000 to the re-election campaign of President Benjamin Harrison, whose administration had refused to intervene. The strike was doomed, especially since strikebreakers had succeeded in resuming partial production at the mill. Eventually, after months of struggle and suffering, the strikers gave in. Many lost their jobs, and the remainder had to accept Frick's pay cuts. All they had succeeded in doing was leaving a blot on people's memories which would still be remembered two generations later (Hofstadter, p. 244).

Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection has a different take on the Homestead Strike, referring it to a "mine fire started in 1884 near New Straitsville, a town just south of Zanesville in Perry County[, Ohio]." I can see no reason in the Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection version to support this supposition, although it is not inherently impossible. I do wonder, a little, if all the songs filed under this title are actually the same; some of them have rather different forms. - RBW

Bibliography

- Lukas: J. Anthony Lukas, Big Trouble, 1997 (I use the 1998 Touchstone paperback)
Homesteader, The

DESCRIPTION: "On a distant lonely prairie, In a little lonely shack, New life the homesteader faces; On the world he's turned his back." He lives fifteen miles from a neighbor, and a hundred miles from a town. But he has freedom and is building up Canada

AUTHOR: Words: John Hughes Arnett

EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (MacLeod-SongsOfOldManitoba)

KEYWORDS: home farming freedom nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
MacLeod-SongsOfOldManitoba, #12, pp. 75-77, "The Homesteader" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #25769

File: Macl12

Homeward Bound (I)

DESCRIPTION: Shanty. Characteristic line: "Goodbye, fare you well, goodbye, fare you well... Hurrah, my boys, we're homeward bound." While the rest of the shanty usually tells a story about sailors' return, the stanzas are often compiled from floating verses

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1845 (from the log of the Minerva)

KEYWORDS: shanty reunion

FOUND IN: US(MA,MW) Canada(Mar,Newf) Britain(England,Scotland(Aber)) West Indies(St Vincent)

REFERENCES (26 citations):
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 87-89, "Homeward Bound" (3 texts, 1 tune. The first text is largely "Outward and Homeward Bound"; the third partakes of "Rolling in the Dew" and "Ratcliffe Highway")
Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, pp. 50-52, "Homeward Bound" (1 text, 1 tune)
Bone-CapstanBars, p. 117, "Homeward Bound" (1 text, 1 tune)
Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen, pp. 113-114, "Good-bye, Fare You Well!" (1 text, 1 tune)
Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 119-121, "Homeward Bound" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 120-124, "Goodbye, Fare-Ye-Well" (8 texts-5 English, 2 Norwegian, 1 French, 2 tunes. Version c's verses are from "Blow the Man Down," version d's are from "The Dreadnaught") [AbEd, pp. 103-106]
Hugill-SongsOfTheSea, p. 36, "Goodby Fare-Ye-Well" (1 text, 1 tune)
Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 69-70, "Outward Bound" (1 text, 1 tune)
Shay-AmericanSeaSongsAndChanteys, p. 85, "Goodbye, Fare You Well" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, pp. 132-133, "Goodbye, Fare-Ye-Well" (1 text, 1 tune)
Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 140-141, "Homeward Bound" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 165, "Homeward Bound" (1 text, 1 tune)
Blondahl-NewfoundlandersSing, p. 23, "Homeward Bound" (1 text, 1 tune)
Smith/Hatt/Fowke-SeaSongsBalladFromNineteenthCenturyNovaScotia, p. 34, "Goodbye, Fare Ye Well" (1 text)
Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 37, "Homeward Bound" (1 text, 1 tune)
Pottie/Ellis-FolksongsOfTheMaritimes, pp. 56-57, "Homeward Bound" (1 text, 1 tune)
Homeward Bound (II -- Loose Every Sail to the Breeze)

DESCRIPTION: "Loose every sail to the breeze, The course of my vessel improve... Ye sailors I'm bound to my love." The sailor rejoices to be going home to his faithful Emma. He toasts the ship and the wind which carries her home

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1795 (Journal from the Joseph Francis)

KEYWORDS: sailor sea home

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Huntington-SongsTheWhalemenSang, pp. 52-53, "Loose Every Sail to the Breeze" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2016

NOTES [39 words]: Huntington thinks this a traditional song, but his tune, at least, can hardly be regarded as traditional. It requires a range of two full octaves. Some singers could handle this, but probably not enough to keep the song current. - RBW

File: SwMS052

Honest Farmer, The

DESCRIPTION: "I saw an honest farmer, his back was bending low, Picking out his cotton... until the merchant come.... That he might pay them some." "Goodbye boll weevil, for you know you've ruint my home," Weary, and poor, his wife advises him to trust in the Savior

AUTHOR: Probably Fiddlin' John Carson
Honest Girl (I Went to Church Like an Honest Girl Should)

DESCRIPTION: "I went to church like an honest girl should, And the boys come too, Like other boys would." I come home like an honest girl should, And the boys came too.... She ends up pregnant and has a baby, "And the boys denied it, just like boys would."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (Henry, collected from Mrs. Samuel Harmon)
KEYWORDS: courting pregnancy abandonment lie
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Henry-SongsSungInTheSouthernAppalachians, pp. 28-29, "Honest Girl" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Roger deV. Renwick, _Recentering Anglo/American Folksong: Sea Crabs and Wicked Youths_, University Press of Mississippi, 2001, p. 86, "Honest Girl" (1 text)
Roud #27679

NOTES [16 words]: This may be the best five-stanza summary of the relationship between the sexes I've ever seen. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: MHAp028

Honest Irish Lad, The

DESCRIPTION: "My name is Tim McNare, I'm from the County Clare In that lovely little isle across the sea." The singer loved Ireland, but his farm could not support his family. Now in America, he can find no work. He still hopes to bring his family to join him

AUTHOR: Thomas F. Kerrigan and Dan McCarthy (c. 1880) (source: Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports)
EARLIEST DATE: 1880 broadside, see notes; 1888 (Wehman's [Universal Songster] Collection)
KEYWORDS: poverty emigration family separation unemployment
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf,Ont)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 142-145, "Give an Honest Irish Lad a Chance (The Honest Irish Lad)" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Fowke/Mills/Blume-CanadasStoryInSong, pp. 89-91, "The Honest Irish Lad" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Wehman's [Universal Songster] Collection of 98 Songs No. 18 (New York, 1888 ("Digitized by Internet Archive")), p. 17, "Give an Honest Irish Lad a Chance" ("My name is McNamara, and I came from County Clare") (1 text)
Wehman's Irish Songster [of 200 Songs] No. 1 (New York, n.d. ("Digitized by Internet Archive")), p. 32, "Give an Honest Irish Lad a Chance" ("My name is McNamara, and I came from County Clare") (1 text)
Roud #4522

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "No Irish Need Apply" (subject)
cf. "An Irish Laborer" (subject)
NOTES [18 words]: One of Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports's texts is a fragment from an 1880 New York broadside. - BS
Honest Ploughman, The (Ninety Years Ago)

DESCRIPTION: An old ploughman complains that he, his wife, father and mother worked hard; now wives wear "dandy veils" and daughters and sons don't milk or plough. He can no longer work and gets no respect; if on relief he will go to the "Whig Bastile."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1839 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(2125))

KEYWORDS: age poverty marriage farming nonballad father husband mother wife

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 294, "Ninety Years of Age" (1 fragment) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 244)
- Palmer-ThePainfulPlow, #9, "The Honest Ploughman" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #619

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Harding B 11(2125), "The Life of an Honest Ploughman" or "90 Years Ago" ("Come all you jolly husbandmen & listen to my song"), J.Russell (Birmingham), 1814-1838; also Firth c.16(297), Harding B 11(1571), Harding B 11(1570), 2806 c.13(48), "Honest Ploughman" or "90 Years Ago"; Johnson Ballads 2561, "Honset [sic] Ploughman" or "90, Years Ago"; Firth c.16(299), Harding B 11(3294), "The Honest Ploughman"

File: WT294

---

Honest Working Man, The

DESCRIPTION: "Way down in East Cape Breton, where they knit the sock and mitten, Cezzetcook is represented by the husky black and tan. May they never be rejected, and home rule be protected, and always be connected with the honest working man."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs)

KEYWORDS: work fishing

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs 31, "The Honest Working Man" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT, HONSTWR

Roud #4535

NOTES [29 words]: Written as a piece of irony aimed at the importation of surplus labor in the summer months.... Referred to in several sources as "the national anthem of Cape Breton workers." - SL

File: FowM

---

Honey Babe (III)

DESCRIPTION: "If I could lay my head on your sweet breast, Honey baby, I could find rest, sweet rest, I could find sweet rest, Honey babe, I could find sweet rest." "If could could set down in your lap, Baby mind, I could have a nap, Good nap, sweet nap, Honey....."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)

KEYWORDS: nonballad love

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 743, "Honey Babe" (1 short text, 1 tune)

NOTES [26 words]: The description is based on the Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 plus that in Odum & Johnson. I don't know if there are longer versions. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.1
Honey in the Rock

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Honey in the rock, got to feed God children, Honey in the rock (2x), Honey in the rock, got to feed God children, Feed every child of God." Floating verses like "Satan mad and I so glad He missed the soul that he thought he had"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (recording, Blind Mamie Forehand)

KEYWORDS: floating verses, nonballad, religious

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Carawan/Carawan-AintYouGotARight, pp. 232-233, "Honey in the Rock" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #16119

RECORDINGS:
Carter Family, "Honey in the Rock" (Decca 5467. 1938; Montgomery Ward 8024, 1939; rec. 1937)
Blind Mamie Forehand & A. C. Forehand, "Honey in the Rock" (Victor 20574, 1927)

NOTES [85 words]: The current description is based on the Carawan/Carawan-AintYouGotARight text. - BS

The Victor ledgers for the recording by Blind Mamie Forehand credit her and A. C. Forehand with the authorship. The lyrics of the Forehands' recording are considerably different from the description of those in Carawan/Carawan-AintYouGotARight. They may be completely independent songs. I have not heard the Carter Family's recording, so I can't say whether it's the same song as the Forehands', the Carawans', or neither. - PJS

Last updated in version 5.0

File: CarCa232

Honey Pots, Honey Pots

DESCRIPTION: "Honey pots, honey pots, All in a row, Honey pots, honey pots, all in a row."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1900 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)

KEYWORDS: play, party, food

FOUND IN: New Zealand

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, pp. 51-52, "(Honey pots, honey pots)" (1 short text)

Roud #19197

File: SuSm051

Honeymoon, The (By West of Late As I Did Walk)

DESCRIPTION: "By west of late as I did walk," the singer hears two newlyweds. She declares she will not work for him. He says that if she will not work, "I shall the(e) dryve." They fall to fighting. She lands more blows than he. He singer hopes for peace

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1858 (Aytoun); the manuscript is from no later than the early seventeenth century, and Robbins suggested that a Stationer's Register entry from 1590 refers to this piece

KEYWORDS: husband, wife, marriage, fight

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (2 citations):
ADDITIONAL: Peter J. Seng, _Tudor Songs and Ballads from MS Cotton Vespasian A-25_, Harvard University Press, 1978, #22, pp. 42-44, "By west off late as I dyd walke" (1 text)

MANUSCRIPT: London, British Library, MS. Cotton Vespasian A.xxv (67), folio 140

ST PJSe022 (Partial)

Roud #8206

NOTES [96 words]: Hyder E. Rollins, _An Analytical Index to the Ballad-Entries (1557-1709) In the Register of the Company of Stationers of London_, 1924 (I use the 1967 Tradition Press reprint with a new Foreword by Leslie Shepard), p. 151, #1740, is "A merye newe ieste of a wife that threst her husband with a flea," registered by Thomas Scarlet on August 15, 1590; Rollins suggests that the printed piece is this item, but I can't prove it. The form of the text doesn't look much like a folk song to me, but Ritson and Aytoun and others printed it, so I'm including it very tentatively. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.3

File: PJSe022

Honkytonk Asshole

DESCRIPTION: "I hang out in bars and bother the dollies, I peak when I'm not spoken to." The singer describes his performance in bars, and tells how he gets thrown out of the place as "bad for business.'

AUTHOR: Baxter Black

EARLIEST DATE: 1989 (Logsdon-WhorehouseBellsWereRinging)

KEYWORDS: drink work

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Logsdon-WhorehouseBellsWereRinging 61, pp. 275-277, "Honkytonk Asshole" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #10111

NOTES [36 words]: Logsdon-WhorehouseBellsWereRinging thinks this a typical example of modern bawdy songwriting. This strikes me as unlikely; it's dirty, but it's much too much like pop-country whining-because-I'm-on-the-road songs. - RBW

File: Logs061

Honour of Bristol, The

DESCRIPTION: "Attend you and give ear a while, and you shall understand Of a battle fought upon the seas by a ship of brave command." The "Angel Gabriel" fights three Spanish ships. They battle for seven hours, but the "Angel Gabriel" is victorious

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1986 (Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs); a song with the name "Honour of Bristow" was in William Thackeray's broadside catalog by 1690

KEYWORDS: battle ship Spain moniker

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs 12, "The Honour of Bristol" (1 text)
Roud #V29012

File: PaSe012

Hook and Line

DESCRIPTION: "Gimme the hook and gimme the line; Gimme the girl you call Caroline." Possibly part of the same song: "Set my hook and give it a flip; Caught old (name) by the lip."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (Fuson-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands)

KEYWORDS: fishing courting nonballad

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fuson-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands, p. 157, "Hook and Line" (third of 12 single-stanza jigs) (1 fragment); also possibly p. 157, "The Hook" (the fourth jig)
ST Fus157 (Full)
Roud #13943

File: Fus157

Hooker John

DESCRIPTION: "Oh me Mary she's a sailor's lass. Ch: To me Hooker John, me Hoo-john! Oh we courted all day on the grass (Ch) "Full Ch: Way Suzanna Oh way, hay, high, high, ya! Johnny's on the foreyard, Yonder way up yonder!"
Hooker John

Description: "Oh me Mary she's a sailor's lass. Ch: To me Hooker John, me Hoo-john! Oh we courted all day on the grass (Ch) "Full Ch: Way Suzanna Oh way, hay, high, high, ya! Johnny's on the foreyard, Yonder way up yonder!" Verses continue with other girls, "Flora she's a hoosier's friend, Sally she's a nigger's gal" etc.

Keywords: shanty worksong courting

Found In: West Indies

References: (1 citation):
- Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 290-291, "Hooker John" (2 texts, 1 tune) [AbEd, pp. 214-215]

Alternate Titles:
- Ooker John

File: Hugi290

Hooks and Eyes

Description: "Hooks and eyes, Joined together, You're a book, And I'm a feather."

Author: unknown

Earliest Date: 1915 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)

Keywords: playparty

Found In: New Zealand

References: (1 citation):
- Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 115, "(Hooks and eyes)" (1 text)

File: SuSm115A

Hooly and Fairly (I)

Description: "Doun in yon meadow a couple did tarry": the wife drank and the husband complained that she drank his liquor also. Not only did she sell all her clothes for drink, but all his as well. When drunk she insulted him and their children.

Author: unknown

Earliest Date: 1843 (Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong)

Keywords: shrewishness drink children husband wife

Found In: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

References: (2 citations):
- Greig/Duncan3 584A,584B, "Hooly and Fairly" (1 text)
- Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 29, "Hooly and Fairly" (1 text)

Roud #5654

Cross-References:
- cf. "Hooly and Fairly (II)" (subject) and references there

Notes: [70 words]: The theme, chorus and a few lines in the first verse are the same as in "Hooly and Fairly (I)" but the verses are different. In fact, while this version ends each verse "gine my wifie wid drink hooly and fairly" Baillee's song ends each verse differently asking only in the first verse that she drink hooly and fairly; other verses wish that she feast, spend, dress, strike, sleep timely, and speak "hooly and fairly." - BS

Last Updated in Version 3.2

File: GrD3584

Hooly and Fairly (II)

Description: Singer wonders why he married; his wife drinks and calls him cheap. She dines out and dresses well while he must wear rags. She overdresses, fails to keep house, and sleeps too much. He wishes he were single, and that she would live "hooly and fairly"

Author: Joanna Baillee (source: Whitelaw)

Earliest Date: text 1751 (published in "Yair's Charmer" as "The Drucken Wife o' Gallowa"); melody 1759 (The Caledonian Pocket Companion, same title); both together under title "Hooly and Fairly," 1757 (Thirty Scots Songs for Voice and Harpsichord)
LONG DESCRIPTION: Singer wonders why he married; his wife drinks canary wine and calls him cheap. She dines with her gossiping friends, goes to fairs, "bridals," and preachings well-dressed while he must wear rags. She overdresses in church, fails to keep house, and sleeps while the neighbors are waking. She won't take advice, arguing with the minister. He wishes he were single, and that his wife would drink/spend/dress/speak "hooly and fairly"

KEYWORDS: shrewishness marriage clothes drink nonballad wife

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Greig/Duncan 584C, "Hooly and Fairly" (1 text)
MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland 111, "Hooly and Fairly" (1 text, 1 tune)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 30, "Hooly and Fairly" (1 text)

ADDITIONAL: James Johnson, Editor, _The Scots Musical Museum_ [1853 edition], volume II, #191, p. 199, "Hooly and Fairly" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST McCST111 (Partial)
Roud #5654

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hooly and Fairly (I)" (theme, chorus and a few lines in the first verse)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Drucken Wife o' Gallowa'

NOTES [87 words]: The singer is a kvetch. "Hooly" = "slowly, softly, gently." Joanna Baillie (1762-1851) was a child prodigy who composed verses before she could read; in addition to writing songs, for forty years she was a dramatist for the London Theatre. - PJS
"Hooly and Fairly (I)" seems the basis for Baillee's rewrite.
Whitelaw: "Written by Joanna Baillee for George Thomson's collection of Scottish melodies." [Is this George Thomson, _A Select Collection of Original Scottish Airs for the Voice_ in 5 volumes (London,1804-1818)?] - BS

Last updated in version 3.2
File: McCST111

Hooray, Hooray

DESCRIPTION: "Hooray, hooray, my father's gonna be hung, Hooray, hooray, that dirty, drunken bum, For he was very mean to me When I was very young." Similarly Mother, "that dirty drunken sot," and uncle, "that nasty pervert," and brother will suffer

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Cray-AshGrove)

KEYWORDS: mother father brother death bawdy humorous

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cray-AshGrove, p. 34, "Hooray, Hooray" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Marching Through Georgia" (tune)

File: CrAG34B

Hoot Owl Song

DESCRIPTION: "Kukuku'u ningosa, Kukuku'u nngosa, ningosa. Kukuku'u ningosa." Ojibwe song about being afraid ("ningosa) of various owls.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Goodin, Sounds of the Lake and the Forest, according to Lewis-FavoriteMichiganFolkSongs)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage bird nonballad

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lewis-FavoriteMichiganFolkSongs, p. 2, "Hoot Owl Song (1 text, 1 tune, neither demonstrably traditional)

File: LewMi02
Hoot Says the Owl
DESCRIPTION: "Hoot says the owl, and I wish 'twas night, Fly away to my heart's delight, Only pleasure I can see, Is to court all night and sleep next day." "You are my true love, you for me, Keep right up here by the side of me, Kiss her quick and let her go...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1999 (Spurgeon-WaltzTheHall-AmericanPlayParty)
KEYWORDS: playparty bird
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Spurgeon-WaltzTheHall-AmericanPlayParty, p. 113, "Hoot Says the Owl" (1 text, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Bird's Courting Song (The Hawk and the Crow; Leatherwing Bat)" (lyrics)
NOTES [27 words]: I suspect this is a worn-down version of "The Bird's Courting Song (The Hawk and the Crow; Leatherwing Bat)," but I can't prove it, so it gets a separate entry. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: Spurg113

Hootchy-Kootchy Dance, The
DESCRIPTION: "There's a place in France/Where the women wear no pants" and similar bawdy verses. Cho: "Do what your mama says and do what your papa says/But don't split your pants, doin' the hootchy-kootchy dance"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1893
KEYWORDS: sex clothes bawdy nonballad
FOUND IN: US
RECORDINGS:
Anonymous singer "The Hootchy-Kootchy Dance" (on Unexp1)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bonaparte's Retreat" (sometimes used as a C part for that tune)
cf. "All the Girls in France" (lyrics)
NOTES [154 words]: Yes, you know it. This is the piece that is always used in a cartoon as the music when anything having to do with Arabia, Egypt, belly dancing, snake charming or Muslims in general is depicted. Originally a Tin Pan Alley song, popular at the Columbian Exposition in Chicago, where exotic dancers adopted it instantly; Sol Bloom, entertainment director at the Exposition, claimed he wrote it, but it has also been connected to traditional tunes in Iraq and Algeria. The title usually associated with the tune is "The Streets of Cairo." (See http://tinyurl.com/tbdx-HKDance for more history.) It's a tune nearly everyone in America knows, and many older Americans (and maybe kids?) know the "women wear no pants" verse. A folk song if ever there was one. - PJS
With the ironic footnote, based on the Streets of Cairo site above, that those of Arabic culture will NOT know the tune. It is, in a way, a false stereotype. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.6
File: RcTHoKoD

Hop Along Sister Mary (I)
DESCRIPTION: "You'll have to be the lover of an undertaker's daughter If you want to get a coffin when you die. Hop along, sister (Mary/Molly), hop along. Hop along, hop along, Hop along, sister Mary, hop along"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1919 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)
KEYWORDS: burial humorous derivative
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 732, "Hop Along" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Roud #17848
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hop Along Sister Mary (II)" (chorus)
Hop Along Sister Mary (II)

DESCRIPTION: "There was a man named Rosenthal, Who bought a goat some time next fall. He did not buy it for his kid, But bought it for himself instead. Hop along, Sister Mary, hop along..." Bill Johnson's wife leaves him for inadequacy. Married life is long and hard

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: humorous animal husband wife abandonment

FOUND IN: US (So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 176, "Hop Along, Sister Mary" (1 text)
Roud #11365

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hop Along Sister Mary (I)" (chorus)

NOTES [67 words]: Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric thinks this probably composite, the chorus being from a popular song (in fact extant in the Index under this title, from the Brown collection) and the verses deriving from perhaps two other lost songs. I think he's right, but the other components either have been lost or are too short to recognize in Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric's form. See, however, "Hop Along Sister Mary (I)." - RBW

Last updated in version 4.3

File: BrS5732

Hop Head

DESCRIPTION: "Around a hop layout three dope fiends lay." One dreams of millions of herds, ships, coins, wives. One thinks he owns a gold mine. One thinks he is king of the "Isle of Poppies." They end up in prison, the army, or elsewhere

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Shay-BarroomBallads/PiousFriendsDrunkenCompanions)

KEYWORDS: drugs dream prison

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Spaeth-WeepSomeMoreMyLady, pp. 126-127, "Oh, in the Morning" (1 text, 1 tune)
Shay-BarroomBallads/PiousFriendsDrunkenCompanions, p. 143, "Hop Head" (1 text)
Roud #9542

NOTES [64 words]: Spaeth's and Shay's texts are different in their plots -- Spaeth's has the three hop-heads actually go to the police station and end up in prison; Shay's is a list of places the hop-head has visited. But both involve mention of a million nickels and dimes, and hop, and neither seems common; it doesn't seem worthwhile to split them, given that they have at least cross-fertilized. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.2

File: SBar143

Hop High Ladies (Uncle Joe)

DESCRIPTION: Floating verses ("Did you ever go to meeting, Uncle Joe?" "Every time you turn around you jump Jim Crow"). Characterized by the refrain "Hop high ladies, (the cake's all dough/Three in a row), Don't mind the weather when the wind don't blow"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (recording, Henry Whitter)
KEYWORDS: nonballad dancing dancetune floatingverses
FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE,So)
REFERENCES (12 citations):
Randolph 252, "Jump Jim Crow" (1 text, 1 tune, a short text with the chorus of "Jump Jim Crow" and other material that might float)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 219-220, "Jump Jim Crow" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 252)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 85, "Hop Light, Ladies" (2 fragments)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 85, "Hop High, Ladies" (1 tune plus a text excerpt)
Hudson-FolksongsOfMississippi 147, pp. 293-294, [no title] (1 text, a square dance sample with a lot of material appropriate to that setting but with a chorus that seems to place it here)
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 174, "Hop Light, Ladies" (1 text plus a fragment, 1 tune)
Roberts-SangBranchSettlers, #90, "Did You Ever See the Devil, Uncle Joe?" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 116, "Uncle Joe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 58-59, "Hop Up, My Ladies" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cohen/Seeger/Wood-NewLostCityRamblersSongbook, pp. 64-65, "Hop High Ladies, the Cake's All Dough" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 33, "Uncle Joe" (1 text)
DT, HOPUPLAD*
Roud #6677
RECORDINGS:
Fiddlin' John Carson, "Hop Light Lady" (OKah 45011, 1925)
Uncle Dave Macon, "Hop Light Ladies The Cake's All Dough" (Vocalion 5154, 1927)
New Lost City Ramblers, "Hop High, Ladies" (on NLCR10); "Hop High, Ladies, the Cake's All Dough" (on NLCR12)
Fiddlin' Powers and Family, "Did You Ever See the Devil, Uncle Joe?" (OKeh 45268, 1927)
Riley Puckett, "Hop Light Ladies" (Bluebird B-5514, 1934)
Red Fox Chasers, "Did You Ever See The Devil, Uncle Joe" (Gennett 6461/Champion 15522, 1928)
Doc Roberts, "Did You Ever See the Devil Uncle Joe" (Perfect 12724, 1931; Melotone 12390, 1932; Conqueror 8136, 1933)
Oliver Sims, "Hop About Ladies" (Columbia 15103-D, 1926)
Ernest V. Stoneman, "Hop Light Ladies" (Edison 52056 [may also have been listed as by the Dixie Mountaineers, same record number], 1927)
Henry Whitter, "Hop Light Ladies and Shortenin' Bread" (OKeh 40064, 1924)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Miss McCleod's Reel " (tune)
cf. "Jump Jim Crow" (floating lyrics)
NOTES [29 words]: Randolph has a report that this song has been heard as far afield as Delhi, India, but seems to be referring to "Jump Jim Crow" (of which his version has just the chorus). - RBW
Last updated in version 4.3
File: R252

Hop-Joint, The

DESCRIPTION: "I went to the hop-joint And thought I'd have some fun, In walked Bill Bailey With his forty-one! (Oh, baby darlin', why don't you come home?)" Bailey, or somebody, shoots the singer in the side: "Don't catch me playin' bull In the hop-joint any more!"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)
KEYWORDS: cards drugs violence injury homicide
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, pp. 90-91, "The Hop-Joint" (1 text, apparently incomplete, plus a fragment; 1 tune); also some additional lyrics on p. 91
ST ScaNF090 (Partial)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bill Bailey, Won't You Please Come Home?" (some lyrics; character of Bill Bailey)
NOTES: Scarborough's source apparently had a great deal of trouble acquiring a complete text of this song, and the resulting fragments are difficult to interpret. It also is a peculiar composite; quite a few lines, and of course the main character, are reminiscent of "Bill Bailey, Won't You Please Come Home?" (though it's not clear whether that song, from 1902, was the inspiration of this or derived from it); the feel seems more like "Duncan and Brady," and of course there are lots of stories of violence in drug-houses. We really need more information than we have. - RBW

Hop-Pickers' Tragedy, The

DESCRIPTION: A group of hop-pickers on their way from work approaches (Larklake) Bridge in a horse-drawn vehicle. The horses shy; the vehicle plunges over the bridge into the River Medway with great loss of life

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (recording, Jasper Smith)

KEYWORDS: death drowning farming harvest work disaster horse worker

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Oct. 20(?), 1853 - The Medway accident

FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond,South))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland 120, "The Hop-Pickers' Tragedy" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #1729

RECORDINGS:

Jasper Smith, "Hartlake Bridge" (on Voice08)

ALTERNATE TITLES:

There Was Four-and-Twenty Strangers

NOTES: [196 words]: [On October 20, 1853,] A horse-drawn brake carrying a party of hop-pickers plunged over Hartlake Bridge into the River Medway. Thirty people, including four children, were drowned. The dead included Travellers, Irish, and English.

[MacColl and Seeger write.] "In spite of being very well known among Kent and Surrey Travellers, the song does not appear to have been printed at any time." - PJS

Regarding the date of the event, Hall, notes to Voice08, re "Hartlake Bridge" cites Mike Yates as source for an October 1858 date. Yates, Musical Traditions site Voice of the People suite "Notes - Volume 8" - 1.3.03 also has the date as October, 1858. - BS

It appears this is a misreading. I found a reference to the accident in the October 29, 1853 edition of the London Illustrated News. It claims 32 people were killed. As of this writing, a citation may be found at http://tinyurl.com/tbdx-MedwayTrag. (It's in section 39 of the page; use a find command to look for "Medway." The headline is "'The Upper Great Hartlake Bridge over The medway, The Scene of the Late Accident' Collapse of a bridge killing thirty two men women and children, hop pickers on their way home"). - RBW

Last updated in version 2.5

File: McCST120

Hop, Skip, and Jump

DESCRIPTION: "Hop, skip, and jump, Hop, skip, and jump. If you cannot do this, You are punk."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)

KEYWORDS: play party

FOUND IN: New Zealand

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 131, "(Hop, skip, and jump)" (1 text)

File: SuSm131H
Hopalong Peter

DESCRIPTION: Nonsense song. "Old mother Hubbard and her dog were Dutch/A bow-legged rooster and he hobbled on a crutch/Hen chawed tobacco and the duck drank wine/The goose played the fiddle on the pumpkin vine" and similar verses.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (recording, Mainer's Mountaineers)

KEYWORDS: nonsense animal chickens drink wordplay

FOUND IN: US(MW,SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 160, "Get Along, John, the Day's Work's Done" (1 text, of only three lines, but two of them correspond to this song)
Cohen/Seeger/Wood-NewLostCityRammersSongbook, pp. 104-105, "Hopalong Peter" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST CSW104 (Full)

Roud #17679

RECORDINGS:
Fisher Hendley & his Aristocratic Pigs, "Hop Along Peter" (Vocalion 04780, 1939, on CrowTold01)
J. E. Mainer's Mountaineers, "Hop Along Peter" (Bluebird B-6752 [as Mainer, Morris & Sherrill?] / Montgomery Ward M-7131, 1937)
New Lost City Rammers, "Hopalong Peter" (on NLCR10, NLCRCD1)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hallelujah" (technique) and references there
cf. "Johnny Fell Down in the Bucket" (technique)
cf. "I'll Rise When the Rooster Crows" (lyrics)
cf. "Hannamaria" (theme)

NOTES [301 words]: Although most people who hear this song probably think this is about a lagomorph, probably a rabbit (thanks to Beatrix Potter and Peter Rabbit), this may not be the case. Pamela J. Chance of North Carolina knew about it from her father, Winton Lewis Chance of Sault Ste. Marie, Michigan (born July 27, 1920); his version gives the chorus as

Hop along a PeeDee, Hop along a PeeDee,
Where you goin'? Where you goin'?

She notes the following:
"[Winton Chance] was taught this song by his father, Floyd Alden Chance of Indiana when Win was a boy. Win's mom's name was Alma Nellie (Weber) Chance. The family lived in Napoleon, Indiana where they ran the general store and then moved to Muncie, Indiana. Alma ran a pie shop in Muncie from their home,... on the edge of the Ball State University campus. Floyd's side of the family was English, (possibly Scottish) and Alma's side German. Germans use the name 'PeeDee' or 'PeeDee dinks' for a small frog."

This might indicate a German origin for the song, but a similar word in fact occurs in English; according to Alexander Warrack, The Scots Dialect Dictionary, Waverly Books, 2000, p. 397, a paddock (also spelled puddock) is a frog or toad. There is even a version of "Frog Went A-Courting" titled "Puddy He'd A-Wooring Ride." So an original in which the word was "peedee" or perhaps "paddock" or even "paddy" is not unlikely, with that form later corrupted to "Peter."

A number of verses to this song rely on the "unexpected final word." For example, a common first verse runs

Old Uncle Peter, he got tight,
Started up to Heaven on a stormy night.
The road being rough and him not well,
He lost his way and he went... to...
(Chorus)
Hopalong Peter, where you going (x2)
Hopalong Peter, won't you bear in mind
I ain't coming back till the gooseberry time. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0

File:  CSW104

Hopping Down in Kent

DESCRIPTION: "Some say hopping's lousy. I don't believe it's true," but then the singer describes the hoppers' hard life, poor wages, and bad food. And when the money's spent "don't I wish I'd never went A-hopping down in Kent"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Henderson-VictorianStreetBallads)
KEYWORDS: harvest work hardtimes
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henderson-VictorianStreetBallads, pp. 121-122, "Hop Picking in Kent" (1 text)
Roud #1715
RECORDINGS:
Mary Ann Haynes, "Hopping Down in Kent" (on Voice05)
NOTES [85 words]: Hops are picked in September. Most hoppers in Kent were the poor and unemployed from London. "At the hop industry's peak more than 80,000 people poured into Kent every autumn. Whole families came and there are many records of families visiting the same gardens for several generations." (source: "History of Hop Picking in Kent" in A History of Hop Growing in Kent and the South East at the National Hop Association of England site; the article describes hopping and some of the terminology used in the song) - BS
Last updated in version 4.4
File: RcHoDIKe

Horkstow Grange

DESCRIPTION: Steeleye Span and "his man" John Bowlin' live on Horkstow Grange. They have an argument on a market day and Bowlin' beats Steeleye, reversing their previous experiences.
AUTHOR: J. S. Span
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (OShaughnessy/Grainger-TwentyOneLincolnshireFolkSongs)
KEYWORDS: fight farming
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
OShaughnessy/Grainger-TwentyOneLincolnshireFolkSongs 10, "Horkstow Grange" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1760
ALTERNATE TITLES:
John Bowlin'
NOTES [56 words]: From OShaughnessy/Grainger-TwentyOneLincolnshireFolkSongs p. 35: "In the manuscript is written: 'John Bowlin' was a foreman at a farm at Horkstow, and John Steeleye Span was waggoner under him. They fell out, and J. S. Span made these verses.' The text, however, seems to imply that Span was foreman over, or employer of, Bowlin'." - BS
Last updated in version 3.0
File: OSGr010

Horn Fair

DESCRIPTION: "As I was a-walking one morning in spring," the singer meets a girl on a horse going to Horn Fair. He asks to ride her horse. She would not be fit to be seen when she arrives. He says he is going there anyway. They aren't the only couple at the fair
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams)
KEYWORDS: horse travel sex
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond,South))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #92, "Horn Fair" (1 text, 1 tune) ADDITIONAL: Jacqueline Simpson, _The Folklore of Sussex_, B. T. Batsford, 1973, p. 125, "(As I was a-walking one fine summer morn)" (1 text)
Roud #2482
NOTES [80 words]: Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams gives a short history of Horn Fair (at Charleton, Kent), based on Captain Francis Grose's A Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue. The fair goes back to the early Middle Ages, and folklore says that it was established as a result of one or another early king being involved with a woman of the place then being discovered by her husband. Of this there is little proof, but the fair was real until it was shut down in 1874. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.2
Horn of the Hiram Q, The

 DESCRIPTION: Singer describes a whaling trip -- he was the best man aboard, and the "worst of them was you." Cho: "With a yo ho and there she blows; Steer for her tail and you'll fetch her nose, with a la-de-da, and a how d'ye do, and hark for the horn of the Hiram Q"

 AUTHOR: L. E. Richards
 EARLIEST DATE: 1945 (Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips)
 LONG DESCRIPTION: Mostly nonsense, written in dialect. Singer talks of a whaling voyage -- he was the best man aboard, and the "worst of them was you." Cho: "With a yo ho and there she blows; Steer for her tail and you'll fetch her nose, with a la-de-da, and a how d'ye do, and hark for the horn of the Hiram Q"

 KEYWORDS: whaler humorous nonballad nonsense

 FOUND IN: US

 REFERENCES (1 citation):
 Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 227-228, "The Horn of the Hiram Q" (1 text)

 Roud #9155

 NOTES [84 words]: I'm just guessing that this is a piece of composed poetry because it is in the section of Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips's book where he's including things like excerpts from the Wizard of Oz (see "Hurrah for Baffin's Bay"). The author is given as L.E. Richards and I couldn't make any further determination who that might be. However, it does not appear to be Laura E. Howe Richards (daughter of Julia Ward Howe). She wrote a good bit of poetry, but this piece doesn't seem to be one of hers. -SL

File: Harl227

Horncastle Fair

 DESCRIPTION: The singer meets a maid riding to Horncastle Fair. She rejects his offer to ride with her: she'll have nothing to do with a rogue. He claims to be an honest man and would not harm her if she allows him to ride with her. They marry

 AUTHOR: unknown

 EARLIEST DATE: 1892 (OShaughnessy-MoreFolkSongsFromLincolnshire)

 KEYWORDS: courting marriage rejection travel

 FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond))

 REFERENCES (1 citation):
 OShaughnessy-MoreFolkSongsFromLincolnshire 8, "Horncastle Fair" (1 text, 1 tune)

 Roud #21234

 NOTES [47 words]: O'Shaughnessy: "Lincolnshire's claim to this song lies in its subject matter. Horncastle Horsefair was once the largest of its kind in in the kingdom -- perhaps in the world. It was held in August, ran for three weeks and attracted dealers from the continent and from America." - BS

 Last updated in version 3.0

File: OSLi08

Hornet and the Peacock, The

 DESCRIPTION: "King George says [to the Peacock] 'To America go / The Hornet, the Wasp is the British king's foe.'" However, the Hornet defeats the Peacock: "The Peacock now mortally under her wing / Did feel the full force of the Hornet's sharp sting"

 AUTHOR: unknown
 EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio)

 KEYWORDS: sea battle

 HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
 1760-1820 - Reign of George III of Britain
 1812 - Battle between the U.S.S. Hornet and the H.M.S. Peacock off the coast of South America. The American ship won

 FOUND IN: US(MW)

 REFERENCES (2 citations):
Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 107, "The Peacock that Lived in the Land of King George" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
DT, HRNTPeak
Roud #5339
CROSS-REFERENCES:

NOTES [747 words]: What seems to be the most widely distributed text of this ballad runs, "The peacock that lived in the land of King George / His feathers were fine and his tail very large / He spread out his wings like a ship in full sail / And prided himself on the size of his tail... The hornet doth tickle the British bird's tail." Hornet and Wasp were American ships.

The Hornet was an 18-gun sloop with a complement of 144 men. Even before this battle, she had had a busy war; she was one of four ships (President, Congress, Argus, and Hornet) which on June 23 encountered the British Belvidera in the first naval conflict of the war, although the Belvidera escaped the trap (Utt, p. 65-66). Hornet's next voyage had her accompany the famous U.S.S. Constitution, but the two had separate off Bahia, where Captain Bainbridge of the Constitution ordered the Hornet to blockade the British Bonne Citoyenne. The Hornet stood guard from December 13, 1812 to January 24, 1813, but then had to flee when a British ship of the line, the Montagu, showed up (Heidler/Heidler, p. 243). She went out prowling for other prey.

The battle between U.S.S. Hornet and H.M.S. Peacock was strange. The Hornet was commanded by James Lawrence, a brash young officer barely in his thirties. On February 24, 1812, still cruising off Brazil, the 18-gun Hornet spotted H.M.S. Espiegle, another 18-gun ship, off Brazil (Borneman, p. 112).

Before the two ships could engage, another 18-gun brig, H.M.S. Peacock, showed up. Peacock, unlike Espiegle, wanted to fight. It was a bad decision; although nominally equivalent in strength to the Hornet, the American ship's guns were mostly 32-pound carronades (Utt, p. 194), which gave the Hornet a big edge in firepower at short range (although she was almost helpless at long). Plus the Peacock was a spit-and-polish ship, nicknamed "the yacht" becaue her captain William Peake kept her in such fine shape (Utt, pp. 194-196)-- but had neglected to properly train his crew for battle.

Peake apparently did not recognize the difference between discipline and actual training; he clearly thought he had a great ship and crew. The Peacock headed straight for the Hornet (there is a map on pl 195 of Utt, showing both ships approaching almost head-on), and paid for it; Peacock had to strike her colors after only a quarter of an hour, and Peake was killed (Utt, p. 196). And she was so badly damaged that Lawrence quickly abandoned the prize and took off Peacock's crew.

Through all this, the Espiegle sat behind the bar where she had hidden before the battle. The Hornet had taken some damage to her rigging, and was crowded with men from the Peacock; the Espiegle surely would have had a good shot at winning a single-ship battle -- and of course could have really helped Peacock had she come out earlier. But she didn't come out, and her Captain Taylor was court-martialed. The first court convicted him; a second court could not prove dereliction and so reversed the sentence, but he lost seniority (Utt, p. 197)

Lawrence's reward -- which he felt was overdue -- was a promotion to full captain (Utt, p. 199). That also meant he was due command of a frigate. The frigate he received (Borneman, p. 113) was the ill-fated U.S.S. Chesapeake (for its story, see the notes to "The Chesapeake and the Shannon (I)" [Laws J20]).

The Hornet would have one more big adventure in the War of 1812. In 1815, under the command of James Biddle, she was one of a small fleet blockaded in New York, but she and two other ships managed to run the blockade. In a hard battle fought after the war ended, she captured the H. M. S. Penguin, which then was scuttled. (Heidler/Heidler, pp. 243-244).

The Hornet was lost with all hands in 1829, but her success caused several later American ships to carry on her name. The loss of the ship seems to have been commemorated in a song, "The Loss of the Hornet" (Roud V850), found in the Forget-Me-Not Songster, but this does not seem to have made it into tradition.

