Soon after the disaster, the newspapers began their coverage (Jampoler, p. 184, says the first story appeared on Tuesday; the wreck was on a Saturday). The story quickly became the subject of headlines. A week after the disaster, at the request of the Foreign Office, the Admiralty sent Captain Henry Ducie Chads to investigate (Jampoler, p. 195). As often happens in these cases, Chads refused to blame anyone British (Jampoler, p. 198). But there were reports that the French locals had actually killed some of victims of the Amphitrite, which threatened diplomatic consequences (Jampoler, pp. 200-201. Jampoler, p. 206 and after, seems to think the charges against the locals true (at least the claims of looting, if not of murder) -- but his main evidence seems to be what happened to other wrecks. It sounds to me as if the French were simply following their rules about preventing smuggling, enforcing quarantine, and preventing looting (as described by Jampoler, p. 210). Jampoler, p. 230, thinks that William Hamilton, the British consul in Boulogne, should have ordered the ship evacuated, but that strikes me as a pretty strange thing to expect a diplomat to do.

In all, 85 bodies (not all of them identified) were buried in Boulogne, meaning that about fifty were not found. They were buried in mass graves. The surviving crewmen identified four of the crew: surgeon Forrester, the second mate, the cook, and one of the seamen. Four other adult men's bodies were recovered but not identified (Jampoler, pp. 238-239). The song is obviously correct in saying the Amphitrite had only three survivors; it is incorrect in saying that one later died. The rest of the details seem to be mostly true, from the little we can tell from the survivors' accounts, but despite its claims, the song is clearly not an account by one of the actual survivors.

In addition to this song, the wreck inspired a painting by N. E. Deey, "The Amphitrite Wreck'd off Boulogne Augt 31st 1833 (108 Females on Board)," which is reproduced on p. 141 of Jampoler and which can be seen at the Royal Museums Greenwich web site, as well as Joseph Mallord William Turner's much better-known, although unfinished painting, "A Disaster at Sea." - RBW

Loss of the Anglo Saxon

DESCRIPTION: "Gently o'er the swelling deep The noble vessel rolls... Within her bosom safely sleep 500 living souls." In the fog, the ship goes aground. The ship quickly goes aground. Those who reach "the cold, salt shore... send up their prayer of thanks"

AUTHOR: James Murphy?

EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Murphy, Songs of Our Land, Old Home Week Souvenir)

KEYWORDS: ship wreck disaster death
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Apr 27, 1863 - Wreck of the steamer Anglo-Saxon near Cape Race, Newfoundland

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
ADDITIONAL: James Murphy, compiler/publisher, "(Old Colony Song Book: Newfoundland)," James Murphy, 1904 (available from the Memorial University of Newfoundland web site; the cover is missing, but I suspect it is a copy of "Songs of Our Land"), p. 62, "Loss of the 'Anglo Saxon'" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Old Mayflower" (theme of wreckers) and references there

NOTES [760 words]: Murphy's text is printed without an attribution, and it's about a wreck which happened forty years before he published his book. He seems to want us to think it's a traditional piece. Yet I can find no other hint of the poem, and it doesn't sound like a folk song; the GEST songs site suggests that Murphy wrote it, and I suspect GEST is right. But because it is presented as anonymous and possibly traditional, I list it here.
I do find it interesting that the poem is absolutely generic; it never mentions the Anglo-Saxon or any other specific details.
Murphy claims that 155 of 445 aboard the Anglo Saxon were lost, but this may not be right. The ship was fairly new, having been built in 1860 and using both steam and sail. On her final trip, she carried a crew of 86, 48 cabin passengers, and 312 emigrants (Galgay/McCarthy, p. 17). She sailed from Liverpool to the Americas; her captain was named Burgess (Parsons, p. 38).
There was heavy fog as she sailed near Cape Race, but the captain still had steam up and a full load of sail. (Galgay/McCarthy, p. 17. Greene, p. 290, says that many ships visited the Cape Race area to drop off news for "news boats"; it claims that the Anglo-Saxon was in a great hurry to transmit its news as fast as possible. The ships, according to Parsons, pp. 33-35, dropped off the news in "message cylinders" with flags attached; the news boats would take them to Cape Race so telegraphers could transmit the date), Parsons, p. 38, contends that the Anglo Saxon was not going at full speed, but all agree that there was no time to stop when a lookout spotted breakers.
(There was a lighthouse at Cape Race, but it did not revolve, making it hard to spot in fog, and no foghorn; the first steam whistle was installed in 1872, according to Parsons, pp. 40-41.) According to Galgay/McCarthy and Parsons, the ship went ashore on Twin Rocks near Clam Cove, Newfoundland (just north of Cape Race near the southeast corner of the island), although Greene, p. 290, says it was at Chance Cove near St. John's. Baehre, p. 43, also says it was Clam Cove.
Attempts to hold the ship on the rocks with cables apparently did little good (Galgay/McCarthy, p.
18). Burgess soon had a hawser ashore, and passengers started to go ashore using baskets from the cable (Parsons, pp. 38-39). Some of these walked to Cape Race to pass out word of the disaster, and ships eventually arrived to rescue those they could. The lifeboats were launched, but there were too few and some were wrecked (Galgay/McCarthy, pp. 18-20). About an hour after hitting the rocks, the ship's structure disintegrated, with many people still aboard (Galgay/McCarthy, p. 20; Parsons, p. 39, says that such lifeboats as were in the water rescued a few of them).
Fox, p. 264, without saying how many were aboard, says that 237 were lost. Parsons, p. 39, says that "approximately 237" died. Galgay/McCarthy, p. 21, agrees with this figure, reporting that 209 people survived the wreck and 237 (including Captain Burgess) died. The total aboard almost agrees with Murphy's total for those on the ship (446 versus 445), but the number of casualties is obviously much higher. Greene's version says that 307 of 444 were lost, which is an even higher rate of loss but again almost agrees with the number of people aboard.
Even into the twentieth century, the Anglo Saxon wreck was considered to be the worst ever off of Cape Race, one of the most wreck-prone areas in the world (Parsons, p. 212).
"Reporting in sensational style, the Montreal Witness claimed that 500 wreckers had come to the scene and carried away every useful item. Even a local newspaper, in an article that was subsequently cited abroad, complained of the inhumanity of the Cape Race fisherfolk. Yet official evidence contradicted the press reports. Even if many people did come down to the shore at Cape Race to witness the wreck -- and the exact number remains unknown -- this group apparently also included officials and professional salvage workers. Moreover, the official record shows that, when the authorities arrived soon after the event, they found no desecration of the dead, but rather the decent burial by local people of over a hundred bodies interred in the frozen ground, with stones placed at their heads and feet.... Their courage in aiding the victims and their propriety toward the survivors and the dead were subsequently confirmed by dispassionate observers" (Baehre, pp. 43-44).
There is a book by Arthur Johnson, The Tragic Wreck of the Anglo Saxon. I have not seen it. -
Loss of the Antelope, The

DESCRIPTION: The Antelope sails from Chicago; on the second day out a gale arises. The cook, in the fore-rigging, freezes to death; the ship springs a leak and is wrecked. The captain tries to save his brother, but drowns; all but the singer are lost

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (collected from various informants by Walton)

KEYWORDS: death drowning ship shore work disaster storm wreck brother cook sailor worker

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
c. 1870: Antelope wrecked on the eastern shore of Lake Michigan, probably near Point Betsey?

FOUND IN: Canada(Ont)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, pp. 202-205, "The Shores of Michigan (The Antelope)" (1 composite text plus a fragment, 1 tune)

Roud #3840

RECORDINGS:
C. H. J. Snider, "The Loss of the 'Antelope'" (on GreatLakes1)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

NOTES [1232 words]: Scholars long found it hard to identify the ship in this song, since Wolff lists two Antelopes lost on Lake Superior alone, and there were others on the other Great Lakes. In 1879, a tug with that name was wrecked, probably near Marquette (Wolff, p. 29). A better candidate for this song would be the 187 foot schooner Antelope, built in 1861. On October 7, 1897, while carrying coal from Sandusky to Ashland, Wisconsin, she started taking on water (the guess is the seams of the old ship started to come apart). It was clear she would not survive, so the Henry W. Sibley, which was towing her, took off her crew (Wolff, pp. 77-78).

Keller, p. 55, has a chapter entitled "Antelope: A Name With A Curse." He notes that Antelope was a popular ship name, and claims that 13 Antelopes worked the Lakes in the 1890s: "seven schooners, two propellors, one brig, one scow, and one tug" -- but goes on to note that all of them capsized, foundered, burned, or was stranded.

Keller, who quotes a fragment of this song, describes the same 1897 wreck cited by Wolff above. He notes that this Antelope was originally built as a steamer but later converted to a schooner (although she still had a smokestack even after her engine was removed!). This increased her cargo capacity, but it can't have strengthened her structure. Keller has a picture on p. 56; it shows a typical 1860s design. It looks as if she would be very inefficient under sail. Keller, p. 57, does note that, although there was no storm at the time of her sinking, October 7, 1897 had featured rather high seas, and that the Sibley had been towing her at twelve miles per hour -- a high speed for a schooner, particularly an old one. And it is perfectly possible that there would be ice in the water around the Apostle Islands in October (Keller, p. 21, shows her going down just east of Michigan Island, on the eastern edge of the Apostles, almost due northeast of Ashland, Wisconsin).
Ratigan, p. 235, quotes the same version of this song as Keller. This version seems to be set on Lake Superior (as opposed to Lake Michigan in the Snyder and Walton version). On p. 236 he says that of the 13 ships named Antelope on the Great Lakes, two of them (both schooners) were lost in 1894. He therefore thinks the song should be associated with one of the 1894 wrecks. Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors adds even more to the confusion. Their version, extremely composite (at least four informants contributed parts) is clearly a Lake Michigan song as given (the ship sets out from Chicago). They do not try to locate the relevant Antelope. It appears to me that at least part of their version is based on "The Banks of Newfoundland (II)."

Yet one of their verses is quite similar to the Keller/Ratigan fragment. Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors even quotes that same text as a fragment of a different song from Lake Superior!

If there are in fact two songs (one presumably set on Lake Superior and one on Lake Michigan), then it seems likely that Walton accidentally combined verses from both. But I suspect that the Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors hypothesis is wrong; this is really one song, which was perhaps localized to various events. Whether it was inspired by an actual Antelope seemed questionable. (It is truly unfortunate that no one ever really tried to collect songs of Lake Superior sailors....)

That was as far as I was able to take things -- and it turns out that there was a lot more to be learned. Solomon Foster came to another conclusion, based solely on the Walton text. He suggests that the Antelope involved was a 3-masted schooner, 337 tons, built 1855 at Buffalo, New York, by a shipbuilder named Jones. It was driven ashore in a storm eight miles north of Saint Joseph, Michigan on November 20, 1857, with the loss of five lives. More information is available at http://greatlakeships.org/2901840/data?n=4. Foster's own investigation, including scans of three clippings from the Oswego Palladium newspaper, can be found at https://whiskyandwater.wordpress.com/2020/09/24/the-loss-of-the-antelope/, Mr. Foster points out that the story of this Antelope is a good match for the Walton text:

1. Oswego connection, which matches Walton's origin story for the song.
2. Location; ship was driven ashore was 8 miles north of St. Joseph, MI, which matches every location detail given in the song. (Except perhaps they would have been further north two days out of Chicago?)
3. Date: Database gives the date of the wreck as Nov 20th; the song gives it as Nov 18th.
4. Loss of life: song reports all but one of the crew, database reports five men lost.

There is also the fact that one of Walton's informants claimed that his father, Thomas Peckham, wrote the song. I suspected that, as with so many traditional singers, this meant "modified and perhaps wrote down." But possibly not. Foster's article transcribes the three newspaper pieces. I'll quote portions of them (see his web site for the full transcriptions):

November 28, 1857:
Loss of the Schooner Antelope -- The schooner Antelope, Capt. Geo. Budd, bound from Chicago to Oswego, with 14,000 bushels of wheat, was lost of Friday last, about eight miles north of St Joseph, and Capt. Budd and four of the crew perished. The Chicago Press contains the following particulars, obtained from Capt. Parker, of the schooner H. Rand:

"The Antelope was seen on Friday evening by Capt. Parker, running before the wind, in a southerly direction; but it appears that during the same evening she was driven ashore. The Captain and crew, as soon as she struck, made ever attempt to get ashore, but failed -- her small boat being carried away. Capt. Budd then determined to swim ashore, stripped and jumped into the water with a rope, but after several attempts he failed and had to be hauled on board again nearly dead. Shortly afterwards a wave washed him overboard and he was lost. During the course of the night three men of the crew were washed into the lake and met watery graves. The balance lashed themselves to the deck and rigging, where they were found by a party of men from St. Joseph, who reached the vessel with a scow.

"Five of the crew were found completely paralyzed with cold and wet, and almost dead. -- One they found lashed to the rigging, frozen to death....

"The Antelope will be a total loss. She was an A 1 vessel, owned by A. H. Hovey, Oswego, and valued at $11,000. We are informed that the Northwestern Insurance Company have risks on hull and cargo to the extent of $11,000."

November 30th, 1857/December 5th, 1857:
[The first of these is a report from the first mate about the survivors and losses. Besides the mate, four men were still alive, but one of them, Thomas Peckham, was not expected to live much longer. Five men were lost or frozen to death. The second is mentions several survivors -- including Peckam, who apparently made it after all. And, remember, Thomas Peckham was listed as writing] the song!
Foster's conclusion: "So what have we learned? I think we can be very certain the song was written about the November 20th, 1857 wreck. While there are minor discrepancies, if anything it seems surprising how closely oral tradition preserved the story from 1857 to Snider's recording in 1946, 89 years later!"
I think his work speaks for itself. - RBW

Bibliography

- Keller: James M. Keller, The "Unholy Apostles: Shipwreck Tales of the Apostle Islands, 1984
  (I use the 1989 Bookcrafters edition, which -- given the information on the spine and title page -- I suspect to be a private printing)
- Wolff: Julius F. Wolff Jr., Lake Superior Shipwrecks, Lake Superior Port Cities Inc., Duluth, 1990

Last updated in version 5.3
File: RcLoOTAn

Loss of the Atlantic (I), The

DESCRIPTION: "The loss of the Atlantic upon the ocean wave Where fully seven hundred souls met with a watery grave." Bound for New York, the captain "changed his course for Halifax which proved our overthrow.... she ran upon a rock"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA/Leach)
KEYWORDS: death drowning wreck storm
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Mar 31/Apr 1, 1873 - wreck of the Atlantic
FOUND IN: Canada (Newf)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
  Peacock, pp. 931-932, "The Loss of the Atlantic" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 241-243, "The Loss of the Atlantic" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Roud #3822
RECORDINGS:
  Pat Critch, "Loss of the Atlantic" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
  Joshua Osborne, "The Loss of the Atlantic" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
CROSS-REFERENCES:
  cf. "The Loss of the Atlantic" (II)
  cf. "The Loss of the Atlantic" (III)
  cf. "The Loss of the Atlantic" (IV)
  cf. "Never Go Back on the Poor"
NOTES [2570 words]: "The Atlantic was a famous four-masted iron vessel of the White Star fleet wrecked off the coast of Nova Scotia on March 31 and April 1 of 1873....[T]he records show a loss of 535" (Peacock). The Northern Shipwrecks database says the passengers were immigrants and 981 people were on board. - BS
Paine, p. 43, notes that the Atlantic was still quite new at the time of her disaster (completed 1871). Ritchie, p. 15, says that she had four masts and four 150 horsepower engines, giving her a speed of 12 knots. She was originally intended to sail to Chile, but the new White Star Line abandoned the idea quickly, and she never sailed that route. The fatal voyage was only her nineteenth.
Hatchard, p. 440, says she was 420 feet long and had a beam of just 41 feet -- in other words, she was very narrow for her length. This made her fast but not very stable. It also meant that she had a very large "sail" area against waves -- she could flex badly if she ran aground, which is exactly what happened to her. In addition to her engines, her full sailing rig was on four iron masts. The sails were often helpful, but they wouldn't be good for anything on this particular trip (though some survivors were able to stay in the rigging to avoid drowning). Hatchard also gives her a draft of 32 feet, which seems excessive.
The Atlantic, according to Brinnin, p. 249, sailed from Liverpool to New York (via Queenstown) on March 20, 1873. He reports 942 people aboard (as we shall see, this figure is subject to question) and enough coal to last 15 days. Fox, p. 246, notes however that there was a coal strike at the time, so she ended up being given less than her usual coal supply (927 tons, compared to 1155 tons on earlier voyages) -- plus the coal was a mix of Welsh and Lancaster coal. She usually used Welsh coal; the Lancaster type was less pure, faster-burning, and less useful for powering boilers. It was so bad that the chief officer told the captain that a hundred tons of it was just useless stone (Hatchard, p. 28). She usually burned 55-60 tons of Welsh coal a day (Hatchard, p. 120), and the voyage rarely exceeded twelve days, so it sounded like enough -- but the Lancaster coal was not the same.

She also reportedly had a "disorderly and infamous" crew and many officers who were not attentive to their tasks (Brinnin, p. 250); the good crew that she had had on her previous voyage had been dispersed because keeping them on would have required paying them while in port for a week (Hatchard, p. 27).

There seems to be some dispute about the captain's name. Ritchie, p. 15, says he was James A. Williams, and that the fatal voyage was his second with the Atlantic. Paine calls him John A. Williams. Hatchard, p. 25, and Brinnin's index call him James Agnew Williams. This is also the name used on p. 246 of Fox -- who adds that he had previously been dropped from another shipping company for drinking, but was hired by White Star because they were growing fast and needed experienced captains. One suspects he had been promoted too fast; White Star had hired him in 1871 as a second officer -- but, just two years later, he had risen to first officer and now captain (Hatchard, p. 31). He apparently wasn't entirely fit, either; an accident during an earlier storm had resulted in a badly broken leg and ribs, and left him with a severe limp and fatigue problems (Hatchard, pp. 25-26).

Whatever (dis)abilities, circumstances beyond his control caused much trouble. There was a gale in the mid-Atlantic which slowed her dramatically. After 11 days of storms, she was an estimated 400 miles from New York. The distance to Halifax was less than half that. And the supply of coal was short. Fox, p. 247, thinks the inexperienced chief engineer had run the engines inefficiently, and also doubts his estimate of the amount of coal remaining. But the Captain had to accept the data supplied by the engineers.

There was no immediate danger; there was enough food on the ship to last quite a bit longer. But steerage was over-booked and over-crowded, and disease was possible. Meanwhile, the barometer was falling (Hatchard, pp. 50-51). Williams had to balance a requirement for safety with the passengers' desire to reach their destination quickly.

Captain Williams at first tried to save the situation by reducing speed and ordering other measures to conserve coal (Fox, p. 247). If he had slowed the ship during the storm, it might have worked, but it was now too late; the ship simply wasn't making enough progress. Williams was forced to make a decision.

Paine reports that Captain Williams's decision to make for Halifax conformed to company regulations, and Fox, p. 247, says that both his chief officer and chief engineer agreed with him: The ship had burned too much coal to continue her run (Ritchie says she was down to 127 tons, and estimates she would need at least 130 to finish her voyage; Fox, p. 247, also reports the 127 ton figure). So she headed for Halifax (Hatchard, p. 52).

To this point, everything Williams had done was defensible. But what he did next was an undeniable mistake. They were close to Halifax, so -- presumably in an attempt to save as much time as possible and avoid penalties for a delayed arrival -- the Atlantic lit all her boilers and headed for Halifax at full speed (Fox, p. 248). The goal was to get there, coal up, and hurry to New York in time to make her scheduled return trip to Britain.

This meant that she could expect to get to Halifax -- a coast few of his crew knew, and where there would be few lights along the coast -- at night or, at best, very early in the morning. And it was early spring in Canada, meaning that it would be so cold that lookouts would have difficulties; apparently they didn’t even post any except on the enclosed bridge (Hatchard, p. 61).

Apparently the skies were still cloudy when Williams made his decision and set his course. Williams operated on dead reckoning, based on the compass and logged speeds. Later that evening, the clouds broke up, but he apparently did not recheck his bearings from the stars (which are of course more reliable, since wind and waves do not affect the speed). He could have checked his results by taking soundings -- but this would have slowed the ship, and he did not order it done (Fox, p. 248).

Ritchie thinks that, in the bad weather, Captain Williams misidentified a lighthouse and as a result misdirected the ship. This is not unlikely, given that many Newfoundland and Canadian lighthouses were under-powered. The wreck commissioners think there was a current which threw off his dead reckoning (Hatchard, p. 121). Whatever the explanation, the course was wrong by several degrees. And, having set a course, Williams took a nap. It was only supposed to last three hours (Fox, p.
It is unfortunate to note that a quartermaster at the helm had questioned the landmarks, but was ordered by the second officer to stay on course. The officer refused even to awaken the captain, despite him having given orders to be awakened during the night (Fox, p. 248; Hatchard, p. 61). During the night, they checked the ship's speed and found that she was doing twelve knots -- faster than anyone expected. Shortly after that, the quartermaster who had calculated the speed heard "breakers to port" (Hatchard, pp. 62-63). It was too late. Because of the navigation error, the Atlantic, instead of reaching Halifax, hit the coast some 20 miles from that port, near a hamlet called Lower Prospect (Hatchard, p. 84) along Pennant Bay.

The ship went aground around 3:00 a.m. near Marr's Island (Meagher's Head, on Point Prospect) east of Halifax. Her bow apparently was caught in a vice, so the bow was held in place while the stern was being battered by the waves (Fox, p. 248). She quickly began to settle. What happened next is debated; some claim that the real disaster came when one of her boilers blew up, causing her to roll over, casting many into the sea, and sink unusually quickly (Ritchie, p. 15. It sounds as if there were so many loud noises during her destruction that someone could easily have assumed one of them was a boiler going up). Because her nose was trapped, she sank by the stern, and quickly twisted over on her side (Fox, p. 249). Hatchard, p. 67, describes her tilting toward starboard, so the boats on the port side could not be lowered and the starboard side was being crushed both by water and the flex of the ship. This meant that even the parts still above water were exposed to wind and waves, making it almost impossible to operate the machinery on deck and exposing the people on board to the full violence of the very cold weather. Many people, especially on the starboard side, were trapped below the decks.

The waves swept away the port side lifeboats, and wrecked most of those on the starboard side. Only one made it into the water (Fox, p. 249). Some took shelter in the rigging, but this was hardly better than down below because of the wet and cold.

There was a rock some forty yards away -- windswept, wet, barely above the water's surface, but no one would be washed away. After an unsuccessful try, a sailor managed to carry a rope to it (Fox, pp. 249-250; Hatchard, pp. 79-80, credits Quartermasters Robert Thomas and William Purdy as the first to make it safely and bring the line). Men slowly crawled along the lifeline, with many lost in the attempt. The rock was small, and could hold only a few hundred. Others went on to Marr's Island, but the crossing there also went slowly. As the tide fell, the Atlantic snapped in two (Fox, p. 250); perhaps there were more boiler explosions (so Ritchie, p. 16).

It was a poorly inhabited region; according to the Hatchard, p. 89, only one family lived on Marr's Island at the time, and that was far from the headland where the survivors were. (Even today, it appears based on Google's photos that there are only four homes on the island.) There were a few more people along the mainland coast, but not many. Eventually local boats began to come out, but many locals were afraid to sail. It was some ten hours before rescue operations concluded (Fox, p. 250). At the end, the ship's Third Officer, Cornelius Brady, was the only one still strong enough to do anything, so Captain Williams (who was one of those rescued by Brady; Hatchard, pp. 92-93) sent him to Halifax to send a coded message to White Star (Hatchard, pp. 94-95). Chief Engineer John Foxley, despite possibly being responsible for Williams's earlier mistakes, helped to redeem himself by gathering a few men to walk to Halifax to get help -- there simply weren't enough supplies in the area to feed all the survivors! (Hatchard, p. 97).

About 250 people were saved -- all male and all but one an adult. (The one youngster was a twelve-year-old named John Hindley, who was one of the last people rescued.) The death of every woman and almost all the children aboard apparently became a source of controversy (understandably), but it does not seem to have been a matter of deliberate exclusion; men, being stronger, had a better chance of making it across the lifeline to the island (Fox, p. 250), and being larger, would also survive better in the cold. There are reports of at least a few women making it to shore alive (e.g. Hatchard, p. 92), but with no way to get warm, all died thereafter.

The losses are somewhat uncertain, because the purser and his records were lost, so we don't know how many people were aboard (Fox, p. 250). Paine lists as the extremes 454 lost out of 981 aboard to 560 of 931 aboard; Brinnin's figure is that 481 died. Ritchie, p. 15, also says that 481 died out of 931. Fox, p. 250, cites the high figure of 585. Preston, p. 56, says that over 500 were lost in this first great tragedy of the steam liner trade. Hatchard never really analyzes the losses, but on p. 117 says in passing that 535 were lost, a number apparently derived from the official tribunal finding (printed on pp. 118-126) which on p. 119 says 535 were lost "I believe" (so the tribunal didn't know) out of 957 thought to be on board. On pp. 127-140 Hatchard lists those thought to have been aboard and those who survived. This does not, however, account for stowaways -- I read somewhere that someone claimed there were fourteen.
Preston quotes a contemporary account: "A large mass of something drifted past the ship on the top of the waves, and then it was lost to view in the trough of the sea. As it passed by a moan -- it must have been a shriek but the tempest dulled the sound -- seemed to surge up from the mass, which extended over fifty yards of water: it was the women. The sea swept them out of the steerage, and with their children, to the number of 200 or 300, they drifted thus into eternity."

Captain Williams -- who had been asleep at the time of the wreck; he had given orders to be awakened, but the orders were not obeyed (Brinnin, p. 251) -- was found guilty of negligence, but his license was suspended for only two years based on his gallant conduct during the rescue operations (Brinnin, p. 253; Hatchard, p. 125, has the recommendation and says elsewhere that Williams returned to White Star. Fourth Officer Brown, who refused to wake up Williams, was suspended for three months; Hatchard, p. 126).

Williams was certainly guilty of a navigation error, but Fox would distribute the blame more widely; he blames the chief engineer for mismanaging the engines -- and White Star for being too cheap to supply either enough good coal or an abundance of cheap coal.

Incidentally, the Atlantic of 1873 should not be confused with another Atlantic, the Collins Line steamer launched in 1849. This ship had a major mechanical breakdown in 1851, and was for a time thought to have vanished, but made it home under sail after much delay (Brinnin, pp. 182-184). The second Atlantic was not exactly a replacement for the first, but the decommissioning of the earlier ship after the American Civil War made the name "available" for the new liner. There was also a paddleboat named Atlantic which collided with the Ogdensburg on Lake Erie in 1852, and sank with the loss of some 250 lives (she was crowded with immigrants, and no one knows exactly how many died; for background, see Bourrie, pp. 77-83).

Despite this tragedy, the period after the sinking of the Atlantic was the glory time for the transatlantic steamers, and it was also a relatively safe period. There would not be another such disaster for almost forty years, when a certain ship called the Titanic set out on her maiden run.

She too, we note, was a White Star liner.

There is an SS Atlantic Heritage Park, and a Park Society, based on the Lower Prospect peninsula, but it isn't actually at the wreck site. - RBW

For two different 1873 broadsides on the same subject see:

- Bodleian, Harding B 13(234), "Verses on the Wreck of the Atlantic" ("Oh, pray give attention and listen to me "), unknown, 1873 [text refers to the wreck as having occurred after "the steamer Atlantic ... left Liverpool upon the 20th ult"].

- Bodleian, Firth c.26(289), "Lines on the loss of the 'Atlantic'" ("Oh! listen you wives and mothers"), unknown, 1873 [text refers to a "List of the passengers, from the Manchester Courier, April 4th, 1873"] - BS

Note that Roud lumps all the Atlantic songs, but their form shows that they are distinct. - RBW

Bibliography

- Bourrie: Mark Bourrie, Many a Midnight Ship: True Stories of Great Lakes Shipwrecks, University of Michigan Press, 2005
- Hatchard: Keith A. Hatchard, The Two Atlantics: The Shipwreck of the SS Atlantic at Prospect, NS April 1, 1873, Nimbus Press, 1981
- Preston: Diana Preston, Lusitania: An Epic Tragedy (Walker, 2002; I use the 2003 Berkley edition)

Last updated in version 6.1

File: Pea931

Loss of the Atlantic (II), The

DESCRIPTION: "Of the gallant ship Atlantic Wrecked on Nova Scotia's shore." "The captain... heeded not that rocky coast That he was drawing near"
Loss of the Atlantic (III), The

DESCRIPTION: Atlantic sails from Liverpool for Halifax with a crew of 60 and 900 passengers. It strikes a rock at night. The captain is faulted: "he cared not for our safety as you may plainly see He went to bed and left the ship to prove our destiny." All are lost

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast)
KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship wreck sailor
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Mar 31/Apr 1, 1873 - wreck of the Atlantic
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, pp. 88-89, "The Loss of the Atlantic" (1 text)
Roud #3822
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Loss of the Atlantic" (I)
cf. "The Loss of the Atlantic" (II)
cf. "The Loss of the Atlantic" (IV)
NOTES [29 words]: For extensive historical notes on the Atlantic wreck, see the notes to "The Loss of the Atlantic" (I). Observe that there were in fact hundreds of survivors of the wreck. - RBW
File: Ran088

Loss of the Atlantic (IV), The

DESCRIPTION: Atlantic stops at Queenstown "to bring Erin's sons and daughters to wild Amerikay." One night "and they all in bed, When our gallant ship she struck a rock at a place called The Major's Head ... seven hundred souls were buried in the main"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1948 (Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast)
KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship wreck sailor
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Mar 31/Apr 1, 1873 - wreck of the Atlantic
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, pp. 89-90, "The Loss of the Atlantic" (1 text)
Roud #3822
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Loss of the Atlantic" (I)
cf. "The Loss of the Atlantic" (II)
cf. "The Loss of the Atlantic" (III)
NOTES [26 words]: For extensive historical notes on the Atlantic wreck, see the notes to "The Loss of the Atlantic" (I). Observe that this version exaggerates the losses. - RBW
Loss of the Barbara and Ronnie, The

DESCRIPTION: "In the spring of fifty-one" Walter Bond commands the "Barbara Ann Ronney from Petites in Newfoundland." Sailing home near Christmas they are caught and sank with a crew of five sharemen when "on the eighteenth of December the winter hurricane blew"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Peacock)

KEYWORDS: death drowning ship sea storm wreck moniker

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 937-938, "The Loss of the Barbara Ann Ronney" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9813

NOTES [24 words]: The Barbara and Ronnie was missing and presumed sunk in Glace Bay in the Gulf of St Lawrence December 18, 1951 (Northern Shipwrecks Database). - BS

File: Pea937

Loss of the Bruce, The

DESCRIPTION: "The Bruce was bound for Louisburg, the night being dark and drear ... Captain Drake stood on the bridge ... the Bruce with mail and passengers she ran upon a reef." All except "young Pike" are saved.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Peacock)

KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship wreck rescue

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Mar 1911 - The wreck of the Bruce

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 939-940, "The Loss of the Bruce" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9937

RECORDINGS:
Jim Dalton, "The Loss of the Bruce" (on PeacockCDROM)

NOTES [1094 words]: The Bruce was stranded on Port Nova Reef off Cape Breton Point and crushed in the ice on March 24, 1911 going from Port aux Basques, Newfoundland to Louisbourg Nova Scotia. A steamship ferry, it had 123 passengers (Northern Shipwrecks Database). - BS

The Bruce was one of the first members of the "Alphabet Fleet" (for which see "The Wreck of the Steamship Ethie"); they were Newfoundland vessels given names alphabetically after places in Scotland (so Argyle, Bruce, Clyde, Dundee, etc.) and intended to bring steam ferry service to coastal outports. The service was set up along with the Newfoundland railway, a government-sponsored but privately-owned service intended to improve internal communications and industry on the island. (It was not a financial or economic success, but that's another story.)

The Bruce, although not the first ship on the alphabetical list, actually went into service before the railroad contract was finalized and the rest of the fleet completed, (Penney/Kennedy, p. 94), yet was one of the most closely connected to the railroad. (For more on the Newfoundland Railroad in general, see the notes to "The Wreck of the Steamship Ethie," "The Bonavist Line," "Downey's Our Member," and "Drill, Ye Heroes, Drill!") The ship was put in service once the Newfoundland railway reached Port-aux-Basques in southwest Newfoundland; built in Scotland, it was to supply sea cargo for the train (DictNewfLabrador, p. 287), and in fact was beat the train into service, arriving in Newfoundland on Oct. 13, 1897 (Penney, p. 63) and being present when the first train reached the coast on June 30, 1898 (Bruce, p. 13; Penney, p. 63; Lingard, p. 53, says she left at 11:50 p.m.; Harding, p. 138, says this was 65 minutes after the train arrived). She was the first regular connection between Newfoundland and the mainland (recall that Newfoundland was still an independent dominion at this time), and Sydney, Nova Scotia, at the far end of the link, became a boom town as a result, tripling in size (Bruce, pp. 12-13).

The Bruce also carried the mail; it is ironic to note that the trains had an on-board post office to prepare mail for shipping (Harding, p. 134), given that the Bruce kept its schedule pretty well and the train rarely did.

According to Connors, p. 6, the Bruce was built by A. & J. Inglis of Glasgow; she was 237 feet long and of 1155 gross tons. The Bruce kept such a regular schedule that she became a byword. England, p. 249, recounts that sealers reckoned short periods of time based on her schedule: "Sometimes for short periods, however, they count by 'Bruces'; i.e. trips by the steamship Bruce... As for example: 'I come over six bruces ago.'" (There was a second Bruce built after the first was lost, which perhaps helped maintain this tradition even in the years after she was lost.) She became such an institution that, "In fond rememberance, her likeness appeared on the labels of the whiskey, Old Bruce, sold in government liquor stores" (O'Neill, p. 976).

According to Hanrahan, p. 2, the Bruce was designed to use both steam and sail. On her first voyage, she managed an impressive 15.5 knots (comfortably more than the ten knots she is credited with in the song). She was strengthened to deal with Newfoundland's icy conditions (she was the first ship to sail in and out of Sydney all year rather than shutting down for the winter; Bruce, p. 33), but still was considered a luxurious liner.

It was estimated that, in her career, she made two thousand round trips and carried about 350,000 passengers. She also carried most of the mail between Newfoundland and Canada. It appears she had only two captains in her career, P. Delaney, who had overseen her construction and stayed with her until her last year (Bruce, p. 32) and Richard Drake, who obviously is the "Captain Drake" of the first verse.

The Bruce had a hard time setting out on her final voyage; the weather in 1911 had been very bad (as the song says, it was "dark and drear."), and passengers reported a lot of water in the ship. Apparently it was some time before Captain Drake was given his orders to sail from Port aux Basques. But visibility was very poor because of heavy snow, and a lookout had mistaken one lighthouse for another. Captain Drake thought he knew where he was, but he was wrong, and he ran the Bruce on a reef and tore out her bottom (Hanrahan, p. 141).

She was only about 150 feet from shore, on the east coast of Nova Scotia (the nearest town of any size, Main-a-Dieu, was about two miles away; Hanrahan, p. 142). But it was hard to get the passengers off the ship in the storm and heavy seas. The good news is that casualties were light -- William Pike drowned (the "Young Pike" of the song), and initially there were reports that a fellow named "Shea" was also lost, but "Shea" seems not to have actually existed; he was reported as a casualty based on confused accounts by the passengers (Hanrahan, pp. 142-143; Connors, p. 6, and Harding, p. 139, nonetheless report that two people were lost). But it took quite a while to get the survivors out of the horrid conditions; indeed, it took the lifeboats several trips just to get all the people to shore (Hanrahan, pp. 145-146), and of course most of the cargo was lost. Hanrahan, pp. 178-179, has a full list of the passengers who were on the Bruce on her final voyage.

A new Bruce (which looked surprisingly similar to the old one) was put into service in 1912 but was sold to Russia in 1915 (Connors, p. 10), presumably because she was well-built and would make a good icebreaker; Russia -- with its Baltic and Black Sea ports closed off by Germany and Turkey respectively, leaving them only the icy ports on the White Sea as a way to receive shipments from the western allies -- bought at least eight Newfoundland ships in that period for this purpose (Candow, p. 45).

There is a photo of the Bruce in her wrecked state on p. 8 of Connors, and photos of the intact ship in the photo insert following p. 79 of Bruce, on p. 53 of Lingard, on p. 51 of Penney, and on p. 94 of Hanrahan (a larger version of which is on p. 6 of Connors), with a note saying that it was taken from one of Gerald Doyle's postcards. I'm surprised this piece didn't go into one of his songbooks. Harding has that same publicity photo on p. 133, plus photos on pp. 138-139 of her waiting for the trains.

It's interesting to note that the third ship to take up the Sydney/Port-aux-Basques route, the Caribou, also has a song; see "The Loss of the Caribou." - RBW

Bibliography

- Bruce: Harry Bruce, Lifeline: The Story of the Atlantic Ferries and Coastal Boats, Macmillan of Canada, 1977
- Connors: William Connors, By the Next Boat: A Photo History of Newfoundland Coastal Boats, Johnson Family Foundation, 2002
- England: George Allan England, Vikings of the Ice: Being the Log of a Tenderfoot on the Great Newfoundland Seal Hunt (also published as The Greatest Hunt in the World),
Doubleday, 1924

- Lingard: Mont Lingard (with photos by Mike Shufelt), Next Stop: Wreckhouse; More Chats, Stats and Snaps of the Newfoundland Railway, Mont Lingard Publications, 1997

Last updated in version 6.0
File: Pea939

Loss of the Caribou, The

DESCRIPTION: The steamship Caribou is torpedoed and sunk and passengers are lost. "Here at Channel ... widows and sweethearts and orphans cry and fret" Most of the men "belonged to" Port-aux-Basques. "The funeral was the largest ever known here"

AUTHOR: unknown (listed as by Mrs. Peter Musseau by Thornhill)

EARLIEST DATE: 1945 (Thornhill, _It Happened In October_)

KEYWORDS: grief war travel death drowning funeral commerce sea ship shore disaster wreck religious children family orphan

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Oct 14, 1942 - The ferry Caribou was torpedoed by a German submarine going from North Sydney Nova Scotia to Port aux Basques, Newfoundland; 137 lives lost. (per Guigné, Northern Shipwrecks Database)

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
- Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 244-246, "The Loss of the Caribou" (1 text, 1 tune)

ADDITIONAL: H. Thornhill, _It Happened in October: The Tragic Sinking of the S. S. Caribou_, no publisher listed, 1945, pp. 61-63, "(Come old and young, come rich and poor)" (1 text)
- Douglas How, _Night of the Caribou_, Lancelot Press, 1988, p. 144, "(Remember the Caribou)" (1 excerpt, from H. Thornhill's _It Happened In October_ [mis-identified as _It Happened One Night_], plus three other pieces from the same source)
- Harry Bruce, _Lifeline: The Story of the Atlantic Ferries and Coastal Boats_, Macmillan of Canada, 1977, p. 47, "(no title)" (1 partial text, also from _It Happened In October_)
- Roud #18200

RECORDINGS:
- Ernest Poole, "The Caribou" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Spancil Hill" (tune)

SAME TUNE:
The Swiler's Song (File: RySm144)

NOTES [4421 words]: Channel is a town once separate from the town of Port-aux-Basques, at the southwest corner of Newfoundland. - BS

The combination is now known as Channel-Port aux Basques (How, p. 142), but it appears that most of the crew of the Caribou came from Channel, the English part of town.

Wikipedia has a medium-sized entry ("SS Caribou") which, as of January 2018, had no photo but an extensive set of references, mostly to magazine articles or books which mentioned the ship only briefly. There is one relatively accessible book, How's, specific to the tragedy, plus a graphic novel for children, Jennifer Morgan, Almost Home: The Sinking of the S. S. Caribou, which I have not seen. There is also an historical novel by Kevin Major, Land Beyond the Sea. In addition, the well-known Newfoundland writer Cassie Brown published a book The Caribou Disaster, which was later republished (with some pretty irrelevant additions) as Writing the Sea. It contains a reprint of a newspaper article about the Caribou tragedy, but it is short and doesn't say anything not covered in How's book (or indeed in the Wikipedia article), although it has a few photos I haven't seen.
elsewhere; her account is all human interest stories.

More important, as the first book to publish this song, is H. Thornhill's It Happened in October: The Tragic Sinking of the S.S. Caribou, which however extremely hard to find -- and is a truly crummy book, a small format collection of facts and recollections without any real organization. Sources can't even seem to agree if it was published in 1945 or 1954, although the front page says explicitly that it was published in November 1945. As a history, it is extremely incomplete; it was written before the German records were available to prove that a submarine has sunk the Caribou, and it doesn't even discuss the escort, but it has some use for learning about how people felt at the time since it consists largely of accounts by survivors and witnesses (Bruce, p. 51).

Bruce, p. 47, claims that the Caribou was "the biggest, fastest, toughest, most reliable, and best-loved ferry that had ever sailed between Port-aux-Basques and North Sydney. She was some sweet ship." She had been built in 1925 to symbolize that (in 1923) Newfoundland had finally taken over the Newfoundland Railway and its associated coastal steamers (Connors, p. 48; How, p. 30; for a bit more on the fantastically improbable story of the Railway and the "Alphabet Fleet," see "The Wreck of the Steamship Ethie").

The Caribou was a large car ferry ("car" meaning "railroad car"; there were very few automobiles, or passable roads, in Newfoundland at the time); she was capable of carrying fifty cars (Harding, p. 140; Lingard, p. 54). Her run went from Sydney in Nova Scotia to Port aux Basques in southwest Newfoundland, a 96 mile trip (How, pp. 26–27); this is where Newfoundland is closest to mainland Canada (excluding the almost unpopulated areas of Canada north of the St. Lawrence), and remains a ferry route today. Connors, p. 50, says she was 276 feet long and 2222 tons; Bruce, p. 48, says she cost $600,000, was 265 feet long and 41 feet wide, was 2200 tons, was designed to break ice, and could steam at 14.5 knots; Harding, p. 140, mixes these figures, giving her length as 265 feet, her width as 41 feet, and 2222 gross tons, a figure also quoted by CuffEtAl, p. 1; Thornhill, p. 12, makes her 265 feet long, 40 feet wide, 2200 tons but gives no speed. Her 14.5 knot speed meant that, at top speed, she could cross between Nova Scotia and Newfoundland in about six hours, not counting the time navigating the harbors (where submarine attack was unlikely), although apparently the usual crossing time was eight hours (How, p. 33). She could carry 400 passengers (150 of them in first class), and she had facilities to keep them occupied during the crossing. She was built by A. Goodwin-Hamilton S. Adamson Limited of Rotterdam (CuffEtAl, p. 1; Thornhill p. 12).

Newfoundland was so happy to have her that they actually issued a two cent stamp with a picture of her and a caption that read "S.S. CARIBOU 9 HOURS TO SYDNEY N. S." (reproduced on CuffEtAl, p. 2). Like most of Newfoundland's best ships, the Caribou once served as a sealer in the spring before resuming her regular duties; in 1935, under Billy Winsor (for whom see "Capt. Frederick Harris and the Grates Cove Seal Killers of 1915"), she took the most seals of any ship in the fleet -- often a sign that she handled well in the ice. But that was her only sealing voyage (my guess is that this is because she had limited coal capacity; Ryan-Last, p. 219, says she only had enough bunker capacity to hold the coal for her trip between ports, so the sailors spent most of her sealing trip moving coal from odd corners). She had proved highly reliable, having only one accident in seventeen years (she had run aground in fog in on August 18, 1930, but everyone survived and she was soon back in service; Bruce, p. 49; Harding, p. 140).

American histories of the Battle of the Atlantic rarely mention the war in Canadian waters, but as Britain derived more and more help from Canada, and became more and more dependent on Newfoundland (not yet part of Canada) as a naval base, the region around Newfoundland and the Maritimes became the site of the naval Battle of the St. Lawrence. The first major casualty was the British freighter Nicoya, sunk on May 11, 1942, by the U-533 (How, p. 18). Over the next half a year, the U-boats sank dozens of ships in the area.

Canada was ill-prepared; only two ships had been sunk by the Germans in Canadian waters in World War I, so Canada had very little naval strength (Sarty, p. 9; Milner, p. 71, says that she had just six modern destroyers before the war, and they mostly served in convoy escort, and no ability to build more); in the early years of the war, Canada had to accept what Britain gave it. Things were so desperate that, as late as 1942, Canada was still using minimally-modified yachts as antisubmarine craft! (Sarty, p. 64).

The Caribou was important enough to rate an escort, but all that was available was a minesweeper, the Grandmère a member of the Bangor class (How, p. 26). The big advantage of the Bangors was that they could be built by Canada's rather limited shipbuilding industry rather than calling for the more advanced construction facilities of a British naval shipyard (Sarty, p. 31); by using them, Canada was using its own ships for submarine defense. Even these relatively simple ships were a strain for the Canadian yards (Sarty, p. 59); it took a while for the ships to come into service. The whole class was new (built in the 1940s); Grandmère herself was commissioned in December 1941 and had had a lot of work done even after that (indeed, her main wireless conked out when she most needed it; How, p. 66, and her engines had failed in the first two weeks of her career; Macpherson, p. 51), but many in the class had the old triple expansion engines rather than the more powerful turbines (a third sequence had diesel engines), and were armed with only a single 3-inch gun plus a handful of light anti-aircraft guns (Jane's, p. 69). Their wartime crew consisted of six officers and 77 men (Macpherson, p. 46). Worth, p. 121, calls their anti-submarine capabilities "modest" -- but the submarine threat was so great that the Bangors were pressed into the role despite their severe limits. At least they had depth charges and ASDIC (sonar), although a request to install a radar set in the Grandmère had been turned down because the supply was too constrained (How, p. 40).

The Grandmère was commanded by 32-year-old Lieutenant James Cuthbert (How, p. 26), who was a member of the Royal Canadian Naval Volunteer Reserve (Greenfield, p. 183) -- meaning that he wasn't even part of the "regular" reserve, but was a merchant sailor who had a few classes in naval affairs (Greenfield, pp. 163-164; based on Sarty, p. 9, members of this group sometimes hadn't even trained on a ship). For more about the RCNVR, see the notes to "Roll Along Wavy Navy"; they were the second string reserve, behind the Royal Canadian Naval Reserve, meaning that a lot of them were farm boys fresh from the fields. Cuthbert had sea experience; hardly anyone else aboard the Grandmère did (How, p. 41). In a way, the crew was lucky even to have someone as raw as Cuthbert; the immense expansion of the Canadian navy meant that, at this stage, there simply wasn't enough cadre to properly officer the ships.

The Caribou was thus considerably older, and larger, than her guardian.

For the last fourteen of her seventeen years, the Caribou's commander had been Benjamin Taverner (How, p. 31. "Taverner" is How's, Galgay/McCarthy's, and Greenfield's spelling; Hanrahan and Thornhill spell it "Tavernor." The newspaper article on p. 49 of Connors also spells it "Tavernor," but with a "[sic]," so Connors clearly accepts the spelling "Taverner"). He was only the third captain the ship had ever had (Galgay/McCarthy, p. 63). A Newfoundland born in Trinity (Thornhill, p. 18), he was 62 years old in 1942, and approaching retirement; as early as the 1910s, he had been responsible for various marine rescues as captain of the SS Kyle (Hanrahan, pp. 72-77). By 1942, he had two of his sons as junior officers -- Stanley Taverner, 32, was his first mate; 22-year-old Harold Taverner is his third mate (How, p. 32; the plan was Stanley Tavernor to take over the ship when his father retired; Bruce, p. 56). None of them would survive the disaster. Nor were the Taverners the only sailing family to be hit hard; the large fraction of the Caribou's crew from Port-aux-Basques, the Caribou's home port, and nearby Channel saw to that (How, p. 32). The passengers on the ship included six infants of no more than two years old, and five other children under the age of ten (How, p. 53).

Ironically, the ship had been rebuilt and strengthened just a few months before, and had better lifesaving equipment than at any time in her career. That's more, Captain Taverner took the lifeboat drills seriously (How, p. 33), and was serious about keeping her blacked out. He knew he had reason to worry; four days earlier, Oberleutnant Ulrich Graf's U-69 had sunk another vessel, the Carolus, which was about the same size as the Caribou and in a convoy with a heavier escort, in Canadian waters (How, p. 35). The Caribou did not manage to practice good "smoke discipline" about the smoke from her funnel, though, and apparently Captain Taverner wasn't happy about sailing at night (How, p. 46; according to How, pp. 130-132, etc., this eventually became a political hot potato regarding who gave the order and why. It's an interesting question: by sailing at night, the authorities made it harder for a submarine to spot the ship -- but they also made it harder for the ship and her escort to see the submarine, and it meant that the two Canadian ships could not see each other or conduct an efficient rescue. My personal feeling is that ships were safer at night, but that this was offset by the fact that everyone would be sleepy and inefficient).

Lieutenant Cuthbert of the Grandmère often tried to get to know the commanders of the ships he escorted, but he had never met Ben Taverner (How, p. 44). Did it matter? Who knows? The two ships left port at about 8:00 p.m., the Grandmère first (How, p. 44). They rendezvoused around 9:30, and began zigzagging at a speed of 12-13 knots (How, p. 46). It was known there were submarines in the area; U-69 called home a lot, and the signals were detected (Sarty, p. 196). But in the darkness, the Grandmère had no way to spot a submarine near the surface; ASDIC only worked on subs below a certain depth, and as mentioned, the Grandmère had no radar. Plus the mix of hot and cold water, and fresh and salt, in the mouth of the St. Lawrence made ASDIC less than reliable. What's more, doctrine said that the Caribou should sail in front, so the noise of her propellers meant that the Grandmère ASDIC couldn't search forward (How, p. 62). And the blacked-out ships were not supposed to contact each other by wireless or blinker (How, p. 60); Captain Taverner didn't even know where his escort was located.
Not a good situation when facing a skilled opponent like Graf; the U-69's skipper was still in his twenties, but he had been in the navy for seven years, and was smart and skilled enough to have risen through the enlisted ranks to become an officer. And he had won the Iron Cross, both first and second class (How, pp. 49-50).

U-69 itself was a Type VII C U-boat, the most common U-boat class of the war (in fact, according to Bagnasco, p. 65, she was the very first boat of type C of class VII, although of course there had been many Type A and Type B boats before her). Bagnasco, p. 62, describes these boats as 769 tons surfaces, 871 tons submerged, with a length of 218 feet 3 inches (making them rather small by World War II standards; they were well-armed but very cramped). Listed speed was 17.6 knots on the surface, 7.6 submerged; they had a surface range of 8500 miles at 10 knots, and 130 miles at 2 knots submerged. They had four forward torpedo tubes, one stern tube, and normally carried 14 torpedoes. They originally typically had a 3.4" main gun and some antiaircraft guns, but many changed their main weapons during the war.

The U-69 picked a great time to attack if it wanted to cause civilian casualties -- it was around 3:30 a.m. (How, p. 58, although the three ships involved all logged somewhat different times), and the Caribou so close to Newfoundland that she was soon to stop zigzagging as she prepared to go into the harbor -- if indeed she hasn't already straightened out her course (How, pp. 59, 115). So everyone who could get to sleep probably was asleep.

Not surprisingly, U-69 had a hard time identifying her targets with much precision -- she guessed the Caribou to be 6500 tonnes, three times her actual displacement. But Graf correctly identified the lead ship as a freighter/passenger vessel, and the second as a warship (How, p. 61). He fired a single torpedo, which hit the Caribou amidships (How, p. 63). Her boilers apparently exploded soon after; she went down very quickly (How, p. 72).

Some have regarded this as an atrocity, but it should be stressed that many passenger ships were converted to wartime use; there was no way for Graf to know there were civilians aboard. And she carried military cargo -- and reportedly was carrying as much freight as was legally allowed, which might have hastened her sinking (Greenfield, p. 185).

The Caribou's lifeboats were little use. Some were smashed. Those in the rear, since they had not been swung out, survived -- but passengers filled them before they could be swung out, meaning that they could not be launched! (How, p. 73). Only two would make it into the water (How, p. 74). And one boat did not have its seacocks in place -- in other words, it had holes in it! (How, p. 82). Fortunately it hauled a Newfoundlander aboard, and he straightened things out (How, p. 83).

The best guess is that it was only four to five minutes from the time the torpedo hit to the time the Caribou went down (How, p. 76). This means that we don't really have much knowledge about what happened aboard during those few minutes; many lives were lost, and survivors didn't have much time to see what happened, and memories of such stressful events are often inaccurate. To add to the problems of the survivors, they were in northern waters in October. Best guess is that the air temperature was 46 degrees F when the Caribou went down (How, pp. 92-93). Not too bad, for that time of night at that time of year. People who never went into the water could survive that. Those who got wet -- either from sea or spray -- would have a harder time.

The wind made it worse. It was 12 miles per hour at the time of the torpedoing; it rose to about 20 miles per hour over the next several hours. Passengers in the boats avoided the wind and covered themselves as best they could (How, p. 100).

Convoy doctrine said that, in the event a ship was damaged, the escorts should not attempt a rescue; their job was to go after the submarine. So that was what the Grandmère did. The escort could see U-69, and headed for her at top speed; apparently Lt. Cuthbert wanted to ram (How, p. 67). Graf could perhaps have escaped on the surface, or even won a surface battle -- his ship was slightly faster than the Grandmère, with a top speed of 17 knots (although it would take time to get up to speed), and it also had a heavier main gun -- indeed, it was the larger of the two vessels (Worth, p. 69). But, in the dark, Graf couldn't tell details of the Grandmère; what he knew is that an escort was coming for him, and he chose to dive rather than fight (How, pp. 72-73). The Grandmère dropped a series of depth charges without hitting U-69 (How, p. 78). The submarine then headed for where the Caribou sank, correctly anticipating that the Grandmère could not track, and would not attack, it there, where the survivors were gathered (How, pp. 85, 92-93). The Grandmère never did get an ASDIC trace. She hunted for at least eighty minutes, and possibly as much as two hours, but never located the U-69 (How, p. 95). At the end of that time, she gave up and went to rescue the Caribou survivors. This of course meant that U-69 could have sunk her too -- but Lt. Cuthbert correctly guessed that the sub was not hunting in the area any more. As it turns out, it was staying down -- because it can't hear the Grandmère's ASDIC! (How, p. 97).

Around 6:00, as it grew light, the Royal Canadian Air Force sent out a plane to search for survivors (How, p. 98); sadly, the plane and ship seem to have had trouble communicating (How, p. 100).
Another plane, and four navy ships, joined them later (How, p. 106). But most of the rescues were done by the Grandmère, which picked up its first survivors around 6:30 (How, p. 99). At about the same time, small craft started to set out from Port aux Basques despite the worsening seas (How, p. 101). The town prepared a makeshift hospital for the survivors that were expected shortly (How, p. 103) -- although the Navy, being the Navy, ordered the Grandmère to make for Sydney rather than nearby Port aux Basques. (Given that Port aux Basques didn't have electricity or running water at that time -- Greenfield, p. 191 -- that may have been for the best.) The authorities also try to keep the whole thing quiet -- but it seems that everyone knew (How, p. 110-111). It could hardly be kept secret at Port aux Basques, since bodies start to arrive there on the following evening (How, pp. 113-115).

There is some uncertainty as to how many were aboard; Galgay/McCarthy, p. 63, and Sarty, p. xxi, say 237; Andrieux and Lingard, p. 54, say 238; but most of the other writers give totals that add up to 240 (plus or minus one).

The total losses are listed as 136 by How and by Bercuson, p. 95; Bruce, p. 55, Galgay/McCarthy, p. 66, Greenfield, p. 182, Andrieux, p. 121, and Ryan/Drake, p. 43, say 137 were lost; this is also the figure in the newspaper article quoted on p. 49 of Connors; Sarty, p. xxi, implies 134 casualties (but this may refer to those who died in the water, excluding the two survivors who died after rescue). CuffEtAl, p. 5, break down the dead as 48 civilian passengers; 20 navy, 12 army, and 18 air force personnel; eight American military, and 31 crew, for a total of 137. Thornhill, pp. 33-35, gives a list of 105 who were lost and 100 survivors but lists 31 crew separately without saying that they were all lost (but if we add 105 and 31, we get 136 lost, as above).

All sources except Thornhill say there were 103 or 104 survivors (How, p. 107; the discrepancy in the number of survivors is unexplained; Galgay/McCarthy, p. 66, and Sarty, p. xxi, say that the Grandmère rescued 103 but that two died after rescue, which again shows how confused the records were; Bruce, p. 55; CuffEtAl, p. 5; Connors, p. 49; and Lingard, p. 54, simply say that there were 101 survivors). The casualty rate among women was higher than among men; only eight of 26 survived, and most of them needed hospitalization (How, p. 107). Only one of eleven children survived (How, p. 110). Just 15 of the Caribou's crew of 46 survived; the captain and his three senior officers were all dead (Bruce, p. 55; How, p. 109). It is said to be the worst single loss Newfoundland would suffer in the entire war. The port of Channel suffered the highest losses -- 16 men and one woman (Greenfield, p. 182). Given that the area was reported to have only about two thousand people (Greenfield, p. 191), that means that it lost about 1% of its population! Supposedly there were 21 widows and 51 orphans in the area (Bruce, p. 55; Galgay/McCarthy, p. 66).

Greenfield, pp. 242-247, has a list of all people killed in the Battle of the St. Lawrence, including on pp. 244-246 a list of those lost on the Caribou. Deaths on the Caribou represented almost exactly half the losses on all ships in 1942, and almost all the true non-combatants. Two days after the disaster, Ottawa finally admitted the story -- and, of course, broadcast it as an atrocity, an unprovoked attack on civilians (How, pp. 116-117). It should be repeated that, although civilians died, the Allies often used passenger ships like the Caribou for munitions and even as troop transports. The Caribou herself had been so used, and she was escorted by a navy ship (How, p. 126). She was clearly, by the doctrine of the time, a legitimate target. There were multiple inquests, one made by the authorities at once and two later, after the public outcry -- two of them largely in the hands of a certain Captain Dalton (How, p. 127). Dalton's first report, which was frankly done much too quickly, accepted some of the atrocity stories; the second was more cautious and gave the Grandmère more credit, although it sounds as if only the report by the Canadian naval forces really gave her her due (How, p. 128).

The Caribou story became a rallying cry for Canada in World War II (with exaggerations and falsehoods, naturally, such as a claim that the U-boat had rammed and/or machine gunned a lifeboat; How, p. 119). This is twice ironic -- ironic first because Newfoundland, which bore the largest share of the cost, was not yet part of Canada; and second because the Caribou was the last ship the Germans sank in Canadian waters in 1942 (How, p. 122), so Canada was no longer under threat after she went down. (The Canadians, after a weak and chaotic initial response, had improved their defenses enough that their aircraft sank a couple of U-boats before the Caribou met her fate; Sarty, pp. 214-215). The Canadian navy did change some of its doctrines (How, p. 133), but with the U-boats going elsewhere, we don't really know if this made any difference. U-69 and its skipper Graf was sunk with all hands by the Viscount on February 17, 1943 (How, p. 124). It was not until 1985 that her log was examined in detail and it became clear that she had seen both the Caribou and the Grandmère -- reducing but not entirely eliminating the bitterness among Canadians who remembered the sinking (How, p. 146).

The Caribou incident was the biggest event of the Grandmère's career; Macpherson's summary on p. 51 does not mention anything she did after that. In 1947, most of the Bangors were scrapped or mothballed or sold off; the Grandmère became a yacht (Macpherson, p. 51). A memorial was set up at Port aux Basques on October 14, 1947, the fifth anniversary of the sinking (Sarty, p. 305).

In 1986, when a new ship took over the Sydney/Channel run, it was decided to name her the Caribou, and a survivor dropped a wreath near the site of the wreck (Galgay/McCarthy, p. 68). A later Newfoundland coastal boat was named the Taverner in honor of the Caribou's captain (photo on p. 70 of Connors).

There are photos of the Caribou and the Grandmère facing p. 76 of How; a plan of the U-69 follows, then photos of Captain Taverner and his sons, of Lieutenant Cuthbert, and others from both ships. Bruce, in the photo insert following p. 78; Greenfield, in the photo insert preceding p. 131; Andrieux, p. 120; Lingard, p. 54, Ryan/Drake, p. 43; and Neary/O'Flaherty, p. 146 also have pictures of the Caribou; O'Neill, p. 951, shows a memorial card (?) which shows not only the ship but her captain and thirty of her passengers and crew. Galgay/McCarthy, p. 62, shows the Caribou being launched, and p. 66 shows her at sea. Connors, p. 50, also has a photo of her sailing along the coast. Macpherson, p. 51, has two (better) photos of Grandmère and dozens of photos of other members of the class, plus a design plan (shrunk to the point of near-illegibility) on p. 59. CuffEtAl has a good photo of the Grandmère on p. 9 and a poor one of Captain Taverner on p. 5, plus a very dark one of the Caribou on p. 15.

Thornhill has many photographs of the Caribou, including during her construction, and dozens of photos of those who sailed on her, but most are very poorly reproduced.

Thornhill lists this song as "Composed by Mrs. Peter Musseau, Lake Brook, Nfld. and dedicated to the memory of the S.S. Caribou and those who were lost." This attribution seems to be largely forgotten, if indeed it is accurate; Thornhill's pages are scattered with snippets of poems with poor attributions. What is certain is that the song went into oral tradition and quickly developed variations.

The song as printed by Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports is mostly historically accurate (not too surprising, given that it was collected just nine years after the event). The Caribou was lost on October 14, to a torpedo, in the early morning. The song says there were fourteen children on the ship, whereas How gives the number as eleven, but that depends on just how you define children. The song correctly lists the captain and two sons among the casualties, although I don't recall any of the printed accounts mentioning their bodies being found. And the recriminations show just how important the ship was (or, at least, came to be) for Newfoundlanders.

It's interesting to note that the first ship on the Sydney/Port-aux-Basques run, the Bruce, also has a song; see "The Loss of the Bruce." - RBW

Bibliography

- Bruce: Harry Bruce, Lifeline: The Story of the Atlantic Ferries and Coastal Boats, Macmillan of Canada, 1977
- Connors: William Connors, By the Next Boat: A Photo History of Newfoundland Coastal Boats, Johnson Family Foundation, 2002
- CuffEtAl: Harry Cuff, S.S. Caribou Calamity, being #6 in Newfoundland Railway and Coastal Steamers, Railway Coastal Museum Pictorial Booklets Series #1-#6, 2003
- Galgay/McCarthy: Frank Galgay and Michael McCarthy, Shipwrecks of Newfoundland and Labrador, [Volume I], Harry Cuff Publishing, 1987
- Feltham: John Feltham, Sealing Steamers, Harry Cuff Publications, 1995
- Jane's-WWII: Jane's Fighting Ships of World War II (1946; I use the 1989 Crescent Books reprint with modern foreword by Anthony Preston)
• Lingard: Mont Lingard (with photos by Mike Shufelt), Next Stop: Wreckhouse; More Chats, Stats and Snaps of the Newfoundland Railway, Mont Lingard Publications, 1997
• Neary/O'Flaherty: Peter Neary and Patrick O'Flaherty, Part of the Main: An Illustrated History of Newfoundland and Labrador, Breakwater Books, 1983
• Macpherson: Ken Macpherson, Minesweepers of the Royal Canadian Navy 1938-1945, Vanwell Publishing Limited, no copyright date listed but probably 1990
• Milner: Marc Milner, Canada's Navy: The First Century, University of Toronto Press, 1999
• Ryan/Drake: Shannon Ryan, assisted by Martha Drake, Seals and Sealers: A Pictorial History of the Newfoundland Seal Fishery, Breakwater Books, 1987
• Sarty: Roger Sarty, War in the St. Lawrence: The Forgotten U-Boat Battles on Canada's Shores, Penguin 2012
• Thornhill: H. Thornhill, It Happened in October: The Tragic Sinking of the S. S. Caribou, no publisher listed, 1945
• Worth: Richard Worth, Fleets of World War II, Da Capo, 2001

Last updated in version 5.1
File: Guig244

Loss of the City of Green Bay

DESCRIPTION: "Since you ask Caruso for it, Friends and brothers, lend an ear." A schooner is wrecks almost within reach of shore. The sailors cry for help, and try to man the lifeboats, but they are too far away to reach in the storm

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1952 (Walton collection, from a scrapbook owned by Charles C. Allers)
KEYWORDS: ship wreck disaster
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheG...Bay" (1 text)
Roud #19883

NOTES [145 words]: Although the text is entitled "Loss of the City of Green Bay," there is no indication whatsoever in the song of what ship is meant, except that she was sailing down from Escanaba and that "Caruso" was asked about the wreck. Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors says that the City of Green Bay was lost October 3, 1887 near South Haven on Lake Michigan, with the loss of six of seven men aboard. Bruce D. Berman Encyclopedia of American Shipwrecks, Mariner's Press, 1972, p. 239, gives the date as October 4 (i.e. the same night but after midnight) though the cause of the wreck is unknown.

We should note that there was a later City of Green Bay, this one a steamer built in 1880, which burned in 1909. But the song seems to refer to a sailing ship going aground. The only real question is whether the ship was indeed the City of Green Bay. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: WGM127

Loss of the City of Quebec, The

DESCRIPTION: "On the first day of April eighteen hundred and seventy two The City of Quebec leaved London with a choice of British crew." Seventeen are drowned in Newfoundland waters.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship wreck
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
May 8, 1871- Loss of the City of Quebec
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, p. 941, "The Loss of the City of Quebec" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #9936

RECORDINGS:
Mrs. Mary Ann Galpin, "The Loss of the City of Quebec" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]

NOTES [265 words]: The City of Quebec was lost at Isle Aux Morts, May 8, 1871 en route from London (Northern Shipwrecks Database). Isle Aux Morts is about 12 miles east of Port Aux Basques at the southwest corner of Newfoundland. - BS

Ships named "City of (somewhere)," e.g. City of Glasgow, City of Philadelphia, were characteristic of the Inman Line, which came into being in 1850; according to John Malcolm Brinnin, The Sway of the Grand Saloon: A Social History of the North Atlantic (1986; I use the 2000 Barnes & Noble edition), p. 208, "by 1857 he was carrying one third of all individuals traveling across the ocean." I have not been able to determine whether City of Quebec was an Inman ship, but it seems likely -- and, frankly, looking at the stories in Brinnin and at the entries on pp. 111-112 of Paine, they had a "terrible" safety record.

To give the Inman Line its due, one of its primary goals was the relatively efficient transportation of steerage passengers emigrating from Ireland to America. This meant that its ships had to be operated on a relatively low budget and had to carry a lot of passengers (Fox, pp. 174-181). The inevitable result was that, if a wreck happened, it killed a lot of people. At least they crossed the ocean faster than the emigrant sailing ships they replaced, so there were far fewer deaths by disease than on the sailing vessels.

Galgay/McCarthy, p. 156, report that the City of Quebec was a "Vessel from Aberdeen, Captain Pithie, from London on a voyage to Quebec. Wrecked on Isle aux Morts, May 8, 1891, all hands drowned, 6 bodies recovered." - RBW

Bibliography

Last updated in version 5.0
File: Pea941

Loss of the Convict Ship

DESCRIPTION: "Come all you tender Christians that hear my tale of woe" as the singer tells of those transported for "petty crimes." They left Ireland in May. The ship is wrecked. The majority of the crew survives, but only 20 of 346 convicts survive

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (Anderson-FarewellToOldEngland); Anderson dates his broadside c. 1835
KEYWORDS: transportation wreck disaster death
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Anderson-FarewellToOldEngland, pp. 159-161, "The Loss of the Convict Ship" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #V32795
File: AnFa159

Loss of the Danny Goodwin, The

DESCRIPTION: Captain LaFosse takes the schooner Danny Goodwin out from New Harbour. On December 6 the crew of six fisherman is lost in a storm.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: death drowning storm wreck
Loss of the Druid, The

DESCRIPTION: The Druid is "a schooner of fame" -- for the wrong reasons; "Jimmy Jackson, her owner, a miser was he,Too greedy to fit out his vessel for sea." A storm blows up, the mainmast is lost, the pumps don't work, and "the water she made was dreadful to see"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951

KEYWORDS: ship storm wreck humorous

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1878 - Loss of the Druid while en route from Lunenburg, Nova Scotia to the West Indies

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, p. 195, "The Loss of the Druid" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #4082

NOTES [8 words]: This song is item dD37 in Laws's Appendix II. - RBW

File: Doe195

---

Loss of the Eliza, The (The Herons)

DESCRIPTION: The crew of the Eliza are cheerfully approaching home (?) when a sudden storm blows up. Driven before the storm, the ship is blown to pieces. The people ashore, including the sister of two of the sailors, await word, but the ship is never found

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA/Leach)

KEYWORDS: sea ship disaster storm death

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Fowke/Johnston-FolkSongsOfCanada, pp. 47-50, "The Loss of the Eliza (The Herons)" (1 text, 1 tune)

Peacock, pp. 944-947, "The Loss of the Eliza" (1 text, 2 tunes)

ST FJ047 (Partial)

Roud #4424

RECORDINGS:
Mrs. T. Ghaney, "The Loss of the Eliza" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
Ken Peacock, "The Loss of the Eliza" (on NFKPeacock)
Patrick Rossiter, "The Loss of the Eliza" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]

NOTES [372 words]: Fowke writes, "No information is available about the loss of the Eliza, but the story is very similar to that of the Southern Cross which was lost in April, 1914, with one hundred and seventy men aboard." (It might be noted, however, that the ballad claims the Eliza sank in October.) For the loss of the Southern Cross see "The Southern Cross (I)." To this day, no one knows what happened to her, and no bodies were ever found.

"It is...one of the very few native ballads carrying supernatural portents (the herons) in the manner of the older traditional ballads...the spectres...the herons...Death's Angel" (Peacock).

Many [ships named Eliza] lost but no record both in October and off Cape Race/St Mary's Bay; the route would seem to have started at St John's [near Fort Amherst]. The best bet may be March 18, 1862, crushed in the ice off Bay Bulls -- on the route just south of St John's -- en route to St Mary's Riverhead, owned by Welsh & Co at St Mary's Riverhead with a captain possible named Welsh [who, in the ballad, sees the failing ship] (Northern Shipwrecks Database) - BS
There were quite a few Newfoundland sealers named Eliza, but each was too small for the ship of the song. In Shannon Ryan, The Ice Hunters: A History of Newfoundland Sealing to 1914, Breakwater Books, 1994, p. 471, we find the Eliza, of 97 tons, under Captain James Hearne, sailing from Saint John's in 1834 with a company of 27; p. 458, for the year 1853 lists the Eliza, Captain Scott, fitted out by Baine, Johnston & Co., still of 97 tons, but now with 37 men. Ryan, p. 475, lists an Eliza sailing from Conception Bay in 1833 under Captain Long; she was 83 tons and had 28 aboard. On p. 479, we read of an Eliza under Clement Noel (91 tons, 29 men) sailing from Carbonear in 1836; on p. 481, an Eliza from St. John's, sailing in 1838; 105 tons, 38 men under S. French (Ryan, p. 481), and another under W. Mullins; 121 tons, 29 men (Ryan, p. 482).

Frank Galgay and Michael McCarthy, Shipwrecks of Newfoundland and Labrador, Volume II, Creative Publishers, 1990, p. 102, lists 48 ships lost in the ice in Spring 1862; it was a bad year. The Eliza Ben mentions above as lost in that year was one of the 48. - RBW

---

Loss of the Evelyn Marie, The

DESCRIPTION: "It's mournful to tell you a story so sad. It's about a new trawler and the equipment it had." "Six gallant fishermen" were "In this beautiful trawler, the Evelyn Marie." After a year in service, they radio for rescue, but she sinks before help arrives

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1986 (Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs)

KEYWORDS: ship sailor death

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Jan 7, 1975 - Loss of the _Evelyn Marie_ with all six people aboard (source: Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs)

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs 158, "The Loss of the Evelyn Marie" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #16877

File: PsSe158

---

Loss of the Gertie, The (The Loss of the Guernsey)

DESCRIPTION: The Guernsey sails from Trepassey "wit' fish and oil on borad of her" and is overtaken by wind and snow. The wreckage is found the next morning. The song speculates about how the wreck happened, lists the crew and calls for prayers for those lost

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA-Leach)

KEYWORDS: death drowning sea ship storm wreck sailor

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Dec 5, 1934 - Schooner Gertie lost at Trepassey (per Northern Shipwrecks Database)

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

Roud #30138

RECORDINGS:

Mike Welsh, "The Loss of the Guernsey" (on MUNFLA-Leach)

NOTES [43 words]: Frank Galgay and Michael McCarthy, Shipwrecks of Newfoundland and Labrador, Volume I, Harry Cuff Publishing, 1987, p. 82, have a slightly different report of the *Gertie": "Schooner, sailed out of Trepassy. Lost with all hands at Calvert 4 Dec 1934." - RBW

Last updated in version 4.4

File: ML3LootG

---

Loss of the Gilbert Mollison, The

DESCRIPTION: "Another proud and gallant ship, Another noble crew, Have sunk beneath the angry waves...." No more will the vessel take to the waters. Some of the many sailors who have served on her are now dead. People at home wait and mourn

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (collected from Ben Peckham by Walton)
Loss of the Gilcher, The

DESCRIPTION: "On October 28, Oh how the wind did scream! The last time that the Gilcher and crew were ever seen." The ship vanishes on the way to Milwaukee. The reason is unknown. A note claims she was caught in a storm off Manitou. All aboard are lost

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (Collected from John E. Hayes by Walton)

KEYWORDS: ship wreck disaster death

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- Oct 28, 1892 (or thereabouts) - Sinking of the Gilcher

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, pp. 197-199, "The Loss of the Gilcher" (1 text)

Roud #19884

NOTES [668 words]: Although this song talks primarily about the Gilcher, it is really a tale of two ships -- and all of the sources I checked (Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, Ratigan, Wolff, Shelak, and Thompson), agree on this. The story begins with a boat called the Western Reserve, one of the first steel ships on the Great Lakes. (For what follows, except when another source is cited, see Thompson, pp. 218-225; there is a sketch of the boat on p. 213). Built in 1890, she was 300 feet long and the pride of the Minch family fleet. In the summer of 1892, she set out from Cleveland for Lake Superior. Having passed through the "Soo," a storm caught her in Whitefish Bay. On the night of August 30, a mast fell to the deck, the ship's plates developed large cracks, and within moments, she had broken in two (Wolff, p. 66). Apparently it was only about ten minutes from the time the cracks developed to the time she broke in two and went to the bottom (Ratigan, p. 253).

The crew took to the boats, but one of them overturned. The only other boat managed to rescue some of them, but it was too overloaded, and the storm too strong, for it to be steered. And it had no way of signalling other boats -- one went by in the night without spotting them (Wolff, p. 66). As they neared the beach, the boat capsized. Only a few of those aboard had life jackets, and only one man, wheelsman Harry Stewart, made it to the beach to tell the tale. 26 others were lost in the disaster (Shelak, p. 159).

The cause of the Western Reserve's loss was never determined, though many hypotheses were advanced. Many at the time suspected problems with the steel of the boat -- a genuine possibility if the weather had been colder, but it was August! Even the waters of Lake Superior are fairly warm by then. Others suspected design flaws, or improper loading (the latter, however, seems improbable, since Ratigan, p. 252, says she was mostly empty; according to Wolff, p. 66, she was on her way to Two Harbors, Minnesota to pick up iron ore.)

The worries about the Western Reserve did not cause the owners to do anything about her sister, the W. H. Gilcher. (Prior to the loss, the Western Reserve had made "several record-breaking hauls," according to Ratigan, p. 252. The ships were a point of pride; the Gilcher is said to have been the largest boat built in Cleveland to that time; Shelak, p. 158.) Although four months newer, the Gilcher was built to almost exactly the same design as the Western Reserve -- and was lost in the same year, on about October 28. This time, there were no survivors at all (Shelak, p. 159), so there was no clue whatsoever to what happened. It does appear that someone had tried to cut loose a lifeboat with an axe, implying extreme haste (Shelak, p. 159), but either the attempt failed or the boat was lost. It is believed there were 21 people on board when the Gilcher sank. Ratigan, p. 12, has another speculation: That the Gilcher collided with the Ostrich, also lost with all hands on or about the night of October 28, 1892. This speculation is also mentioned by Shelak. He says that wreckage was found on the Beaver Archipelago on Lake Michigan, though he does not mention the note later found allegedly from a Gilcher crewman. Shelak, pp. 159-160, mentions a folktale calling the Gilcher a "Flying Dutchman," still seen in the area of Mackinac Island in a heavy fog. Many at the time blamed the new-fangled steel construction (though of course steel vessels would in time prove to be very successful on the Lakes.) Wolff, p. 67, mentions that, in the aftermath of the loss of the Gilcher, new designs and stronger steel were specified for new steel ships; it would be more than seventy years until the next instance of a steel ship breaking up. Ratigan, p. 11, quotes eight lines of text about the Gilcher, clearly the same poem as John Hayes's piece in Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors; unfortunately, he cites no source. - RBW

Bibliography

- Shelak: Benjamin J. Shelak, Shipwrecks of Lake Michigan, Trails Books, 2003
- Thompson: Mark L. Thompson, Graveyards of the Lakes, Wayne State University Press, 2000
- Wolff: Julius F. Wolff Jr., Lake Superior Shipwrecks, Lake Superior Port Cities Inc., Duluth, 1990

Last updated in version 5.0
File: WGM197

Loss of the Industry Off Spurn Point, The

DESCRIPTION: The Industry is grounded off Spurn Point in a heavy sea. The captain refuses help: "we shall get off at high water." A later rescue attempt is launched too late to save the crew.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1891 (Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs)

LONG DESCRIPTION: The Industry is grounded off Spurn Point in a heavy sea. A lifeboat is launched from shore "expecting every man to save" The captain refuses help: "we shall get off at high water." The lifeboat returns to shore and is launched again, too late to save the crew, when Industry raises a distress light.

KEYWORDS: rescue death drowning commerce sea ship storm wreck England

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Jan 4, 1868 - "The vessel, Industry (Captain Burdon), was stranded on Spurn Point off the mouth of the Humber" (source: Palmer-VaughanWilliams)

FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond,North))

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs, p. 180, "All on Spurn Point" (1 text, 1 tune)
OShaughnessy-YellowbellyBalladsPart2 48, "Spurn Point" (1 text, 1 tune)
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #55, "Spurn Point" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #599

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth c.12(440), "The Loss of the Industry Off Spurn Point" ("Good people all, pray listen well"), J. Forth (Pocklington), no date
File: BrMa180

Loss of the Jewel, The

DESCRIPTION: The Jewel sails from Tilt Cove on October 28 and runs into "a heavy gale." The crew is rescued by the Albatross bound to Philadelphia from Greenland.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Peacock)

KEYWORDS: rescue sea ship storm wreck
Loss of the John Harvey, The

DESCRIPTION: The John Harvey sails from Gloucester for St Pierre in a hurricane and runs aground. Captain Kerley believes they will die. John Keeping ties a line around his waist and swims to shore; six of the crew are rescued. Keeping and one other died.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: rescue death sea ship storm wreck
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 950-951, "The Loss of the John Harvey" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #3843
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Wreck of the John Harvey
The John Harvey
NOTES [30 words]: [The] shipwreck [took place] January 10, 1912 in Gabarus Harbour, out of Boston bound for St Pierre & Miquelon; [the] Captain [was] George Kearley (Northern Shipwrecks Database) - BS
Last updated in version 5.2
File: Pea950

Loss of the Jubal Cain, The

DESCRIPTION: "Twas of the schooner Jubal Cain Of which no doubt you've heard.... lost on Nova Scotia's shore, She had eight men on board." The cargo vessel leaves Halifax January 10 and after 16 days the owner gets a wire that the ship and all hands are lost at sea.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: death sea ship wreck sailor
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Jan 12, 1907 - The _Tubal Cain_ leaves Halifax for Grand Bank; it is lost in a storm, possibly on January 15
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 952-953, "The Loss of the Jubal Cain" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9930
NOTES [95 words]: The Northern Shipwrecks Database notes that there is a monument to the loss at Grand Bank. There was, and may be again. A sign at Fraser Park explaining the loss was put up in 1987 but has since blown down according to Robert Parsons' "NF Shipwrecks on the WEB" site in 2003 - BS
Although the ship is properly the Tubal Cain (a name derived from Genesis 4:22; Tubal-cain, a worker in brass and iron), the only known collection calls it the Jubal Cain (possibly by confusion with Tubal-cain's half-brother Jubal mentioned in Genesis 4:21), and I've followed that. - RBW
File: Pea952
Loss of the Lady of the Lake, The DESCRIPTION: In 1833 the Lady of the Lake sails from Belfast for Newfoundland. After three weeks on a pleasant sea "the ice came down like mountains" The Captain and some sailors escape in a long boat. The singer os rescued by the Lima and returns to Liverpool.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1989 (Leyden-BelfastCityOfSong)

KEYWORDS: emigration rescue death sea ship storm wreck

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
May 11, 1833 - The _Lady of the Lake_ strikes an iceberg off Newfoundland and sinks, taking with her most of her passengers

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Leyden-BelfastCityOfSong 35, "The Loss of the Lady of the Lake" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Lady of the Lake (The Banks of Clyde II) [Laws N41]" (subject)

NOTES [256 words]: Leyden-BelfastCityOfSong: "Total saved 34; perished 197; total 234" with a list of those saved, including Captain Grant; the ballad claims the author to be survivor George Monaghan via the Lima, who is not on Leyden's list. Leyden's list has one person saved by the "Lima," 13 in the "Harvest Home," and twenty in the "Lady ..." long and stern boats. - BS Northern Shipwrecks Database has 18 left on Harvest Home -- abandoned after striking ice on May 9 -- rescued by Gypsy and transferred to Amazon - BS Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, p. 301: "Bound from Belfast to Quebec, the ill fated emigrant ship struck the underwater tongue of an iceberg on May 11, 1833, south of Newfoundland. Her captain, mate, and some of the crew, with a few of the passengers, got clear of the sinking ship in the boats, leaving the rest of her 230 men, women, and children on board the hulk or struggling in the icy water. All but those in the captain's boat perished." Curiously, for such a major incident, I find no mention of the Lady of the Lake in my books on seagoing disasters. But Patricia Kostelnik of St. Petersburg, Florida, in May of 2012 verified much of the information:
"I am writing to confirm that, indeed, George Monaghan was a survivor. He returned to Ireland and told the tale of the shipwreck in letters to friends. I also recall an article in the newspaper; perhaps the 'Freeman's Journal' of that year.
"I do know that George Monaghan was on that ship, as he was brought along by my family as a hired man." - RBW

Last updated in version 2.7

File: Leyd035

Loss of the Life-Boat Crew at Fethard

DESCRIPTION: The life-boat goes out on a stormy night to try to rescue a Norwegian crew. "Early on next morning the sorrowful news went round." Wives and children find "husbands and fathers lying dead" on the Fethard shore.

AUTHOR: John Butler, Tipperary

EARLIEST DATE: 1948 (Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast)

KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship storm wreck sailor rescue

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Feb 20-21, 1914 - The Mexico wreck

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, p. 104, "Loss of the Life-Boat Crew at Fethard" (1 text)
Roud #20546

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Mexico" (subject) and references there

NOTES [87 words]: February 20, 1914: "Nine members of the Fethard lifeboat were drowned when going to the assistance of the Norwegian steamer Mexico.... Eight of the Mexico's crew were saved by the five lifeboat survivors. All but one of the stranded survivors were saved with great difficulty the next day." (source: Bourke in Shipwrecks of the Irish Coast v1, pp. 52-53) - BS

We note that at least four poems were written about this disaster (see the cross-references); one suspects a campaign to raise money for someone's family. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
Loss of the London (I), The
DESCRIPTION: The London, bound for Australia with 239 on board, is caught in a storm in the Bay of Biscay. Captain Martin remains on board when a boat is lowered with nineteen men. The nineteen are rescued by a passing ship and taken to Plymouth Bay.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Greig/Duncan1)
KEYWORDS: drowning rescue sea ship storm wreck
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Jan 11, 1866 - "London bound for Melbourne, Australia, foundered on 11 January 1866 in severe English Channel gale with a loss of 220." (source: New Zealand Bound site)
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #61, pp. 1-2, "The Loss of the London"; #63, p. 2 (1 text plus 1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan1 31, "The Loss of the London" (3 texts, 1 tune)
Roud #1787
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Loss of the London (II)" (subject)
NOTES [34 words]: Apparently broadside Bodleian, 2806 c.13(149), "The Wreck of the 'London'" ("You landsmen all come rist [sic] to me"), J. Lindsay (Glasgow), 1851-1910 is this song but I could not download and verify it. - BS
Last updated in version 2.6
File: GrD1031

Loss of the London (II), The
DESCRIPTION: The "London" "pressed, through storm and rain ... with two hundred souls and more. The 'London' sank near a foreign shore" "The Captain said all hope was gone" Brooke "worked until all hope was gone, Then calmly paced the deck alone"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1886 (broadside, Bodleian Firth c.12(117))
KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship storm wreck
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Jan 11, 1866 - "London bound for Melbourne, Australia, foundered on 11 January 1866 in severe English Channel gale with a loss of 220." (source: New Zealand Bound site)
FOUND IN:
Roud #V6049
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth c.12(117), "The Loss of the 'London'
"("The sea ran high, the winds were wild"), H. Such (London), 1863-1885; also Harding B 11(2396), Harding B 13(241)[manually marked "1866, the date of the wreck], "The Loss of the 'London'
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Loss of the London (I)" (subject) and references there
NOTES [60 words]: The description is based on broadside Bodleian Firth c.12(117).
Irish Shakespearean actor Gustavus Vaughan Brooke (1818-1866) stayed on deck to help those he could and refused to leave on the last lifeboat. (source: "s.s. London - founded in the English Channel 11 January 1866"; description of wreck by William Andrew Pearce on the New Zealand Bound site) - BS
Last updated in version 5.1
File: BdLoLon1

Loss of the Philosophy
DESCRIPTION: Philosophy has a bad trip from St John to Havana. They make repairs at Havana. Nevertheless, they are cast away nearing home. Only five of seven make shore and two more die of cold. The survivors are rescued and return to Pope's Harbour.
Loss of the Ramillies, The [Laws K1]

DESCRIPTION: A heavy storm dooms the Ramillies. The boatswain orders the crew to the lifeboats. Hundreds drown in the wreck; only three or four survive.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (Vaughan Williams collection)
KEYWORDS: ship storm wreck death
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Feb 15, 1760 - Wreck of the Ramillies off the coast of Devonshire. Only 26 men survive
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond),Scotland(Aber)) Canada(Mar,Newf)
REFERENCES (9 citations):
Laws K1, "The Loss of the Ramillies"
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #61, "The Loss of the Ramillies" (1 text, 1 tune)
Purslow-TheConstantLovers, p. 56, "The Loss Of The 'Ramillies" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greig/Duncan1 28, "The Ramillies" (2 texts)
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 144-145, "The Ship Rambolee (The Loss of the 'Ramillies)"") (1 text, 1 tune)
Peacock, pp. 954-955, "The Loss of the Rammelly" (1 text, 1 tune)
Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 85, "The Old Ramillies" (1 text)
Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs 47, "The Wreck of the Rambler" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 554, RAMILLIE

Roud #523
RECORDINGS:
Jumbo Brightwell, "The Loss of 'The Ramilly" (on Voice12)
Charlotte and James Decker, "The Loss of the Rammelly" (on PeacockCDROM)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Fatal Ramilies" (subject)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Ramalie
The Ramillies

NOTES [134 words]: Ramillies was the site of one of Marlborough's great victories (1706), and several ships were named after it, from this ship to an early twentieth century dreadnought. This Ramillies had a peculiar history; it actually predates the battle bearing its name! In 1664, the Royal Katherine was built, an 84-gun ship. It was "rebuilt" in 1702 (a subterfuge used by the Royal Navy at the time: They built a new ship with some of the old timber). The rebuilt ship was renamed after the battle of Ramillies. (She would be rebuilt again in 1749.) Half a century after the rebuilding and renaming, having been part of the fleet which failed to save Mallorca, Ramillies was wrecked off Bolt Head on her way to Plymouth. There are thought to have been 725 men aboard at the time, of whom only 26 survived. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.4
File: LK01

Loss of the Regulus (I), The

DESCRIPTION: "While I'll explain ... How the Regulus she got lost in Petty Harbour bay." Regulus leaves Belle Isle [sic] and is disabled in a heavy breeze near Cape Race. The tug John Green attempts the rescue but the tow line parts. Captain Taylor and his crew drown.

AUTHOR: probably Johnny Burke
EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: drowning ship sea storm wreck
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Oct 23, 1910 - Wreck of the Regulus
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Peacock, pp. 956-957, "The Loss of the Regalis" (1 text, 1 tune)
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 74, "Wreck of the Regulus" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6471
RECORDINGS:
Everett Bennett, "The Loss of the Regalis" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Loss of the Regulus (II)" (subject)
NOTES [564 words]: [The] Regulus, en route to Sydney Nova Scotia from Wabana [Bell Island, not Belle Isle], [was] wrecked October 23, 1910, when the tow parted from the John Green (Northern Shipwrecks Database). - BS
According to Frank Galgay and Michael McCarthy, _Shipwrecks of Newfoundland and Labrador, Volume II_, Creative Publishers, 1990, p. 54, the Regulus was a cargo ship launched in 1878. The Newfoundland shipping firm Harvey's purchased her in 1897 for use in the coal trade. Until 1907, she seems to have been completely ordinary.
Starting in 1907, she seemed to be under a curse. She ran aground on Sandy Hook in that year, although she suffered no real damage. Her first problems in Petty Harbour took place in 1908 (Galgay/McCarthy, p. 55). Carrying coal from Philadelphia to St. John's, she ran aground. The tug John Green (which we will hear of again) was sent, but the Regulus had to offload much of her coal before the tug could get her off. She was taken to St. John's and repaired, then went back into service, only to collide with a Norwegian ship, the Ocland, and her owners were forced to pay damages although many blamed the Norwegians. In 1909, the Regulus was damaged in a collision with an iceberg (Galgay/McCarthy, p. 56). She barely made it back to St. John's with all pumps running and the men bailing water as well. Then she collided with the Karema. At this point, her owners sold her to pay off the damages, but somehow Harvey & Co. ended up back in possession of her in 1910 (Galgay/McCarthy, p. 57).
On October 20, 1910, she was supposed to pick up a load of iron ore at Bell Island on Conception Bay, but the mining company said she wasn't big enough and sent her back. Serving under an experienced captain named Taylor, she set out in ballast on October 23, 1910. As she steamed south along the Avalon Peninsula, her propeller shaft broke. Captain Taylor dropped anchor and (apparently having no radio -- hardly a surprise for a small ship in 1910) asked a schooner to go into port and ask that a tug be sent. For the second time, the John Green went to her rescue; so did another tug, the Ingraham (Galgay/McCarthy, p. 57). It was foggy enough that the Ingraham, unable to find the Regulus, gave up and went back to port. But the John Green found the Regulus late in the evening. It took until after midnight to get the hawser attached and to raise the Regulus's anchor (Galgay/McCarthy, p. 58). For two hours, the John Green towed the Regulus, but at around 2:30, the hawser broke. They found the wreck the next morning on a reef near Shoal Bay. There had been nineteen men aboard. All were gone; no bodies were ever recovered, although divers explored the wreck (Galgay/McCarthy, pp. 59-60). One source I read said it was the worst sailing disaster in Newfoundland in a decade.
Galgay/McCarthy, p. 100, has a list of those lost.
The song is quite accurate in its details, at least in the Burke original; the Regulus was leaving Bell Island (called "Belle Isle" in the text), she was lost near Cape Race, she broke her propeller, the John Green came to her rescue, the Regulus's lights appeared to go out when the tow-line parted, her captain was named Taylor, and she was lost near Shoal Bay, not far from the better-known Petty Harbour.
For a brief biography of Johnny Burke, see the notes to "The Kelligrew's Soiree." - RBW
File: Pea956
Loss of the Regulus (II), The

DESCRIPTION: The Regulus is lost "near Bay Bulls that awful night the sea was raging high, The fog was thick the rain fell fast." The singer prays for consolation for mothers, wives and children of those lost.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA-Leach)

KEYWORDS: grief death drowning mourning sea ship storm wreck children mother wife sailor

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Oct 23, 1910 - Wreck of the Regulus

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

Roud #6471

RECORDINGS:
Mrs. Frank Molloy, "Regalis" (on MUNFLA-Leach)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Loss of the Regulus (I)" (subject)

NOTES [18 words]: For background on the jinxed history of the Regulus, see the notes to "The Loss of the Regulus (I)." - RBW

Last updated in version 4.4

File: ML3LoReg

Loss of the Riseover, The

DESCRIPTION: "The Riseover left Northern Bay, with lumber she did sail" for St John's. They are forced to leave the ship by raft in a heavy storm. Nearing shore, the raft breaks in half and John Pomeroy and Sparks are lost.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA/Leach)

KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship storm wreck death

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Nov 19, 1911 - Riseover wrecked on Muddy Shag Rock, per Newfoundland's Grand Banks Site

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Peacock, pp. 958-959, "The Loss of the Riseover" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 94, "The Wreck of the Riseover" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #4408

RECORDINGS:
Ned Lee, "Wreck of the Riseover" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

NOTES [304 words]: A detailed account of the Riseover wreck is included in Tales from the Kittiwake Coast by Robert E. Tulk, pp. 90-91 [available as a pdf file from the Canadian National Adult Database site.] - BS

A brief summary is also found in Frank Galgay and Michael McCarthy, Shipwrecks of Newfoundland and Labrador, Volume III, Creative Publishers, 1995, p. 161. The Riseover was a "schooner, ran on Muddy Shag Rock near Musgrave Harbour, November 19, 1911. Captain Pumphrey [sic.] and his crew of five made a raft of lumber and escaped from the wreck. Raft split on a rock and four men went one way, two another. The four were saved, the two were lost."

A slightly fuller account is in John Feltham, Northeast from Baccalieu, Harry Cuff Publications, 1990, pp. 60-61, which opens by declaring, "It was the little islet called Muddy Shag that proved to be the nemesis on Captain William Pomeroy and his Lunenburg-built schooner." The schooner displaced 81 tons. The crew, in addition to William Pomeroy, were Williams Jones, William Percy, James Pomeroy, John Pomeroy, and Archibald Spracklin (presumably the "Sparks" of the song; he was the brother-in-law of brothers William and John Pomeroy). She was carrying 100,000 feet of lumber. In a heavy storm, skipper Pomeroy was aloft watching the rocks, and gave an order that was mis-heard, causing the helmsman to run her onto the rock.

Given the storm, there was no way they could remain on the ship or on Muddy Shag. So the crew decided to use all that lumber to build a raft and head for Peckford Island a few miles away in the direction the wind was blowing. But, as the song says, the raft broke in two, with John Pomeroy and Archibald Spracklin on the smaller part. Some of the lumber from their part of the raft was eventually found, but the bodies had disappeared. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.4
Loss of the Royal Charter, The DESCRIPTION: The singer tells of a shipwreck near Ireland. 400 passengers sail from Melbourne and are approaching home (and have already dropped off some passengers) when a storm hits. The singer describes the storm, the wreck, and the deaths

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: ship storm wreck disaster death

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Oct 1859 - Wreck of the Royal Charter off Anglesey (on her way from Liverpool to Australia); 454 of those aboard were lost and only 39 saved (source: Palmer)

FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H623, pp. 109-110, "The Loss of the Royal Charter" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #9040

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth c.12(95), "Loss of the Royal Charter," unknown, no date

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Wreck of the Royal Charter" (subject)

NOTES [200 words]: Curiously, this song is a first-person account of a passenger on the Charter, and yet it says that "all on board would meet a watery grave."

Although I assume the ship described in this song is the same as that in "The Wreck of the Royal Charter," the lyrics are so different that I think they are separate songs. Roud also splits them. I'm not confident about it, though, and indeed Roud seems to confuse them, filing Bodleian Firth c 12(95) with the "Wreck" even though it appears to be a version of the "Loss."

According to Lincoln P. Paine, Ships of the World: An Historical Encyclopedia, Houghton Mifflin, 1997, pp. 438-439, the Royal Charter was built in 1855, and was "One of the finest passenger ships of the day... [and was] the first English ship to carry double topsails." On her last trip she left Melbourne with 511 passengers and crew, which was effectively equal to her capacity. She arrived safely at Queenstown, Ireland, 58 days later, and let off 17 passengers. The next night, as she passed Moelfre, Anglesey, she ran into a severe storm. Captain T. Taylor dropped anchor at 10:45 p.m., but the cables broke at 3:30 a.m., and she was driven ashore. 455 people were lost. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.4

File: HHH623

Loss of the S. S. Algerine

DESCRIPTION: "Attention all ye sailor boys And hark to what I say And hear about the Algerine Was lost in Hudson Bay." The old sealing boat, loaded with Americans but with a Newfoundland crew, is destroyed by ice. The Neptune rescues the remaining crew

AUTHOR: presumably Johnny Burke (1851-1930)
EARLIEST DATE: 1912 (Burke's Ballads)
KEYWORDS: ship wreck rescue

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1912 - the Algerine wreck

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ryan/Small-HaulinRopeAndGaff, p. 92, "Loss of the S.S. Algerine" (1 text)

Roud #V44585

NOTES [527 words]: The Algerine (238 tons, according to Winsor, p. 30) first served as a sealer under H. Bartlett in 1893, and made her last voyage in 1912. Although she had been a sealer for every one of those twenty years, she was on an arctic exploration voyage in Hudson Bay, not a sealing trip, when she was lost (Ryan, pp. 195, 197; Winsor, p. 30, says her captain was John Bartlett when she was lost). She had been rebuilt as recently as 1910 (Evans, p. 45). According to Greene, p. 275, she was lost "4 miles off Cape Weld, Ponds Inlet, Baffin Land"; this is on the north side of Baffin Island, across from Bylot Island.

The Algerine had one other brush with fame in her last year. After the Titanic disaster, the White Star line hired ships to try to find bodies of the dead. The first of these was the Mackay-Bennett, which brought in most of the recovered bodies; the Minia and the Montmagny found more. The last ship chartered was the Algerine; she found only one body (Barczewski, p. 42), but that was remembered because unlike the other recovery vessels, she was a Newfoundland ship. Although she had the biggest engine of any wooden-walled sealer (180 nominal horsepower; Candow, p. 55), she wasn't a spectacular success as a sealer; only once did she take more than 20,000 seals in a season (in 1898 under Job Knee, when she took 23,698); her average haul per season was a little over 10,000. Perhaps that helps explain why she had eight different captains in her twenty years.... (Chafe, p. 98).

In 1908, she had a near-disaster, running out of coal and needing help from other ships. Ironically, she was carrying dozens of refugees from other ships that had sunk in that year's bad conditions (Winsor, p. 30). In addition to its mention in this song, the Algerine is mentioned in mentioned in "Captains and Ships," "The Sealer's Song (II)," "Success to the Hardy Sealers," and "Ballad of Captain Bob Bartlett, Arctic Explorer," An Algerine is also mentioned in "A Noble Fleet of Sealers," although this appears to be a reference to the MV Algerine, not the SS Algerine. Apart from the special case of the Greenland, which was mentioned a lot because of the infamous "Greenland Disaster," no other ship is mentioned more often in the sealing "songs" in Ryan/Small-HaulinRopeAndGaff. Perhaps ironically, the only other ship mentioned equally often is the Neptune, which rescued the Algerine's crew. For her, see "Neptune, Ruler of the Sea."

Ryan, p. 308, has another poem mentioning the Algerine and the Neptune, in the context of a bad voyage which left her sealers stuck without transportation home.

There is a photo of the Algerine on p. 30 of Winsor.

Although most sources attribute this to Johnny Burke, it is not in his most extensive collection, Johnny Burke (William J. Kirwin, editor), John White's Collection of Johnny Burke Songs, Harry Cuff Publications, St. John’s, 1981. But Burke wrote a lot of songs starting "Attention..."; it seems to have been his personal alternative to "Come all ye..." (which he also used several times). For a brief biography of Johnny Burke, see the notes to "The Kelligrew's Soiree." - RBW

Bibliography

- Barczewski: Stephanie Barczewski, Titanic: A Night Remembered, Hambledon Continuum, 2004
- Evans: Calvin D. Evans, Master Shipbuilders of Newfoundland and Labrador, Volume One: Cape Spear to Boyd's Cove, Breakwater Books, 2013
- Greene: William Howe Greene, The Wooden Walls among the Ice Floes: Telling the Romance of the Newfoundland Seal Fishery, Hutchinson & Co, London (PDF available on the Memorial University of Newfoundland web site)

Last updated in version 6.0

File: RySm092

Loss of the Sailor's Home, The

DESCRIPTION: Sailor's Home leaves Fortune Bay and picks up a load of coal in Sydney on Christmas Day. She sinks in a storm; three of the crew make land on the French island of Miquelon, find help, and recover.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Peacock)

KEYWORDS: rescue drowning sea ship storm wreck
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Dec 31, 1890 - the Sailor's Home wrecked near St Pierre & Miquelon carrying coal from Sydney
Nova Scotia to Fortune, Newfoundland (Northern Shipwrecks Database)
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 960-962, "The Loss of the Sailor's Home" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: Pea960

Loss of the Savinto, The DESCRIPTION: Two days out a storm drives Savinto against a rock. "The ship breaks up And all the crew... Look for a watery grave." Gormley gets to shore and brings help. The rescue ordeal is described in great detail. Eleven of twenty one are saved.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland)
KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship storm wreck sailor rescue
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Nov 6 or 7, 1906 - Barque Sovinto from Dalhousie, NS stranded at Priest Pond, PEI (Northern Shipwrecks Database)
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 52-55, "The Loss of the Savinto" (1 text,
1 tune)
Roud #12467
File: Dib052

Loss of the Schooner Arabelle, The DESCRIPTION: The Arabelle, being "light in ballast" in "a heavy gale" "capsized no distance from the land." The wreck is found drifting three weeks later with one corpse on board.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports)
KEYWORDS: travel death drowning commerce sea ship shore disaster wreck
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Dec 1880 - The schooner Arabelle capsized in a gale sailing from Chatteau, Labrador to Bay of Islands on Newfoundland's Northern Peninsula (Guigné)
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 247-248, "The Loss of the Schooner Arabelle" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Roud #25326
NOTES [24 words]: One of Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports's texts is two verses from a Newfoundland version printed in a Newfoundland periodical. - BS
Last updated in version 4.2
File: Guig247

Loss of the Shamrock, The DESCRIPTION: James Murray's mother asks him to delay sailing but he won't wait. He sails on Friday, September 18. The ship is seen on Saturday, then lost. Thomas Ridgeley might have saved two of those lost but he did not and is scorned for it.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA/Leach)
KEYWORDS: sailor death mother wreck
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sep 19, 1846 - the Shamrock is lost in a gale off Cape St Mary's (Northern Shipwrecks Database)
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 963-964, "The Loss of the Shamrock" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9816
RECORDINGS:
George Decker, "The Loss of the Shamrock" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
Tom Ferrier, "Torbay Song" (on MUNFLA-Leach)
Mike Molloy, "Shamrock" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
NOTES [122 words]: The 1846 wreck described in the HISTORICAL REFERENCES is not the only disaster involving a Newfoundland ship named "Shamrock" in September. On September 15, 1906, the schooner Shamrock, owned and sailed by captain Paul Ezekiel, was attempting to ride out the storm when the Margaret Dawe, which had broken her anchor chains, plowed into the Shamrock. The Shamrock drifted ashore and was wrecked, but due to the bravery of her crew and a Captain Mercer who lived in the area, all survived (see Captain Joseph Prim and Mike McCarthy, The Angry Seas: Shipwrecks on the Coast of Labrador, Jesperson Publishing, 1999, pp. 79-81). That wreck obviously is not the one in the song, but it might have helped keep the song live. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.4
File: Pea963

Loss of the Snorre, The

DESCRIPTION: September 18 a storm in Bonavista Bay wrecks Harold F, Olive Branch, Planet, and Reliance. The Norwegian sloop Snorre bursts her chains and is swept away with two boys on board. Four men from Bonavista are named as saving four of the crew.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1976 (Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou)
KEYWORDS: death sea ship storm wreck
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sep 1907 - more than 58 ships are lost including Olive Branch, Planet, and Snorre (Northern Shipwrecks Database)
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 98, "The Loss of the Snorre" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #4407
NOTES [654 words]: Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou: "Two young Norwegian boys were drowned, and the four others on board were rescued through the bravery of J Louis Little, Robert Brown, James C Little, William Ford and Eli Paul, all men of Bonavista; they afterwards received recognition from the Carnegie Hero Commission." - BS
Galgay/McCarthy, pp. 129-136, has an account of this incident; it appears the song is mostly right. The Snorre was a brand new wooden barque of 800 tons; she was on her first voyage to Newfoundland (Galhay/McCarthy, p. 130). On this voyage, her crew consisted of Captain Alse, his mate, three sailors, and a cook (pp. 130-131). She was carrying a cargo of flour, which she expected to exchange for a cargo of fish. By the time she arrived at Bonavista Bay, the storm was already blowing hard, so she had to anchor in the harbor, not go to the wharf. Storms in Bonavista Harbour had a tendency to be especially bad because it is open to the sea on the north and northwest, meaning that the prevailing storms blew into the harbour (p. 130).
At 3:00 a.m., the Snorre dragged her anchors and was driven onto a ledge at a part of the harbour known as Canaille (pp. 130-131). Four other ships in the harbour, the Evelyn, the Olive Branch, the Jubilee, and the Harold F., also broke loose and were destroyed (p. 131). But all of them had been in the harbour when the storm blew up, and the crews were ashore, so no lives were lost. Only the Snorre that still had her crew aboard and in danger.
Fortunately, the Snorre had grounded in such a way that she survived the night, and she was able to set off distress signals. The signals were seen by brothers Lewis and Stuart Little. Their neighbours Robert Brown, James Little, William Ford, James Ford, and Eli Paul joined them in attempting a rescue in very dangerous conditions (pp. 131-133). They made several tries to get a rope to the Snorre, with little luck, and several of the rescuers were nearly swept away themselves (p. 133). Finally, at great personal risk, Lewis Little got a rope aboard (p. 134), and the rescue began. There was little time to waste; the Snorre was going to pieces. (There was little left after the storm; those who surveyed the area of the Snorre's wreck found nothing but broken wood and debris; pp. 134-135).
Even with a rope to shore, it wasn't easy to get the Snorre's crew ashore in the extreme weather. Four men made it, but cook Peter Sivertzen and 13-year-old seaman Anders Monson were swept away to their deaths (p. 134); their bodies were found after the storm (p. 135).
There seems to be a disagreement about the date of this event. Ben Schwartz reports that the Northern Shipwrecks Database dated in September 8-9, 1907, but Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou says September 18-19, and Galgay/McCarthy, p. 130, affirms this. The song states, correctly, that she was chartered by J. Ryan -- properly James Ryan, Ltd. (p. 130). It appears to be wrong in stating that "Ford" was the first to go down to try to get a rope to the Snorre; p. 133 says that Robert Brown was the first to try, then Lewis Little. The song does seem to say that "Littles" was the one that finally got a rope aboard. It is also correct in saying that one of the dead was thirteen years old. It mentions the brothers Ford, the Littles and (Eli) Paul as rescuers, omitting Robert Brown.

Other than the Snorre, the ships named in Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou's text are the Harold F. (called the Harold T. by Galgay/McCarthy, p. 131), the Olive Branch (correctly named), the Planet, and the Reliance; it seems the latter two were actually the Evelyn and Jubilee.

Regarding the date: September 18, 1907 saw a "great gale" hit Newfoundland; it was bad enough, for instance, that 26 of 28 schooners in Twillingate Harbour were wrecked (Clarke, p. 72). Thus the September 18 date seems much more likely than September 8. - RBW

Bibliography

Loss of the Souvenir, The

DESCRIPTION: "Gone was summer with its sunshine, with its mild and favoring gales." Even in the harsh weather of autumn, sailors take to the Lakes. A storm blows up and the Souvenir is wrecked. One man is seen on the deck, but cannot be rescued; in all, seven die

AUTHOR: probably A. J. Woods

EARLIEST DATE: 1890 (Oceana County Pioneers)

KEYWORDS: ship storm death wreck

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Nov 1872 - The _Souvenir_ sets out from Pentwater, Michigan for Chicago

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, pp. 224-225, "The Loss of the Souvenir" (1 text)

Roud #19865

NOTES [50 words]: Although Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors throws this in with other disaster songs, there seems to be no evidence that it is traditional, or even a song; the text seems to be taken from print, and no informant mentioned it. Nor does the form look much like a traditional song. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: WGM224

Loss of the Titanic, The (Titanic #13)

DESCRIPTION: "The beauty of the White Star Line, the Titanic, sailed the seas." Off Cape Race "she struck what's called a growler." "Captain Smith and his brave crew, they never left the deck But saved the helpless passengers and went down with the wreck."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (Peacock)

KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship wreck

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

April 14/15, 1912 - Shortly before midnight, ship's time, the Titanic strikes an iceberg and begins to sink. Only 711 survivors are found of 2224 people believed to have been aboard.

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 965-966, "The Loss of the Titanic" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9940

RECORDINGS:
Ned Rice, "The Loss of the Titanic" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. all the other Titanic songs (plot)

NOTES [140 words]: To give Captain Smith of the Titanic credit for saving the "helpless passengers" strikes me as a little much, since it appears that much of what went wrong was his fault. But the bravery of the crew mentioned by the song cannot be denied. While the loss of life was very large, it was largest among the crew: According to Lincoln P. Paine's Ships of the World, 60% of the first class passengers survived. 42% of second class passengers survived, and 25% of steerage passengers -- but only 24% of the crew, even though many crew members were put aboard the ship's boats simply to keep them afloat and steer them.

For an extensive history of the Titanic, with detailed examination of the truth (or lack thereof) of quotes in the Titanic songs, see the notes to "The Titanic (XV)" ("On the tenth day of April 1912") (Titanic #15) - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: Pea955

Loss of the Victory Man-of-War, The DESCRIPTION: "Good people all, pray give attention. "When we first from Spithead sailed convoy to Lisbon bound," the ship is the best in the navy. But she is left behind in a storm off Scilly. Eventually wreckage is found with the name Victory. There is much mourning.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1891 (Ashton-RealSailorSongs)
KEYWORDS: ship wreck disaster death

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1744 - Loss of HMS Victory, flagship of Admiral Sir John Balchin/Balchen

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ashton-RealSailorSongs, #42 insert, "The Loss of the Victory Man-of-War" (1 text)
Roud #21911

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Disconsolate Judy's Lamentation for the Absence of Her True Love" (subject of the loss of the Victory)

NOTES [220 words]: Not, obviously, about Nelson's flagship, which still exists. But the Royal Navy had had six earlier ships named Victory, two of them first-rates, according to Lincoln P. Paine, Ships of the World: An Historical Encyclopedia, Houghton Mifflin, 1997, p. 550. Given that the song mentions Admiral Balchen, and the firing of ninety guns, and over a thousand losses, it seems clear that the ship of 1744 is meant.

There is disagreement in my sources about whether his name was spelled "Balchin" or "Balchen." It seems to be agreed that he lived from 1670 to 1744. He became an admiral in 1743, and was knighted in the next year.

"In July, 1744, during the War of the Austrian Succession, 1740-58, Balchen was ordered to relieve a convoy of supply ships that was blockaded in the Tagus River by a powerful French squadron. Balchen forced the enemy to withdraw and escorted the rescued ships to Gibraltar. On the voyage home his ship was caught in a storm and sank in circumstances that remain obscure. All 1,100 men on board, including Admiral Balchen, were lost" (Anthony Bruce and William Cogar, An Encyclopedia of Naval History, 1998 (I use the 1999 Checkmark edition), p. 30).

This ship, incidentally, was discovered on the ocean floor in 2008, finally revealing the details of its fate and the exact place it sank. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.4
File: AshS0421

Lost Babe, The

DESCRIPTION: A child wanders away from its mother (or is sent to take its father his dinner) and is lost. Men of the community (or Egypt and foreign lands) search; the child is dead, and buzzards
Lost Birdies, The

DESCRIPTION: Various birds (crow, robin) lay "but ae egg, she brought out ae bird, The bird it came out an' it flew awa', and she gaed a' day." The mothers look for their offspring and beg them come home

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: bird separation lullaby

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H40c, p. 20, "The Lost Birdies/The Hobe and the Robin" (1 text, 1 tune)

File: HHH040c

Lost Boys of East Bay, The

DESCRIPTION: "There's a story so sad I'm about to relate, Of a ship that was left here and gone to her fate." Sailors set out in October 1894 from East Bay. A great storm sweeps over Sand Island. Sixteen men are killed. Families are left to mourn

AUTHOR: Harry Evans?

EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida)

KEYWORDS: death sailor family orphan

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #50, "The Lost Boys of East Bay" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, p. 322, "The Lost Boys of East Bay" (1 text)

Roud #4083

NOTES [7 words]: This is item dD38 in Laws's Appendix II. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.7

File: CAFS322A

Lost Girl, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer meets a girl who confesses to being lost and far from home. She has left her family to escape from the boys. She warns maidens against men

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1941 (Randolph)

KEYWORDS: rambling lament floating verses warning

FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Randolph 60, "The Lost Girl" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST R060 (Partial)
Roud #272
CROSS-REFERENCES:
• cf. "The Poor Stranger (Two Strangers in the Mountains Alone)" (theme)
• cf. "The Poor Strange Girl (The Forsaken Girl)" (lyrics)
NOTES [79 words]: This is about half floating verses ("I'll build me a castle on youn mound so high," "Come all ye young maidens, take warning from me, Don't place your affections on a green willow tree"), and the final line of several stanzas ("Oh she says I'm a poor lost girl and a long ways from home"). Randolph lists many songs with similar elements, most of which I ended up filing under "The Poor Stranger (Two Strangers in the Mountains Alone)". But the whole seems to be unique. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.0
File: R060

Lost Jimmie Whalen [Laws C8]
DESCRIPTION: A passerby hears a girl wailing for her lost Jimmie Whalen. He comes from the grave, and she begs him to stay. He cannot; death keeps them apart.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (Rickaby-BalladsAndSongsOfTheShantyBoy)
KEYWORDS: death ghost lover
FOUND IN: US(MW,NE) Canada(Mar,Newf,Ont)
REFERENCES (20 citations):
• Laws C8, "Lost Jimmie Whalen"
• Rickaby-BalladsAndSongsOfTheShantyBoy 4, "The Lost Jimmie Whalen" (1 text, 1 tune)
• Rickaby/Dykstra/Leary-PineryBoys-SongsSongcatchingInLumberjackEra 4, "The Lost Jimmie Whalen" (1 text, 1 tune)
• Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 726-727, "Lost Jimmie Whalen" (1 text)
• Leach-HeritageBookOfBallads, pp. 177-179, "Lost Jimmie Whalen" (1 text)
• Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 445-446, "The Lost Jimmie Whalen" (1 text, 1 tune)
• Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks 48, "Jimmie Whalen's Girl" (1 text)
• Beck-TheyKnewPaulBunyan, pp. 139-141, "Jimmie Whalen's Girl" (1 text)
• Beck-LoreOfTheLumberCamps 79, "Jimmie Whalen's Girl" (1 text)
• Fowke-LumberingSongsFromTheNorthernWoods #32, "Lost Jimmy Whelan" (1 text, 1 tune)
• Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs 26, "Lost Jimmy Whelan" (1 text, 1 tune)
• Vikár/Panagapka-SongsNorthWoodsSungByOJAbbott29, "Lost Jimmy Whelan" (1 text, 1 tune)
• Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp. 186-187, "Lost Jimmie Whalen" (1 text, 1 tune)
• Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, pp. 114-115, "Lost Jimmy Whalen" (1 text, 2 tunes)
• Peacock, pp. 385-389, "Jimmy Whelan" (2 texts, 4 tunes)
• Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 61, "Jimmy Whelan" (1 text, 1 tune)
• Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 35-37,249, "The Lost Jimmy Whalen" (1 text, 1 tune)
• Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 81, "The Lost Jimmie Whalen" (1 text, 1 tune)
• Abrahams/Foss-AngloAmericanFolksongStyle, pp. 27-28, "Lost Jimmy Walen" (1 text, 1 tune)
• DT 602, JIMWHEL* JIMWHEL2* Roud #2220
RECORDINGS:
• Mrs John Coughlin, "The Lost Jimmy Whalen" (on MREives01)
• Mrs Mary Dumphy, "The Lost Jimmie Whalen" (on NFMLeach); "Jimmy Whalen" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
• Mrs. Mary Ann Galpin, "Jimmy Whelen" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
• Ken Peacock, "Jimmy Whalen" (on NFKPeacock)
• Art Thieme, "Lost Jimmy Whalen" (on Thieme05)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
• cf. "James Whalen" [Laws C7] (subject)
File: LC08
Lost Johnny

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, I wonder where my lost Johnny's gone (x3), Oh, he's gone to that new railroad, (x2)" "Go make me a pallet on your floor, Believe I will eat morphine and die." "I'll go if I have to ride the rail To the road where my Johnny is."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (Fuson-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands)
KEYWORDS: railroading floatingverses suicide drugs
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fuson-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands, pp. 151, "Lost Johnny" (1 text)
ST Fus151 (Partial)
Roud #16412
NOTES [24 words]: Obviously a composite of floating elements. But it has so many floating elements that it can't really be associated with a particular song! - RBW
File: Fus151

Lost Lady Found, The [Laws Q31]

DESCRIPTION: A young lady is carried off by gypsies. Her uncle, who is her guardian, is convicted of murdering her. Her lover follows her to Dublin and tells her of her uncle's plight. They return to England, and the uncle's life is saved

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1833 (broadside, Bodleian Johnson Ballads 5)
KEYWORDS: shanghaiing Gypsy trial reprieve abduction
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar) Britain(England(Lond,South,West)) US(MA,NE)
REFERENCES (10 citations):
Laws Q31, "The Lost Lady Found"
Cazden/Haufrecht/Studer-FolkSongsOfTheCatskills 63, "The Lost Lady" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 347, "The Lost Lady Found" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 624, "Lost Lady Found" (1 text)
Broadwood-EnglishTraditionalSongsAndCarols, pp. 86-91, "The Lost Lady Found (1 text, 1 tune)
OShaughnessy/Grainger-TwentyOneLincolnshireFolkSongs 14, "The Lost Lady Found" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #139, "The Lost Lady Found" (1 text, 1 tune)
Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 24, "The Lost Lady Found" (1 text)
DT 539, LOSTLADY
ADDITIONAL: Tim Coughlan, Now Shoon the Romano Gillie, (Cardiff,2001), pp. 432-433, ("'Tis of a young damsel, that was left all alone") [English text reported by Broadwood, _Old English Songs_ (1843)]
Roud #901
RECORDINGS:
Marge Steiner, "There Was a Rich School Miss" (on Steiner01)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Johnson Ballads 5, "The Lost Lady Found," T. Batchelor (London), 1828-1832; also 2806 c.17(241), Harding B 15(177b), 2806 c.16(128), Harding B 11(3803), Firth b.26(375), Firth b.34(114), Firth c.18(167), Harding B 11(2222), Harding B 11(266), "[The] Lost Lady Found";
Harding B 11(1445), "The Gypsies" or "The Lost Lady Found"
NOTES [171 words]: In reply to the charge of abduction in this piece, Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland writes, "While it is quite likely that some ladies of quality... did run off with the gipsies, it is not proven that abductions of 'giorgio' women ever occurred. As to the charge that gipsies are child stealers, they usually have too many children of their own to bother about increasing their problems." - RBW
See Tim Coughlan, Now Shoon the Romano Gillie, (Cardiff,2001), #163, pp. 416-421, "A Puv Pordo o' Romni Chels" [Romani-English version from Sampson, "English Gypsy songs and rhymes" (1891)] made by Lias Robinson from an English text also reproduced from Sampson. Coughlan prints another English text from an Irish Traveller. Coughlan believes #164, pp. 421-437, "So Did You Muk My Curi Old Dai" [Romani-English fragment from Thompson, "Anglo-Romani songs" (1909)] also belongs here. His commentary on #164 includes a Welsh Gypsy text and English translation, a Romani text and translation, and Woodie Guthrie's "Gypsy Davy." - BS
Lost Miners, The

DESCRIPTION: "Six miners went into the mountains To hunt for precious gold; It was the middle of winter, The weather was dreadful cold. Six miners went into the mountains, They had nor food nor shack -- Six miners went into the mountains But only one came back."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Burt-AmericanMurderBallads)

KEYWORDS: mining homicide death food cannibalism gold

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1873-1874 - The disappearance of the Packer party

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, p. 231, "The Lost Miners" (1 fragment)

NOTES [204 words]: Burt-AmericanMurderBallads believes this item to be about Alferd Packer (she spells it "Alfred," but my sources indicate that "Alferd" is correct). In 1873, Packer and five others went out. In the bitter winter that followed, all save Packer died, and it was later learned that Packer had eaten their bodies. He was generally thought to have murdered them as well as consuming them, and died in prison in 1907.

He seems to have gone into folklore in a fairly substantial way. For a Wyoming account of his story, see James R. Dow, Roger L. Welsch, and Susan D. Dow, Wyoming Folklore: Collected by the Federal Writers' Project, University of Nebraska Press, 2010, #13, pp. 64-72, "Packer, the Man-Eater."

I believe Phil Ochs wrote a song about him, too.

There are at least five books on the subject, none of which I have made any attempt to see (you'll see why when I give you the first two titles):
* Alferd Packer's Wilderness Cookbook by James E. Banks
* Alferd Packer's High Protein Cookbook by Wendy Spurr
* Otto Mears, his life & times: With notes on the Alferd Packer Case by Ervan F Kushner
* Alferd G. Packer, cannibal! Victim? by Ervan F Kushner
* Alferd G. Packer: Soldier, Prospector, and Cannibal by Ann Oldham - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0

File: Burt231

Lost on Lake Michigan

DESCRIPTION: "Come all brother sailors, I hop you'll draw nigh, For to hear of your shipmates, it will cause you to cry." John Gallagher sails to Traverse City despite his mother's dream warning and fiancee's fears. He heads home in a storm, but the boat Lookout sinks

AUTHOR: Dan Malloy

EARLIEST DATE: 1932 (collected from John Malloy by Walton)

KEYWORDS: ship sailor death dream warning love

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, pp. 172-174, "Lost on Lake Michigan" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 410-411, "Lost on Lake Michigan (The Beaver Island Boys)" (1 text)

Roud #19831

RECORDINGS:
John W. Green, "The Gallagher Boys" (1938; on WaltonSailors)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Gallant Tommy Boyle" (subject)

File: WGM172

Lost on the Lady Elgin

DESCRIPTION: "Up from the poor man's cottage, forth from the mansion's door ... Cometh a voice of mourning, a sad and solemn wail, Lost on the Lady Elgin... Numbered in that three hundred Who failed to reach the shore," The many mourners are briefly mentioned

AUTHOR: Henry Clay Work?

EARLIEST DATE: 1861 (copyright by H. M. Higgins)

KEYWORDS: ship wreck disaster death orphan family

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1860 - The Lady Elgin, an excursion boat on Lake Michigan, collides with a steamer and sinks

REFERENCES (11 citations):
Randolph 692, "Lost on the Lady Elgin" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 453-455, "Lost on the Lady Elgin" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 692)
Pound-AmericanBalladsAndSongs, 60, pp. 134-135, "The Lady Elgin" (1 text)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 214, "Lost on the Lady Elgin" (1 text)
Dean-FlyingCloud, pp. 61-62, "Lost on the Lady Elgin" (1 text)
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, pp. 239-240, "Lost on the Lady Elgin" (1 text, 1 tune)
Stout-FolkloreFromIowa 44, p. 62, "The Lady Elgin" (1 text plus a fragment)
Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, pp. 199-202, "Lost on the Lady Elgin" (1 text, 1 tune, with no evidence that it was taken from tradition)
cf. Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan, p. 480, "Lady Elgin" (source notes only)

Roud #3688

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Titanic (IV - 'Lost on the Great Titanic')" (tune)

NOTES [1408 words]: Cohen, Pound, and McNeil credit this to Henry Clay Work, though the disaster came before his songwriting career took off. Other sources do not seem aware of this attribution. I have not seen the sheet music. Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors reports that Work first published it in a newspaper. It is not in his the anthology of his songs published by his nephew and cited in this Index as Work-SongsOf-Henry-Clay-Work.

Varhola, p. 58, describe the ship as follows: "[The] Lady Elgin was a double-decked wooden side-wheel steamer owned by Gordon S. Hubbard & Co. that had been built nine years earlier in Buffalo, New York... One of the largest steamers on the Great Lakes, the luxurious Lady Elgin was an impressive 252 feet long, nearly 34 feet wide, and had a draft of just over 14 feet, and her 54-inch-cylinder, 11-foot-stroke steam engine powered a pair of 32-foot paddle wheels. Operated by a crew of forty-three, she was equipped to carry two hundred passengers in her cabins, another hundred on her decks, and up to eight hundred tons of freight in her holds."

Constructed in 1851 (Shelak, p. 86), Thompson, p. 146, says that she was originally built for Canada's Grand Trunk Railway, and intended to sail from Buffalo to Chicago (entirely under steam, if the drawing on p. 149 of Thompson is accurate; she carried no sail). Although designed for passengers, she also carried a lot of freight for the Grand Trunk (Bourrie,p. 92). In 1856, when the Grand Trunk between Toronto and Sarnia was completed, she shifted to a Chicago-to-Lake-Superior route. She was successful enough that she came to be called "The Queen of the Lakes." But Bourrie, pp. 92-93, also notes that she had an amazing series of groundings and other misadventures in this period, one of which nearly caused her to be written off. Shelak, p. 87, mentions a grounding and a fire, and says that she was considered a bad insurance risk as a result.

Apparantly the passengers who booked the Lady Elgin were mostly Irish, from Wisconsin and Illinois. Their story was peculiar. Thompson, p. 147, explains that the governor of Wisconsin at the time was threatening to take the state out of the Union if the federal government didn't do something about slavery. One of the state's militia units was an Irish outfit commanded by Garrett Barry. Barry declared that he would stick with the Union no matter what Wisconsin did, and the Wisconsin government ordered his unit demobilized (Bourrie, p. 94).

The unit wanted to stick together. So they chartered a trip from Milwaukee to Chicago on the Lady Elgin to raise money to purchase new weapons. The company and the paying passengers would go to Chicago on September 7, 1860, hold a parade, and come back.

The ship's captain was Jack Wilson, who was distinguished enough that he had been allowed to lead the first ship ever to travel the Soo Canal (between Lake Superior and the lower great lakes) in 1855 (Ratigan, p. 43). He apparently did not like the weather on the night of the return voyage (Thompson, p. 148). But he was finally convinced to put out from the shore.

Then, on the night of September 8, the storm struck, it was a bad night for visibility. And the schooner Augusta, 129 feet long, carrying pine logs, had no running lights (Ritchie, p. 112; he calls the ship Augusta of Oswego. Shelak, p. 87, says that there is dispute about the running lights but notes that she was "carrying nearly full sail despite the weather." Apparently her cargo of logs was shifting and she was in danger of capsizing. Augusta's lookout allegedly saw the Lady Elgin twenty minutes before the collision, but she did not change course (Ratigan, pp. 44-45; Thompson, p. 148, explains this on the basis that the mate on watch could not tell the Lady Elgin's course and had been too busy taking in sail to worry about his own; Bourrie, p. 96, explains it as the result of an illegal maneuver which went wrong). The smaller ship's bow went right into the Lady Elgin's side.

The high waves parted the two ships quickly (Thompson, p. 150), and although the Augusta remained seaworthy, she had sustained enough damage that her captain headed for port without making any attempt at rescuing the victims on the Lady Elgin. (He would later claim that he thought he had struck only a glancing blow; damage to his own ship was slight -- Thompson, p. 150. Shelak, p. 88. also reports a claim that the Lady Elgin refused assistance. This strikes me as most improbable -- not only was the damage immediately evident to the passengers, but the boats separated before there was time for the Captain to learn what had happened). The Lady Elgin herself tried to head for shore, but she was nine miles off the coast, with one of her paddlweels wrecked (Bourrie, p. 96), and it was soon clear that she would sink before she could reach the land, despite frantic attempts to lighten her, shift her cargo, and patch the hole (Bourrie, p. 98).

And, according to Thompson, p. 149, she had only four lifeboats -- and those lacked oars! (Thompson, p. 151. Shelak, p. 88, gives a slightly different story: The first boat to be lowered was supposed to inspect the damage, but the oars were forgotten and the boat torn away by the waves).

Captain Wilson managed to get most of the passengers onto improvised rafts, but in the storm, many of them broke up and most of those aboard, including Wilson, were lost (though Shelak, p. 90, says that he made it to shore, then went back into the water to try to rescue others and was lost; his body was finally found on the far side of Lake Michigan. Barry, the militia unit commander, was also killed (Bourrie, p. 106). To make matters worse, the shores of the Lake were very steep here, creating a strong undertow. Passengers would often find themselves very close to shore, only to be sucked back into the water (Bourrie, p. 100; Shelak, p. 89).

Reportedly the ship's upper works exploded as she went down -- probably due to compressed air rather than a boiler explosion. The boat sank within about twenty minutes of being hit. There was one noteworthy deed of heroism: A university student named Edward Spencer swam out more than a dozen times to save fifteen or more passengers -- about a sixth of the total (Ratigan, pp. 47-48; Bourrie, p. 101, says that the deed crippled him for life). Others on the shore, however, robbed the dead bodies (Thompson, p. 153) No knows how exactly how many were aboard, or how high the casualties were. According to Hudson/Nicholls, p. 85, the collision killed 287 of 385 passengers on the Lady Elgin. Ratigan says that 297 were killed. As of the time he wrote, it was the second-highest loss of life from a great lakes disaster. Thompson, p. 153, notes that estimates of the number of survivors range from 98 to 155, and the casualties from 279 to 350. Shelak, p. 89, says there were some 400 passengers on board and cites the 297 figure for casualties. Ritchie, p. 112, says 287 were lost and fewer than 100 survived. Varhola, p. 59, has the highest number of all, claiming that between 600 and 700 people were on board. He says that 160 survived, and 200 bodies washed ashore. Bourrie, p. 100, gives similar numbers.

The Augusta became so infamous that she had to be renamed Colonel Cook and transferred from service on the lakes to work on the Atlantic (Ratigan, pp. 48-49; Shelak, p. 90). Her captain was placed on trial, but it was found that he had conformed to the very weak regulations of the time (Ritchie, p. 112).

According to Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, many of the Augusta's former crew, including the captain, were lost four years later when the the ship they were then sailing, the Mojave, sank without a trace in good weather.

The one good thing to come out of the disaster was that an inquiry was held (Thompson, pp. 153-154), which assigned portions of the blame to both ships (e.g. the Lady Elgin had no watertight compartments, and did not yield to the smaller ship, while the mate of the Augusta was too slow to inform his captain of the other ship's presence), but the primary blame was with the existing navigation laws. The Lady Elgin disaster was largely responsible for the 1864 passage of America's first navigation law (Thompson, pp. 154-155)

Shelak, p. 92, notes that portions of the wreck were found in 1989, and became the subject of protracted litigation. - RBW

Bibliography

- Bourrie: Mark Bourrie, Many a Midnight Ship: True Stories of Great Lakes Shipwrecks, University of Michigan Press, 2005, pp. 91-106. This inclines excessively toward the dramatic and undocumented
- Thompson: Mark L. Thompson, Graveyards of the Lakes, Wayne State University Press, 2000, pp. 146-155; Clearly is the most detailed and best footnoted of the sources for this article.

Last updated in version 4.0

File: R692

Lost Soul, The

DESCRIPTION: Singer says sinners at judgment will hear their fate and say, "I'm paying now the penalty/That the unredeemed must ever pay... For alas I'm doomed." The sinner will say that if he could go back, he'd fight for his Saviour's cause, but he can't

AUTHOR: L. V. Jones

EARLIEST DATE: 1916 ("Glad News")

KEYWORDS: sin death religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

RECORDINGS:

- Watson family, "The Lost Soul" (on Watson01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

ALTERNATE TITLES:

- The Lost Soul's Lament

NOTES [55 words]: D. K. Wilgus, in his comments on Watson01, notes (speaking of this song and "When I Die"): "The Watson family apparently sang these songs directly from a song book, but I have been unable to locate them in any source available to me, despite the conviction that I have met them before." He may have been remembering "Glad News." - PJS

File: RcTLoSou

Lothian Hairst, The

DESCRIPTION: "On August twelfth from Aberdeen We sailed upon the Prince... Our harvest to commence." The crew works in Lothian for William Mathieson and his foreman Logan. They find no chance for sport under Logan, and happily depart when the harvest is done

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Greig/Duncan3)

KEYWORDS: farming work hardtimes

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (4 citations):

- Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #3, p. 3, "The Lothian Hairst" (1 text)
- Greig/Duncan3 404, "The Lothian Hairst" (9 texts, 6 tunes)
Lots of Fish in Bonavist' Harbour (Feller from Fortune)

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, there's lots of fish in Bonavist' Harbour, lots of fish right in around here. Boys and girls are fishing together..." The folk of the town are described: Uncle George, who tore out his britches; Sally, who has a baby without a father; etc.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (Peacock)

KEYWORDS: nonballad dancing fishing sex childbirth bastard father lover

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (7 citations):

Fowke/Johnston-FolkSongsOfCanada, pp. 122-124, "Lots of Fish in Bonavist' Harbour" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs 37, "Feller From Fortune" (1 text, 1 tune)
Peacock, pp. 53-54, "Feller From Fortune" (1 text, 1 tune)
Doyle-OldTimeSongsAndPoetryOfNewfoundland, "Feller from Fortune" (1 text, 1 tune): p. 23 in the 3rd edition; p. 23 in the 4th; p. 20 in the 5th
Blondahl-NewfoundlandersSing, p. 53, "Feller from Fortune" (1 text, 1 tune)
Mills-FavoriteSongsOfNewfoundland, pp. 38-39, "Feller from Fortune" (1 text, 1 tune)
England-HistoricNewfoundlandAndLabrador, p. 55, "Feller from Fortune" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST FJ122 (Partial)

Roud #4427

RECORDINGS:

Omar Blondahl, "Bonavist Harbour" (on NFOBlondahl04,NFOBlondahl05)
Ken Peacock, "Lots of Fish in Bonavist' Harbour" (on NFKPeacock)
Bob McLeod and Lloyd Soper, "Feller From Fortune" (on PeacockCDROM)

File: FJ122

Loudon Hill, or, Drumclog [Child 205]

DESCRIPTION: Claverse prepares for battle at Loudon Hill. His cornet would avoid battle; the enemy are too mighty to attack. Claverse calls him a coward and leads the attack himself, but his forces are defeated and chased from the field

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1803 (Scott)

KEYWORDS: battle nobility cowardice

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
June 1, 1679 - Battle of Drumclog. Covenanters defeat the army of Claverhouse, Viscount Dundee

FOUND IN: Britain

REFERENCES (5 citations):

Child 205, "Loudon Hill, or, Drumclog" (1 text)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads, pp. 533-538, "The Battle of Loudon-Hill" (1 text)

DT, LOUDNHIL*

Michael Brander, _Scottish & Border Battles & Ballads_, 1975 (page references are to the 1993 Barnes & Noble edition), pp. 171-173, "Loudon Hill, or Drumclog" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #4018
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Battle of Loudon Hill

NOTES [331 words]: The "Claverse" of Child's text is, of course, Claverhouse (James Graham of Claverhouse, First Viscount Dundee, c. 1649-1689, known as "Bonnie Dundee" and killed at Killiecrankie; see the entry on "Killy Kranky" for details of that battle).

Drumclog was not, in terms of size, much of a battle (historians have been known to call it "the battle of Drumclog," because the forces were so small). After the restoration, Charles II had appointed James Sharp as Archbishop of Saint Andrews. Bishops were anathema to Presbyterians anyway, and Sharp was unusually obnoxious in his persecutions. He was ambushed and killed on May 3, 1679.

It wasn't really a rebellion, but Claverhouse treated it as if it were, and rode against the "rebels." They were only a few hundred ill-armed men, but Claverhouse had only a handful of troops, who eventually fled.

The success of the Covenanters at Drumclog did not last long; indeed, it helped induce their next defeat. The victory caused many more men to flow to the cause, but they were utterly disorganized. This rabble was defeated at Bothwell Bridge in the same year (see Child 206, "Bothwell Bridge")

There were actually two battles known as Loudon (Loudun) Hill. The first was fought in 1307 between the forces of England and of Robert the Bruce. Magnus Magnusson's Scotland: The Story of a Nation (Atlantic Monthly Press, 2000), pp. 172-173, describes how the Earl of Pembroke challenged Bruce to come out and fight. Bruce did so -- but arranged the battle so that Pembroke's forces charged over a series of hidden trenches. The horsemen went down, and were slaughtered by the Scottish spearmen, with Pembroke fleeing with the rearguard. It was the first real success of Bruce's rebellion (though it probably would not have been enough had not the English King Edward I, "The Hammer of the Scots," died soon after.) It will be obvious that this song refers to the second Battle of Loudon Hill, usually called "Drumclog" to prevent confusion. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.2
File: C205

---

Lough Erne Shore

DESCRIPTION: Singer meets "a wonderful dame" on Lough Erne shore. As she is leaving he asks to go home with her. She says she will not "yield to men's pleasure." He says "I'll make you a lady of honor, if with me this night you'll come home"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (IRTunneyFamily01)

KEYWORDS: courting rejection rake

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Tunney-StoneFiddle, pp. 115-116, "Lough Erne Shore" (1 text, 1 tune)
OBoyle-TheIrishSongTradition 14, "Lough Erne Shore" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #3476

RECORDINGS:
Paddy Tunney, "Lough Erne's Shore" (on IRTunneyFamily01); "Lough Erne Shore" (on IRPTunney02)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Lough Erin Shore
Loch Erin's Shore

NOTES [66 words]: OBoyle-TheIrishSongTradition classifies this as a reverdie. For more about reverdie vs aisling see "Ar Eirinn Ni Neosfainn Ce hi (For Ireland I Will Not Tell Whom She Is)." As in "Sheila Nee Iyer" and "The Colleen Rue," there is no resolution for the Tunney-StoneFiddle version. Is there a broadside that ends the story one way or the other?

Lough Erne is in County Fermanagh, Northern Ireland. - BS

File: TSF115

---

Lough Ooney

DESCRIPTION: Murray was a friend "'til our great Irish nation" and the aged, poor, and sick. He and his friend McManus sail their pleasure boat on Lough Ooney in spite of threat of a storm. The boat sinks. Both swim towards shore but are drowned by high waves.
Loughrey's Bull

DESCRIPTION: Cruel John Loughrey's bull attacks him for evicting tenants. He promises he will never evict anyone again. The bull kills him anyway, saying "if I was a landlord I'd treat the tenants fair." Nobody mourns the loss. Tenants should feed that bull well.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1988 (McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen)
KEYWORDS: homicide funeral farming humorous talltale animal landlord
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen 50, "Loughrey's Bull" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [93 words]: McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen: "This song recalls the death of a local landlord." - BS
There is an interesting symbolism, however -- though in reverse: Usually it is the bull (John Bull) which is harming Ireland. But there is a certain sense to this if one takes it in the context of the Land League and the Tenant Rights Movement -- an attempt to get the English law (often represented by a bull) to give tenants fair treatment. Could this have been a tale of John Bull's government actually enforcing its laws against a landlord? - RBW

File: McB1050

Louie Sands and Jim McGee

DESCRIPTION: Shanty: "Who feeds us beans? Who feeds us tea?/Louie Sands and Jim McGee/Who thinks that meat's a luxury?/Louie... We make the big trees fall ker-splash... Offers more examples of Sands & McGee's penury, usually with beans as the motif.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1941 (Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks)
LONG DESCRIPTION: Shanty (from lumberjacks, not sailors): "Who feeds us beans? Who feeds us tea?/Louie Sands and Jim McGee/Who thinks that meat's a luxury?/Louie Sands and Jim McGee/We make the big trees fall ker-splash/And hit the ground an awful smash/And for the logs who gets the cash?/Louie Sands and Jim McGee". Other verses offer more examples of Sands & McGee's penury, usually with beans as the motif.

KEYWORDS: shanty lumbering work logger greed food nonballad worksong
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks 19, "Louie Sands and Jim McGee" (1 text)
Beck-TheyKnewPaulBunyan, pp. 66-67, "Louie Sands and Jim McGee" (1 text)
Beck-LoreOfTheLumberCamps 23, "Louie Sands and Jim McGee" (1 text)
Roud #6521
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Beulah Land" (tune)
NOTES [17 words]: One of the few Work-SongsOf-Henry-Clay-Work I've seen from European-Americans who weren't sailors. - PJS
Last updated in version 5.2

File: Be019
Louis Collins

DESCRIPTION: Ms. Collins weeps to see son Louis leave home; he is shot to death in a gunfight. All the young women put on red clothing in mourning; he is buried in the new graveyard. Chorus: "Angels laid him away/Laid him six feet under the clay/Angels laid him away"

AUTHOR: probably Mississippi John Hurt
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (recorded, Mississippi John Hurt)
KEYWORDS: grief fight violence parting crime homicide clothes burial death mourning mother
FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Roud #21815
RECORDINGS:
Mississippi John Hurt, "Louis Collins" (OKeh 8724, 1929; rec. 1928; on MJHurt01, MJHurt02) (on MJHurt03) (on MJHurt04)
John Jackson, "Louis Collins" (on ClassAfrAm)
File: RclouCol

Louisiana Earthquake, The

DESCRIPTION: On a Sunday night, God sets the earth shaking. Singer stands expecting "louder clouds of thunder." In the morning "the elements were darkened"; six month pass, but the earth continues to shake; Christians fear, while "sinners' hearts were aching"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (recording, Stella Walsh Gilbert)
KEYWORDS: disaster religious gods
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Dec 16, 1811: Series of earthquakes begins, centered on New Madrid, Missouri
Feb 7, 1812: Worst shock of earthquake series
FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 340-341, "Louisiana Earthquake" (1 text)
Roud #18656
RECORDINGS:
Stella Walsh Gilbert, "The Louisiana Earthquake" (on Ashley02)

NOTES [178 words]: The song's reference to the area as "Louisiana" suggests that it was composed shortly after the events; while the region was part of the giant Louisiana Purchase, it became known as Missouri Territory within a year or two after the earthquake. At the time of the quakes, New Madrid was the second largest settlement in the area, after St. Louis. The earthquakes of 1811-1813 affected an area of a million square miles, and included the most severe shocks ever recorded in North America; the worst were felt as far away as Washington, DC, New Orleans, and northern Canada. The course of the Mississippi River was affected (and with it the boundaries of several states); islands and lakes vanished and new ones were formed; the river was observed to flow backward for a time. Remarkably, there were very few fatalities. After two years the shocks diminished, but small aftershocks were common in the area for nine years or more. The New Madrid Fault is still active, and shakes the region every few years; New Madrid residents sell T-shirts reading, "It's Our Fault." - PJS
Last updated in version 5.0
File: RclouEar

Louisiana Lowlands

DESCRIPTION: Pompey Snow has "a good stiff glass of rum. So they buried him in the lowlands .... "The fire bells are ringing boys, ... The steamer she is left behind ... so they ...." "This little boy had an augu-er that bored two holes at once ... so they ...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1870 (New-Comic-Songster)
KEYWORDS: nonballad parody humorous derivative floatingverses
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 129, "Louisiana Lowlands" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1038, p. 71, "In the Louisiana Lowlands" (1 reference)
New-Comic-Songster, p. 37, "In the Louisiana Lowlands" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST CrNS129 (Full)
Roud #1830
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Golden Vanity" [Child 286] (chorus and verse beginning "Some were playing cards and some were playing dice" base for parody)
cf. "A Boy He Had an Auger" (another parody of "The Golden Vanity" verse beginning "Some were playing cards and some were playing dice")
cf. "The Fire-Bells are Ringing!" (see notes)
cf. "In the Louisiana Lowlands" (see notes)
NOTES [174 words]: Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia may be all floating verses and fragments.
Its first verse, chorus and tunes are derived from the anonymous 1859 minstrel song "In the Louisiana Lowlands" which has nothing but form and, vaguely, melody to relate it to the "Golden Vanity" (see Public Domain Music site Music from 1800-1860). [It also reminds me a bit of songs like "Uncle Ned" and "Pompey Squash." - RBW]
[The third verse,] "Some were playing cards .." is either from "The Golden Vanity" or some other parody. The [second] verse beginning "The fire-bells are ringing, boys, there is a fire in town" ... is suggested by "The Fire-Bells are Ringing!" (1877) by Henry Clay Work (Source: Public Domain Music site Henry Clay Work (1832-1884))
The "original" "Louisiana Lowlands" air may be found at: LOCSheet, sm1881 03225, "Then Sing Louisiana Lowlands," unknown (New Orleans), 1881 (tune)
If "The Fire-Bells are Ringing!" or "In the Louisiana Lowlands" are ever reported in tradition they should be treated as separate songs from this one. - BS
Last updated in version 5.3
File: CrNS129

Louse Song
DESCRIPTION: "Greasy wops and Yankey boys, they all lay own to rest, They flop their tails on lousy straw and the cooties begin the quest. They'll bite you, boys, they'll bite you." The soldiers hunt lice on trains to the front. The lice won't stop while they live
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Niles-BalladBookOfJohnJacobNiles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe)
KEYWORDS: soldier bug
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Niles-BalladBookOfJohnJacobNiles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe, pp. 35-36, "Louse Song" (1 short text, tune referenced)
Roud #27872
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Son of a Gambolier" (tune & meter) and references there
File: NiM033

Lousy Miner, The
DESCRIPTION: "It's four long years since I reached this land In search of gold among the rocks and sand, And yet I'm poor, when the truth is told... I'm a lousy miner In search of shining gold." Tells how the miner lives hard while his girlfriend forgets him
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1855 (Put's Original California Songster)
KEYWORDS: mining work separation gold
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 107, "(The Lousy Miner)" (1 text found under "Sweet Betsy from Pike")
Lovana

DESCRIPTION: "I once knew a cot, It was humble as could be" around which birds sang and where Lovana lived. The singer describes her beauty as she bathes in the stream. He wishes he were a fish by her boat, or the wind in her hair, or otherwise near her

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)
KEYWORDS: love courting bird rejection
FOUND IN: US(MW,So)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 223-224, "Lovana" (1 text, from a very poor transcription)
Dean-FlyingCloud, p. 3, "Luluanna" (1 text)

Love (I)

DESCRIPTION: "There is true love and false love," and so on, "but I always like to hear of love that ends in matrimony." If you love a lady offer her your hand.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan5)
KEYWORDS: love marriage nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan5 929, "Love" (2 texts)

Love and Freedom

DESCRIPTION: "As I cam ower Strathmartine Mains, O wha dae ye think I seen, But a braw young piper laddie...." His music makes her love him even though he is poor, "But we'll hae love and freedom, Gin ye'll follow me ma dear." "So I chose love and freedom...."

AUTHOR: Mary Brooksbank
EARLIEST DATE: 1986 (Gatherer-SongsAndBalladsOfDundee)
KEYWORDS: love music courting rambling

Love and Whisky

DESCRIPTION: "Love and whisky both, Rejoice an honest fellow." If love leaves a jealous pang or whisky a headache "take another sup" as cure. "May the smiles of love Cheer our lads so clever;
And, with whisky, boys, We'll drink King George for ever"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1839 (Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)
KEYWORDS: love drink nonballad
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland, pp. 73-74, "Love and Whisky" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bobbin Joan" (tune, according to Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)
NOTES [54 words]: Croker-PopularSong: "The most popular song of the heyday of Irish Volunteerism [beginning 1780] and which song continued a general favourite until the dissolution of the Irish Yeomanry Corps [started to decline about 1812 according to "County Armagh Yeomanry Corps" by Samuel Lutton at the Craigavon Historical Society site]."

Love at First Sight

DESCRIPTION: "I went to Ed Haley's, the day it was bright, I met with a woman I loved at first sight." The singer and his love discuss their histories; they agree to marry and live a happy life; she is very good at housework
AUTHOR: James W. Day ("Jilson Setters")
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Thomas)
KEYWORDS: courting marriage
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Thomas-BalladMakingInMountainsOfKentucky, pp. 183-184, "Love at First Sight (1 text)
NOTES [55 words]: According to Thomas, Setters wrote this to help one Tom Willie in his courting: Willie pretended it was his composition rather than by Setters. It seems likely enough; it's not exactly great art. (And, if I were Mrs. Willie, I'd be less than complimented... but then, I'm a modern male, not an early-twentieth-century female). - RBW

Love at the Brig o' Don

DESCRIPTION: Bess and Jock were to be married. A barber seduces Bess. Jock tries unsuccessfully to commit suicide by jumping off the brig of Don. Bess, deserted by the barber and alone, has a baby born with "the brig o' Don arch ... mark'd on o' his forehead"
AUTHOR: Alexander Robb (1781-1859) (source: Greig/Duncan6)
EARLIEST DATE: 1824 (George Smith's _Douglas Travestie_)
LONG DESCRIPTION: The singer's grandfather tells about Bess -- a widowed farmer's daughter -- and Jock who were to be married. A barber came from Auld-town and met Bess. After they danced "she discarded poor Jock." Jock tried to commit suicide by jumping off the brig of Don, but was rescued. He ran away, never to be heard from again. Bess, deserted by the barber, had the barber's baby, born with "the brig o' Don arch ... mark'd on o' his forehead."
KEYWORDS: courting infidelity sex childbirth humorous baby abandonment suicide river seduction
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #42, p. 2, "Love at the Brig o' Don" or "My Auld Lucky-Dady's Tale" (1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan6 1208, "Love at the Brig o' Don" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: The Scottish Journal of Topography, Antiquities, Traditions (London, 1848 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol. I, p. 51, ("There was an auld farmer, my grandfather ken'd him") (1 text)
George Smith, Douglas Travestie: to which are added Poems and Songs, Chiefly in the Broad Scottish Dialect (Aberdeen, 1824 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 133-134, "Love at the Brig o' Don; or "My Auld Lucky Dady's Tale" (1 text)
Roud #6796
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Legacy" (tune, per Smith)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Love Brought the Savior Down

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "Love love love brought the Savior down, Love love love For me." Verses include "Take a little peep over Jeffrey's wall... See the sinners rise and fall." "Satan fired a ball at me... His ball missed and dropped in hell"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1893 (Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories)

KEYWORDS: floating verses nonballad religious

FOUND IN: West Indies (Bahamas)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories 10, "Love Bro't de Savye' Down" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [81 words]: The description is based on the Edwards-BahamaSongsAndStories text. The verse is call and response, with "Love for me" the response to each verse line. A floating verse is "Head got wet with the morning dew... The morning star was a witness too" (see "Everywhere I Go My Lord," "Prayer Is the Key To Heaven," and "Pray On" (II)). "Jeffrey's wall" may refer to "Jericho's wall" (Joshua 2 -- referring to the spying mission -- or Joshua 6 -- referring to the destruction of Jericho). - BS

Last updated in version 4.2

File: Edw010

Love Come Twinkling Down (Seek And You Shall Find)

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, brother, you oughtta been there (x3), When the love come (twinking/trickling) down." "Seek, seek, seek and you shall find, Knock... and the door shall be opened, Ask, and it shall be given, When the love...." Repeat with father, mother, etc.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1915 (Work-FolkSongOfTheAmericanNegro)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US (SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices, pp. 46-47, "Brother, You Oughtta Been There" (1 text, 1 tune)
Work-FolkSongOfTheAmericanNegro, p. 65, "Love Come Twinkling Down" (1 text)
Roud #12090

NOTES [178 words]: The "seek and you shall find" refrain of Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices's version of this song derives from the Sermon on the Mount, Matthew 7:7: Ask, and it will be given you; seek [so the King James translation; modern editions often read "search"] and you will find; knock, and the door will be opened for you. There is a close parallel in Luke 11:9. It is not in the Work-FolkSongOfTheAmericanNegro, which simply says "All around me The love come twinkling down, From heaven... Help me Jesus... Pity Lord...."

The mention of love "twinkling" down is not Biblical; the word "twinkle" is used only once in the King James Bible, in 1 Corinthians 15:52, where it refers to the blink or sudden movement of an eye.

The alternative verb "trickle" occurs in the KJV only in Lamentations 3:49, of tears trickling down.

My original feeling (and it's only that) was that "trickle" was the original verb, and the reference was to the blood of Jesus that came out when his side was pierced in John 19:34. But I am forced to confess that I've never seen a "trickle" version. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0

File: Rose046

Love Has Brought Me to Despair [Laws P25]

DESCRIPTION: The singer hears a girl telling of the grief her false love has left her. She seeks a flower in the meadow to ease her mind; none meet her needs. She makes a bed of flowers, asks for a marble stone on her grave and a turtle dove at her breast, and dies

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1827 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1)

KEYWORDS: death separation flowers grief
FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW,Ro) Britain(England(Lond,North,South),(Scotland(Aber,Bord)))
REFERENCES (14 citations):
Laws P25, "Love Has Brought Me to Despair"
Greig/Duncan6 1170, "In Halifax Town" (1 text, 1 tune)
Porter/Gower-Jeannie-Robertson-EmergentSingerTransformativeVoice #73, p. 246-248, "I Wish, I Wish (Love Has Brought Me to Despair (Laws P25)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1 43, "Slighted Love" (1 text)
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 34, "Died of Love" (2 texts)
Broadwood-EnglishTraditionalSongsAndCarols, pp. 92-95, "Died of Love or A brisk young lad he courted me" (1 short text, 1 tune)
OShaughnessy-YellowbellyBalladsPart2 52, "There Is an Alehouse" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #42, "A Brisk Young Sailor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brewster-BalladsAndSongsOfIndiana 58, "Love Has Brought Me to Despair" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Combs/Wilgus-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernUnitedStates 116, p. 176, "The Auxville Love" (1 text)
Cox-FolkSongsSouth 144, "Love Has Brought Me To Despair" (1 text)
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #28, "Love Has Brought Me To Despair" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scott-ACollectorsNotebook-31TraditionalSongs, p. 7, "The Sailor's Lament" (1 text, 1 tune, rather short, and with elements of "The Butcher Boy" [Laws P24], "Tavern in the Town," and perhaps even "Love Has Brought Me to Despair" [Laws P25]; if I had to file it with one, it would probably be "The Butcher Boy," but I'm not sure; Roud lists it as #60, which is both "Tavern in the Town" and "Love Has Brought Me to Despair")
DT 824, LOVDISPR
Roud #60
RECORDINGS:
Dillard Chandler, "I Wish My Baby Was Born" (on Chandler01, DarkHoll)
Geoff Ling, "Died for Love" (on Voice10)
Dellie Norton, "When I Wore My Apron Low" (on DarkHoll)
Berzilla Wallin, "Love Has Brought Me To Despair" (on OldLove, DarkHoll)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Tavern in the Town"
NOTES [61 words]: This song has close ties with "Tavern in the Town," often sharing stanzas and, of course, a similarity of plot. Roud, in fact, lumps them (which seems a bit excessive to me). This may help explain why Laws failed to note either the Combs or the Cox version. - RBW
The floating verses "Once I wore my apron low," etc., provide connections to "Careless Love" (R793). - DGE
Last updated in version 5.3
File: LP25

Love in a Tub (The Merchant Outwitted) [Laws N25]

DESCRIPTION: A vintner needs the consent of his sweetheart's rich father to obtain a dowry. The girl hides in one of her father's wine casks, and the vintner offers to buy its contents. The merchant agrees -- only to have his daughter revealed. He blesses the marriage
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1765 (chapbook by James Magee)
KEYWORDS: marriage courting trick hiding wine
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Laws N25, "Love in a Tub (The Merchant Outwitted)"
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 233-234, "Love in the Tub" (1 text)
DT 454, LOVETUB
Roud #556
NOTES [33 words]: In 1664, Sir George Etherege produced a play called "The Comical Revenge, or Love in a Tub." The plot is unrelated, and Etherege never produced anything else of even this minimal degree of note. - RBW
File: LN25
Love is Teasing

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, love is teasing and love is pleasing, And love is a pleasure when first it's new, But as it grows older, it grows the colder...." Lyric piece about the dangers of love: The singer gave up family and home, (and now has a baby without a father)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle)

KEYWORDS: love abandonment baby nonballad home floatingverses

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South),Scotland(Aber)) US(Ap)

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Greig/Duncan6 1166, "Waly, Waly, Gin Love Be Bonny," Greig/Duncan8 Addenda, "Waly, Waly, Gin Love Be Bonny" (1 fragment, 2 tunes)
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 84, "Love It Is Pleasing" (1 text)
Ritchie-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 24, "Oh, Love Is Teasin'" (1 text, 1 tune)
Bush-FSofCentralWestVirginiaVol1, pp. 70-71, "Love Is Pleasin'" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 70, "Love is Pleasin'" (1 text, 1 tune, of four verses, two of which might go here, one belongs with "Fair and Tender Ladies," and the fourth could be from several sources; it could be a "Waly Waly" variant)
Behan-IrelandSings. #45, "Love Is Teasing" (1 text, 1 tune, modified)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Waly Waly (The Water is Wide)" and references there

NOTES [122 words]: This probably originated as a "Waly Waly" variant, and it can be very hard to tell whether a fragment belongs with one or the other (note the Lomax "Love is Pleasin'" text, which suffers from the additional handicap of being in a Lomax publication; I gave up and listed it both places). I finally decided that there are enough songs which don't say "Waly waly" or "The water is wide" to split then.

It does leave an interesting genealogical question, though: You could produce "Waly Waly" by combining this with "Jamie Douglas," or you could start with "Waly Waly" and have this split off while a few verses floated into the longer ballad. Or it could just all float.

Moral of the story: Be sure to check entries under both songs. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0

File: Rits024

Love It Is a Dizziness

DESCRIPTION: Singer complains that love "winna lat a puir body gang about their business." "I drill the land that I should plow" and other foolish things. Love makes him more drunk than whiskey. "I first grew dizzy then gid daft and noo I'll dee for Peggy"

AUTHOR: James Hogg (source: Chambers and Whitelaw)

EARLIEST DATE: 1829 (Chambers)

KEYWORDS: courting love nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig/Duncan5 934, "Love It Is a Dizziness" (7 texts, 6 tunes)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 122, "Love It Is a Dizziness" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Robert Chambers, The Scottish Songs (Edinburgh, 1829), Vol I, pp. 152-153, "Love's Like a Dizziness"

Roud #6744

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Paddy's Wedding" (tune, per Greig/Duncan5 and Whitelaw)

NOTES [410 words]: Apparently, Whitelaw has his text from Hogg (1770-1836). That text says "Were Peggy's love to hire the job and save my heart frae breakin O I'd ... gang an spear for Mungo Park through Africa sae dreary O." That would date the text to between 1795 and 1806. "In 1795 the Association appointed Mungo Park [1771-1806] to explore the course of the River Niger" (source: "Biography: Mungo Park" at About: African History site).

Chambers has as Hogg's tune an earlier version of "Love's Like a Dizziness." - BS

According to Fleming, p. 15, Sir Joseph Banks, president of the Royal Society, in 1799 proposed an exploration of the Niger. Nothing came of it at the time, but Banks also headed the African Association, which sent out various exploratory parties.

Mungo Park had led an expedition to the East Indies which had gathered useful scientific data from 1792 to 1794 (Brumwell/Speck, p. 283). This brought him to the attention of Banks and his colleagues. He was the leader of the first expedition to the Niger to actually get there and back: "Then came Mungo Park, an intrepid Scot who was to become a legend in the annals of exploration. He went out twice, in 1795 and then in 1805. His first journey was under the auspices of the African Association and was funded accordingly: he was given two days' provisions. He did, however, reach the Niger after many vicissitudes..." (Fleming, p. 16).

"Many visissitudes" is an understatement; he was robbed of all his possessions, and also was imprisoned for a time, according to Kunitz/Haycraft, p. 393. But his journal -- the only book he ever wrote -- became quite popular, and he met Sir Walter Scott. It was almost a decade before anyone found funding for a second trip, however.

Park's "second [expedition] was sponsored by the government... and saw him leading a band of forty-four British redcoats to find the rest of the river. One by one the soldiers died. By the time Park reached the Niger at the town of Bussa only five of his original contingent were alive. Then, on some undetermined date in 1805, he was attacked on the river and the entire expedition was wiped out. As soon as the disaster became common knowledge, Park was revered as a hero" (Fleming, pp. 16-17).

The diseases which had killed so many of Park's men continued to be a problem for many years. In 1827, Park's son tried again to explore the Niger and complete his father's expedition. He too died of disease (Kunitz/Haycraft, p. 393). - RBW

Bibliography

- Fleming: Fergus Fleming, Barrow's Boys, Grove, 1998
- Kunitz/Haycraft: Stanley J. Kunitz and Howard Haycraft, Editors, British Authors Before 1800: A Biographical Dictionary, H. W. Wilson, 1952 (I use the fourth printing of 1965)

Love It Is a Folly

DESCRIPTION: "Love it is a folly That dwells within my breast It makes me melancholy So I can take no rest... I darst not keep her company." He wishes he were a swallow, or turtle [dove] to fly and be with her but he "must not keep her company"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (Owens-TexasFolkSongs-1ed)

KEYWORDS: courting love separation nonballad bird

FOUND IN: US (So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-1ed, pp. 170-171, "Love It Is a Folly" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6377

NOTES [25 words]: I rather suspect this is a by-blow of one of the American members of the "Farewell He" family -- but with only one version, I can't really prove it. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.5

File: Ow1E170

Love King Jesus

DESCRIPTION: "Elder, you say you love King Jesus; Elder, you say you love the Lord." "Oh, come and let us know, How you love King Jesus, Come and let us know... love the Lord." "Sister, you say you love King Jesus." "Sing and tell us how you love King Jesus"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1915 (Work-FolkSongOfTheAmericanNegro)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Work-FolkSongOfTheAmericanNegro, p. 69, "Love King Jesus" (1 text)
Roud #12076
Love Let Me In (Forty Long Miles; It Rains, It Hails)

DESCRIPTION: The singer arrives after a long journey, and appeals to the girl: "It rains, it blows, it hails, it snows ... love let me in." At first she turns him away because she is home alone. She changes her mind, takes him to bed and he marries her the next day.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1891 (Kidson-TraditionalTunes)
KEYWORDS: love marriage sex nightvisit
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf) Britain(England(North,South),Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (9 citations):
Greig/Duncan5 983, "Forty Long Miles" (1 text)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 90, "Glaw, Keser, Ergh Ow-cul Yma [It Rains, It Hails and Snows and Blows]" (1 text + Cornish translation, 1 tune, which shares elements of this song and "Let Me In This Ae Nicht")
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 452, "It's Forty Long Miles I've Travelled This Day" (1 text)
Hamer-GreenGroves, p. 22, "There Stands a Cottage" (1 text, 1 tune)
Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #90, "The Charming Bride" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kidson-TraditionalTunes, pp. 58-59, "Forty Miles" (1 text, 3 tunes)
Purslow-TheConstantLovers, p. 36, "Forty Long Miles" (1 text, 1 tune)
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 48, "Love, Let Me In" (1 text, 1 tune) DT, FORTYLNG*
Roud #608
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Rise Up Quickly and Let Me In (The Ghostly Lover)" (plot)
cf. "Let Me In This Ae Nicht" (plot)

Love Lifted Me

DESCRIPTION: "Love lifted me (x2), When nothing else would help, Love lifted me."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1988 (NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal)
KEYWORDS: religious love nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Roud #21076
NOTES [32 words]: The description is all of the Landis fragment. Many Landis songs seem not to be known anywhere else. This title is known from other sources, but I don't really know if it's the same song. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.1

Love Me Now

DESCRIPTION: "If you are ever going to love me, Love me now that I may know All the sweet and tender feelings Which from real affection flow. Love me now while I am living...." Would she deny water to the thirsty, or food to the hungry? If he dies, he won't need love

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1953 (Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric)
KEYWORDS: love courting rejection questions
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 16, "Love Me Now" (1 text plus mention of 1 more)
Roud #11383
Love Me or No

DESCRIPTION: "[I] will sing you a song, the best in my heart, For you know very well I have a sweetheart... But if he won't love me, kind sir, won't you?" If one lad proves false, she'll happily turn to another; "I don't care a straw whether you love me or no."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1940 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)
KEYWORDS: courting farewell abandonment
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, p. 493, "Love Me or No" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Farewell He" (subject) and references there
File: Beld493

Love on the Range

DESCRIPTION: "Little gal, I'm not a singer; if I were I'd sing to you A tale of love that sure would be a wonder." He can't play the guitar, either, but he is a good worker. "So, Chiquita, if you'll let me... Come, we'll hit life's trail and follow it -- together!"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1921 (Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys)
KEYWORDS: love courting cowboy
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys, pp. 98-99, "Love on the Range" (1 text)
File: ThLo098

Love Somebody, Yes I Do

DESCRIPTION: "Love somebody, yes I do (x3), Love somebody, but I won't tell who. Love somebody, yes I do (x3), And I hope somebody loves me too." "...Love somebody, yes I do, 'Tween sixteen and twenty-two."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (recording, Sid Harkreader)
KEYWORDS: love nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, pp. 140-141, "Love Somebody, Yes I Do" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Chase-AmericanFolkTalesAndSongs, p. 206, "I Love Somebody, Yes I Do" (1 tune, presumably this piece)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 141, "Love Somebody, Yes I Do" (1 text)
Roud #7407
RECORDINGS:
Arkansas Barefoot Boys, "I Love Somebody" (OKeh 45217, 1928)
Crook Brothers String Band, "Love Somebody" (Victor V-40099, 1929)
Sid Harkreader, "Love Somebody" (Vocalion 14887, 1924)
Land Norris, "I Love Somebody" (OKeh 45033, c. 1926; rec. 1925; on CrowTold02)
Joe & Tommy Thompson, "Love Somebody (Soldier's Joy)" (on ClassOT)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Soldier's Joy" (tune)
File: San140
Love Will Find Out the Way

DESCRIPTION: "Over the mountains and under the waves, Over the fountains and under the graves... Love will find the way." A catalog of the paths love follows, and a praise of its overwhelming power

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1794 (Percy)

KEYWORDS: love nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(England,Scotland)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 205-207, "Love Will Find Out the Way" (1 text)

Percy/Wheatley-ReliquesOfAncientEnglishPoetry III, pp. 232-234, "Love Will Find Out the Way" (1 text)

Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, pp. 174-177, "Truth's Integrity" (1 text)

Chappell/Wooldridge-OldEnglishPopularMusic I, pp. 189-190, "Love Will Find Out the Way" (1 tune, partial text)

Roud #13167

File: FVS205

Love-of-God Shave, The (Lather and Shave) [Laws Q15]

DESCRIPTION: Paddy asks the barber for a shave on credit. The barber is prepared; he has a razor just for such people. The injured Paddy flees the shop. Some time later, he hears a jackass bray near the shop and assumes someone else asked for a love-of-God shave

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1858

KEYWORDS: humorous animal trick

FOUND IN: US(Ap,MA,MW,SE,So) Britain(England(South)) Ireland Australia Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (16 citations):

Laws Q15, "The Love-of-God Shave (Lather and Shave)"

Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 249-251, "The Monkey Turned Barber" (3 texts, but only B2 is the piece; A and B1 are "The Monkey Turned Barber")

Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 178, "Lather and Shave" (1 text, 1 tune)

Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #240, "The Irish Barber" (1 text, 1 tune)

Cazden/Haufrecht/Studyer-FolkSongsOfTheCatskills 120, "Lather and Shave" (2 texts, 2 tunes)

Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 136, "Love O'God Razor" (1 text, 1 tune)

Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, pp. 211-212, "The Love-of-God Shave" (1 text, 1 tune)

Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 227, "The Irish Barber" (1 text, 1 tune)

Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 607, "Irishman's Shave" (1 text)

Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks 83, "Lather and Shave" (1 text)

Beck-TheyKnewPaulBunyan, pp. 240-241, "Sweet Love of God Shave" (1 text)

Stout-FolkloreFromIowa 106, pp. 134-135, "The Irish Barber" (1 text)

Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, pp. 291-292, "The Irish Barber" (1 text, 1 tune)

Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1229, p. 84, "Lather and Shave" (1 reference)

cf. Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan, p. 483, "The Trust Shave" (source notes only)

DT 526, LOVEGOD

Roud #571

RECORDINGS:
Agnus "The Ridge" MacDonald, "Lather and Shave" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth b.26(197), "Lather Em, Shave Em," John Ross (Newcastle), 1847-1852; also Harding B 11(1927), "Lather 'Em, Shave 'Em"; Harding B 11(2085), Harding B 11(2632), "Lather Em, Shave-Em"; Firth c.26(49), Harding B 11(1867), Harding B 11(1868), Harding B 11(2633), "[A] Love of God Shave"; Firth b.27(285), "The Love o' Good Shave"

LOCSinging, sb20272b, "Lather and Shave," H. De Marsan (New York), 1861-1864; also as202090, "Lather and Shave"

Murray, Mu23-y1:067, "Lather 'Em, Shave 'Em," James Lindsay (Glasgow), 19C

NLScotland, L.C.Fol.178.A.2(082), "A Love of God Shave," unknown, c.1870
SAME TUNE:
The San Francisco Rag Picker (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets p. 138)
NOTES [50 words]: Broadside Bodleian Firth b.27(285) is hard to read but has the tune as something like "Flare Up Neddy."
Broadside LOC Singing sb20272b: H. De Marsan dating per Studying Nineteenth-Century Popular Song by Paul Charosh in American Music, Winter 1997, Vol 15.4, Table 1, available at FindArticles site. - BS
Last updated in version 5.0
File: LQ15

Love, Farewell!
DESCRIPTION: "John and Mary making posies" when the Colonel calls "March, my lads." "Some for France, and some for Holland" with powdered hair and firelock shouldered. Mary's mother says, if he takes her daughter, "after death my ghost shall haunt thee"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames)
KEYWORDS: courting army war parting separation France mother ghost
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 235, "Love, Farewell!" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Gl 106)
Winstock-SongsAndMusicOfTheRedcoats, pp. 117-118, "Love Farewell" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1301
NOTES [93 words]: Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames: "An ancient piece, reminiscent of operations against the French and Dutch."
Roud lumps this with "The Harvest Shearin'." The only texts I have seen for that song are the four for Greig-Duncan1 101, which share no phrases, much less lines, with the Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames text. The chorus for Greig-Duncan1 is "Farewell love, for I maun leave you, Fare ye wel, I maun awa'" or "Love farewell for I maun leave you Farewell for I am away"; the chorus for Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames is "Love, farewell!" - BS
Last updated in version 3.2
File: WT235

Love's Adieu
DESCRIPTION: "The e'e o' the dawn, Eliza, Blinks over the dark, green sea... Yet still my dowie heart lingers To catch one sweet throb mair." The singer says they have been blessed, but he must go (for no explained reason); he promises to remember and return
AUTHOR: Joseph Grant
EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (Ord-BothySongsAndBallads); Grant died 1835
KEYWORDS: love courting separation
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 43-44, "Love's Adieu" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #3788
File: Ord043

Love's Fierce Desire and Hope's of Recovery
DESCRIPTION: The man says "Now the Tyrant hath stolen my dearest away" but he will remain faithful to Celia. Celia acknowledges his exile and pain. She will overcome all obstacles to return to him.
AUTHOR: Laurence Price (according to Bodleian header for broadsides Douce Ballads 1(132a) and Douce Ballads 1(114b))
EARLIEST DESCRIPTION: before 1681 (broadside, Bodleian Douce Ballads 1(132a))
LONG DESCRIPTION: The man says "Now the Tyrant hath stolen my dearest away" but he will remain faithful "Till my Celia and I in our loves may be free." Celia answers that she understands "how in exile thou hast wandered the wood But I am resolved thy sorrows to free" She will overcome all obstacles to return to him: "I'll swim through the Ocean upon my bare brest, To find out my Darling whom I do love best, And when I have found him with Double delight, I'le comfort him kindly, by day and by night; And I'le be more faithful then the Turtle Dove, Which never at all did prove false to her love"; "The horn it shall sound, and the Hounds make a noise To fill my loves heart with ten thousand rare joy [sic]"

KEYWORDS: love exile separation nonballad royalty

FOUND IN:
Roud #V9208

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Douce Ballads 1(132a), "Loves Fierce Desire, and Hopes of Recovery" or "A True and Brief Discription[sic] of Two Resolved Lovers" ("Now the tyrant hath stolen my dearest away"), T. Vere (London), 1644-1680; also Douce Ballads 1(114b), "Loves Fierce Desire, and Hopes of Recovery" or "A True and Brief Description of Two Resolved Lovers"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Fair Angel of England" (tune, per Bodleian broadsides Douce Ballads 1(132a) and Douce Ballads 1(114b))
cf. "Some Rival Has Stolen My True Love Away" (derivative)

NOTES [693 words]: Broadwood points out the similarities between this ballad and its derivative, "Some Rival Has Stolen My True Love Away," "Love's Fierce Desire" has 60 lines and Broadwood's text for "Rival" has 12; they share 8 lines and one more has the same shape, rhyme and intent, but different nouns [see the long description above for the shared lines]. In addition, his exile -- the subject of "Rival's" second line, is acknowledged at line 30 of "Love's Fierce Desire."

"But the whole ballad [of 'Love's Fierce Desire ...'] is distinct, and artificial in character, and would seem to be based upon some older song" The tune for "Love's Fierce Desire," "Fair Angel of England," "refers to the wooing of a 'fair maid of London' by King Edward IV.[r. 1461-1483], who appears as an imperious and dangerously determined lover. Possibly he is the 'Tyrant' ... referred to." (source: Lucy E. Broadwood, editor, English Traditional Songs and Carols (London, 1908 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 125).

Other than tune and the general subject of a woman pursued by royalty, "Fair Angel of England" has nothing in common with "Love's Fierce Desire": King Edward asks his target "grant a King favour thy true love to be"; she rejects him absolutely -- "Leave me most noble King tempt not in vain" -- and comments besides that "My favour is vanisht my beauty is past" (see broadsides Bodleian, Douce Ballads 2(178b), "A Courtly New Ballad of the Princely Wooing of the Fair Maid of London by King Edward" ("Fair angel of England thy beauty most bright"), F. Coles (London), 1663-1674; also 4o Rawl. 566(171), Douce Ballads 3(77b), "A Courtly New Ballad of the Princely Wooing of the Fair Maid of London, by King Edward"). "Edward was an insatiable womaniser with, it appears, a special taste for older ladies" (Anthony Cheetham in Fraser, p. 150). - BS

That Edward IV was an insatiable womanizer is beyond question; for some details of his love life, see the notes to "Jane Shore." His wife, Elizabeth Woodville or Wydeville, was certainly older than he was; her birth date is not certainly known (Wagner, p. 301, lists it as c. 1437), but we know that she had two children when her first husband was killed in 1461, in which year Edward IV was only 18. And it does seem to be true that he pursued her, and she rejected him, refusing to allow him into her bed unless he married her (Dockray, p. 5, cites the contemporary and near-contemporary sources). But nowhere did she claim at the time that "her beauty is past"; indeed, she used her looks to attract the easily-distracted king.

So I doubt "Fair Angel of England" is about Edward IV and Elizabeth Woodville, and certainly this song isn't; Elizabeth was a widow, not a married woman, when Edward IV pursued her. If you really want more about Edward and Elizabeth, though, see the notes to "The Children in the Wood (The Babes in the Woods)" [Laws Q34]. - RBW

Besides being reworked in the oral tradition as "Some Rival Has Stolen my True Love Away," "Love's Fierce Desire" was well enough known to be copied. A song, dated July 26, 1678, to the tune of "Though the Tyrant Hath Stolen, &c" is recorded in the diary of Henry Teonge. It begins "Though the Fates have ordayned my true love away, And I am constrained on ship-board to stay"; a sailor in war time promises to remain true and asks that his lover do the same. No other words are shared with "Love's Fierce Desire" (source: Henry Teonge, The Diary of Henry Teonge Chaplain on Board His Majesty's Ships Assistance, Bristol, and Royal Oak, Anno 1675 to 1679 (London, 1825 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 248-249)). - BS

Of course, it could be from the period after the STC's cutoff date. But the Douce broadside, at least, attributes it simply to "L. P.," not to Price specifically. - RBW

Bibliography

Love's Not Like It Used to Be

DESCRIPTION: "They used to get married for love but now they get married for gold... what we called love in those old days it's not what it used to be." Once men were boss. Now wives divorce and go home to mother. Old maids can't find love "like it used to be"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports)
KEYWORDS: love, marriage, gold, nonballad, husband, mother, oldmaid, wife

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 249-253, "Love's Not Like It Used to Be" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #24245

File: Guig249

Love's Old Sweet Song

DESCRIPTION: In our youth at dusk love's song "wove itself into our dream." Now, "still to us at twilight comes love's old song." "Till the end, when life's dim shadows fall" love is found "the sweetest song of all"

AUTHOR: Words: J. Clinton Bingham ; Tune: James L. Molloy (1884) (Source: MUNFLA/Leach; Heart-Songs)

EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Heart-Songs)

KEYWORDS: age, love, nonballad

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Heart-Songs, pp. 276-277, "Love's Old, Sweet Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #53, "Love's Old, Sweet Song" (1 text)
Roud #18217

RECORDINGS:
John McCormack, "Love's Old Sweet Song" (Victor 6776, 1927)
Maudie Sullivan, "Just a Song At Twilight" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

NOTES [30 words]: The description follows McCormack's recording. Maudie Sullivan's is a fragment. Maudie Sullivan sang another McCormack song indexed here: "Little Town in the Old County Down." - BS

Last updated in version 6.0

File: RcuLo01SS

Love's Young Dream

DESCRIPTION: "Oh! the days are gone... When my dream of life, from morn till night, Was love." First love "'twas light, that ne'er can shine again On life's dull stream!"

AUTHOR: Thomas Moore (1779-1852)

EARLIEST DATE: before 1845 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(3385))

KEYWORDS: love, lyric, nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Loved by a Man

DESCRIPTION: There was a rich young girl courted by an Irish lad who "has left her and gone far away" Her beauty has faded; "see what it comes to [to] be loved by a man." If he returns "she'll crown him with joy." She is "bound in love-chains and can never be free"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1976 (Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan)
KEYWORDS: courting rejection separation beauty floating verses nonballad
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan 37, "Loved by a Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #5232
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Green Grows the Laurel (Green Grow the Lilacs)" (floating lyrics)
NOTES [27 words]: This song has floating lines rather floating verses such as "Her cheeks they were once like the bud of a rose, But now they're as pale as the lily that grows." - BS

Loved You in the Days of Joy

DESCRIPTION: "I loved you in the days of joy, When you was but a slender boy." She recalls him as he was, "But times have changed... The stamp of manhood is on our brow." Now she lays down her pen, but her love remains even though he has abandoned her

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1953 (Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric)
KEYWORDS: love courting betrayal separation
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 26, "Loved You in the Days of Joy" (1 text)
Roud #11334
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Midnight on the Stormy Deep" (lyrics)
NOTES [54 words]: This shares several verses with "Midnight on the Stormy Deep" ("The deep deep sea may us divide"; "Farewell to you, I'd rather make My home upon some icy lake"). The direction of the influence is not clear, since "Stormy Deep" can be shown to date back to the 1850s, but this also sounds like it comes from that period. - RBW

Lovel3y Ann

DESCRIPTION: The singer's friends take him to Belfast to sail to America on the Union and leave Ann behind. The ship hits a rock off Rathlin in a storm. All passengers reach shore in boats. He decides to stay home with Ann rather than try to sail to America again.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1826 (chapbook by James Smyth, Belfast, according to Leyden-
Lovely Annie

DESCRIPTION: Annie promised to be true but while the singer is in "the North Highlands to work by the day" she marries someone else. He would have preferred transportation. His "mind turns to madness since Annie's away" His master threatens to send him to Bedlam.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Tunney-StoneFiddle)

KEYWORDS: love courting separation betrayal madness

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Tunney-StoneFiddle, pp. 163-164, "Lovely Annie" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #5331

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "False Mallie" (theme: a man driven "mad" by a woman's infidelity)

cf. "The Green Bushes, The [Laws P2]," particularly the "Nut Bushes" version (theme: a man driven "mad" by a woman's infidelity)

File: TSF164

Lovely Armoy

DESCRIPTION: The singer is preparing to leave Armoy. He recalls all the pleasures and beauties of home. He describes his sad farewell from the girl he loves. Now in Belfast, he can write no more, as he must board the ship

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: emigration separation parting

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H9, p. 186, "Lovely Armoy" (1 text, 1 tune)

Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 43, "Lovely Armoy" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #13541
Lovely Banks of Boyne, The [Laws P22]
DESCRIPTION: The singer is courted by Jimmie, who wins his way into her heart and her bed but then abandons her. She hears that he is married to a rich lady in London. She must remain in Dublin, far from her love and her home by the Boyne
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1886 (broadside, Bodleian Firth b.26(316))
KEYWORDS: seduction separation betrayal
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar,Ont) Ireland US(MW)
REFERENCES (7 citations):
Laws P22, "The Lovely Banks of the Boyne"
Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster 17, "The Banks of the Boyne" (1 text, 1 tune)
Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 2, "The Banks of Boyne" (1 text, 1 tune)
Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 160, "The Lovely Banks of Boyne" (1 text, 1 tune)
Vikár/Panagapka-SongsNorthWoodsSungByOJAbbott 10, "The Lovely Banks of Boyne" (1 text, 1 tune)
Dean-FlyingCloud, pp. 104-105, "The Banks of Boyne" (1 text)
DT 504, LOVLBOYN
Roud #995
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth b.26(316), "Poor Flora on the Banks of Boyne," H. Such (London), 1863-1885
NOTES [43 words]: The following broadsides could not be read and verified: Bodleian, Harding B 11(3079), "Poor Flora on the Banks of the Boyne," J. Catnach (London), 1813-1838; Bodleian, Harding B 11(3078), "Poor Flora on the Banks of the Boyne," J. Pitts (London), 1819-1844 - BS
Last updated in version 5.1

Lovely Banks of Mourne, The DESCRIPTION: A farmer's son sees a girl bathing by the banks of the Mourne. He hides behind a bush to watch. At last she sees him and flees. He pursues, and offers her his hand and produce. She consents to marry. The singer will not reveal her name
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love courting clothes marriage
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H595, p.468 , "The Lovely Banks of Mourne" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9454
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Baffled Knight" [Child 112] (subject)
NOTES [25 words]: Sort of a "Clear Away the Morning Dew" with the ending reversed. It's not nearly as much fun, though, which doubtless explains its limited currency. - RBW

Lovely Banna Strand
DESCRIPTION: A German ship is bringing 20,000 rifles for the Irish rebels, but the car which was to meet the Germans crashes. The rifles are not delivered, and Sir Roger Casement, who planned the affair, is hanged
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1962 (Galvin)
KEYWORDS: Ireland rebellion execution injury wreck
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1916 - The Casement affair (also the Easter Rising)
FOUND IN: Ireland Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan 45, "Lonely Banna Strand" (1 text, 1 tune)
Galvin-IrishSongsOfResistance, pp. 57-58, "Lovely Banna Strand" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #5234
RECORDINGS:
Frankie Nash, "Lonely Banna Strand" (on ITMA/CapeShoreNL)
NOTES [848 words]: During the bloody stalemate of 1915-1917, both sides in the First World War sought ways out of the dilemma. Britain tried "peripheral strategies" (her reward being the Gallipoli campaign); Germany dabbled with submarine warfare.

The Casement Affair was another of these sideshows. Ireland wanted freedom (they had been granted Home Rule in 1914, but the war and the disturbances halted its implementation; that plus the absence of many loyalists in the trenches caused a slow but steady increase among forces devoted to rebellion in Ireland); the Germans wanted to distract the British. It was an ideal match.

Roger Casement (1864-1916) was a Protestant who was knighted for his investigations into European cruelty in Africa. Despite this, he became an Irish patriot in the decade before World War One. One might almost think this disturbed his reason.

In 1914, Casement went to Germany and negotiated a "treaty." Among its other provisions, it offered to form Irish prisoners of war into an "Irish Brigade" to fight for Germany. (It turned out to be more of an Irish Platoon; a total of 55 soldiers chose to join it; Kee II, pp. 246-250.) In exchange, Germany would recognize Ireland. It would also, "[i]n the event of a German naval victory affording a means of reaching the coast of Ireland," send forces to Ireland.

Of course, the British navy was much larger than the German, and the Germans never won their victory. They only made one attempt -- at Jutland -- and while more British than German ships went down there, it was a clear British strategic victory. The German navy acted like a whipped cur for the rest of the war, and the sailors actually revolted rather than go to sea in 1918.

In 1916, Casement was still in Germany, being ignored by all parties. Indeed, he had spent time in a sanatorium (Kee II, p. 264), and plans were made to retire him to America. Then came the news of the Easter Rising. Germany decided to give this some very elementary support -- a tramp steamer carrying 20,000 rifles captured from the Russians (and probably not in very good condition), with minimal ammunition and a handful of machine guns.

Casement was horrified at this pinch-penny scheme; it was too little too late. No troops were to be sent, only the weapons. His protests achieved one thing: He was sent along with the arms. On April 9, 1916, the weapons set sail on the Aud (also known, to the Germans at least, as the Libau; Kee II, p. 266), a ship so cheap that she did not have a radio; she was disguised as a Norwegian freighter. Casement was to come on a submarine. The Irish never made contact with the Aud; the ship showed up in Tralee Bay, but no one was expecting her until later. She waited a day for someone to meet her, was ignored, and left.

Eventually the British (who knew many details of the plot) found the ship. Ordered to head for Queenstown, the Aud's captain blew her up before she arrived in harbor (April 22).

Casement had set out by submarine on April 12. Somehow the sub (U19) and the Aud failed to make contact. So the boat's captain put Casement ashore at Banna Strand. He was captured on Good Friday and recognized; on April 22 -- the same day the Aud was blown up -- he was sent to London. He was hanged for treason on August 3, 1916.

When the Casement affair came out, MacNeill went all out to stop the Rebellion. It didn't stop the Dublin rebels -- but it kept the rest of the country quiet. Rather than helping rebellion, Casement's cloak-and-dagger-and-puffery operation hurt it (Kee II, p. 262).

Casement's death, however, proved very valuable to the rebel cause. After a series of quick executions following the Easter Rising, the British government halted the shootings and simply imprisoned the surviving rebels. But Casement was treated as a separate case. He was tried and convicted, and the British parliament saw no reason to halt his execution, which took place on August 3. The British also released his diary; this seemed to show that he was homosexual (though charges were made that the references were interpolations). In any case, his death seemed to confirm that the British still were abusing the Irish. (See Kee III, pp. 12-14). - RBW Bibliography

- Foy/Barton: Michael Foy and Brian Barton, The Easter Rising, 1999 (I use the 2000 Sutton edition)
- Kee II: Robert Kee, The Bold Fenian Men, being volume II of The Green Flag (covering the period from around 1848 to the Easter Rising), Penguin, 1972
- Kee III: Robert Kee, Ourselves Alone, being volume III of The Green Flag (covering the brief but intense period from 1916 to the establishment of constitutional government in the 1920s), Penguin, 1972

Last updated in version 4.5
File: PGa057

Lovely Cottage Maid, The (The Cottage Maid)

DESCRIPTION: The singer courts Emily but she remains true to William, her sailor, gone ten years. William shows a token identifying her dead lover. After satisfying himself of Emily's fidelity, William identifies himself. The two marry.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1863 (broadside, Bodleian Bod7126 Harding B 11(157))

LONG DESCRIPTION: The singer courts Emily, but she remains true to William, her sailor, though he has been gone ten years in the Crimean War. William says her lover is dead, and shows a token with her lover's name. She won't marry the newcomer. William, certain now of her fidelity, identifies himself, and says he has "land and gold in plenty". They marry.

KEYWORDS: love courting marriage war return reunion death gold sailor brokentoken

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 251-253, "The Lovely Cottage Maid (The Cottage Maid)" (3 texts, 1 tune)

Roud #24245

RECORDINGS: Joshua Osborne, "The Lovely Cottage Maid" (on NFAGuigné01)

BROADSIDES:

Bodleian, Bod7126 Harding B 11(157), "The Cottage Maid" ("One morning in my rambles as I walked by the sea shore"), H. Such (London), 1849-1862; also Bod11581 Harding B 11(1244), Bod5163 Harding B 15(323a), "Sweet Cottage Maid"

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Dark-Eyed Sailor (Fair Phoebe and her Dark-Eyed Sailor)" [Laws N35] (plot, themes)

NOTES [118 words]: The token is one difference between "The Dark-Eyed Sailor" and "The Cottage Maid": in "The Dark-Eyed Sailor" (see, for example, broadside Bodleian Johnson Ballads 2483). Phoebe says "I took a gold ring from off my hand, We broke the token, here's part with me" ... "Then half the ring did young William show."; in "The Cottage Maid" (see, for example, broadside Bodleian Harding B 11(157)) Willie says "Your William sailed along with me ... He gave me this love token, his name you'll find, Saying, Take this to my Emily"

One of Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports's texts is a verse from broadside Bodleian Harding B 11(1244), cited above. Another is a verse printed in a Newfoundland periodical. - BS

Last updated in version 4.2
File: Guig251

Lovely Derry On The Banks Of The Foyle

DESCRIPTION: "Cruel misfortune" forces the singer to leave Derry and Mary for the sea. Her letter asks him to return and marry. He will return "when I make a fortune ... I will build her a mansion"

AUTHOR: unknown
Lovely Glenshesk (I)

DESCRIPTION: The singer has been "forced to my pen To write down the praises of the top of the glen." He tells of the birds and the hills of his home in Glenshesk, which he must leave tomorrow. His family has been there for generations; he grieves to depart

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: home rambling
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H544, pp. 165-166, "Lovely Glenshesk (I)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13476
NOTES [30 words]: The singer claims his family has been present in Glenshesk since the Battle of Orra. All I've been able to learn about this battle is that it took place in the sixteenth century. - RBW
File: HHH544

Lovely Glenshesk (II)

DESCRIPTION: "This evening I take my departure from the lovely town where I was bred"; he is bidding farewell to friends and relatives. Having come of age, he must go to "a far foreign land." He describes the temptations faced by humanity, and hopes to avoid them

AUTHOR: John McCormick (?)
EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (Sam Henry collection; tune collected 1905?)
KEYWORDS: emigration farewell
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H28a, pp. 194-195, "Lovely Glenshesk (IIa)"; H547, pp. 195-196, "In Praise of the Glen" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Tunney-WhereSongsDoThunder, pp. 175-176, "Lovely Glenshesk" (1 text)
Roud #5281
NOTES [96 words]: The Biblical allusion, "The Israelites they were in bondage and they murmured at their going away," actually refers to a multitude of troubles during the Exodus; whenever the Israelites faced problems, or just decided they were tired of something, they "murmured" and talked about going back to Egypt.
A handful of examples: Exodus 14:10ff. (the people are afraid when pursued by Pharaoh); Exodus 16:2ff. (the people demand meat); Exodus 17:2ff. (the people want water); Numbers 11:4ff. (more demands for meat).
The story of the serpent tempting Eve is found in Genesis 3. - RBW
File: HHH028a
Lovely Irish Maid, The

DESCRIPTION: Two lovers talk on Blackwater-side. He says "when I'm in Americay I'll be true to my Irish maid." She says "in Americay some pretty girls you will see." She says many who have crossed the Atlantic are drowned so "stay on shore." We assume he leaves.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: courting parting dialog lover emigration
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf) Ireland Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Peacock, pp. 551-552, "The Lovely Irish Maid" (1 text, 1 tune)
OCanainn-SongsOfCork, pp. 80-81, "Blackwater Side" (1 text, 1 tune)
Stewart/Belle-Stewart-QueenAmangTheHeather, pp. 60-61, "Black Waterside" (1 text)
Roud #6319

RECORDINGS:
Mrs. Clara Stevens, "The Lovely Irish Maid" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Down By Blackwaterside" (plot, lyrics)

NOTES [64 words]: Kennedy lumps this with "Down By Blackwaterside," and I have to admit that there are strong points of contact, both lyric and in plot. This song, however, appears to take a slightly different direction, so I have, with much hesitation, split them. - RBW

The OCanainn-SongsOfCork text adds a verse to Peacock and ends "I'll stay at home and I'll not roam from my lovely Irish Maid." - BS

Last updated in version 3.8
File: Pea551

Lovely Jamie

DESCRIPTION: Brothers Jamie and Darby sell their peat and drink away the proceeds. They enlist in the army and are sent to the Crimea. At Sevastopol, Jamie loses his legs. The rest of the song wonders how the family will survive with him crippled

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: war soldier drink injury disability
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1853-1856 - Crimean War (Britain and France actively at war with Russia 1854-1855)
Nov 5, 1854 - Battle of Inkerman clears the way for the siege of Sevastopol (the city fell in the fall of 1855)
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H618, pp. 85-86, "Lovely Jamie" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9045

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Mrs. McGrath" (plot)

File: HHH618

Lovely Jane from Enniskea

DESCRIPTION: Willy Bell meets Jane McCann. Neither recognizes the other. He asks her to marry but she is still waiting for Willy after ten years. He shows her the ring she had given him before he left for America. She welcomes him home. They marry.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday)
KEYWORDS: love courting separation marriage America Ireland ring reunion
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday 5, pp. 9,101,157, "Lovely Jane from Enniskea" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lovely Joan

DESCRIPTION: Young man, out riding, comes upon Joan. He offers her a ring/purse of gold in return for a roll in the hay; she says the ring is more use to her than 20 maidenheads. She takes the ring, then hops on his horse and rides off to her true love's gate.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1828 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2)

KEYWORDS: virtue seduction bargaining trick virginity

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South),Scotland(Bord))

REFERENCES (8 citations):
- Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 115, "Handsome Shone the Dairymaid";
- Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2, pp. 189-190, "Handsome Joan the Dairy Maid" (2 texts)
- Sharp-OneHundredEnglishFolksongs 57, "Sweet Lovely Joan" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 46-47, "Sweet Lovely Joan" (1 text)
- Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 469
- VaughanWilliams/Lloyd-PenguinBookOfEnglishFolksongs, p. 64, "Lovely Joan" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #82, "Lovely Joan" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Purslow-TheConstantLovers, pp.95-96, "Sweet Lovely Joan" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #64, "Lovely Joan" (1 text, 1 tune)
- DT, SWTJOAN SWTLJOAN* SWTJOAN4*

Roud #592

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Harding B 11(2226), "Lovely Joan" ("A story unto you I will relate") , J. Catnach (London), 1813- 1838; also Harding B 11(4358), Firth c.21(24)[some words illegible], Harding B 11(2225), Harding B 11(797), Harding B 11(3833), Harding B 11(2227), "Lovely Joan"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "The Maid and the Horse" (plot)
- cf. "The Broomfield Hill" (Child 43) and references there

NOTES [26 words]: Damn fool. -PJS

In Sharp's bowdlerized version, the young man asks Joan to marry him and says that the purse of gold is worth more than twenty husbands! - (PJS)

Last updated in version 4.2

File: ShH57

---

Lovely Katie of Liskehaun

DESCRIPTION: The singer loves "lovely Katie of Liskehaun" from afar; she is "far superior in wealth." If Paris had seen her he would have chosen her over Helen. He leaves at summer end but he'll be back to "make application to my sweet young Katie"

AUTHOR: C.T. Ahern (per broadside Bodleian 2806 c.8(271))

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Olochlann-IrishStreetBallads); c.1867 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 26(383))

KEYWORDS: love beauty money travel

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Olochlann-IrishStreetBallads 99, "Lovely Katie of Liskehaun" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #3048

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Harding B 26(383), "Lovely Katey of Liskehan," P. Brereton (Dublin), c.1867; also 2806 c.8(271), "Lovely Katty of Liscahah"; Harding B 26(384), "Lovely Keaty of Liskehan"
Lovely Lowland Maid, The

DESCRIPTION: Mary Ann sends her sailor away "because he looked so poor." She invites him in when he shows her "a purse of gold" Now he rejects her. She and another suitor kill the sailor for his gold. There is a witness. Both are condemned to die.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Peacock)

KEYWORDS: greed infidelity warning betrayal homicide poverty money trial punishment sailor

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Peacock, pp. 620-621, "The Lovely Lowland Maid" (1 text, 1 tune)
Broadwood-EnglishTraditionalSongsAndCarols, pp. 66-67, "The Little Lowland Maid" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST Pea620 (Partial)
Roud #307

RECORDINGS:
Patrick Rossiter, "The Lovely Lowland Maid" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Cruel Lowland Maid

NOTES [42 words]: The Lesley Nelson-Burns site Folk Music of England Scotland Ireland, Wales & America collection includes a text named The Little Lowland Maid with a note that "This appeared on a broadside entitled The Cruel Lowland Maid that was printed by Ryle." - BS

Last updated in version 2.8

File: Pea620

Lovely Mary Donnelly

DESCRIPTION: "O lovely Mary Donnelly, my joy, my only best, If fifty girls were round you, I'd love you still the best." He describes her face and hair. He falls in love with her at a dance. She has many sweethearts. He is poor and has no hope of winning her.

AUTHOR: William Allingham (1824-1889) (source: OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads)

EARLIEST DATE: 1888 (Sparling); 1887? (_Irish Songs and Poems_?, suggested by OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads)

KEYWORDS: love beauty dancing nonballad hair poverty

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 53, "Lovely Mary Donnelly" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [117 words]: William Allingham is known primarily for one piece, "The Fairies" ("Up the airy mountain, Down the rushy glen"). Nonetheless he was a fairly major poet in his day; Patrick C. Power, A Literary History of Ireland, p. 159, writes "William Allingham was coeval also with the 'lost generation' [apparently the famine era] but he survived until 1888. He dispersed his talents imitating English poets such as Tennyson and his poetry is tinged with... pre-Raphaelitism.... Nevertheless, he wrote some ballads in the country style and poems inspired by his native Ballyshannon in County Donegal.... It appears that Allingham allowed himself to feel apart from the traditions of his native country...." - RBW

File: OLCM053
Lovely Nancy (I) [Laws N33]

DESCRIPTION: The singer meets a girl and asks her what she is doing so far from home. She says she is seeking her love, gone these three years. He takes out his half of their broken ring and agrees to marry her and stay at home

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia)
KEYWORDS: separation brokentoken marriage
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar) Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Laws N33, "Lovely Nancy I"
Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp. 187-188, "Lovely Nancy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 70, "Faithful Nancy, or One Fine Summer's Morning" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 746, LOVNANC2*
Roud #1449
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "John (George) Riley (I)" [Laws N36] and references there
File: LN33

Lovely Nancy (IV)

DESCRIPTION: In this confused song, the singer courts a girl, who accuses him of not loving her. He claims he courted her only in jest. As he leaves her, she "hopes you and I will be judged on one day." If he survives his voyage, he hopes to return and ease her pain

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love courting abandonment separation floatingverses
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H637, p. 385, "Lovely Nancy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #443
NOTES [116 words]: This partakes of so many songs it's almost impossible to list them. The first verse is "When first into this country"; the last is "The Diamonds of Derry" or something similar. In between, we see lines or themes from "The Blacksmith," "The Wagoner's Lad," and any number of other betrayed love songs. There are also a few catch phrases from other "Lovely Nancy" songs. But I can't see that the result qualifies as a version of any of these myriad sources. The notes in Sam Henry posit a link to Laws H12, "The Lonesome (Stormy) Scenes of Winter," with which Roud lumps the song. Belden also alludes to the link, but says (correctly, in my view) that they are simply pieces on a similar theme. - RBW
File: HHH637

Lovely Nancy (VI)

DESCRIPTION: The singer courts Nancy. She and her mother reject me. Nancy marries "a boasty captain." He meet her walking in the fields; she bows her head and turns away. She knows she would have been happier with him. Young girls don't "throw your first love away"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: courting love marriage rejection warning mother
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, p. 477, "Lovely Nancy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9792
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Banks of Sweet Primroses" (floating lyrics)
NOTES [37 words]: Floating lines shared with The Banks of Sweet Primroses: Come all young girls I pray take warning, Don't ever throw your first love away, For there's many a dark and cloudy morning Brings forth a pleasant sunshiny day." - BS
File: Pea477
Lovely Newfoundlander, The
DESCRIPTION: "You may sing of maids of many lands," but none beats the Newfoundlander. Her form is perfect, she is sweet, lovely, can row a boat, catch a fish, garden, "her brain is sharp as needles," she knows when and when not to talk, can sing and dance, etc.
AUTHOR: Chris Cobb
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: beauty dancing flowers lyric nonballad
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 370-371, "The Lovely Newfoundlander" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9788
File: Pea370

Lovely Night
DESCRIPTION: "Lovely night! O lovely night, spreading over hill and meadow, Soft and slow thy hazy shadow, Soon our weary eyelids close...." "Holy night, O holy night, placing brighter worlds before us." The singer wishes to never return "to this weary earth"
AUTHOR: F. X. Chwatal (source: Heart-Songs)
EARLIEST DATE: before 1842 (Bodleian broadsides)
KEYWORDS: nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Heart-Songs, p. 332, "Lovely Night" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13876
BROADSIDES:
NOTES [16 words]: This seems to have been popular in broadsides. Why anyone would actually sing it is beyond me. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.0
File: HeSo332

Lovely Ohio, The
DESCRIPTION: The listeners are urged to emigrate to Ohio. The delights of the country are described: fish in the river, good cropland, sugar cane, no Indians. Both men and women are encouraged to come
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1960
KEYWORDS: emigration home nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 39, "The Lovely Ohio" (1 text, 1 tune)
Botkin-TreasuryMississippiRiverFolklore, p. 563, "We'll Hunt the Buffalo!" (1 text, 1 tune, with the chorus of "Shoot the Buffalo" and lyrics from "The Lovely Ohio")
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 77, "Shoot the Buffalo" (1 text, called "Ohio" by the informant and clearly this piece rather than "Shoot the Buffalo," though the two do mix)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, p. 85, (broadside print of "Battle of Stonington" and "Banks of the Ohio" (1 text)
DT, OHIÖBNKS*
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Pleasant Ohio" (subject)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Lovely on the Water

DESCRIPTION: "As I walked out one morning in the springtime of the year," the singer hears a sailor and his girl singing together. He must go; "it's lovely on the water to hear the music play." She asks to come; he refuses; she faints; they part; many sailors are lost

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1908 (Vaughan Williams)
KEYWORDS: sailor separation death travel music
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #66, "Lovely on the Water" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1539
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "High Germany" (theme, some lyrics)

Lovely River Finn, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer recalls school days in Downrye by the river. He "fished for perch and trawled for pike." "Now I'm getting old and grey' and soon his bones will lie in Connon's church graveyard.

AUTHOR: John McKiernan (source: Steiner01)
EARLIEST DATE: 2012 (Steiner01)
KEYWORDS: age death fishing nonballad youth
FOUND IN: Ireland
Roud #22114
RECORDINGS:
Marge Steiner, "The Lovely River Finn" (on Steiner01)

Lovely Sally (You Broken-Hearted Heroes)

DESCRIPTION: Jamie, a militiaman, is being sent overseas. Sally comes with him to Belfast, and cries at their parting. She left her parents for him; how can she go back? Jamie's father promises to care for her. The song concludes with a wish for all militiamen

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: soldier separation father mother home abandonment war
FOUND IN: Ireland Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H549, pp. 81-82, "You Broken-Hearted Heroes" ; H 724, pp. 82-83, "Lovely Sally" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 111, "The Spanish Shore" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 178, "The Spanish Volunteer" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9046 and 2784
NOTES [424 words]: Sam Henry's two texts of this song are very similar though not identical; the same simply cannot be said of the two tunes. The first, said by Sean O'Boyle to be "The Winding Banks of Erne," is in G major and 6/8 time -- and takes shoehorning to fit the text. The second, though listed as being in G, looks to be in E minor, and is in 4/4. It fits the song much better, as well. The third tune, Creighton's, is in 4/4, but not identical to the Henry tune, though much of that may be the way Angelo Dornan ornamented it. It's clearly in G, though.

The two Irish versions do not say where the battle took place. In Angelo Dornan's Canadian fragment, though, the battle is located on the Spanish shore. Could this be a localized version? If so, then Ben Schwartz (based solely on Creighton; we had not at the time noticed that this was the same song as the Irish version) suggests this localization:

"My guess is that this refers to Irish participation on the Cristino side of the First Carlist [or Seven Years] War (for example, with the British Auxiliary Legion 1835-1837 (7th Irish Light Infantry, 9th Irish, 10th Munster Light Infantry, 2nd Lancers Queen's Own Irish) as at San Sebastian 5 May 1836 (source Stephen Thomas's site re Military History and Wargaming)"

The above suggestion makes sense, though the possibility also exists that it's from Wellington's Peninsular campaign, or the various conflicts over Gibraltar and Minorca. We probably won't know for certain unless a more explicit text shows up. - RBW, BS

Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 makes this a reference to the Peninsular War (1808-1814). It might refer to Irish participation on the Cristino [supporting Queen Christina] side in the First Carlist War (for example, with the British Auxiliary Legion 1835-1837 (7th Irish Light Infantry, 9th Irish, 10th Munster Light Infantry, 2nd Lancers Queen's Own Irish) as at San Sebastian 5 May 1836 (source Stephen Thomas's site re Military History and Wargaming)

The ballad is recorded on one of the CD's issued around the time of the bicentennial of the 1798 Irish Rebellion. See:

Franke Harte and Donal Lunny, "Armagh Volunteer" (on Franke Harte and Donal Lunny, "My Name is Napoleon Bonaparte," Hummingbird Records HBCD0027 (2001)).

Harte's final verse is substantially the same as the Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 111 fragment.

Harte, like Moylan, has this refer to the Peninsular War. "It is significant that the 'volunteer' in the song says that 'He was for ced to take the bounty and then to sail awa.'" - BS

File: HHH549

Lovely Story, The (The Sufferings of Christ)

DESCRIPTION: "'A story most lovely I'll tell, Of Jesus the wondrous surprise, He suffered to save us from Hell...." Jesus had pity on, and bled for, the "lost race." Judas hailed him with a kiss. He was tried before Pilate and crucified. Paradise awaits his followers

AUTHOR: William Walker?

EARLIEST DATE: 1835 (Southern Harmony)

KEYWORDS: religious Jesus

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, pp. 63-64, "The Crucifixion of Christ" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #16619

NOTES [551 words]: This song seems very rare in tradition, and it also caused the hymnal-compilers some confusion. Charlie Spencer, the informant in Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, thought it was two centuries old, and written by a London songwriter named Harris. The 1971 Denson version of the Original Sacred Harp prints it on p. 104 under the title "The Lovely Story," credited to "E. J. King, about 1850," but admits that it does not know whether King wrote or arranged the song.

The earliest trace I can find is the 1835 Southern Harmony, where it is called "The Sufferings of Christ" and credited to William Walker, who of course arranged many shape note songs. Whoever wrote it (and I suspect the words and music are by different authors), it is certainly well-endowed with Biblical allusions:

In Matt. 26:55, Mark 14:48, Luke 22:52, Jesus says that those who are arresting him have come against him as they would against a robber, although the troops responsible are not called ruffians, merely a crowd.

Jesus was beaten before the Sanhedrin (Matt. 26:67, Mark 14:65, Luke 22:64), although it appears these blows were made by the tormenters' hands, not whips; Jesus was not flogged until after he came before Pilate.

The matter of what Jesus did or did not say to those who questioned him, and when, is complicated; suffice it to say that all the gospels say that he occasionally spoke, occasionally kept silent, and made cryptic but generally not abusive or rebellious statements.

Jesus is finally whipped in Matthew 27:26, Mark 15:15.

The colored robe (scarlet/cochineal in Matthew, purple in Mark and John) and the crown of thorns are in Matthew 27:28-29, Mark 15:17, John 19:2. He is called "King of the Jews" in the next verse (and John goes on to a complicated play between Jews and Pilate about that title; compare Matthew 27:27, Mark 15:26, Luke 23:38, John 19:19).
The name "Calvary" does not occur in the Greek Bible; it is a Latin translation of Greek πο, topon kaloumenon kranion, "Place that is called of [a] skull." The King James Bible uses the name in Luke 23:33, based presumably on the Latin Vulgate's "locum qui vocatur Calvariea," "place which is called Calvariea/skull," although modern translations almost universally avoid the name; of the ancient translations, only the Georgian has the Latin name.
The line about "My God, my God, why have you forsaken me" is from Matthew 15:46, Mark 15:34 -- although the two gospels don't agree on whether he said it in Aramaic or Hebrew.
It was not the Temple, but the Temple CURTAIN, which was torn in two in Matthew 27:51, Mark 15:38, although Matthew claims there was an earthquake as well.
The spear in Jesus's side is mentioned in John 19:34.
The rest of the imagery, about Jesus's return, appears to be mostly inspired by the Apocalypse, although parallels to most of it can be found scattered about the Bible. - RBW

Lovely Willie [Laws M35]
DESCRIPTION: A girl with many rich suitors is in love with Willie. The speaks of running away with him. Her father overhears and stabs Willie to death. At Willie's burial the girl openly rejects her father, vowing to spend the rest of her life in exile or die for love
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: homicide courting father elopement
FOUND IN: US(MA,MW,NE,So) Ireland Canada(Mar,Newf)
REFERENCES (14 citations):
Laws M35, "Lovely Willie"
Randolph 113, "Lovely William" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-1ed, pp. 92-93, "Lovely William" (1 text, 1 tune)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, p. 50, "Lovely William" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 30, "Lovely Willie's Sweetheart" (1 text)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H587, p. 433, "Sweet William" (1 text, 1 tune)
Tunney-StoneFiddle, p. 138, "Lovely Willie" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 55, "Lovely Willie" (1 text, 1 tune)
Peacock, pp. 456-457, "Green Grow the Laurels" (1 text, 1 tune)
Karpeles-FolkSongsFromNewfoundland 66, "The Father in Ambush" (1 text, 1 tune)
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 19, "Lovely Jimmy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 107, "Lovely Jimmy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 71, "Green Grow the Rushes" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 436, LOVLYWLL LOVJAMIE
Roud #1913
RECORDINGS:
George Carew, "Lovely Jimmie" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
Kitty Cassidy, "Lovely Willie" (on IRCassidyFamily01)
Paddy Tunney, "Lovely Willie" (on IRPTunney02)
Mrs. Clara Stevens, "Green Grow the Laurels" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Edwin (Edmund, Edward) in the Lowlands Low" [Laws M34] (plot)
cf. "The Green Brier Shore (II)" (lyrics)
cf. "The Lover's Curse (Kellswater)" (themes)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Lovely Jamie
Willy
NOTES [94 words]: The last verse of Peacock starts "Oh green grow the laurels and the tops of them small But love is a phantom will conquer us all," which is the form that resembles the beginning of the last verse of "Nancy from London"; that ends the similarity. - BS
This fragment also ends the Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi version (and gives it its title); evidently that was a Canadian adaption.
There is at least one documented instance of this happening in Ireland: In 1798, just before the Rebellion, Lord Kingston was on trial for the murder of his daughter's seducer. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.2

File: LM35

Lovely Youth Called James McKee, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer loves wonderful James McKee. "I'm now despised, that once was prized, by him that I still adore." They had planned their wedding. "Him for to blame 'twould be a shame, 'twas these false maids led him astray." Warning: "tell your minds to none"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Hayward-UlsterSongsAndBalladsOfTheTownAndCountry)

KEYWORDS: courting love rejection warning

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES: (1 citation:

Hayward-UlsterSongsAndBalladsOfTheTownAndCountry, pp. 91-92, "The Lovely Youth Called James McKee" (1 text)

Roud #6540

File: HayU091

Lover and Darling, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer overhears "a young pair." He asks that she call him "your darling." She smiles that he asks that so soon. He promises her riches. She refuses "for such." He promises her "love, contentment and ease." She says, "you're my darling"

AUTHOR: Sean Maistir O hIarlaithe (according to OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin; see note)

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)

KEYWORDS: courting love money dialog humorous

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES: (1 citation):

OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 172, "The Lover and Darling" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #9291

RECORDINGS:

Elizabeth Cronin, "The Lover and Darling" (on IRECronin01)

NOTES: [28 words]: OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin: "...a note added by Sean O Croinin states that the song was composed by Bess's [Cronin's] father, Sean Maistir O hiarlaith." - BS

Last updated in version 3.2

File: OCC172

Lover's Curse, The (Kellswater)

DESCRIPTION: The girl tells how she will curse any woman who courts Willie. Her father gives her two choices: Send Willie away or see him die. When she scorns the choices, he imprisons her. Willie promises he will not leave Ireland without her. The father relents

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (JIFSS)

KEYWORDS: love separation father hardheartedness poverty courting marriage violence travel death sailor

FOUND IN: Ireland Canada(Mar,Newf,Ont)

REFERENCES: (5 citations):

Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H695, pp. 442-443, "Kellswater" (1 text, 1 tune); also at least portions of H112, p. 288, "A Sweetheart's Appeal to Her Lover/Oh, It's down Where the Water Runs Muddy" (1 text, 1 tune, compiled from three different versions. I rather doubt the three versions were the same song, but at least part of it appears to go here)

Karpeles-FolkSongsFromNewfoundland 70, "On Board the Galle" (1 text, 1 tune)

Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 45, "Jimmy and I Will Get Married" (1 text, 1 tune)

Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario 51, "In Bristol There Lived a Fair Maiden" (1 text,
1 tune

DT, KELLWATR KELLSWTR

Roud #916

RECORDINGS:

Jimmy Heffernan, "In Bristol There Lived a Fair Maiden" (on Ontario1)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Edwin (Edmund, Edward) in the Lowlands Low" [Laws M34] (theme)

ALTERNATE TITLES:

Bonnie Kellswater

NOTES [291 words]: The first few versions I met of this all seemed to start with the line, "Here's a health unto bonnie Kellswater," which seems to be the Irish form of the song. By far the larger fraction of the collections, however, seem to be from Canada, mostly from Fowke. Paul Stamler gives this description of the songs of this type:

A lady of [Bristol/London] is courted by sailor Jimmy, but her father opposes the match. She promises her father that, should she marry, it would be to an equal; he tells her that he's pleased, for he's found her a good match. She confesses that she loves Jimmy, and writes him a letter. They sneak up the stairs, but her father confronts them, holding a "fusee." He tells the daughter to choose between Jimmy's leaving or being shot; she tells him she'd rather see him sail than have innocent blood shed. The father relents and allows the marriage. - RBW/PJS

Edith Fowke notes that she was unable to find this ballad in any British or North American collection; neither was I. Plenty of father-opposes-match, of course, but none with precisely this story, never mind this ending. Fowke notes, "The reference to a 'loaded fusee' suggests a 17th-century origin, for according to the Oxford Dictionary, the term 'fusee' was used for a light musket or firelock between 1661 and 1680." Jim Heffernan, of Peterborough, Ont., learned the ballad from Jim Doherty, an older man who learned it from his mother. Her parents came from Ireland in the 1830s; therefore Fowke suspects an Irish origin for the song. - PJS

The Sam Henry version of this is very confused in viewpoint, with parts spoken by an outside observer and (seemingly) both the girl and the boy. One suspects some imported material. The plot seems undamaged by this. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.6

File: HHH442

---

Lover's Proof, The

DESCRIPTION: "Come sit here beside me and tell me your thoughts, dear, Do you think the sun can rise in the west?" He asks who she loves. She won't say lest he reject her. "Oh when we are married I'll know his intentions, No weddin'... till the sun rises in the west"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 2001 (HCargillFamily)

KEYWORDS: courting rejection questions

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

RECORDINGS:

Debra Cowan, Acie Cargill, Kristina Olsen, "The Lover's Proof" (on HCargillFamily)

File: HCarg003

---

Lover's Resolution

DESCRIPTION: Singer's lover slights her "because I have not riches to disguise his poverty" If she were queen of England she'd resign the crown for him. She would travel with him "from seaport town to town," but he has left.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE:

KEYWORDS: poverty love rejection floatingverses nonballad

FOUND IN:

Roud #V29751

BROADSIDES:

Bodleian, Firth c.13(299), “The Lover's Resolution ("Love it is a killing thing, I've heard the people say"), T. Wilson (Whitehaven), n.d.

CROSS-REFERENCES:
Lover's Return (III), The

DESCRIPTION: Mostly floating verses: "If I had listened to mother, I would not a-been here today."
"Let him go, let him go, God bless him, He's mine where ever he may be." "I have a ship out on the ocean." At the end, "My own sweet Robert" arrives from over the sea
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (Fuson-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands)
KEYWORDS: love separation return reunion floating verses
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fuson-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands, p. 111, "The Lover's Return" (1 text)
Roud #16411
NOTES [60 words]: There may be a line or two in this song not paralleled elsewhere. There may not, too. But the combination is unique: The first verse and the "Let him go" chorus imply a betrayal song, the second verse is the floating "I have a ship on the ocean... but before my true love would suffer"; the last verse is closest to unique as it involves the man's return. - RBW
FILE: Fus111

Lover's Trial, The

DESCRIPTION: A listener hears a man and woman talking about marriage. She rejects him because she loves another who is "far away on the foaming ocean." He leaves and the listener reveals himself as her long lost lover.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: courting reunion separation dialog flowers
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 553-554, "The Lover's Trial" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST Pea553 (Partial)
Roud #9794
NOTES [39 words]: Peacock discusses the "fertility symbolism of the garden" and [observes] that "each flower of the garden has its own meaning." - BS
For a catalog of some of the sundry flower symbols, see the notes to "The Broken-Hearted Gardener." - RBW
FILE: Pea553

Lovers Parted

DESCRIPTION: To the tune of "The Ship That Never Returned": Two lovers quarrel as he prepares to seek his fortune. Both regret the quarrel, but they are never reunited. Listeners are warned against quarrelling
AUTHOR: Music by Henry Clay Work
EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (Brown)
KEYWORDS: love separation farewell warning travel
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 215, "The Ship That Never Returned"
Lovers' Farewell (I)
DESCRIPTION: The girl laments that her love came and bade her farewell, then went to war in the Low Country. He fought, and none knew where he fell. Now "he may sleep in an open grave, But I will wake on my pallet of grief...."
AUTHOR: unknown ("collected" by John Jacob Niles)
EARLIEST DATE: 1961
KEYWORDS: parting death separation grief war
FOUND IN: US(SE?)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Niles-BalladBookOfJohnJacobNiles 17A, "Lover's Farewell" (1 text, 1 tune, dubiously labelled as Child 26)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Three Ravens [Child 26]" (lyrics)
cf. "The Highland Widow's Lament" (plot)
NOTES [94 words]: Niles-BalladBookOfJohnJacobNiles lists this piece as a form of "The Three Ravens," on the basis of a few lyric similarities ("evensong"; "No man knows that he lies there / But his horse and his hound and his lady Mary"; "Oh, he may sleep in an open grave / Where raven fly and flutter"). The plot, however, is completely different, and reminds me more of "The Highland Widow's Lament," which tells of a soldier dying in the Low Country (on behalf of Bonnie Prince Charlie). The piece is quite beautiful, but one can only suspect John Jacob Niles's hand in it. - RBW
File: Niles71A

Lovewell's Fight (II)
DESCRIPTION: Captain Lovewell and his men set out to attack the Indians. They find and kill one, only to find their baggage plundered and the Indians planning an ambush. Lovewell is killed, and many others, but at last the Europeans reach their destination
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1824 (Farmer and Moore, according to Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks); there is a mention of a 1725 broadside that is probably this
KEYWORDS: battle Indians(Am.)
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
May 9, 1725 - Battle between Captain Lovewell and the Indians at Pigwacket (near Fryeburg, Maine)
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks, pp. 127-133, "Lovewell's Fight, I" (1 text, from a broadside)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 714-716, "Lovewell's Fight" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 2-4, "Lovewell's Fight" (1 text)
Roud #4026
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Lovewell's Fight (II)" (subject)
NOTES [198 words]: Lest the Indians be blamed for this battle, it should be noted that Lovewell and his men were scalphunters -- receiving one hundred pounds for each trophy they brought in. Although the conflict doubtless worsened relations between Colonists and Indians, it seems to have had little real effect on history. I checked five histories of the period, and only one mentioned it: Arthur M. Schlesinger, Jr., editor, The Almanac of American History, revised edition, Putnam, 1993 (I use the 1993 Barnes & Noble edition), pp. 79-80, notes that Lovewell's men brought home ten scalps -- the first known instance of Europeans scalping Indians. Schlesinger, however, dates the attack to April 20, 1725, and places it near Wakefield, New Hampshire, not Pigwacket, Maine.
The dating in the Historical References is based on the song itself (Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks's version says that Lovewell's men encountered their first Indian on May 8 near Pigwacket).
This song is item dA27 in Laws's Appendix II.
To tell it from "Lovewell's Fight (II)," consider this first half-stanza:
Of worthy Captain Lovewell,
I purpose now to sing,
How valiantly he served
His country and his King. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.7
File: L714

Lovewell's Fight (II)

DESCRIPTION: Lovewell and fifty men set out from Dunstable. Other members of the party include Farwell, Harwood, Wyman, and Chaplain Frye. They kill an Indian, then are ambushed by 80 others. The deaths of several are described. Old men remember the fight sadly.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1824 (Farmer and Moore, according to Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks)
KEYWORDS: battle Indians(Am.) clergy
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks, pp. 134-139, "Lovewell's Fight, II" (1 text, from a broadside)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Lovewell's Fight (I)" (subject)
NOTES [86 words]: Lest the Indians be blamed for this battle, it should be noted that Lovewell and his men were scalphunters -- receiving one hundred pounds for each trophy they brought in. For background, see the notes to "Lovewell's Fight (I)."
Although neither Lovewell song is very good, this one is particularly overwrought. To tell it from "Lovewell's Fight (I)," consider this first stanza:
What time the noble Lovewell came,
With fifty men from Dunstable,
The cruel Pequa'rt tribe to tame,
With arms and bloodshed terrible.. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.5
File: Gray134

Loving Girl, The

DESCRIPTION: "Adieu, my lovin' girl, adieu, It wounds my heart to part with you, The time has come for me to go, Therefore your mind I wish to know." He recalls that "you loved me first," but she has lost interest; he wishes her well and sadly departs

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Randolph)
KEYWORDS: love separation parting infidelity
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Randolph 732, "The Loving Girl" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, LOVNGIRL*
Roud #7393
File: R732

Loving Henry (II)

DESCRIPTION: "Have you seen my lovin' Henery. Oh, have you seen dat darlin' man? I'm jes' crazy 'bout my Henery, He's de sweetes' man in town.... I thought I heard a knocking'. "Is day you, Henry... Oh, dare's my lovin' Henery now."
Low Back Car, The

DESCRIPTION: "When first I saw sweet Peggy... A low-backed car she drove." "The man at the turnpike bar" was too stunned by her appearance to collect the toll. Men are knocked down by her glance. The singer imagines driving in the low-backed car to be married.

AUTHOR: Samuel Lover (1797-1868)

EARLIEST DATE: before 1853 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 26(397))

KEYWORDS: beauty nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (7 citations):
- Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 505, "Peggy in Her Low Backed Car" (1 text)
- O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, pp. 67-88, "The Low Back Car" (1 text)
- Heart-Songs, pp. 442-443, "The Low-Backed Car" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #74, "The Low-Back'd Car" (1 text)
- Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 67, "The Low Backed Car" (1 text)
- Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1332, pp. 90-91, "The Low Back'd Car" (3 references)

ADDITIONAL: [no author listed], _Songs That Never Grow Old_, Syndicate Publishing, 1909, 1913, p. 148, "The Low-Backed Car" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #6954

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Harding B 26(397), "The Low-Backed Car", J. Moore (Belfast), 1846-1852; also Johnson Ballads 1101, "The Low Back'd Car"; Harding B 11(2253), Harding B 20(148), "The Low Back Car"; Harding B 11(2254), Firth b.26(233), 2806 b.11(253), "The Low-Back Car"
- NLScotland, L.C.Fol.70(122b), "The Low-Backed Car," Poet's Box (Glasgow?), 1878

SAME TUNE:
- Low Necked Dress ("When first I saw Miss Delia") (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, p. 91)

NOTES [86 words]: Note that there is no connection, save the title, between this and the song we have indexed as "The Low-Backed Car."
The tune to this is said to be "The Jolly Ploughboy," but since there are several songs with that approximate title, it isn't much help.

According to the list of broadsides on pp. 90-91 of Edwin Wolf 2nd, _American Song Sheets, Slip Ballads, and Political Broadside 1850-1870_, Library Company of Philadelphia, 1963, it appears this was originally published in America as "The Low Back's Car." - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: OCon087

---

Low Down in the Broom

DESCRIPTION: "My daddy is a canker'd carle, He'll ne'er twine wi' his gear," the girl admits as she wishes to be with her lad. She details all the ways her family reigns her in. But she meets her love beneath the broom, and at last they escape and live happily

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1804 (Scots Musical Museum)

KEYWORDS: love courting family elopement

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 234-236, "Low Down in the Broom" (1 text)
- Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 161, "Low Down in the Broom" (1 text)

Roud #1644

NOTES [66 words]: Said to be the tune Burns used for "My Love Is Like a Red, Red Rose."
Ford's version of this is distinctly longer than the versions in Ord-BothySongsAndBallads and the Scots Musical Museum; it starts with several stanzas about how Jenny and "Pate" meet, whereas the SMM text simply outlines how difficult the girl's parents are. It is not clear which form is older; Ford had it from a chapbook. - RBW
File: FVS234

Low Is the Way
DESCRIPTION: "Oh my brother, you must bow so low, so low (x2), For low is the way to that upper bright world. Let the heavenly light shine on me." Similarly for sister, preacher, etc.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (Arnold-FolkSongsofAlabama)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad family travel clergy
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Arnold-FolkSongsofAlabama, p. 180, "Low Is the Way" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #16305
File: Arno180

Low-Backed Car, The
DESCRIPTION: "It's onward we travel through life's weary journey Our thoughts oft returns to the bright days of yore, To the scenes of our childhood" in and around St John's. Some day good times will return and we will go back to "be happy by the old low-backed car"
AUTHOR: (credited to T. J. Greene by Michael P. Murphy)
EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Murphy, Old Colony Song Book)
KEYWORDS: homesickness emigration hardtimes lament lyric
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 120, "The Low-Backed Car" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: James Murphy, compiler/publisher, "(Old Colony Song Book: Newfoundland),"
James Murphy, 1904 (available from the Memorial University of Newfoundland web site; the cover is missing, but I suspect it is a copy of "Songs of Our Land"), p. 52, "The Old Low-Back-Car" (1 text)
Michael P. Murphy, _Pathways through Yesterday_, edited by Gerald S. Moore, Town Crier Publishing, 1976, p. 152, "(no title)" (1 verse only, but with a description of the author and his situation)
Roud #17751
NOTES [66 words]: Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland notes that "This is a song about a boy who grew up in St John's but was forced to leave Newfoundland when economic conditions prevented him from getting a living there ... The low-backed car marked a street in St John's'" - BS
Note that there is no connection, save the title, between this and the song we have indexed as "The Low Back Car." - RBW
Last updated in version 4.4
File: GrMa120

Low-Down Blues
DESCRIPTION: "Well, I tell all you workin' men, please take this advice from me, Save yo' money... let these crooked women go." Women will "drink up yo' last dime" and leave you behind. The singer has friends when he has money, none when he has none
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1977 (Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices)
KEYWORDS: hardtimes abandonment money nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices, p. 191, "Low-Down Blues" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #16272
File: Rose191
Low, Black Schooner, The
DESCRIPTION: "A wet sheet and a flowing sea.... Come, raise the sparkling can, Sound the toast, each bold mess through, Huzza for our low black craft, my boys, and her noble pirate crew." "We make each trader ay toll, For pirates bold are we"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1845 (The Pirate's Songster, according to Frank-NewBookOfPirateSongs)
KEYWORDS: pirate travel derivative nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Frank-NewBookOfPirateSongs 71, "The Low, Black Schooner" (1 text, 1 tune; #45 in the first edition)
Roud #V25663
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Britannia on Our Lee" (lyrics, tune)
File: FrPi071

Lower the Boat Down
DESCRIPTION: Halyard shanty. "There's only one thing grieves me. Ch: Oh, lower the boat down! It's my poor wife and baby, Ch: Oh, lower the boat down."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1938 (Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen)
KEYWORDS: shanty worksong separation
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen, p. 63, "Lower the Boat Down" (1 single-verse fragment)
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, p. 158-159, "Lower the Boat Down" (1 fragment, quoted from Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Roll the Cotton Down" (similar tune)
File: Colc063

Lowlands (My Lowlands Away)
DESCRIPTION: Sometimes a ballad: The singer is at sea when his love comes to him in a dream. She is dressed in white, and he realizes that his love is dead. Other times a lyric, in which the sailor talks about his travels, his ship, low pay, and/or a bad captain
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1870
KEYWORDS: shanty sailor sea love death dream ghost
FOUND IN: US(MA) Canada(Mar,Newf) Ireland Britain(England(West))
REFERENCES (18 citations):
Gundry-CanowKernow-SongsDancesFromCornwall, p. 40, "Lowlands Away" (1 text, 1 tune)
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 80-82, "Lowlands" (3 texts, 1 tune)
Bone-CapstanBars, pp. 124-126, "Lowlands" (1 text plus an excerpt, 1 tune)
Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen, p. 100-101, "Lowlands" (2 texts, 2 tunes; the first is the dead lover version, the second the "Dollar and a half" version)
Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips pp. 127-128 "Lowlands" (1 text, 1 tune, a "Dollar and a half" version)"
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 65-70 "Lowlands Away," "Lowlands or My Dollar An'A Half A Day" (4 texts, 2 tunes -- three dead lover versions, one Dollar and a half" version) [AbEd, pp. 61-64]
Sharp-EnglishFolkChanteys, XVIII, p. 21, "Lowlands Away" (1 text, 1 tune, a"Dollar and a half" version)
Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 109, "A Dollar and a Half a Day" (1 text)
Shay-AmericanSeaSongsAndChanteys, pp. 43-44, "Lowlands" (1 text, 1 tune); pp. 46-47, "Lowlands, II" (1 text); p. 47, "Lowlands, III" (1 fragment)
Terry-TheShantyBook-Part1, #6, "Lowlands away" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, p. 65, "Lowlands" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lowlands Low (III)

DESCRIPTION: Halyard shanty. "Our packet is the Island Lass, Low-lands, low-lands, low-lands, low! There's a nigger howlin' at the main top mast, Low-lands, low-lands, low-lands, low!" Verses mostly complaints and rhymes about sailing.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Sharp-EnglishFolkChanteys)

KEYWORDS: shanty work

FOUND IN: West Indies

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 70-71, "Lowlands Low" (1 text, 1 tune) [AbEb, pp. 64-65]
- Sharp-EnglishFolkChanteys, XXIX, p. 34, "Lowlands Low" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #8286

NOTES [30 words]: Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas says this is from ships the West Indian trade (sugar and rum), many of which had "chequerboard" crews, i.e. one watch white and one watch coloured. - SL

File: Hugi070
DESCRIPTION: A young couple are parted (when the young man is taken away to sea). While in service, he is drowned. The girl vows she will not dress in fine clothes nor seek another man until the day she dies.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1760

KEYWORDS: recruiting death parting pressgang separation ship marines

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South,Lond,West),Scotland(Aber)) US(Ap,NE,So) Canada(Newf) Ireland Australia

REFERENCES (35 citations):
Bronson (92), "The Lowlands of Holland" (22 versions)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads (92), "The Lowlands of Hollands" (5 versions: #1, #6, #7, #110, #16)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 107, "The Lowlands of Holland" (1 text)
Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 55-57, "The Lowlands of Holland" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #9}
Bush-FSofCentralWestVirginiaVol2, pp. 88-89, "The Lowlands of Holland" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 26, "The Lowlands of Holland" (1 fragment, 1 tune) {Bronson's #12}
Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 7, "The Low Lands of Holland" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #8}
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #83, pp. 1-2, "The Rocks of Giberaltar"; #135, p. 2, "The Lowlands o' Holland" (2 texts plus 1 fragment)
Sharp-OneHundredEnglishFolksongs 23, "The Low, Low Lands of Holland" (1 text, 1 tune)
Reeves/Sharp-TheldiemOfThePeople 60, "The Lowlands of Holland" (3 texts)
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 85, "The Lowlands of Holland" (3 texts)
Williams-Witshire-WSRO Wt 456, "Lowlands of Holland" (1 text)
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #38, "The Lowlands of Holland" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph 83, "The Lily of Arkansas" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 72-74, "The Lily of Arkansas" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 83A)
Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol1, pp. 101-102, "The Jolly Sailor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Shay-AmericanSeaSongsAndChanteys, pp. 45-46, "The Lawlands o' Holland" (1 text)
Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks, pp. 88-89, "The Lowlands Low" (1 text, slightly damaged)
Flanders/Olney-BalladsMigrantInNewEngland, pp. 113-114, "The Lowlands of Holland" (1 text)
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, p. 179, "The Lowlands of Holland" (1 text, 1 tune)
Logan-APedlarsPack, pp. 22-25, "The Lowlands of Holland" (2 texts)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 160, "The Lowlands o' Holland" (1 text)
Combs/Wilgus-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernUnitedStates 132, p. 150, "The Soldier Bride's Lament" (1 text)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H180, pp. 149-150, "Holland Is a Fine Place" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hayward-UlsterSongsAndBalladsOfTheTownAndCountry, pp. 54-55, "The Lowlands of Holland" (1 text)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 328-332, "The Lowlands of Holland (Scottish Version)"; "The Lowlands of Holland (English Version)"; "The Rocks of Gibraltar" (3 texts)
MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland 12, "Lowlands of Holland" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 7A, "The Lowlands of Holland" (1 text, 1 tune)
Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday 48, pp. 140-141,174, "The Rocks of Giberaltar" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ashton-RealSailorSongs, #59, "The Maid's Lamentation for the Loss of her True Love" (1 text)
DT (92), LOWHOLLLD* LOWHOLL2* LOWHOLL3* LOWHOLL4 LOWHOLL5 LOWHOLL6 LOWHOLL7* LOWHOLL8
ADDITIONAL: James Johnson, Editor, _The Scots Musical Museum_ [1853 edition], volume II, #115, p. 118, "The Lowlands of Holland" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fred W. Allsopp, Folklore of Romantic Arkansas, Volume II (1931), p. 213, "(The Lily of Arkansas)"
Walter de la Mare, _Come Hither_, revised edition, 1928; #377, "The Lawlands o' Holland" (1 text)

ST R083 (Full)

Roud #484

RECORDINGS:
- Anita Best and Pamela Morgan, "The Lowlands of Holland" (on NFABestPMorgan01)
- Michael Murphy, "Lowlands of Holland" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
- Paddy Tunney, "The Lowlands of Holland" (on IRPTunney01) (on Voice02)

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Harding B 11(2258), "Lowlands of Holland" ("The night that I was married"), J. Pitts (London), 1819-1844; also Firth c.12(216), Firth c.26(201), "Lowlands of Holland"
- NLScotland, L.C.Fol.70(68b), "The Rocks of Bonnie Gibraltar," Poet's Box (Dundee), c.1890; also RB.m.143(121) "The Lowlands of Holland," Poet's Box (Dundee), c.1890

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Bonny Bee Hom" [Child 92] (given as an appendix to that ballad)
- cf. "All Things Are Quite Silent" (theme)
- cf. "The British Man-of-War" (tune)
- cf. "Our Ship She Is Lying in Harbour" (lyrics)
- cf. "Bonny Portmore" ("shines where it stands") and references there

ALTERNATE TITLES:
- The Lily of Arkansas

NOTES [332 words]: "The Lowlands of Holland" is frequently connected to "Bonny Bee Hom" (Child 92), a link dating back to Child (who printed four stanzas of Herd's text). The matter has been much studied, without clear conclusion. The tendency has been to assume that "Bonny Bee Hom" is the older, just because it is the Child Ballad, but the fact that "Lowlands of Holland" is so much more common may be a counter-argument. David C. Fowler, _A Literary History of the Popular Ballad_, Duke University Press, 1968, p. 323, suggests that "Bonny Bee Hom" is Anna Gordon Brown's rewrite of "Lowlands." It might be noted, however, that "Bonny Bee Hom" involves a magic device (the stone that tells the lover whether his sweetheart is true), a theme not found in "The Lowlands of Holland."

It will also be obvious that "The Lowlands of Holland" has been enduringly popular, whereas "Bonny Bee Hom" has had very little currency in tradition.

Roud assigns Burton/Manning-EastTennesseestateCollectionVol1's "The Jolly Sailor" text its own number, #7131, but the Burton/Manning song shares many words with this song; it just omits the reference to the Lowlands of Holland. I have no hesitation about lumping them. - RBW Roud assigns #2174 to "The Rocks of Gibraltar." Aside from the location being changed from "The Lowlands of Holland" there's hardly anything to distinguish between the two songs.

Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 85A includes a "shines as it stands" verse: "Holland is a pleasant place which shines as it stands And there's good accommodations for sailors in that land, Where sugar there in canes do grow, the tea falls from the tree. I wish to God my love was nigh, although she's far away." The more usual verse is something like "Holland is a pretty place, And in it grows no green, Nor is there any habitation, For any young man to be seen, The sugar cane is plentiful, And the tea grows on the trees, And the low lands of Holland, Betiwxt you my love and me" (Broadside Bodleian Harding B 11(2258)) - BS

Last updated in version 6.0

File: R083

Lowrie (The Adventures of Larry McFlynn)

DESCRIPTION: Dubliner Lowrie enlists in ignorance. Sentenced to be whipped on his bare skin he puts a bear skin on his back. He drinks his kit empty and stuffs a young cat in his knapsack. The captain recognizes a hopeless case and makes Lowrie his personal servant.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1843 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(14))

KEYWORDS: army ordeal humorous soldier

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Greig/Duncan1 81, "Lowrie" (2 texts, 1 tune)

Roud #5772

BROADSIDES:
Loyal Lovers, The

DESCRIPTION: Two lovers court in secret for two years. When her parents learn it they and some of her friends on him "laid a' the blame." He feels he must leave: "love winna lat me stay." He claims he will be true. "Long courting is as bad a thing, as any man can do"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan6)

KEYWORDS: courting separation father friend mother

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan6 1119, "The Loyal Lovers" (3 texts, 2 tunes)

Roud #6850

NOTES [31 words]: A few lines float from "The Wars of Germany" [Laws N7]: "And now he is sailing upon the sea, with a sad and troubled mind For the leaving of his countrie and his own dear love behind." - BS

Last updated in version 2.5

File: GrD61119

Loyal Song Against Home Rule, A

DESCRIPTION: "I'm an Irishman born in loyal Belfast." Ireland "would be ruined for ever if Home Rule was passed." Gladstone "has got no idea of the blood it would spill ... don't let old Gladstone get you in a snare ... It's time long ago he was upon the shelf"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1893 (Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)

KEYWORDS: Ireland nonballad political

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 100, "A New Loyal Song Against Home Rule" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Home Rule for Ireland" (subject: the quest for Home Rule)
cf. "The Union We'll Maintain" (subject: opposition to Home Rule)

NOTES [2271 words]: William Ewart Gladstone became British prime minister in 1868 and supported Home Rule for Ireland. He introduced his first Home Rule Bill, which was defeated, in 1885. His second Home Rule Bill was defeated in 1893. (source: "Home Rule" on the Irelandseye site) - BS

Gradually during the nineteenth century, the restrictions on Catholics in Ireland were lifted. But the memory remained -- and most of the land was still in Protestant hands. Gladstone devoted much of his energy as Prime Minister to improving conditions in Ireland, disestablishing the Church (see, e.g., "The Downfall of Heresy") and granting increased tenant rights (see especially "The Bold Tenant Farmer," though the need for land reform inspired many songs).

Gladstone apparently thought initially that ordinary reforms would be enough to satisfy Ireland (see "Home Rule for Ireland"; also Kee, p. 58: Gladstone seems at first to have imagined that he could solve the problem of Ireland forever by two measures: first, By disestablishing the Irish Protestant Church and, second, legislating to compensate a tenant financially on conviction). The success of the Land League and the rise of Charles Stewart Parnell eventually forced Gladstone to see otherwise (for Parnell, see e.g. "The Blackbird of Avondale (The Arrest of Parnell)"; also "We Won't Let Our Leader Run Down").

For most of the nineteenth century, the Irish had given their support primarily to the Liberals, who were more sympathetic to their cause. But Parnell, who by 1882 was the dominant force in Irish politics, wasn't willing to settle for that. In 1885, he urged his supporters to vote Conservative just to try to shake things up.
The result as an election in which the Liberals held 335 seats in parliament, the Conservatives 249 -- and Parnell controlled 86 seats and the balance of power (Kee, p. 89).
Prime Minister Gladstone tried to improve the situation with his proposal for Home Rule (partial internal autonomy for Ireland). Gladstone's 1886 Home Rule proposal was limited -- the British would still control foreign and trade policy, for instance. But internal affairs would largely be in Irish hands. Curtis, p. 380, notes that Gladstone's "portrait as 'the Friend of Ireland' adorned thousands of peasant homes."
Unfortunately, his own party was not united on the issue. A handful of members openly went over to the Conservatives; a larger block, headed by Joseph Chamberlain, remained devoted to other liberal reforms, but simply would not support Home Rule (see Kee, pp. 89-90; Massie, pp. 235-238).
The government fell, and Home Rule was shelved for seven years.
The second attempt was no more successful. According to Kee, p. 124, the 1893 Home Rule bill "occupied more parliamentary time than any other bill in the history of the century." You have to wonder why the Ulster Unionists -- who, as we shall see, went into conniptions -- were so worried; some wit quipped that Gladstone had no more power to pass Home Rule (through the Lords) than he did to install waterworks on the moon. The Lords not only rejected it, they rejected it 419-41 (Curtis, p. 386; Kee, p. 125).
That was about the end for Gladstone. It wasn't good for the Liberals, either; for fifteen years Parliament was split into four groups: Conservatives, classic Liberals, Liberal Unionists (Chamberlainites), and the residual Parnellites, now led by John Redmond insofar as they had a leader (OxfordComp, p. 475); in the election of 1892, nearly 90% of the Irish MPs claimed to be anti-Parnellite, but that faded over time. As Curtis says, p. 389, "After Parnell there could not fail to be a dull epoch for Ireland. His party was split and John Redmond took the place of the dead chief, but Tim Healy, William O'Brien and John Dillon were rivals rather than lieutenants, and it was 1900 before even the seeming of unity was restored." For the most part, the British government suffered gridlock, though the Chamberlainites occasionally managed to extract liberal reforms from the Conservatives. But there was no possibility of serious legislation for Ireland. The Conservatives were in almost complete control from 1886 to 1906 (Curtis, p. 386).
Still, Home Rule naturally concerned the Irish Protestants, who would inevitably find Catholics in charge of a Home Rule Ireland. In most of Ireland, they were too few to really resist. But in Ulster, or at least in parts of it, they were the majority. And they didn't want the Catholics doing unto them as they had done unto the Catholics. (They knew what it was like: Unlike the Anglicans in the rest of Ireland, the Ulstermen "had" been subjected to religious persecution; Kee, pp. 96-97.) So the Presbyterians strenuously opposed Home Rule. The old Orange Society, which had been banned in 1836, was revived in 1845 in Enniskillen (Kee, p. 100), and a Protestant Defence Association came into being in 1867-1868 (Kee, p. 101-102) in response to the Land League and the British government's relatively mild reaction (Kee, p. 103). By 1884, Kee reports that 20,000 Orangemen were demonstrating on the anniversary of the Boyne.
If Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion's 1893 date for this song is reliable, the probable inspiration for this song (apart from Gladstone's 1893 attempt at a Home Rule bill) was the great Ulster Unionist Convention of 1892 (Kee, p. 122); some 12,000 were said to have attended; they passed resolutions which stated that Ulster was an integral part of the United Kingdom, rejected an Irish parliament, and declared against Home Rule. One speaker declared that Ulster would defend itself if threatened with rule from Dublin.
Finally, in 1904, came the foundation of the Ulster Unionist Council (OxfordComp, p. 562, which notes that it was intended as "a unifying organization for northern unionists. Ironically, it helped divide the national Unionist movement; as Townshend notes, p. 32, Unionists in southern Ireland were a small enough minority that their only hope was to maintain the Union with Britain. The Ulster Unionists had a fallback position: Partition. The two groups thus ended up pursuing different ends.)
Even before the founding of the UUC, the Unionists had had a spokesman in Edward Carson (1854-1935). He was denouncing Home Rule in the government by the 1890s, and helped along the split in the Liberal Party that made Home Rule impossible. Eventually he managed to take Ulster out of Ireland. The irony in this is that he wasn't an Ulsterman -- and on issues other than Union, he was even relatively liberal (Kee, p. 169-170). But he openly declared that would support anarchy rather than Home Rule (O'Connor, p. 45).
By 1911, Ulstermen were rallying and marching -- with compliant Justices of the Peace being more than willing to grant them permits to drill (Kee, p. 171; Townshend, p. 35). Nearly 450,000 would sign a "Solemn League and Covenant" to oppose Home Rule, some with their own blood (Kee, p.
20,000 signed on the first day alone (O'Conor, p. 46). They were pledged to "Stand by one another in using all means which may be found necessary to defeat the present conspiracy to set up a Home Rule Parliament and in the even of such a Parliament being forced upon us, we further solemnly pledge ourselves to refuse to recognize its authority" (O'Conor, pp. 45-46).

Starting in 1913, the Ulster Unionist Council formed a provisional government (O'Conor, p. 46) and started raising a private army which would eventually reach 100,000 men (Kee, p. 182; O'Connor, p. 46, credits them with 50,000 men within three months of their foundation), though at first few had weapons (Townshend, p. 33); they practiced with wooden mock-ups. They would raise a million-pound insurance fund (Townshend, p. 42).

Members of the British government called it treason (O'Connor, p. 46). That didn't even slow them down.

Home Rule finally came back in 1910, long after Gladstone was dead. The Liberal government of H. H. Asquith, which needed the Irish votes controlled by Redmond (Dangerfield, pp. 52-53), passed Home Rule -- only to have the Lords block it again.

Asquith finally hit upon the radical solution of limiting the veto power of the House of Lords -- in effect setting up a system where the Lords could block a measure for two years, but have to give in if the Commons kept passing it. Asquith won a narrow parliamentary victory on this point (for an intensely detailed description of how all this came about, see Massie, pp. 640-662 -- the chapter entitled "The Budget and the House of Lords"; for something shorter, see the notes to "My Father's a Hedger and Ditcher (Nobody Coming to Marry Me)").

With the Lords rendered relatively powerless, a preliminary Home Rule bill eventually passed in 1913 (see Cronin, pp. 177-179). But English opinion had not really been tested on the matter (Kee, p. 176, notes that "Only some 94 of the 272 successful Liberal candidates... had actually mentioned Home Rule at all in their election addresses" -- and that the Prime Minister was one of the many cabinet officials who did not mention the subject).

Worse, the army was not prepared to enforce the law; a number of officers resigned rather than prepare to suppress Ulster loyalists -- the so-called "Curragh Mutiny" (Kee, p. 192). In trying to calm the mutiny, the British government made it effectively impossible to control Ulster loyalists.

Indeed, future Conservative prime minister Andrew Bonar Law stood with Carson at a rally against Home Rule in Belfast (O'Connor, p. 45).

Chandler/Beckett, p. 210, sums up the situation this way: "After indicating that sixty officers of the 3rd Cavalry Brigade at the Curragh would prefer dismissal to being ordered north, Brigadier-General Hubert Gough received a written assurance from the Cabinet, amended into more precise language by Sir John French, the Chief of the Imperial General Staff. When the government promptly repudiated any notion of a private bargain with a few officers, the signatories of the document -- French, Sir J. S. Ewart, the Adjutant-General, and J. E. B. Sealy, the Secretary of State for War, proffered their resignations. More of an 'incident' than a mutiny (no orders were actually disobeyed), the Curragh affair damaged personal relationships within the army and bequeathed a legacy between the military and political leaders."

Then came World War I, which caused the law to be suspended (the Home Rule bill had been unravelling over the Ulster problem anyway). Kee reports that Prime Minister Asquith, after consultation with the main parties, "agreed... that Home Rule should become law and be placed on the statute book, but simultaneously with a Suspensory Act which would prevent it coming into force until a new Amending Bill could be introduced" (which, in practice, meant "until after the War").

Still, the bill formally passed and gained the King's assent in 1914. There was celebration in the streets of Ireland (Kee, p. 222).

And then came the Easter Rising of 1916 -- something that real Home Rule might have prevented (Townshend, p. 30, believes that the passage of full home rule, including Ulster, would have turned many Irish nationalists, including rebellion leader Pádraig Pearse and perhaps Sinn Fein founder Arthur Griffith, away from rebellion. O'Connor, p. 41, makes the same argument, noting that Pearse gave a speech, in Irish, applauding Home Rule when it came. I have to add, though, that Pearse in the same speech rejected the notion of even nominal obedience to the crown.)

But the rebellion meant that Home Rule never did really come into effect -- in part because of British brutality in the aftermath of the Easter Rising, and partly because Ulster simply wouldn't accept it. Plus, of course, many of the more moderate Irish had joined the British army during the war, and had died in droves in Flanders. The more militant nationalists had refused to serve; a much lower percentage of the Irish volunteered than did the English (Chandler/Beckett, p. 243).

Thus, after the war, nationalist feeling was much stronger, and pro-British Irishmen fewer. Plus John Redmond, the man who had fought -- and compromised -- to win Home Rule had died in 1918 (OxfordComp, p. 475, thinks the crisis hastened his death; he was only 62), leaving Sinn Fein as the strongest political element. When the pressure on Britain became intolerable, they gave Ireland the Free State and Partition rather than Home Rule in its initial form. In some ways, the Free State "was" Home Rule -- but it felt different, and opened the door for Eamon de Valera to make separation (and partition) complete.

We should note incidentally that the Orangemen did not really represent any particular segment of society; theirs was the minority no matter how you sliced the demographics. In the parliamentary election after Gladstone's Home Rule attempt, they lost even in Ulster (Kee, p. 106, reports that they won 16 seats, to 17 for their opponents). In Ulster as a whole, the population is said to have been 52% Protestant, 49% Catholic -- but a large share of those Protestants were Anglican, whereas the Orangemen were Presbyterian. Thus Catholics were the plurality in the nine counties of Ulster (three of which, to be sure, would end up in Ireland rather than Northern Ireland). And the Ulstermen didn't represent the majority of Ireland's Protestants, either; although Anglicans were everywhere else a small minority, there were enough of them scattered around the country that they as a group outnumbered the Ulster Presbyterians.

For more on how all this played out, see especially the notes to "The Irish Free State." - RBW

Bibliography

- Cronin: Mike Cronin, A History of Ireland, Palgrave, 2001
- Dangerfield: George Dangerfield, The Damnable Question: One Hundred and Twenty Years of Anglo-Irish Conflict, Atlantic Little Brown, 1976

Lubin's Rural Cot

DESCRIPTION: "Returning homeward o'er the plain Upon a market day, A sudden storm of wind and rain O'ertook me on the way." The singer shelters in Lubin's rural cot, where he entertains her delightfully. He offers marriage; she happily accepts

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Ford); 19C (broadside, NLScotland L.C.Fol.178.A.2(196))
KEYWORDS: home courting marriage storm
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
  Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 178-180, "Lubin's Rural Cot" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #114, pp. 1-2, "Lubin's Rural Cot" (1 text)
  Greig/Duncan5 955, "Lubin's Rural Cot" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6263
BROADSIDES:
  Bodleian, Firth b.25(505), "Lubin's Rural Cot ("Returning home, across the plain"), E. Keys (Devonport), no date
  NLScotland, L.C.Fol.178.A.2(196), "Lubin's Rural Cot" ("Returning homewards o'er the plain"), unknown, c.1840
NOTES [11 words]: Why do I suspect there is more going on here than meets the eye? - RBW

Last updated in version 2.6
File: Zimm100
Lucindy, Won't You Marry Me
DESCRIPTION: "Lucindy, won't you marry me, Won't you marry me in the mornin'? If you'll marry me your mother'll Cook a shine-eyed-hen."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Brown)
KEYWORDS: food courting marriage
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 6, "Lucindy, Won't You Marry Me" (1 fragment)
Roud #7854
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Richard (Irchard) of Taunton Dean" (theme)
File: Br3006

Lucky Elopement, The
DESCRIPTION: The singer drinks. He courts a girl whose mother calls him a drunkard. He elopes with the daughter to London where they are found and sent to Carrick Jail. At his trial for theft the daughter attests to his virtues, he is acquitted and they marry.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads); c.1867 (broadside, Bodleian 2806 b.9(96))
KEYWORDS: elopement marriage trial drink mother
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 43, "The Lucky Elopement" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2559
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 b.9(96), "Luckey Elopement," P. Brereton (Dublin), c.1867
LOCSinging, as108270, "Luckey Elopement," P. Brereton (Dublin), 19C
NOTES [19 words]: Broadside LOCSinging as108270 appears to be the same as Bodleian 2806 b.9(96) printed by P. Brereton (Dublin). - BS
File: OLoc043

Lucky Escape, The
DESCRIPTION: The singer, born a plowman, meets a "Carfindo" who convinces him to go to sea. After a dreadful time aboard ship, he goes home and is told that his family has met disaster. When he declares that he will roam no more, he is told that all is well at home.
AUTHOR: probably Charles Dibdin (1745-1815)
EARLIEST DATE: 1891 (Ashton-RealSailorSongs)
KEYWORDS: ship sailor farming separation home reunion reprieve
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Ashton-RealSailorSongs, #80, "The Carfindo" (1 text)
Arnett-IHearAmericaSinging, pp. 20-22, "The Lucky Escape" (1 text, 1 tune)
Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 68, "Farewell to Charming Sally" (1 short text, 1 tune, with effectively no plot left, meaning it could be any of several songs; I file it here for consistency with the Roud Index)
Roud #1446
NOTES [24 words]: According to Ashton-RealSailorSongs, a Carfindo was "one of the Ship's Carpenter's gang," although there are very few available citations. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: Arn020
Lucky Jim

DESCRIPTION: "Jim was my friend, till one unhappy day The usual cause -- a pretty girl -- came in our way." Both court her, but "one day she married him." After three years, Jim dies. The singer marries her -- and regrets it so much that he thinks Jim lucky to be dead

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Shay-BarroomBallads/PiousFriendsDrunkenCompanions)

KEYWORDS: love death humorous shrewishness

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Shay-BarroomBallads/PiousFriendsDrunkenCompanions, p. 161, "Lucky Jim" (1 text)
Roud #9545
File: SBar161

Lucky Sailor, The, or, The Sailor's Invitation to Go with Admiral Anson

DESCRIPTION: "Come jolly sailors join with me (x2), To fight with Anson for renown, That we the French pride may pull down." Anson's fleet, with the Centurion in he lead, is first to attack the French fleet; it is the second time Anson has taken a great prize

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1908 (Firth)

KEYWORDS: sailor war money France

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
PalmerSea 43, "The Lucky Sailor, or, The Sailor's Invitation to go with Admiral Anson" (1 text)
Roud #V22822
File: PaSe043

Lucy Locket (I)

DESCRIPTION: "Lucy Locket lost her pocket, Kitty Fisher found it; Not a penny was there in it, Only ribbon round it."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes; they cite versions going back to 1842, but given the confusing history of the piece, this must be treated with caution); there is an apparent citation from 1894 (see NOTES)

KEYWORDS: clothes money playparty

FOUND IN: US(MA,MW) New Zealand

REFERENCES (8 citations):
Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 37-38, "Lucy Locket" (1 text, 1 tune, which has the "I Wrote a Letter" verse, the "Little dog" verse, and the "Lucy Locket" verse but which is said by Linscott to use the "Hunt the Squirrel" game)
Stout-FolkloreFromIowa 104, p. 133, "Nursery Rhyme" (1 text of two verses, the first being "Yankee Doodle" and the second "Lucy Locket/Hunt the Squirrel")
Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads, p. 107, "Lady Locket" (1 text)
Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 312, "Lucy Locket" (1 text)
Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #279, p. 165 "(Lucy Locket)"
Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel, p. 123, "Lucy Locket" (1 text)
Dolby-OrangesAndLemons, p. 82, "Lucy Locket Lost Her Pocket" (1 text)
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 30, ""I sent a letter to my love"; "I had a little dog"; "Lucy Locket" (3 texts, the first being of the "Atisket, Atasket (I Sent a Letter to My Love)" type, the second of the "Hunt the Squirrel" type, the third being "Lucy Locket," but all apparently used for the same game)
Roud #19536
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hunt the Squirrel" (lyrics)

NOTES [133 words]: Much ink has been expended trying to link this to specific historical personages -- e.g. Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland claims Lucy and Kitty were "celebrated courtesans of the court of Charles II." The Opies, however, declare that all such links are speculative.
I have not encountered this verse in isolation as a song (as opposed to a rhyme), but since it floated into Linscott's version of "Hunt the Squirrel," I list it here as a piece that is sometimes sung. I cite it as being found in the Midwest on the basis of p. 29 of Laura Ingalls Wilder, On the Way Home: The Diary of a Trip from South Dakota to Mansfield, Missouri, in 1894, Harper & Row, 1962, where Laura wrote that "Nebraska reminds me of Lydia Locket's pocket, nothing in it, nothing on it, only the binding round it." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.1
File: Op0x312

Lucy Long (I)

DESCRIPTION: "If I had a scolding wife, As sure as you are born, I'd take her down to New Orleans And trade her off for corn."

AUTHOR: unknown

KEYWORDS: wife shrewishness

FOUND IN: US(SE,So)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Randolph 279, "If I Had a Scolding Wife" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 200, "If I Had a Scolding Wife" (1 fragment)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 415, "Lynchburg Town" (3 texts plus 2 fragments, 2 excerpts, and mention of 2 more, all with the "Lynchburg Town" chorus, but "A" and "B" have verses from "Raccoon" and "Possum Up a Gum Stump and "D" and "E" are partly "If I Had a Scolding Wife" ("Lucy Long (I)"); only "C" seems to be truly "Lynchburg Town"
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 415, "Lynchburg Town" (4 tunes plus text excerpts, corresponding to "A," "B," "E," and a "J" version that apparently is not cited in Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3)
Heart-Songs, p.289, "Miss Lucy Long" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #7413

NOTES [69 words]: Randolph and Brown both report this as a fragment of "Lucy Long." and I file it as such. It is interesting to note that both have the same single-stanza fragment; it seems likely enough that that one verse circulates on its own -- perhaps as the only traditional part of the song. Also interesting is the fact that this single stanza, about the "scolding wife," is the "last" verse in the Heart-Songs version. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0
File: R279

Lucy Long (II)

DESCRIPTION: "One night when the moon was beaming, I strayed with my Lucy Long." The singer describes the beauties of their evening walk. He asks her to marry; she blushes, hesitates, and consents.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1941 (Randolph); a "Lucy Long" tune was cited in 1854 in Put's Golden Songster

KEYWORDS: love courting marriage

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Randolph 780, "Lucy Long" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #7413

File: R780

Lucy Long (III)

DESCRIPTION: Shanty. Characteristic line: ""Why don't you try for to ring Miss Lucy Long?"

Verses involve meeting Miss Lucy, making various attempts at seduction, and being rejected. A frequent first line is "Was you ever on the Brumalow/Brumielaw?"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1796-1853 (Broadsides); 1926 (Terry)
KEYWORDS: shanty sailor seduction rejection
FOUND IN: West Indies Britain
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, p. 396, "Miss Lucy Long" (1 text, 1 tune) [AbEd, p. 301]
Sharp-EnglishFolkChanteys, XXII, p. 25, "Lucy Long" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #8285
NOTES [47 words]: There are several versions of this in the Bodleian Broadside collection, though they lack the shanty's chorus lines. [These should perhaps be filed under Lucy Long (II).- RBW]
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas says that Miss Lucy Long is a girl that often appears in Negro songs. - SL
File: Hugi396

Lucy's Flittin'
DESCRIPTION: Lucy's term was over and she "left her auld master and neebours sae dear." "I'm jist like the lammie that loses its mither." She and Jamie love each other but he only gives her a ribbon when they part. They won't meet again.

AUTHOR: William Laidlaw (1780-1845) (source: Ford)
EARLIEST DATE: 1810 (James Hogg's _The Forest Minstrel_, according to Ford and Greig/Duncan6)
KEYWORDS: loneliness love parting servant
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig/Duncan6 1248, "Lucy's Flittin" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Robert Ford, editor, _Vagabond Songs and Ballads of Scotland [first series]_ (Paisley,1899), pp. 170-172, "Lucy's Flittin"
Roud #2641
NOTES [67 words]: Ford: "This deeply pathetic ballad has so much of the country air about it that it has maintained its immense popularity almost entirely among the rural population."
From Peter A Hall, "Farm Life and the Farm Songs," pp. xxi-xxxi in Greig/Duncan3: "The time between hirings was, in the mid nineteenth century North-East, predominantly six months ['terms'] and the hiring was generally called feeing." - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD61248

Ludlow Massacre, The
DESCRIPTION: Faced with a strike, the mine owners drive the workers from their (company-owned) homes. The National Guard moves in and kills thirteen children by fires and guns. Since President and Governor cannot stop the guard, fighting continues

AUTHOR: Woody Guthrie
EARLIEST DATE: 1945 (recording, Woody Guthrie)
KEYWORDS: mining strike violence death labor-movement
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sept 1913 - Beginning of the strike by coal workers against John D. Rockefeller's Colorado Iron and Fuel Co.
April 1914 - A state militia company (actually composed of company thugs) attacks the Ludlow colony of strikers using machine guns and coal oil. 21 people die, including two women and thirteen children; three strikers are taken and murdered. Eventually federal troops are called in
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 279-281, "The Ludlow Massacre" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, pp. 152-154, "Ludlow Massacre" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 134, "The Ludlow Massacre" (1 text)
DT, LUDLWMAS*
RECORDINGS:
Woody Guthrie, "Ludlow Massacre" (Asch 360, 1945; on on AmHist2, Struggle2)
NOTES [429 words]: There is a recent book on the Ludlow Massacre, Scott Martelle, Blood Passion: The Ludlow Massacre and Class War in the American West, Rutgers University Press, 2007. It notes on the very first page that although there is a freeway exit for Ludlow, the town itself doesn't really exist anymore; the mines have mostly failed and all that is left is a sort of memorial park.

The book does not even mention Woody Guthrie in its index -- rather surprising, given that Guthrie wrote at a time when the massacre was still part of living memory, which it obviously was not at the time Martelle was writing. The numbers Guthrie gives in this song are perhaps a little dubious. Martelle, p. 2, gives this report:

"The nadir came on a sunny Monday morning in April 1914, when a detachment from the Colorado National Guard engaged in a ten-hour gun battle with union men at Ludlow, where a tent colony housing some eleven hundred strikers and their families had been erected. Seven men and a boy were killed in the shooting, at least three of the men -- all striking coal miners, one a leader -- apparently executed in cold blood by Colorado National Guardsmen who had taken them captive. As the sun set, the militia moved into the camp itself and an inferno lit up the darkening sky, reducing most of the makeshift village to ashes. It wasn't until the next morning that the bodies of two mothers and seven children were discovered where they had taken shelter in a dirt bunker beneath one of the tents. The raging fire had sucked the oxygen from the air below, suffocating the families as they hid from the gun battle."

"The deaths of the women and children quickly became known as the Ludlow Massacre, and the backlash was vicious and bloody."

Martelle's Appendix B, pp. 222-224, lists all the victims known to have died in the 1913-1914 labor war. Martelle says that at least 75 people were killed in the course of the labor war. He lists five uninvolved bystanders, 37 strikebreakers and guards (some of them killed from hiding), and 33 strikers and family. This means that more than half those killed on the miners' side died in the Massacre of April 20. The adult women killed were 37-year-old Patricia Valdez, along with four of her children, and 27-year-old Fedelina Costa, along with two of her children; one of the men killed outside was Charles Costa, although I don't know if they were husband and wife. Five other children were also killed in the bunker. The oldest of the suffocated children was nine years old; six of them had not yet reached their fifth birthday. - RBW

Luir A Chodla (Put the Old Man to Sleep)

DESCRIPTION: Gaelic: Luir a chodla, cuir a chodla, cuir a chodla, an sean-cluine, luira chodle, nigh a chosa agus bog deoch do'r tsean duine. English: Put to sleep (x2) put to sleep the old man. Put him to sleep, wash his feet, and draw a drink for the old man

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1960

KEYWORDS: age nonballad

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 191, "Put the Old Man to Sleep" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [19 words]: Lomax claims this is a Gaelic version of "Rocking the Cradle (and the Child Not His Own)." The evidence is thin. - RBW

File: LoF191

Luke and Mullen

DESCRIPTION: Sam Mullen goes looking for Luke; Luke says he doesn't want trouble, but Mullen picks a fight until Luke shoots him. Cho: "Wake up, Sam Mullen, put on your shoes/Get ready to catch ol' Luke before he leave this town/For Luke done laid Mullen body down"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1954 (recording, Horace Sprott)

KEYWORDS: fight violence homicide death

FOUND IN: US(SE)

RECORDINGS:

Horace Sprott, "Luke and Mullen" (on MuSouth02, ClassAfrAm)
Lukey's Boat

DESCRIPTION: A song describing Lukey and his boat. The boat is "painted green... the finest boat you've ever seen," etc. Lukey observes that his wife is dead, but "I don't care; I'll get another in the fall of the year."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (England, Vikings of the Ice)

KEYWORDS: ship humorous nonballad

FOUND IN: Canada (Mar, Newf)

REFERENCES (8 citations):
- Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 126, "Lukey's Boat" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Fowke/Johnston-FolkSongsOfCanada, pp. 46-47, "Lukey's Boat" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Doyle-OldTimeSongsAndPoetryOfNewfoundland, "Lukey's Boat" (1 text, 1 tune): p. 71 in the 2nd edition; p. 40 in the 3rd; p. 43 in the 4th; p. 53 in the 5th
- Blondahl-NewfoundlanderSing, pp. 44-45, "Lukey's Boat" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 127, "Loakie's Boat" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Pettie/Ellis-FolksongsOfTheMaritimes, pp. 42-43, "Lukey's Boat" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Mills-FavoriteSongsOfNewfoundland, pp. 28-29, "Lukey's Boat" (1 text, 1 tune)

ADDITIONAL: George Allan England, _Vikings of the Ice: Being the Log of a Tenderfoot on the Great Newfoundland Seal Hunt_ (also published as _The Greatest Hunt in the World_), Doubleday, 1924, p. 127, "Uncle Lukey's Boat" (1 excerpt)

ST FJ046 (Partial)

Roud #1828

RECORDINGS:
- Omar Blondahl, "Lukey's Boat" (on NFOBlondahl05)

NOTES [475 words]: [According to Blondahl, Doyle attributes this to] Mr Roberts, and others, Mrs Ira Yates, Mr Andrew Young, Twillingate, 1929. - BS

George Allen England gives only one verse of this, "Lukey's boat was painted green, De finest boat dat was ever seen...." But it's clearly this song, and it seems to be the earliest mention of it. And he too has an authorship claim: one of the sealers with whom he sailed supposedly told another of the sealers, "Joe," "You know dat song ahl to pieces, an' why wouldn't ye, in 'gard of ye makin' it up in de first place?" England (probably not seriously) claimed that "Joe" had 57 verses. England is not overly free with surnames, but I think the "Joe" referred to is a man named Joe Stirge. Not that I believe the claim of all those verses (though I'm sure there were many.) Creighton's informants said that the subject of the song lived in Lunenburg. But the song seems much more strongly associated with Newfoundland.

Philip Hiscock's notes to this song in West, p. 55, has perhaps the best folklore of all. In Wesleyville, famous as a home of sealing families, it is said that this was about a local fisherman named Luke "Lukey" Gaulton. The legend says the words were written by Virtue Hann Kean.

Gaulton struck back with his own verse:
'Twas Virtue Kean made up the song,
Right fa la, a diddle diddle die doe,
Virtue Kean made up the song,
She sleeps with the doctor all night long....

I can't say whether Gaulton was real, but Virtue Hann Kean most definitely was. She was the wife of Captain Job Kean (for whom see also "Captains and Ships" and "The Sealer's Song (II)"), who was the nephew of Captain Abram Kean (for whom see "Captain Abram Kean"). As Hiscock notes, Job Kean was not a doctor, so this verse was an insinuation about Virtue Kean's character. It's a nice legend, but pretty unlikely. First, Virtue Kean married into the Kean family, who were a bunch of stiff-necked prigs who would never have produced such a piece. Second, Virtue Kean, according to Kean, p. 23, had been the local schoolteacher before marrying Job Kean. So she would likely have been held in high regard.

And, remember, England said he heard this song on the _Terra Nova_, Abram Kean's own ship, in the 1920s. (And it would have been hard for him to find it anywhere else; it wasn't in print yet.) Can you imagine what Abram Kean's reaction was had there been a song floating around impugning... the virtue of his niece? He'd probably have thrown the singer overboard! So I think the folklore came later.

There is an 1899 photo of Captain Job Kean, along with other sealing stalwarts such as Abram Kean and Arthur Jackman, on p. 25 of Winsor. Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland say that the form of the stanza is the same as "A-Rovin'." True, but the tune I've heard is different. I don't think they're related. - RBW

Bibliography

- Kean: Abram Kean, with a foreword by Sir Wilfred Grenfell, Old and Young Ahead, 1935; I use the 2000 Flanker Press edition edited and with a new Introduction (and new photographs) by Shannon Ryan
- West: Eric West, Sing Around This One: Songs of Newfoundland & Labrador Vol. 2, Vinland Music, 1997

Last updated in version 6.0
File: FJ046

Lula Viers [Laws F10]

DESCRIPTION: John Coyer weighs his fiancee Lula Viers down with metal and throws her into the river. The body is not discovered for several months. Coyer is arrested, but is handed over to the army before going on trial

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Thomas)
KEYWORDS: homicide river

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Oct 1917 - Murder of Lula Viers by John Coyer. Viers was pregnant by Coyer, and he apparently preferred murder to marriage

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Laws F10, "Lula Viers" (sample text in NAB, pp. 62-64)
Thomas-BalladMakingInMountainsOfKentucky, pp. 144-146, "Lula Vires" (1 text)
McNeil-SouthernFolkBalladsVol2, pp. 79-81, "Lula Viers" (1 text, 1 tune)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 203-204, "Lula Viers" (1 text)
DT 804, LULAVIER

ADDITIONAL: Richard M. Dorson, _Buying the Wind: Regional Folklore in the United States_, University of Chicago Press, 1964, pp. 195-197, "Lula Voyers" (1 text)

Roud #1933
NOTES [30 words]: Laws was able to verify the basic facts of this ballad from the records of Floyd County, Kentucky (learning in the process that she was pregnant); see his notes in NAB, p. 65. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.1
File: LF10

Lullaby for a Sailor's Child

DESCRIPTION: "Roar, roar, thunder of the sea, Wild waves breaking on the sandy bar, And my true love is sailing, sailing far For his rosy little boy and Shena." The singer bids the child sleep, and wishes a blessing on her sailor far away

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: lullaby sailor separation nonballad

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H517, p. 7, "Lullaby for a Sailor's Child" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lulu (II)

DESCRIPTION: Composite of verses about Lulu and mountain life, e.g. "Lulu, get your hair cut Just like mine." "I went a fishin' an' fished for shad, First I caught was my old dad." "I'll give you a nickel, An' I'll give you a dime To see little Lulu Cut her shine"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (JAFL 22)
KEYWORDS: courting fishing nonballad floatingverses
FOUND IN: US(Se)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 183, "Lulu" (1 text, clearly composed of parts of different songs as some stanzas are twice the length of others)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 183, "Lulu" (1 tune plus a text excerpt)
Smith-SouthCarolinaBallads, p. 20, "Lulu" (1 short text, 1 tune, too short to be clearly identified, so I filed it here based on "feel")
Roud #4202
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Shad" (floating verse)
NOTES [25 words]: This might be connected in some way with "My Lulu." But the Brown and Sandburg versions have only the woman's name in common, so I've separated them. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.1

File: Br3183

Lulu Walls

DESCRIPTION: The singer describes "that aggravating beauty, Lulu Walls." She has stolen his heart and left him in "sad misery." He plans to offer to wed, but knows she will turn him down. If she were his, he would surround her with walls so no one else would see her

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (recording, Walter Morris)
KEYWORDS: love courting rejection
FOUND IN: US(Ap,Se,So)
REFERENCES (6 citations):
Randolph 383, "Lulu Walls" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jones-MinstrelOfTheAppalachians-Bascom-Lamar-Lunsford, pp. 233-234, "Lula Wall" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henry-SongsSungInTheSouthernAppalachians, pp. 37-38, "Lula Wall" (1 text)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 703, "Lula Falls"; 704, "Lula Wall" (2 short texts, 2 tunes)
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 90, "Lula Walls" (2 texts plus mention of 1 more, 2 tunes)
DT, LULUWALL*
Roud #3338
RECORDINGS:
Carter Family, "Lulu Walls" (Victor V-40126, 1929; Bluebird B-5927/Montgomery Ward M-4437, 1934) (Romeo 06-05-53/Conqueror 8693, 1936; rec. 1935)
A'nt Idy Harper & the Coon Creek Girls, "Lulu Wall" (Conqueror 9065 [as Coon Creek Girls]/Vocalion 04203, 1938)
Bascom Lamar Lunsford, "Lulu Wall" (Brunswick 229/Vocalion 5252, 1928)
Walter Morris, "Lulu Walsh" (Columbia 15115-D, 1927)
Marvin Williams, "Lula Wall" (Okeh 45467, 1930)
NOTES [86 words]: Recorded by the Carter Family, and credited to A. P. Carter -- but given that the song was in circulation in the Ozarks in 1928 (Randolph), and in the Appalachians in 1933 (Henry), it seems a fair bet that the song predates the Carters. Though it is quite likely that the Carters rewrote it. - RBW
The Ozark folks may well have learned the song from the Morris recording. - PJS
And ditto Frank W. Anderson, who was Henry's informant, and so on. I wonder if Morris wrote it? It doesn't sound very traditional to me. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.3
Lumber Camp Song, The

DESCRIPTION: A song describing life in the lumber camp. The shanty boys are men of all places and occupations. Most of the song is devoted to details of meals, smoking in the evening, and sleep. Details of the song vary widely

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1896 (Delaney's Song Book #13)

KEYWORDS: logger separation lumbering moniker

FOUND IN: US(MA,MW,NE) Canada(Mar,Newf,Ont)

REFERENCES (19 citations):
- Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 210-211, "The Lumber Camp Song" (1 text)
- Rickaby-BalladsAndSongsOfTheShantyBoy 14, "Jim Porter's Shanty Song" (2 texts plus a fragment, 2 tunes)
- Rickaby/Dykstra/Leary-PineryBoys-SongsSongcatchingInLumberjackEra 14, "Jim Porter's Shanty Song" (2 texts plus a fragment, 2 tunes)
- Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, pp. 82-83, "The Shantyman's Life (II)" (1 text, listed by Peters as a version of "The Shantyman's Life (I)" but clearly this)
- Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 104, "The Shanty Boys" (1 text)
- Lewis-FavoriteMichiganFolkSongs, p. 8, "The Shanty Boys in the Pine" (1 short text, 1 tune, probably this): p. 9, "Cutting Down the Pines" (1 text, 1 tune); pp. 10-11, "The Shanty Boys" (1 text, 1 tune, rewritten as a canon for two voices)
- Flanders/Olney-BalladsMigrantInNewEngland, pp. 141-143, "The Shanty Boys" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Fowke/Johnston-FolkSongsOfCanada, pp. 72-73, "The Lumber Camp Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 159, "The Lumber Camp Song" (1 text)
- Peacock, pp. 750-751, "Hurling Down the Pine" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Fowke-LumberingSongsFromTheNorthernWoods #5, "The Lumbercamp Song" (4 short texts, tune referenced): #7, "Hurry Up, Harry" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 38-39, "Shanty Boys" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Cazden/Haufrecht/Studer-FolkSongsOfTheCatskills 2, "Cutting Down the Pines" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends, pp. 350-351, "Song of the Shanty Boys" (1 text)
- Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks 11, "The Shanty Boys in the Pine" (2 texts, 1 tune)
- Beck-TheyKnewPaulBunyan, pp. 92-102, "Shanty Boys in the Pine" (2 texts, 1 tune)
- Beck-LoreOfTheLumberCamps 38, "Shanty Boys in the Pine" (2 texts, 1 tune)

DT, CUTPINES

ADDITIONAL: James P. Leary, Compiler and Annotator, _Wisconsin Folklore_ University of Wisconsin Press, 2009, article "The Wanigan Songbook" by Isabel J. Ebert, pp. 208-210, "The Wolf River Shanty Boy Song" (1 text, 1 tune, sung by Emory DeNoyer)

ST Doe210 (Full)

Roud #667

RECORDINGS:
- Emery DeNoyer, "Shantyman's Life" (AFS, 1941; on LC55)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Jim, the Carter Lad" (lyrics)
- cf. "The Herring Gibbers" (theme, tune)
- cf. "Falling of the Pine" (theme)
- cf. "Johnny Carroll's Camp" (theme)
- cf. "Dans Les Chantiers (The Winter Camp)" (theme)
- cf. "The Winter of '73 (McCullam Camp)" (theme)
- cf. "Burns's Log Camp" (theme)
- cf. "Bunkhouse Ballad" (theme)
- cf. "Winter Desires" (theme)
- cf. "Hall's Lumber Crew" (theme)
- cf. "Peaslee's Lumber Crew" (structure)
- cf. "Dempsey's Lumber-Camp Song" (theme)
- cf. "Trimble's Crew" (theme, tune)
- cf. "Poupore's Shanty Crew" (theme, tune)
Lumber Wagon Blues

DESCRIPTION: "Some women have their troubles, The men have theirs likewise, Compare the two with agony." A milliner's daughter loves a shanty-boy. "The shanty boy... measures Susie's waist" but dislikes her makeup. He declares he has learned to cook for himself

AUTHOR: George Nye (Georgiana Keopcke), according to Gard/Sorden
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (The Knapsack magazine, April 1929 issue, according to Gard/Sorden)
KEYWORDS: love courting rejection humorous
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
ADDITIONAL: Robert E. Gard and L. G. Sorden, _Wisconsin Lore: Antics and Anecdotes of Wisconsin People and Places_, Wisconsin House, 1962, pp. 107-108, "Lumber Wagon Blues" (1 text, with no evidence that the song went into tradition)

Lumbering on the Cass

DESCRIPTION: "How many of those pioneers, I wonder, are alive, Who used to lumber on the Cass in 1865? Over forty years ago, how swift the time it flies...." The singer recalls the troubles of bringing in supplies, lists some of the loggers, and recalls a fire in 1871

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1948 (Beck-LoreOfTheLumberCamps)
KEYWORDS: logger lumbering travel hardtimes fire river
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Beck-LoreOfTheLumberCamps 14, "Lumbering on the Cass" (1 text)
Roud #18196
File: BeLo014

Lumberjack Song, The

DESCRIPTION: A call to Newfoundland lumberjacks: "On the banks of Red Indian Lake" we'll cut down the pines in the day and sing around our shanty fires at night. "We'll range the wild woods o'er as a-lumbering we'll go"

Lumberjack, The

DESCRIPTION: Recitation; the speaker praises the character of lumberjacks, despite their rough-hewn ways.

AUTHOR: Probably Marion Ellsworth

EARLIEST DATE: 1941 (Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks)

KEYWORDS: lumbering work recitation logger

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks 98, "The Lumberjack" (1 text)

Roud #8879

NOTES [18 words]: This, like the other pieces probably written by Ellsworth, does not seem to have entered oral tradition. - PJS

File: Be098

Lumberjack's Prayer

DESCRIPTION: "Blue Monday, bitter Tuesday, Long Wednesday, everlasting Thursday, Friday, will you ever go? Sweet silver Saturday in the afternoon. Sunday, may you last forever. Amen. Two nights in the straw And three meals ahead."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (Beck-TheyKnewPaulBunyan)

KEYWORDS: logger work

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Beck-TheyKnewPaulBunyan, p. 122, "Lumberjack's Prayer" (1 text)
- Beck-LoreOfTheLumberCamps 4, "Lumberjack's Prayer" (1 text)

Roud #6508

File: BBun122B

Lumberman in Town, The

DESCRIPTION: "When the lumberman comes down, Ev'ry pocket bears a crown, And he wanders, some pretty girl to find." He stays at a fine inn till his money is gone, whereupon he regretfully returns to the woods. (When he is old, he marries a young girl who mocks him)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks)

KEYWORDS: logger work drink marriage age

FOUND IN: US(NE) Canada(Mar,Ont)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
- Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks, pp. 58-59, "The Lumberman in Town" (1 text)
- Lomax/Lomax-FolkSongUSA 51, "The Lumberman in Town" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Fowke-LumberingSongsFromTheNorthernWoods #44, "When the Shantyboy Comes Down" (1 text plus a fragment, 1 tune)
- Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs 28, "When the Shantyboy Comes Down" (1..."
Lumberman's Drinking Song

DESCRIPTION: "'Tis when we do go into the woods, Drink round, brave boys! (x2)... 'Tis when we go... Jolly brave boys are we. 'Tis when we go... We look for timber, and that which is good." The woodsmen chop, the haulers haul -- and the merchants sell to the loggers

AUTHOR: John S. Springer? (source: Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks)

EARLIEST DATE: 1851 (Springer, _Forest Life and Forest Trees_)

KEYWORDS: logger lumbering work drink commerce river

FOUND IN: US(MA)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks, pp. 15-17, "Drinking Song" (1 text)
Roud #15000
File: Gray015

Lumberman's Song

DESCRIPTION: "Winter it has come again, And to the woods we go." "It is work and work, from three till none." The singer lists some of the men in the camp: The tricky teamster Huey Mallinix, the McFarley Boys, the cook, the boss who carries the fire-poker

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Thompson)

KEYWORDS: logger work lumbering moniker

FOUND IN: US(MA)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales, pp. 265-266, "Lumberman's Song" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Lumber Camp Song" (theme)

File: TNY265

Lurgan Braes

DESCRIPTION: An apprentice boy left Portadown for Woodside on the Kelvin River. He thought of the girl he left behind near Lurgan Braes. He swore he would remain true to her. If he returns he will call on her: "if she is dead, or if she is wed, I'm at my Liberty"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1860 (broadside, NLScotland APS.4.86.6)

KEYWORDS: courting love promise separation travel Ireland Scotland floatingverses nonballad apprentice

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #72, p. 2, "Lurgan Braes" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan8 1909, "Lurgan Braes" (1 text)
Roud #6273

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 c.14(76), "Lurgan Braes" ("The summer time being in its prime"), J. Lindsay (Glasgow), 1851-1910
Murray, Mu23-y1:034, "Lurgan Braes," James Lindsay (Glasgow), 19C
NLScotland, APS.4.86.6, "Lurgan Braes" ("The Summer time being in its prime"), J. Lindsay (Glasgow), 1852-1859

NOTES [61 words]: Greig: "'Lurgan Braes' is one of those songs which are compounded of several ditties and sorely lack unity and clear meaning."
In spite of Greig's comment there are few actual floating verses ("rocks melt with the sun," for example) but more floating ideas.
Specifically, [the singer] left Portadown in County Armagh. Woodside is on the Kelvin River, near Glasgow. - BS

Last updated in version 2.5
File: Grd81909

Lurgan Town (I)

DESCRIPTION: The singer steps up to a girl and tries to court her. She says she is pledged to Jamie. He says Jamie died in China, and shows the (broken) ring he gave her. She laments, and curses her parents who exiled him. He reveals that he is Jamie; they get married

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love separation reunion broken token exile soldier
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H563, p. 316, "Lurgan Town" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6871
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. esp. "John (George) Riley (I)" [Laws N36] and references there
cf. "A Bonnie Laddie, But Far Awa (theme: parents drive lover away)

File: HHH563

Lurgan Town (II)

DESCRIPTION: Catholic Inspector Hancock has changed Lurgan. You'd be jailed two days for singing an Orange song. He keeps the Fenian meetings safe. The police come to our dance and dance the girls to Garryowen. He breaks up an Orange demonstration on July 12.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads)
KEYWORDS: discrimination Ireland political police dancing
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 54, "Lurgan Town" (1 text, 1 tune)
Smyth/Bush/Long-OrangeLark 21, "Lurgan Town" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6870
NOTES [57 words]: OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads: "The ballad was occasioned by the unpopular appointment of a Catholic Inspector of Police in Lurgan, Co. Armagh."
July 12 celebrates the Battle of the Boyne, 1690. When Hancock breaks up the demonstration, says the song, "We turned, shook hands, all we could do Was say 'Boys remember the Boyne water!'" - BS

File: OLcM054

Lurgy Stream, The (The Lurgan/Leargaidh Stream)

DESCRIPTION: The singer arrives in the country and sees a beautiful woman by the (Lurgy) stream. He asks her to marry him and come across the seas. She turns him down. He promises to be true, and tries again. She rejects him again. He mopes and leaves home

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love courting rejection beauty
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H65a, pp. 293-294, "Alt[l]mover Stream" (1 text, 1 tune); H229a+b, p. 360-361, "The Lurgan Stream" (2 texts, 1 tune. The two texts are probably different redactions of the same original)
McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen 52, "The Lurgy Stream" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6881 and 6889
RECORDINGS:
Mary Anne Connelly, "Lurgan Stream" (on Voice15, IRHardySons)
Marge Steiner, "Lurgan Stream" (on Steiner01)
NOTES [60 words]: McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen: "This is another Donegal song, popular in many parts of Ireland, especially the northern parts. Versions of this song were made famous in the earlier half of this century through recordings made in America by people like John McGettigan. Old 78 rpm records were sent home to the kinfolk by emigrants." - BS
Last updated in version 4.4
File: HHH229

Lusitania, The
DESCRIPTION: Lusitania sails from New York for Ireland. "Three thousand souls she had on board ... Until those cruel German dogs, for her they lay unseen, And shattered her to fragments with their cursed submarine" Vanderbilt gives his life-belt to a mother.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1948 (Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast)
KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship wreck sailor war
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
May 7, 1915: "At lunchtime ... a torpedo from U-20 struck the _Lusitania_. A further explosion rent the ship and she sank in two hours with the loss of 1200 lives" (source: Bourke in _Shipwrecks of the Irish Coast_ v1, pp. 117-118)
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, p. 76, "The Lusitania" (1 text)
Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan 2, "The Lusitania" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7349
RECORDINGS:
Tom Lenihan, "The Lusitania" (on IRTLenihan01)
NOTES [11656 words]: The _Lusitania's_ tragic story tells a great deal about the peculiar circumstances of the early twentieth century. The British, though long known for their merchant fleet, were losing the edge in passenger service, especially high-speed passenger service; the German lines NDL and HAPAG were taking over the market (Ramsey, pp. 5-8).
Britain had only three companies competing in this market, Inman, White Star, and Cunard. Inman had sold out in the late nineteenth century, and J. P. Morgan by the early twentieth century owned the remnants of Inman and was controlling the White Star Line as well (Brinnin, p. 325; Ramsey, p.
12; Fox, pp. 391-393, says that it was one Clement A. Griscom who organized the combinations, but it was Morgan who managed the financing. Eventually Morgan took charge once Griscom had laid the groundwork; Fox, p. 394). Brinnin, p. 328, and Barczewski, p. 260, say that Morgan was sniffing after Cunard as well, hoping to create a dominating transatlantic cartel.
To add to the British problems, the German lines were in alliance with their government (Ramsey,
p. 10) and had a working arrangement with Morgan (Brinnin, pp. 325-327).
Cunard had long built its reputation on an amazing safety record (no passengers lost, ever, to an actual sailing accident; see Brinnin, pp. 272, 275, etc.; Preston, p. 62), but now, seeing its position drastically affected, it had little choice but to get into the alliance game itself. Dangling the threat of a Morgan takeover, they negotiated with the British government (Brinnin, pp. 328-331), and came away with a big subsidy in return for rights to requisition Cunard ships in event of war.
The first ships to come under this arrangement were the _Caronia_ and _Carmania_ -- but the real prize, for Cunard, was an agreement to build two fast liners that could be requisitioned by the British navy and converted to auxiliary cruisers. These were the _Lusitania_ and her sister the _Mauretania_.
The idea of liners that could be converted to warships was not new; the first such to be designed was the White Star Line's _Teutonic_ of two decades earlier (Fox, pp. 361-362). But the ships' primary task was of course to carry passengers, not to fight.
"Speed, as ever, carried the day. The final specification called for ships 790 feet long and 88 feet wide, of 32,500 tons, driven by four screws and four turbine engines humming out 68,000 horsepower. All these dimensions leaped far past any other vessel, either running or planned....
[T]hey would be the first British ships topped off by four smokestacks" (Fox, pp. 402-403). The four screws were also a new design technique, which forced designers to work out a method of putting the outer screws much ahead of the center screws (Fox, p. 409).

It was difficult to design such ships; PeekeEtAl, p. 4, say that the designers were called upon to combine "the bottom third of the latest Admiralty design for a heavy cruiser [with] the top two-thirds of a super-liner." It didn't work; they ended up having to widen the beam (and, as we shall see, the result still wasn't as stable as a slower ship).

There were other interesting "naval" touches -- e.g. the equipment on her bridge was similar to that used on navy ships rather than civilian vessels, to make it easier for naval crewmen to use her should she be taken over (PeekeEtAl, p. 23).

When she was launched in 1907, the 30,396 ton Lusitania was the largest ship afloat, capable of over 26 knots for brief spells (Ramsey, p. 24). She soon won the Blue Riband for fastest transatlantic crossing, making the trip in less than five days and averaging almost 24 knots for the entire trip (Ramsey, pp. 27-28). She thus became the first-ever "four day ship" (Brinnin, p. 342). The only ship to compete with her in speed was her sister Mauretania, which proved to be ever so slightly faster and in fact held the Blue Riband for an incredible 22 years (Brinnin, p. 344). Mauretania also managed the astonishing feat of completing all her crossings over a long period in a time that varied by only about ten minutes (Brinnin, p. 345).

We should note that a misconception found in many histories is false. The Lusitania and Mauretania were "not" the fastest ships in the world -- contrary even to an assertion made by Lusitania's crew to her passengers in 1915; see Simpson, p. 112. The sisters were the fastest "liners", but by 1915, there were all sorts of ships capable of catching her. Taking the data in Jane's Fighting Ships of World War I, the 1912 battlecruiser Tiger could reach 28 knots, the 1913 light cruisers of the Aurora class averaged about 28, and the 1911 "K" class destroyers hit 31 knots. Even the battleships of the Queen Elizabeth class could reach 24-25 knots. And ships with an even higher turn of speed were produced during the war.

Germany had no Queen Elizabeths, but they had battlecruisers and destroyers that could catch Lusitania and Mauretania. It's just that their submarines couldn't. Nor would any knowledgeable person have denied the existence of faster ships; even her builders at the time of her launching claimed only that he could move "at a speed only previously accomplished by a torpedo boat destroyer" (PeekeEtAl, p. 16).

In any case, warships, although capable of high speeds, usually sailed at a more economical cruising speed, which also saved wear and tear on the engines. The liners went at full steam the entire way, so although they were not the fastest ships in a sprint, they were the fastest way to cross the Atlantic, bar none.

Apart from being fast, the sisters was also allowed passengers luxuries never before seen (and not to be matched until White Star produced the Olympic and Titanic four years later). They used electricity for many functions previously done by hand or hydraulically, and their cabins were half again as large as previous liners (Brinnin, p. 342). They even had shipboard elevators -- the first on a British liner (Fox, p. 404). As designed, the Lusitania had four boiler rooms and capacity for 552 first class passengers, 460 second class, 1186 third class, and 827 crew (Ramsey, p. 25). They were also magnificently decorated (Fox makes the ironic note that the idea of shipboard design was to make passengers think that they were ashore, and says on p. 403 that Lusitania's interior designer James Miller had done all his previous work on land projects.)

There were a few glitches in the basic design. As originally built, Lusitania vibrated so badly at high speed that she had to be taken in for a major refit (Ballard, p. 22; Preston, p. 62; Fox, pp. 404-405), blames it on the fact that no one fully understood the fluid mechanics of the turbines and propeller at the time -- which is hardly surprising, fluid mechanics to this day remains one of the most intractable areas of classical physics). The repairs succeeded, for the most part, but they perhaps indicated some other structural problems -- PeekeEtAl, pp. 25-26, says that the problem was the lack of decent reduction gearing to allow fast-running turbines to drive the screw propellers (which operate better at a lower rotation rate) at a reasonable speed.

Other than that, the ship performed better than expectations in every regard. But, reading PeekeEtAl, I can't help but note how much time Lusitania spent in the dock, getting new screws, having her turbine blades repaired, or having the structure reworked -- just generally being fiddled with. Not the best testimony to her strength of design.

Despite her design problems, Lusitania was in many ways a stronger ship than her slightly later contemporary, the Titanic; Titanic had only 16 watertight cells, Lusitania 34 (Ballard, p. 23). Unlike Titanic, even though she was designed earlier, she was pretty close to iceberg-proof.

But, of course, she never ran into an iceberg. The surprise was that she proved so vulnerable to man-made attack. This was at least partly due to the many demands placed on her design. A 1907 heavy cruiser had a displacement in the 14,000 ton range. Lusitania was over twice that. Which meant a lot of boilers, which had to run most of the width of the ship, as did the coal bunkers.
The boiler rooms and bunkers were so large that, if flooded, they would cost the ship most of its buoyancy. The only solution was "longitudinal bulkheads" -- that is, instead of a full honeycomb, with from one to three bulkheads along the length of the ship and assorted bulkheads across the width, in the area of the boilers and bunkers, the boilers took up nearly the whole width of the ship, with only small compartments to the port and starboard sides for additional protection (PeekeEtAl, pp. 6-7). The arrangement really was iceberg-proof -- but if, somehow, one of those longitudinal bulkheads was breached, it meant that the ship would lose power and also would run the risk of sinking. If hit just wrong, so that two such bulkheads were breached, she would almost certainly sink.

And there was more. To keep the ship moving at full speed required huge amounts of coal. And the only place to put it, given that the rest of the ship was spoken for, was in the longitudinal bunkers. Which meant cutting doors in the wall. And it turns out that they were almost impossible to close, once opened, because of all the coal and coal dust in them. This wasn't considered a major concern at the time; the designers had thought of icebergs, and plunging shellfire -- but not torpedo hits below the waterline (PeekeEtAl, p. 7; Larson, pp. 11-12, although Larson is of the opinion that the coal was regarded as armor protection -- p. 12 makes the absurd claim that she was "a passenger liner... with the hull of a battleship" -- which is simply wrong; she was a passenger liner with the hull FORM of a heavy cruiser).

Oil fuel would probably have cured most of this, but oil-only vessels were years away. It's also worth noting that Lusitania wasn't really suited to be a warship, despite the gun mountings built into her original design (which were actually fitted at a refit in 1913; PeekeEtAl, p. 37); to achieve her high speed, she was very long and lean -- and tall, because the propulsion system took up the entire size of the hull, so "the design team had nowhere to go but up when deciding where to place the passenger accommodations" (Harding, p. 60).

This meant that she (and Mauretania as well) was not particularly stable; in heavy weather, the bow could pitch wildly into the air, then bury itself in the seas; she was a very "wet" ship (Barczewski, p. 261). This would have made her a poor gun platform; battleships in particular -- by contrast to cruiser designs like the Lusitania -- tend to be very broad of beam, to help keep the guns on target. Indeed, the Admiralty soon after the start of the War refitted the Carmania as an auxiliary cruiser, and she succeeded in sinking a German refitted liner, the Cap Trafalgar -- but the experiment showed how ineffective the Carmania was as a warship (Payne, p. 93; Brinnin, pp. 407-409 points out that there was severe damage to the Carmania as well; both ships needed dozens of hits to sink their opponents. Brinnin, p. 410, calls it a "Gilbert and Sullivan gunfight").

This should probably have been obvious all along. Most converted liners -- "auxiliary cruisers" -- were armed with guns in the four inch to six inch range, with no more than twelve fitted, and obviously none of them centerline mounted. This meant that most liners would have offensive power somewhere between a destroyer and a weak light cruiser (and without a destroyer's antisubmarine weapons or torpedoes). But the liner needed at least as many men as a light cruiser, was slower than some cruisers and all destroyers, and burned more coal. Armed merchant cruisers weren't useful offensive weapons. The Admiralty largely abandoned the idea of arming the luxury liners; they just weren't effective enough for the task (Preston, p. 386).

Indeed, Lusitania had been requisitioned at the start of the war, and promptly turned back to Cunard; her coal demands were too high (Massie, p. 24). (This is not to say that the auxiliary cruisers were useless. By late 1914, converted liners were doing most of the work of maintaining the blockade on Germany; Massie, pp. 510-511. But they were a very expensive way to do this work; it would have taken fewer men and less coal to patrol the area with light cruisers -- if Britain had had the light cruisers to do it.)

The plans for the Lusitania apparently specified a dozen six inch guns (Ramsey, p. 188). The Lusitania would thus have been in the light cruiser range, but unarmored and making a much bigger target. Nor would there have been a good place for an optical platform to centrally direct the guns.

The Admiralty had other uses for requisitioned liners, though. Britain had a lot of soldiers to move, and a lot of freight to haul, and liners were excellent for the first function and could be refitted to do the latter also. Lusitania would be one of the ships so modified.

It's at this point that things get a little murky. That Lusitania underwent a refit is certain. But many claims have been made about what was done during the refit. Simpson, pp. 27-28, claims that she actually was given guns at this time during a dockyard stay beginning August 8 (pretty amazing, given that the war had started only four days earlier).

But even Simpson allows that she never sailed as an auxiliary cruiser (p. 37), and seems to admit that she never went out armed. Harding, p. 62, points out that the United States inspectors never classed her as a combat ship -- and while they might have missed ammunition in the hold, they certain wouldn't have missed heavy guns on the deck! A member of the expedition of John Light, who dived to the ship in the 1960s, thought he saw guns (O'Sullivan, p. 36) -- but he worked in very bad conditions, in which mistakes were quite possible (Preston, pp. 386-387); O'Sullivan admits that "to date nothing has been found to substantiate his claims." The passengers' accounts uniformly denied seeing weapons (Preston, p. 387), even though at least one specifically searched for them (Preston, pp. 133).

A few paranoids have suggested that Lusitania carried guns in her holds which could be put into the gun rings when needed -- but this is simply ridiculous; you don't take 6" guns and casually haul them up an elevator and drop them in a gun mounting. And even if you did, the guns would need to be calibrated (Ramsey, p. 188). Ramsey, pp. 186-192, documents how the story that she was armed arose, but also shows why it is false. Even if you doubt the British records, Ballard's exploration (much more thorough than Light's) would have shown guns on her decks, and evidence of secondary explosions from her shells, and it showed neither.

So what was the Admiralty doing to Lusitania during the refit? Primarily converting her to carry more cargo. They opened out some passenger space for storage and other purposes (Ramsey, p. 36; PeekeEtAl, p. 43), incidentally affecting her stability somewhat and worsening that pesky vibration (Ramsey, p. 39; Simpson, p. 45). It also caused significant inconvenience for the passengers. But the navy left her in merchant service, though it began to control her route, schedule, and loading (Preston, p. 64; PeekeEtAl, p. 43).

This was all against Cunard's wishes. With the war on, transatlantic traffic fell dramatically. Lusitania didn't have enough passengers to make a profit (PeekeEtAl, p. 43, estimates a two thousand pound loss per trip), but the Admiralty wouldn't let Cunard change her schedule; they wanted her bringing supplies. The government's only promises were to continue the subsidy to the ships, to pay for cargo space, and to insure the ship (Simpson, p. 38). The Admiralty would determine her course and sailing time.

It was a recipe for big losses. The only answer Cunard could find was to close down one of her four boiler rooms (to save coal; Ballard, pp. 30-31, and also to reduce the number of stokers needed; Simpson, p. 85). The shut-down of the boilers allowed her to roughly break even despite the reduced passenger load, but it also reduced her speed significantly -- and all that time spent fiddling around in the shipyard also reduced her efficiency and caused some of her equipment to deteriorate (Ramsey. p. 51).

Larson, p. 130, says that the passengers did not know about her reduced speed, but surely they must have noticed that it took her five days, not four, to cross the Atlantic! It doesn't seem to have caused much worry, though.

There does not seem to have been any fear at the time that a submarine would attack her; the Germans did not start unrestricted submarine warfare until later, and in any case, no submarine had sunk a ship moving faster than 14 knots (Preston, p. 93), and she would still easily exceed that. There had been a story that, early in the war, she was chased by a German cruiser -- a story which Simpson accepts. But PeekeEtAl, p. 42, shows that this simply did not happen.

The war didn't just cause the Lusitania to change what she carried and how she sailed. It also cost her most of her more experienced crew; the sailors ended up in the navy and some of the stewards and such were in the army. Their replacements were inexperienced (Simpson, p. 102, says that she managed to find only 41 able seamen for the last trip, though she was supposed to have at least 77), and such crew as could be found had a significant tendency to desert upon reaching New York (Ballard, p. 59). Some who did serve on her spoke poor English, and few knew their way around the ship.

Topping it all off, Lusitania's schedule was reduced to one round trip per month, making it harder for the crew to become accustomed to their tasks (Ballard, p. 208). It was not a good combination should there be an emergency. And as for lowering the boats -- well, unlike the Titanic three years earlier, they had boat drills, but a passenger reported that they involved only two boats, and even those were not actually lowered (Ballard, p. 63; Preston, p. 131, and PeekeEtAl, p. 58, describe a few crew members simply climbing into a selected boat and then getting out -- PeekeEtAl, pp. 58-59 argues that this was about all that could have been done, since the boats could not be lowered while the ship was moving, but surely the passengers could at least have been shown how to board). Obviously the crew and passengers would not be ready in the event of disaster. (Simpson, p. 102, is of the opinion that the crew simply lied about her disaster preparedness; PeekeEtAl, p. 59, thinks the boat drills were solely to reassure the passengers.) During the war, the ship continued to run primarily passengers, but she did carry some war-related cargo on her final voyages. (The British naturally concealed some of this until after the war, contributing to Simpson's air of paranoia.) O'Sullivan, p. 117, notes that under American law "no vessel could legally sail with any explosives likely to endanger the health or lives of passengers or the safety of the vessel."

The question, of course, is whether her cargo did in fact violate the American rules. It appears, contrary to O'Sullivan, that it did not. Just what she was carrying on her last trip is slightly uncertain; some of it was munitions -- some four million rifle cartridges (Hoehling, p. 96, calls them practice cartridges, but most sources seem to think they were for ordinary military use) and 5000 3-inch shells (Ramsey, p. 56). Ballard, p. 27, notes that these were considered legitimate items to transport on a passenger liner even in wartime, since they were not explosive (cf. O'Sullivan, p. 133; Preston, pp. 368-369, which has some of the court evidence on the matter). Brinnin, p. 422, says that the shell casings were not loaded with explosives (they were "filled," i.e. the shrapnel had been loaded -- but shrapnel is not itself explosive; O'Sullivan, pp. 131-132. The actual charges would be installed in England).

This has actually been verified; a handful of unfilled fuses have been brought up from the wreck (Preston, p. 389), and the measurement of the weight of the shells shows they were unfilled (Preston, p. 390).

On the other hand, the British themselves, at the start of the war, had changed the rules for what was contraband, and started paying extra attention to neutral ships (Massie, pp. 507-508). I would say that, by the revised British standards, Lusitania was carrying war materials, and could have been made to give them up. But the British would not have sunk her; they would have taken her into port and confiscated what they didn't like.

Simpson says that the British were playing a bit fast and loose with cargo manifests at the time. In effect, they submitted one well in advance with her "standard" cargo, then another with last-minute changes. Not too surprisingly, most of the last-minute changes involved perishable items like food -- given Britain's need for foodstuffs, the local buyers would naturally take whatever they could lay their hands on and find space for in the cargo holds (which had to be loaded very carefully, since the ship wasn't really designed for cargo-hauling and didn't have elevators or passages designed for freight). But it would presumably have been easy to slip in some contraband with the last-minute items.

A suspicious mind could have a field day with the manifest for the final trip. Simpson makes a great deal about 3863 large boxes of cheese (p. 105), which PeekeEtAl, p. 100, notes was unrefrigerated (though a cargo hold near the bottom of a ship in the North Atlantic needn't have been too hot, we should note. Cheese might well survive. There was, however, also butter listed in the shipment, which sounds pretty strange). Stranger still was something listed on her cargo manifest as 205 barrels of oysters, which would certainly go bad before they could be distributed (Ramsey, p. 57). The obvious assumption was that they were actually military materials. The flip side is, even if those oysters were actually explosives (say), 205 barrels of explosives weren't going to change the outcome of the war.

Others have questioned a consignment of furs -- but in fact some of the furs floated to shore after the wreck (Preston, p. 390).

The German government issued warnings in 1915 threatening unrestricted submarine attacks on "civilian" shipping sailing too close to the British Isles; one such message was published in a newspaper just as the Lusitania started her final run (Ramsey, p. 53; Ballard, p. 31, and Preston, p. 91, print a copy of the ad). Supposedly some of the passengers also received warnings, but these had an air of the crank about them (Ballard, p. 32; PeekeEtAl, p. 53, says that it was newspapermen seeking a story, not Germans, who sent them). Few changed their plans. Simpson, p. 114, claims there was a melancholy air about the passengers as they went aboard, but cites no source for this claim.

After all, the Lusitania, even with her speed reduced, was faster than any German submarine (her new cruising speed was about 18 knots, and according to PeekeEtAl, p. 44, she could still hit 21 in a pinch -- twice the speed of a submerged submarine, and at least five knots faster than a submarine on the surface), so no attempt was made to give her an escort (Paine, p. 311. Preston, p. 399, notes that there had been an attempt to give her an escort on a previous trip -- and, given the need for radio silence, the escort had never found her; cf. Ramsey, p. 245). Indeed, had she been given a naval escort, it would have made her a legitimate target in any reckoning.

On May 1, 1915 Lusitania sailed from New York with nearly two thousand people on board. This was by no means a full load; she had only 291 passengers in first class (53% of capacity); there were 601 second class passengers (31% over capacity). Steerage was almost empty, with only 31% of berths filled: 373 out of 1186 possible (Ballard, p. 37).

Nonetheless, it was the largest load of passengers she had had on the eastbound route since the start of the war (Preston, pp. 102-103), in part because passengers from other ships had been put aboard when the other ships had been rescheduled or requisitioned (Larson, p. 114). For some reason, the number of children was unusually high (Preston, p. 128).

To make things doubly unfortunate, the Germans had sent a number of submarines to the area where she was sailing. This, ironically, was in response to British disinformation: To mask the invasion of the Dardanelles, the British were trying to give the impression they would launch an amphibious assault on Germany. The Germans took the bait and sent submarines to try to interfere (Preston, p. 163).

On May 6, Lusitania entered Germany’s declared "war zone." The claims that she made no attempts to avoid her fate are, however, false; Ballard, p. 72, notes that she extinguished her lights at night, closed several watertight doors -- and swung out her boats, just in case (cf. PeekeEtAl, p. 62). Larson, p. 192, says that the crew wasn't very good at doing this (lack of practice, no doubt) -- but the boats were ready to go when the ship was off Ireland.

On the other hand, no serious attempts were made to shut the portholes; many of them were apparently left open, and they probably caused the ship to flood even faster than she otherwise would have, and increased the list that was to make it so hard to lower the boats (Preston, p. 368). She did receive some warnings of submarines (PeekeEtAl, p. 63). It's just that they didn't describe how severe the danger was (fully 23 ships in the area had been sunk since Lusitania left New York, including several sunk by Lusitania's nemesis U-20; O'Sullivan, pp. 85-88, though this report is marred, e.g., by calling H. M. S. Juno a "battle cruiser"; Juno was a light cruiser from the 1890s, meaning that, rather than being one of the fanciest and newest ships in the fleet, she was a piece of junk the British would have been better off without. It's like calling a Yugo a Mercedes). The commander in Queenstown (Cobh), in fact, issued a specific advisory that a U-boat was operating off the south Irish coast (Preston, p. 166), and a specific order was given to make sure the Lusitania was warned (Preston, p. 179; Hoehling, p. 100).

Other ships were warned in detail and redirected; Lusitania was not (O'Sullivan, p. 87). Of course, Lusitania was not expected to be anywhere near the Old Head of Kinsale at that time. Except -- she was.

In the absence of detailed knowledge of conditions in the area, Captain Turner chose to sail past Ireland at 18 knots, well below his available speed; Lusitania was big enough that he needed the right tide or a pilot to enter Liverpool, and he didn't want to have to sit around outside the bar, where he would be an even better U-boat target (Ballard, p. 78; Preston, p. 326). (I can't help but think that Turner didn't like having to make tight maneuvers, either; Larson, p. 20, notes that ships he had captained had already had two accidental collisions.) So he ignored what were claimed to be standing orders to proceed at full speed near harbors, to sail away from headlands, and to zigzag in the war zone (Ballard, p. 79), later claiming, possibly truly, that the rules had not been made sufficiently clear (Larson, pp. 146-147, claims this instruction had perhaps not been circulated when the Lusitania sailed).

According to PeekeEtAl, pp. 83-84, while en route, he also was wirelessed a secret order to head to Queenstown (a fact which never came out during the inquiries, because it was secret -- according to PeekeEtAl, it was also hidden by the removal of the relevant page from the Admiralty's signal log).

It was unfortunate that the Lusitania had encountered a lot of fog in the days before she reached the Irish coast (PeekeEtAl, pp. 67-68; Hoehling, p. 100). That left her dependent on dead reckoning. And the ship, when it left the fog, proved to be slightly off its dead reckoning position -- it was too far from shore. Captain Turner, when he spotted Ireland, of course realized where he was (it was hard to mistake the Old Head of Kinsale, especially as it was marked by a lighthouse with a distinctive white-and-black paint job; PeekeEtAl, p. 70) -- but for some reason he ordered what is known as a "four point fix" to determine his exact location. That meant he had to sail a straight course for some 20 minutes while the fix was being taken (Preston, p. 185, with details on the fog spread over the preceding pages; Larson, p. 231, claims the fix would have taken fully half an hour).

Ramsey, p.162, notes that "other captains had testified that an accurate position could be obtained by taking cross bearings in only three minutes." On pp. 284-285, he notes that it was usually accurate to within a mile, with current and wind being the main things which affected its accuracy. It was used in circumstances when only one landmark with a known location could be seen.

I can't help but note that the Lusitania was 787 feet long. If accurate bearings were taken simultaneously from bow and stern, and the angles compared, there would have been a significant difference -- on the order of a degree if the estimated distance from the coast was correct. So, given proper equipment and crew, even the three minute course was not needed. If navigators hadn't developed the trig tables to perform that particular calculation, it was time they did so!

But forget all that and just look at the map on p. 532 of Massie. If Turner could see the Old Head of Kinsale -- and we know he could -- then he could have sailed into Queenstown based solely on visual observation. And, presumably, once docked, even he would have known his position.
The four point fix was surely the greatest gift Turner could possibly have given to an attacking vessel; what was he afraid of -- that Ireland had moved overnight? I have seen dozens of excuses for Turner, most of them valid -- but nothing can excuse the four point fix when the ship's position was adequately known.

Early in the afternoon of May 7, off the Kinsale coast not far from Queenstown, while taking the four point fix, Lusitania encountered the U-20 under KapitanLeutenant (Lt. Commander) Walter Schwieger. By this time, the weather was clear and bright (Ramsay, p. 223), so the German had no trouble tracking the liner. Even so, she would have been out of his reach -- except that Turner kindly turned the ship to do the Four Point Fix. Schweiger would later say, "She could not have steered a more perfect course if she had deliberately tried to give us a dead shot" (Larson, p. 232).
Schwieger was actually giving up on this cruise; he was low on fuel and had already had several run-ins with British merchant ships. That left him with just three torpedoes, and it was standard policy to save two for the voyage home (Larson, pp. 204-205). Rather than risk digging into his reserve stock, he fired only one torpedo.

In a major stroke of luck, Schwieger's one torpedo hit Lusitania squarely, and exploded properly (many German torpedoes at this time were duds -- Preston, p. 165, says that 60% misfired in one way or another), and caused a secondary explosion.

(Some sources, including Marshall, p. 166, says there were two torpedoes; it appears this was based on the first British investigation, for which see O'Sullivan, p. 122; this claimed two torpedo hits, one forward and one aft. This was presumably inspired by the fact witnesses agreed there were two explosions; cf. Ramsey, p. 269. The claim of two torpedoes was at various times affirmed and retracted by Captain Turner -- Ramsey, p. 274; Preston, pp. 325, 402. Preston seems to think this was because Cunard wanted there to have been two torpedoes, presumably so they wouldn't look so bad, and the Admiralty also wanted two, because it would spare them having to explain a secondary explosion. A few passengers went so far as to claim three torpedoes; Preston, pp. 368, 402. The British investigation, of course, had no access to the German records showing only one torpedo -- the intelligence service may have known, but it wasn't talking -- so it may have seemed logical to assume two explosions meant two hits. It was nonetheless wrong).

The ship instantly started listing, and sank within 20 minutes (Paine, p. 311), relieving Schwieger of the need to decide whether to fire another torpedo (Ballard, p. 90). Indeed, he found the sight "too horrible to watch" (Brinnin, p. 420).

Captain Turner was quickly on the bridge, but his actions were a bit questionable. According to Larson's reconstruction (pp. 252-253), he first ordered the engines full astern (there was no response, which is very strange). He then ordered the ship to turn toward land; for the moment, she answered the wheel. He then ordered another course change; this time, she did not answer.
Only then did he order the watertight doors closed! He then ordered the boats lowered to the rails so passengers could board (although it should be remembered that they could not be put in the water until the ship stopped moving).

At about 2:25, fifteen minutes after the torpedo hit, the ship's bow was down 25 degrees, and Turner told the helmsman to leave the bridge and save himself, but did not leave the bridge himself until he was swept away as the ship went down.

The speed with which the ship sank turned what could have been a relatively minor incident into a disaster. The crew began evacuating almost at once -- but it took time to round up the passengers and lower the boats. This was all the more problematic because the ship was listing so heavily; within minutes, it was difficult to walk or even stay balanced. It was also hard to lower the boats and keep passengers in them (Simpson, p. 22, claims that a list of five degrees -- which could be caused by only one compartment flooding -- would makes half her boats inoperable, and Preston, pp. 132-133, reports that Cunard had refused to install better davits when they upgraded her lifeboats after the Titanic sinking).

Plus Turner apparently wouldn't let the boats be lowered until several minutes after it was clear
Lusitania was sinking (Preston, p. 215). His argument was that the ship was moving too fast to allow the boats to enter the water safely. This was obviously true for a few minutes, though the ship surely slowed rapidly. (Larson, p. 272, claims it was still moving at four or five knots shortly before the ship sank. I frankly find this incredible.)

Many passengers never even made it to the deck; the ship's electrical system failed only minutes after the explosion, so many below decks would have had no lights to guide them upward (Ballard,
p. 99; Preston, p. 209, says it took only four minutes for the power to go out as the boilers lost steam. PeekeEtAl, p. 74, attributes the quick failure to a decision by Captain Turner to order "full astern" to stop the ship -- an order caused the piping to blow off an end cap, probably because it caused certain damaged-and-not-easily-repaired valves to fail).
By the time Turner allowed the boats to go, the list was so severe that the portside boats could not be lowered without hitting the hull, at minimum damaging them and dumping passengers; many could not be launched at all (Preston, pp. 218, 220). Those on the starboard side, by contrast, swung far away from the ship and were difficult to enter (Preston, p. 219; Larson, p. 259, says that people had to jump into them or build bridges of deck chairs. No one seems to have thought of counter-flooding -- which, in this case, might even have kept the boat afloat longer -- but it was probably impossible anyway, because all the power and control systems were out. Apparently the designers never considered how disastrous a power failure could be on a ship this size; the Titanic had had power to the end, so no one had reason to think about it). In the end, only six boats made it to the water intact (PeekeEtAl, p. 78).

Turner had stayed with the ship. His watch, which presumably stopped when he went into the water as the ship made its final plunge, read 2:36 (Larson, p. 278), or about 25 minutes after the torpedo hit.

It took time for rescue to come. Although the authorities responded quickly, the ships they sent out were slow and small -- fishing boats and trawlers and minor naval vessels -- and none had a wireless (Preston, p. 260; Larson, p. 289). The Juno, which despite its age was the largest and fastest ship available, was not allowed to engage in rescue operations as it would have made too vulnerable a U-boat target (PeekeEtAl, p. 79. There had earlier been talk of sending her out as an escort, but she was withdrawn for the same reason; PeekeEtAl, pp. 59-60). The decision not to send her probably added hundreds to the casualty list.

There were 764 survivors (Paine, p. 311; Ramsey, p. 94 says they consisted of 474 passengers and 290 crew). There were about 1200 casualties, though the number is slightly uncertain (Brinnin, p. 417, says it took months even to come up with a number). According to Keegan, p. 265; also Paine, p. 311, a total of 1201 lives were lost. On the other hand Marshall, p. 166, Barczewski, p. 289, Brinnin, p. 417, and O'Sullivan, p. 27 say that 1198 people were killed, which is also the figure we find if we subtract 764 from the 1962 people Ramsey claims were on board (p. 94). Simpson, p. 1, prefers the figure 1201, explaining on p. 9 that the figure of 1198 excludes three stowaways (!) not on the official passenger list; similarly Preston, p. 303, and PeekeEtAl, p. 80. (The stowaways were thought to be German spies; PeekeEtAl, p. 55, tells of the capture of their cameras and reports, which were probably preserved though no one seems aware of what they revealed). Ballard, p. 13, says that 1195 died.

Preston, p. 303, breaks this down: 785 of 1257 registered passengers were lost, and 413 out of 702 crew. She says 94 of 129 children were killed, including fully 35 of 39 infants (cf. PeekeEtAl, p. 80). Ramsey, p. 100, adds that Liverpool suffered particularly heavily, since Liverpool was Lusitania's home port. The losses might have been worse had the day not been calm and the waves slight (Larson, p. 328); anything else might have swamped some of the boats and the flotsam that people clung to.

Most sources seem to agree that 128 of the victims were Americans (Ballard, p. 13, says there were 123 Americans; O'Sullivan, p. 89 gives the number as 140 but on p. 107 says there were 127 Americans), producing a diplomatic crisis (Preston, p. 311, talks of how the description "Hun" for the Germans became common at this time).

President Woodrow Wilson took a while to respond (Larson, p. 329), but when he did, his words were forceful enough that his pacifist Secretary of State, William Jennings Bryan, resigned (Larson, p. 332) -- a move which, ironically, probably brought war closer, because Wilson's cabinet became more hawkish. But Bryan never did have good timing. Although the uproar did not at the time lead to war, Germany was forced for a time to back off from unrestricted submarine warfare.

The search for bodies was officially ended on June 4, but at least one corpse washed ashore as late as July 15 (Larson, p. 304). The bodies were so many that most of them ended up in a mass grave. (The mass burial eventually became an issue, since families wanted to bury their relatives individually, but the bodies stayed where they were; Larson, p. 310.)

Among the songs played at the group memorial service were "Abide with Me" and "The Last Post" (Larson, p. 309) -- an interesting choice, given that the British were denying that the ship was involved in military activities!

There has been much argument over whether the sinking was justified. Some, like Simpson, seem to think it entirely justified. Others think it a pure atrocity. The truth is surely somewhere in between: The ship was carrying military materials, and the Germans probably knew that -- though the submarine commander didn't; he supposedly didn't even know it was the Lusitania at the time he fired -- but the ship was neither armed nor armored, and it could have been given proper notice and sunk after the boats were off -- which was the essence of the American position (Massie, p. 534).
Indeed, it would have been more reasonable to stop her: She was clearly a target worth sinking, just based on her size, but the chances of one torpedo sinking such a big ship would ordinarily be small even if the torpedo hit -- and it would have been easier to hit her were she standing still. By stopping her, the crew of U-20 would have been much more certain to put her under, plus there would have been no risk to innocent lives. (Sez I. But back to our story....)

The Vanderbilt of the song is Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, who died on the Lusitania (though he wasn't one of the more famous Vanderbilts; his wealth was primarily inherited; Ballard, p. 32). According to Ramsey, p. 85, he did indeed give his lifebelt to a female passenger, Alice Middleton. (Though, in the salt water off Ireland, the real threat was not drowning but being washed away from land, plus hypothermia -- the water temperature was about 53F/11C; Preston, p. 249, which since water has a higher heat capacity than air, means that the cold could cause unconsciousness and death in as little as an hour or two; Larson, p. 285. And a person with no training in water might drown despite the fact that his body would float, because water might get into his lungs.) Ballard, p. 116, reports that Vanderbilt made no effort to save himself (he could not swim); his body was never found.

Indeed, Brinnin, p. 425, says some 900 bodies were not recovered; either they were swept out to sea or they went down with the ship. The disaster produced an amazing flurry of messages as Cunard tried to figure out who had actually been aboard, so they could figure out who was lost (Larson, pp. 300-301); since they had never lost a passenger before, their system for tracking who was aboard ship had never been tested. Sadly, as with the Titanic disaster, there are reports of passengers already in boats refusing to help those who were not (Preston, p. 250). Brinnin's comment (p. 421) may help explain the notoriety of what happened: "Dresden, Hiroshima, Biafra, My Lai [to which we might now add Armenia, Bosnia, 9/11, Iraq, Darfur....] -- after [these and] all the other names and instances of the murderous course of the middle years of the twentieth century, it is all but impossible to recapture, even to understand, the sense of outrage, 'the universal shout of execration,' generated by the sinking of the Lusitania.

There was of course an inquiry held after the sinking, but it being wartime, very little was done to punish Cunard or the captain and crew for sloppiness; instead, the blame was placed squarely on the Germans. Lusitania became just another atrocity story, used to inflame American opinion against Germany, causing the Germans to temporarily abandon unrestricted submarine warfare.

It is interesting to observe that, although the Germans briefly celebrated the sinking of the Lusitania, they later quieted down. And, when it came time to publish the U-20's war log, skipper Schwieger signed off on every page except that for May 7 (Preston, p. 314). There is also evidence that the record was fiddled with and even "humanized" (Preston, pp. 416-418; she calls the record "institutional afterthoughts"). Sadly, we do not know what Schwieger originally wrote; the original log has perished, and we have only the official transcription. Plus he died in the course of the war; the U-20 was later sunk (with the wreck being discovered in 1984; Hoehling, p. 119), and Schwieger died in the U-88 in 1917.

An anonymous woman who said she was Schweiger's fiancee (apparently in 1919) claimed he felt immense regret about the loss of life (Larson, p. 292), but there is no other sign of it; soon after sinking the Lusitania, Schweiger was going after other targets, and obviously he stayed in the submarine service.

O'Sullivan's chapter on the aftermath of the sinking is entitled "The Sham Tribunals." A sham they obviously were in that it was certain the Germans would be blamed for sinking the ship (though it can hardly be denied that they did so!). But the inquiries could at least have sought to find out what else went wrong -- and they didn't. O'Sullivan accuses the Admiralty of suppressing evidence (pp. 118-121), offering several particulars but not documenting any of them -- and it must be confessed that the tribunal, at least in its open sessions, skipped over a lot of important material. And the Admiralty made sure that certain information was not revealed in open court (Preston, p. 320) -- though this is hardly surprising in a period of wartime secrecy.

They were a sham in another sense, too, in that one of the parties tried to fix the outcome. It seems certain that the Admiralty was out to "get" Captain Turner. O'Sullivan accuses the Admiralty of making Turner the scapegoat; p. 115. Preston, pp. 316-319, 325-327, 403, documents the case the Admiralty built against Turner, sometimes on flimsy evidence; she notes on p. 405 that he probably did not receive some of the orders allegedly sent to him. Larson, pp. 317-318, also says the government was out to get Turner. Even the pro-British Ramsey says that the Admiralty, not Cunard, was getting most of the blame in the press (Ramsey, p. 113), so the officers were determined to find someone else to suffer the odium.

PeekeEtAl, p. 82, say explicitly, "Reading the collective correspondence in its original, unedited state would have made it abundantly clear to anyone that Captain Turner... had followed his Admiralty instructions to the letter. This is why Oliver and Webb were now busily 'tailoring' the Admiralty signals register...."

In fact, PeekeEtAl, p. 84, says that Turner was shown the evidence against him, which made it clear that it was being faked -- and yet Turner somehow didn't do anything to protest or correct the record. According to PeekeEtAl, p. 88-89, Turner was saved only because there were two different editions of the evidence against him (Ramsey, p. 148), and when Lord Mersey discovered this, he realized what was going on and effectively halted the hearings. And since there was a government change at this time, the Admiralty was shaken up and no longer needed a scapegoat as much, so they let things drop.

Mersey's conclusion was that Turner may have ignored Admiralty advice, but he consistently obeyed his actual orders (PeekeEtAl, p. 90). Mersey retired as Receiver of Wrecks shortly thereafter, and preserved the documents needed to show what happened.

The tribunal's final conclusion was all of two paragraphs long, "placing the entire blame for the disaster on Germany" (Ramsey, p. 154), with a ten-page addendum exonerating everybody in sight (Preston, p. 330). ***

In defence of Captain Turner, we should probably note that, although very experienced overall, and a former captain of the Lusitania, he had little wartime experience on the refitted Lusitania; her previous captain, David Dow, had had something of a breakdown shortly before the final voyage (Preston, p. 110; PeekeEtAl, p. 48; Larson, pp. 20-21, says that he refused to accept responsibility for the safety of passengers in enemy-patrolled waters). Turner in fact sent a number of letters complaining of the Lusitania's state, and saying he would not sail her again unless the problems were repaired.

On the other hand, these problems do not appear to have contributed to her demise (except perhaps for a minor problem with her ballasting). And Turner had told a reporter before the sailing, "It's the best joke I've heard in many days, this talk of torpedoing the Lusitania" (Preston, p. 108). He may have simply been trying to calm nervous potential passengers -- but it sounds like complacency. Especially since he generally disliked having anything to do with the passengers, whom he once called "bloody monkeys" (Preston, p. 108). In fact, Turner requested the services of an assistant in this regard; he was assigned Staff Captain John Anderson to deal with the passengers (PeekeEtAl, pp. 50-51).

Even if we accept that Turner followed his orders exactly, there is still the idiocy of the four point fix. And it also came out during the investigations that Turner had not ordered the passengers to learn how to put on their life belts. And the belts had to be fitted properly to work -- and, with many of the passengers being non-English speakers, it proved impossible to instruct them at the last moment (Preston, pp. 206-207, describes some of the problems it caused. Several passengers would die from wearing the belts wrong). Nor had Turner ordered them to wear them, or even keep them close at hand, in the danger zone (Ballard, p. 132). Many would die because they could not find their belts.

And, of course, Turner had not ordered adequate boat drills (Ballard, p. 135; Preston, p. 325, in fact reports that Turner said in open court that his crew was not proficient in handling boats, to which he added a grumble about the crews available in 1915 compared to those in his youth. PeekeEtAl, p. 57, tells of him challenging his officers to tie a knot he had learned to tie aboard a sailing vessel in his youth. All of them being trained for steam, only one knew how. Turner really does sound like he was still living in the nineteenth century). Nor had the ship's daily newsletter told the passengers anything useful (Preston, p. 183).

Preston, p. 406, notes that the passengers would have taken ill to boat drills and lifebelt practice -- even though the lifebelts were a new, tricky model that even many experienced travelers would not have known how to use. That the passengers would have resented the drills is likely enough. I can't see how this justifies not having them, though.

I can't help but think, reading Captain Turner's responses at the inquiries, that he sounds like a senile old man. Preston declares that his answers were monosyllables, and that "He seemed anxious and, on occasion, confused" (Preston, p. 326). Admittedly he had just lost his ship, which might account for his befuddled state (Preston suggests post-traumatic stress, and the description in PeekeEtAl, p. 79, certainly sounds like it) -- but his behavior before the sinking, if not befuddled, is certainly inexplicable.

Presumably Turner could no more believed that the Germans would attack without warning than could the passengers. He was, more or less, exonerated (Preston, p. 404).

To put this in perspective: A similar tribunal, under the same man (Lord Mersey) had earlier investigated the Titanic sinking, and had exonerated Captain Smith of sailing too fast in an ice zone.

My personal verdict on Turner would have to be, Not guilty of malice or criminal intent, but much, much too casual. In light of that, the failure of Lord Mersey's tribunal to blame anyone but the Germans may have been unfortunate, since Captain Turner was given another ship -- which also ended up being torpedoed and sunk (Ballard, p. 137; Larson, pp. 346-247, describes how he was first given a horse carrier, then a more important vessel). Turner again survived, but apparently that finally caused authorities to put him on the beach.

It is peculiar and sad to note that, although Turner survived two ships being sunk under him, during World War II, his son Percy Wilfred Turner -- a mere Able Seaman, not a merchant officer -- was killed when a U-boat sunk his ship in 1941 (Larson, p. 348).

Captain Turner retired from the sea in 1919 and died in 1933 at the age of 76. His marriage had ended decades earlier, and he became a near-recluse (Preston, p. 431). Reportedly he claimed that he had not been given a "fair deal" (Preston, p. 432), claiming e.g. that he had never been instructed to zigzag.

Few of my sources really talk about the effects of zigzagging (probably because the authors are not mathematicians) -- e.g. Ramsey, in discussing it on pp. 224-225, merely says that it was costly, since it used more fuel, and would be uncomfortable for the passengers.

This is certainly true if the ship had gone through the sorts of sudden turns, of up to ninety degrees, recommended by the Admiralty for navy ships. But smaller turns would not be so bad. And they might well have saved the ship.

There is much we don't know about the geometry of the Lusitania and the U-20. Schweiger (quoted by Ramsey, p. 81, and implicitly by Preston, p. 191) estimated the distance at 700 meters. If anything, he probably estimated low, since the Lusitania was surely bigger than he expected. Nonetheless, PeekEtaI, p. 72, give the distance as 550 meters. The Lusitania was moving at 18 knots, or about 9 meters per second. I've seen estimates that place the torpedo's speed as high as 38 knots, or 20 m/sec, but from everything else I've read, a speed more on the order of 18 m/sec is more likely. That means the approximate time from firing to impact was about 40 seconds.

The best guess is that Schweiger's torpedo hit somewhere around the boundary between #1 and #2 boiler rooms. Both flooded, which was enough to sink the ship.

If the Lusitania had changed course by 15 degrees at the moment the torpedo was fired -- a course that surely would not have caused the passengers too much discomfort -- the hit would have been about 15 meters further forward, taking out #1 boiler room but possibly reducing the damage to #2 enough that the ship, even if she sank, would at least have gone down more slowly, allowing better evacuation. Had Lusitania turned 30 degrees at the time the torpedo was fired, the hit would have been 50 meters forward, and she might have been saved, since only boiler room #1 would have been threatened. Had Lusitania turned 45 degrees, the strike would have been 110 meters forward, and she certainly would have lived; she might not even have been hit. Even if she had started a hard turn just 15 seconds before impact, she probably would have taken the impact only to boiler room #1, and she would have slowed down more rapidly, reducing the water inflow slightly and also making evacuation safer. Thus the straight course of the four point fix was a major cause of the disaster.

I would add that, though Turner was certainly guilty of taking the four point fix, which was the final cause of the disaster, he was not the first cause. The Admiralty certainly bears blame on several grounds. (Hardly a surprise, given its disastrous disorganization; there really was no central coordinating authority short of the First Sea Lord, who simply could not do everything; Ramsey, pp. 233, 250-251, etc.) The information sent to the Lusitania and to Turner was probably inadequate. But the real problem was their penny-pinching and limitations of the Lusitania's schedule. The crew's desperate lack of experience was largely due to this niggling. Had the navy paid enough, they could either have sailed the ship more regularly, allowing the crew to gain experience -- or they could have kept the crew on duty while the Lusitania sat in port, allowing them to practice with the boats. This was something Cunard could not afford to do on its own.

The bad crew also may have contributed to actual torpedo hit. We know that a watchman, Leslie Morton, saw the torpedo long before it hit (Ramsey, p. 82, etc.). Had he not been an untrained nitwit who failed to pass the message to the bridge, the ship would have had a few more seconds to avoid the torpedo -- which, as the geometry shows, might have saved boiler room #2 and the ship. But Morton was an untrained 18-year-old who hesitated, shouted a message into the communicator, and ran off to find his brother without even making sure his message was heard.

Best guess is that it wasn't heard.

On the other hand, the Admiralty can hardly be faulted for failing to provide a destroyer to escort her. Destroyers were in short supply, and at this time, destroyers did not have sonar or radar or any other means of detecting submarines except to see them or their torpedoes. Even in World War II, when sonar was universal and radar coming into use, destroyers didn't keep U-boats from sinking the vessels they escorted; they just made them more miserable afterward. There is little reason to think an escort would have saved Lusitania.
There would later be an American court case (Preston, pp. 366-370); this didn't really bring out much in the way of new facts, but it supported the claim that the Lusitania was not an actual warship: the plaintiffs admitted that the ship was not armed, that she was not carrying Canadian troops (something alleged because of the curious coincidence that a lot of the passengers listed Canadian addresses; Ramsey, p. 195), and some lesser points supporting the contention that she was not a legitimate target.

Unlike the other great disaster of the period, Lusitania's transatlantic rival the Titanic, the Lusitania went down in relatively shallow waters, and the wreck was visited as early as the 1930s. But it wasn't until the late twentieth century that Ballard really investigated the wreck with adequate equipment.

The question of why she sank has long been a topic of controversy: What caused the second explosion, which most passengers thought the larger of the two? Many have speculated that it was in fact an explosion of war materials she had secretly taken aboard (Ballard, p. 14; Preston, p. 448). Against this is Captain Turner's testimony; he said that there was no cargo near the area where (he thought) the torpedo hit. Ballard's exploration also argues against this; he notes on p. 151 that there was only one hole in her hull. The second explosion, then, did not do further damage to the exterior, but damaged the interior and destroyed her watertight integrity.

It is Ballard's belief, based on the opening in the hull and the distribution of coal around her grave, that the second explosion was caused by coal dust: Since the ship was nearing her destination, her bunkers were relatively empty, except for dust. The torpedo sent the dust up into the air, and then sparked it, and the explosion of all the coal was what brought the ship down (Ballard, p. 195). Larson, p. 326, argues however that the coal was too damp for the dust to be very flammable. PeakeEtAl, p. 93, argue that Ballard's exploration did not turn up facts sufficient to justify his conclusions, and Ramsey, pp. 209-210, also doubts this, on the grounds that no similar instances of coal dust explosions are recorded. The latter strikes me as weak -- it is true that there are no verified instances of coal dust explosions on shipboard, but coal dust most definitely explodes (ask any coal miner!) Until World War I, there were no coal-carrying ships torpedoed, and few of the ships torpedoed in that war were examined as closely as the Lusitania, and by World War II, most ships were fueled by oil, not coal. So the lack of verified coal dust explosions proves very little.

O'Sullivan, pp. 134-136, holds out for an explosion caused by powdered aluminum (which can attract oxygen from water, causing the leftover hydrogen to burn. Powdered aluminum in fact is used in fireworks, with an oxidizer, to produce the very fast-burning "salutes," which are responsible for the loudest banging noises). There was aluminum in the cargo -- a lot of it (50 barrels and 94 cases, according to Larson, p. 182, who also lists 50 cases of bronze powder although no one else seems to consider that a fire hazard) -- though the aluminum, unlike the coal, was carefully packaged. And aluminum, even if powdered (as O'Sullivan says it was, though he as usual does not cite a source) is certainly a legitimate cargo. Ramsey, p. 209, offers strong evidence that aluminum was not the cause -- while fine-ground aluminum can produce an explosive flash, coarser particles are more likely to simply burn, and 1915 aluminum powder was not very finely ground.

Another possibility is that her boilers blew up (Preston, pp. 451-452; Larson, p. 326) -- not an unusual occurrence in ships of this period; it was part of what had caused the Atlantic tragedy forty-odd years earlier. But there wasn't much time for that to happen.

After examining all of these theories, and noting their weaknesses, Preston, pp. 452-454, argues for a failure of her steam lines -- or even a series of failures, perhaps accounting for the quick failure of the electrical system and the fact that the second explosion seemed to be heard everywhere; it may have been several explosions.

Under any of these theories, it is an "industrial accident" (O'Sullivan, p. 137). Arguing against this are PeakeEtAl, p. 103, who suggest that the torpedo hit in the vicinity of the ammunition the ship carried, and that the ammo caused the second explosion, blowing out many bulkheads. Sadly, because the ship settled on its starboard side, we cannot entirely disprove this (if we could see the hole of the explosion, we could observe whether the metal is twisted inward or outward), but unless there were hidden munitions, I frankly don't see how enough explosive could go up at any given moment to cause damage exceeding that of the torpedo hit.

Preston, p. 443, notes that the corridors in passenger liners were often smaller than in other ships, meaning that the pressure wave from the explosion(s) could not dissipate as easily as in a cargo ship. This would have increased the damage in the area of the torpedo hit. Her ultimate conclusion is that the torpedo hit in just about the worst possible spot, and the Lusitania simply wasn't designed to take that sort of damage.

Ramsey says explicitly (p. 206), "Although earlier authors have generally ascribed Lusitania's loss to the second explosion, current opinion suggests convincingly that the effect on the liner's stability resulting from the impact of Schweiger's torpedo was by itself sufficiently lethal to secure her destruction." (This because so much water would enter the starboard side that she could not stay on an even keel; Ramsey, p. 208.) He also suggest that there was a leak in a steam pipe somewhere, leading to rapid loss of boiler pressure (pp. 209-211), aggravated by mishandling of the situation (pp. 212-213). This would not have sunk the ship (the torpedo leak did that), but it was responsible for the rapid loss of power and propulsion.

Reading all the arguments, I am inclined to think we will never know with certainty what happened, or what caused the second explosion, though I too incline toward the "industrial accident" belief; contrary to the claims by Simpson and his followers, the evidence for a large ammunition explosion seems weak.

Apart from causing a diplomatic incident, there was one other effect of the sinking: The Admiralty gave in to the economics of the situation. For the remainder of the war, there was no British passenger service on the Atlantic (Brinnin, p. 426).

An interesting side note is that the Titanic, three years before, inspired almost too many songs to count. The Lusitania seems to have inspired just this one, and it not particularly well-known. Why? It can't be just the war, since the Lusitania got plenty of coverage. Maybe it's that the disaster couldn't so easily be blamed on "the hand of God." Though, in fact, the fault in both cases was largely "the hand of complacency."

The last survivor of the Lusitania is believed to have been Audrey Lawson-Johnston -- a member of a very fortunate family; although several children were lost, her parents, her brother, and the three-month-old Audrey herself were saved. According to a BBC story, she died at age 95 on January 11, 2011. She of course did not remember the disaster, although she did hear stories of it from relatives.

As mentioned, Lusitania is in shallow water (a depth of only 312 feet, according to Preston, p. 372, with parts of the hull 82 feet higher). The wreck has been visited many times as a result. The first was in 1935, but the equipment of the time was so bad that the diver actually thought the ship was resting on its port side; explorations since have shown that it lies on its starboard side (Preston, p. 373).

In the 1960s, the aforementioned John Light and colleagues tried to explore using newer technologies; this is the group that thought they saw guns (but Preston, p. 373, notes that this was still the era of nitrogen/oxygen breathing mixes; the divers suffered from cold and nitrogen narcosis). They did not produce usable film of the weapons. (We might add that the problems Light experienced pretty well demolish the theory that the British could have disarmed the wreck, and the hull was intact enough that the Admiralty could hardly have depth-charged it, as is claimed, e.g., by PeekeEtAl, p. 91.) Light hopes to eventually publish, but all that came of his work was Simpson's volume, which Light himself disputed.

A few artifacts were brought up by a 1982 television expedition (Preston, pp. 374-375); interestingly, these did not sell well at auction. Ballard took his turn in 1993, and produced the first good documentation of the wreck. A team of free divers working in 1994 largely reaffirmed his conclusions (Preston, pp. 376-377), and also discovered the annunciator which relayed speed and drive instructions to the engine room. This showed the ship still in forward drive -- contrary to what Turner said he ordered. Of course, since the engines failed within minutes, it hardly matters. But it makes you wonder what else Turner got wrong.

A curiosity about the whole story is the way the Lusitania legend still grips people. The Titanic fascinates people, but there is little real controversy about the history (yes, Hollywood distorted the story, but that's Hollywood). But the Lusitania continues to inspire polemics and conspiracy theories -- a common one is that the Churchill and/or Fisher (the men most responsible for naval policy) sent out the Lusitania as live bait in an attempt to get the Americans involved in the war. This is patently absurd -- not because Churchill or Fisher were above such things (in fact, Churchill hinted at the idea of live bait in a letter -- PeekeEtAl, p. 47), but because it just wasn't likely to work. The Lusitania was faster than any ship sunk by submarines to date; she also had good underwater protection that would make her hard to sink. And, if the Admiralty wanted her sunk, would they have put aboard such war materials as they did put aboard?

Preston, pp. 395-396, also makes the argument that the British in 1915 did not want the Americans in the war; they would be too likely to meddle with the peace. Such logic does not stop the polemists. Larson, p. 324, quotes a British intelligence officer, Patrick Beesly, was "reluctantly compelled" to think there was a British plot to have the Germans sink the ship. Both Simpson's and O'Sullivan's books both strike me as screeds intended to place as much blame as is possible on the British authorities. (O'Sullivan's in fact seems almost to be the work of two authors -- half the time he's going straight after the Admiralty; the other half, he calms down and tries to be objective. Was there a hidden ghost writer who only did half the book?) The reason defeats me -- whatever their faults, the men they would blame are long dead, and their policies dead with them.

And the need for polemic produced books that are clearly bad. Simpson's book is littered with small errors of fact -- e.g. he can't even spell "blue riband," consistently calling it "blue ribbon" (O'Sullivan, p. 17), and Preston, p. 374, observe that Simpson was criticized even by John Light, whose research originally inspired what was to have been a collaboration. O'Sullivan may be even worse; his unfootnoted work has its own set of substantial errors, some of which distort the whole history of World War I.

The question of "a legitimate target" is still argued today; Preston, e.g. has a chapter with that title, noting that, within days of the tragedy, a coroner in Ireland offered the verdict "wilful murder." We must remember, as the American judge later wrote, that the incident must be viewed in light of the knowledge of the time (Preston, p. 383). (Which is surprisingly easy to do, given that the British Admiralty is still concealing records, either by refusing to release them or by blanking out pages, and some of the papers Simpson claims to have seen have now vanished; Preston, p. 384).

Preston, p. 393, probably has the best last word: "The truth was that no government, British, German, or American, was entirely free of blame for the situation leading up to the attack. Nor, in its wake, was any government hesitant to twist the facts, or use the disaster, to its own political ends."

On pp. 424-426, Preston makes another point: Two weeks before the Lusitania was sunk, the Germans had launched the first gas attack. A few weeks afterward saw the first bombing of civilians from the air. Germany, for a short time, backed away from unrestricted submarine warfare (a mistake, in Preston's view, and I think she's right: Once Germany started, they would have been better off to keep it up). But Germany did not back away from gas, or bombings, and it built the "Big Berthas" to shell Paris. The age of limited, civilized warfare was over.

I would add only one more thing: whoever was "to blame" for the Lusitania tragedy, many hundreds of complete innocents perished needlessly. In this regard, the song knows what the true issue was, and the polemicists do not. - RBW

Bibliography

- Ballard: Dr. Robert D. Ballard with Spencer Dunmore, Exploring the Lusitania (Warner, 1995)
- Barczewski: Stephanie Barczewski, Titanic: A Night Remembered (Hambledon Continuum, 2004)
- Harding: Stephen Harding, Great Liners at War, Motorbooks, 1997
- Keegan: John Keegan, The First World War (Knopf, 1999)
- PeekeEtAl: Mitch Peeke, Kevin Walsh-Johnson, Steven Jones, The Lusitania Story, Naval Institute Press, 2002
- Preston: Diana Preston, Lusitania: An Epic Tragedy (Walker, 2002; I use the 2003 Berkley edition)
- Simpson: Colin Simpson, The Lusitania (Little Brown, 1972)
"north." The ship is well furnished. The mariners fear no enemies. The master "excelleth in skill."
Their cans will be filled with wine, ale, beer

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1576 (Common Conditions, according to Palmer)
KEYWORDS: nonballad ship drink
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs 2, "Lustily, Lustily" (1 text)
NOTES [47 words]: Palmer suggests that this "has a good whiff of salt, and may have been heard by the playwright [who is unknown] on a sea journey." I suggest Palmer look at some other folk songs to realize what they're like -- or else stay away from those "cans... filled with wine, ale and beer." - RBW

Lyda May
DESCRIPTION: A memorial to a dead little girl: her "cradle standing empty and her clothes are laid away... In the corner lies her play things... We must prepare to meet her... On the streets thats pure and holy We will join our Lyda May"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1878 (Musick-JAF-TheOldAlbumOf-William-A-Larkin)
KEYWORDS: grief death memorial nonballad religious baby
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Musick-JAF-TheOldAlbumOf-William-A-Larkin 44, "Lyda May" (1 text)
Roud #4272

Lydford Law
DESCRIPTION: A sarcastic piece about the arbitrary rule of law in Lydford, the terrible jail conditions -- dogs are fed better than prisoners -- and open town knavery. "By God's grace I'll come there no more"

AUTHOR: William Browne (1590-1645) (source: Dixon-AncientPoemsBalladsSongsOfThePeasantryOfEngland) EARLIEST DATE: 1701 (Prince's _Worthies of Devon_ according to Dixon-AncientPoemsBalladsSongsOfThePeasantryOfEngland)
KEYWORDS: abuse crime law prison punishment trial humorous nonballad recitation FOUND IN: Britain(England(South)) [see note]
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Law" (1 text)
Roud #V40188
NOTES [112 words]: Dixon-AncientPoemsBalladsSongsOfThePeasantryOfEngland: "In Anglo-Saxon times, the town of Lidford on Dartmoor, had the privilege of coining, and long after such privilege was abolished, courts were held there for the purposes of trying all offences connected with coining, as well as for the settling of mining disputes."
The first three lines -- "I oft have heard of Lydford law, How in the morn they hand and draw, And sit in judgement after" -- have become a Devonshire street rhyme -- "First hang and draw, Then hear the cause by Lydford law" -- which preserves the meaning [see G.F. Northall, English Folk-Rhymes (London, 1892 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 19]. - BS

Lydia Pinkham
DESCRIPTION: A bawdy and scatological testimonial in multiple stanzas for the restorative powers of Mrs. Pinkham's patent medicine for women.
Lydia Sherman

DESCRIPTION: "Lydia Sherman is plagued with rats, Lydia has no faith in cats, So Lydia buys some arsenic, And then her husband he gets sick, And then her husband, he does die...." Her children follow, and eventually Lydia ends up in prison.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Burt-AmericanMurderBallads)
KEYWORDS: homicide poison humorous children mother father husband wife
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
May 1864 - Death of Edward Struck, first husband of Lydia Sherman (she eventually had three)
August 1864 - Deaths of George and Ann Eliza, Lydia’s children
May 16, 1878 - Lydia Sherman dies in prison in Wethersfield, Connecticut
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, p. 5, "Lydia Sherman" (1 text)
NOTES [552 words]: I would love to see a contemporary newspaper account of this trial.
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads doesn’t claim this as a traditional song; it was in a notebook of her mother’s, probably from a contemporary publication.
It should perhaps be noted that fatal overdoses of arsenic are not always the result of deliberate poisoning. Emsley-Blocks: pp. 40-46, notes various common uses of arsenic, including pigments and even a commercial remedy, "Dr. Fowler’s Solution."
Crosland, p. 58, reports, "A Byzantine Greek called Nicolaus Myrepsus compiled a compendium of remedies in which he drew on Arabic sources, although his knowledge of Arabic was poor. He made the mistake of including arsenic as a remedy in certain cases." And, once it entered the literature, it stayed there.
According to Henderson, p. 284, "arsenic] was a commonly administered medicine in the nineteenth century in the form of arsenious acid, which was prescribed for a great variety of diseases, such as headaches, ulcers, gout, chorea, syphilis, even cancer. Used in a popular patent medicine called "Fowler's Solution," it was a well-known remedy for fever and various skin diseases. It would have been a standard part of any sizeable medical kit."
Emsley-Blocks, p. 105, describes Fowler’s Solution as being an arsenic compound in lavender water (the latter included to prevent accidental ingestion) and that Fowler had the idea for using an arsenic compound based on another medicine called "Thomas Wilson's Tasteless Ague and Fever Drops."
MacInnis, p. 99, reports that Fowler's Solution contained 1% potassium arsenite (K AsO ), and that it was used to deal with fevers as a substitute for quinine, which was difficult to consume because it is so bitter. MacInnis, p. 100, says that women drank it for their complexions -- while also rubbing it into their hair to kill pests. (You’d think that would be a hint.) Timbrell, p. 224, reports that it gave the skin a "milk rose" hue.
Ironically, Fowler's Solution continued to be sold and used after it was established that it was poisonous; there were instances where the Solution was suspected of being used in murder cases (Blum, pp. 85, 95-97).
Also, it is possible to build up arsenic tolerance (Timbrell, p. 225; Emsley-Elements, pp. 102-103, notes that Styrian mountaineers regularly consumed arsenic to deal with altitude conditions), so if Lydia were tolerant (as she might have been, had she been using arsenic-based cosmetics), she might have accidentally poisoned her family while surviving herself.
As another defense, arsenic trioxide (the most common form of arsenic poison) is only mildly water-soluble, according to Emsley-Elements, p. 140, with the solubility increasing as the temperature increases. If the compound is mixed with cold water, the amount that dissolves will generally be too small to be fatal, but more will go into solution as the water warms. In the unlikely event that someone mixed arsenic trioxide with a cold pitcher of water, the first person to drink from it might survive while those who drank from it later would be killed; alternately, if someone mixed it into warm water (or tea, or coffee) which then cooled, the first people to drink might be poisoned but anyone who drank it when cooler might survive because the arsenic precipitated out. - RBW
Bibliography

- Blum: Deborah Blum,The Poisoner's Handbook: Murder and the Birth of Forensic Medicine in Jazz Age New York, Penguin, 2010
  the 2004 Dover reprint)
  University Press, 2005
- MacInnis: Peter MacInnis,Poisons (originally published asThe Killer Bean of Calabar and Other Stories), 2004 (I use the 2005 Arcade paperback)
Lyke-Wake Dirge, The

DESCRIPTION: A warning to those not yet dead. Those who gave to the poor shall receive as they have given; those who have not will pay the penalty. "This ae nicht, this ae nicht, ilka nicht and alle -- Fire and sleet and candlelicht, and Christ receive thy soule"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE:

KEYWORDS: death funeral lament religious Hell

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (4 citations):
- Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 33, "A Lyke-Wake Dirge" (1 text)
- Smith-SouthCarolinaBallads, p. 5, "A Lyke-Wake Dirge" (1 text)
- DT, LYKEDIRG
- Walter de la Mare, _Come Hither_, revised edition, 1928; #278, "A Lyke-Wake Dirge" (1 text)

Roud #8194

NOTES [528 words]: De la Mare quotes Sidgwick to the effect that sleet means not falling water but salt (the token of eternal life) -- or perhaps is an error for "fleet." The editors of the Oxford English Dictionary prefer the latter reading (remember that a "long s" looked very like an f, so it's an easy error). "Fleet" in this context would be a flat surface or floor -- it's the same word as J. R. R. Tolkien's "flet" for a platform in a tree. But it's not obvious what this would mean.

Bengt R. Jonsson suggests ("Oral Literature, Written Literature: The Ballad and Old Norse Genres," in Joseph Harris, editor, _The Ballad and Oral Literature_, Harvard University Press, 1991, p. 170), "As for the 'Lyke-Wake Dirge' we cannot entirely dismiss the possibility that we have to do with one out of many examples of Norwegian influence on Scottish tradition." The Norwegian influence is genuine, but Jonsson offers no real evidence for this particular contention.

Malcolm Douglas gave the following information about the tune to the Ballad-L list in 2008 (slightly edited, mostly for formatting reasons):

"The tune Hans Fried got from Peggy Richards [which was recorded by the Young Tradition] was written by Sir Harold Boulton, and first appeared in his _Songs of the North (Vol I, c.1885)_ set to the text (slightly edited) from Scott. It had changed a bit in detail by the time it got to The Young Tradition, but not fundamentally. _Songs of the North_ was immensely popular (at least 23 editions) and there would seem to be a decent chance that Peggy Richards (described as 'old') had learned it at school, or directly from print.

"It is just possible that a tune that may perhaps have been traditionally associated with the text survives. A song ('The Silkstone Disaster', written by Rowland Kellett) appeared in 'English Dance and Song' (XXXIII No 2 Summer 1971), set to a tune described as 'The Yorkshire Lyke-Wake'. Kellett noted that it was played as a funeral march in the Yorkshire Dales, but didn't say where, when or from whom he had got it. It bears no resemblance to Boulton's melody, but the words would fit.

"Some years later, the same tune (though slightly variant and in a different key) turned up in Blowzabella's tunebook 'Encyclopedia Blowzabellica.' There, it was titled 'Lyke Wake Dirge' and described as 'traditional' (but with a query if I remember correctly). No source was identified, and it's unclear whether the change of name is significant or not."

The connection with Yorkshire adds to the interest. According to Arnold Kellett, _The Yorkshire Dictionary of Dialect, Tradition, and Folklore_, revised edition, Smith Settle, 2002, p. 107, the Lyke Wake Dirge is a "funeral lament of great antiquity, the earliest example of Yorkshire dialect, not printed until 1686. The theme is the progress of the soul towards Purgatory and Hell, where good works done by the deceased in life help to minimise suffering. Though a Christian song, it has its roots in the pagan dread of death." The first verse quoted by Kellett opens, 'This yah neet, this yah neet, lvvery neet an' all, Fire an' fleet an' cann'l leet,' so it favors the reading "fleet" over "sleet." - RBW

File: OBB033
Lynchburg Town

DESCRIPTION: Usually a comic song about a farmer's troubles with wife, horse, merchants, prices, machinery, and anything else that comes along. Chorus: "I'm going down to town, I'm going down to town, I'm going down to Lynchburg town, toting my tobaccer down."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: farming humorous wife

FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE)

REFERENCES (13 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 415, "Lynchburg Town" (3 texts plus 2 fragments, 2 excerpts, and mention of 2 more, all with the "Lynchburg Town" chorus, but "A" and "B" have verses from "Raccoon" and "Possum Up a Gum Stump and "D" and "E" are partly "If I Had a Scolding Wife" ("Lucy Long (II)"); only "C" seems to be truly "Lynchburg Town"); also 480, "Hard Times" (1 text, massively composite: Chorus from "Lynchburg Town" and verses from "Old Bee Makes the Honey Comb" and the "White Folks Go to College" version of "Hard to Be a Nigger")
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 415, "Lynchburg Town" (4 tunes plus text excerpts, corresponding to "A," "B," "E," and a "J" version that apparently is not cited in Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3)
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 181, "Lynchburg Town" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 145, "Goin' Down to Town" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 192, "Hawkie Is a Schemin' Bird" (1 text, with the "Hawkie" first stanza, a chorus from "Lynchburg Town," and verses such as "Went up on a mountain To give my horn a blow" and "Climbed up on a mountain... To sweeten Liza Jane")
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #196, "'Little More Cider" (1 text, with the chorus of "A Little More Cider Too" although the lyrics are often found in "Lynchburg Town")
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 60-62, "Lynchburg Town" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 260, "Lynchburg Town" (1 text, 1 tune)
Coleman/Bregman-SongsOfAmericanFolks, pp. 54-55, "Goin' Down to Town" (1 text, 1 tune)
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 167, "When I Was a Little Boy" (1 text, 1 tune, which appears to open with part of "I Wish They'd Do It Now," includes floating verses which sometimes are found in "Lynchburg Town," and end with the "Saturday Night My Wife Died" of "The Old Gray Goose (I) (Lookit Yonder)" or similar)
NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal, Frank L. Warner [nephew of Frank M. Warner], "Songs My Uncle Taught Me" Vol. XI, No. 1 (Feb 1972), pp. 56-57, "Baccerc sellin' high/I'm goin' down to town/" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
DT, LYNCHBRG*
Roud #3444

RECORDINGS:
Blue Ridge Highballers, "Going Down to Lynchburg Town" (Columbia 15096-D, 1926)
The Highlanders [Lonnie Austin, Roy Harvey, Charlie Poole, Odell Smith, Lucy Terry], "Lynchburg Town" [instrumental] (Paramount 3171, 1929) [May also have been issued under Poole’s name with the same record number]
Al Hopkins & his Buckle Busters, "Lynchburg Town" (Brunswick, unissued, 1928)
Grandpa Jones, "Going Down Town" (King 772-B, 1949)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Watermelon Spoilin' On The Vine" (floating verses)
cf. "Funniest Is the Frog" (lyrics, tune)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Lebeck Town

File: Wa181

M. and I. Goo-goo Eyes, The

DESCRIPTION: Recitation about logging life, with musical chorus, "Just because that jack makes goo-goo eyes, They piled them logs clear up into the skies." The singer discusses what happens when the train comes to collect the logs

AUTHOR: Ed Springstad
M.P.'s Life for Me, An

DESCRIPTION: "Hi diddle de dee! An M.P.'s life for me! You get the run of Bellamy's...." "You got to learn to lie." "You get a car that calls at four, With petrol coupons by the score." "And if the people don't obey. In gaol you lock them all away."

AUTHOR: Words: Ronald L. Meek (source: Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ)
EARLIEST DATE: 1940 (from a banned Victoria College event, according to Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ)

KEYWORDS: political New Zealand humorous nonballad derivative

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ, p. 109, "An M.P.'s Life for Me" (1 text, tune [inaccurately] referenced)
Cleveland-NZ-GreatNewZealandSongbook, pp. 85-86, "An MP's Life for Me" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [60 words]: Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ's notes list the tune of this as "'Hi diddle dee dee" from "The Wizard of Oz." There is of course no such song in either the Baum story or in the standard movie "Wizard." I assume this means "An Actor's Life for Me" from the Disney animated version of "Pinocchio," which came out in 1940. I'm amazed it was parodied so quickly. - RBW

M'Dermott's Farewell

DESCRIPTION: A young man on the Limeric city quay is bound for America. "For want of wages and employment, home and country I must flee." He thinks of his parents and sweetheart left behind. He hopes "fortune [will] smile upon me" so he can return.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads)

KEYWORDS: poverty emigration farewell America Ireland nonballad family

REFERENCES (1 citation):
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 79, "M'Dermott's Farewell" (1 text, 1 tune)

M'Ginty's Meal-an-Ale

DESCRIPTION: A pig escapes and wreaks havoc. Chorus: "They war howlin' in the kitchen like a caravan o' tinkies, An' some wis playin' ping-pong... Up the howe or doon the howe there never wis sic jinkies As M'Ginty's meal-an-ale far the pig gaed there tae see."
Ma Bonnie Wee Lochee Lass

DESCRIPTION: "It fell upon a Lammas nicht now I went oot for a stroll" the singer sees a beautiful girl and asks to walk with her. The talk. He walks her home. Now they are married "an' happy as we can be" with three children. He is happy they met.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1986 (Gatherer-SongsAndBalladsOfDundee)
KEYWORDS: courting children
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Gatherer-SongsAndBalladsOfDundee 65. "Ma Bonnie Wee Lochee Lass" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #22218
File: Gath065

Ma Brune (My Dark-Haired One)

DESCRIPTION: French. Singer tells of his love for the dark-haired girl. He tells her that if she ever doubts his love, "Ask the echoes ... Ask brooks and rivers and the rocks". He asks the birds to join him in singing of his great love.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes)
KEYWORDS: love nonballad bird
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes, p. 40, "Ma Brune (My Dark-Haired One)" (1 text + translation, 1 tune)
NOTES [37 words]: If my lover spent his time singing to brooks, rocks and birds, I'd probably be off with a sailor at the first opportunuty. - PJS
On the other hand, it probably pays better than singing for actual people at folk clubs. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.5
File: BerV040

Ma Petite Marguerite (My Little Marguerite)

DESCRIPTION: French. The singer say, Little Marguerite, I am leaving to sail on the waves around the world but I will love you until I die. She says she will cry a thousand tears waiting for his return; all is useless; she would prefer them both lost at the same time.

AUTHOR: unknown
Maa Bonny Lad

DESCRIPTION: "Hae ye seen ought o' maa bonny lad? Are ye sure he's well, o? He's gone awa' wi' a stick in his hand..." "Yes, I've seen your bonny lad, It's on the sea I spied him. His grave is green, but not with grass, And ye'll never lie beside him."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1971 (recorded by Ann Briggs)
KEYWORDS: love separation sailor death
FOUND IN: Britain
Roud #204
RECORDINGS:
Anne Briggs, "Maa Bonny Lad" (on Briggs2, Briggs3, Briggs4)
File: RcMaBoLa

Mabel Clare

DESCRIPTION: The singer recalls walking in the garden to gather roses to "braid in [Mabel's] golden/shiny hair." But now he gathers with others to bid her farewell, as she has died
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric)
KEYWORDS: love hair flowers death
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 96, "Mabel Clare" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Roud #11387
NOTES [80 words]: Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric notes that there was an 1862 song "Mabel Clare" with words by R. Hunt and music by A. J. Higgins. Based on the version on 67 of the Dime Song Book No. 2, it is similar in plot (it recalls beautiful Mabel, who is now dead), but omits the flower-gathering theme that is in both Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric's texts, and the words are quite different. Like Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric, I suspect one inspired the other, but they don't really look like the same song. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.3
File: Brne096

Mabel, Mabel

DESCRIPTION: "Mabel, Mabel, Set the table, Don't forget your Salt, vinegar, mustard, pepper." (or "salt and pepper," or "red hot pepper," etc.)
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1948 (NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal)
KEYWORDS: play party food
FOUND IN: US(So) New Zealand
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p, 104, "(Mabel, Mabel)" (1 text)
NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal, (Joan McCaskill, collector), "Rope-Skipping Games", Vol. 1, No. 1 (Jun 1948), p. 12, "(Mabel, Mabel, set the table)" (1 text)
Roud #19280
Mac and Shanahan

DESCRIPTION: Miko Mac and Shanahan are tracked to Newtown by bloodhounds and taken by Black and Tans. They refused to give their comrades' names. They are executed by shooting "in the Ennis Road." The pride of West Clare, they are buried in Doonbeg.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1974 (Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan)

KEYWORDS: rebellion execution manhunt burial patriotic IRA

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

1920-1921 - The Black and Tan War

Dec 22, 1920 - Commandant Willie Shanahan of the West Clare Brigade of Republican Police and Captain Michael McNamara of Doonbeg Company IRA are executed by the Black and Tans (source: Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan).

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan 25, "Mac and Shanahan" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #5221

RECORDINGS:

Nora Cleary, "Mac and Shanahan" (on IRClare01)
Tom Lenihan, "Mac and Shanahan" (on IRTLenihan01)

NOTES [70 words]: "The Black and Tans" (for which see "The Bold Black and Tan") were a special English constabulary recruited to quell Irish violence. They failed, and in fact contributed to the brutality.

It will tell you something of the violence of the period that none of the six histories I checked (including three devoted specifically to this period, one of which is largely a catalog of atrocities) mentions any of these events. - RBW

File: RcMacASh

Mac's and the O's, The

DESCRIPTION: "When Ireland was founded by the Mac's and the O's, I never could learn..." but the singer lists all the various great family names of Ireland. Some specific names are mentioned, but most are simply references to clans

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland)

KEYWORDS: nonballad wordplay Ireland

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHerrysSongsOfThePeople H484, p. 176, "The Mac's and the O's" (1 text, 1 tune)
O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 79, "The Mac's and the O's" (1 text)
Roud #4812

NOTES [68 words]: Even when a specific character is named in this song, it is often a legendary figure such as Finn MacCool. A handful, however, are historical, such as Hugh O'Neill of Tyrone, whose name is naturally connected with O'Donnell (for these two, see the notes to "O'Donnell Abou").

The final stanza refers to women, and most of these, interestingly, are women of song, e.g. Eileen Aroon and Kathleen Mavourneen. - RBW

File: HHH484

MacCrimmon's Lament

DESCRIPTION: "Round Coolin's peak the mist is sailing." The mists stream, the banshee wails, the beasts and brooks mourn, the singer's eyes stream for MacCrimmon, who never shall return. "No more forever Shall love or gold bring back MacCrimmon."
MacDonald of the Isles

DESCRIPTION: MacDonald courts Peggy, a lowland lady. He tells her that if she'd go with him he'd marry her. She agrees. As they ride "there was nothing there fittin for a lady." She becomes pregnant. At home he has a coach prepared to "go ... and see your daddy"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan4)
LONG DESCRIPTION: MacDonald says, "first when I cam to Kilboggie's Toon" courting Peggy "she lay in her bed till her breakfast was ready." She tells her mother that she would leave her silk gowns to go with her Highland laddie. He tells her that if she'd go with him he'd marry her and she'd be "a Highland chieftain's lady" She agrees. They ride with her in disguise, as his sister, or Lowland Kate, or Lowland Jinny. As they ride "there was nothing there fittin for a lady." She becomes pregnant. She recalls what she has left behind "in my father's ha" He assures her that when they reach his home she'll be a lady. When they do arrive he has a coach and six prepared to "go once more and see your daddy"

KEYWORDS: elopement marriage sex return disguise pregnancy mother
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan4 851, "MacDonald of the Isles" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Roud #95
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Glasgow Peggy" [Child 228] (tune and general plot)
NOTES [108 words]: Greig/Duncan4 quoting Duncan: "It is not easy to settle the exact relation between this ballad and [Greig/Duncan4 [850], Child 228] 'Glasgow Peggy'; but that there is a connection is clear enough. The plot and development of the story are the same; the names of Peggy and Macdonald are in both; some stanzas in the later part of this ballad are either modelled on 'Glasgow Peggy' or taken from it (9,10,13,14); and, to complete the connection, the tune is the same. Yet the greater part of the fifteen stanzas are quite different in matter from any version of 'Glasgow Peggy', and the name Kilboggie or Kilbagie is not found in any form of it." - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD4851

MacDonald's Camp

DESCRIPTION: "One evening last fall when we felt well inclined, We hired with D. A. MacDonald to work at the pine." MacDonald pushes so hard that "He brought bread seven miles and he got it there hot." The loggers are described, and Caldwell called "no use at all."

AUTHOR: reportedly Jack Caldwell
EARLIEST DATE: 1963 (Fowke)
KEYWORDS: work logger lumbering moniker
FOUND IN: Canada(Ont)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fowke-LumberingSongsFromTheNorthernWoods #17, "MacDonald's Camp" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #4469
File: FowL17

MacDonald's Return to Glencoe (The Pride of Glencoe) [Laws N39]

DESCRIPTION: The singer tries to woo a woman of Glencoe, but she says she is loyal to...
MacDonald, gone to war these ten years. He suggests that MacDonald may have forgotten her; she says she will remain single even so. He then reveals himself as MacDonald.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1835 (broadside, Bodleian Johnson Ballads 1641)

KEYWORDS: courting disguise separation reunion

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber,Bord)) US(MW,So) Canada(Mar,Newf) Ireland Australia

REFERENCES (25 citations):

Laws N39, "MacDonald's Return to Glencoe (The Pride of Glencoe)"
Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 247-248, "Donald and Glencoe" (1 text)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #55, p. 1, "Glencoe" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan5 1044, "The Pride of Glencoe" (16 texts plus a single verse on p. 631, 17 tunes)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 65-66, "Donald's Return to Glencoe" (1 text, tune referenced) McMorland/Scott-HerdLaddieOTheGlen, pp. 62-63, 150, "Donald's Return to Glencoe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph 126, "MacDonald's Return to Glencoe" (1 fragment)
Cazden/Haufrecht/Studer-FolkSongsOfTheCatskills 25, "Glencoe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 87, "The Pride of Glencoe" (1 text plus mention of 2 more)
Greig/Duncan5 #1044, p. 1, "Glencoe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 129, "Glencoe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Karpeles-FolkSongsFromNewfoundland 56, "The Pride of Glencoe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-FolkSongsOfNewBrunswick, pp. 70-72, "Glencoe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 68, "The Pride of Glencoe" (1 text)
O'Connor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 136, "McDonald's Return to Glenco" (1 text)
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, pp. 52-53, "Donald of Glencoe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H655, p. 319, "The Pride of Glencoe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Huntingdon-SongsTheWhalemenSang, pp. 113-115, "The Banks of Glenco" (2 texts, 1 tune)
MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland 28, "The Lass o' Glencoe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1354, p. 92, "McDonald's Return to Glenco" (1 reference)
DT 464, PRIGLENC*
Roud #515

RECORDINGS:
Lizzie Higgins, "MacDonald of Glencoe" (on LHiggins01)
Mr. MacDonald, "Glencoe" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Johnson Ballads 1641, "Donald's Return to Glencoe," G. Walker (Durham), 1797-1834; also sb30347b, "McDonald's Return to Glenco"
Murray, Mu23-y:4:036, "Donald's Return to Glencoe," unknown, 19C
NLScotland, L.C.178.A.2(206), "Donald's Return to Glencoe," unknown, c. 1840; also L.C.Fol.70(73a), "Donald's Return to Glencoe," James Lindsay (Glasgow), c. 1875

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "John (George) Riley (I)" [Laws N36] and references there
cf. "The Lass o' Glencoe" (lyrics)

SAME TUNE:
The Silk Merchant's Daughter [Laws N10] (File: LN10)

NOTES [33 words]: Broadside LOCSinging as202320: H. De Marsan dating per Studying Nineteenth-Century Popular Song by Paul Charosh in American Music, Winter 1997, Vol 15.4,
MacFarlan' o' the Sprotts

DESCRIPTION: The singer courts Susy but their fathers cannot agree. He sends Macfarlan' as a middleman to negotiate for him. Macfarlan' is an ugly stupid oaf but Susy's father tells him to speak for himself. Susy and Macfarlan' marry. Moral: Never trust a middleman

AUTHOR: George B Thomson (source: Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast)

EARLIEST DATE: 1910 (Greig/Duncan6)

KEYWORDS: courting marriage bargaining humorous

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #145, p. 1, "MacFarlan o' the Sprotts" (1 text)
- Greig/Duncan6 1221, "MacFarlan' o' the Sprotts" (1 text, 1 tune)

File: GrD61221

Machine-Guns They Rattle

DESCRIPTION: "Machine-guns they rattle, Jack Johnsons they roar, I don't want to fight With these Fritz any more. Take me over the sea, Where the Germans they can't get at me, Oh, my, I don't want to die, I want to go home"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1968 (Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia)

KEYWORDS: war cowardice homesickness derivative

FOUND IN: Australia

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, pp. 143-144, "Machine-Guns They Rattle" (2 texts, 1 tune)

NOTES [17 words]: Although this piece is probably a parody, Meredith and Anderson report a shearer's parody of it. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: MA143

Mack's Blues

DESCRIPTION: "Say, I told the Captain, he don't worry me, Got a hundred and twenty-nine summers, partner, never will go free." The singer complains of hard work and getting up so early, calls for water, works with mules, wishes for mercy, and tells of prison life

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (collected from Mack Maze by Jackson)

KEYWORDS: prison hardtimes nonballad

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Jackson-WakeUpDeadMan, pp. 81-82, "Mack's Blues" (2 texts, 1 tune)

NOTES [76 words]: This is an amazing demonstration of the fluidity of prison moans (this is properly not a blues; the form is wrong). Both of Jackson's versions come from Mack Maze, but while they have the same tune, only one verse is common. Maze's first text is apparently a mule song; the second has a large dose of "Easy Rider" material. I could make a strong case for splitting them, but it is not likely that we will find an exact match for either one elsewhere. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.4

File: JDM081

Mackenzie and His Dog (I)

DESCRIPTION: "Draw up your chair and I'll pour out a beer, While I sing you a song of a Scots mountaineer." "He had a fine sheepdog... he learned to find sheep that no one had lost!" While
"Mac" is in a bar, the sheep steals sheep; Mac is captured and the dog shot

AUTHOR: Words: Joe Charles

EARLIEST DATE: 1981 (Charles, Black Billy Tea; reportedly written c. 1960)

KEYWORDS: sheep travel thief dog New Zealand humorous

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

1855 - the disappearance of the sheep and McKenzie's capture. He is sentenced to five years, but the sentence is commuted after nine months and he returns to Australia

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Cleveland-NZ-GreatNewZealandSongbook, pp. 52-53, "Mackenzie and His Dog" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "McKenzie and His Dog" (subject)

NOTES [469 words]: The John/James McKenzie of this song should not be confused with Sir John McKenzie (1839-1901), who spent about twenty years in the New Zealand parliament and in some liberal governments; Sir John was a generation younger and did not arrive in New Zealand until 1860.

Ell. 154-155, has an entry on "Mackenzie, the 'Sheep Stealer'": "A Robin Hood-like glamour surrounds the exploits of James McKenzie (now spelled Mackenzie), who was said to have stolen 1000 sheep from George Rhodes of the Levels and driven them to the huge high-country basin that was named after him. A Highland drover who spoke Gaelic as his first language, McKenzie discovered his 'country' in the infant days of settlement in Canterbury (though his pass was known to others). McKenzie was apprehended by Rhodes' overseer James Sidebotham and two Maori, Taiko and 'Seventeen,' on March 4, 1855, but escaped the same night. The memorial on the spot describes McKenzie as 'the freebooter.' Tried and sentenced to five years' imprisonment, McKenzie made several escapes from the Littleton gal before he was pardoned five months later."

Mackenzie claimed he was helping someone by the name of James Mossman watch over stolen sheep. There seems to be no evidence that Mossman existed.

Ell continues, "In allowing a pardon, the Provincial Superintendent accepted that McKenzie's silence in defence was born of the Gael's incomprehension of the English language in which he was tried. McKenzie's story has inspired many local legends, as did his dog which was said to have a prodigious memory for mustering instructions, allowing the dog to take sheep long after McKenzie had moved on to some other place of safety." A writer named James McNeish wrote a novel Mackenzie [1870] and an attempt at a defense called The Mackenzie Affair.

NewZealandEncyclopedia, pp. 337-338, opens its entry on McKenzie by saying McKenzie "is a legendary figure in NZ history, whose date and place of birth and ultimate fate remain unknown. "The Mackenzie Country, Mackenzie Pass and the Mackenzie River are all named after the shepherd (despite the difference in spelling). It is believed McKenzie was born in Inverness-shire, emigrated to Australia during the 1840s and then came on to NZ with the object of taking up land in Southland."

It was in 1855 that about a thousand sheep disappeared from Levels Station at Timaru. The rest of the story mostly matches Ell's, although in this account, the overseer is called J. H. C. Sidebottom. After his pardon, it is thought McKenzie returned to Australia.

"McKenzie's physical stamina, his stockmanship and his apparently remarkable dog companion have been romanticised over the years, until he is now established as part of NZ's folklore." The entry closes with a picture of McKenzie's dog but has no photo of McKenzie! - RBW

Bibliography

Last updated in version 5.2

File: Clev052

Macnamara's Band

DESCRIPTION: "My name is Macnamara, I'm the leader of the band, My wife is Betty Grable, she's the fairest in the land"; she can sing, dance, "show a leg" ... everything but "make my ham and eggs"

AUTHOR: John J. Stamford (according to Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)
EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)
KEYWORDS: derivative playparty food
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond),Scotland(Bord))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 121, "Macnamara's Band" (2 texts, 1 tune)
SAME TUNE:
No. 5. Squadron Song (File: Hopk041)
NOTES [60 words]: Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame: "'Macnamara's Band', written by John J. Stamford (copyright J.H. Larway, 1914) has been a song too good for children to abandon, and is particularly cherished in Scotland."

Betty Grable, a movie star of the 1930's, 1940's and 1950's, was married to band-leader Harry James from 1943 to 1965. (Source: Wikipedia article Harry James) - BS

MacPherson the Drover

DESCRIPTION: Peggy's father would have her follow McPherson the drover. she agrees but thinks about all the men "for me hae gane stark" she might have had. But if Harry Mitchell, "my love just now," proves true she'll "look owre my nose at the drover"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan4)
KEYWORDS: courting marriage farming father
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #156, p. 2, "M'Pherson the Drover" (1 text plus 1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan4 768, "MacPherson the Drover" (4 texts plus two verses on pp. 537-538, 1 tune)
Roud #6185
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Quaker's Wife" (tune, per Greig)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Jeannie, My Dear
NOTES [33 words]: Greig: "[According to Rev. George Williams this song] was written about an irregular marriage in 1793, and is supposed to have been the work of John Adam, son of the Rev. Francis Adam, Cushnie." - BS

MacPherson's Lament

DESCRIPTION: MacPherson tells how a woman betrayed him to the Laird o' Grant. He challenges all to a duel in defense of his honor. He breaks his fiddle, "the only friend I hae," rather than see it in bad hands. A rider is coming to reprieve him, so he is hanged early

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1803 ( _Scots Musical Museum_ #114); supposedly first appeared by 1710 (ee NOTES)
KEYWORDS: execution betrayal reprieve fiddle outlaw
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Nov 16, 1700 - Execution of James MacPherson
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (14 citations):
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, pp. 346-347, "Macpherson's Farewell" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan3 697, "Macpherson's Rant" (6 texts, 6 tunes)
Porter/Gower-Jeanie-Robertson-EmergentSingerTransformativeVoice #15, pp. 134-135, "MacPherson's Farewell" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 348, "MacPherson's Lament" (1 text, 1 tune)
MacPherson's Farewell

DESCRIPTION: "I've spent my time in rioting, Debauch'd my health and strength... But now, alas! at length, I'm brought to punishment direct." MacPherson laments that he is to be hanged, blames the Laird of Grant and Peter Brown, and tells people to live well

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1829 (Chambers)

KEYWORDS: punishment execution betrayal outlaw
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Nov 16, 1700 - Execution of James MacPherson
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 444-445, "M'Pherson's Farewell" (1 text)
Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex, ZN1339, "I spent my time in rioting, debauch'd my health and strength" (?)
Roud #2160
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "MacPherson's Lament" (subject)
NOTES [81 words]: Often treated (e.g. by Roud) as a variant of the now-better-known "MacPherson's Lament," the two have so little in common that it seems certain that the two are separate. There is, at the very least, a great deal of editing (by Burns?) separating the two. This piece, which can be told from the other by the first line in the description, is much poorer poetry; nonetheless, it is generally held to be older. I doubt it's traditional by origin; it reads like a moralizing broadside. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.5
File: Ord444

Mad Trapper of Rat River, The
DESCRIPTION: The Mounties learn that a trapper has gone mad; he shoots one and flees. During the manhunt, he kills another Mountie, then a third, but is surrounded and shot dead. Credit is given to the Mounties: "They always get their man"
AUTHOR: Probably Wilf Carter
EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (recording, Wilf Carter)
LONG DESCRIPTION: Two Indians report to the Mounties that a trapper has gone mad; the Mounties visit him, but he shoots one and flees. A manhunt ensues; in the process, he kills another Mountie, backtracks and escapes. Eventually he kills a third, but is surrounded and shot dead. Credit is given to the Mounties: "They always get their man"
KEYWORDS: madness fight violence crime homicide death police
FOUND IN: Canada(West)
RECORDINGS:
Wilf Carter, "The Capture of Albert Johnson" (Bluebird [Canada] B-4966, c. 1934; rec. 1933)
Stanley G. Triggs, "The Mad Trapper of Rat River" (on Triggs1)
NOTES [33 words]: Trapper Albert Johnson was hunted and killed by Mounties (Royal Canadian Mounted Police) in the 1930s. Triggs reports this ballad as widespread in western Canada "from the Rockies to the coast." - PJS
Last updated in version 4.2
File: RcTMTORR

Mada Cantinny (Mother Cantinny)
DESCRIPTION: Jamaican patois: They know I am Cantinny. Did you reveal that?
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1921 (Beckwith-Ballad)
KEYWORDS: disguise trick animal
FOUND IN: West Indies(Jamaica)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Murray-FolkSongsOfJamaica, p. 18, "Mada Cantinny" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Martha W Beckwith, "The English Ballad in Jamaica: a Note Upon the Origin of the Ballad Form" in _Publications of the Modern Language Association_ [PMLA], Vol. XXXIXI, No. 2 (Jun 1924 (available online by JSTOR)), pp. 460-461, "Grandy Beard" (1 text)
RECORDINGS:
Edric Connor with the Caribbeans and Earl Inkman, "Mada Cantinny" (on WIEConnor01)
NOTES [71 words]: Murray-FolkSongsOfJamaica: "Mada Cantinny (Mother Cantinny), is a character in an Anancy story, whose name was only known to the animals she fostered. Anancy [the eponymous trickster] [often a spider, and often spelled Anansi - RBW], disguised as a girl, learned her name from Bra Crab, one of her 'children,' and Mada Cantinny sang this song to each animal in turn asking if it were responsible for divulging her secret." - BS
Last updated in version 3.8
File: JaMu018

Madam, Madam, You Came Courting

DESCRIPTION: When the girl comes courting the boy agrees to "entertain you If you will not call me names." She spurns his wealth: "All I want is a fancy man." He says she can look to the trees to keep her warm "when nights are cold and frosty"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle)

KEYWORDS: courting rejection humorous

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South)) Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
- Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 111, "Ripest Apples" (2 texts)
- Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 121, "Madam, Madam, You Came Courting" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Pottie/Ellis-FolksongsOfTheMaritimes, pp. 100-101, "Madam, Madam, You Came Courting" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #542

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Wheel of Fortune" (Dublin City, Spanish Lady) (theme)

NOTES [63 words]: Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs: "Although a different song, this is very like 'The Quaker's Courtship'"; Creighton's song is "Wheel of Fortune" with roles reversed. Nevertheless, though I find no lines shared with that group of songs it is close enough that it may belong there. - BS

Roud, indeed, lumps them -- but logic says that this is rewritten, and hence should be split. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: CrMa121

Made My Vow to the Lord

DESCRIPTION: "Done made my vow to the Lord, And I never will turn back, I will go, I shall go, To see what the end shall be." "My strength, good Lord, is almost gone, I will go, I shall go...."

"Sometimes I'm helpless on the ground, I will go...."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1915 (Work-FolkSongOfTheAmericanNegro)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Work-FolkSongOfTheAmericanNegro, p. 67, "Make My Vow to the Lord" (1 text)

Roud #12077

File: FSAN067

Madeleine

DESCRIPTION: French (Belgian). Capstan shanty. "En revenant d'Beaumont, La digue, digue, daine." The singer dreams of Beaumont, where he meets a girl. Her name is Madeleaine. He lifts her petticoat. You can guess the rest

AUTHOR: "Commandant LeMaitre" (source: Hugill)

EARLIEST DATE: 1977 (Hugill-SongsOfTheSea)

KEYWORDS: shanty foreignlanguage courting sex dream

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Hugill-SongsOfTheSea, p. 102, "Madeleine" (2 texts, French and English, 1 tune)

File: HSoSe102
Mademoiselle from Armentières

DESCRIPTION: The mademoiselle "hasn't been kissed [or other appropriate verb] for forty years."
The soldiers complain about her or cajole her to do their laundry; they complain about their superiors (and their relations with the lady?) and grouse about army life

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1919

KEYWORDS: bawdy soldier humorous nonballad

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1914-1918 - First World War, during which this ballad clearly arose

FOUND IN: US(So) Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (14 citations):
Randolph/Legman-RollMeInYourArms I, pp. 513-515, "Mademoiselle from Armentieres" (3 texts, 1 tune)
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, pp. 440-442, "Hinky Dinky, Parlee-Voo" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead, pp. 26-27, "Mademoiselle from Armentières" (1 text, 1 tune); p. 139, "Three German Officers Crossed the Rhine" (1 text, tune referenced; Hopkins implies this is a separate song, but most of the verses are standard "Madamoiselle")
Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang, pp. 48-50, "Mademoisell from Armeenteers"; "Madame, Have You...?"; "ThHe Sergeant-Major's having a time" (3 texts)
Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 331-333, "Mademoiselle from Armentieres" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-FolkSongUSA 38, "Mademoiselle from Armentieres" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSons, pp. 557-560, "Hinky Dinky Parley-Voo?" (1 text, 1 tune)
Shay-BarroomBallads/PiousFriendsDrunkenCompanions, pp. 78-79, "Mademoiselle from Armentieres" (1 text, 1 tune)
Arnett-IHearAmericaSinging, pp. 152-153, "Hinky Dinky Parlay-Voo" (1 text, 1 tune)
Johnson-BawdyBalladsAndLustyLyrics, pp. 110-111, "Hinky Dinky" (1 text)
Niles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe, pp. 15-22, "Mad'moiselle from Armentieres (40,000 Marines Can't Be Wrong)" (1 very long composite text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 277, "Mademoiselle from Armentieres" (1 text)
Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, pp. 344-345, "Mademoiselle from Armentieres"

ADDITIONAL: George Allan England, _Vikings of the Ice: Being the Log of a Tenderfoot on the Great Newfoundland Seal Hunt_ (also published as _The Greatest Hunt in the World_), Doubleday, 1924, p. 128, "(no title)" (1 short text, probably partial)

Roud #4703

RECORDINGS:
Benny Bell, "Hinky Dinkey Polly Voo" (Cocktail Party Songs 101, n.d.)
Bell Record Quartet, "Hinky Dinky Parlez Vous" (Bell 285, 1924 - but it's possible this is Benny Bell's post-World War II recording for his similarly-named label)
Broadway Quartet, "Hinky Dinky Parlez Vous" (Banner 1382/Regal 9678, 1924)
Jan Garber & his Orch, "Hinky Dinky Parlay Voo" (Victor 19405, 1924)
Happiness Boys [Billy Jones & Ernest Hare] "Hinky Dinky Parlay Voo" (Columbia 132-D, 1924)
Lawrence Loy & Wilbur Waite, "Hinky Dinky Parlez Vous" (Columbia 20638, 1949)
[Billy] Murray and [Ed] Smalle, "Hinky Dinky Parlay Voo" (Victor 19388, 1924)
Sweet Violet Boys, "Hinky Dinky Parlay Voo, Part 1/Part 2" (Vocalion 03281, 1936; this number was also used for Part 1 only, with the reverse side another song; Part 1 is also on Conqueror 9067, 1938; Columbia 20283/Columbia 37704, 1947. Part 2 was also issued as, "Hinky Dinky Parley Voo #2", Vocalion 03327, 1936; Columbia 20284/Columbia 37705, 1947)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "When Johnny Comes Marching Home" (approximate tune)
cf. "Johnny, I Hardly Knew Ye" (approximate tune)
cf. "Johnny, Fill Up the Bowl" (approximate tune)
cf. "Snapoo" (approximate tune; theme)
cf. "The Little Red Train" (tune)
cf. "Three Pirates" (tune)

SAME TUNE:
What's Become Of Hinky Dinky Parlez Vous? (What Has Become of Hinky Dinky Parlez Voo?) (Al Bernard & J. Robinson, Cameo 572, 1924; Carl Fenton & his Orch., Brunswick 2618, 1924; Billy Jones, Vocalion 14817, 1924); (Billy Jones & Ernest Hare, Okeh 40128, 1924)
One Grease Ball (Niles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe, p. 38)
I Bought a Scab for Fifty Cents (by Odell Corley, then 11 years old) (Kristina Horton, _Martyr of Loray Mill: Ella May and the 1929 Textile Workers' Strike in Gastonia, North Carolina_, McFarland & Company, 2015, p. 199. For background, see the notes on "Chief Aderholt")

NOTES [73 words]: Both plot and tune of this song show a relationship with "Snapoo" (indeed, they sometimes mix, and Roud lumps them); it is reasonable to ask which came first and which influenced the other. As both appear at about the same time, however, it is effectively impossible to settle the matter.

Fuld has extensive notes about the origin of this song, with some interesting folkloric twists; the legends, while possible, are not convincing. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: RL513

Mademoiselle Went to the Well

DESCRIPTION: Ball-bouncing game. "Mademoiselle, She went to the well, She never forgets her soap or towel. he washes her hands, She dries and dries, She combs her hair, She jumps up high And touches the sky Then twirls around Until she drops."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)

KEYWORDS: play party clothes hair

FOUND IN: New Zealand

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 111, "(Madam Morel)" (1 text); pp. 119-120, "(Mademoiselle She goes to the wall)" (1 text)

ADDITIONAL: Peter and Iona Opie, _I Saw Esau: Traditional Rhymes of Youth_, #82"(Mademoiselle)" (1 text)

Roud #19285

File: SuSm111B

Mademoiselle, dites-moi donc

DESCRIPTION: "Dites-moi donc mademoiselle, dou venez-vous donc?" The singer asks the woman a series of questions: Is she from Sorel or Saint-Adele? Is her petticoat is cotton or flannel? She answers with questions of her own. They end with insults

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: c. 1930 (recording, La Bolduc and Ovila Legare, according to various YouTube videos)

KEYWORDS: foreign language dialog clothes food rejection

FOUND IN: Canada (Mar)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Pottie/Ellis-FolksongsOfTheMaritimes, pp. 34-35, "Dites-moi donc mademoiselle" (1 text, 1 tune)

File: PoEll034

Magdalene's Lament, The

DESCRIPTION: "As I cam in by Tanzie's wood... Four-and-twenty o' Geordie's men Kiss'd me against my will." The girl recalls flirting happily in a tavern, "But now I'm in the correction-house And whipped to my turn." She hopes to be released and marry

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1827 (Kinloch)

KEYWORDS: seduction sex prison abuse whore

FOUND IN: Britain (Scotland)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Kinloch-TheBalladBook III, pp. 12-13, "The Magdalene's Lament" (1 text)

Roud #8153

NOTES [111 words]: Traditional? I don't know. Kinloch of course does not list sources. The term "Magdalene" for a reformed prostitute is of course a reference to the Biblical Mary Magdalene ("maudlin"). But while Mary of Magdala was a follower of Jesus, from whom he "cast seven demons" (Mark 16:9), there is no reason to think she had formerly been a prostitute; Luke 7:37-50 describes a reformed prostitute wiping Jesus's feet with her hair, but never calls her Mary. John 12:1-8 has Mary wipe his feet -- but this is Mary of Bethany, not Mary of Magdala! Not that this matters; while Kinloch calls the song "The Magdalene's Lament," the word "magdalene" is not used in the song. - RBW.

File: KinBB03

Magelhan

DESCRIPTION: German shanty. Original was a capstan (gangspill) shanty. The Magelhan/Magellan is the name of the ship. The verses (or at least the translation) are mostly good natured complaints about work and the captain.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Baltzer's _Knurrhahn_ (reprint))
KEYWORDS: shanty foreignlanguage ship
FOUND IN: Germany
REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 191-192, "Magelhan" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Hugill-SongsOfTheSea, pp. 164-165, "Magelhan" (2 texts, German & English, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Rolling Home (I)" (adaptation of text)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
- Magellan
NOTES [32 words]: Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas included this with the versions of "Rolling Home (I)" stating that this was the original shanty from which the German version of "Rolling Home" was derived. - SL

Last updated in version 5.0
File: Hugi191

Maggie by My Side

DESCRIPTION: "The land of my home is flitting, Flitting from my view; A gale in the sails is sitting; Toils the merry crew." The sailor wishes this were his home, with Maggie sitting by his side. Not even the storm can threaten him when she is there

AUTHOR: Stephen C. Foster
EARLIEST DATE: 1854 (sheet music by Firth, Pond & Co.)
KEYWORDS: sailor home love
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 282-283, "Maggy By My Side/Maggie By My Side" (2 texts, 1 tune)
- Heart-Songs, pp. 135-136, "Maggie By My Side" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13954
BROADSIDES:
- LOCSheet, sm1854.750390, "Maggie By My Side," Firth, Pond & Co. (New York), 1854 (tune)
NOTES [245 words]: Like most Foster songs, it describes a life Foster knew nothing about, and like most Foster songs, it shows. This one is rare in tradition (in fact, I know of no actual field collections), but Foster's grip on the popular consciousness is shown by the fact that it was included in at least two ships' logbooks within two years of its composition. William W. Austin, Susanna, Jeannie and the Old Folks at Home: The Songs of Stephen C. Foster from his time to ours, Macmillan, 1975, p. 117, reports "worst of all [in a series of sappy songs] is a cheerful song copyrighted in October 1853 and destined to sell more copies than any other song in the series [of love songs], including [I Dream of] 'Jeanie.' This is 'Maggie by My Side,' dedicated to a Pittsburg girl, Eliza Denniston, about whom nothing is known.... Such defiant good cheer is unique among the Foster songs."

Austin adds that it brought in $278.01 in royalties by 1857, and that the manuscript of the song sold in 1868 for $4500.

John Tasker Howard, Stephen Foster, America's Troubadour, 1934 (I use the 1939 Tudor Publishing edition), p. 211, based on Digging around on the Internet, I found an hypothesis that Maggie was the sailor's dog. While Stephen Foster was fond of dog songs, I find it hard to believe; the singer sounds too fond of Maggie.
Foster's manuscripts, says that it was originally a blackface song, and the heroine was Fanny; I think this additional evidence that a woman is meant. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0
File: HGam282

Maggie C, The

DESCRIPTION: Maggie C is "built by George E Saville a man of high degree." Nevertheless, she is unstable. Everyone laughs at the effort to get to the dock. The owner says "It's that blooming Saville's fault" but Saville claims "No better boat's afloat"

AUTHOR: Victor La Pierre, Annandale, P.E.I.
EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland)
KEYWORDS: ship humorous
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 47-48, "The Maggie C" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #12471
File: Dib047

Maggie Gordon (I)

DESCRIPTION: "Fause Maggie Gordon she's made my life a burden." The singer has been jilted and wishes he'd never been born, has no heart to live, but is unwilling to die.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan8)
KEYWORDS: love rejection
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan8 1899, "Maggie Gordon" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #13237
File: GrD81899

Maggie Howie

DESCRIPTION: Michael Lee tells of courting Maggie Howie of Napanee; she wore his ring, but refused to marry him; her parents disapprove. He kills her with an axe, flees to the woods, is captured and jailed. He states his guilt and his readiness to be tried and hanged

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1957 (recording, Mrs. Tom Sullivan)
KEYWORDS: courting love marriage rejection violence crime execution homicide punishment death family lover prisoner
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
c. 1887: Maggie Howie murdered by Michael Lee
FOUND IN: Canada(Ont)
Roud #3838
RECORDINGS:
Mrs. Tom Sullivan, "Maggie Howie" (on Ontario1)
NOTES [51 words]: Despite the last verse of the song, Michael Lee was not hanged, but instead found to be criminally insane, and confined in a special wing of Kingston Penitentiary until his death. Maggie Howie's ghost is said to haunt the offices of the local newspaper, which stands on the spot where the murder occurred. - PJS
File: RcMagHow

Maggie Hunter, The

DESCRIPTION: The Maggie Hunter leaves Oswego bound for Toronto, but runs into a gale. Various crew members do their best, but the ship is lost, with only bits recovered. Six months later, the cook's body is found. Listeners are told to remember whenever a storm blows

AUTHOR: unknown
Maggie Hunter

DESCRIPTION: "Miss Maggie Jones was a homely maiden, And she owned a homely apple tree." She begs the singer to climb it and throw apples down to her; a branch breaks and he falls on her. His parents fight under the tree and get stung by bees

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric)

KEYWORDS: derivative humorous food father mother fight

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 150, "Maggie Jones" (1 text)
Roud #11349

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Shade of the Old Apple Tree" (tune)

File: Brne150

Maggie Lauder

DESCRIPTION: Maggie meets a piper, Rab the Ranter, and encourages him to strike up a tune while she dances. He does, and she praises his work; he says, "It's worth my while to play indeed When I hae sic a dancer." She encourages him to ask for her if he comes again

AUTHOR: Francis Sempill? (c. 1616-1682)

EARLIEST DATE: 1794 (Ritson); reportedly written 1642

KEYWORDS: music dancing

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
MacColl-PersonalChoice, pp. 23-24, "Maggie Lauder" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #5625

BROADSIDES:
NLScotland, S.302.b.2(094), "Maggie Lauder," Simms and McIntyre (Belfast), probably 1825; also APS.3.84.2, "Maggy Lawder," Charles Pigott (London), after 1825 (with many distortions in the
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Northumberland Bagpipes" (theme)
cf. "Cripple Kirsty" (parody)
SAME TUNE:
Cripple Kirsty (File: GrD3556)
The Joyful Widower (Scots Musical Museum, #98)
A Brand Fire New Whaling Song Right from the Pacific Ocean (File: HGam002)
NOTES [160 words]: One can only suspect that more than piping and dancing lies behind this song. This, indeed, may explain its rarity in the older collections; it sounds like a hidden story of something extremely indelicate. (The National Library of Scotland site, in fact, claims that Maggie ended up pregnant. The NLScotland broadsides do not show this, however.)

Maggie Mackay
DESCRIPTION: The singer falls in love with Maggie Mackay at a fair. They go drinking but, when drinking is finished, she says she must go home with her mother. Later that night he sees her drinking with Davie McLean. He won’t take girls drinking again.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan7)
KEYWORDS: courting lie drink
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan7 1510, "Maggie Mackay" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7171
NOTES [59 words]: I don't understand the last line here which is apparently meant as a humorous conclusion. At an examination on theological knowledge the singer "set mysel doon in great fear" and the minister asked, "What the name the first woman did wear Losht I stammer't oot 'Maggie Mackay.'" I guess he is hearing "lush" or "lushed" but what is the minister asking? - BS

Maggie May
DESCRIPTION: The sailor returns home and soon falls in with Maggie May. She takes him to her room, gets him drunk, and walks off with his money (and clothes). Maggie is arrested and transported to Australia
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1906 (recording, John W. Myers)
KEYWORDS: whore robbery sailor transportation
FOUND IN: Britain(England(West)) Australia
REFERENCES (6 citations):
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 404-408, "Maggie May" (4 texts, 1 tune) [AbEd, pp. 307-311]
Hugill-SongsOfTheSea, pp. 68-69, "Maggie May" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia, pp. 30-31, "Maggie May" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [433 words]: It has been suggested that this is of music hall origin, but I know of no proof. Hugill doesn't mention the hypothesis, and reports (second-hand, without listing his source, so I can't verify it as the EARLIEST DATE) that it was mentioned in a diary by Charles Picknel of the convict ship Kains, which sailed in 1830. Hugill also says that the girl was originally "Nelly Ray." The song has seemingly become a cultural phenomenon; I heard somewhere that the Beatles recorded it, and they surely didn't record many other traditional songs! Also, Lionel Bart (who wrote the musical "Oliver!") wrote a musical called "Maggie May" that was reasonably popular. Bart apparently knew the song as a child, and sang it to the delight of the rowdy children in his poor London neighborhood (Stafford, p. 147).

Lamb, pp. 327-328, has this to say of the musical: "for his next piece, Bart abandon London settings for Liverpool's dockland. Maggie May (1964) was built by librettist Alun Owen around the old English ballad character of prostitute Maggie May (played by Rachel Roberts), though the central character was not Maggie herself but her childhood sweetheart, docker Casey (Kenneth Haigh). The son of a union worker, he opposes unthinking union action but ends up leading a wildcat strike and dies while seeking to ditch a cargo of arms for South American anti-riot police. The piece had a strong book and colourful characters, who were well served by numbers that ranged from a love song 'It's Yourself I Want' to a topical piece for a Beatles-replica pop group." The name Maggie May is interesting for a prostitute. Maggie May could be a nickname for Magdalene Mary -- Mary Magdalene. And, yes, the story went that Mary Magdalene was a reformed prostitute -- although this is through a chain of equations that doesn't hold up. Mary of Magdala was a follower of Jesus, from whom he "cast seven demons" (Mark 16:9), there is no reason to think, base on the references to her at the crucifixion and after, that she had formerly been a prostitute; if she had been, wouldn't someone have said so? Luke 7:37-50 describes a reformed prostitute wiping Jesus's feet with her hair, but never calls her Mary. John 12:1-8 has Mary wipe his feet -- but this is Mary of Bethany, not Mary of Magdala! OxfordSaints, p. 357, reports that the identification of Mary of Bethany with Mary Magdalene was "propounded by Gregory the Great, but [is] now explicitly rejected by the Roman Missal." But while it is unlikely that Mary Magdalene was actually a prostitute, for a long time it was widely believed that she was. - RBW

Bibliography

- Lamb: Andrew Lamb, 150 Years of Popular Musical Theatre, Yale University Press, 2000
- Stafford: David & Caroline Stafford, Fings Ain't Wot They Used T'Be: The Lionel Bart Story, Omnibus Press, 2011

Last updated in version 5.3
File: FaE030

Maggie Murphy's Home

DESCRIPTION: "Behind a grammar schoolhouse In a double tenement, I live with my old mother, And always pay the rent.... You're welcome every evening at Maggie Murphy's home." Maggie enjoys the area, and hopes all will remain happy at home

AUTHOR: Words: Edward Harrigan / Music: David Braham

EARLIEST DATE: 1890 (sheet music published by Wm. A. Pond & Co, New York)

KEYWORDS: home nonballad dancing music

FOUND IN: Canada(Ont) Ireland

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Finson Edward Harrigan David Braham, vol. II, #159, pp. 263-266, "Maggie Murphy's Home" (1 text, 1 tune)

ADDITIONAL: Stanley Appelbaum, editor, _Show Songs: from The Black Crook to The Red Mill_, Dover Publications, 1974, pp. 47-50, "Maggie Murphy's Home" (1 text, 1 tune, a copy of the sheet music)

Richard Moody, _Ned Harrigan: From Corlear's Hook to Herald Square_, Nelson Hall, 1980, after p. 54, "Maggie Murphy's Home" (a copy of the sheet music)

Roud #5208

RECORDINGS:
The Shannon Quartet, "Maggie Murphy's Home" (Victor 19336, 1924)
Mick Moloney, "Maggie Murphy's Home" (on HarriganBrahamMaloney)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth b.28(3a/b), "Maggie Murphy's Home," G. Ingram and Co (London), n.d.

NOTES [1722 words]: Traditional collections of this are few, but there are some. Edith Fowke seems to have had one from Ontario, and there is a YouTube recording sung by John O'Donovan. The latter has definitely been folk processed; the words are very different (a whole verse seems to have come in from somewhere else) and the tune has also drifted a little.

For background on Harrigan and Braham, see the notes to "The Babies on Our Block."

When Edward Harrigan opened his new theater in 1890, the first show he put on there was "Reilly and the 400," which featured this song. According to Appelbaum, p. xxv, "Maggie Murphy's Home," an archetype of the 1890s waltz song, was sung by the fifteen-year-old Emma Pollock in the role of Maggie Murphy. Moody, pp. 189-190, reports "Reilly would probably have caught on even without Harrigan's newest sensations, the teenage chippies Maggie Murphy and Kitty Lynch, played by Emma Pollock, age 16, and Ada Lewis, 17. Emma's Maggie Murphy blew into Casey's [social hall] 'like a sweet breath of air from over the meadow,' and as she 'stood ready to do her jig dance surrounded by roughs, toughs, and fallen women, she made you think of a little violet dropped among the weeds.' Reporters could not control themselves. She was 'like a little bobolink fluttering down from a rose in a frog pond.' Her prize jig led into 'Maggie Murphy's Home,' Al Smith's favorite song, the favorite of all Irishmen who knew that 'an organ in the parlor' did 'give the house a tone.'"

Al Smith famously ended up with "Sidewalks of New York" as the theme song of his political career, but it wasn't the song he wanted. He wanted "Maggie Murphy's Home" (Moody, p. 2); for background on the bandleader's mistake that led to Smith being stuck with "Sidewalks of New York," see the notes to that song.

Spaeth, p. 194: "This number has been associated with the name of Ada Lewis, but was actually introduced by the youthful Emma Pollock. (Miss Lewis created the role of a tough, gum-chewing girl, which also became famous.) The Pollock interpretation included a 'Challenge Jig,' based on the contemporary custom of holding contests in dancing and other arts, and implying the limit of superlative skill. Maggie Murphy's Home is still remembered nostalgically as an exposition of simple New York life (the original home was in Brooklyn) and musically it was one of Braham's most effective creations."

The plot of "Reilly and the 400" is a typical Harrigan complication-fest. William Reilly (Harrigan) owns a pawnship. His lawyer son Ned is going to marry a rich girl, but a rival is trying to reveal Ned's humble past to break up the marriage. So William Reilly decides to pretend to be an Irish nobleman. The rival isn't what he seems to be either, but the book that would prove this gets mixed up with another, and everyone spends three acts looking for it before everyone ends up with the right partner (Franceschina, p. 198).

In the course of all this, "Waltzing music from an onstage orchestra leads into Maggie Murphy's Home, an exceptionally catchy waltz describing tenement life in New York City and performed by Maggie Murphy (Emma Pollock)... [After Reilly sings 'Taking in the Town.'] An eight minute jig follows in which Maggie Murphy and Bessie [Barlow, played by John Decker] compete in challenge dancing" (Franceschina, p. 199, although the music for the jig is lost). The show would prove popular enough to last 202 shows in its first run (Franceschina, p. 202) -- a near-record total (Ewen, p. 64, says it was the longest-running Harrigan/Braham show) -- and would later be revived.

Williams, p. 162: "In [Reilly and the 400] Harrigan introduced a new urban type into his company in the form of two teenage 'chippies' or tough girls. Maggie Murphy and Kitty Lynch were figures known on the street but new to the stage. When Kitty (played by Ada Lewis) appeared in her scruffy clothes and tight, ill-fitting sweater and rapped out to the pawn broker, 'Say Reilly, gimme me shoes!' she stopped the show.... Harrigan had 'framed' another bit of the city."

Harrigan's plays were noted for their complications on stage, but this musical produced one at home: Emma Pollock became involved with composer/bandleader David Braham's son George, a member of the Harrigan/Braham orchestra (Kahn, p. 155, calls it a "fiery romance"). She gave him a ring -- which George pawned to pay a gambling debt, and then had to come up with a trick to get it back (Franceschina, pp. 201-202). Plus, during a performance, he had to hide the fact that it was missing, which got him in trouble with his father even if he managed to avoid telling Emma. Supposedly it took David Braham just five minutes to compose the tune for this (Moody, p. 154; Franceschina, p. 200, tells how Harrigan had come to Braham late in the production and Braham didn't want to write a new tune, but gave in, and then, some days later, had this melody come into his head). Franceschina, p. 201, has a reprint of his rough draft of the music, and it certainly appears to have been quickly dashed off -- but Braham, according to Harrigan, had terrible handwriting (Franceschina, p. 2), so that may not prove much. According to Williams, p. 207, "The [Tin Pan Alley] Irish-American girl began life as the tough 'chippie' characterized by Harrigan's Maggie Murphy and the somewhat gentler girl who sings 'Danny By My Side.'"

Gilbert, pp. 215-216, gives the story of how Emma Pollock ended up in Harrigan's company. She started seeking theatre work at a young age, and had many tribulations along the way, including having her mother pull her out of a show because they costumed her in tights. When she auditioned for Harrigan, she dressed in borrowed clothes -- and someone dropped a wet towel on her and ruined her hat and hair; she was afraid of losing the part and having to return the damaged clothing. But Harrigan, who was fond of odd costumes, cast Pollock as Maggie Murphy. On pp. 216-217, Gilbert reports that "Maggie Murphy's Home" "not only stopped the show -- it is still a known song. For Emma, thereafter and wherever -- in England, the continent, South Africa, Australia, and on the battlefields of France -- sang it continuously. [Compare Kahn, p. 155, who says that Pollock's 'rendition of 'Maggie Murphy's Home' ... was so universally applauded that it was her theme song ever after.']"

"Emma, who, happily, is still alive [presumably in 1941, when she would have been about 66] and still as sprightly, now confesses that Maggie Murphy's Home actually was in Brooklyn, and that when she removed to New York, her change was sadly noted in the Brooklyn Eagle. "In her role, Emma danced a 'Challenge Jig,' and she had to do it very well, because it was necessary to the plot of Reilly and the Four Hundred. The 'Challenge Jig' had a peculiar connotation. It was an old form of program billing attached to any type of artist... and it meant the equivalent of our modern 'tops,' or 'supercolloossal.'"

Kahn, pp. 274-275: "Reilly and the Four Hundred was a smash hit. It ran for 202 straight performances that first season.... Several factors contributed to Reilly's success. The return of Harrigan to New York after his unaccustomed absence as, of course, one. Another was that John Wild... was back in the Harrigan fold. Another was the song 'Maggie Murphy's Home,' which was fetchingly rendered by Emma Pollock in her debut with the company. She was only fifteen but had got herself hired by auditioning in her older sister Evelyn's clothes. But the most talked-about aspect of the production was Harrigan's unveiling in it of a type of low-life character novel to the state -- the Tough Girl." (This was mostly Ada Lewis, but Emma also played one to a lesser degree.)

Her role as Maggie was evidently a great success, and secured Emma's place in Harrigan's company for years to come. She played the wife of the seemingly-disappeared Hogan in "The Last of the Hogans" (Franceschina, p. 203), and what sounds like a big role as the beautiful street performer daughter Nellie, the poverty-stricken daughter of former mine owner Paddy Dempsey, in "The Woolen Stocking." In "Notoriety," she played Bessie, the daughter of the retired policeman hero, Barney Dolan, played by Harrigan (Franceschina, p. 209). Even after Harrigan's company broke up and reformed when Harrigan's son Eddie died, a theatrical program in the author's possession (quoted in "Babies On Our Block) shows that, in 1895, she played Diana McFudd, the younger sister of Cordelia (McFudd) Mulligan (a role originated by Tony Hart's wife Gertie Granville; Franceschina, p. 159), in a touring production of the play "Cordelia's Aspirations." Clearly she was a performer Harrigan liked a lot.

(It wasn't universal. According to Kahn, pp. 284-285, Another young actress, Fannie Batchelder, briefly worked with Harrigan, and called Ada Lewis, Emma, Emma's sister Evelyn, and one Margery Teal by the gang name "The Racy Four," concealing their actual names but calling Emma, e.g., "The Human Fly" and Ada "The Hoodlum." Batcheler "made her Racy Four out to be ninnies of little charm and less culture. The Human Fly was depicted, for example, as childishly prone to jealous tantrums, La Sale [Teal] as as spiteful gossip, and the Hoodlum as so woefully ignorant that when an admirer presented her with some sterling silver she had been obliged sheepishly to ask Fannie Batchelder what 'sterling' meant." It is left to the reader to determine what the odds are that Lewis would have asked such a question of someone she despised. What I suspect Batchelder's story proves is that Pollock was a teenager. Well, we knew that.....)
In 1895, Richard F. Outcault created a comic strip, "Hogan's Alley," featuring "The Yellow Kid," which in turn inspired the term "yellow journalism" (see the Wikipedia entry on the "Hogan's Alley comic strip"). This name comes from the first line of the last verse of this song: "I walk through Hogan's Alley at the closing of the day"; Outcault was fond of Ned Harrigan's plays (Williams, p. 208).

The "organ in the parlor" of the chorus was probably a reed organ; Williams, p 32, says, "During the second half of the nineteenth century, the reed organ, its bellows operated by a foot pump, became popular, especially in working-class homes." - RBW

Bibliography

- Appelbaum: Stanley Appelbaum, editor, Show Songs: from The Black Crook to The Red Mill, Dover Publications, 1974
- Ewen: David Ewen, American Songwriters, H. W. Wilson, 1987
- Williams: William H. A. Williams, 'Twas Only an Irishman's Dream, University of Illinois Press, 1996

Maggie of Coleraine

DESCRIPTION: The singer praises Coleraine; it is the home of beautiful Maggie. He recalls meeting her by the Bann, and the various places he courted her. He hopes he will soon be able to meet her again.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: love courting beauty

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H657, p. 242, "Maggie of Coleraine" (1 text, 1 tune)
  Roud #9480

CROSS-REFERENCES:
  cf. "Teddy O'Neill" (tune)

File: HHH657

Maggie Pickens

DESCRIPTION: "(Maggie/Minne) Pickens on the shore, Gathering winkles off Culmore, he lifted her leg and gave a roar, What the devil ails he?" "Maggie Pickens on the shore, she had daughters three or four, Wishing she had many more...." And other short stories.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 2010 (Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman)

KEYWORDS: nonballad children

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 44, "Maggie Picken" (1 text, 1 tune); p. 249, "Maggie Picken" (1 instrumental tune, similar in shape but with slightly different timing than the song)
  Roud #2960
NOTES [35 words]: Graham lumps this with "Katie Bairdie," and it is true that they share a feeling and a stanza form. But I know of no common lyrics, and the tunes I know are different as well. I split them without hesitation. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.5
File: GrHo044

Maggie's Secret

DESCRIPTION: "Oh! many a time I am sad at heart." Boys come to court Maggie "but I tell them they needn't come wooing to me." Her secret is that she loves a sailor: "my heart is over the sea." His mother guesses her secret and approves.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1886 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 15(180a)); Edwin Wolf 2nd, _American Song Sheets, Slip Ballads, and Political Broadsides 1850-1870_, Library Company of Philadelphia, 1963, p. 92, lists two American broadsides that are probably earlier

KEYWORDS: courting love separation mother sailor

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (3 citations):

_O'Connor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland_, pp. 143-144, "Maggie's Secret" (1 text)
_Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 292, "Maggie's Secret" (1 text)
_Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1356, p. 92, "Maggie's Secret" (2 references)

Roud #12886

BROADSIDES:

_Bodleian, Harding B 15(180a), "Maggie's Secret", H. Such (London), 1863-1885; also Harding B 11(1663), Firth b.26(257), "Maggie's Secret"

File: 0Con143B

Maggie's Smile

DESCRIPTION: The singer courts Maggie. She would say "gae bide awa" but her smile said "come back again." He withstands her jeering words and finally wins her smile and heart.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1891 (Kidson-TraditionalTunes)

KEYWORDS: courting love rejection

FOUND IN: Britain(England(North))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

_Kidson-TraditionalTunes, pp. 94-96, "Maggie's Smile" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #1099

File: KiTu094

Magic Glass, The

DESCRIPTION: "I went one night with a high-priced thirst to loaf in a booze bazaar." The singer, glancing at himself in the mirror, sees a "cringing bum" -- then looks again and it's gone. The bartender says that the "Magic Glass" lets men see what they might become

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Dean-FlyingCloud)

KEYWORDS: drink warning

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

_Dean-FlyingCloud, p. 130, "The Magic Glass" (1 text)

Roud #9586

NOTES [65 words]: Dean-FlyingCloud's version ends with the bartender explaining the Magic Glass -- but one has to suspect that the full song goes on to have the singer swear off drinking. Though what "I'd* like is to know why a bartender would be so foolish as to install a glass that would scare off his customers. Obviously some people would approve -- but those people aren't going to become bartenders! - RBW

File: Dean130A
Magilligan
DESCRIPTION: The singer praises Mary and their beautiful home country of Magilligan. He recalls carving their names in a bench, and drinking together. They watch a ship sail away, but again agree never to leave Magilligan
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love home emigration
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H52a, pp. 244-245, "Magilligan" (1 text, 1 tune, the latter derived from O'Neill on the basis of Henry's statement that the tune is "The Wearing of the Green")
Roud #2965
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Wearing of the Green (I)" (tune) and references there
File: HHH052a

Magpie and the Lark
DESCRIPTION: "In a snug little field in a neighboring park, On a beautiful morning in spring, A sly magpie jack saw a pert little lark." The magpie offers to teach the lark to sing. The lark refuses; "it would most likely fail" and they would be confused about colors
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin)
KEYWORDS: bird music colors
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, p. 269, "The Magpie and the Lark" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Roud #15682
File: Pet269

Magpie, The
DESCRIPTION: "I lingered near a cottage door, And a magpie said, 'Come in, come in,' And a magpie said, 'Come in.'" He meets a girl; the magpie says to sit down, and then encourages him to court her. Her father and brother chase him out; the magpie says "Good-bye."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (Hamer-GreenGroves)
KEYWORDS: bird courting humorous abuse
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hamer-GreenGroves, pp. 34-36, "The Magpie" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1145
NOTES [41 words]: The theme of talking magpies causing trouble is fairly common; see "The Magpie's Nest" and "The Maid and the Magpie" in addition to this song. I strongly suspect that several of these songs are related, but I'm not sure which is the source. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: HaGr034

Magpie's Nest, The
DESCRIPTION: Singer praises his love, saying if he was a king he would make her queen and set her down in the "magpie's nest" -- a cottage alongside the River Shannon. He says he's never seen anyone more lovely than "the little Irish fairy in the magpie's nest."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (recorded from Aunt Jane Kelly)
LONG DESCRIPTION: Singer praises his love, saying if he was a king he would make her queen and set her down in the "magpie's nest" -- a cottage alongside the River Shannon. He says he's never seen anyone more lovely than "the little Irish fairy in the magpie's nest." Chorus: "Shiddly-idle-daddle-diddle-dadle-diddle-dum/I would l'ave you down to rest in the magpie's nest"
KEYWORDS: love beauty dancetune lyric nonballad lover
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 182, "The Magpie's Nest" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2127
RECORDINGS:
Aunt Jane Kelly "The Magpie's Nest" (on FSB01, FSB2CD)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Cuckoo's Nest (I)" (tune)
cf. "The Cuckoo's Nest (II)" (tune)
cf. "Around the Hills of Clare" (tune)
cf. "Heather Down the Moor (Among the Heather; Down the Moor)" (lyrics)
NOTES [56 words]: This shares the tune and structure with both versions of "The Cuckoo's Nest," the latter of which sometimes incorporate "dowdling" (mouth music) as here. However, "The Cuckoo's Nest" is almost inevitably bawdy or erotic, while "The Magpie's Nest" is invariably clean, so I split them. For completeness, though, better check them out. - PJS

Magpies, The

DESCRIPTION: "When Tom and Elizabeth took the farm, The bracken made their bed (x3) And quardle oodle ardle wardle doodle The magpies said." They work hard, but finally she dies and he grows senile. The farm is still there -- because the bankers can't give it away
AUTHOR: Words: Denis Glover
EARLIEST DATE: 1945 (Glover, The Wind and the Sand, according to Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ)
KEYWORDS: love home bird money humorous
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ, p. 140, "The Magpies" (1 text, 1 modern tune by Neil Colquhoun)
Colquhoun-NZ-Folksongs-SongOfAYoungCountry, p. 97, "The Magpies" (1 text, 1 modern tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Maid and the Magpie" (theme of magpies talking as events take place)

Maguire's Brae

DESCRIPTION: "Have you ever stood on the Carn street.. And viewed those hills with their limpid rills..." The singer has traveled widely, but never seen a place so fair. "Though here today in the U. S.A. I toil on a foreign strand," he wishes he were still at home
AUTHOR: Words: James O'Kane
EARLIEST DATE: 1938 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: emigration homesickness
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H747, pp. 214-215, "Maguire's Brae" (1 text, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Scarborough Settler's Lament" (theme) and references there

Mah Mammy Stole a Cow

DESCRIPTION: "Steal up, young ladies, mah mammy stole a cow (x2)." "Stole dat cow in Baltimo', mah Mammy stole a cow (x2).:" "Steal up and take you' turn." "Steal up an' make a bow." "Steal all 'roun', don' slight no one."
Mahoney (Maloney)

DESCRIPTION: The cabin boy, Tom Bones, is washed overboard of the steamer New Orleans, bound for New York. Newfoundlander Bill Maloney "dressed out in oilskins" "made a leap and saved the boy." "Five brave British sailor boys" rescued them both.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA/Leach)
KEYWORDS: rescue sea ship ordeal drowning
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
Roud #18224
RECORDINGS:
Pat Sullivan, "Mahoney (Maloney)" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
File: RcMahMal

Maid and the Horse, The DESCRIPTION: A maid walking in the cold meets three men riding. She tells one that she craves the thing that "sits between your two legs" to make her warm. He gets off his horse. She gets on his horse and rides off. He goes after her until she threatens to shoot him.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1825 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 28(83))
KEYWORDS: sex escape trick bawdy horse rake
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 214-215, "The Maid and the Horse" (1 text, 2 tunes)
Roud #1624
RECORDINGS:
Freeman Bennett, "The Maid and the Horse" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 28(83), "The Crafty Maid" ("Come listen awhile and I will sing you a song"), W. Armstrong (Liverpool), 1820-1824; also Johnson Ballads 323, Harding B 25(441), "The Crafty Maid's Policy"
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Lovely Joan" (plot)
cf. "The Broomfield Hill" [Child 43] and references there
NOTES [150 words]: There is another broadside at Bodleian as "The Crafty Maid" [Come all you lads and lasses ..."], in which a farmer's daughter is hiding a rabbit between her legs to keep it warm and a lord "buys that between her legs"; unsatisfied with the rabbit he takes her to a justice who resolves the dispute in favor of the farmer's daughter.
There is yet another broadside at Bodleian as "The Frolicsome Maiden or The Gentleman Outwitted" which combines both Crafty Maid stories: it is a cold morning; she does offer to go with him in exchange for what is between his legs; he is unsatisfied by the outcome and takes her to a justice who rules in her favor.
Roud seems to consider these all as #1624.
Cf. "Handsome Shone the Dairymaid" [Crawfurd 115] (theme) in E. B. Lyle Andrew Crawfurd's Collection of Ballads and Songs (The Scottish Text Society, Edinburgh, 1996) which is similar to "Lovely Joan." - BS
Last updated in version 2.6
File: Pea214
Maid and the Magpie, The

DESCRIPTION: The sailor goes to sea, leaving his girl and the magpie. The girl spends time with the parson, and tells the bird she prefers him. The lonely sailor hurries home; the bird reveals the truth. Neither sailor nor parson want the girl thereafter

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO)

KEYWORDS: bird infidelity sailor clergy humorous

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South)) Australia

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, pp. 44-45, "The Maid and the Magpie" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Bk 3, "Maid and the Magpie" (1 text)

Roud #1532

RECORDINGS:
Cyril Poacher, "The Maid and the Magpie" (on Voice06)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Magpies" (theme of magpies talking as events take place)

NOTES [269 words]: This apparently began as a nineteenth century theater piece; a play called "The Maid and the Magpie" was seen by none other than Charles Dodgson (Lewis Carroll); see Jenny Woolf, The Mystery of Lewis Carroll, St. Martin's Press, 2010, p. 221. Presumably this was in turn inspired by the poem "The Maid and the Magpie," credited to Charles Moreton and said to be "Founded on Facts." Moreton's poem is not this piece; it is much longer and in a different meter. There is a version available from Project Gutenberg. - RBW

I have not found a broadside but evidence that there is one is that there is a broadside parody:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(2273), "The Maid and the Dustman. A popular parody on the 'Maid & magpie'" ("Once there was a maid who was thought very shy"), unknown, n.d. The parody description: The maid's lover is a tailor; she said they'd marry when he "signed the pledge again." She "hook'd it with the dustman" when her pa goes to church. The girl talks all day to the dustman [instead of the magpie]. When the tailor is asleep the girl goes to the dustman but they are interrupted by her mother. The tailor gets drunk and returns home to find the girl gone. He complains to her parents [instead of the magpie] who tell him about the dustman. The take her to court and she puts the blame on the dustman, who disappears; the bird reveals the truth. Neither tailor nor dustman want the girl thereafter "and she's got no one to cuddle, so she sleeps by herself." - BS

The theme of talking magpies causing trouble is fairly common; see "The Magpie's Nest" and "The Magpie" in addition to this song. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: MA044

Maid and the Palmer, The [Child 21]

DESCRIPTION: A woman comes to a well, where she meets a man who asks of her a drink. She says she can offer him none because her leman/husband is away. The man tells her that she has no leman, and goes on to tell of her sins and assigns a punishment

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1750 (Percy Folio)

KEYWORDS: Jesus religious adultery

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber)) Ireland

REFERENCES (12 citations):
Child 21, "The Maid and the Palmer" (2 texts)
Bronson's (21 in addenda), "The Maid and the Palmer" (2 versions in addenda)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 21, "The Maid and the Palmer" (2 versions: #1, #2)
Buchan/Moreira-TheGlenbuchatBallads, pp. 89-90, "The Maid of Coldingham" (1 text)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 106-107, "The Maid and the Palmer" (1 text)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 99, "The Maid and the Palmer" (1 text)
Grigson-PenguinBookOfBallads 3, "The Maid and the Palmer" (1 text)
Whiting-TraditionalBritishBallads 37, "The Maid and the Palmer" (1 text)
Niles-BalladBookOfJohnJacobNiles 15, "The Maid and the Palmer" (1 text, which Niles identifies with Child 21, but the fragment is so short that it could equally be part of Child 20)

DT 21, MAIDPALMA MAIDPAL2*
Maid and the Squire, The

DESCRIPTION: A dialog between a maid and a young squire. He proposes, She ridicules him. In leaving he asks that she remember him "if ever ye in love be wounded." She replies, "If ever I in love be wounded Remember sir, I'll send you word"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan4)

LONG DESCRIPTION: The singer is approached by a young man who asks her to marry. She tells him to find someone else. He says he is 22 and has never mentioned love to another woman. She recommends he take another ten years to marry. He says if all women treat him this way he may be forty and not married. She says young men brag about how easy it is to win women's hearts. He says he is leaving and asks if he might call on her again. She says he can do as he wishes. He says "if ever ye in love be wounded Remember him that ye did despise." She replies, "If ever I in love be wounded Remember sir, I'll send you word"

KEYWORDS: courting rejection dialog

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #100, p. 2, "The Maid and the Young Squire" (1 text)

Greig/Duncan4 810, "The Maid and the Squire" (3 texts, 2 tunes)

Roud #5068

ALTERNATE TITLES:

Just As I Walked Out One Morning

File: GrD4810

Maid Freed from the Gallows, The [Child 95]

DESCRIPTION: A (woman) is about to be hanged. If she could pay her fee, she would be freed. One by one, father, brother, (and other family members) come to see her hanged, refusing to ransom her. Then her sweetheart arrives to rescue her

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1770 (Percy collection, according to Child)

KEYWORDS: execution love rescue

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland,England(North,South,West)) US(Ap,MA,MW,NE,SE,So,SW) West Indies(Bahamas,Jamaica)

REFERENCES (82 citations):
Child 95, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (11 texts, 1 tune) {Bronson's #5}

Bronson 95, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (68 versions+2 in addenda, but the last four main entries are "Gallows" [Laws L11], and some of the fragments may be also)

Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 95, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (8 versions: #1, #4, #17, #23, #33, #39.1, #49, #61)

Greig/Duncan 248, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (1 fragment)

Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 281-282, "The Prickly Bush"; Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 283, "The Prickly Brier" (1 text plus a fragment) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 498; Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 218, "Prickly Brier")

Cologne/Morrison-WiltshireFolkSongs, pp. 24-25, "The Prick' ty Bush" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #19}

Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 87, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (1 text)

Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, "The Prickle Holly Bush" (1 text, 1 tune)

Barry/Eckstorm/Smyth-BritishBalladsFromMaine pp. 206-213, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (4 texts plus assorted folktale versions)

Flanders-AncientBalladsTraditionallySungInNewEngland3, pp. 15-41, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (8 texts plus a fragment, 8 tunes, but of the texts, only "A", "B1," and "B2" are 'The Maid Freed' [Child 95]; the remaining six are "Gallows" [Laws L11])

Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales, p. 397, "(Hangman, hangman, hold the rope)" (1 text)

Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 66-67, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #54}

Randolph 24, "Hold Your Hands, Old Man" (5 texts plus a fragment, 4 tunes) {A=Bronson's #41, D=#61, E=#12, F=#50}

Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 45-47, "Hold Your Hands, Old Man" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 24E) {Bronson's #12}

Abrahams/Riddle-ASingerAndHerSongs, pp. 110-111, "Hangman on the Gallows Tree" (1 text, 1 tune)

Arnold-FolkSongsOfAlabama pp. 68-69, "The Miller's Daughter" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #56}

Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 18, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (2 texts, 1 tune) {Bronson's #28}

McIntosh-FolkSongsAndSingingGamesofIllinoisOzarks, pp. 39-41, "My Golden Ball" (1 text, 1 tune)

Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection, pp. 116-117, "Hangman" (1 text)

Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 50, "The Golden Ball" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #22}

Davis-TraditionalBalladsOfVirginia 95, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (24 texts plus a fragment, 5 tunes plus a variant entitles "Maid Freed from the Gallows," "The Hangerman's Tree, or Freed from the Gallos," "The Maid Saved," "Hangsman"; 9 more versions mentioned in Appendix A) {Bronson's #9, #26, #42, #46, #40}

Davis-MoreTraditionalBalladsOfVirginia 29, pp. 221-228, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (3 texts plus a fragment, 2 tunes; the two longest texts, AA and DD, both contain floating material, in the case of 'D' probably from "Ten Thousand Miles Away from Home (A Wild and Reckless Hobo; The Railroad Bum)"") [Laws H2])

Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 30, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (4 texts, 5 excerpts, 1 fragment, plus mention of two more, as well as one mixed text, M, probably a combination of this with "Ten Thousand Miles Away from Home (A Wild and Reckless Hobo; The Railroad Bum)"") [Laws H2])

Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 30, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (8 excerpts plus mention of 1 more, 8 tunes)

Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 15, "Maid Freed from the Gallows" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #34}

Smith-SouthCarolinaBallads, pp. 81-83, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #5}, with excerpts from several more versions on the following pages; also p. 87, "(The Hangman's Tree)" (1 text plus some excerpts); p. 88, "The Hangman's Tree" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #48}; pp. 88-89, "(no title)" (1 text plus recitation, 1 tune) {Bronson's #49}; pp. 91-92, "(The Golden Ball)" (1 text, partly prose); p. 93, "The Golden Ball" (1 text, a singing game); #X, pp. 144-147, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (2 texts, 1 tune, plus mention of 3 more) {Bronson's #23}

Joyner-FolkSongInSouthCarolina, p. 27, "The Scarlet Tree" (1 text)

Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #163, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (4 texts, 1 tune, although the "D" text appears to be a mix of two songs) {Bronson's #16}
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, pp. 35-42, (no general title; one version is listed as "Hangman, Slack on the Line") (3 texts plus 3 excerpts, 1 tune) {Bronson's #10},

Hudson-FolksongsOfMississippi 17, pp. 111-114, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (4 texts plus an excerpt and mention of 1 more; the "D" text is mixed with floating verses from prison songs),

Hudson-FolkTunesFromMississippi 19, "The Hangman's Song" (1 fragment, 1 tune) {Bronson's #52},

Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 284, (no title) (1 text),

Scarborough-ASongCatcherInSouthernMountains, pp. 196-200, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (2 texts plus an excerpt, with local titles "The Hangman's Son" and "Hangman, Hold Your Rope"; 2 tunes on pp. 408-409) {Bronson's #37, #38},

Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 27A, "The Hangman Tree"; 27B, "The Raspel Pole" (1 text plus 2 tunes),

Owens-TexasFolkSongs-1ed, pp. 45-47, "The Hangman's Rope" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #7},

Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, pp. 26-27, "The Hangman's Rope" (1 text, 1 tune), Brewster-BalladsAndSongsOfIndiana 17, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (1 text), List-SingingAboutIt-FolkSongsInSouthernIndiana, pp. 298-302, "The Hangman Song" (1 text, 1 tune),

Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 295-300, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (4 texts),

Leach-HeritageBookOfBallads, pp. 24-28, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows," "The Golden Ball" (1 text),

Wyman/Brockway-LonesomeSongs-KentuckyMountains-Vol1, p. 44, "The Hangman's Song" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #35},

Fusion-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands, pp. 113-114, "The Hangman's Song" (1 text, with an introductory verse related to "In the Pines," ending "I have done no hanging crime"),

Cambiaire-EastTennesseeWestVirginiaMountainBallads, pp. 15-16, "The Hangman's Song" (1 text),

Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol1, pp. 85-87, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (1 text, 1 tune),

Thomas-DevilsDitties, pp. 164-165, "Ropesman" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #60},

Friedman-Viking/PenguinBookOfFolkBallads, p. 131, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (4 texts), Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 105, "Hang Man" (1 text, 1 tune),

McNeil-SouthernFolkBalladsVol1, pp. 86-87, "Jimmy Loud"; pp. 88-90, "Hangman" (2 texts, 2 tunes),

Roberts-SangBranchSettlers, #6, "Hangman" (1 text, 1 tune),

Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 28, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (11 texts, most of which appear to be fragments though it's often hard to tell with this song, 11 tunes) {Bronson's #30, #33, #9, #42, #6, #25, #58, #31, #39, #32, #15},

Sharp-OneHundredEnglishFolkSongs 17, "The Briery Bush" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #49},

Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 24, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows, or The Briery Bush" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #49},

Wells-TheBalladTree, pp. 115-116, "The Hangman" (1 text, 1 tune),

Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs, pp. 112-113, "The Prickly Bush" (2 texts, 1 tune),

Reeves/Sharp-TheldiomOfThePeople 61, "Maid Freed from the Gallows" (2 texts),

Niles-BalladBookOfJohnJacobNiles 39, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (2 texts, 2 tunes),

Sharp/Karpeles-EightyEnglishFolkSongs 14, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #30},

Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 72, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #23}; p. 385, "Hangman" (1 short text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #64},

Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 14-15, "The Sycamore Tree"; pp. 207-208, "Hangman, Slack on the Line" (2 texts, 2 tunes),

Copper-SongsAndSouthernBreezes, pp. 282-383, "Prickle-holly Bush" (1 text, 1 tune),

Ritchie-SingingFamilyOfTheCumberlands, pp. 139-141, "[Hangman, Slack Up Your Rope]" (2 texts, 2 tunes) {second tune is Bronson's #36, with differences},

Ritchie-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 27, "The Hangman Song" (1 text, 1 tune) {approximately Bronson's #36, but Bronson's transcription, from recording, is noticeably different},

Botkin-TreasuryOfAmericanFolklore, pp. 822-824, "The Hangman's Tree" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #23},

Whiting-TraditionalBritishBallads 5, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows (The Hangman's Tree)" (1 text), Pound-AmericanBalladsAndSongs, 13, pp. 31-33, "The Hangman's Song" (1 text).

Cox-FolkSongsSouth 18, "The Maid Freed from the Gallows" (7 texts)
Cox/Hercog/Halpert/Boswell-WVirginia-A, #9, pp. 38-39, "Slack Your Rope" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #27}
Bush-FSoCenWestVirginiaVol3, pp. 95-97, "Ropeman" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gainer-FolkSongsFromTheWestVirginiaHills, pp. 64-65, "The Gallows Tree" (1 text, 1 tune)
Boette-SingaHipsyDoodle, p. 15, "Rop'ry" (1 text, 1 tune)
Abrahams/Foss-AngloAmericanFolksongStyle, pp. 41-42 "Hangman, Hangman" (1 text, 1 tune)
Rorrer-RamblingBlues-LifeAndSongsOfCharliePoole, p. 74, "The Highwayman" (1 text, with a significant mixture of unrelated material from songs such as "The Roving Gambler"); p. 80, "Hangman, Hangman, Slack the Rope" (1 text, a fairly normal American variant)
Jekyll-JamaicanSongAndStory 18, "Saylan" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #63}
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 69-71, "The Hangman"; "Gallows Pole" (2 texts, the first "modernized" by Darling)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 211, "The Gallows Pole" (1 text)
DT 95, HANGMN1* HANGMAN2*
ADDITIONAL: Eleanor Long, _"The Maid" and "The Hangman": Myth and Tradition in a Popular Ballad_. Folklore Studies 21, University of California Press, 1971 (a catalog of 254 different texts, although only a few are printed, often in excerpts; 12 tunes plus references to many more)
Moses Asch and Alan Lomax, Editors, _The Leadbelly Songbook_. Oak, 1962, p. 52, "Gallis (Gallows) Pole" (1 text, 1 tune)

Martha W Beckwith, "The English Ballad in Jamaica: a Note Upon the Origin of the Ballad Form" in _Publications of the Modern Language Association_ [PMLA], Vol. XXXIX, No. 2 (Jun 1924 (available online by JSTOR)), #5 pp. 475-476, "Maid Freed From the Gallows" (1 text)

Elsie Clews Parsons, Folk-Tales of Andros Island Bahamas (Lancaster: American Folk-Lore Society, 1918 ("Digitized by Internet Archive")), #104, pp. 152-154, "The Maid Freed From the Gallows" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #144

RECORDINGS:
James "Iron Head" Baker, "Young Maid Saved from the Gallows" (AFS 204 A2, 1934)
Bentley Ball, "Gallows Tree" (Columbia A3084, 1920)
Roy Harvey, Jess Johnston & the West Virginia Ramblers, "John Hardy Blues" (Champion 16281, 1931; on StuffDreams1) [see NOTES]
Fred Hewett, "The Prickle Holly-Bush" (on Voice03)
Harry Jackson, "The Hangman's Song" (on HJackson01) (in this version the true love pays the hangman to ensure that the hanging will take place)

Lead Belly, "The Gallis Pole" (Musicraft 227, rec. 1939)
A. L. Lloyd, "The Prickly Bush" (on ESFB1, ESFB2)
Walter Lucas & the people of Sixpenny Handley, Dorset, "The Prickle Holly Bush" (on Lomax41, LomaxCD1741) {Bronson's #20}
[Asa] Martin & [Bob] Roberts, "Hang Down Your Head and Cry" (Conqueror 8207, 1933) [see NOTES]

Charlie Poole and the North Carolina Ramblers, "The Highwayman" (a heavily modified version; Columbia 15160-D, 1926; on CPoole03); "Hangman, Hangman, Slack the Rope" (a more normal version; Columbia 15385-D, 1929; rec. 1928)
Almeda Riddle, "Hangman Tree" (on LomaxCD1705)
Jean Ritchie, "Hangman" (on JRitchie01) {Bronson's #36?}
Julia Scaddan, "The Prickelly Bush [The Pricketty Bush]" (on FSB4, FSBBAL1)
Sarah Anne Tuck, "The Pricketty Bush (The Maid Freed from the Gallows)" (on FSBBAL1)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Golden Ball
The Prickilie Bush
The Gallows Pole
Granny and the Golden Ball

NOTES [472 words]: This very popular ballad is identical in plot with "Gallows" [Laws L11], and lumping editors will lump them; individual collections should be checked carefully.
Scarborough notes that southern Blacks turned this song into drama -- in a rather depressing way:
The magical ball could be used to turn a Black girl into a pretty White.
The "golden ball" of some versions appears to have a complex history. Katherine Briggs, British Folktales (originally published in 1970 as A Dictionary of British Folk-Tales), revised 1977 (I use the 1977 Pantheon paperback edition), pp. 28-31, has a tale which is clearly a version of Grimm #4, "A Tale About the Boy Who Went Forth to Learn What Fear Was," in which the boy seeks a golden ball which his love has lost. She is to be hung for the loss; he arrives just in time to save her. This is evidently a conflation of two separate tales; Briggs, p. 31, points to Tristram E. Coffin's article "The Golden Ball and the Hangman's Tree," on pp. 23-28 of Folklore International (1967) for an explanation of how they were combined.
The Martin & Roberts recording is a weird mishmosh: one verse that sounds like it's from the "Ten Thousand Miles Away from Home" family, one from this song, and one more or less from "Roving Gambler." I put it here because that middle verse is most explicitly from here, whereas the others are vaguer.
The Roy Harvey, recording, meanwhile, is equally weird; the tune is from "John Hardy," all right, but the lyrics are "Maid Freed from the Gallows." Don't ask me what's going on. - PJS
Jekyll-JamaicanSongAndStory's "Saylan" is classified by Jekyll as an "Annancy" story. It is a cante fable following the Ashanti (West African) tradition: A stepmother and her daughter frame her husband's daughter -- apparently named "Saylan" -- for the death of a horse she has been hired to care for. The horse's owner, a sailor, takes her to town to hang her. She sings "Sister, you bring me some silver" and the answer is "No, my child, I bring you none." Her brother has brought no gold. But her lover has brought both silver and gold and sings "Yes, my dear, I bring you some. I come to town to see you save, save you mus' be saved."

Maid from the Carn Brae, The
DESCRIPTION: The singer recalls the other girls described in songs -- the girl in the Galway shawl, the girl from the County, Down, etc. -- "she was queen alone, The maid from the Carn Brae."
No amount of searching will reveal another such girl
AUTHOR: James O'Kane
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: beauty music
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
 Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H704, p. 241, "The Maid from the Carn Brae" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9478
NOTES [19 words]: Curiously, the singer in this song makes no attempt to court the girl; he just describes her as irresistible. - RBW
File: HHH704

Maid from the County Tyrone, The
DESCRIPTION: Far from the city live Michael Murphy and his beautiful daughter. The singer praises her beauty at great length, and desires to wed her though she is only a farmer's daughter. If she agrees to marry, he will cease rambling and live in the country with her
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love courting beauty home
Maid from Tidehead, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer hears a young lumberjack tell how "I long once again for the Maid from Tidehead." He describes their parting and decides to return to Restigouche: "No more will I roam from the Maid of Tidehead"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1948 (Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi)

KEYWORDS: love separation logger reunion

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 31, "The Maid from Tidehead" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST MaWi031 (Partial)
Roud #9187

NOTES [20 words]: The Restigouche River is in the central Miramichi area of New Brunswick. Tide Head is on that river near Chaleur Bay. - BS.

File: MaWi031

Maid Gaed to the Mill, The

DESCRIPTION: "The maid's gaed to the mill by night, sae wanton... That she should hae her corn ground, mill and multure free." The miller's man obliges her. When she has a child "Her mother baid her cast it oot." "Her faither baid her keep it in," and she does.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1776 (Herd)

KEYWORDS: sex childbirth bastard mother father miller money

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
DT, MAIDMILL*
Greig/Duncan7 1436, "The Miller and the Maid" (3 texts, 2 tunes)
ADDITIONAL: _Sing Out_ magazine, Volume 39, #4 (1995), p, 38, "The Maid Gaed Tae the Mill" (1 text, 1 tune, Ewan MacColl's version, supposedly from his father)
David Herd, editor, Ancient and Modern Scottish Songs, Heroic Ballads, etc. (Edinburgh, 1870 (reprint of 1776)), Vol II, pp. 148-149, "The Maid Gaed to the Mill"
Roud #2575

RECORDINGS:
Ewan MacColl and Peggy Seeger, "The Maid Gaed to the Mill" (on SCMacCollSeeger01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "It Was a Mayde of Brenten Arse" (theme: a miller trading work for sex)
cf. "The Miller and the Lass" (theme: sex and a miller; grinding corn as the metaphor)
cf. "Miller Tae My Trade" (theme: sex and a miller)
cf. "The Miller o' Drone" (theme: sex and a miller; grinding corn as the metaphor)
cf. "The Besom Maker" (theme: sex and a miller; grinding corn as the metaphor)

NOTES [143 words]: The wantonness of millers is proverbial -- and songs of a miller trading work for sex is ancient. There is a song from the sixteenth century about it, indexed as "It Was a Mayde of Brenten Arse."

Chaucer played with the theme indirectly in "The Reeve's Tale, plus there is his description of his miller (see Larry D. Benson, general editor, _The Riverside Chaucer_, third edition, Houghton Mifflin, 1987 (based on F. N. Robinson, _The Works of Geoffrey Chaucer_, which is considered to be the first and second editions of this work), p. 32; The General Prologue, lines 560-562):

He waas a jangler and a goliardeys,
And that was moost of synne and harlotries.
Wel koude he stelen corn and tollen thries...

i.e.
He was a teller of bawdy stories and a buffoon
And that was most of sin and obscenity/harlotry.
Well could he steal corn and take his toll thrice. - RBW

Maid in Sorrow, The (Short Jacket) [Laws N12]

DESCRIPTION: A girl dresses as a sailor and goes to sea to seek her true love. The captain finds her attractive and wishes she were a girl. She puts him off, pointing out that there are handsome girls ashore. Only as she is leaving the ship does she reveal her sex

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland)
KEYWORDS: cross-dressing ship sea
FOUND IN: US(MA,MW,NE) Canada(Mar,Newf) Ireland
REFERENCES (8 citations):
Laws N12, "The Maid in Sorrow (Short Jacket)"
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 69, "I Am a Maid That Sleeps in Love" (1 text, 2 tunes)
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 46, "Short Jacket" (1 text, 1 tune)
Peacock, pp. 327-328, "Blue Jacket and White Trousers" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 78, "A Maid I Am In Love" (1 text, 1 tune)
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 1, "Cabin Boy"; 48, "Cabin Boy" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 164, "The Maid in Sorrow" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 444, SHORTJKT* SHORTJK2*
Roud #231
RECORDINGS:
Elizabeth Cronin, "I Am a Maid That Sleeps in Love" (on IRECronin01)
Charlotte Decker, "Blue Jacket and White Trousers" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
A. L. Lloyd, "Short Jacket and White Trousers" (on Lloyd2, Lloyd3)
Mrs. Stan Marshall, "Maid I Am in Love" (on MRHCreighton)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
A Maid That's Deep in Love
NOTES [13 words]: Elizabeth Cronin sings her version to the tune of "The Lowlands of Holland." - BS

Maid of Aghadowey, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer recalls his time by the Banks of the Ban, where he met a beautiful girl. Her parents are "dead against me," but he begs her to be true to him, and says that he would give her all his riches if he had any

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love courting separation father mother
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H673, p. 429, "The Maid of Aghadowey" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7958
CROSS-REFERENCES:
NOTES [59 words]: This song is similar in plot to Laws O2, "The Banks of the Bann," and also takes place by the Bann. Some have tentatively equated the songs. But songs of parents opposing lovers are common, and songs set by the Bann are common; there is no reason there shouldn't be two such. There is no lyrical similarity that I can see. Different songs, in my book. - RBW

File: HHH673
Maid of Altaveedan, The

DESCRIPTION: "I met her on the brow of Altaveedon Hill, The lambs were calling after her to stay there." He describes the hills and her, saying "There's a head of gold far lovelier than yon hill." Her beauty has enraptured the singer; he will wander no more

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love beauty
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H603, p. 239, "The Maid of Altaveedan" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9474
File: HHH603

Maid of Athens

DESCRIPTION: "Maid of Athens, ere we part, Give oh give [me] back my heart, Or, since that has left my breast, Keep it now and take the rest." "Then hear my vows before I go, My life, my soul, I love you."

AUTHOR: Words: George Gordon, Lord Byron
EARLIEST DATE: 1810 (text; the many musical settings came later)
KEYWORDS: love travel separation nonballad
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 189, "Maid of Athens" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11315

Maid of Ballydoo, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer meets a maid. He asks if she were Helen, or Aurora, or "Flo the queen of May." He takes her to Hilltown and gets her drunk so that "she soon forgot the vows she made." He recalls now "when I first composed these verses" sitting at his loom.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1976 (OBoyle-TheIrishSongTradition)
KEYWORDS: seduction weaving drink
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
  OBoyle-TheIrishSongTradition 15, "The Maid of Ballydoo" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #3477
NOTES [70 words]: O Boyle: "Ballydoo is a small townland between Hilltown and Mayobridge [in County Down]...." - BS
I have a recording of this made by David Hammond and released on "Irish Folk Songs: The Clancy
Maid of Ballyhaunis, The
DESCRIPTION: The singer courts Mary, saying that her beauty has ensnared him. He begs her to love him, but notes that his father has told him they may not marry. He asks her to come away with him "to the land of ships," where they will be happy
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1831 (Hardiman _Irish Minstrelsy,_ according to OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads)
KEYWORDS: love courting father
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H483, p. 427, "The Maid of Ballyhaunis" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 45, "Mary of Ballyhaunis" (1 text, 1 tune)
O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 157, "Maid of Ballyhaunis" (1 text)
Roud #7960
NOTES [23 words]: This strikes me as far too intricate to be a genuine traditional song; the evidence strongly implies that it originated in a broadside. - RBW
File: HHH483

Maid of Ballymore, The
DESCRIPTION: Markie Bawn loves the heiress "maid of Ballymore." If he wants to marry, she says, he must have her parents' consent. He puts on his shoes, has her mother's consent, and they marry. "A happier couple were never saw before"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1978 (recording, Mary Ann Carolan)
KEYWORDS: courting marriage mother
FOUND IN: Ireland
Roud #2991
RECORDINGS:
Mary Ann Carolan, "The Maid of Ballymore" (on Voice06)
NOTES [5 words]: Ballymore is in County Kerry. - BS
File: RcMaiBal

Maid of Belfast Town, The
DESCRIPTION: "In Belfast town of high renown, There lives a comely maid." The singer approaches her and asks her to come away with him. She rejects him because of a vow made seven years before. Now, "each night I dream, rave and complain" because she refused him.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1826 (according to Leyden-BelfastCityOfSong)
KEYWORDS: courting rejection separation
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Leyden-BelfastCityOfSong 26, "The Maid of Belfast Town" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #V2930
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 25(1193)[some words in last verse illegible], "The Maid of Belfast" ("In Belfast town of high renown there li[jives a comely maid"); J. Pitts (London), 1819-1844; also Harding B 11(2279), "The Maid of Belfast"; Harding B 11(337), "The Belfast Maid"
NOTES [230 words]: Among other classic [Roman] references here: "Diana fair cannot compare, Or Venus from the tide, Or Dido sure that virgin pure, That for Aeneas died ...." See the notes to "Sheila Nee Iyer" for some traits of the "hedge school master" school of Irish ballad writing. - BS
Someday, someone should do a study on why Diana (Greek Artemis) became so noted for beauty in British tales (see, e.g., "The Tan-Yard Side" [Laws M28], "The Beaver Brig," and "The Fair of Balamina"). She was not one of the three goddesses who competed for the title of "the Fairest" in the Judgment of Paris, that was contested between Hera (Roman Juno), Aphrodite (Roman Venus), and Athena (Roman Minerva). That contest of course was won by Aphrodite, leading to the Trojan War. Not every account says that Aphrodite was born of the sea-foam; Homer simply calls her the daughter of Zeus and Dione. But Hesiod tells of her birth from the sea-foam after the gonads of Ouranos were cast into the ocean after his castration by his son Chronos (Hesiod, Theogony, lines 185-195); indeed, the name "Aphrodite" is in these lines falsely equated with Greek "aphros," "foam.

Aphrodite was of course the mother of Aeneas, which lead smoothly into the story of the latter, and his betrayal of Dido, which is a major theme of Virgil's Aeneid, which I would assume is the major source for most of the material here. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.1
File: Leyd026

Maid of Bonnie Strathyre, The
DESCRIPTION: The singer wants nothing better "than to herd the fine cattle on bonnie Strathyre" with "Mary, the pride of Strathyre." He dances with Mary, and Flora with Colin. Others can go to the lowlands, or soldier far away, but he'll stay home with Mary
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1988 (McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen)
KEYWORDS: love farming dancing Scotland nonballad animal
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen 53, "The Maid of Bonnie Strathyre" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [45 words]: McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen: "The song originates in the beautiful vale of Strathyre in Perthshire.... It would seem to be a very localised ballad and it must have been imported by migratory workers who traversed between Inshieowen and Scotland." - BS
File: McB053

Maid of Burndennet, The
DESCRIPTION: "Oh, fair (are the) vales of (my) own native soil," particularly Burndennet, where a beautiful girl lives. The singer praises her beauty and describes their courting. Though their rivals sneer, their love will emerge victorious
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love courting beauty
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H96a+b, pp. 230-231, "The Maid of Burndennett" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Roud #7982
NOTES [69 words]: Curiously, although Sam Henry lists only one source for this song, he preserved two texts -- each of four verses, but only two and a half verses in common, with a different order, and with substantial differences even in the common material. The differences are just what one would expect from oral tradition -- but with only one listed source, and no other versions known, one must suspect editorial tampering. - RBW
File: HHH096

Maid of Castle Craigh, The DESCRIPTION: When the singer left Ireland to fight in the wars he had loved his "Maid of Castle Craigh" but thought she did not love him. Somehow, in the three years passed, he learned "that I had won thy gentle heart." The war is over and he has returned to her.

Maid of Craigienorn, The

_DESCRIPTION:_ The singer praises the Maid of Craigienorn, whom he sees as he rambles. He begs her to come away. She refuses; she has another love and will not leave her parents. He says her love has abandoned her. The ending is confused

Maid of Croaghmore, The

_DESCRIPTION:_ The well-born young man falls in love with the maid of Croaghmore. He describes her beauty, says he would make her queen if he were king, and promises to serve for her hand as Jacob served Laban. Her parents say she is too young

Maid of Culmore, The

_DESCRIPTION:_ The singer praises the harbour and women of Culmore. He recalls the girl he loved, who cried but "sailed down Lough Foyle and away from Culmore." He wishes a storm would bring her back. He will follow her and seek her in America.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love separation ship emigration
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H687, p. 302, "The Maids of Culmore" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2493
File: HHH687

Maid of Dunmore, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer meets a maid whose sweetheart is fighting the French with Nelson. He asks her to leave Dunmore and live with him in Ireland. She refuses. He "picked up my alls and left for Ireland, And left that fair maid in Dunmore"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Dean-FlyingCloud)
KEYWORDS: love sailor war separation courting rejection Ireland
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar) US(MW)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 83, "The Maid of Dunmore" (1 text, 1 tune)
Dean-FlyingCloud, pp. 47-48, "The Lass of Dunmore" (1 text)
ST MaWi083 (Partial)
Roud #9177 and 3668
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Lass of Dunmore
NOTES [38 words]: This hits so many familiar themes that it sounds like it ought to be a version of something else (compare, e.g., "The Plains of Waterloo (I)" [Laws N32] and "The Banks of Clyde (I)"") -- but I can't locate a true parallel. - RBW.
File: MaWi083

Maid of Dunysheil

DESCRIPTION: The singer praises Dunyshiel, "the place where my true love does dwell." He recalls meeting her at Rasharkin Fair. He must leave for Nova Scotia, but as long as he is away, "my heart shall be with the Maid of Dunyshiel."

AUTHOR: Paddy McGuckian
EARLIEST DATE: 1934 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love courting emigration separation
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H530, p. 298, "The Maid of Dunysheil" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6894
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Erin's Flowery Vale (The Irish Girl's Lament)" [Laws O29] (plot) and references there
File: HHH530

Maid of Erin, The

DESCRIPTION: "My thoughts delight to wander Upon a distant shore, Where lovely, fair, and tender Is she whom I adore... The lovely maid of Erin, Who sweetly sang to me." If he were a monarch, she would be his queen. The seas separate them; he hope to see her in heaven.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1847 (Journal of the Cortes)
KEYWORDS: love separation sailor beauty music
FOUND IN:
Maid of Erin's Isle, The

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, the sun does set down in the west when his daily journey's o'er.... With ruby wine I'll fill my glass... And I'll drink a health to my sweetheart, she's the maid of Erin's isle." He praises Mary's beauty, and vows to love her as long as he lives

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love beauty nonballad wine
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
  - Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H57b, p. 228, "The Maid of Erin's Isle" (1 text, 1 tune)
  - Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 46, "The Maid of Erin's Isla" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7978
BROADSIDES:
File: HHH057b

Maid of Fainey, The

DESCRIPTION: "There was a maid of (Fainey/Marlborough/etc.), of youth and beauty bright, Who had scores of sweethearts to court her day and night...." She loves her father's servant. They break a ring, then he flees. Her father threatens him. The end is confused

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Cologne/Morrison-WiltshireFolkSongs)
KEYWORDS: brokentoken courting love father separation
FOUND IN: Australia Britain(England(West))
REFERENCES (4 citations):
  - Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, pp. 167-168, "The Maid of Fainey" (1 text, 1 tune)
  - Scott-ACollectorsNotebook-31TraditionalSongs, p. 23, "The Maid of Fainey" (1 text, 1 tune)
  - Cologne/Morrison-WiltshireFolkSongs, pp. 60-61, "In the Town of Marlborough" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, MAIDAIF
Roud #1417
File: MA167

Maid of Faughan Vale, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer meets a beautiful girl near Faughan Vale. He asks her about the road, and then admits to being besotted with her. She tells him she is engaged to another, and they will soon sail for America. He laments his fate

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: beauty courting rejection emigration
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
  - Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H167, p. 369, "The Maid of Faughan Vale" (1 text, 1 tune)
  - Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 25, "Faughanvale" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6885
File: HHH167
Maid of Lismore, The
DESCRIPTION: Singer meets Kathy from Lismore, going to sell turkeys at Dungarvan. She pays for drinks. He claims to be rich. They sleep until the market closed. The price for turkeys falls. Now he claims poverty. She is ruined and would have him "hung or transported"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1886 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(2283))
KEYWORDS: seduction lie drink commerce poverty bird food
FOUND IN: Ireland
Roud #9284
RECORDINGS:
Martin Reidy, "Lismore Turkeys" (on IRClare01)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(2283), "The Maid of Lismore" ("One day as I chanced to go roving"), H. Such (London), 1863-1885; also 2806 b.9(111), 2806 c.8(187), 2806 c.8(257)[some words illegible], 2806 c.15(12)[some words illegible], 2806 b.11(135), "The Maid of Lismore"
NOTES [33 words]: The places mentioned -- Lismore, Dungarvin and Cappoquin (where they stopped) -- are in County Waterford. It's about three miles from Lismore to Cappoquin, and about 11 miles farther to Dungarvan. - BS
File: RcMaLism

Maid of Magheracloon, The
DESCRIPTION: The singer complains that the man who courted her on the hills of Magheracloon, "behind yon hawthorn tree," no longer courts her. "Oh he's not to blame, the fault's my own ... I gave my love to another young man." Now she is broken-hearted.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1970 (Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster)
KEYWORDS: courting infidelity rejection love
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster 21, "The Maid of Magheracloon" (1 text, 1 tune)
Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday 6, pp. 9, 102, 157, "The Maid of Magheracloon" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2486
NOTES [24 words]: Magheracloon is a parish in County Monaghan.
Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday: "The song seems to be very well known in Co. Fermanagh." - BS
File: MorU021

Maid of Monterrey
DESCRIPTION: A senorita comforts the fallen Americans on the field of Monterrey. "Although she loved her nation And prayed that it might live Yet for a dying foeman She had a prayer to give"
AUTHOR: John H. Hewitt (1801-1890) (source: sheet music published 1851 by F. D. Benteen)
EARLIEST DATE: 1851 (sheet music)
KEYWORDS: battle mercy death Mexico soldier
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sept 20-24, 1846 - Battle of Monterrey (part of the Mexican War). General Zachary Taylor captures the city, but the fight is bloody
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Thompson-APioneerSongster 55, "Maid of Monterrey" (1 text)
Roud #2828
BROADSIDES:
LOCSheet, sm1851.520180, "The Maid of Monterey" F. D. Benteen (Baltimore), 1851
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Field of Monterey" (subject)
File: THP055
Maid of Mourne Shore (I), The

DESCRIPTION: The singer asks if he will ever again see the region of Mourne. He goes to his sweetheart, and begs her to love him lest he go over the sea. She says she loves a sailor and will remain true to him. The singer sadly prepares to emigrate.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: love rejection sailor emigration

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H34b (+tune in H27a), pp. 371-372, "The Maid of Mourne Shore" (1 text, 1 tune)
Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 50, "The Murlough Shore" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT, MOURNESH*

Roud #2946

RECORDINGS:
Robert Cinnamond, "The Maids of Mourne Shore" (on IRRCinnamond03)
Martin Reidy, "Maid of Moorlough Shore" (on IRClare01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Foggy Dew" (II) (version on IRClare01) (tune)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Banks of Moorlough Shore
The Moorlough Shore
The Mourn Shore

File: HHH034b

Maid of Mourne Shore (II)

DESCRIPTION: The singer meets a young girl on the Mourne strand. She says she is too young to marry, but he seduces her. She asks if he will marry her but he says he is too young to marry now, but if he returns to the Mourne strand he'll marry her.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1934 (Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople)

KEYWORDS: courting seduction rejection rambling

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H 564, pp. 344-345, "The Banks of Mourne Shore" (1 text, 1 tune)
Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 47, "The Maid of Mourne Shore" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #5282

RECORDINGS:
Roisin White, "Maid of Mourne Shore" (on IRRWhite01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Paddle the Road With Me" (theme)

NOTES [41 words]: As in "Paddle the Road With Me" the question is "will you pad the road with me?" In "Maid of Mourne Shore" the singer asks the question before the seduction and the maid asks it afterwards. There is no afterwards in "Paddle the Road With Me." - BS

Last updated in version 3.5

File: HHH564bb

Maid of Newfoundland, The

DESCRIPTION: The beauties of the maid are compared with the flowers, jewels, women of other lands, etc. The singer tells us that he met her in Labrador and will go far away if he cannot have her.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Murphy, Songs of Our Land, Old Home Week Souvenir)

KEYWORDS: love beauty exile
Maid of Prairie Du Chien, The
DESCRIPTION: The singer bids farewell, noting "There's nothing doth my footsteps detain But the beautiful maid of Prairie du Chien." He offers marriage; she rejects him. He hopes she will turn to him "when lovers get scarce." He wishes he were a soldier far away
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)
KEYWORDS: love rejection
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, p. 201, "The Maid of Prairie Du Chien" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 430-431, "The Maid of Prairie du Chien" (1 text)
Roud #7947
NOTES [150 words]: Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety notes, correctly, that Prairie du Chien is in southwestern Wisconsin, where the Wisconsin River joins the Upper Mississippi. But he fails to note that it was the site of Fort Crawford, founded in 1816, which at the time was the northwesternmost point of functional United States control of the Midwest (to be superseded in 1819 by the founding of Camp New Hope, which eventually was moved to the site of Fort Snelling at the confluence of the Minnesota and Mississippi Rivers). If Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety's informant was correct about when he learned it, the song must have dated back to at least 1850 or so. In that case, it seems quite likely that the singer was intended to be a soldier at Fort Crawford; the girl may have been a local Indian, though by 1850 there were a fair number of Europeans in the area. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.7
File: Beld201

Maid of Seventeen, The
DESCRIPTION: The singer steps up to a beautiful girl and says that she entices him. She answers that she is only seventeen, and knows nothing of courting. He offers her a lesson in the subject. She says he should not visit her; she will return in a week
Maid of Sweet Gurteen, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer tells the praises of the beautiful Maid of Gorteen. His father opposes the match; she is only a serving girl. The father locks her up; when the singer still professes his love, he has the girl sent away. The ending is confused

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1863 (broadside, Harding B 11(2292))
KEYWORDS: love separation father beauty
FOUND IN: Ireland Canada(Mar,Newf,Ont)
REFERENCES (6 citations):
- Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H594, p. 430, "The Maid of Sweet Gorteen" (1 text, 1 tune)
- OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 22, "The Maid of Sweet Gurteen" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Peacock, pp. 375-376, "The Maid of Sweet Gartheen" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 85, "The Maid of Sweet Gartheen" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Vikár/Panagapka-SongsNorthWoodsSungByOJAbbott 20, "The Maid of Sweet Gurteen" (1 text, 1 tune)
- O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 31, "The Maid of Sweet Gorteen" (1 text)
ST HHH594 (Partial)
Roud #3025
RECORDINGS:
- Mrs. Mary Ann Galpin, "The Maid of Sweet Kartine" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
- John Kehoe, "Maid of Sweet Kartine" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
- Will O'Brien, "Sweet Gertie" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Harding B 11(2292), "Maid of Sweet Gortein," H. Such (London), 1849-1862; also 2806 b.11(146), "Maid of Sweet Gorteen"; 2806 b.11(271), Harding B 11(2721), "The Maid of Sweet Gorteen"; 2806 c.8(263), Harding B 11(2290), Harding B 11(2291), 2806 c.15(200)[many illegible words], 2806 b.9(277), 2806 b.9(234), Harding B 19(39), "The Maid of Sweet Gurteen"
CROSS-REFERENCES:
NOTES [99 words]: Child would have liked this; the plot is "The Suffolk Miracle" ("The Holland Handkerchief"), minus that ghost he so despised. It's not clear how this song is supposed to end; the Sam Henry texts gives hints that the lovers would reunite, but they never do. Peacock's version has a clear stopping point ("So now my song is ended"), but again, no resolution; it leaves the singer wandering, seemingly between England and Ireland, still coming back to where he found her. Similarly Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi, save that he is in Florida. And O. J. Abbott's version has him in Flower Hill. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.1
File: HHH594

Maid of Tardree, The

DESCRIPTION: In this confused song, the singer falls in love with a girl, who also says she loves him. But then he falls in love with another girl. But his "first expectations were blighted." He prepares to emigrate
Maid of the Mill, The

DESCRIPTION: Will has "kist and ... prattled with fifty fair maids" but prefers the maid of the mill to Phebe. Phebe says, "Young Harry's the lad for me." They describe their heartthrobs: "Her cheeks like the blossoms in May ..." "His cheeks are as red as a rose ..."

AUTHOR: Frances Brooke (1724-1789, per "Frances Brooke" in Wikipedia) (source: _British Drama_)

EARLIEST DATE: 1783 (_Rosina_ performed in Covent Garden, according to _British Drama_)

KEYWORDS: courting beauty dialog nonballad rake

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 184, "The Maid of the Mill" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 209)
- ADDITIONAL: Mrs Frances Brooke, "Rosina," in _British Drama_; a Collection of the Most Esteemed Tragedies, Comedies, Operas and Farces in the English Language_ (Philadelphia, 1832 ("Digitized by Google")) Vol. I, Act I, Sc. 1, p. 243, ("I've kiss'd and I've prattled to fifty fair maids") (1 text)
- Roud #1276

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Johnson Ballads 907, "The Maid of the Mill" ("I've kist and I've prattled with fifty fair maids"), J. Pitts (London), 1819-1844; also Firth c.18(48), "Maid of the Mill"

NOTES [101 words]: The description follows Rosina, in which William wants the maid of the mill, who is not Phebe; Phebe decides Will is too fickle and prefers Harry. In broadside Bodleian Johnson Ballads 907 Will and Phebe are unnamed; as a result, it appears to be a dialog between two lovers, Harry and the maid. The Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames text has two verses; the first is built from the last line of the broadside and the second changes the sex in the broadside to refer to the maid where the broadside refers to Harry. The effect is that Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames is entirely sung by the man. - BS

Last updated in version 2.6

File: WT184

Maid on the Shore, The (The Fair Maid by the Sea Shore; The Sea Captain) [Laws K27]

DESCRIPTION: The captain sees a pretty girl on the shore, and vigorously entreats her to come aboard. At last she does, but then sings captain and sailors to sleep. She robs captain and sailors, then rows back to shore -- using the captain's sword for an oar!

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1828 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2)

KEYWORDS: courting seduction trick escape robbery magic shore feminist

FOUND IN: US(MA, MW, NE, NW, Ro, So, SW) Canada(Mar, Newf) Ireland

REFERENCES (23 citations):
- Laws K27, "The Maid on the Shore (The Fair Maid by the Sea Shore; The Sea Captain)"
- Bronson (43), "The Broomfield Hill" -- the appendix includes 6 versions (#25-#30) which are this song
- Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads (43), "The Broomfield Hill" (version #27 is this song)
Maid with the Bonny Brown Hair, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer sees a beautiful maiden, "brighter than Venus." He courts her; at last they set a wedding day. But she breaks off the engagement; she has "another more kinder." He laments; he or she or both set out for another country

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (JIFSS)

KEYWORDS: love rejection emigration beauty

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (3 citations):

- OLochlaing-IrishStreetBallads 6, "The Maid With the Bonny Brown Hair" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Hayward-UlsterSongsAndBalladsOfTheTownAndCountry, pp. 39-40, "The Maid with the Bonny Brown Hair" (1 text)

Roud #3032

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Lough Erin's Shore (l)" (tune)
cf. "The Bonnie Wee Lass of the Glen" (tune)

ALTERNATE TITLES:

The Lass with the Bonny Brown Hair

File: HHH024
Maid's Complaint to her Mother, The
DESCRIPTION: A girl finds her maidenhead "a burden" and would marry. Mother says she's too young and threatens to send daughter to the fields. "Young batchellors will tempt me, and I perhaps may yield" Mother concedes. Daughter will happily marry Frank the Farmer.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1828 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1)
LONG DESCRIPTION: A girl, sixteen, finds her maidenhead "a burden every morning" and would marry. Mother says she's seven years too young. "Thousands I have seen Married before my age." Mother says she married at nineteen. She threatens to send daughter to the fields in sack cloth. If so, says the daughter, "young batchellors will tempt me, and I perhaps may yield," so don't blame me. Mother concedes and would have the daughter marry honest Frank the Farmer. Daughter agrees happily.
KEYWORDS: marriage virginity farming bawdy dialog mother
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Bord))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1 81, "The Maid's Complaint to her Mother"; Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1, pp. 239-240, "The Longing Maid" (2 texts)
Roud #3857
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Whistle, Daughter, Whistle" (theme)
cf. "Sixteen Years, Mama" (theme)
File: LyCr181

Maid's Lament, The
DESCRIPTION: "I can bake and I can brew, I can cook an Irish stew, Wash a shirt and iron it too, But I must go out on Sunday." Six days she works to maintain a good home, "But I must go out on Sunday." She hopes someday to settle down with her young man
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1967 (Hamer)
KEYWORDS: work home oldmaid
FOUND IN: Britain(Engand(Lond))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hamer-GarnersGay, p. 28, "The Maid's Lament" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1074
File: HaGa028

Maidean Alainn Ghreine
DESCRIPTION: Gaelic. The singer has a vision of a woman, the spirit of Ireland, who wishes "to be free of English rule."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage beauty Ireland patriotic
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 86, "Maidean Alainn Ghreine" (2 texts)
NOTES [17 words]: The description follows the "English Summary" provided by OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin. - BS
Last updated in version 3.2
File: OCC086

Maidean Bhog Aoibhinn (A Fine Soft Morning)
DESCRIPTION: Gaelic. The singer seduces a beautiful young woman. "It is not altogether clear whether he abandons [her] or his previous companion."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1943 (OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)
Maiden City, The

DESCRIPTION: Derry is the Maiden City, threatened in 1688. Her defenders shouted "No Surrender" and vowed Derry "should be a Maiden still." She rejected "a Kingly wooer" and her defenders won a terrible battle. "The Maiden on her throne boys, Shall be a Maiden still"

AUTHOR: Charlotte Elizabeth (source: Hayes)

EARLIEST DATE: 1987 (Smyth/Bush/Long-OrangeLark)

KEYWORDS: battle Ireland patriotic

NOTES: For background on the Siege of (London)derry, see the notes to "The Shutting of the Gates of Derry" as well as "No Surrender (I)." - RBW

File: OrLa039

Maiden in the Mor Lay (The Maid of the Moor)

DESCRIPTION: "Maiden in the mor [moor] lay, In the more lay, Seuenyst [seven nights] fulle (x2)," "Welle was hire mete. Wat was hire mete?... The primerole ant the violet." "Welle was hire dryng [drink]. Wat was hire dryng? The chelde water of the welle-spring." Etc.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: fourteenth century (Bodleian, MS. Rawlinson D.913)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad food flowers MiddleEnglish

NOTES: For background on the Siege of (London)derry, see the notes to "The Shutting of the Gates of Derry" as well as "No Surrender (I)." - RBW

File: 0rLa039
353-354, "Maiden in the Moor Lay" (1 modernized text)
Karen Saupe, editor, _Middle English Marian Lyrics_, TEAMS (Consortium for the Teaching of the Middle Ages), Medieval Institute Publications, Western Michigan University, 1998, #81, pp. 154-155, "(Maiden in the mor lay)" (1 text)
Karin Boklund-Lagopolou, _I have a yong suster: Popular song and Middle English lyric_, Four Courts Press, 2002, pp. 31-32, "(Maiden in the mor lay)" (1 text, emended)
MANUSCRIPT: {MSRawlinsonD913}, Oxford, Bodleian Library, Rawlinson D.13 (Bodleian 13679), folio 1
SAME TUNE:
NOTES [1892 words]: This, obviously, has never been found in oral tradition. But Burrow/Turville-Petre, p. 235, say that the piece "happens to be referred to in a fourteenth century sermon... described as 'a certain song, namely a 'karole'.' That's an awfully thin reed on which to base an inclusion, but better to include than omit. Davies, p. 321, does describe this as "popular," which in a fourteenth century context presumably means "folk." It's certainly popular with anthologists! Sisam, p. 162, considers it minstrel work.
The poem itself is one of the "Rawlinson lyrics," found on a single strip of parchment in Bodleian library MS. Rawlinson D.913; it is just four inches wide by eleven inches tall, and much worn. Although the contents are clearly poetry, they are written as prose, although with blank lines between items (Burrow, pp. 2-3).
Even with modern layout and extra spaces, the contents of the that particular sheet of parchment take only three and a half pages; Burrow, pp. 23-26, has a full transcription.
The "manuscript" in which the single sheet is found is not a unity; it is a bunch of odds and ends the Bodleian bound together to make it easier to care for them (Burrow, p. 2, which reports that the Rawlinson collection was received in 1756 and the items bound up more than a century later). This particular item is hard enough to read that its contents were not noticed until 1907 (Burrow, p. 3).
Stevick dates the manuscript "after 1300." Burrow/Turville-Petre, p. 235, says "early fourteenth century," as does the headnote in Saupe. Greene-Carols, p. 42, says merely "fourteenth century." Sisam, p. 162, also thinks it early fourteenth century, pointing out that the poems of the latter part of the century (when the Hundred Years' War was lost and the Wars of the Roses resulted in intermittent civil war) tended to be much gloomer.
The fragment has several short poems, in both English and French (Burrow/Turville-Petre, p. 235), plus a few single lines that I would guess are more of a "set list" than anything else. Several of the other pieces also appear somewhat "folky"; Wells, p. 492, suggests that the page came from a minstrel's notebook but also says that all the substantial pieces "ehibit the primitive popular use of repetition, and apparently all were rude pieces for singing by the roadside or at the ale-house. All are catching jingles, with no sign of reflection or of the learned touch" -- a statement which I would firmly disagree with, particularly as regards this song. This is the eighth piece on the slip, by Wells's and Burrow's counts; the seventh, "Icham of Irlaunde (The Irish Dancer; Good Sir I Pray Thee)," is also well-known and is "perhaps the oldest English dance-song extant" (Wells, p. 493). The tenth also sounds rather folky: "Jonet's hair is all gold, and Jankyn is her love" (first line "Al gold Jonet is thin her"), although Boklund-Lagopolou, 38, claims some of its "semantic codes" are "courtly." This particular poem/song has four verses, with only the first two spelled out in full; the last two verses are much abbreviated, although most modern editions spell out the verses.
There is much disagreement about who the Maiden is. Burrow, pp. 16-17 (compare Burrow/Turville-Petre, p. 236) mention suggestions of the Virgin Mary, Mary Magdalene, a different penitent woman, a dead child, and a water sprite. (More on several of these below.) I am not sure what it was intended to be about, but I would think most singers would have interpreted it as the Virgin Mary. One other possibility that occurs to me, although I think the Virgin Mary hypothesis much more likely, is that it's a tale of one of those endless female saints who, upon being ordered to marry, or sexually abused, engaged in some absurd behavior to protect their virginity, along the lines of "A tale of how Saint Repetitiva, rather than yield her virtue to the lord of the manor, fled to the moor and lived there in the field, sustained by the reeds and grasses, which gave their fruit to her."
The scholarly discussion of this piece is very extensive. Luria/Hoffman reprint no fewer than four articles, by D. W. Robertson, Jr. [1950], by E. T. Donaldson [1960], by John Speirs [undated], and by Peter Dronke [1966] -- very big names in Middle English literature.
Robertson, who points out many puzzles in the poem, believes that the Maid is indeed the Virgin Mary, and points out that the sundry flowers often appear in medieval images of the Virgin, adding that the flowers also implied fleshly beauty. Saupe, pp. 268-269, repeats many of his notes in perhaps more understandable form; her notes are well worth consulting, since they're online. Donaldson thinks reciters would indeed think of the Virgin Mary but might not seek much allegorical depth in the rest of the images. Dronke absolutely rejects the link with the Virgin Mary and proposes the water sprite theory based on German folk tales. He thinks the piece a dance song. In his view, the girl comes to dances to fascinate men, but must return to the moor by a certain time, lest she die. The difficulty with this is that there is no direct evidence of these stories in English. Speirs denies that we can be expected to know who the maid is, but calls her a "child of nature" and suggests a link to fertility cults (which strikes me as extremely unlikely). Boklund-Lagopolou, pp. 37-38, based on an analysis of "isotopies" that might make sense in analyzing an over-trained college student's poetry exercise but makes very little sense when applied to a folk song, concludes that the maiden "is not human but some kind of nature spirit, and the period of seven nights and a day is probably related to the times when contact between this natural world and the cultural world of human beings becomes possible." (Oy.) She also wonders about a sexual component. Davies, pp. 320-321, mentions an interpretation which compares this to the world's wilderness before the incarnation of Jesus. This would fit the moor, but hardly the flowers.

Saupe, p. 267, while acknowledging Donaldson's objection, accepts Robertson's link to the Virgin Mary. Although she doesn't express a strong opinion of her own, she did include this poem in her anthology of Marian literature, and observes that Schoeck, 1951, agreed with Robertson. She mentions an article by E. M. W. Tillyard suggesting that the maid is Mary Magdalene or Mary of Egypt (whoever that is). Greene/Ossory, p. xii, also mentions the Mary Magdalene hypothesis, but links it with Joseph Harris. We hardly need Green/Ossory's scathing critique to throw this idea out the window -- yes, Mary Magdalene found Jesus in a garden, but she was also thought to be a prostitute. I would be very interested in learning how an experienced prostitute could be a maiden. And remember, the woman of the song is a maiden but is never called "Mary." Surely we must work from a famous maiden, not a famous Mary. Hence also Trapp, p. 419: "Until quite recently, this little poem existed peacefully as a secular piece of popular origin and obscure meaning," adding that "the Magdalene's maiden status is more than questionable." I do find the mention of the maid drinking from the "welle spring" in the third verse interesting, since in Luke 4, Jesus meets the Woman of Samaria at the well and offers her "living water"; the wellspring could well be a Christian symbol.

Other than the text itself, we have little evidence about the poem. Burrow adduced two pieces of evidence that the song was secular -- the only two references to any of the Rawlinson lyrics outside the manuscript itself.

One comes from the Red Book of Ossory, associated with Richard de Ledrede, Bishop of Ossory 1317-1360. He was an extremely zealous churchman, an English Franciscan ruling an Irish diocese and in the habit of using the full force of his authority (Greene/Ossory, pp. iv-v). Greene/Ossory, p. iv, calls his administration "a reign of terror for those he disliked" and says that "It appears likely that before his death he became mentally deranged." Ossory had a habit of taking secular pieces that he thought too popular and rewriting them for church use, "in order that [his clerks'] throats and mouths, consecrated to God, may not be polluted by songs which are lewd, secular, and associated with revelry.... [L]et them provide themselves with suitable tunes (notis) according to which these sets of words (dictamina, 'ditties') require" (Greene/Ossory, p. iv; Greene/Ossory, p. xii, adds that some of Ossory's lyrics were written without a specified tune, leaving it up to the singers to find something, but the early lyrics in the Red Book clearly have specified tunes).

There is a stain on the line which lists the tune of the eleventh song. But Greene/Ossory, p. x, is convinced that the text under the stain reads "mayde yn the moore lay." This is not proof that Ossory's Latin text uses this tune. But Greene/Ossory, p. x, lines up the two lyrics, and they match metrically. The Latin text reads:

Peperit virgo,
Virgo regia,
Mater orphanorum,
Mater orphanorum;
Pepirit virgo,
Virgo regia,
Mater orphanorum,
Mater orphanorum,
Plena gracia.
(I can’t help but say that the English words are better!)
This still isn’t absolute proof, but I agree with Greene that it is almost certain that Ossory used "Maiden" as the pattern for his feeble piece. A number of scholars (Burrow, p. 19; cf. Davies, p. 320, Boklund-Lagopolou, p. 28) conclude that Ossory thought the song unfit for church use. I tend to agree. Burrow, p. 20, thinks this rules out references to the Virgin Mary or Mary Magdalene. I personally think it proves that Ossory was too uptight for his job. Possibly Ossory’s objection was that this was a secular piece -- but he might also have objected because it was in English, or because it was unclear, or simply because it was too popular. I do not think Ossory’s opinions tell us anything about what the author of the song thought. So the possibility that this is a religious text -- even a text about the Virgin Mary -- must remain open.

Burrow, p. 19, probably following Greene/Ossory, pp. xii-xiii, cites a manuscript described by Wenzel in 1974. It comes from a sermon collection thought to have been taken down around 1360. "The preacher is lamenting the moral deterioration of man. In the Golden Age, he says... men lived in joy and innocence. They ate only the foods that nature provided. And what, he asks, did they drink? His answer is unexpected. 'And what was their drink? The answer appears in a certain song [in quondam cantico], namely a karole that is called 'the mayde be wode lay'. Note in margin: 'the colde water of the well spryng.'" Obviously the mention is of a "wood" not a "moor" (which Greene/Ossory, p. xiii, says is a better place to find violets), and it calls the song a karole, which based on its form it is not (it is a roundel), but that's a nitpick. Here too we have what seems to be an allusion to this song -- but this time it hints that the song describes the state of unfallen humanity! Which would seem to make the maid Eve.

Probably we will never know what the song is really about. But, I repeat, it does seem likely that at least some hearers -- especially in the period before the reformation, when Mariolatry was very common in England -- thought it referred to the Virgin Mary. - RBW

Bibliography

- Boklund-Lagopolou: Karin Boklund-Lagopolou, I have a yong suster: Popular song and Middle English lyric, Four Courts Press, 2002
- Wells: John Edwin Wells, A Manual of the Writings in Middle English 1050-1400, 1916 (references are to the 1930 fifth printing with three supplements)

Last updated in version 5.3
File: MSBRDMM

Maiden of Drumdurno, The
DESCRIPTION: "Busy baking for her bridal, Durno's maiden lilts wi' glee." A stranger taunts her for baking too slowly. She wagers she can finish baking before he can build a road. He, the devil in disguise, wins the wager. She flees and turns to stone to escape him
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (Ord-BothySongsAndBallads)
Maiden Pined by Derry's Walls, A

DESCRIPTION: A maiden starving in Derry tells "her 'Prentice Boy lover" not to weep for her: live free or die "not like a popish slave." The message is repeated in Derry by a young wife and mother to her husband, and by a widowed mother to her son.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1987 (Smyth/Bush/Long-OrangeLark)

KEYWORDS: battle death starvation Ireland patriotic husband lover mother wife

FOUND IN: Smyth/Bush/Long-OrangeLark 32, "A Maiden Pined by Derry's Walls" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES: cf. "The Slave" (tune, according to Smyth/Bush/Long-OrangeLark)

NOTES [53 words]: See "No Surrender (I)" and references there for information about the 1688-1689 Siege of Derry. - BS

Also "The Shutting of the Gates of Derry." It's perhaps worth noting, in light of the girl addressing her "'Prentice Boy," that it was the apprentices of the town who were first credited with closing Derry's gates. - RBW

File: PrLa032

Maiden's Grave, The

DESCRIPTION: "What is that crucifix gleaming so whitely, Here in the desert standing so brave? Let us go softly, let us go lightly, To read its inscription, 'The Maiden's Grave.'" No one, save the cross that marks the grave, knows who she was or how she died

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Deseret News)

KEYWORDS: death burial nonballad

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 135-136, "(The Maiden's Grave)" (1 text)

NOTES [29 words]: Reportedly based on an incident of 1904, when the Central Pacific railroad was realigning its tracks. This involved moving one grave of a woman whose history was not know. - RBW

File: Burt135

Maiden's Lament (I), The

DESCRIPTION: The girl laments that her parents have denied her poor lover's proposal of marriage. She bids farewell to parents, friends and foes. "Come all you fair maids like me a-dying, It's now I'm taking my last farewell." She believes her death is near.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Karpeles-FolkSongsFromNewfoundland)

KEYWORDS: love courting separation dying father mother death poverty

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Karpeles-FolkSongsFromNewfoundland 82, "The Maiden's Lament" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2305
Maidens of England, Sair May Ye Mourn

DESCRIPTION: "Maidens of England, sair may ye mourn, For tynd ye have your lemans at Bannockburn, With heavalow. What wende [thought] the King of England to have gotten Scotland? With rumbalow."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: c. 1400 (MS. Rawlinson B. 171, f. 119a); presumably written c. 1314

KEYWORDS: battle MiddleEnglish

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- 1286 - Death of Alexander III of Scotland
- 1290 - Death of his granddaughter Margaret "Maid of Norway"
- 1292 - Edward I of England declares John Balliol king of Scotland
- 1296 - Edward deposes John Balliol
- 1297 - William Wallace, the Guardian of Scotland, defeats the English at Stirling Bridge
- 1298 - Edward defeats Wallace at Falkirk. Wallace forced into hiding
- 1305 - Capture and execution of Wallace (August 23)
- 1306 - Robert Bruce declares himself king of Scotland
- 1307 - Death of Edward I
- 1314 - Battle of Bannockburn. Robert Bruce defeats Edward II of England and regains Scottish independence

FOUND IN:
- REFERENCES (28 citations):
  - Brown/Robbins-IndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse, #2039
  - DigitalIndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse #3331
  - E. K. Chambers, _English Literature at the Close of the Middle Ages_, Oxford, 1945, 1947, p. 74, "(no title)"
  - Karin Boklund-Lagopolou, _I have a yong suster: Popular song and Middle English lyric_, Four Courts Press, 2002, p. 160, "(no title)" (1 text)
  - Rossell Hope Robbins, _Historical Poems of the XIVth and XVth Century_, Columbia University Press, 1959, p. 262, "(no title)" (1 text)

MANUSCRIPT: Aberystwyth, National Library of Wales. MS. Peniarth 396D, folio 140
MANUSCRIPT: Beaminster, Dorset, J. Stevens Cox MS. [formerly Harmsworth; Sotheby Sale, Oct., 1945, lot 1956] (pagination unknown)
MANUSCRIPT: Cambridge [US], Harvard University, Houghton Library, MS. Eng. 530, folio 137
MANUSCRIPT: Cambridge [US], Harvard University, Houghton Library, MS. Eng. 587, folio 76
MANUSCRIPT: Cambridge [US], Harvard University, Houghton Library, MS. Eng. 766, folio 149
MANUSCRIPT: Cambridge [US], Harvard University, Houghton Library, MS. Richardson 35, folio 63
MANUSCRIPT: Cambridge, University Library MS. Li.2.14, folio 166
MANUSCRIPT: Glasgow, University Library, MS. Hunterian 83 (T.3.21), folio 82
MANUSCRIPT: London, British Library, MS. Harley 266, folio 15
MANUSCRIPT: New Haven, Yale University, Beinecke Library MS. 494, folio 73
MANUSCRIPT: New Haven, Yale University, Beinecke Library, Takamiya Deposit MS. 12 [Dawsons of Pall Mall, Catalogue 103, item 3, 1970], folio 114
MANUSCRIPT: New Haven, Yale University, Beinecke Library, Takamiya Deposit MS. 29, folio 81
MANUSCRIPT: Oxford, Bodleian Library, MS. Rawlinson B.171 (SC 11539), folio 119
MANUSCRIPT: Oxford, Bodleian Library, MS. Rawlinson B.190 (SC 15500), folio 90
MANUSCRIPT: Princeton, Princeton University Library MS. Taylor Medieval 3 [formerly Morent's Court, Kent, Meyerstein, Sotheby's 17 Dec. 1952, lot 466], folio 89
This fragment of a taunt song has been very popular -- with scholars, at least, who have given it much attention. It seems clear that it was written shortly after Robert Bruce's victory at Bannockburn in 1314, but the author is unknown and the exact text is also uncertain. Much of the attention it has gotten, curiously, seems to be related to the two curious words it contains, "heavalow" and "rumbalow." These notes were originally written in connection with "Hal-an-Tow," which contains similar-sounding words (I would not necessarily concede that they are actually the same word). Take the following notes in that light:

Chambers, p. 74, quotes, with an astonishing lack of source detail, one of the "Brut" chronicles concerning the battle of Bannockburn:

Maydenes of Engelande, sare may ye morne,
For tynt ye have youre lemmans at Bannokesborn,
With hevalogh
What wende the Kyng of Engleand
To have y-gete Scotlande
With rombylogh.

Sisam has the same text but uses different punctuation and orthography:

Maidenes of Engelande, sare may ye mourne,
For tint ye have youre lemmans at Bannokesbourne,
With hevalogh.
What! wende the King of Engeland [i.e. here read "Did the king of England think"]
Have y-gete Scotlande?
With rombylogh.

The ultimate source of this is Bodleian MS. Rawlinson B. 171, f. 119a, dated c. 1400.

Boklund-Lagopolou, p. 160, declares the piece "more flyting [insult-rhyme] than narrative," but if nothing else it refers to a clearly datable event.

Chambers explains both "hevalogh" and "rumbylogh" as "boating refrains," but does not show any supporting evidence, although this is accepted, e.g., by Phillips, p. 11n. Chambers also says that Fabyan's Chronicle (1516) has a similar rhyme, which is described as a dance and carol (p. 180). Wells, p. 209, discussing Fabyan, mentions "six lines of tail-rime made by the English 'in reproche of ye Scottes' whom they had beaten in the attempt to relieve Dunbar; a six-line tail-rime stanza like that sung by the mariners in [the thirteenth century metrical romance] Richard Coer de Lyon ('with heua a lowe -- with rumbylowe')"; presumably this is the source of the Chambers comment, but no one gives a line citation from the romance (which was popular in its time but now relatively rarely studied or reprinted), so I can't check it.

Prestwich, p. 81, offers what seems to be a translation of the above rhyme, which he describes as "a song mocking the oarsman's chant of 'Heavalow, Rumbalow'":

Maidens of England, sore may you mourn,
For you have lost your men at Bannockburn with 'Heavalow'.
What, would the king of England have won Scotland with 'Rumbalow'?

Prestwich's source for this is F. W. D. Brie, editor, The Brut, Early English Text Society, 1906, 1908, volume i, p. 208 (i.e. the same original source as Chambers; cited also by Phillips, p. 11, who quotes both the original and the translation and also gives a little of the context).

Greene, p. 26, gives yet another slightly different version, this one from Fabyan's Chronicle (as printed by Pynson in 1516) rather than the manuscript:

Than the Scottish enflamyd with pryde, in derysyon of Englysshe men, made this ryme as foloweth.
Maydens of Englonde, sore maye ye morne.
For your lemmans ye haue loste at Bannocisborne,
With heue a lowe.
What wenyth the kynge of Englonde,
So soone to haue wonne Sotlande
WIth rumbylowe.

This songe was after many dayes sungyn, in daunces, in carolis of ye maydens & mynstrellys of Scotlande, to the reproofe and dysdayne of Englysshe men, w[i]t[h] dyuerse other which I ouer passe.

Evelyn Kendrick Wells, The Ballad Tree, pp. 204-205, has this same version (with minor variants), also attributed to Fabyan's Chronicle.

The DigitalIndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse says this is found in 21 witnesses -- an extraordinarily high number, though many of them are editions of the "Brut." The DIMEV lists the texts of many of the versions; the variations are dramatic. These two facts argue for some sort of traditional status, even though there is no evidence that it was ever a full-length song.

Whether any of these explanations is true, or none, the "rumbelow" refrain was well enough known that W. S. Gilbert used it in "The Mikado." In Act I, lines 67-71 (p. 265 in Gilbert/Sullivan/Bradley), we find the chorus

Then man the capstan -- of we go,
As the fiddler swings us round.
Wth a yeo heave ho,
And a rumbelow,
Hurrah for the homeward bound! - RBW

Bibliography

- Wells: John Edwin Wells, A Manual of the Writings in Middle English 1050-1400, 1916 (references are to the 1930 fifth printing with three supplements)

Last updated in version 5.3

Maidens of Locharmuick, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer walks out one morning to the farm at Locharmuick. He is greeted with kisses by a girl in the garden. The "aul wife" brings out a whisky bottle and he drinks a toast to the five "maidens of Locharmuick," those over them and men who are away.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1916 (Greig/Duncan4)

KEYWORDS: farming drink moniker

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

- Greig/Duncan4 745, "The Maidens of Locharmuick" (1 text)

Roud #6175

NOTES [32 words]: Greig/Duncan4 quotes a note from Charles Murray, Duncan's source for this song, who had "surveyed Glen Carvie [Strathdon, about 40 miles west of Aberdeen] including the farm of Locharmuick." - BS

Last updated in version 2.5

File: GrD4745

Maidens of Sixty-Three (The Old Maid)

DESCRIPTION: "When I was a girl of eighteen years old... I was taught to expect wit, wisdom, gold, and nothing less would do for me." She rejected a youth as too poor, a duke as too old, etc. By her forties, the suitors were fewer; at (63), she begs for anyone...
Maidenstone, The

DESCRIPTION: The Devil, to seal a deal with a jealous suitor, wins a bet with a betrothed maiden. She flees and her silent prayer to evade the Devil is answered: she is turned into a stone pillar that reminds maidens to "guard the vows that love has made"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1847 (Thom)
LONG DESCRIPTION: A jealous suitor makes a deal with the devil to damn the betrothed "Maiden of Drumdurno" -- "the beauty of five parishes' -- and Jamie. She makes a lighthearted bet -- that she can bake bread before he can pave a road -- with a stranger for her self, which she loses. Realizing that she has lost to the Devil she runs -- "fast she flies, as fast pursued" -- and is turned into stone in answer to her silent prayer. The stone "bids the maids of Garioch Guard the vows that love has made" Now, "quick the pace, and quick the pulse" of those who wander there alone "atween Pittrodie's haunted wood An' the dowie Mayden Stane"

KEYWORDS: jealousy courting love bargaining wager disguise food Devil
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #55, p. 3, "Maidenstone" (1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan8 1916, "The Maidenstone" (1 fragment)
ADDITIONAL: William Thom, Rhymes and Recollections of a Hand-Loom Weaver (London, 1847 (3rd edition, "Digitized by Google")), pp. 58-61, ("And quick the pace, and quick the pulse") [narrative and one verse]
Jeanie M Laing, Notes on Superstition and Folk Lore (Brechin, 1885 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 63-65, "The Mayden Stane of Bennachie" [narrative and three verses]
Roud #13559
CROSS-REFERENCES: cf. "The Standing Stones" (subject: the sculptured stones)

NOTES [142 words]: Laing: "Those ancient sculptured stones which we find here and there throughout the island, and about the origin and significance of which antiquarians are undecided, have, in many cases, legends attached to them by the superstitious. One of the most remarkable of these is the "Maiden Stane of Bennachie," situated in the parish of Chapel of Garioch, Aberdeenshire.... The 'causey' [road] is said to be still extant, although overgrown with rank heather; and the neighborhood bears the reputation of being haunted."
The Greig/Duncan8 note adds this comment to Greig's about the stone: "which has Pictish carvings."
Both Thom and Laing repeat the verse Greig has from Orr. Laing adds two more verses. There may be more verses in Andrew Galloway Fordyce, Reminiscences of the Maiden Stane of Bennachie, published by the Banffshire Journal in 1975. - BS

Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD81916
Maidin Luan Chincise (Song of the Dead Insurgent)

DESCRIPTION: Gaelic. The speaker laments that while Leinster and Ulster rose in rebellion, Munster did not.
AUTHOR: Micheal Og O Longain (1766-1837) (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)
EARLIEST DATE: 1978 (Toibin's _Duanaire Deiseach_, according to Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815); 1907 (Sigerson translation)
KEYWORDS: foreign language rebellion
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1798 - Irish rebellion against British rule
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 102, "Maidin Luan Chincise" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: George Sigerson, Bards of the Gael and Gall (New York, 1907 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 290-292, "Song of the Dead Insurgent" (1 text in English translation)
NOTES [137 words]: The description is, verbatim, Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815's. Moylan states that his text is not O Longain's original, but a version from tradition. - BS
This is one of those "technically correct" laments: There were lots of hot spots in Ulster in 1798. In Munster, outside of Dublin, there wasn't much -- except in Wexford. Wexford is right on the borther with Munster, but there were few spontaneous uprisings in Munster. But Munster was a backwater. Had the Ulster rebels held together until the French came, or the Wexford rebels raised more of Leinster and moved on Dublin, they might have succeeded. Had Munster risen but all else stayed the same, the effect would simply have been to increase the bloodshed: The British would have pacified the northeast, then concentrated all their forces in the south. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.6
File: Moyl102

Maids of Downhill, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer recalls wandering by Magilligan strand to Downhill. He describes the shore, the old castle, the fields, the girls. He complains that the famous poets never mentioned Downhill. He would rather be here than anywhere else in the world
AUTHOR: Frances Heaney ?
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: home nonballad
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H809, p. 162, "The Maids of Downhill" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13462
File: HHH809

Maids of Simcoe (Ontario)

DESCRIPTION: The singer urges the girls to remember the loggers while waiting at home with the farmers. He remarks sarcastically on the dangers farmers face. The boys head for (Quebec) to party, then for home. (In some texts a girl at an inn falls in love with him)
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (Rickaby-BalladsAndSongsOfTheShantyBoy)
KEYWORDS: logger separation
FOUND IN: US (MA, NE)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 241-242, "The Maids of Simcoe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Rickaby-BalladsAndSongsOfTheShantyBoy 16, "Ye Maidens of Ontario" (1 text, 1 tune)
Rickaby/Dykstra/Leary-PineryBoys-SongsSongcatchingInLumberjackEra 16, "Ye Maidens of Ontario" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fowke/Johnston-FolkSongsOfCanada, pp. 76-77, "Ye Maidens of Ontario" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST Doe241 (Partial)
Roud #3289
CROSS-REFERENCES:
NOTES [97 words]: There are two places in Ontario called "Simcoe." Arthur Lant, of New York (who sang the version found in Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman), thought it referred to Simcoe county (on the southeastern corner of Georgian Bay, and extending down to Lake Simcoe). The town of Simcoe, which is farther from the logging regions, is in Norfolk County in southern Ontario, a short distance from Lake Erie and almost due north of Erie, Pennsylvania. Fowke reports that this song "is descended from an old English broadside, 'Ye Gentlemen of England, or The Stormy Winds Do Blow.'" - RBW

Last updated in version 4.3
File: Doe241

Maids When You're Young Never Wed an Old Man

DESCRIPTION: Examples of why young women should not marry old men. A girl married at sixteen, and has lived an unsatisfactory life. Details are given of the old man's various performance problems. The girl notes that she eventually found solace with a young man

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1791 (Herd)

KEYWORDS: age marriage

FOUND IN: Britain(England(North,South,Lond),Scotland(Aber)) Ireland US(Ro) Canada(Ont)

REFERENCES (14 citations):
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 207, "Never Wed a' Auld Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
Butterworth/Dawney-PloughboysGlory, p. 32, "An old man he courted me" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kidson-TraditionalTunes, p. 92, "An Auld Man He Courted Me" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #100, "Hey Down Derry" (1 text, 1 tune)
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #121, "I Courted an Old Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #50, "An Old Man Once Courted Me" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs 60, "An Old Man He Courted Me" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario 10, "An Old Man He Courted Me" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #79, "Never Wed an Old Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 156, "Maids When You're Young, Never Wed An Old Man" (1 text)
Behan-IrelandSings, #48, "Maid When You're Young" (1 text, 1 tune, modified)
Gilbert-LostChords, p. 72, "Don't Wed an Old Man" (1 text)

ADDITIONAL: David Herd, editor, Ancient and Modern Scottish Songs, Heroic Ballads, etc. (facsimile of (Edinburgh,1776) with an "Appendix ... containing the pieces substituted in the 1791 reprint for those omitted of the 1776 edition, &c.") ("Digitized by Google"), Vol II, Appendix pp. 63-64 [2-313], "Scant of Love, Want of Love" (1 text)

ST K207 (Full)
Roud #210

RECORDINGS:
O.J. Abbott, "An Old Man He Courted Me" (on ONEFowke01)
Sam Larner, "Maids When You're Young Never Wed an Old Man" (on SLarner02)
Jeannie Robertson, "Maids When You're Young [Never Wed a Auld Man]" (on FSB02, FSB2CD); "An Old Man Came a Courting Me" (on Voice01); "Never Wed a' Auld Man" (on FSBFTX19)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "An Old Man Came Over the Moor (Old Gum Boots and Leggings)"
cf. "I Wouldn't Marry an Old Man"
cf. "I Wouldn't Have an Old Man"
cf. "No Balls at All"
cf. "My Husband's Got No Courage In Him"
cf. "A Bird in a Gilded Cage"
cf. "The Whirly Whorl"
cf. "The Old Bachelor (l)"
cf. "The Burnt-Out Old Fellow [An Seanduine Doighte]"
cf. "Le Mari de Quatre-Vingt-Dix Ans (The Ninety Year Old Husband)"

cf. "The Union Boy" (tune, floating verses)
Maighre an Chuil Orbhui

DESCRIPTION: Gaelic. The singer's wife was stolen and replaced by a fairy woman without his knowledge. In Dublin he meets his real wife whom he eventually recognizes. He joins his real wife.

AUTHOR: Colla Mac Seain (source: O Boyle, citing O'Reilly's _Irish Writers_)

EARLIEST DATE: 1976 (OBoyle-TheIrishSongTradition)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage reunion disguise supernatural wife

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
OBoyle-TheIrishSongTradition 16, "Maighre an Chuil Orbhui" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [33 words]: O Boyle summarizes the text in English but does not translate it. The description follows the summary. He says, at the end, that "the song does not tell us the fate of [the] fairy wife and children."- BS

File: 0Boy016

Mail Boat Leinster, The

DESCRIPTION: On October 10, 1918, "the Dublin Mail Boat Leinster was sunk in the Irish Sea" by a German submarine. "The passengers, their life-belts on, unto the boats repair, While cries for help do rend the skies in sad and wild despair."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast)

KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship wreck sailor war

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Oct 10, 1918: World War I. Leinster with 680 passengers sunk "by torpedoes fired by a German submarine U 123 .... Of the total of 757 aboard 501 were lost" (source: Bourke in _Shipwrecks of the Irish Coast_ v1, p. 32)

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, p. 35, "The Mail Boat, Leinster" (1 text, 1 tune)
Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs 146, "The Mail Boat, Leinster" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #7344

NOTES [12 words]: Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast: Tune is "Poulshone Fishermen" on p. 102. - BS

Last updated in version 4.4
Mailin, The
DESCRIPTION: The singer lists all her suitors: "the farmer's cauld son," a soldier she refused, a sailor, ... and she waits for the lad and farm waiting for her. Now she has "found a far better and a far better place"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1828 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1)
KEYWORDS: courting marriage farming sailor soldier
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Bord))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1 77, "The Mailin" (1 text)
Roud #3869
NOTES [140 words]: Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1 translates "mailin" or "mailen" as "farm."
The Kinloch fragment (George Ritchie Kinloch, editor, The Ballad Book (revised by Edmund Goldsmid) (Edinburgh, 1885 (reprint of 1827 edition) ("Digitized by Microsoft"), #22 p. 46, ("First there came whipmen, and that not a few")) lists suitors who "court her, and leave her": "aye for the courting the lassie was keen ... and the laddie was airy." This is not the sense of the Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1 text in which the woman is willing but choosy ("It's a wonner I refusit him"), even when there was one "that [others said] soud have me." Closer to LyleCrawfurds1 than to Kinloch is the Greig/Duncan4 fragment "He's a Dark Man" since the woman is the chooser. Nevertheless, I don't see "He's a Dark Man" as being a fragment of "The Mailin." - BS
Last updated in version 2.6
File: LyCr177

Maine Battle Song
DESCRIPTION: "Come, sogers! take your muskets up; And grasp your faithful rifles; We're gwoin to lick the red coat men, Who call us Yankees, 'trifles.'" Loggers and soldiers will drive off the inept British invaders. They will decide the border by battle
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1842 (McCarty, _Songs, Odes, and Other Poems on National Subjects, according to Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks); probably published in newspapers in 1839
KEYWORDS: political soldier
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1839 - the "Aroostook War"
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks, pp. 160-161, "Maine Battle Song" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: John Francis Sprague, _The North Eastern Boundary Controversy and the Aroostook War_ , Observer Press, 1910, pp. 110-111, "Maine Battle Song" (1 text, apparently the same text, and from the same source, as Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks's)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Aroostook War" (subject: Aroostook War)
cf. "Maine Soldiers' Song" (subject: Aroostook War)
NOTES [59 words]: For background on the Aroostook almost-war, see the notes to "The Aroostook War." Of the three songs Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks prints on this subject, all vigorously anti-British, this is the most jingoistic -- I strongly suspect that, had there been an actual battle, the British regulars would have destroyed the American militia. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.7
File: Gray160

Maine Soldiers' Song
DESCRIPTION: "We are marching on to Madawask, To fight the trespassers; We'll teach the British how to walk -- and come off conquerors." The British will not be allowed to log. People from all occupations are called to join the forces which will drive out the British

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1910 (Historical collections of Piscataquis County, according to Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks; supposedly from 1839 newspapers)
KEYWORDS: political soldier
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1839 - the "Aroostook War"

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks, pp. 158-159, "The Soldiers' Song" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: John Francis Sprague, _The North Eastern Boundary Controversy and the Aroostook War_, Observer Press, 1910, pp. 109-110, "The Soldier's Song" (1 text, apparently the same text, and from the same source, as Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks's)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Aroostook War" (subject: Aroostook War)
cf. "Maine Battle Song" (subject: Aroostook War)

NOTES [14 words]: For background on the Aroostook almost-war, see the notes to "The Aroostook War." - RBW

Last updated in version 2.6
File: Gray158

Maine-ite in Pennsylvania, The

DESCRIPTION: "I landed safe in Williamsport in a lumberman's rendezvous, 'Twas there I hired with Jacob Brown as one of winter's crew." The singer serves six months in the wild country, talking of the waters and the great variety of animals

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (Rickaby-BalladsAndSongsOfTheShantyBoy)
KEYWORDS: logger work river animal humorous
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Rickaby-BalladsAndSongsOfTheShantyBoy 19, "The Maine-ite in Pennsylvania" (1 text, 1 tune)
Rickaby/Dykstra/Leary-PineryBoys-SongsSongcatchingInLumberjackEra 19, "The Maine-ite in Pennsylvania" (1 text, 1 tune)
Korson-Pennegends, pp. 342-343, "The Maine-ite in Pennsylvania" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST Rick089 (Full)
Roud #7739
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Morris Ellsworth" (imagery)

NOTES [86 words]: This is a very strange little song: After one verse about hiring out, which could come from another lumbering song, the singer describes the territory in which he worked. But this description is so exaggerated as to be funny -- "the wild ferocious rabbit"? And Caribou are an arctic mammal.
Sandy Ives (Ives-LarryGorman, p. 197) claims that this is a version of "Morris Ellsworth," sometimes credited to Larry Gorman. I wouldn't go that far, but they are similar in concept and may have cross-fertilized a bit. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1
File: Rick089

Mains o' Boyndie

DESCRIPTION: "If ye want to learn high farmin'" come to Mains of Boyndie: it takes 14 pair and some odd-jobmen to work it. The foreman for the day is the first to start. The scythe there slashes more in a day than you'd cut with a sickle in a week.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: farming work nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast "Folk-Song in Buchan," p. 22, ("If ye want to
NOTES [53 words]: Here is one song that praises, rather than condemns, the conditions at a farm. Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv, of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Mains of Boyndie (396) is at coordinate (h6-7,v7) on that map [near Banff, roughly 42 miles NNW of Aberdeen]. - BS

Mains o' Culsh

DESCRIPTION: "I hear ye're gyaun to Mains o' Culsh." The singer will not work there again. You are expected to be in the yoke by half past six. Loanie wouldn't rehire him anyway: "I learned his bairns to curse and sweer" though Loanie swears worse himself.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan3)

KEYWORDS: farming work nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Greig/Duncan3 397, "Mains o' Culsh" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #5925

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Lamachree and Megrum" (tune, per Greig "Folk-Song in Buchan," p. 73)

NOTES [39 words]: Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv, of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Mains of Culsh (397) is at coordinate (h4,v98) on that map [near New Deer, roughly 28 miles N of Aberdeen] - BS

Last updated in version 2.4

File: GrD3397

Mains o' Elrick

DESCRIPTION: "'Twad be a crime, shame, and disgrace, To hear the people say, That the folk o' Little Elrick Works upon the Sabbath day."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (Greig/Duncan3)

KEYWORDS: farming work nonballad religious

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Greig/Duncan3 361, "Mains o' Elrick" (1 fragment, 1 tune)

Roud #5904

NOTES [108 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan3 fragment. Greig/Duncan3: "Noted [by Duncan] 1905 from Mrs Gillespie. A fragment of a doggerel song made about 1855. The queen visited Haddo House that year, and the servants at Little Elrick were angry because they received no holiday .... The servants took revenge by working on Sabbath, while the people passed to church, a fact alluded to in this verse."

Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv, of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Little Elrick (361) is at coordinate (h4-5,v9-0) on that map [near New Deer, roughly 25 miles N of Aberdeen] - BS

Last updated in version 2.4

File: GrD3361

Mains O' Fogieloan, The

DESCRIPTION: Singer hires on in May at Turra as the lowest labourer at a Fogieloan farm. The foreman and second, kitchen maid and other labourers are named. Times in town are described with drink, fiddlers, and street dealers. He'll be back next May at a hiring day.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1974 (recording, John MacDonald)
Mainsail Haul

DESCRIPTION: The sailor, broke, goes to a boarding-master and signs up to serve on the "Oxford." He comes aboard to find "sailors... from every nation"; "There wasn't one man that could understand another." At last he jumps ship or is paid off (with the entire crew!)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951

KEYWORDS: sailor poverty humorous foreigner

FOUND IN: US(MA)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 117-122, "Mainsail Haul" (2 texts, 2 tunes)

ST Doe117 (Partial)

Roud #653

NOTES [28 words]: According to Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, the Black Ball Line ran the Oxford on the transatlantic packet run from her launching in 1836 until 1850. - RBW

File: Doe117

Mairi Laghach (Winsome Mary)

DESCRIPTION: Gaelic: The chorus says the mountains, fountains, dewy dells, and snowy blossoms are sweet but "sweeter is young Mary of Glensmole to me." The singer fantasizes about roving with Mary through the woods. He would scorn wealth rather than give her up.

AUTHOR: John Macdonald (1766-1865) (tune: Lachlan M'Kenzie) (source: _The Celtic Monthly_)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage love nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig/Duncan7 1331, "Winsome Mary" (1 fragment, 1 tune)

ADDITIONAL: K.N. Macdonald, "Mairi Laghach. Winsome Mary," _The Celtic Monthly_, vol VII 1899, pp. 8-9 (1 text plus 2 translations into English) (can be seen at the Am Baile highland history and culture site)

Roud #7219

NOTES [148 words]: The Greig/Duncan7 text is the chorus of the translation by D Macpherson. The description is based on this translation from _The Celtic Monthly_ which states that "it is more poetical, but not so near the original as Evan MacColl's" (also in _The Celtic Monthly_).

The MacColl translation description: The singer says he has often been with Mary and "there seemed 'neath heaven No such loving two!" He would prize her as his bride "far more Than all the treasure Europe has in store" He describes her beauty. The birds singing to them gives them more pleasure than artful music.

Macdonald in _The Celtic Monthly_ says that John Macdonald wrote the song after he saw Mary Mciver (1786-1869), his future wife, for the first time, when she was twelve. - BS

On the other hand, the Gesto collection says the words are by Mr. McKenzie of MonkCastle. Of course, they may be different words.... - RBW

Last updated in version 3.2

File: GrD71331
Mairin Ni Ghiobhalain
DESCRIPTION: Tradesmen, with their tools, come to fix "a new foundation In Maureen from Gippursland" to stop her leak: a blacksmith, saddler, baker, tailor, ploughman and timberman. Each fails. Finally, a big tinkerman, with a soldering iron, fixes her.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (Greig/Duncan7)
LONG DESCRIPTION: Tradesmen, with their tools, came to fix "a new foundation In Maureen from Gippursland" to stop her leak: a blacksmith with hammer and anvil, a saddler with needle and thread, a baker with flour and soda, a tailor with cloth and scissors, a ploughman with horse and plough, and a timberman with an axe. Each work "until his sides was sick and sore, And after all his labour she leaked In the place where she leaked before." Finally, a big tinkerman, with a soldering iron, "rosined her, he soldered her ... but after all his labour she never leaked In the place where she leaked before"
KEYWORDS: sex bawdy tinker
FOUND IN: Ireland Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan7 1434, "Mairins Gibberlin" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Roud #7269
RECORDINGS:
William Bryan, "Marie from Gippursland" (on IRTravellers01)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Auld Mairin's Gibberlin
Mairins Gibberlin
NOTES [162 words]: Jim Carroll's notes to IRTravellers01 includes the complete text of a "version entitled 'The Jolly Weaver', described as an old Ulster weaving song ... to be found in The Journal of the Irish Folk Song Society of 1906...."; the tradesmen in that text are a weaver with his shuttles and jacks, a sailor with his compass, a mason with his hammer, trowel and plumb-line, and a ploughman "with two ploughshares in his hand." In addition he refers to 'a fragment entitled 'Mairins Gibberlan,' described as 'decidedly objectionable', included in The Greig Duncan Folk Song Collection [vol 7]." There are many examples in traditional song of tradesmen's use of tools of their trade as code for sexual activity. See, for example, "Donnelly," "Anything (II)," "Bill Wiseman," "The Bonny Black Hare," "Coachman's Whip," "Cruising Round Yarmouth," "The German Clockwinder," "The Jolly Tinker (III)," "The Long Peggin' Awl," "Miller Tae My Trade" and "The Thrashing Machine (I)." - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: RcMaNiGh

Mairins McCrie
DESCRIPTION: "Now Mairins being old, and scarcely fit to walk aboot She hired a little girlie to sell her liquor oot, To sell her liquor oot and to serve her with the tea And she sold it to the customers for Mairins McCrie"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1917 (Greig/Duncan8)
KEYWORDS: drink age
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan8 1879, "Mairins McCrie" (1 fragment)
Roud #13572
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Bonnie Lass o' Fyvie" (tune, per Greig/Duncan8)
NOTES [19 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan8 fragment. Greig/Duncan8: "The song is distinctly indelicate." - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD81879

Major and the Weaver, The [Laws Q10]
DESCRIPTION: The weaver comes home suddenly, forcing the major (who is visiting his wife) to hide under the bed. The weaver goes out wearing the major's breeches, containing money and a watch. He claims the same right to the breeches as the major has to his wife

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1938 (Henry)

KEYWORDS: seduction trick bawdy humorous hiding

FOUND IN: US(NE,Ro,So)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
- Laws Q10, "The Major and the Weaver"
- Beck-FolkloreOfMaine, pp. 268-270, "The Miller and the Major" (1 text)
- Flanders/Brown-VermontFolkSongsAndBallads, pp. 91, "Lie Low" (1 fragment, 1 tune, a single stanza which can only tentatively be identified with this song)
- Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #122, "In Bed with the Major" (1 text)
- DT 522, WEAVWIFE

Roud #1005

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "The Boatsman and the Chest" [Laws Q8] (plot) and references there

NOTES [78 words]: The Copper text of "The Little Cobbler" appears to have cross-fertilized with this piece; the two are similar in plot, and the Copper version shares some words as well. But the extreme versions are distinct. This and similar songs are sometimes traced back to a story in Boccaccio (seventh day, second story: Gianella, Peronella, and her husband). But the story is really one of the basic themes of folklore, and doubtless predates Boccaccio as well as these songs. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.8

File: LQ10

Major Andre's Capture [Laws A2]

DESCRIPTION: The young gentleman, John Paulding, escapes from a British prison and helps capture Major Andre. American general Benedict Arnold escapes and leaves Andre to be executed. "And every one wished Andre clear, and Arnold in his stead."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1817 (New American Songster)

KEYWORDS: betrayal execution war prison

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- Oct 2, 1780 - Execution of Major John Andre on a charge of spying for the British

FOUND IN: US(MA,MW,So)

REFERENCES (8 citations):
- Laws A2, "Major Andre's Capture"
- Forget-Me-Not-Songster, pp. 38-40, "Major Andre's Death" (1 tune)
- Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 114, "Major Andrews' Execution" (1 text)
- Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 84-86, "The Ballad of Major Andre" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 129, "Major Andre" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 87, "Death of Major Andre" (1 text, a reprint of an early broadside)
- Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1363, p. 92, "Major Andre's Arrest and Execution" (1 reference)
- DT, ANDREEXEC

Roud #798

NOTES [2444 words]: The story of Benedict Arnold and John Andre perhaps demonstrates why the American Revolution lasted so long: Neither side could really get its armed forces organized or find good officers to put in charge. In the case of Arnold, that very nearly cost the Americans deeply.

Benedict Arnold (1741-1801) was, according to Flexner, p. ix, a "druggist and disreputable horse trader." But he was also one of the best American officers of the Revolutionary War; he was the key figure, e.g., in the first great American victory of the war, at Saratoga (Ketchum, p. 404, reports that he "managed to be everywhere when needed" and lists him first among those responsible for the victory.

What he didn't have was political clout -- or even political understanding. Flexner, pp. xoo-xiii, describes him as delighting in battle -- almost like a knight who enjoyed fighting, or a latter-day Achilles. To his cost, he had none of the political or organizational skills of George Washington. And he had a gripe. A bullet in the knee during the attack on Quebec had lamed him (Marrin, p.
In 1780, Benedict Arnold asked George Washington to give him control of the West Point fortifications. Washington didn't want to waste Arnold on a post where so little action was expected. He would have preferred to give Arnold charge of his left wing -- an important field command. But Arnold had a pretty good argument: His lame knee had been hit again at Saratoga (Lancaster, p. 221; Marrin, p. 140; Ketchum, p. 403 tells how, after being hit, his horse went down and his leg was broken), and he simply wasn't the same physically. He claimed that field command was too strenuous (Marrin, p. 230).

I've read that he asked for command of West Point under British orders (e.g. Marrin, p. 229), but Cook implies that he had not yet gone over to the British. The other possibility is that he was toying with the British, giving them a certain amount of information but not really doing anything to support their cause (this seems to be the situation described on p. 207 of Weintraub). The only thing that is sure is that he would be serving the British soon -- and being called upon to do more than just release a little stale intelligence. If he wanted a traitor's fee, he had to do something that would really help win the war. In short, he had to work out a deal. Which meant talking to John Andre.

Andre (1751-1780) was, according to Marrin, p. 227, "a remarkable person... [H]e was a gentle, lovable man who wrote poetry and enjoyed putting on plays for brother officers. Always cheerful and polite, he had a way of making others want to be his friend." Washington Irving wrote of him "The character, appearance, deportment, and fortunes of Andre had interested the feelings of the oldest and sternest soldiers around him, and completely captivated the sympathies of the younger ones.... Never has any man, suffering under like circumstances, awakened a more universal sympathy even among those of the country against which he practiced" (Walsh, p. 4). Even George Washington, who had him executed, later said, "He was more unfortunate than criminal, and there was much in his character to interest, while we yielded to the necessity of rigor, we could not but lament it" (Walsh, p. 6). Yet Walsh, on the very same page, notes pointedly that "he made a blundering failure of his supremely important mission" and calls it "an incredibly inept performance." And he declares, on p. 7, that Andre was "Not at all the open, accommodating personality he seemed, he was as I see it one of the most calculating of individuals, keenly aware of his peculiar power to impress and fascinate."

Andre was eventually appointed the adjutant of the British commander Henry Clinton, and as such acted as British intelligence chief -- which in turn made him the liaison with Arnold. Arnold by this time was working to weaken the West Point defences (Marrin, p. 230), but the British would need a plan of the fortifications and other details if they were to take advantage of these weaknesses. (According to Walsh, p. 72, the British even hoped to capture George Washington, which would make the blow doubly severe.) To this point, Arnold had been using a go-between by the name of Joseph Stansbury (Weintraub, pp. 206-207), who helped furnish Arnold's lodgings. But this information could hardly be sent by coded letter. Arnold was using what is called a "book code," which forced him to dig through a volume looking for a code for each word. It took forever (Kippenhahn, pp. 45-46, says that Arnold eventually switched to a dictionary, which made things a little faster, but still too slow -- and not especially secure). For a long description, with drawings, that sort of manual encoding was simply impossible. Someone had to physically collect the plans. Andre was the logical candidate. (Walsh, p. 73, says that Andre was under orders not to carry any papers. It's hard to imagine how anyone could have...
On September 20, 1780, the British ship Vulture dropped Andre off for a meeting with Arnold. Andre was in uniform at this time (Walsh, p. 26). But they didn't just exchange plans; they also talked until four in the morning (Cook, p. 329). Caught in the fire of American guns, the Vulture slipped a short distance downstream, leaving Andre behind (Walsh, pp. 79-81, who adds that the ship suffered some minor damage but no casualties). It left Andre behind, what's more, with the tide going against him; rowing to the ship was out of the question (Walsh, pp. 74-75).

The ship in fact didn't go far, but apparently far enough to be out of sight from where Andre and Arnold were meeting (Walsh, p. 82). Walsh also reports (though I suspect it is only his conjecture) that Arnold expected a tightening of security, making it impossible for Andre to simply go back to the ship (p. 85). Plus George Washington was in the vicinity, so everyone was especially vigilant. Andre was close to neutral ground, but either he or Arnold apparently decided he had no choice but to return to the British lines on land, through the American positions. A British sympathizer outfitted him with civilian clothes, and Arnold gave him a pass with a false name (Walsh, pp. 32, 85; he quotes the passes, with the name "John Anderson," on pp. 87-88). It was at this point that Andre became, formally, a spy. Worse, he was an ignorant spy; he needed a guide (Walsh, p. 90), and the guide chose a long and, as it turned out, dangerous route. They were soon stopped by a patrol, and ended up making an unexpected stop for the night (Walsh, pp. 94-95). When they set out the next morning, they were again stopped, though they were allowed to proceed soon after. Later, they encountered an American officer who actually knew Andre's appearance (Walsh, p. 96), but managed to slip by him. Finally Andre left the guide behind and set out on the last leg of his journey. It was then that he was caught.

Sergeant John Paulding (1758-1818) was almost as romantic a figure as Andre; twice captured by the British, he had twice escaped to return to his regiment (Walsh, pp. 99-100, tells how, in his latest escape, he had pretended to be a British soldier and stolen a rowboat to get away. Thus Paulding, we note, was guilty of the very crime for which Andre was hung -- more guilty than Andre, in fact, since Andre was merely out of uniform but Paulding wore a Hessian uniform coat). A force led by Paulding found Andre, seemingly by accident, and captured him with the plans to West Point in his boots. (Walsh, p. 30, says they were actually inside his stockings. One wonders what sort of state they were in by the time the authorities saw them.)

According to Marrin, p. 231, the men who captured Andre were robbers as well as militia; this seems to have been based on Andre's own statement that they probably would have let him go had they found any money (so Walsh, p. 37, while noting that Paulding denied it). But Andre had no cash to give them, so they searched him closely and found the plans. Andre, it should be noted, was taken on "neutral ground," between the lines, so it was formally proper for him to be out of uniform (Walsh, pp. 40-41). Possessing the papers was another matter.

Unfortunately, the papers did not reveal Arnold as the traitor. Lt. Colonel John Jameson, into whose command Andre fell, sent a message to Arnold describing Andre's capture (Cook, p. 330). Arnold managed to flee and make it to the Vulture (Marrin, p. 232). Still, with Arnold gone, the West Point plans safe in American hands, and the whole plot revealed, the fortifications were safe. Andre was captured September 23. Once he realized his predicament, made no secret of his situation; he seems to have hoped for leniency. He was tried before a court of six major generals and eight brigadiers (Walsh, p. 17, but don't take that as too impressive -- the Colonial Congress made far too many generals; those 14 officers would have been majors and colonels in a proper army -- assuming they were promoted that far; many were not worthy of the rank). Walsh, p. 46, says that Washington wanted the Court Martial to return a verdict quickly. So the trial was very speedy; neither side called witnesses, and Andre had no lawyer or counsel.

Andre was convicted. But the American rebels wanted blood, and were not very courteous anyway (note, e.g., their refusal to parole the British soldiers after Saratoga). Walsh, pp. 55-57, described what amounts to mutual blackmail concealed as a prisoner exchange: Clinton threatened American prisoners, and the Americans would accept no less a prize than the betrayal of Arnold. Neither side would give in on the crucial point, and so Andre went to the gallows on October 2; he was denied a firing squad (Cook, p. 331).

The ballad's praise of Andre and dislike of Arnold seems to reflect widespread opinion. Even the men who condemned him, called him a "charming man" and said he deeply regretted the sentence (Walsh, p. 61). George III gave his mother and sisters pensions, and made his brother a baronet. Arnold, by contrast, was hated in America and despised in Britain.

And it was Arnold’s incompetence which had caused the whole thing to fail: He talked too long, and he refused to make sure Andre made it home. Had it not been for his errors, the capture of West Point would have gone off as planned.

Despite his failure, Arnold was well rewarded for his treachery: a British brigadier's commission, six thousand pounds in cash, pensions for his family, and land in Canada (Marrin, p. 234). Walsh, p. 73, says that the offer made to him was for six thousand pounds in cash, plus a brigadier's commission, with the total payout rising to twenty thousand pounds if West Point fell -- and that Arnold held out for at least ten thousand pounds, even if things fell through. Andre supposedly agreed during their conference -- but since Clinton never approved Andre's deal, Arnold was paid only the previously promised six thousand.

Arnold proved unable to use the rewards of his treachery; troops refused to serve under him, and in the end he lost most of his ill-gotten gains in bad business deals (Marrin, p.236).

Walsh consistently tries to change the image of Andre, painting him as a manipulative schemer who lied, e.g., about the girl he claimed to be in love with (Walsh, p. 60), and accuses him of briefly losing his composure upon being sentenced to death (p. 61. One wonders what Walsh would do is such a situation). He credits Andre's ability to make a good sketch of himself to the major's repeated use of himself as a subject (p. 62). It really does seem to be the picture of a man grasping at straws to find a reason to condemn Andre.

This was, incidentally, one of the last major events of the American Revolution in the north. The British navy at this time was at a rather low ebb; you would never know that it was the fleet that, 25 years later, would win Trafalgar. Despite their theoretical naval superiority, the British were in effect fighting two wars, one from New York and one from Charleston. And, by this time, most of the effort was going into Charleston. Had Arnold's treachery succeeded, the war in the north might have heated up again -- but Arnold failed.

Spaeth (A History of Popular Music in America, p. 24) refers to a song called "Sergeant Champe" which has this precise plot, and which was published in 1780 to the tune of "Barbara Allen," but I have never encountered his title in tradition. - RBW

Bibliography

- Ketchum: Richard M. Ketchum, Saratoga: Turning Point of America's Revolutionary War, Henry Holt, 1997

Last updated in version 6.0
File: LA02

Major Special, The

DESCRIPTION: "Oh you come down on this Ramsey, partner, 'specially Ramsey Two, Hmmm, fix it in your mind, buddy, you got your time to do." The Major knows the river too well for convicts to escape. The singer recalls many years in the prison

AUTHOR: J. B. Smith
EARLIEST DATE: 1966 (recorded from J. B. Smith by Jackson)

KEYWORDS: prison hardtimes

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Jackson-WakeUpDeadMan, pp. 163-164, "The Major Special" (1 text)

NOTES [77 words]: All of the songs Jackson recorded from J. B. Smith included a large amount of material unique to Smith, but this one has perhaps the highest proportion of all; there is very little recognizable traditional material. As a result, I have listed Smith as the author. I almost thought of tagging the piece with the "moniker" keyword, since it refers to several of the prison staff that Smith dealt with. But it doesn't really fit the general form of a moniker song. - RBW

File: JDM163

---

Major, The

DESCRIPTION: Dublin 1798: "The Major" supported Orange "hangman hacks," "told informers what to swear," tried to prevent his Jemmy's execution and finally converted to Methodism. All "who have their catechism well" agree "whene'er he dies [he] will go to hell"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1810 (Cox's _Irish Magazine_, according to Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

KEYWORDS: violence death nonballad political police

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 165, "The Major" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
*cf. "Henry Downs" (character of Major Sirr) and references there
*cf. "Jemmy O'Brien's Minuet" (characters)

NOTES [219 words]: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815: "The Major of the title was Town-Major Sirr, chief of the Dublin police, captor of Lord Edward Fitzgerald and Thomas Russell... The Jemmy referred to ... was Sirr's creature, Jemmy O'Brien.... In 1800 he [O'Brien] killed a man near Steevens' Lane in a fit of temper, was convicted of the crime and was sentenced to hang. Sirr tried [unsuccessfully] to 'fix' the trial.... In later life Major Sirr turned to religion and became a Methodist." For more about Major Sirr see "Henry Downs," "Edward" (III) (Edward Fitzgerald)," "The Man from God-Knows-Where" and the notes to "Who Killed Cock Robin?" (II). For more about Jemmy O'Brien see "Hevey's Mare," "Jemmy O'Brien" and "Jemmy O'Brien's Minuet." - BS

The Oxford Companion to Irish History gives Sirr's dates as 1764-1841. He came from a firmly loyalist family; his father Joseph would for a time be Dublin's Town Major (roughly equivalent to police chief). Henry joined the army at about 14, ending his service in 1791. He went into business in Dublin in that year, but was appointed Town Major in 1796. He held that office until it was abolished in 1808, and retained the title even after that; he continued to serve as a magistrate until 1826. He reportedly became very interested in Irish antiquities late in his life. - RBW

File: Moyl165

---

Majuba Hill

DESCRIPTION: The singer sighs for "my militia man That sleeps on Majuba Hill" She met her man on Clifton Street on Sunday night and "I let him have his will" He sailed away. She heard a Banshee cry and dog moan one November night and at dawn had news he was dead.

AUTHOR: Hugh Quinn (1884-1956) (source: Hammond-SongsOfBelfast)

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (_Rann Magazine_ Summer 1952, according Roud)

KEYWORDS: grief courting sex battle parting death lover soldier

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Feb 26, 1881 - Boers defeat the British at Majuba Hill ("By the second Boer War the battle cry was 'Remember Majuba!'"'). (source: "The Battle of Majuba Hill -The First Boer War 1881" at Books on Hector MacDonald site)

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hammond-SongsOfBelfast, pp. 38-39, "Majuba Hill" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [465 words]: Hammond-SongsOfBelfast: The song "recalls the garrison town of Belfast in Victorian times when streets like Clifton Street were thronged with soldiers and female admirers on a Sunday night." - BS

The opening conflict of the (first) Boer War came on December 20, 1880, at Bronkhorstspruit, when "264 officers of the 94th Regiment (Connaught Rangers), marching from Lydenburg to Pretoria, were halted on the march by a Boer commando and ordered to turn back. The lieutenant-colonel in command was given two minutes to reply to the demand. He refused to surrender and was killed by the Boers' opening shots." Most of the other British soldiers were killed as well. (Farwell, pp. 244-245).

The British commander on the scene, Sir George Pomeroy Colley, wanted both revenge and glory. He found neither. He suffered a nasty and unnecessary defeat at Laing's Nek (Farwell, p. 246), then for some reason decided that the Commander in Chief needed to escort a mail wagon; he took with him only six companies. He suffered heavily in a running battle, and then found himself confronted by an entrenched Boer position. At least he had the sense not to attack that; instead, he headed for high ground; his force by this time, according to Farwell, consisted of 490 soldiers and 64 sailors. Colley's forces reached the position at night, but -- despite the entreaties of his subordinates -- did not order his men to entrench.

On February 26, 1881, at Majuba Hill (properly Amajuba Hill, the Hill of Doves), The British forces were routed and Colley himself killed (van Hartsveldt, p. 4). Van Hartesveldt, p. 5, adds that the British took no heavy weapons up the hill, and perhaps were exhausted, and the slope of the hill was such that it was hard to defend with small arms.

The Boers lost one (Farwell, p. 250) or two men killed (Pakenham, p. xxix), and perhaps five wounded. British losses were 93 killed, 133 wounded, 58 taken prisoner.

A more conservative government might have kept up the fight; losses were still relatively slight. But the liberal government of Gladstone was not imperialist; it gave the Boers something analogous to Home Rule: Internal self-direction as long as they accepted nominal British authority and did not insist on an independent foreign policy (van Hartesveldt, p. 5).

Majuba Day would become something of a holiday to the Boers -- at least until Boers under Cronje surrendered on that day in the second Boer War (Belfield, p. 88).

"If one were forced to say, as in a school examination paper, at what exact moment in history the mighty British Empire began to crumble, it would perhaps not be far wrong to point to that Sunday afternoon in February 1881 when British soldiers, fleeing from Boer farm boys, ran down the steep slopes of Majuba Hill" (Farwell, p. 252). - RBW

Bibliography

- Belfield: Eversley Belfield, The Boer War, 1975 (I use the 1993 Leo Cooper/Barnes & Noble reprint)
- Farwell: Byron Farwell, Queen Victoria's Little Wars (1972; I used the 1985 Norton edition)

Last updated in version 2.5

File: Hamm038

Make Me a Garment

DESCRIPTION: "Mama, mama, make me a garment, And make it long, white, and narrow."
"Mama.... look on my pillow and you will find some money." "Come along, boys... come pay my fine." The singer's love is dead; the singer will die also

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (collected from Roscoe McLean)

KEYWORDS: love clothes death money

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 358-359, "Make Me a Garment" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #15596

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Bonny Barbara Allen" [Child 84] (lyrics, theme)

NOTES [37 words]: Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry says this "contains lines from Barbara Allen." In fact, of the eight lines, five could be derived from the ballad. I suspect that this is in fact a much-word-down-by-blow of the ballad. - RBW
Make Me a Pallet on Your Floor

DESCRIPTION: Possibly about life in the south (Atlanta?) and the singer's desire to return or a meeting between the singer's lover and girl. Chorus: "Make me a pallet on your floor (x2), Make it soft, make it low, so my good gal won't know Make me..."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (version copyrighted by W. C. Handy)

KEYWORDS: nonballad separation loneliness home return floatingverses sex infidelity

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankC BrownCollectionNC Folklore 3 291, "Cornbread When I'm Hungry" (2 fragments; the "A" text combines "Moonshiner" with "Make Me a Pallet on Your Floor"; "B" mixes "Moonshiner" with what appears to be a minstrel song)
Handy/Silverman-BluesAnAnthology, pp. 190-192, "Atlanta Blues (Make Me One Pallet on Your Floor)" (1 text, 1 tune, loosely based on this song)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 292-294, "Lovin' Babe" (1 text, composite of floating verses including this one)
DT, PALLTFLR*

RECORDINGS:
Mississippi John Hurt, "Ain't No Tellin'" (OKeh 8759, 1930; rec. 1928; on MJHurt01, MJHurt02); "Pallet on the Floor" (on FOTM); "Pallet On the Floor" (on MJHurt04)
Merline Johnson (the Yas Yas Girl) "Pallet on the Floor" (Bluebird B-7166, 1937)
Grandpa Jones, "Fix Me a Pallet" (King 1069, 1952)
Virginia Liston, "Make Me a Pallet" (OKeh 8247, 1925)
Stripling Brothers, "Pallet on the Floor" (Decca 5367, 1936)
Ethel Waters, "Make Me a Pallet on the Floor" (Columbia 14125-D, 1926)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Chilly Winds" (floating lyrics)

Make We Merry Both More and Less

DESCRIPTION: "Make we mery bothe more and lasse, For now is the time of Christmas." All who come to the feast are enjoined to bring some entertainment: A song, a sport, etc. "If he say he can nought do... But to the stokkes then let him go."

AUTHOR: unknown (contemporary tune by Martin Shaw)

EARLIEST DATE: before 1537 (Richard Hill MS., Balliol Coll. Oxf. 354)

KEYWORDS: carol Christmas food party nonballad Middle English

FOUND IN: Britain(England)

REFERENCES (13 citations):
Dearmer/VaughnWilliams/Shaw-OxfordBookOfCarols 172, "Make We Merry" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sidgwick/Chambers-EarlyEnglishLyrics CXXXVI, p. 234, "(no title)" (1 text)
Greene-TheEarlyEnglishCarols, #11, p. 9, "(Lett no man cum into this hall)" (1 text)
Hirsh-MedievalLyric-MiddleEnglishLyricsBalladsCarols #11, (Make we mery, bothe more and lasse)" (1 text)
Stevick-OneHundredMiddleEnglishLyrics 98, "(Make We Myrie Bothe More and Lasse)" (1 text)
Rickert-AncientEnglishChristmasCarols, pp. 220-221, "Make we merry, both more and less" (1 text)
Brown/Robbins-IndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse, #1866
DigitalIndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse, #3059

ADDITIONAL: Roman Dyboski, _Songs, Carols, and Other Miscellaneous Poems from the Balliol Ms. 354, Richard Hill's Commonplace Book_, Kegan Paul, 1907 (there are now multiple print-on-demand reprints), #27, p. 15, "(Make we mery, bothe more & lasse)" (1 text)
Making a Pile

DESCRIPTION: A gold-hunting miner alternates between cheer and gloom as he considers his prospects. He starts out doleful, "My spirits now are low, and I feel quite down-hearted... And I very often doubt I'll make my pile." Then he has hope, the it's back to gloom

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1970 (AndersonStory)

KEYWORDS: mining gold hardtimes

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (4 citations):
- Thatcher-ColonialMinstrel-Songsters, pp. 89-91, "Making a Pile" (1 text, from "Thatcher's Colonial Songster")
- Anderson-StoryOfAustralianFolksong, pp. 24-26, "Making a Pile" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Hoskins-GoldfieldBalladeer-LifeAndTimes-Charles-R-Thatcher, pp. 145-146, "Making a Pile" (1 text)
- Anderson/Thatcher-GoldDiggersSongbook, pp. 29-30, "Making a Pile" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "All 'round my Hat" (tune)

File: AnSt024

Making My Will (Father Abdey's Will)

DESCRIPTION: The singer, who is dying, leaves his entire estate to his wife. The estate is detailed in exquisitely rhymed, exquisitely monotonous detail

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1945 (Flanders/Olney-BalladsMigrantInNewEngland)

KEYWORDS: dying bequest lastwill

FOUND IN: US(NE)
Malahide Fishermen, The

DESCRIPTION: On a calm November 18 "four brave seamen ... took their nets and line." Neptune, Boreas, and Death conspire to "rise an awful squall" and they "were lost here in Fingal" The four are named.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1943 (Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast)

KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship storm wreck fishing

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, pp. 14-15, "The Malahide Fishermen" (1 text)
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 56A, "The Malahide Fishermen" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9780

NOTES [16 words]: Malahide is in the Fingal administrative area on the County Dublin coast, north of Dublin city. - BS

Last updated in version 5.0

File: Ran014

Malbrouck

DESCRIPTION: French language: "Malbrouck s'en va-t-en dguere-re/Marlborough he's gone to war." Marlborough is slow in returning home; he is dead and in his tomb. Details of his funeral are given

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1896 (Trebecq)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage nobility death burial funeral

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1650-1722 - Life of John Churchill, 1st Duke of Marlborough
1701-1714 - War of the Spanish Succession, pitting France and Spain against Britain, Austria, and many smaller nations. Marlborough made a reputation by winning the battles of Blenheim (1704), Ramillies (1706), and Oudenarde (1708) (he fought a draw at Malplaquet in 1709)

FOUND IN: France

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 108, "Malbrouck" (1 text, 1 tune)
Chase-AmericanFolkTalesAndSongs, pp. 202-205, "Molly Brooks" (1 tune plus dance figures)
Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, pp. 231-233, "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow -- (Malbrouk -- We Won't Go Home till Morning! -- The Bear Went over the Mountain)
cf. List-SingingAboutIt-FolkSongsInSouthernIndiana, pp. 146-151, "We'll All Go Down to Rowsers" (1 text, 1 tune, plus sheet music reprints of "Malbrouck" and "For He's a Jolly Good Fellow") ADDITIONAL: George Borrow, _Romano Lavo-Lil: Word-Book of the Romany or English Gypsy Language_, 1874 (references are to the 2011? Lost Library reprint), pp. 164-169, "Malbrun," "Malbrouk" (1 text plus a a translation from a Spanish Gypsy text, presumably this although not clearly identified)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "We Won't Go Home Until Morning" (tune) and references there
cf. "The Duke of Marlborough" (subject: The Duke of Marlborough)

NOTES [235 words]: For the history of this tune, see the entry on "We Won't Go Home Until Morning."

It should be noted that this song has nothing to do with the historical Marlborough, although Ruth Dudley Edwards, _The Seven: The Lives and Legacies of the Founding Fathers of the Irish Republic_, OneWorld Books, 2016, p. 155 note, says that it was based on a false report that Marlborough was killed in the Battle of Malplaquet in 1709. She adds that it supposedly was brought to Ireland by Thomas MacDonagh, one of the Irish revolutionaries on 1916.
According to William J. Entwistle, European Balladry, Oxford University Press, 1939; corrected second impression with a new prefatory note 1951, p. 53, "A simple instance of migration [of a tune from country to country] is Marlborough s'en va en guerre. The tune may come from a seventeenth-century hunting song, but it suddenly sprang into popularity in 1781 through being taken up by the Dauphin's nurse and taken up by Marie Antoinette. It spread abroad so rapidly that Goethe heard it almost everywhere on the road to Naples." Entwistle goes on to mention French and German versions that differ by just one note, plus a Catalan version with more extensive changes. Chase-AmercianFolkTalesAndSongs describes "Molly Brooks" as an American "wearing-down" of Marlborough. Hence the classification of his dance piece here rather than under one of the other Malbrouck tunes. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.3
File: K108

Malek Adehl, The
DESCRIPTION: "Up with the black signal, and brace for the battle, A United States cruiser plows upon our lee.' "Prime well your lee guns and stand by with your matches To sink or to die for Malek Adhel." Damaged, the cry is to "strike the black flag of Malek Adehl." AUTHORITY: Music: "Will Watch" by John Davy (1765-1824)
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1845 (The Pirate's Songster, according to Frank-NewBookOfPirateSongs)
KEYWORDS: pirate battle
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1840 - the Malek Adehl [correct transliteration], accused of piracy, is captured by the brig USS Enterprise
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Frank-NewBookOfPirateSongs 58, "The Malek Adehl" (1 text, 1 tune; #46 in the first edition, where it is incorrectly associated with the battles against the Barbary Pirates)
Roud #V30373
File: FrPi058A

Mallard, The
DESCRIPTION: "I have et, and what have I et, I have et the toe of a mallard." And so forth, through foot, heel, leg, etc., culminating in the entire bird. "And," we are assured, "good-a meat was the mallard." AUTHORITY: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1889
KEYWORDS: bird food cumulative nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South)) Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 299, "The Mallard" (1 text, 1 tune)
Peacock, pp. 16-17, "The Mallard" (1 text, 1 tune)
Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #137. "The Mallard" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1517
RECORDINGS:
Mrs. Mary Ann Galpin, "The Mallard" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
Henry Mitchelmore, "Most Beautiful Leg of the Mallard" (on Voice07)
Bunny Palmer et al, "The Mallard" (on Lomax41, LomaxCD1741)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Red Herring" (theme)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Mullard
File: K299

Mally Leigh
DESCRIPTION: An extravagant description of Mally's beauty and its effect on men. Men turn aside to see her; a countess "pines" for her; nobles "each one thocht his Kate or Moll a drab to Mally Leigh." Even royalty is not immune (but she is true to the man she loves)

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Ford)
KEYWORDS: beauty courting
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 176-178, "Mally Leigh" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan4 720, "Mally Leigh" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6130
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Mally Lee
NOTES [51 words]: Generally held to commemorate one Mally Sleigh, who is said to have married Lord Lyon Brodie in 1725. I know of no supporting evidence except widespread belief; Ford cites a manuscript of the song "subsequent to 1760." If Sleigh (or Brodie) had any subsequent influence on history, I do not know of it. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.5
File: FVS176B

Malone

DESCRIPTION: Pat claims Mick Malone borrowed half-a-crown and "never brough it back." He won't lend him more because Malone "well knows how to borrow But he don't know how to pay." If Pat catches Malone he'll "stop his dirty tricks ... I'll give him cause to moan"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1985 (IRTravellers01)
KEYWORDS: accusation nonballad money thief
FOUND IN: Ireland
Roud #16689
RECORDINGS:
Mikeen McCarthy, "Malone" (on IRTravellers01)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Half Crown
NOTES [63 words]: The repeated lines here are "A half-a-crown is a half-a-crown, Of course it's two and six." - BS
Every time I read this, I'm reminded of the Blind Blake song "Jones." The feel of the lyrics is much alike, but the item stolen is different (money versus girlfriend), and of course they're very different in style. I guess it just shows how certain emotions exist across cultures. - RBW

File: RcMalone

Maltman and the Highwayman, The DESCRIPTION: A maltman is robbed by a highwayman and left bleeding. A miller finds his neighbor maltman, hears his story, borrows his horse, chases down and kills the highwayman. The maltman testifies for the miller and clears him of the murder charge.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames)
KEYWORDS: homicide robbery trial reprieve death friend miller thief
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 250-251, "The Maltman and the Highwayman" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 355)
Roud #1309
NOTES [32 words]: Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO is missing the Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames third verse in which the maltman unsuccessfully tries to fob off three pounds of silver when he has twenty guineas. - BS

Last updated in version 2.6
File: WT250
Mama Bought Me a Pincushion

DESCRIPTION: "Mama bought me a pincushion, pinuchion, pincushion, Mama bought... one, two, three." "What did Mama pay for it?" "Paid with Papa's feather bed." "What will Papa sleep on?" "Sleep on the washtub." And so forth

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1966 (Coffin & Cohen, who seem to date it to 1899)
KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
ADDITIONAL: Tristram P. Coffin and Hennig Cohen, _Folklore in America: Tales, Songs, Superstitions, Proverbs, Riddles, Games, Folk Drama and Folk Festivals_, Doubleday, 1966, pp. 191-192, "A Child's Dance Rhyme" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
 cf. "Milking Pails (China Doll)" (cumulative theme)

Mama Don't 'Low

DESCRIPTION: "Mama don't 'low no banjo playin 'round here... Well, I don't care what mama don't 'low, Gonna play my banjo anyhow...." Mama forbids all sorts of things, from jazz playing to motorcycle riding, but the singer is not discouraged

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (recording, Charlie Jackson)
KEYWORDS: music mother nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 452, "Mama Don't Allow No Low Down Hanging Around" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 21, "Mama Don't 'Low" (1 text)
DT, MAMADONT
Roud #11793
RECORDINGS:
Allen Bros., "No Low Down Hanging 'Round" (Victor 23536, 1930; Bluebird B-5448, 1934; Montgomery Ward M-4797, 1935)
Connie Boswell & her Swing Band, "Mama Don't Allow It" (Decca 747, 1936)
Milton Brown & his Brownies, "Mama Don't Allow It" (Decca 5281, 1936)
Smilie Burnett, "Mama Don't Like Music" (Perfect 13011, 1934)
Bill Boyd & his Cowboy Ramblers, "Mama Don't Like No Music" (Bluebird B-5855, 1935; Bluebird B-6235/Montgomery Ward M-4791, c. 1936)
Charlie Jackson, "Mama Don't Allow It" (Paramount 12296, 1925)
Leon's Lone Star Cowboys, "Mama Don't Allow It" (Champion 49151, n.d.; Decca 5423, 1937; Montgomery Ward 8045, 1939)
Riley Puckett, "Mama Don't Allow No Low Down Hanging Around" (Columbia 15261-D, 1928)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
 cf. "Johnny and Jane" (lyrics)
NOTES [95 words]: The Brown text is very distinct from the common, bluegrass/jazz-type arrangements of this piece; the first verse and chorus are"
Well, I get up in the morning,
See no rain;
Looked in the pantry,
See the same old thing.
Mama don't allow no low down hanging around.

Chorus:
Mama don't allow it,
Sister don't care.
Papa don't 'low it,
Won't have it here.
Mama don't low no low down hanging around.

But the ending is familiar: "Well, I don't care What your mama don't 'low, Gonna have fun anyhow."
Clearly the same song, with the popular texts presumably a modern adaption. - RBW
Mama Lama
DESCRIPTION: "Mama lama kuma lama kumala beesta O no no no no na beesta" "Otchy potchy kuma loma"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1970 (JohnsIsland1)
KEYWORDS: nonsense playparty nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
RECORDINGS:
Mabel Hillery, Janie Hunter and her grandchildren, "Mama Lama" (on JohnsIsland1)
File: RcMamaLa

Mama Pass the Corn Bread
DESCRIPTION: "Mama pass the corn bread, Papa pass the coon, Baby's little belly growls About a(n) empty spoon."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1971 (NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal)
KEYWORDS: food mother father
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal, Joseph D. Clarke, "Burke Davis as Folklorist," Vol. XIX, No. 2 (Mar 1971), p. 63, "(Folk Song)" (5 stanzas, probably representing multiple songs, beginning "Mamma pass the corn bread," "Chicken in the bread tray," "Oh, Nellie had a pair of shoes," "Ye living men come view the ground," "Eat the meat, gnaw the bone;" the second is from "Granny Will Your Dog Bite?"; the third is as "Mama Pass the Corn Bread" and the third as "Barefoot Nellie"; the last two are too short to file)
File: NCF192MP

Mama, Mama
DESCRIPTION: "Well, it's Mama, Mama, O Lord, you don't know" (x2). "Well, it's trouble I've been havin', Mamma, ain't gonna have no mo'." If hearers see his Mama, he asks that she write to the governor for clemency. He regrets the bullies in the prison
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934 (collected from A. Haggerty, "Track Horse")
KEYWORDS: prisoner hardtimes separation
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, p. 355, "Mamma, Mama" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #15597
File: LoSi355

Mamma's Goin' to Buy Him a Little Lap Dog (Come Up Horsie)
DESCRIPTION: Lullaby: "Mama's goin' to buy him a little lap dog/Put him in his lap when she goes off...Go to sleep and don't you cry/Mama's goin' to buy you some apple pie" Cho: "Come up horsie, hey hey (2x)"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (recording, Vera Hall Ward)
KEYWORDS: food lullaby nonballad animal dog horse
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Arnold-FolkSongsofAlabama, p. 152, "Little Lap Dog" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Roud #10997
RECORDINGS:
Mamma's Gone to the Mail Boat

DESCRIPTION: "Bye-o, baby, bye (x2), Mama's gone to the mail boat." "Go to sleepy, baby, bye, Papa's gone...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry)
KEYWORDS: lullaby mother father
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, p. 94, "Mamma's Gone to the Mail Boat" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6373
NOTES [17 words]: Roud lumps this with "All the Pretty Little Horses"/"Go to sleepy, little baby." I don't see it. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.2

File: LxSi094

Mamman Donne Moi un Pitit Mari (Mama Gave Me a Little Husband)

DESCRIPTION: Creole French. "Maman donne moin un pitit mari. Bon Dieu, quel un homme comme li piti! Mo mette le couche dans mo lite, Bon Dieu, comme li si t'on pitit!" Mama gave me a little husband. My god, he's tiny! ... The cat mistakes him for a mouse."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)
KEYWORDS: husband wife foreignlanguage animal
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, pp. 21-22, "Maman Donne Moin un Pitit Mari" (1 fragment, 1 tune); p. 123, "Mamman Donne Moi un Pitit Mari" (1 short text with loose English translation)
NOTES [89 words]: Scarborough, in transcribing her first text, notes that Creole French "is no more like correct French than Negro dialect is like ordinary English. The songs are difficult to capture...." I suspect she is trying to say, "I've no idea what this means." If she, who had contact with the informants, did not, I'm not even going to try until we get a better text. Although Scarborough's second fragment does not make it clear, one suspects that the girl's complaint is not with her husband's height but with, um, certain other dimensions. - RBW

File: ScNF123B

Mammie's Pet

DESCRIPTION: "Let never another young man marry mammie's pet." Her mother teaches her needlework, dancing, and playing the piano instead of baking, brewing, and washing. And the promised dowry? "When the day of payment came, they did them all deny"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1891 (Kidson-TraditionalTunes)
KEYWORDS: dowry marriage warning nonballad mother wife
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber,Bord))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig/Duncan7 1298, "Mammie's Pet" (1 text)
Kidson-TraditionalTunes, pp. 93-94, "The Mammy's Pet" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #1098

File: GrD71298
Mammy in the Kitchen
DESCRIPTION: "Mammy in the kitchen cookin' pink beans; Daddie on the ocean dodgin' submarines."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1919 (Brown)
KEYWORDS: food work war technology
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 497, "Mammy in the Kitchen" (1 text)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 497, "Mammy in the Kitchen" (1 tune plus a text excerpt)
Roud #11764
NOTES [37 words]: Since this was collected in 1919, it clearly refers to World War I and the German submarine blockade of Great Britain. It is said to have been sung by soldiers in France. It's unfortunate that we don't have more of it. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.1
File: Br3497

Mammy's Little Boy
DESCRIPTION: "Who all de time a-hidin' In de cotton an' de corn? Mammy's little boy, Mammy's little boy, Who all de time a-blowin' Ol' Massa's dinner horn?" The little boy runs, steals away to the kitchen, fusses; Mammy keeps careful watch
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)
KEYWORDS: lullaby food baby
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, pp. 158-159, "Mammy's Little Boy" (1 text)
ST ScaNF158 (Partial)
File: ScaNF158

Man Ain't Nothin' But a Stupid Fool, A
DESCRIPTION: "Yes, a man ain't nothin' but a stupid fool To think he got a woman all by himself... Well, I say, as soon as his back is turned, You know she cuttin' out with somebody else... Yes, man ain't nothing but a crazy fool To give one woman all his pay"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1963
KEYWORDS: love infidelity
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Courlander-NegroFolkMusic, pp. 130-131, (no title) (1 text)
File: CNFM130

Man Behind the Plough, The
DESCRIPTION: A defense of "the man that walks behind the plough." He is glad for his sons to be in school, learning to read and write and sporting round at night, but his strength is failing and he needs them to raise food on the farm.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Ives-FolksongsOfNewBrunswick)
KEYWORDS: farming nonballad age children
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ives-FolksongsOfNewBrunswick, pp. 62-65, "The Man Behind the Plough" (1 text, 1 tune)
Man Behind, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer's father warns, "Don't ever be too forward, lad, but act with modesty; In battle it's the man in front that's always shot... But the general gets the credit, for he's the man behind." Other examples show that it's best to be "the man behind"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Collected by Shellans-FolkSongsOfTheBlueRidgeMountains from John Daniel Vass)

KEYWORDS: warning humorous soldier clothes food technology

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Shellans-FolkSongsOfTheBlueRidgeMountains, pp. 82-83, "The Man Behind" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 86, "The Man Behind" (1 fragment, tune references)

Roud #7358 and 12812

NOTES [79 words]: Shellans-FolkSongsOfTheBlueRidgeMountains speculates that this might have originated in Vaudeville. I agree that it has that sort of feeling (or, even more, the music hall or comic opera), but I failed to turn up any versions in web searches. (The fact that the title is a very common phrase doesn't help...).

The Pankakes say that their fragment is sung to "The Wearing of the Green." Not so the version in Shellan -- so, at the very least, there has been folk processing. - RBW

File: Shel082

Man from Conner's Crew, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer, a novice "river hog" in the pinewoods, chances the "Hulling Machine" rapids rather than portage his canoe. Caught, he prepares to die, gamely shouting "Halloo" to Conner's crew as he passes them. One of them rescues him.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1941 (Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks)

KEYWORDS: lumbering work rescue dying logger worker recitation

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks 29, "The Man from Conner's Crew" (1 text)
- Beck-LoreOfTheLumberCamps 84, "The Man from Conner's Crew" (1 text)

Roud #4063

NOTES [41 words]: Beck leaves it up in the air whether this was a recitation or a song to which his informant had forgotten a tune. However, it reads more like a recitation, so I've assigned it that keyword. - PJS

This song is item dC42 in Laws's Appendix II. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2

File: Be029

Man from God-Knows-Where, The

DESCRIPTION: A mysterious stranger joined the men around the fire at Andy Lemon's Inn and rode on into the snow. "Two winters more, then the Trouble Year": the French are defeated. Some time after that the singer sees the stranger hanged at Downpatrick gaol.

EARLIEST DATE: 2000 (Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

KEYWORDS: rebellion execution Ireland patriotic recitation

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- May-June 1798 - Irish rebellion against British rule
- August-September 1798 - A French force under General Jean-Joseph-Amable Humbert lands in Ireland and is defeated.
- 1803 - Emmet attempts a new rebellion. The revolt is quickly crushed.
Sep 20, 1803 - Robert Emmet is hanged
Oct 21, 1803 - Thomas Russell is hanged

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 161, "The Man from God-Knows-Where" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Oh! Breathe Not His Name" (subject: concealed allusions to Robert Emmet)
cf. "She is Far From the Land" (subject: concealed allusions to Robert Emmet)
cf. "When He Who Adores Thee" (subject: concealed allusions to Robert Emmet)
cf. "Henry Downs" (character of Major Sirr) and references there

NOTES [232 words]: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815: "The poem was written in 1918 as a recitation."
Moylan: "Upon hearing of Emmet's arrest, Thomas Russell hurried to Dublin to attempt a rescue." He was taken there by Town Major Sirr. "Russell had been the United Irish organizer in Co. Down. After his conviction for treason he was hanged in Downpatrick on the 21st of October 1803." I am too dense to connect Moylan's dots and make Russell's execution the subject of Wilson's poem. Others, seeing more clearly, make the connection. [Personally, I can connect too many dots -- e.g. an alternate possibility is that Emmet is hanged in 1803, the French are defeated two years later at Trafalgar, and then someone else is hanged the time after that. - RBW] See, for example, "Man from God-knows-where," June 23, 2005, at the Newry Journal site. Also, from the Down County Museum site article on "Thomas Russell" states that Russell was the gaol's most famous prisoner known now to many County Down people as "the man from God knows where" from Wilson's ballad "which generations of school children learnt!"; the museum site has information about Russell's career and documents related to the trial. Town Major Sirr is a frequent villain in Dublin incidents after "the Troubles"; see, for example, "Henry Downs," "Edward (III) (Edward Fitzgerald), "The Major" and the notes to "Who Killed Cock Robin?" II). - BS

Last updated in version 5.1

File: Moyl161

---

Man in the Moon Came Down Too Soon, The

DESCRIPTION: "The man in the moon Came down too soon, And asked his way to Norwich; He went by the south, And burnt his mouth With supping cold plum porridge."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1810 (Gammer Gurton's Garland)

KEYWORDS: food injury travel

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 331, "The man in the moon" (1 text)
Dolby-OrangesAndLemons, p. 91, "The Man in the Moon" (1 text)
Roud #19744

NOTES [792 words]: In one of his earliest attempts to examine what the lost archetypes of nursery rhymes might have been like, J. R. R. Tolkien dramatically expanded this as "The Man in the Moon Came Down Too Soon," later to become #6 in the _Adventures of Tom Bombadil_; Tolkien's poem first appeared in 1923 (Shippey, p. 36), which I believe means that either it or Tolkien's other "Man in the Moon" poem, "The Man in the Moon Stayed Up Too Late" (his attempt to "explain" "Hey Diddle Diddle, the Cat and the Fiddle") was the first published example of the Middle-Earth writings. According to Tolkien, p. 186, Tolkien's oldest manuscript copy of his poem dates from March 1915. At one stage, Tolkien used the subtitle "An East Anglian Phantasy," although he later dropped that. There has been a surprising amount of scholarship about this particular poem and what Tolkien did with it; these are listed in the Scull/Hammond reference cited above. George MacDonald also fiddled with the poem; he made a sort of expanded combination of the two "moon" rhymes in "The True History of the Cat and the Fiddle" in the chapter "Another Early Bird," chapter 24 of _At the Back of the North Wind._
There was quite a bit of medieval folklore about the Man in the Moon (most of which Tolkien would have known although MacDonald likely did not); Brown, p. 234, says: "According to the general folk-story, the Man in the Moon was a thief, and he was represented as carrying a bundle of thorns. In the Low Countries he was named Burno" -- a connection with burning his mouth? Similarly Dickins/Wilson, pp. 131, "According to a widespread folk-tale the man in the moon is supposed to be a peasant who has been banished there because he has stolen the thorns or brushwood which he is carrying on his fork."

Brown also says, "Popular tradition connected the Man in the Moon with the story of Cain, as O. F. Emerson has shown ('Medieval Legends of Cain', PMLA, xxi, 841-3). The legend of the Man in the Moon and his bundle of thorns was mentioned in the fifteenth century by Henryson in the Testament of Cressid:

On her brest a chorle painted ful even
Bearing a bush of thorns on his backe
Which for his theft might clim no ner the heven.

"It is twice introduced by Shakespeare, M.N.D., Act V, Sc. i, and Tempest, Act II, Sc. ii."

The Henryson text cited, according to both Kindrick, p. 164, and Fox, p. 119, is lines 261-263, i.e. the second through fourth lines of stanza 38 (the poem is in seven-line stanzas). Kendrick, p. 181, also mentions the link through Shakespeare: "The churl bearing a bunch of thorns on his back as part of the moon's iconography reminds one of the rude mechanicals' efforts to represent Moonshine with his 'bunch' of thorns in Shakespeare's A Midsummer Night's Dream." That the Henryson lines refer to the moon is made clear in line 253, which refers to "lady Cynthia," which in line 254 is said to be the planet "swiftest in her spheir" (Fox, p. 119).

It appears that Brown's text is quoted from one of the Anglicized editions (probably William Thynne's) and likely does not represent the original Scots text very well. Fox, who used all three surviving prints, gives the text of the three lines as

And on hir breist ane churile paintit full euin
Beirand ane bunche of thornis on his bak,
Quhilk for his thift micht clim na nar the heuin.

Both Fox and Kindrick read "bunch" for Brown's "bush"; bush is read only by Thynne. There are no other variations in the lines except those caused by Anglicization.

Brown, pp. 160-161, and Dickins/Wilson, pp. 123-124, cite an even earlier Man in the Moon poem (which is why both were commenting on the legend), from MS. Harley 2253 (the transcription is Brown's; Dickins/Wilson's has "ant" for "&" in the first line):

Mon in e mone stond & strit,
On is bot-forke is bur en he bere ;
Ht is much wonder at he nadoun slyt,
for doute lest he valle, he shoddre and shere .
Loosely translated:
Man in the moon stands and strides,
On his forked stick [hay-fork?] his burden he bears.
It is a great wonder that he does not sit down
For fear that he fall, he shudders and swerves.
The poem goes on to describe him as driving stakes to establish a boundary, and calls him the slowest man that ever was born, who does little work. Finally he disappears in the dark (again giving us a possible link to the man coming down in this rhyme).

This poem was reprinted by Ritson in Ancient Songs and Ballads, but Ritson misunderstood it at several points I think it fairly likely that it is a "folk" piece, but there is no evidence of a tune, and it is so old that we really can't place it in a folk context the famous manuscript Harley 2253, the "Harley Lyrics," which in general do not appear to be "folk." - RBW

Bibliography

- Brown: Carleton Brown, editor, English Lyrics of the XIIIth Century, Oxford University Press, 1932 (I use the 1962 reprint)
- Dickins/Wilson: Bruce Dickins & R. M. Wilson, editors, Early Middle English Texts, 1951; revised edition 1952
- Kindrick: Robert L. Kindrick, editor, The Poems of Robert Henryson, TEAMS (Consortium for the Teaching of the Middle Ages), Medieval Institute Publications, Western Michigan University, 1997
Man is Free by Nature

DESCRIPTION: "Why vainly do we waste our time, Repeating our oppression? ... See Gallia's bright example; The glorious scene before our eyes, Let's every tyrant trample.... future ages prove this truth, That man is free by nature"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1796 (_Paddy's Resource_ (Philadelphia), according to Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)
KEYWORDS: France nonballad patriotic freedom
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
July 14, 1789 - The Bastille is taken, marking the beginning of the French Revolution
1791-1792 - Thomas Paine publishes _The Rights of Man_

NOTES [101 words]: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815: "This song may have been written by Thomas Russell." - BS
It does sound like something Russell (1767-1803) might have written, since he was a radical -- reportedly a friend of Wolfe Tone -- hung in the aftermath of Robert Emmet's rebellion. If so, though, he obviously lived to see the promise of the French Revolution drowned in blood. Indeed, it's hard to see how the song could have been published as late as 1796, assuming the author was rational; the Terror had run from 1793-1794, which should have shown how dangerous uncontrolled "populist" movements could be. - RBW

Man Named Hods, A

DESCRIPTION: "Come, all you old cow-punches, a story I will tell.... Back in the days when I was young, I knew a man named Hods" who was good for nothing. Indians attack and leave him to die, but he lives to open a gambling house. He goes to New York

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1921 (Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys)
KEYWORDS: cowboy Indians(Am.) money injury gambling

NOTES [46 words]: This poem (almost certainly not a song, since the stanzas are irregular) ends with the line "And now they say he's a senator, but of that I shore don't know." There was no national Senator from New York with a name anything like "Hods," but possibly he was a state Senator. - RBW

Man of Burningham Town, The

DESCRIPTION: A man of (Burningham) goes to sea; his wife spends her time carousing. He returns to see her out on the town; he sneaks home and sends the maid to announce his arrival. She proclaims her delight, but he beats her with a rope. She promises to reform.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Sharp MS)
KEYWORDS: infidelity marriage warning return abuse humorous sailor
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South,Lond)) Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
VaughanWilliams/Lloyd-PenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs, pp. 68-69, "The Man of Burningham Town" (1 text, 1 tune)
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #71, "The Man of Birmingham Town" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 195, "The Birmingham Boys" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 123, "There Lived an Old Man in Dover" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #665

RECORDINGS:
Harry Cox, "The Birmingham Man" (on H Cox 01) (on FSBFTX19)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Man of Burnham Town
In Burnham Town
The Man of Dover

File: VWL068

Man of Constant Sorrow

DESCRIPTION: "I am a man of constant sorrow, I have been troubled all my days, I'll bid farewell to old Kentucky, The place where I was born and raised." Singer describes his hard, rambling life, and bids farewell to his lover, country, and friends.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1913 (Richard Burnett's songbook)

KEYWORDS: loneliness farewell rambling train lament lyric hobo

FOUND IN: US (Ap, SE)

REFERENCES (8 citations):
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 167, "In Old Virginny" (4 texts, 4 tunes, with "C" text being this song; "A" and "B" are "East Virginia (Dark Hollow)" and D is a collection of floaters)
Shellans-FolkSongsOfTheBlueRidgeMountains, pp. 26-27, "Constant Sorrow" (1 text, 1 tune, beginning with "Man of Constant Sorrow" but with most of "Fair and Tender Ladies" grafted on at the end)
Abrahams/Riddle-ASingerAndHerSongs, pp. 35-36, "Man of Constant Sorrow" (1 text, 1 tune)
Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol2, p. 30, "I Am a Man of Constant Sorrow" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cohen/Seeger/Wood-NewLostCityRamblersSongbook, p. 113, "Man of Constant Sorrow" (1 text, 1 tune)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, p. 260, "Man of Constant Sorrow" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 57, "Man of Constant Sorrow" (1 text)

DT, CONSTSOR* CONSTSR3*

Roud #499

RECORDINGS:
Emry Arthur, "Man of Constant Sorrow" (Paramount 3289, 1931; on ConstSor1); "I Am A Man of Constant Sorrow" (Vocalion 5208, 1928)
Roscoe Holcomb, "Man of Constant Sorrow" (on Holcomb-Ward1)
Frank Proffitt, "Man of Constant Sorrow" (on FProffitt01)
The Stanley Brothers, "I'm A Man of Constant Sorrow" (Columbia 20816, 1951)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Girl of Constant Sorrow" (structure, tune)

SAME TUNE:
Girl of Constant Sorrow (File: FSWB128B)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
I Am a Man of Constant Sorrow
Farewell Song

NOTES [101 words]: The words of this song have the curious characteristic of sounding like floating verses, even though they are not. - PJS

Although Emry Arthur claims to have composed this piece, a significantly different version was found in the Blue Ridge Mountains in 1957. One suspects that, when Arthur claimed authorship, he meant (as many other old-time singers meant) that he put it in shape for collection.

In later years, Richard Burnett was asked about the song. He himself could not remember, at that time, if he had composed it, or copied it, or -- perhaps most likely -- adapted it from something traditional. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.1
File: CSW113

Man of Honor from Virginia Came, A

DESCRIPTION: "[I am???] A man of honor and from Virginia came, I courted a fair damsel and Polly was her name." Her brother opposes the match because he is poor. The two discuss whether to marry. The outcome is confused

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol1)

KEYWORDS: love courting brother separation

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol1, pp. 49-50, "A Man of Honor from Virginia Came" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #7124

RECORDINGS:
Texas Gladden, "I Am a Man of Honor" (on USTGladden01)

NOTES [82 words]: Burton and Manning lump it with Sharp's "The Virginia Lover," which is also heavily composite; these are the sorts of songs that are really hard to classify.... It seems clear that this is a composite, though it's hard to tell of what. Various verses reminded me of "Pretty Saro,"
"The Bramble Briar (The Merchant's Daughter; In Bruton Town)" [Laws M32], "When First Unto this Country," and others. Like Roud, I file it separately because it doesn't seem to have a single dominant component. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.3
File: BuMa1049

Man of the Earth

DESCRIPTION: "By profession and birth I'm a man of the earth; I burrow in it like a mole." The singer tells of the life of a miner -- often poor, often overworked, often blamed for problems not of his making. He recalls the price paid in blood for "socialised coal"

AUTHOR: Words: Jock Graham / Music: Phyl Lobl (?)

EARLIEST DATE: 1975

KEYWORDS: mining work nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia, pp. 204-205, "Man of the Earth" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: FaE204

Man of the North Countrie, The

DESCRIPTION: "He came from the North, so his words were few." The singer is happy she married him and moved to Limerick. "I wish that in Munster they only knew The kind kind neighbors
I came unto" so that there would be no hatred between South and North.

AUTHOR: T.D. M'Gee (source: Hayes)

EARLIEST DATE: 1855 (Hayes)

KEYWORDS: marriage travel nonballad

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Hayward-UlsterSongsAndBalladsOfTheTownAndCountry, p. 46, "He Came from the North" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Edward Hayes, The Ballads of Ireland (Boston, 1859 (reprint of 1855 London dition)), Vol II, p. 46, "The Man of the North Countrie"

Roud #6548

NOTES [12 words]: County Limerick is in the north-central area of the region of Munster. - BS
File: HayU046
Man That Came Home From Pretoria, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer catches a lugger for home from the Boer War. Landing at Dundalk he is picked up by peelers for having "no means of support" and is thrown in jail among the fleas. In the morning a J.P. releases him; he swears he won't leave Struicin again.

AUTHOR: Michael O Tuama (George Curtin) (source: OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)

EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)

KEYWORDS: war home return travel prison reprieve Africa Ireland humorous soldier

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 174, "The Man That Came Home From Pretoria" (1 text)

Roud #16261

NOTES [93 words]: Dundalk is in County Louth, Ireland. Peelers (Bobbies) would still have been in County Louth at the end of the Boer War. Struicin (Strickeen) is in County Kerry, Ireland, far enough away from Dundalk. I assume J.P. is Justice of the Peace. A lugger is a fishing vessel not likely to make the whole trip home from "Pretoria," and -- according to OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin -- it seems Curtin was not in the Boer War but based his song on his adventure to and from Cardiff, Wales; he might very well have been aboard a lugger for that trip. - BS

Last updated in version 3.2

File: OCC174

Man That Lives, The

DESCRIPTION: "The man that lives must learn to die, Christ will no longer stay...." Listeners are reminded that their bodies will be food for worms; their lives are grass. They are in danger of hell, and one who ends there, "no physic shall him cure."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Leather-FolkLoreOfHerefordshire)

KEYWORDS: death Hell religious nonballad carol

FOUND IN: Britain(England(West))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Leather-FolkLoreOfHerefordshire, pp. 195-196, "The Man That Lives" (1 text, 2 tunes)

ST Leath195 (Partial)

Roud #2110

File: Leath195

Man that Waters the Workers' Beer, The

DESCRIPTION: "I am the man, the very fat man, that waters the worker's beer." The man waters the beer to make more profit (he admits to having "a car, a yacht, and an aeroplane") and to keep the workers in subjection. To this end he even uses poison

AUTHOR: Words: Paddy Ryan / Music: Traditional

EARLIEST DATE: 1937

KEYWORDS: drink poison worker humorous

FOUND IN: Britain(England)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 29, "The Man That Waters the Workers' Beer" (1 text)

DT, WATRBEER

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Son of a Gambolier" (tune & meter) and references there

NOTES [1330 words]: I can't help but think of the charges filed against the founder of chemistry, Antoine-Laurent Lavoisier (1743-1794). According to Brock, p. 123, Lavoisier was charged with "having mixed water and other 'harmful' ingredients in tobacco." He was charged based on the testimony of a man whose early scientific work he had shown to be inadequate (Jaffe, p. 70). He went to the guillotine.
To be sure, he was a stockholder of a tax farming company (he had, at age 28, married the 14-year-old daughter of a tax farmer; Porter, p. 414), and this was his real crime (though he did not himself collect taxes, and his wife helped his experiments, according to Porter, p. 414). But the execution was a terrible loss for France, and an even greater loss for chemistry; as Laplace (himself one of history’s greatest mathematicians) said at the time, "It required only a moment to sever that head, and perhaps a century will not be sufficient to produce another like it" (Porter, p. 415). Much as I sympathize with the British working class, charges such as these are usually oversimplified.

The song lists three poisons placed in the beer: Strychnine, methylated spirits, and kerosene. Kerosene is a highly unlikely contaminant, since it is a hydrocarbon and does not dissolve in water. It is true that, during prohibition, some bootleg compounds were found to contain kerosene (Blum, p. 51). But this was clearly accidental contamination, and it didn't happen in publicly-sold beer. Still, there were a lot of rumors about the matter (Blum, p. 153), which might have helped inspire this song.

Strychnine, which is a natural biological alkaloid, is a more plausible contaminant -- and the same reports which put kerosene in spirits also said that some contained brucine, which is similar to strychnine (Blue, p. 153). Methylated spirits are even more likely -- methylated spirits usually refers to ethyl alcohol contaminated with methyl alcohol to make it undrinkable, but in this case probably is intended to mean pure methyl alcohol.

Methyl alcohol gives the drinker the impression of consuming "regular" alcohol, but methyl alcohol is in fact a poison (Emsley, p. 110, says that methylated spirit is more poisonous than bleach; Blum, p. 41, adds that it derives much of its effect from the fact that it is very hard to metabolize). Plus its buzz didn't last very long (Blum, p. 161), tempting the drinker to consume more sooner, adding to the danger of overdose.

But methyl alcohol is cheap (Blum, p. 40) -- and was commonly used as an adulterant during Prohibition in the United States. Nor was it just during Prohibition. In June 2020, I saw reports of methyl alcohol (also known as methanol) being used in place of ethyl alcohol (ethanol) in hand sanitizer.

Ironically, the more ethyl alcohol, the less poisonous the methyl alcohol; the ethyl alcohol soaks up the enzyme which otherwise converts the methyl alcohol into lethal formic acid (Timbrell, pp. 196-197). The main effect of methyl alcohol in small doses is to make hangovers far worse, but it can also damage the kidneys and eyes, and if consumption reaches about 70 ml, death will generally follow.

It strikes me as unlikely that a boss would have methyl alcohol placed in his workers' beer; blindness was too likely to result (Blum, p. 49). It would be more likely that a dishonest manufacturer, who doesn't care about the drinkers' health, would do so.

The inclusion of strychnine is much more complicated. For starters, the workers might well notice it -- it is one of the most bitter-tasting substances in existence (Timbrell, p. 227).

Although now known as a poison, it was not always so. Buckingham, pp. 35-47, has notes on the discovery of vegetable alkaloids (which is what strychnine is). It began when it was noted that "Jesuit bark" is effective against malaria (Buckingham, p. 35). It would eventually turn out that "Jesuit bark" contains quinine, the first effective anti-malaria medication (now pretty useless, but it worked fine in the nineteenth century). The incompetent chemistry of the time figured out that a bitter agent was responsible for the curative effect -- but not which bitter agent. It was assumed that most bitter vegetable products -- the vegetable alkaloids -- were active against fevers. One such alkaloid was from the Strychnos nux-vomica tree (Buckingham, p. 36). This was strychnine.

The symptoms of strychnine perhaps explain why it was initially considered a useful drug: Timbrell, p. 155, notes that it heightens awareness, and can be used as a purgative. But it also leads to violent and exhausting convulsions. These are what lead to death -- a painful and terrible death, because the victim remains aware the whole time. Respiration often halts during the convulsions; it can restart several times before finally failing. Death usually comes within three hours of the onset of symptoms; a victim who lasts three hours will often survive.

Apparently it began poisoning people very early on, but it took a century and a half before apothecaries ceased to supply it (Buckingham, p. 46). In the Sherlock Holmes novel The Sign of the Four, near the end of chapter four, we see Watson discuss it in a way which implies it was part of his medical kit. MacInnis, p. 79, tells of an Olympic runner in 1904 who tried to use strychnine as a restorative -- and nearly died of it. Even in 2001, there was a report of a weightlifter testing positive for strychnine (which means, yes, doping agencies test for it!).

It is ironic to note that, if someone really wanted to dose the workers' beer with strychnine, the stronger the beer, the less effective it would be. The reason strychnine causes convulsions is that it opens pathways for especially strong and repeated nerve impulses, leading to convulsions (Timbrell, p. 156). The treatment is to isolate the victim from external stimuli (to prevent the nerves from firing in the first place) and applying a sedative to calm the nerve impulses. Timbrell says that barbiturates are now the preferred sedative, but alcohol would certainly be better than nothing. If the statement that strychnine was added to workers' beer is based on an actual news report (which I doubt, but I don't know), it might have been added in an attempt to keep workers healthy -- it was actually used as a tonic (MacInnis, p. xv). The effect, of course, would have been the reverse. And even if it hadn't been a poison, mass use of alkaloids would have had the same effect as the mass use of antibiotics has had more recently: The bugs would have developed immunity. I do think adding it to beer at this early date would have been unlikely. It was not until the 1920s that Robert Robinson began to research the structures of the alkaloids; he managed to determine the chemical composition of strychnine (and even, by 1946, to synthesize it; Porter, pp. xxix, 585); until then, getting precise dosages would have been difficult.

To be sure, it was not unusual for pub owners to water beer and then add adulterants. MacInnis, p. xiii, notes the case of levant nut, which caused the consumers to go to sleep. In a place where the company also owns the bars, this might be very popular -- the workers would drink a little watered beer and go to sleep, thus eliminating the need for all that expensive beer and also reduced the number of drunken workers. On p. 46, MacInnis mentions a law case against a man who made a pseudo-beer out of ingredients including opium and vitriol. Bad beer was common -- but not for the reasons in this song.

It is ironic that the song does not mention arsenic, implicated one of the largest bad-beer stories of all time. According to Timbrell, p. 119, in 1900 a batch of glucose used to make beer was accidentally contaminated with arsenic. 6000 people in Birmingham were sickened; 70 of them died. - RBW

Bibliography

• Buckingham: John Buckingham, Chasing the Molecule, Sutton Publishing, 2004
• Jaffe: Bernard Jaffe, Crucibles: The Story of Chemistry, from ancient alchemy to nuclear fission, fourth revised edition, 1948 (I use the 1976 Dover paperback)
• MacInnis: Peter MacInnis, Poisons (originally published as The Killer Bean of Calabar and Other Stories), 2004 (I use the 2005 Arcade paperback)
• Timbrell: John Timbrell, The Poison Paradox: Chemicals as Friends and Foes, Oxford, 2005

Last updated in version 5.2
File: FSWB029

Man Took in His Bed, A

DESCRIPTION: A man says he is sick to death for love of a girl. She sleeps with him. He says he never loved her, but loves another girl. She says he should leave: she does not value his love. If she has a baby she'll nurse it but send her seducer to the gallows.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan7)
KEYWORDS: seduction rejection trick rake lie
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan7 1482, "A Man Took in His Bed" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7179
File: GrD71482
Man Was Burning, The

DESCRIPTION: A man had been gambling. "The man was burning on the log... that man was burning for blaspheming the name of God." People get a saw in order to free him from the log but "as the sawdust fell it commenced a-dripping blood"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (VaWork)
KEYWORDS: sin death gambling cards fire religious
FOUND IN: US(SE)
RECORDINGS:
Joe Lee, "The Man Was Burning" (on VaWork)

NOTES [55 words]: Glenn Hinson, liner notes to VaWork, pp. 18-19: "Apparently the gambler lost his final hand, cursed the Lord, and immediately was engulfed in fire.... sat on a nearby log where he was struck immobile.... When they tried cutting the log to free the man, it began dripping blood, forcing them to leave the blasphemer there to die." - BS

Last updated in version 4.2
File: RcMaWaBu

Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer rejoices in the happiness he experienced since he "broke the bank at Monte Carlo." The girls follow him, and he leads a carefree life. He sets out to marry "a madamoiselle [who] with twenty tongues swears she will be true."

AUTHOR: Fred Gilbert
EARLIEST DATE: 1891 (sheet music published by T. B. Harms & Co.)
KEYWORDS: gambling money
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (7 citations):
Spaeth-ReadEmAndWeep, pp. 136-137, "The Man That Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo" (1 text, 1 tune)
Geller-FamousSongsAndTheirStories, pp. 124-126, "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gilbert-LostChords, pp. 237-239, "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo" (1 text)
DT, BROKEBNK*
ADDITIONAL: Robert A. Fremont, editor, _Favorite Songs of the Nineties_, Dover Publications, 1973, pp. 183-186, "The Man That Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo" (1 text, 1 tune, the 1891 sheet music)
Aline Waites & Robin Hunter, _The Illustrated Victorian Songbook_, Michael Joseph Ltd., 1984, pp. 128-131, "The Man That Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo" (1 text, 1 tune)
Margaret Bradford Boni, editor, _Songs of the Gilded Age_, with piano arrangements by Norman Lloyd and illustrations by Lucille Corcos, Golden Press, 1960, pp. 125-126, "The Man Who Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #24846

BROADSIDES:
NLScotland, L.C.Fol.70(90b), "The Man That Broke the Bank at Monte Carlo," unknown, c. 1890

NOTES [194 words]: This is one of those pieces that is carried entirely by its tune. The words are banal (so much so that a large number of singers instantly rejected it), but it was quite popular in its day (now, thankfully, over). Waites & Hunter say that publishers were so dubious about the song that they insisted upon offering a royalty upon publication rather than a flat fee. It was a mistake -- instead of Gilbert earning ten pounds, he ended up earning 600.
The sheet music, shown in Waites & Hunter, has an interesting superscription: "This song may be sung in public without fee or license, EXCEPT AT MUSIC HALLS."
Gilbert-LostChords reports that, in 1891, Monte Carlo hired a man to toss money about in the streets of London, describing himself as the man who broke the bank. Fred Gilbert, observing this spectacle, wrote his song. According to Geller, the man who tossed the money was Arthur DeCourcy Bower, who died poor, but Geller mentions his hiring by Monte Carlo officials as a mere possibility.
NLScotland claims that the song was instead inspired by the success of Joseph Hobson Jagger (died 1892), who reportedly won a million pounds in Monte Carlo in 1875. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.1
Man-o-War Sailor

DESCRIPTION: Alternate lines are a chorus, "Man-o-war sailor, ho-heave-ho." The shantyman sings "Man-o-war sailor, you better le' me go." "... I'm trying to go home" "... I'm going home" "... I'm rowing home" "... the current going home"

AUTHOR: unknown

KEYWORDS: work sea shanty

FOUND IN: West Indies(Tobago)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Abrahams-DeepTheWaterShallowTheShore, pp. 38-39, "Man-o-War Sailor" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [7 words]: Abrahams has this as a Tobago rowing song. - BS

Last updated in version 4.0

Man-of-War Piece, The

DESCRIPTION: "I have kept my true love company For better than three year; He promised that he'd marry me" but he's left on a man-of-war. If he's slain "in heaven I hope his soul will shine through all eternity"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland)

KEYWORDS: grief love war parting ship sailor

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 45, "The Man-of-War Piece" (1 text)
Roud #7578

Man-of-War's Garland, The

DESCRIPTION: "Come all ye valiant seamen And each jolly tar, And let us try our fortune On board a man-of-war." The Americans "broke our peace... in Virginia." French, Spanish, others join against Britain, but King George's sailors will be victorious

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1796 ("Man-of-War's Garland," according to Palmer)

KEYWORDS: war ship sailor patriotic

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs 59, "The Man-of-War's Garland" (1 text)

Man's a Man for A' That, A

DESCRIPTION: "Is there for honest poverty That hangs his head and a' that... For a' that and a' that, Our toils obscure and a' that, The rank is but the guinea stamp, The man's the gowd for a' that." Praising equality, with a final prediction that all will be brothers

AUTHOR: Robert Burns

EARLIEST DATE: 1800 (Currie)

KEYWORDS: political nonballad freedom

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Foner-AmericanLaborSongsOfTheNineteenthCentury, p. 162, "A Man's a Man for A' That" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 297, "A Man's A Man For A' That" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1370, p. 93, "A Man's A Man for A' That" (1 reference)

ADDITIONAL: James Kinsley, editor, Burns: Complete Poems and Songs (shorter edition, Oxford,
For a' that and a' that (1795-1796)

Roud #30953

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "For A' That and A' That (I)" (stanza form, lyrics)
- cf. "He Wears a Bonnet for a Hat" (lyrics)

SAME TUNE:
- A Tidy Suit for A' That (Broadside Bodleian Firth B.26(289))
- George the Fourth is Coming Down (by John Mayne; see Christoper Sinclair-Stevenson, Blood Royal: The Illustrious House of Hanover, Doubleday, 1980, p. 180)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
- For A' That And A' That
- Is There for Honest Poverty

NOTES [246 words]: Reported to be based on "The Bard's Song" in "The Jolly Beggars," and written in 1795, making it one of the last of Burns's "big" pieces. On the other hand, Ord has a song ("For A' That and A' That," p. 196) which looks like a model and which he calls an "old bothy song." And there is still another song "For a' that an' a' that" credited to Burns in the Scots Musical Museum (#290, p. 300, "Tho' womens minds like winter winds May shift and turn and 'a that, The noblest breast adores them maist, I consequence I draw that..."). Clearly the history of the song is complicated.

Though that's nothing compared to the use to which the tune is currently put. According to John Baynes with John Laffin, Soldiers of Scotland, Brassey's, 1988 (I use the 1997 Barnes & Noble edition), p. 105, five Scots regiments use this as the tune to announce Commanding Officer's Orders. Off the top of my head, I can hardly imagine a song more inappropriate -- this is an open rejection of authority, after all!

It's possible that this song got Burns in some trouble. According to Stephen Brumwell and W. A. Speck, Cassell's Companion to Eighteenth-Century Britain, Cassell & Co., 2001, p. 66, "Burns was accused in 1792 of joining in the singing of the French revolutionary song 'Ca ira'('that will come').... He excused his behavior on the ground that he was drunk at the time... Nevertheless the revolutionary sentiment is surely expressed in 'It's coming yet' [i.e. this song]." - RBW

Mañanitas

DESCRIPTION: Spanish: Title means "Early morning." The singer wishes for sun, moon, and stars to help him court, or separate from Marianita. Chorus: "Ya viene a maeciendo Ya la luz del dia nos vio, Ys dispierta amiga mia, Mira que ya amanecio."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)

KEYWORDS: courting separation Mexico foreignlanguage

FOUND IN: Mexico

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, pp. 292-293, "Mañanitas" (1 text plus free translation, 1 tune)

NOTES [15 words]: The accentuation of the chorus is left as an exercise for the Spanish-speaking reader. - RBW

Manchester Angel, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer meets a girl in Manchester and promises to marry her. She sleeps with him; his regiment prepares to march. She begs to go with him; he refuses. She offers to buy his discharge; he refuses. She vows to enter a nunnery until he returns.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1825 (broadside, Bodleian Harding Harding B 28(14))

KEYWORDS: courting sex army parting dialog soldier

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South,North))

REFERENCES (3 citations):
VaughanWilliams/Lloyd-PenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs, pp. 66-67, "The Manchester Angel" (1 text, 1 tune)
Manchester Martyrs (I), The

DESCRIPTION: Colonel Kelly and another man come to Manchester "to free old Ireland from her tyrant's chain." They are jailed. Allen, Larkin and O'Brien stage a rescue. They are taken, found guilty, and hanged.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads)

KEYWORDS: execution prisoner rescue political England

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- Sep 11, 1867 - Kelly and Deasy are arrested and rescued a week later by 30 Fenians
- Nov 24, 1867 - Three of the ambushers are hanged (source: _The Manchester Martyrs_ on the Gorton Local History Group site)

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 76, "The Manchester Martyrs" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #3029

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "God Save Ireland" (subject: The Manchester Martyrs)

NOTES [203 words]: OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads: "The Manchester Martyrs were Allen, Larkin and O'Brien, all three hanged in revenge for the accidental shooting of Constable Brett in the attempted rescue of Kelly and Deasy, two Fenian Leaders in 1867." - BS

We should probably note that Kelly and Deasy, while in British custody, were not really in danger of execution. Thomas J. Kelly, who had been proclaimed chief executive of the Fenian's Irish Republic, and one Captain Timothy Deasy were simply being transported from court to prison, but they were "rescued" anyway on September 18.

In the course of the "rescue," a police sergeant, Charles Brett, was killed. William Allen, Michael Larkin, and Michael O'Brien were convicted of the murder and executed on November 23. The three men came to be known as the "Manchester Martyrs." A later rescue attempt also failed, but managed to kill a dozen bystanders.

Nonetheless, both sides blamed the other, increasing Anglo-Irish tensions. The incident also increased rebel recruiting, despite the fact that the Irish had committed the initial crime and the fact that the British followed the law throughout.
For additional background, see the notes to "The Smashing of the Van (I)." - RBW

Mandalay
DESCRIPTION: "By the old Moulmein Pagoda, lookin' eastward to the sea, There's a Burma girl a-settin', and I know she thinks of me." The soldier, in London, seeing the dirt and the squalor, thinks with longing of the green land and the girl on the road to Mandalay

AUTHOR: Words: Rudyard Kipling
EARLIEST DATE: 1890 ("The Scots Observer")
KEYWORDS: love separation soldier
FOUND IN: Britain
REFERENCES (2 citations):
  Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #64, "Mandalay" (1 text)
  Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, p. 415, "On the Road to Mandalay"

NOTES [534 words]: I had to think long and hard about whether to put this song in the Index. It is, of course, composed. It has not been found in oral tradition. But it has been extremely popular, and has been set to music at least three times (the first time, I think, by Walter W. Hedgcock in 1899, although that seems to have all but disappeared; again by Oley Speaks, in 1907, and again by Peter Bellamy, to an adaption of "Ten Thousand Miles Away"; the latter version will probably be more familiar to folk fans).

I finally decided to include the piece because it is so familiar, and used in so many contexts, and is one of the "folkiest" of the works of Kipling, who was probably closer to the average lower-class Englishman than any other major poet.

It originally appeared in the Scots Observer in 1890, and was published as one of the Barrack-Room Ballads (1892).

The girl's name is given as Supyalat, Thibaw's queen. This is a correct but highly unlikely name. According to The Snake Prince and Other Stories: Burmese Folk Tales collected and retold by Edna Ledgard, Interlink Books, 2000, pp. 6-7, Thibaw was a son of King Mindon, and as Mindon approached his death, there was a struggle for the succession. Thibaw's mother (one of Mindon's lesser wives) and Supyalat decided to take the matter into their own hands. They managed to lure all the other princes to a reception, drugged them, bound them in bags colored dark red (to hide any blood), and then turned war elephants loose in the room containing them. The princes died, but technically no human had killed them; Thibaw succeeded, and Supyalat was his queen -- and the British eventually stepped in to stop such atrocities. Would a Burmese girl have been given such a name? It strikes me as unlikely. But it strikes me as likely that an ignorant British soldier would have called her by the only Burmese woman's name he knew. Kipling, I think, has caught the sense of the occupation well.

I am going to opine, also, that this reveals the nuances in Kipling's beliefs, which few realize. Kipling was an imperialist; he believed in the White Man's Burden. But he did not think white men were superior to other "races"; in this song, the white man falls in love -- but does the girl? Or does she simply do what she must to survive? (Compare Gunga Din -- "a better man than I am." ) In this sensitivity, Kipling was far ahead of the imperialists of his time (though hardly modern).

The geography here is rather confused, as in various stanzas it appears to be looking out from Mandalay, Rangoon, Moulmein, and the road to Mandalay (from Rangoon).

Mandalay was one of the key cities of British Burma (modern Myanmar), on the Irrawaddy (now the Ayeyarwady) where the Myitnge flows into the river. The main road from Rangoon also passes through the town. It was (and is), therefore, the main city of inner Burma. The "old flotilla" sailed the Irrawaddy from Rangoon to Mandalay.

The chorus seems to be set in or near Rangoon, where the "sun comes up like thunder" from across the bay (though the far side of the bay is not China but part of Burma -- Moulmein, in fact. From Moulmein, the apparent setting of the song, the sun "sets" over the bay). - RBW

Mandelin
DESCRIPTION: "There's a little old cabin on the Swanee shore far away, That's where my heart is longing night and day... Pretty little maiden waiting there for me by the shore. Mandelin, Mandelin, moon is shining on the fields of sugar cane... I love you"
AUTHOR: possibly John Thurland Chattaway
EARLIEST DATE: 1953 (Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric)
KEYWORDS: love home river
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 105, "Mandelin" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #11388
NOTES [34 words]: Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric suspects this is a much-worn-down version of John Thurland Chattaway's "Mandy Lee," published 1899. With only seven lines in Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric's version, it's hard to tell. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.3
File: Brne105

Mandi Went to Poove the Grys

DESCRIPTION: Travellers' cant. Singer goes to put horses out to graze; a policeman is after the family. The farmer tries to impound the horses; the aunt chases them around the haystacks and steals some hay. Finally the policeman tells them to move on
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (recorded from Frank Copper)
LONG DESCRIPTION: Travellers' cant. Singer goes to put horses out to graze; a policeman is after the family (the daughter remarks, "It's just as Father said; we can't get away"). The farmer tries to impound the horses; the aunt (or the singer) chases them around the haystacks (or srikes the policeman) and steals some hay. Finally the policeman tells them to move on KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage horse family police Gypsy migrant
FOUND IN: Britain(England)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 349, "Mandi Went to Poove the Grys" (1 text, 1 tune)
MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland 129, "Mandi Went to Poov the Grais" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Tim Coughlan, Now Shoon the Romano Gillie, (Cardiff,2001), #82, pp. 280-281, "O, 'Tis Mandi Went to Poov the Grais" [from MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland]
Roud #852
RECORDINGS:
Peter Ingram, "Mandi Went to Poove the Girl" (on Voice11)
NOTES [74 words]: This song was apparently widespread among English Travellers. "Mandi" = I; "poov(e) the grys (grais)" = put the horses to grass. It was common practice for Travellers to camp in an unauthorized place, then let their horses into a farmer's field after dark with the intention of retrieving them before dawn. Often as not, they were caught and the horses impounded. - PJS
For a more general discussion see Coughlan, #74, #78-93, pp. 274-285. - BS
File: K349

Manila Bay

DESCRIPTION: "You have heard about he battle over in Manila Bay, How the Yankees met the Spaniards, fought them on the first of May. Our commander's name was Dewey...." Dewey is praised and Spanish boasting ridiculed
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Brown)
KEYWORDS: Spain battle war navy
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1895 - Cubans rebel against Spain
Feb 15, 1898 - Explosion of the battleship "Maine" in Havana harbor
May 1, 1898 - Battle of Manila Bay. Dewey's fleet destroys the entire Spanish fleet in the Philippines
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
NOTES [64 words]: This has more than the usual amount of American bluster. It is certainly true that Dewey won a decisive victory and did it at the cost of only eight minor injuries to his men (the Spaniards suffered nearly 400 casualties and lost their entire fleet). However, the Spanish knew the American fleet was much superior -- hence their desperate but unsuccessful efforts to prevent war. - RBW

File: BrII238

Manistee Lumberjack, The

DESCRIPTION: "I'm a rippin', roarin' lumberjack From up on the Manistee... And the drinks are all on me." The lumberjack boasts of where he has worked and all he has done. He invites his companions to drink until he uses up his pay, then he'll go back to earn more

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (Beck-TheyKnewPaulBunyan)

KEYWORDS: drink logger money work

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Beck-TheyKnewPaulBunyan, pp. 64-65, "The Manistee Lumberjack" (1 text)
Roud #6520

File: BBun064

Manitoba

DESCRIPTION: "Manitoba, here we rise to greet you, Manitoba, our home. You're the bond that binds our great Dominion...." "For we all love our Manitoba, Manitoba, our home so der, And we raise the strain Of the waving grain." Manitoba is free and great and lawful

AUTHOR: John Hughes Arnett (source: MacLeod-SongsOfOldManitoba)

EARLIEST DATE: 1920 (source: MacLeod-SongsOfOldManitoba)

KEYWORDS: patriotic nonballad Canada

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
MacLeod-SongsOfOldManitoba, #16, ppp. 91-93, "Manitoba" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #25779

File: Macl16

Manley Pankey

DESCRIPTION: "Here I stand in the jail house door, Here I'll stand no more. Goodbye to my mother And friends forevermore. My mother she did warn me, She warned me when I 'as young, 'I'll raise you up for the gallows; My son, you will be hung.'"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1947 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: mother warning homicide gallows-confession

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 292, "Manley Pankey" (1 text)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 292, "Manley Pankey" (1 excerpt, 1 tune)
ST BrII292 (Full)
Roud #6636

NOTES [55 words]: According to the notes in Brown, Pankey was a laborer and musician who murdered his employer, a farmer named Curry. As usual, the song is described as sung by the condemned man before his execution. However, the editors can provide no precise dates or real details, and the song is a scrap with no circumstantial details at all. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.7

File: BrII292
Manson's Crew

DESCRIPTION: "It's on the Tomahawk river, a stream you all know well, It's of a crew of shanty boys, a story I would tell." He describes many members of the crew. He ends by wishing good luck to George Manson and others and prepares to leave for Wausau.

AUTHOR: adapted by Bert Taplin

EARLIEST DATE: 1941 (Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin); supposedly written around 1894

KEYWORDS: logger moniker

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, pp. 89-90, "Manson's Crew" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #9072

NOTES [54 words]: Bert Taplin, who supplied this song, claimed to have written it around 1894. There are enough local Wisconsin references (the Tomahawk river, Wausau) that it seems likely that the version as we have it is indeed Taplin's work. But it was clearly inspired by one or another of the many logging songs of this basic type. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.6

File: Pet089

---

Mantle So Green, The [Laws N38]

DESCRIPTION: The well-dressed girl refuses the singer's offer of marriage; she is pledged to Willie O'Reilly, whose name is embroidered on her fine mantle. He tells her O'Reilly died at Waterloo; seeing how she grieves, he reveals that he is O'Reilly in disguise.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1859 (Journal from the Ocean Rover); before 1853 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 26(417), but see NOTES).

KEYWORDS: love disguise separation grief

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
June 18, 1815 - Battle of Waterloo

FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW,MA,So) Canada(Mar,Newf) Britain(England(South),Scotland(Aber)) Ireland Australia

REFERENCES (29 citations):
Laws N38, "The Mantle So Green"
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 151-152, "The Mantle of Green" (1 text)
Randolph 94, "The Mantle So Green" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cazden/Haufrecht/Studer-FolkSongsOfTheCatskills 24, "Famed Waterloo" (1 text, 1 tune)
Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales, pp. 400-401, "Mantle So Green" (1 text)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 56, "Fain Waterloo" (1 text plus mention of 1 more, 1 tune)
Ritchie-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernAppalachians, pp. 93-94, "Her Mantle So Green" (1 text, 1 tune, expanded by Ritchie from a traditional fragment)
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 87, "The Mantle of Green" (2 texts)
Peacock, pp. 555-557, "The Mantle So Green" (1 text, 2 tunes)
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 130, "Mantle of Green" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 30, "Mantle So Green" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 29, "The Mantle So Green" (1 text, 1 tune)
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 91, "Round Her Mantle So Green (Willie O'Reilly; Famed Waterloo)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-21FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 28-31,81-82, "Mantle So Green" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlann-IrishStreetBallads 7, "The Mantle so Green" (1 text, 1 tune)
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 188, "The Mantle So Green" (1 text, 1 tune)
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, pp. 33, 214-215, "As I Was A-Walking" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H76, pp. 314-315, "The Mantle So Green" (1 text, 1 tune)
O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladsOfIreland, p. 38, "Mantle So Green" (1 text)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #157, p. 2, ("One morning in May as I chanced to pass, And there I beheld a most beautiful lass") (1 fragment)
Many Brave Boys Must Fall

DESCRIPTION: "Heavily falls the rain, wild are the breezes tonight... Gathered around the fireside.... We sit and talk of brothers abroad... And yet, and yet, we must not forget That many brave boys must fall." The singer promises to fight before the horrors of war

AUTHOR: Henry Clay Work

EARLIEST DATE: before 1870 (see NOTES)

KEYWORDS: soldier separation

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, pp. 237-238, "Many Brave Boys Must Fall" (1 short text, 1 tune) Roud #15680

NOTES [89 words]: This songs seems to have had only the most tenuous hold on tradition; the version in Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin seems to be the only one ever collected. But it was very popular in the Civil War. Edwin Wolf 2nd, American Song Sheets, Slip Ballads, and Political Broadsides 1850-1870, Library Company of Philadelphia, 1963, p. 14, lists ten different editions in the Philadelphia collection, by at least five different publishers, most of whom did not list Work's name. The title is either "Brave Boys" or "Brave Boys Are They." - RBW

Last updated in version 3.4
File: Pet237

Many Say I Am Too Noisy

DESCRIPTION: "Many say I am too noisy, But I know the reason why, If they only felt the glory
They would shout as loud as I." "Hallelujah, bound for glory... I have crossed the River Jordan, Now I'm safe in Beulah Land." "...In his ranks I still remain."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (Randolph)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(S0)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Randolph 602, "Many Say I Am Too Noisy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7549
File: R602

Many Thousand Gone (Auction Block)

DESCRIPTION: The freed slave rejoices to be done with abuse: "No more auction block for me... Nor more pint of salt for me... No more peck of corn for me... No more driver's lash for me..." (etc.)

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)
KEYWORDS: slavery freedom
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar) US(SE)
REFERENCES (17 citations):
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 45, (no title; filed with "Hail Mary" on the basis of the tune); p. 48, "Many Thousand Go" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute, p. 233, "No More Auction Block (Many Thousand Gone)" (1 text, 1 tune; p. 95 in the 1901 edition) [for 1893 edition, see notes]
Joyner-FolkSongInSouthCarolina, p. 94, "Many Thousand Gone" (1 text, 1 tune, clearly this although it does not mention the auction block)
Fowke/Johnston-FolkSongsOfCanada, pp. 30-31, "Auction Block" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp. 279, "Auction Block" (1 text, 1 tune)
Pottie/Ellis-FolksongsOfTheMaritimes, pp. 8-9, "Auction Block" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 238-239, "Many Thousand Gone" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, p. 296, "May Thousand Gone" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber-SoldierSongsAndHomeFrontBalladsOfCivilWar, p. 71, "Many Thousand Gone" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, p. 577, "Many T'ousand Go" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolksongsOfNorthAmerica 238, "Many Thousands Gone" (1 text, 1 tune)
Arnett-IHearAmericaSinging, p. 83, "Many Thousand Go" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, pp. 101-102, "Many Thousand Gone" (1 text, 1 tune)
Foner-AmericanLaborSongsOfTheNineteenthCentury, p. 95, "Many Thousand Gone" (1 text)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 353-354, "Many Thousand Go (No More Auction Block)" (1 text)
Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 187, "Many Thousan' Gone" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 296, "Many Thousand Gone" (1 text)
ST FJ030 (Partial)
Roud #3348
RECORDINGS:
Pete Seeger, "No More Auction Block" (on PeteSeeger31)
NOTES [57 words]: The index to the 1893 edition [of Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute] has "Many Thousands Gone" on page 90, with Many, Many Stars Are in the Sky

DESCRIPTION: "Many, many stars are in the sky/skies, Some as old as Adam [or, "And each as old as Adam"], Down upon your knees and kiss who you please, Your humble servant, Madam." Described as a kissing game
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren)
KEYWORDS: playparty courting
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Killion/Waller-ATreasuryOfGeorgiaFolklore, p. 227, "Many, Many Stars" (1 short text)
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, p. 62, "(Many, many stars are in the skies)" (1 short text, filed under #10, "marriage")
Roud #14006
NOTES [29 words]: Roud lumps several playparties about stars under the same number; I am hesitant to agree.
It might be noted that, according to Genesis 1:16, the stars are older than Adam. - RBW

Maori Joe

DESCRIPTION: Mixed Maori/English. "Kuni atu, kuni mai, plenty piri ring, Turituri, all you folk, While I make you sing.... Time I go to Parliament... Tenei te korero tangata pai, Ingoa Maori Joe." Tales of what happens when Joe goes to parliament
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1913 (Christchurch "Canterbury Times," according to Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage political New Zealand
FOUND IN: New Zealand
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ, p. 103, "Maori Joe" (1 short text, apparently an excerpt)

Maori's Wool, The

DESCRIPTION: Maori chief Rerenga comes to Wellington "And told the Chief Financial Fiend the tribe had wool to sell." The dishonest bank manager makes an low offer. The chief accepts and brings the wool. The banker pays -- and finds the boxes weighted with sgones
AUTHOR: claimed by A. B. "Banjo" Paterson (1864-1941) (source: Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ)
EARLIEST DATE: 1902 (Collected Verse of Banjo Paterson)
KEYWORDS: humorous money trick New Zealand
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Bailey/Roth-ShantiesByTheWay-NZ, pp. 133-134, "The Maori's Wool" (1 text)
Colquhoun-NZ-Folksongs-SongOfAYoungCountry, p. 40 in the 1972 edition, "Rerenga's Wool" (1 text, 1 tune); dropped from the 2010 edition
RECORDINGS:
Tommy and Margaret Wood, "Rerenga's Wool" (on NZSongYngCntry)

Maple Leaf Forever, The
DESCRIPTION: "In days of yore, from Britain's shore, Wolfe, the dauntless hero came.... The Maple Leaf, our emblem dead, The Maple Leaf forever, God save our Queen, and heaven bless The Maple Leaf forever." In praise of the heroes and people of Canada
AUTHOR: Alexander Muir
EARLIEST DATE: 1867
KEYWORDS: Canada patriotic nonballad
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sept 13, 1759 - Battle of Quebec. Forces under Wolfe capture Quebec and firmly establish British rule in Canada, although Wolfe is killed 1812 - Battle of Queenston. British forces under Brock repel an American invasion, although Brock is killed
1867 - Canadian Confederation formed
FOUND IN: Canada
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Fowke/Mills/Blume-CanadasStoryInSong, pp. 111-113, "The Maple Leaf Forever" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #23, "The Maple Leaf Forever" (1 text)

MAPLFREV
NOTES [175 words]: The story goes that Alexander Muir (1839-1906) was out walking in the fall of 1867 when a maple leaf floated down and stuck to his sleeve. It proved hard to brush off, and the phrase "the maple leaf forever" sprang to mind. Eventually he turned it into a song celebrating the new dominion of Canada.
Muir's song was a bit optimistic; the proud dominion he envisioned ("from Cape Race to Nootka Sound") did not exist at the time he wrote, and would not until 1949, when Newfoundland (which includes Cape Race) entered the Confederation. Nor did Nootka Sound enter the dominion until 1871, when British Columbia joined Canada.
The song has proved popular in British Canada, but its complete neglect of Quebec has kept it from any official status.
For background on the Battle of Quebec, see the notes to "Brave Wolfe" [Laws A1]. For Queenston, see "Brave General Brock" [Laws A22] and "The Battle of Queenston Heights." The issue of Canadian confederation led to quite a few songs, especially in Newfoundland; "The 'Antis' of Plate Cove" is typical. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.0
File: FMB111

Maple Leaf Squadron, The
DESCRIPTION: "Then here's to the lads of the Maple Leaf Squadron, At hunting the U-Boat it's seldom they fail." "We'll zig and we'll zag all over the ocean, Ride herd on our convoys by night and by day." They sail between Newfoundland and Derry
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead)
KEYWORDS: sailor ship war
FOUND IN: Canada
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead, p. 51, "The Maple Leaf Squadron" (1 text, tune referenced)
Roud #29398
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "We'll Rant and We'll Roar" (tune) and references there
cf. "The Saguenay Song" (tune and some lyrics)

File: Hopk051

Maple on the Hill
DESCRIPTION: The singer recalls the maple on the hill "Where I sat with my Geneva long ago." Now, as he is dying, he bids her, "Don't forget me, little darling, when they lay me down to die"; he must "leave you and that maple on the hill."
AUTHOR: Gussie L. Davis (1863-1899)
EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (Recording, Vernon Dalhart); said to have been written 1880
KEYWORDS: death separation
FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Boette-Singa-HipsyDoodle, p. 57, "The Maple on the Hill" (1 text, 1 tune)
Neely/Spargo-TalesAndSongsOfSouthernIllinois, pp. 240-241, "The Maple on the Hill" (1 text)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5706, "Maple on the Hill" (1 short text, 1 tune)
DT, MAPLHILL
Roud #4333
RECORDINGS:
Buckeye Boys, "The Maple on the Hill" (Supertone 2616, 1930; Champion 45160, 1935) (Crown [Canada] 95083/Melotone[Canada] 93083/Minerva M-14046, 1936)
Homer & Walter Callahan, "Maple on the Hill" (ARC 6-06-57/Conqueror 8689/OKeh 02973/Vocalion 02973, 1936; Columbia 37601/Columbia 20200, 1947)
Vernon Dalhart, "We Sat Beneath the Maple on the Hill" (Vocalion 5044, 1926)
(Tom) Darby & (Jimmie) Tarlton, "Maple on the Hill" (Columbia 15591-D, 1930)
Farmer Sisters, "Maple on the Hill" (Vocalion 03104, 1935)
Uncle Dave Macon, "Maple on the Hill" (Vocalion 5158, 1927)
Holland Puckett, "The Maple On The Hill" (Gennett 6532/Supertone 9186, 1928)
Posey Rorrer & The North Carolina Ramblers, "As We Sat Beneath The Maple On The Hill" (Edison 20005/Ed 52414/CYL: Edison 5615 [as by Posey Rorer's North Carolina Ramblers], 1929; rec. 1928)
Frank Welling & John McGhee, "The Maple On The Hill" (Perfect 5-12-59, 1935; Conqueror 8638, 1936)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
ct. "Don't Forget Me, Little Darling (I)" (floating lyrics)
SAME TUNE:
Crowder Brothers, "New Maple on the Hill" (Conqueror 8782/Oriole 07-02-63, 1937; rec. 1936)
Dixie Reelers, "Answer to Maple on the Hill - Part 2" (Bluebird B-6713/Montgomery Ward M-7099, 1936)
Dixon Brothers, "Answer to Maple on the Hill - Part 1" (Bluebird B-6462, 1936)
Dixon Brothers, "Maple on the Hill - Part 3" (Bluebird B-6630, 1936)
Dixon Brothers, "Maple on the Hill - Part 4" (Montgomery Ward M-7170, 1937)
Wade Mainer, "Maple on the Hill - Part 2" (Bluebird B-6293, 1936)
Wade Mainer & Zeke Morris, "Maple on the Hill, Part 2" (Bluebird B-6293, 1936)
J. E. Mainer's Mountaineers "Maple on the Hill - Part 3" (Bluebird B-6293, 1936)
Prairie Ramblers, "Maple on the Hill - Part 2" (Perfect 6-09-60, 1936)
Prairie Ramblers, "Maple on the Hill No. 4" (Melotone 7-09-51, 1937)
Don Weston, "Maple on the Hill Is Gone" (Decca 5421, 1937)
NOTES [110 words]: The Dixon Brothers had an "Answer to Maple on the Hill" and at least two additional "parts" to the song. Mainer's Mountaineers also had a "Part 3." What did the guy do, come back as a ghost? This song has rarely if ever been collected in tradition, but its popularity with old-time singers (see the recording list and the "Same Tune" knock-offs) eventually made me decide to include it here. For brief background on composer Gussie L. Davis, see the notes to "The Baggage Coach Ahead."
- RBW
[Ten] recordings by old-time singers between 1927 and 1936 -- yes, it absolutely belongs in. I call that "being collected from tradition," albeit in a roundabout way. - PJS
Last updated in version 4.3
File: DTmaplhi

Marafray

DESCRIPTION: The people at Marafray are described in unflattering terms: "Bell Lowe she rises in the mornin Wi' a nose sae neat and fine She jabbers and curses ...." "The [end of] term time is comin'" when we'll be paid and have a parting glass.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan3)
March of Intellect, The

DESCRIPTION: "Let schoolmasters bother their brain In their dry and their musty vocation; But what can the rest of us gain By meddling with such botheration?" Examples of people that work very well without esoteric knowledge: must the tailor know Conic Sections?

AUTHOR: Oliver Goldsmith (1728-1774) (attribution by O Lochlainn in OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads)

EARLIEST DATE: 1802 (printed by Hicks, according to OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads)

March of the Cameron Men, The

DESCRIPTION: The Cameron men swear to follow their chief "or die by his side." "Each Cameron knows he may tread o'er the heather no more." The chief says, "whatever men dare they can do."

AUTHOR: Mary Maxwell Campbell (according to Rogers and Bennett/Downey-JeromeJustOneMoreSong)

EARLIEST DATE: 1829 (date written according to Bennett/Downey-JeromeJustOneMoreSong); before 1839 (broadside, Bodleian Bod9200 Firth c.26(254))
March of the Men of Garvagh

DESCRIPTION: "We're marching, marching thro' Garvagh town, We're ready to fight for queen and crown, If any man won't we'll knock him down." The singer sees the marchers come by, led by "fighting Phil," and her (?) heart beats loud

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1913 (JIFSS)

KEYWORDS: nonballad

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H17b, p. 180, "March of the Men of Garvagh" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #13540
NOTES [91 words]: The Henry text appears to be composite; the first verse is a marching song (perhaps of Ulstermen opposed to Home Rule late in the reign of Victoria?), while the second and third appear to be the song of a girl in love with one of the marchers. Garvagh, in county Londonderry, almost due south of Coleraine, was the site of some sectarian violence on July 16, 1813 (sometimes referred to as the "Battle of Garvagh," though it sounds more like a riot) -- but 1813 is during the reign of George III, so there is no reason to mention the queen. - RBW
File: HHH017b

March of the Rolling-Mill Men

DESCRIPTION: "Rouse, ye noble sons of Labor, And protect your country's honor, Who with bone, and brain, and fibre, Make the nation's wealth." Workers of all sorts are urged to unite. Many occupations are listed
AUTHOR: Words: Reese E. Lewis (source: Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends)
EARLIEST DATE: 1875 (March 30 National Labor Tribune)
KEYWORDS: labor-movement nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends, pp. 447-448, "March of the Rolling-Mill Men" (1 text, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Men of Harlech" (tune, according to Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends)
File: KPL447

March On

DESCRIPTION: "March on and you shall gain the victory, March on and you shall gain the victory." "We want no cowards in our day, You shall gain the victory, We call for the valiant-hearted men...." "This is the year of Jubilee... The Lord has set his people free."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1915 (Work-FolkSongOfTheAmericanNegro)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Work-FolkSongOfTheAmericanNegro, p. 71, "March On"; p. 127, "(no title)" (2 texts)
Roud #11962
File: FSAN071

Marche des Animaux, Le (The Animal Market)

DESCRIPTION: French. "One day I go to the market to buy a cock. My cock goes coquelicou, cou, cou." Cumulative for: "My chipmunk, my horse, my cow, my pig, my ewe, my goose, my hen." Chorus: "Jamais je n'en serais jaloux"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage cumulative humorous nonballad animal
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, p. 18, "Le Marche des Animaux" (1 text, 1 tune)
RECORDINGS:
Martin Deveau, "Le Marche des Animaux" (on PeacockCDROM)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "I Had a Little Rooster" (theme and structure)
NOTES [25 words]: Re "Mon suisse" as "My chipmunk": or does "suisse" in this case really mean Swiss which goes "souisse-souisse-souisse"? or a play on swine=suide? - BS
Last updated in version 2.6
File: Pea018
Marching Along

DESCRIPTION: "The army is gath'ring from near and from far, The trumpet is sounding the call for the war, McClellan's our leader, he's gallant and strong." The Union army will face the enemy in battle array. The singer has good wishes for the families and the dead

AUTHOR: William B. Bradbury (source: Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar)

KEYWORDS: Civilwar soldier nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 30-31, "Marching Along" (1 text, 1 tune)
Heart-Songs, p. 163, "Marching Along" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1378, pp. 93-94, "Marching Along" (13 references)

SAME TUNE:
Alliance Song (File: CAFS2489)
Song of the Volunteers ("Arouse to the conflict; why linger ye here") (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets p. 148)

NOTES [121 words]: George B. McClellan was appointed to command what became the Army of the Potomac after the first Battle of Bull Run in mid-1861, and led it until late 1862, command ing at Yorktown, Fair Oaks/Seven Pines, the Seven Days' Battles, and Antietam. Given that not one of those battles was a clear-cut Union victory, it seems clear that this song was written before McClellan's tendency toward delay and inaction became clear.

That this song was popular shown both by the number of broadsides and by the fact that it probably inspired a "Marching Along No. 2," for which see Wolf, p. 94. But I find no evidence of the song in tradition.

For background on William B. Bradbury, see the notes to "Savior, Like a Shepherd Lead Us." - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0
File: SCWF031

Marching Down to Old Quebec

DESCRIPTION: "We're marching down to (old Quebec/New Orleans), Where the drum is loudly beating, The 'Merican boys have won the day And the (British) are retreating." The soldier describes marching, and his plans to go home/to New Orleans/to visit a girl

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1883 (Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren)

KEYWORDS: playparty soldier war battle floatingverses courting rejection Canada

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1775-1776: American attack on Canada. The chief battle of the campaign was fought outside Quebec on December 31, 1775
Jan 8, 1815 - Battle of New Orleans. Although a peace had already been signed, word had not yet reached Louisiana, which Pakenham sought to invade. Andrew Jackson's backwoodsmen easily repulse Pakenham

FOUND IN: US(Ap,NE,MW,SE,So) Canada(Ont)

REFERENCES (11 citations):
Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 65-66,=Wolford/Richmond/Tillson-PlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 176-177 "Marching to Quebec" (1 text, 1 tune)
it, pp. 143-145, "Marching to Quebec" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph 519, "We're Marching Down to Old Quebec" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Spurgeon-WaltzTheHall-AmericanPlayParty, pp. 207-208, "We're Marding Down to Old Quebec" (1 text, 1 tune)
Bush-FSofCentralWestVirginiaVol2, p. 10, "Marching Down to Old Quebec" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5, p. 524, "Marching to Quebec" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Fowke/Mills/Blume-CanadasStoryInSong, pp. 57-59, "Marching Down to Old Quebec" (1 text, 1 tune)
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #59, "Marching to Quebec" (2 texts); #176, "Quebec
Marching for Freedom

DESCRIPTION: "The farmers of Nebraska now are in a fearful plight, For years they have been worse than slaves... But now they are marching for freedom.... Hurrah for Powers, a farmer true and grand." Banks, speculators, railroads cannot defeat the farmers

AUTHOR: Words: Luna E. (Mrs. J. T.) Kellie (1857-1940)
EARLIEST DATE: 1890 (Farmer's Alliance, August 23, 1890 edition, according to Welsch-NebraskaPioneerLore)

KEYWORDS: farming poverty hardtimes derivative political

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1889 - John H Powers elected president of the Farmer's Alliance

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Welsch-NebraskaPioneerLore, pp. 60-61, "Marching for Freedom" (1 text, tune referenced)

ADDITIONAL: Nebraska Folklore, Pamphlet Eighteen, "Farmers' Alliance Songs of the 1890's, Federal Writers' Project, 1938, p. 3, "Marching for Freedom" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Marching through Georgia" (tune) and references there

NOTES [714 words]: The author of this, Luna E. Sanford Kellie (Mrs. J. T. Kellie), was a prolific creator of poems about the Farmer's Alliance. She operated in the Joe Hill mode of setting her lyrics to well-known tunes. The list of Kellie compositions listed by Welsch-NebraskaPioneerLore includes:

Marching for Freedom ("The farmers of Nebraska now are in a fearful plight"; tune: Marching
The Donkey's Song ("Oh, Thomas Benton is his name, Yonc huh, yonc huh"; tune: When Johnny Comes Marching Home)
Who Has Managed ("I've traveled through the state, dear Tom"; tune: Twenty Years Ago)
The Independent Broom ("Oh, say did you ever in years long gone by"; tune: The Star-Spangled Banner)
Dear Prairie Home ("There's a dear old homestead on Nebraska's fertile plain"; tune: Darling Nellie Gray)
The Pauper's Cowhides ("Say, Richards, have you seen the paupers"; tune: Kingdom Coming)
A Song of the Times ("There's a deep and growing murmur Going up through all the land"; tune: John Brown's Body)
Poking around the Internet turns up these other Farmers' Alliance items by Kellie (mostly found in WPA Nebraska Writers' Project pamphlets from the 1930s):
Good-bye, Oh Tommy, Good-Bye ("Tom Benton is on the G. O. P.")
Vote for Me ("Oh father, dear father, come vote for me now"; tune: Father Come Home)
Our John ("John Thurston is a railroad man, As such he is a dandy"; tune: Yankee Doodle)
Spread the News ("Oh, the farmers hae united, And their actions will be cited"; tune: Sweet Memorie)
The Independent Man ("I was a party man one time, The party would not mind me"; tune: The Girl I Left Behind Me)
Senator Paddock's Sentiments ("Oh, bankers, come and give me credit"; tune Kingdom Coming [this time listed as "The Year of Jubilo"])
Lament of the G. O. P. ("Up in congress now forever Will be many a vacant char"; tune: "The Vacant Chair") Man the Pumps ("At the railroad's late convention They observed at last"; tune: Hold the Fort)
Queen Victoria's Lackey ("There is a man at Buzzard's Bay To whom the goldbugs daily pray")
She also produced a political manifesto, "Stand Up for Nebraska," in 1894; it contained a poem beginning
There's a land where the toiler is free,
Where no robber of labor can come,
Where wealth gives not power to oppress,
Nor another man's labor to own.
I suspect this was meant to be sung to "Sweet By and By." The poem "Stand Up for Nebraska" ("Stand up for Nebraska! from the hand of her God She came forth, bright and pure as her own golden rod") which concludes the address does not have such an obvious melody, even though it seems to be her anthem.
There is a short biography of Kellie on the Nebraska Historical Society web site as well as material in the memoirs listed below. Born in Pipestone, Minnesota, she was the eldest of five children of J. M. Sanford, and married James Thompson Kellie (died 1918/9) on the last day of 1874. They lived a difficult life on the Nebraska prairie; in that time she bore eleven children. She also served as State Secretary of the Nebraska Farmers' Alliance, and served in the Temperance movement as well as being active in the Methodist Church. Her efforts met little success and she spent her later years in Arizona. The University of Iowa in 1992 published a book of her memoirs, A Prairie Populist: The Memoirs of Luna Kellie, edited by Jane Taylor Nelsen with a foreword by Albert E. Stone, now apparently available as a free download. It contains her political memoir, a text of "Stand Up for Nebraska," and a biographical sketch that she wrote for one of her daughters. It also informs us that she also published a newspaper called "Prairie Home." The Afterword (p. 147) tells us that "Her writing reveals her living conditions, familial networks, the division of labor in her home, and women's roles in the Farmers' Alliance and the Populist party. Her accounts help explain what motivated women to become involved in politics. Furthermore, they illustrate how the Middle-of-the-Road Alliance movement -- so-called because members took a middle ground between the Republican and Democratic parties-evolved, prospered, and then died when 'fusion' proponents pushed for major-party alignment."
Despite all this activity, I can find no evidence that any of her works actually went into tradition.
RBW
Last updated in version 3.6
File: Wels060
Marching On
DESCRIPTION: "Old Abe's in the White House, taking a snooze, Gen'ral Grant is a-busting his gut with his booze... but let's keep marching on." Complaints about life in the Union army: Lincoln freed the Blacks but not the soldiers, the rebels keep coming back, etc.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl)
KEYWORDS: Civilwar soldier
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sept 23, 1862 - Abraham Lincoln issues the preliminary Emancipation Proclamation, which on Jan 1, 1863 will free all slaves in Confederate-controlled areas
Sept 19-20, 1863 - Battle of Chickamauga (called "Chickamaugie" in the song). Braxton Bragg's reinforced Confederate army routs most of William S. Rosecrans' Federal force, which is saved only by a desperate stand by George H. Thomas. Although the most decisive victory the Confederates ever won, it is the last Rebel victory of the war, and will be avenged a few months later at the Battle of Chattanooga
Feb 1, 1865 - Thirteenth Amendment, which finally prohibits slavery, proposed by congress (It was declared ratified on Dec 18)
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 130, "Marching On" (1 text, 1 tune)
NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal, Frank L. Warner [nephew of Frank M. Warner], "Songs My Uncle Taught Me" Vol. XI, No. 1 (Jul 1963), pp. 29-30, "Old Abe, or We Go Marchin' On" (1 text, tune referenced)
DT, MARCHON*
Roud #7475
RECORDINGS:
Frank Proffitt, "Old Abe" (on Proffitt03)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "John Brown's Body" (tune & meter) and references there
cf. "The Battle Hymn of the Republic" (tune & meter)
cf. "Pass Around the Bottle" (lyrics)
NOTES [55 words]: This song implies that Grant, who was unquestionable a heavy drinker in his younger days, continued his alcoholic ways during the Civil War. Most observers agree, however, that he "did not" drink during the war. Grant was by no means a brilliant general, but at least he was stubborn enough to keep fighting until he won the war. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.1
File: Wa130

Marching Order (Here Comes Mary)
DESCRIPTION: "Here Comes Mary, Covered all over with Marching Order! Marching Order! Marmelade and jam."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang)
KEYWORDS: food nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang, p. 49, "Marching Order" (1 text)
Roud #10551
File: BrPa049A

Marching Round the Gum Stump (Marching Round the Fodder Stack)
DESCRIPTION: "Marching round the gum stump, The gum stump, the gum stump, Marching round the gum stump, Rolly roly oh!" "If you want a sweetheart, A sweetheart, a sweetheart, If you want a sweetheart, Choose one and play."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1942 (Randolph)
Marching Song of the First Arkansas

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, we're the bully soldiers of the 'First of Arkansas,' We're fighting for the Union, we are fighting for the law, We can hit a Rebel further than a white man ever saw..." The soldiers tell how they will show their prowess by defeating the Rebels

AUTHOR: Words: Capt. Lindley Miller?

EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar); a nineteenth century broadside is listed on p. 147 of Edwin Wolf 2nd, _American Song Sheets, Slip Ballads, and Political Broadsides 1850-1870_. Library Company of Philadelphia, 1963

KEYWORDS: Civilwar battle Black(s) slavery freedom soldier derivative

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Jan 1, 1863 - Effectiveness date of the Emancipation Proclamation, which freed all slaves in the portions of the U.S. not then in Federal hands

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, p. 26, "Marching Song of the First Arkansas (Negro) Regiment" (1 text, tune referenced)
Silber-SoldierSongsAndHomeFrontBalladsOfCivilWar, p. 38, "Marching Song of the First Arkansas (Negro) Regiment" (1 text, tune referenced)
Colonial-Dames-AmericanWarSongs, pp. 110-111, "Song of the First Arkansas Regiment" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #2194, p. 147, "Song of the First of Arkansas" (1 reference)
DT, MARARKAN

RECORDINGS:
Pete Seeger, "Marching Song of the First Arkansas" (on PeteSeeger28)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "John Brown's Body" (tune & meter) and references there

NOTES [217 words]: The Union first began enlisting Black troops (informally) in 1862. By the end of that year, four regiments were raised, only to have Lincoln shut them down. After the issuance of the Emancipation Proclamation, however, Lincoln allowed the formation of (segregated) "colored" regiments.

In the end, over a hundred and fifty such regiments were raised. Their performance was mixed -- but this was probably the fault of the (white) officers rather than the Black troops. A large fraction of the officers in the "Colored" regiments were soldiers who had given up on promotion in the white army, and shifted to the "Colored" troops to get ahead.

The "Colored" troops had other reasons for bad morale; their pay was much lower than their white counterparts, and their equipment less good. And soldiers from both sides looked down on them. A large fraction of the "Colored" regiments were raised from free Northern blacks, but some were taken from freed slaves. If anything, the soldiers of these regiments fought better than their free kindred.

At least one edition of this, according to Edwin Wolf 2nd, _American Song Sheets, Slip Ballads, and Political Broadsides 1850-1870_, Library Company of Philadelphia, 1963, p. 147, was published by "the Supervisory Committee for Recruiting Colored Regiments." - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: SCW38

Marching Through Georgia

DESCRIPTION: Sundry boasts, mostly too optimistic, about Sherman's march to the sea: "How the darkeys shouted when they heard the joyful sound.... Yes, and there were Union men who wept with joyful tears... While we were marching through Georgia."

AUTHOR: Henry Clay Work
EARLIEST DATE: 1865 (sheet music published by S. Brainerd's Sons)

KEYWORDS: Civil war patriotic

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Nov 15, 1864 - William T. Sherman splits his army (which had conquered Atlanta on September 1) into two parts. One, under Thomas, is to defend Atlanta, while Sherman takes nearly 60,000 men on the "March to the Sea"

Dec 10, 1864 - Sherman's forces reach Savannah

Dec 21, 1864 - Sherman captures Savannah

FOUND IN: US(MW) Australia

REFERENCES (18 citations):

Work-SongsOf-Henry-Clay-Work, pp. 17-20, "Marching Through Georgia" (1 text, 1 tune, a copy of the original sheet music)

Jackson-PopularSongsOfNineteenthCenturyAmerica, pp. 126-129, "Marching Through Georgia" (1 text, 1 tune)

Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, p. 34, "The Battle Cry of Freedom" (1 text, 1 tune, composed of equal parts of this song and "The Battle Cry of Freedom")

Dean-FlyingCloud, pp. 119-120, "Marching Through Georgia" (1 text)

Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 423, "Marching Through Georgia" (1 text, from a broadside by Johnson & Cartlitch, plus a copy of the Root & Cady sheet music cover)

Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 306-308, "Marching Through Georgia" (1 text plus a sheet music cover)

Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 43-45, "Marching Through Georgia" (1 text, 1 tune)

Silber-SoldierSongsAndHomeFrontBalladsOfCivilWar, pp. 78-79, "Marching Through Georgia" (1 text, 1 tune)

Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1381, p. 94, "Marching Through Georgia" (3 references)

Emerson-StephenFosterAndCo, pp. 122-124, "Marching Through Georgia" (1 text)

Messerli-ListenToTheMockingbird, pp. 155-157, "Marching Through Georgia" (1 text)

Hill-PoemsAndSongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 207-208, "Marching Through Georgia" (1 text)

Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 278, "Marching Through Georgia" (1 text)

Heart-Songs, pp. 310-311, "Marching Through Georgia" (1 text, 1 tune)

Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #13, "Marching Thro' Georgia" (1 text)

Colonial-Dames-AmericanWarSongs, p. 91, "Marching Through Georgia" (1 text)

Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, p. 349, "Marching Through Georgia"

DT, MRCHRGRGA*

ST MA034A (Full)

Roud #9596

RECORDINGS:

(Columbia 1776, 1904) (Victor 4217, 1905)

J. W. Myers, "Marching Through Georgia" (Victor 4289, 1905)

Pete Seeger & Bill McAdoo, "Marching Through Georgia" (on PeteSeeger28)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Golden Gullies of the Palmer" (tune & meter)

cf. "The Workingmen's Army" (tune & meter)

cf. "Coxey Army" (tune)

cf. "Marching to Cuba" (tune)

cf. "All Are Talking of Utah" (tune)

SAME TUNE:

Marching to Cuba (File: BrII237)

All Are Talking of Utah (File: CAFS2601)

Hooray, Hooray (File: CrAG34B)

Marching for Freedom (File: Wels060)

Marching to Freedom ("Rouse, ye sons of labor all, and rally in your might! In the Eastern heavens see the dawning of the light") (Foner, p. 165)

The Workingmen's Army ("When rebel shot and rebel shell burst open Sumter's wall, When honest Abraham Lincoln's voice aroused the people all") (Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, pp. 59-60; Foner, p. 257)

Coxey Army ("Bring the good old bugle, boys, we want to tell in song, The Coxey army's marching from the town of Massillon") (Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, pp. 62-63; Foner, p. 253)

Marching with Coxey ("We are marching to the Capital, three hundred thousand strong") (Foner, p. 253)
The People's Choice (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets p. 126)
Labor Song ("Start the music, brothers, we will sing a labor song, Sing it with a vim that will speed our cause along") (by John Siney) (Foner, p. 98)
Labor Free for All ("Start the music, comrades, we will sing a labor song, We'll sing it with a spirit that will speed the cause along") (Foner, p. 154)
The March of the Toilers ("Shall we work for hunger pay, that's the question now") (Foner, p. 134)
The Unionist's Song ("Gabriel, blow the clarion and sound the bugle-horn") (Foner, p. 178)
Industrial Freedom ("Sing along the tidings that the race will yet be free") (by S. M. Jones) (Foner, p. 182)
A Song of Eight Hours ("Lo, a vision of dismay, a lurid glimpse of doom") (by E. R. Place) (Foner, p. 220)
The Land Song ("Sound a blast for Freedom, boys, and send it far and wide!") (Foner, p. 261)
March of United Labor ("Come forth, ye toiling millions, and join our worthy band") (by George Campbell) (Foner, p. 267)
Gold Bugs Go Down Before Bryan ("Bring the silver bugle, boys, We'll sing another song... Sing it as they sung it in The anti-gold bug throng") (Foner, p. 283)
When We're United for Freedom ("They tell us that the woods are full, they're coming right along") (by H. B. Salisbury)
While We Are Voting for Garfield ("Let us join our voices, boys, And sing an anthem grand") (Garfield and Arthur Campaign Song Book 1880, p. 7)
Republicans, Remember ("Republicans, remember how in eighteen sixty-one, The fight for human liberty at Sumter was begun") (Garfield and Arthur Campaign Song Book 1880, p. 13)
Hurrah! Hurrah! The Battle Has Begun ("Fling out the starry banner, boys, the flag we love full well") (Garfield and Arthur Campaign Song Book 1880, p. 19)
We Must Vote for Prohibition ("Jump into the wagon, boys, and ev'rybody sing") (by Frank D. Reno) (Anna Adams Gordon, _Popular Campaign Songs_, National W.C.T.U. Publishing House, 1915, p. 17)
They Vote for Prohibition ("Do you see the women of the golden sunset west") (Anna Adams Gordon, _Popular Campaign Songs_, National W.C.T.U. Publishing House, 1915, p. 27)
Marching to Victory ("Bring the good old bugle, boys, and sound the call to war, We're out for prohibition, now") (by Ethel M. Van Vliet) (Anna Adams Gordon, _Popular Campaign Songs_, National W.C.T.U. Publishing House, 1915, p. 27)
The Battle Song of the "Iowa" (by Clay M. Greene, about the Spanish-American War) ("Clear the decks for action, boys, we're brave and strong and true") (Colonial-Dames-AmericanWarSongs, p. 148)
The Freedom of Cuba (by Ella Strait Hollister) ("See the cruel bondage of the Spaniard's mighty host") (Colonial-Dames-AmericanWarSongs, p. 148)
NOTES [194 words]: Although Work can hardly be blamed for his cheerful view of the March to the Sea, it was in fact little better than terrorism. Sherman's expressed goal was to "make Georgia howl," and he certainly succeeded: a region some fifty miles across was devastated. (Sherman was, in fact, reviving the chevauchee, the method by which the armies of the Middle Ages destroyed their enemies' agricultural base).
Even if there had been Union men in the region before, there were none left afterward. "Marching Through Georgia" has been called "the most hated song in the south."
The one other person who hated the song was none other than Sherman himself; he reportedly said, "If I had thought when I made that march that it would have inspired anyone to compose the piece, I would have marched AROUND the state."
Sherman became the most hated man in the south for the rest of his life. It's ironic to note that, when Joseph E. Johnston surrendered the last real southern army to Sherman, Sherman gave such generous terms (to Johnston and anyone else willing to take them) that the North instantly repudiated them. There were loud calls for his removal -- as being too soft! - RBW
Last updated in version 6.1
File: MA034A

Marching to Cuba

DESCRIPTION: "We're going down to Cuba, boys, to battle for the right, We're going to show the Spaniards that we Yankee boys can fight... While we are marching to Cuba." The victories at Manila Bay and Santiago are briefly mentioned

AUTHOR: unknown
Marching to Pretoria

DESCRIPTION: Shanty version sung to the Pretoria tune, though with changed verses, which Hugill says he had to camouflage to print. Cho: "We are marchin' to Pretoria, oh gloria, Victoria. We are marchin' to Pretoria, Victoria rules the waves!"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1954 (recording, Joseph Marais and Miranda (but see notes)
KEYWORDS: shanty army travel Africa food
FOUND IN: South Africa Britain
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, p.425, "Pretoria" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 329, "Marching to Pretoria" (1 text)
DT, MARPRET
NOTES [631 words]: I was surprised not to find this in the index already, considering how common I thought was. From what I could find it dates or at least refers to the Boer or Zulu war. - SL
It is not in the Index because it's rarely found in tradition. As best I can tell, it was fixed up by Joseph Marais and Miranda, based on a South African original, and the adaption has been sung very widely at camps -- typically on hiking expeditions. But only starting in the 1960s. This is the first time I've met the sea version, which may be an alternate adaption. Although Cyril Tawney, in p. 63 of Grey Funnel Lines, reports that the tune was used as part of the tune for "The Oggie Song." It would be very interesting to find the earliest version of this, to know the setting (including which Boer War it dates from). I've seen a number of web sites which give context, but none of them give any actual citations of anyone singing the song! Joseph Marais himself, in World Folk Songs, p. 60, says, "In 1939 I introduced this song to American audiences over NBC's Blue Network. Pretoria, of course, was the important objective of the British during the Boer War of 1901, the last of the so-called "gentlemen's wars." As both sides sang it, there was no recognizable set way of performance. I wrote English words and a definitive musical adaption...." All of which may be true, but Marais offers no evidence for any of it.
What's more, the mention of Victoria in the sailors' version would seem to imply a date before Queen Victoria died in 1901, i.e. before the second Boer War. The opening conflict of the (first) Boer War came on December 20, 1880, at Bronkhorstspruit, when "264 officers of the 94th Regiment (Connaught Rangers), marching from Lydenburg to Pretoria, were halted on the march by a Boer commando and ordered to turn back. The lieutenant-colonel in command was given two minutes to reply to the demand. He refused to surrender and was killed by the Boers' opening shots" (Farwell, pp. 244-245). Most of the other British soldiers were killed as well.
Britain was defeated again early the next year, on February 26, 1881. At Majuba Hill, British General George Pomeroy Colley took his force onto high ground, but failed to create a defensive position; his forces were routed and Colley himself killed (van Hartsveldt, p. 4).
Rather than keep up the fight, the British negotiated. A year later, the Pretoria Convention would end the war. "It gave the South African Republic independence subject to a vague assertion of British suzerainty whatever that might mean" (van Hartsveldt, p. 5).
In the second (1899-1902) Boer War, Pretoria would again be key -- and the site of a lot of marching. On October 30, 1899, after their victory at Lombard's Kop, the Boers marched a number of British prisoners through Pretoria (Belfield, pp. 20-22).
On March 13, 1900, Frederick Singh Roberts captured Bloemfontein, then prepared to march on the Boer capital of Pretoria. He set out on May 3 and arrived June 5 (Belfield, pp. 95-100). That made it possible for British forces to capture Koomati Poort and cut the Boers off from all contact with the outside world (Chandler/Beckett, pp. 200-201). This did not end the war -- there would be two more years of guerrilla fighting, in which world opinion turned against England and the international situation became ever more complicated. But it was nearly the end of the direct military phase (and it earned Roberts an earldom and the command of the British army), and at the time it was thought it would end the conflict; the soldiers must have thought they were making the last big push. Thus, a march to Pretoria could have been bad news for Britain or for the Boers, depending on the war and the situation. Or it could be about something else. - RBW
Bibliography

- Belfield: Eversley Belfield, The Boer War, 1975 (I use the 1993 Leo Cooper/Barnes & Noble reprint)
- Farwell: Byron Farwell, Queen Victoria's Little Wars (1972; I used the 1985 Norton edition)

Last updated in version 5.1
File: Hugi425

Mare and the Foal, The
DESCRIPTION: "The old clerk in the parish you know very well"; he tolls the bell then goes to the alehouse. "A mare and a foal they ran in great speed" and begin to read the Bible. They observe that millers, bakers, tailors, butchers, publicans are all dishonest.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1921 (E. J. Moeran collection)
KEYWORDS: clergy horse
Margaret Gray

DESCRIPTION: Margaret Gray and her baby bid farewell to Robert Gray as he goes to work in the field. They agree to meet at a neighbor's house. She becomes lost in the woods. Her baby dies. Long after, she finally finds her way home.

AUTHOR: Julia C. R. Dorr

EARLIEST DATE: 1872 (Dorr, Poems)

KEYWORDS: baby separation death love return reunion travel rescue farming ordeal friend husband wife

NOTES [227 words]: Flanders and Brown claim this piece was well-known in Vermont, and indeed they seem to list two informants. But it doesn't appear to have turned up in any other collection. Julia Caroline Ripley Dorr (1825-1913) was successful enough as a writer to earn a place in the Dictionary of American Biography (she was born in Charleston, South Carolina, but moved to Vermont before she was two; her mother, who was frail, died when her family arrived there. She married Seneca M. Dorr in 1847, spent some time in New York City, but returned to the family home in Rutland, Vermont, i 1857. Her first books, published in the 1850s, were novels which were listed as by "Caroline Thomas." Her first volume of "Poems" was published in 1872, and included this piece; at least nine more volumes followed. Her husband died in 1884, and she spent the rest of her life living quietly.)

Despite her productivity, I checked eight anthologies without finding a single word she had written. Granger's Index to Poetry, which cites some 300 anthologies, lists a few of her poems -- but not one of those 300 volumes includes this piece. Given how wordy this poem is, it's perhaps not surprising. Nor is it surprising that she didn't place much material in tradition; her goal was to avoid anything "which she could not with propriety read to children" (DAB, volume III, p. 381) - RBW

Last updated in version 3.6

File: FlBr019

Margot Evans (Let the Bullgine Run)

DESCRIPTION: "Oh the smartest clipper you can find, Oh hey, oh ho, are you 'most done? Is the (Margot Evans) of the (Blue Cross) line, So clear the track, let the bullgine run!" The singer describes the fast passage of the ship, and hopes Liza Lee will marry him

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1921 (Terry)

KEYWORDS: sailor work ship courting nonballad shanty

NOTES [20 words]: Lomax and Colcord claim this piece was popular on the East Coast. It's not clear whether Colcord's "American Sailormen" line refers to the ship or the singer. Again, no citations; likely first seen in Terry's book.

File: FlBr019
Margot, La

DESCRIPTION: French shanty. Chorus: "Oh hisse! et ho! Tire larigot, Hourra pour la Margot!" "With a heave an'a ho! Blow the flute boys, O! Hurrah for La Margot!"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Hayet, _Chansons de bord_)

LONG DESCRIPTION: French shanty. Chorus: "Oh hisse! et ho! Tire larigot, Hourra pour la Margot!" "With a heave an'a ho! Blow the flute boys, O! Hurrah for La Margot!" Translation is vague, verses seem to refer to Margot as both a ship and a woman and has thinly disguised bawdy lyrics, and several of the repeating words in both the verses and chorus can have different meanings

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage shanty bawdy

FOUND IN: France

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 398-400, "La Margot" (2 texts-English & French, 1 tune)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Le Bihor

File: Hugi398

Mari de Quatre-Vingt-Dix Ans, Le (The Ninety Year Old Husband)

DESCRIPTION: French. The singer's father marries her to a ninety year old man. When she complains, her father said that her husband is rich. She would rather have a man that satisfies her

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Peacock)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage age marriage dialog father husband

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 298-299, "Le Mari de Quatre-Vingt-Dix Ans" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Maids When You're Young Never Wed an Old Man" and references there

File: Pea298

Maria

DESCRIPTION: "I wonder where Maria's gone (x3). Ear-lye in the morning." "Guess she's gone and I can't go (x3), Ear-lye in the morning." "Yonder she comes and howdy-do (x3), Ear-lye in the morning."
Maria and William

DESCRIPTION: William seduces Maria. After her baby is born William scorns her until he sees her dancing with another. Jealous, he gives her poison in a glass of wine. He also takes the poison and they die. She says, "It's all for your sweet sake I died."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle)
KEYWORDS: seduction rejection homicide childbirth suicide dancing wine lover
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South,West))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 88, "Maria and William" (1 text)
Hamer-GarnersGay, p. 53, "Down the Green Groves" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1478
CROSS-REFERENCES:
NOTES [51 words]: The last half of Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle is "Oxford City" ["Poison in a Glass of Wine"] from the woman's point of view. Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle includes a pair of lines close to a pair found in "Oxford City": "He saw me dancing with some other, Jealousy came in his mind." Roud lumps both songs. - BS
Last updated in version 5.0
File: ReCi088

Maria Barberi

DESCRIPTION: "'Tis not for me to speak aloud On lofty themes. I tell As one among the lowly crowd How young Maria fell." "Swift as a flash a glittering blade Across his throat she drew. 'By you,' she shrieked, 'I've been betrayed." She apparently avoids conviction

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Burt-AmericanMurderBallads)
KEYWORDS: homicide revenge betrayal
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
April 1895 - Maria Barberi kills Domenico Cataldo, apparently because he would not marry her
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, p. 55, "(Maria Barberi)" (1 text, probably a fragment)
File: Burt0655
Maria Bewell

DESCRIPTION: Fifteen year old Maria's stepfather comes to her bed one night and asks to sleep with her. She begs him not to; he persists. Finally his desire is too strong; he lies in wait for her and kills her

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio)

KEYWORDS: incest homicide rejection father

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1832 - Murder of Maria Buell by Ira West Gardner. Gardner was later hung, though details of the sentencing were lost in a fire

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 120, "Maria Bewell" (1 text)
ST E120 (Full)
Roud #4116

NOTES [8 words]: This song is item dF44 in Laws's Appendix II. - RBW

File: E120

Maria Marten

DESCRIPTION: Maria tells her mother she is going to meet William at the red barn. They are to be married next day in Islip. Maria is never seen alive again. After eleven months her mother dreams the body will be found buried in the red barn. The body is found there.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (collected from George Hall, according to Palmer)

KEYWORDS: courting homicide dream mother corpse

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
May 18, 1827 - Maria Marten meets William Corder at the "red barn" and is murdered
Nov 1827 - Corder marries Mary Moore in London
Apr 18, 1828 - Supposedly informed by a dream experienced by Maria's stepmother, Maria's father finds the body
Aug 8, 1828 - Corder convicted and condemned to death. He admits to the crime in his condemned cell

FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond,North,South))

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #115, "Maria Marten" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #123, "Maria Marten" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Tom Pettitt, "Mediating Maria Marten: Comparative and Contextual Studies of the Red Barn Ballads", in David Atkinson and Steve Roud, Editors, _Street Ballads in Nineteenth-Century Britain, Ireland, and North America: The Interface between Print and Oral Tradition_, Ashgate, 2014, pp. 225 (various fragments of traditional and broadside versions compared)
Flemming G. Anderson and Thomas Pettitt, "'The Murder of Maria Marten': The Birth of a Ballad?" in Carol L. Wdwards and Kathleen E. B. Manley, _Narrative Folksong: New Directions: Essays in Appreciation of W. Edson Richmond_, Westview Press, 1985, pp. 132-178 (8 texts, 1 tune, most of which are "The Murder of Maria Marten" but some of which might be related to this)
Roud #18814

RECORDINGS:
Freda Palmer, "Maria Marten" (on Voice03)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Murder of Maria Marten" (subject) and references there

NOTES [183 words]: For background on the Maria Marten case, see the notes to "The Murder of Maria Marten." Some collectors have thought this a version of that song, heavily corrupted by oral tradition, but broadsides show that both were independently composed. There were, in fact, at least four other Maria Marten broadsides, but it appears only this and "The Murder of Maria Marten" became traditional.

Tom Pettitt, "Mediating Maria Marten: Comparative and Contextual Studies of the Red Barn
Ballads", in David Atkinson and Steve Roud, Editors, Street Ballads in Nineteenth-Century Britain, Ireland, and North America: The Interface between Print and Oral Tradition, Ashgate, 2014, pp. p. 242, compares the four traditional versions of this with the original broadside text. He identifies 24 major elements in the broadside. Only one of the four traditional versions retains more than ten of these (we can't say exactly how many, because the transcript has been damaged, but it has 15 of the 17 for which it is extant). Unlike "The Murder of Maria Marten," this song's hold on tradition was clearly very tenuous. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.5
File: RcMariaM

Marian Parker (I) [Laws F33]

DESCRIPTION: Pretty schoolgirl Marian Parker and her family are preparing for Christmas when the girl is kidnapped from school. "Young Hickman" is arrested and tried after the body is found

AUTHOR: Bill Barrett?

EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (recording, Al Craver [Vernon Dalhart]; also copyrighted in that year, but the Dalhart recording was probably made in 1927; collected by Brown as early as 1930)

KEYWORDS: homicide corpse trial abduction

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Dec 14, 1927 - Kidnapping and murder of twelve (eleven?)-year-old Marian Parker
Dec 17, 1927 - Discovery by her father of the girl's mutilated body
Oct 19, 1928 - Execution of William Edward Hickman for the murder

FOUND IN: US(MW,SE,So) Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Laws F33, "Marian Parker"
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 254, "Marian Parker" (1 text)
McNeil-SouthernFolkBalladsVol2, pp. 68-70, "Little Marian Parker" (1 text, 1 tune)
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 65-66, "(Marion Parker)" (1 text, tune referenced) Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 667-668, "Little Marian Parker" (1 text)
DT 731, MARPARK1
Roud #781

RECORDINGS:
Al Craver [pseud. for Vernon Dalhart] & Charlie Wells [pseud. for Carson Robison], "Little Marian Parker" (Columbia 15218-D. c. 1928)
Helen Dunphy, "Marian Parker" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Marian Parker (II)" (subject)
cf. "Marian Parker (III)" (subject)
cf. "Edward Hickman (Marian Parker IV)" (subject)

NOTES [70 words]: Laws lists a total of four Marian Parker ballads (the others are dF56, dF57, and dE49, "Edward Hickman"). This one, popularized by Vernon Dalhart, begins "Away out in California lived a family bright and gay. They were planning for their Christmas not very far away...."
The 1928 printing, credited to Bill Barrett (though I wonder if Carson Robison may not have been involved), titles the song "Little Marian Parker." - RBW

Last updated in version 4.2
File: LF33

Marian Parker (II)

DESCRIPTION: Marian Parker, "a sweet little darling," is "lured away from school" so that the kidnapper (unnamed) can demand a ransom. Her father finds her mangled body. The ballad concludes with moralizing stanzas

AUTHOR: John McGhee?

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: abduction homicide death

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Dec 14, 1927 - Kidnapping and murder of twelve (eleven?)-year-old Marian Parker
Dec 17, 1927 - Discovery by her father of the girl's mutilated body
Oct 19, 1928 - Execution of William Edward Hickman for the murder

FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 255, "The Murder of Marian Parker" (1 text)
Roud #4126
RECORDINGS:
John McGhee, "The Marion Parker Murder" (Champion 15427=probably Gennett 6362)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Marian Parker (I)" [Laws F33] (subject)
cf. "Marian Parker (III)" (subject)
cf. "Edward Hickman (Marian Parker IV)" (subject)
NOTES [62 words]: This is item dF56 in Laws's Appendix II. Laws lists a total of four Marian Parker ballads (the others are F33, dF57, and dE49, "Edward Hickman"). This one, with no details and an extremely sticky tone, begins "In a home out in Los Angeles Lived a sweet little darling so fair. 'Twas a pleasure her loved ones to be, But her loved ones her joy no more they'll share." - RBW
File: LdF56

Marian Parker (III)

DESCRIPTION: Marian and her sister set out for school. Edward Hickman tells her her father had an accident, and kidnaps her. He demands a $1500 ransom. Her father brings the money, but finds her dead body. The song blames Hickman but does not tell his fate
AUTHOR: Andrew Jenkins
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (recording, Andrew Jenkins)
KEYWORDS: homicide execution trial abduction mother
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Dec 14, 1927 - Kidnapping and murder of twelve (eleven?)-year-old Marian Parker
Dec 17, 1927 - Discovery by her father of the girl's mutilated body
Oct 19, 1928 - Execution of William Edward Hickman for the murder
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 256, "Little Marion Parker" (1 text)
Roud #4127
RECORDINGS:
Blind Andy [pseud. for Andrew Jenkins], "Little Marian Parker" (OKeh 45197, 1928) [The flip side is also a Marian Parker ballad, "Edward Hickman"]
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Marian Parker (I)" [Laws F33] (subject)
cf. "Marian Parker (II)" (subject)
cf. "Edward Hickman (Marian Parker IV)" (subject)
NOTES [61 words]: This is item dF57 in Laws's Appendix II. Laws lists a total of four Marian Parker ballads (the others are F33, dF56, and dE49, "Edward Hickman"). This, one of two by Andrew Jenkins and appearing in the Brown collection, has the opening stanza, "Now little Marion (sic) Parker, She left her home one day, She started to the schoolhouse, Her heart was light and gay." - RBW
File: LdF57

Mariann' s'en va-t-au Moulin (Marianne's Going to the Mill)

DESCRIPTION: French. Marianne rides her donkey to the mill to have her grain ground. A wolf eats her donkey as she waits. The miller pays to buy another. Her father asks what happened to the donkey. She says it is St. Michael's day, when donkeys change their coats
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage grief death money humorous animal father miller
FOUND IN: US(MW) Can(Que)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes, p. 76, "Mariann' s'en va-t-au moulin (Marianne's Going to the Mill)" (1 text + translation, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Edith Fowke and Richard Johnston, _Folk Songs of Quebec (Chansons de Quebec)_ , Waterloo Music Company, 1957, pp. 55-57, "Marianne S'en Va-t-au Moulin (Marie Went Marianson, Dame Joli (Marianson, My Lady Fair)

DESCRIPTION: French. A knight calls on Marianson and steals her husband's rings. The husband, coming home from war, is tricked by the knight into thinking she is unfaithful. He kills the child and drags her behind his horse. She proves her innocence, but is dying.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes)

LONG DESCRIPTION: French. A man (knight?) calls on Marianson, whose husband is off at the war. He asks her to lend him her golden rings; she gives him the key to her chest, and he takes the rings. He brings them to a goldsmith and has them duplicated. He then meets the lady's husband, who swears his wife is faithful. The man replies that "This I believe, yet disbelieve" and shows the husband the rings. The husband goes home, sick at heart; Marianson show him their newborn son. "A name I'll render to the child, The mother earns renown defiled." He kills the child by throwing it on the ground, ties Marianson by the hair to his horse, and drags her for three days. Then he looks back and asks, "Where are thy golden rings so rare?" She tells him they're in the chest; he looks, and they are there. Stricken with remorse, he asks her what surgeon could save her; she replies that "The only surgeon now would be / A winding-sheet to cover me." He asks her forgiveness; she replies that she forgives him for murdering her, but not for killing their child.

KEYWORDS: jealousy virtue courting ring accusation lie questions violence return betrayal homicide death children husband wife foreignlanguage

FOUND IN: US(MW) Canada France

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes, p. 16 (1 text + translation, 1 tune)

NOTES [132 words]: Although I can't remember where I encountered it, I seem to recall a medieval romance similar to this. Searches on the Internet say that this story was particularly popular in Normandy.

I am also strongly reminded of the story of Griselda in Chaucer's "Clerk's Tale" (which, admittedly, goes back to Boccaccio, and before that perhaps to the tale of Eros and Psyche). There is also the legend which Chrétien de Troyes retold as "Erec and Enide," and which occurs in the Mabinogion as "Geraint and Enid," about a husband's unjustified jealousy. Admittedly it ends with the lovers making peace, and Chaucer's tale of Griselda technically has a happy ending -- but the true happy ending in that case would have been to give Walter a taste of his own medicine. Where is Medea when we need her? - RBW

Last updated in version 2.5

Marie Madelaine (Son Petit Jupon -- The Little Dress of Gray)

DESCRIPTION: French: The singer is her father's only daughter, and he sent her to sea in her little dress of gray. A sailor courts her and asks to kiss her. She is afraid of what her papa would do. He points out that her father is far away.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1966

KEYWORDS: Quebec love courting sea father foreignlanguage

FOUND IN: Canada(Que)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 294-296, "Son Petit Jupon" (2 texts (1 English, 1 French), 1 tune)

Marine Song

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, a corp'ral and a private of Marines, Licked the Germans and all their bloody damn marines" while their superiors toast General Le Jeune. The singer boasts of all their success against the Germans, who are the toughest soldiers they have faced.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Niles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe)
Mariner's Grave, The

DESCRIPTION: "I remember the night was stormy and wet And dismally dashed the dark wave... On the mariner's new dug grave." The singer recalls the burial "near to a dreary cave." The grave is left to the wildflowers, the willows, the moonbeams
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1847 (Journal of the Cortes)
KEYWORDS: sailor death burial
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 127-128, "The Mariner's Grave" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13865
NOTES [17 words]: Very popular in broadsides, but there isn't much evidence that the song actually went into tradition. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.2
File: HGam127

Mariner's Life, The

DESCRIPTION: "A mariner's life is the life for me, Floating along on the changeful sea." When it is stormy, the ship moves fast; when it is calm, it is easy to rest. The sailors always pray for those at home. They will give thanks and die happy when they return home
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1842 (journal of the Courier)
KEYWORDS: sailor ship home return death nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, p. 150, "The Mariner's Life" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #27506
File: HGam150

Marines' Hymn (From the Halls of Montezuma)

DESCRIPTION: "From the Halls of Montezuma To the shores of Tripoli We fight our country's battles On the land and on the sea." The singers are "proud to claim the title of United States Marines." They fight well and toast the success of the Marines wherever they go
AUTHOR: music: Jacques Offenbach
EARLIEST DATE: 1868 (music published, according to Fuld)
KEYWORDS: marines travel
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Niles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe, pp. 72-76, "Marine Hymn" (1 text, 1 tune)
Shay-BarroomBallads/PiousFriendsDrunkenCompanions, pp. 105-106, "The Marines' Song" (1 text)
Marion Massacre, The

DESCRIPTION: "A story now I'll tell you Of a fearful massacree Which happened down in Dixie On the borders of the sea." Five textile workers are shot in Marion, North Carolina. The workers needed more money; the owners brought in police.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (recording, Frank Welling & John McGhee)

KEYWORDS: strike labor-movement police death

FOUND IN: REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, pp. 131-132, "The Marion Massacre" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 239-240, "The Marion Massacre" (1 text)

RECORDINGS:
Frank Welling & John McGhee (as the Martin Brothers), "The Marion Massacre" (Paramount 3194, 1929)

File: CAFS1239

Marionene

DESCRIPTION: "Marionene, when you said to me That your love would never fade away, Maidens sometimes break their vows, they say. Did you know what love might do?" The singer promises to be true, and asks, "hear my prayer, Heart and soul are only thine"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1953 (Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric)

KEYWORDS: love nonballad

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 109, "Marionene" (1 text)

Roud #11393

File: Brne109

Mariposa

DESCRIPTION: The steamer Mariposa, loaded with general cargo and sheep, runs on shore at Grassy Point, Labrador. "A portion of her cargo is gone up and down the shore, Honestly and hardly earned by the people of Labrador"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast)

KEYWORDS: ship wreck sea humorous theft

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sep 27, 1895 - Mariposa, sailing from Montreal to Liverpool sinks in the Strait of Belle Isle at L'Anse Au Clair (source: Northern Shipwrecks DataBase)

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 79, "Mariposa" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST LLab079 (Partial)

Roud #9980

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Old Mayflower" (theme of wreckers) and references there
NOTES [90 words]: Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast: "The general attitude toward wrecks was summed up for me by one man, who said, 'If the good Lord sees fit to wrack a vessel, we hope it'll be hereabouts; we can use anything on board.'" - BS
There seems to be some disagreement about the date of this wreck. Frank Galgay and Michael McCarthy, Shipwrecks of Newfoundland and Labrador, [Volume I], Harry Cuff Publishing, 1987, p. 87, agrees that the SS Mariposa was lost in the Strait of Belle Isle, but gives the date as September 24, 1895. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.2
File: LLab079

Maritime Memories of Wexford

DESCRIPTION: "Tis often I dream of the old Wexford fleet," "golden memories" of the end of the nineteenth century. "Ah! those were the days of the sailing ship, days of a rare old sport, When the Devereux flag was carried on the ships that sailed from our port"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1945 (Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast)
KEYWORDS: sea ship commerce lyric nonballad
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, p. 10, "Maritime Memories of Wexford" (1 text)
Roud #20531
File: Ran010

Marjie Murdock

DESCRIPTION: "Shame shame shame Marjie Murdock, What a burning shame." "When the wedding come Marjie Murdock, You gie dem ginger-beer." "Me ask you fo' rum Marjie Murdock, Me ask you fo' rum." "When the wedding reach Marjie Murdock You run under bed!"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1954 (Elder-FolksongsFromTobago)
KEYWORDS: wedding accusation drink nonballad wife
FOUND IN: West Indies(Tobago)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Elder-FolksongsFromTobago 1, "Marjie Murdock" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [26 words]: Elder-FolksongsFromTobago: "Ginger-beer is a prestige beverage among the folk but at weddings it is not made to compete with drinks like rum and gin." - BS
Last updated in version 4.0
File: EIT0001

Mark Murphy

DESCRIPTION: Mark Murphy from Avondale "could fight and farm and swing his arm and drive this world along, But the only thing he left undone was to try and hold his tongue." He bragged once too often about his boxing and was shown up by a boxer he said he could beat

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland)
KEYWORDS: bragging fight humorous
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 103-104, "Mark Murphy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #12454
NOTES [12 words]: Avondale is inland at central eastern Queens, Prince Edward Island. - BS
File: Dib103

Market Street Blues

DESCRIPTION: "I ain't gonna walk on Market Street no mo', 'Cause market Street made my feet so so'." "Went to the gypsy to get my fortune tol', That low-down gypsy stole my jelly roll." "Sittin' here worried, a bucket won' hold my tears (x2)"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1983 (Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices)
KEYWORDS: Gypsy abandonment
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices, p. 204, "Market Street Blues" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #16276
File: Rose204

Marksman, The

DESCRIPTION: In '45 the singer fell in love with a maid who wore the Orange and Blue. He inquired of her home: "her index it came from above." Other questions were answered in Masonic code. Bring your sweethearts and "see if yours tells you what my love told me"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1987 (Smyth/Bush/Long-OrangeLark)
KEYWORDS: courting ritual religious
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Smyth/Bush/Long-OrangeLark 31, "The Marksman" (1 text, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Inniskilling Dragoon" (tune, according to Orange Lark)
cf. "The Grand Templar's Song" (Masonic symbolism: Aaron's rod) and references there NOTES [67 words]: Within the Orange Lodges, "Purple Marksman" refers to one of the Master degree, above "Orange" and "Orange Marksman," of the Orange Institution (source: "The Formation of the Orange Order 21st September 1795" in the anti-Orange Evangelical Truth at NIreland.com site).
Smyth/Bush/Long-OrangeLark has no comment on the code. The song says "if you want to know the secret, go search and you'll see." - BS
File: OrLa031

Marlborough Wreck, The

DESCRIPTION: "Come all you good people of every degree": people in the town of Marlboro are told to tremble when the see the coffins of five men who drowned when a storm struck a vessel at anchor on the Hudson. Only two survived. So stop sinning.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1887 (Charles F. Cochrane, History of the Town of Marlborough, according to Nestler)
KEYWORDS: ship death storm wreck funeral warning
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
ADDITIONAL: Harold Nestler, "Songs from the Hudson Valley" (article in New York Folklore Quarterly, Volume V, #2, Summer 1949), pp. 84-86, "(no title)" (1 text)
NOTES [29 words]: Your standard, "I'm God, see what you made me do?" sort of piece. Since there is no logic behind its warnings, I very much doubt it persuaded anyone not already believing.
- RBW
Last updated in version 4.4
File: HaNe084

Marriage Causes Trouble

DESCRIPTION: He says he will never marry, "my sorrow for to double," because you need a house, pots, pans, cradle .... She says she has a house and the other things. He says they'd need two maids for the house and children. She says she'll do everything. See notes.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (Greig/Duncan5)
KEYWORDS: marriage dialog nonballad
Marriage of Sir Gawain, The [Child 31]

DESCRIPTION: Arthur must fight a huge knight or come back later and say what women most desire. An ugly woman will give the answer if Arthur marries her to one of his knights. Gawain agrees, leaves it up to her to be beautiful by day or night, and lifts the spell

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1794 (Percy)

KEYWORDS: courting marriage shape-changing royalty magic

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (21 citations):
Child 31, "The Marriage of Sir Gawain" (1 text)
Hales/Furnival-BishopPercysFolioManuscript, volume I, pp. 103-118, "The Marriage of S(i)rgawaine" (1 text, with the defects supplied from The Wedding of Sir Gawain and Dame Ragnall"
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 118-123, "The Marriage of Sir Gawain" (1 text)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 19, "The Marriage of Sir Gawain [A Fragment]" (1 text)
Morgan-MedievalBallads-ChivalryRomanceAndEverydayLife, pp. 102-108, "The Marriage of Sir Gawain" (1 text)
Niles-BalladBookOfJohnJacobNiles 18, "The Marriage of Sir Gawain" (1 text, 1 tune, clearly a form of this ballad but of doubtful authenticity)
DT 31, GAWAIN1
Brown/Robbins-IndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse, #1819
DigitalIndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse #2992

ADDITIONAL: Thomas Hahn, editor, _Sir Gawain: Eleven Romances and Tales_, TEAMS (Consortium for the Teaching of the Middle Ages), Medieval Institute Publications, Western Michigan University, 1995), pp. 41-80, "The Marriage of Sir Gawain" (1 text)

RELATED: Versions of the Romance "The Wedding of Sir Gawain and Dame Ragnall" --
DigitalIndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse #3130
Thomas Hahn, editor, _Sir Gawain: Eleven Romances and Tales_, TEAMS (Consortium for the Teaching of the Middle Ages), Medieval Institute Publications, Western Michigan University, 1995), pp. 41-80, "The Wedding of Sir Gawain and Dame Ragnall" (1 text, of 853 line)
Donald B. Sands, editor, _Middle English Verse Romances_, Holt Rinehart and Winston, 1966, pp. 323-347, "The Wedding of Sir Gawain and Dame Ragnell" (1 text, of 855 lines)
Modernized prose version: Louis B. Hall, _The Knightly Tales of Sir Gawain_, with introductions and translations by Hall, Nelson-Hall, 1976, pp. 155-176, "The Wedding of Sir Gawain and Dame Ragnall"
John Edwin Wells, _A Manual of the Writings in Middle English 1050-1400_, 1916 (references are to the 1930 fifth printing with three supplements), pp. 67-69, "(The Weddyng of Sir Gawen and Dame Ragnell" (prose summaries of the romance, with notes)
Roud #3966
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. ""King Henry" [Child 32] (theme of the loathly woman)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Sir Gaunie and the Witch
NOTES [2525 words]: According to Fowler, p. 158 n. 25, this is one of eighteen ballads in the Child collection found only in the Percy Folio.
The theme of the "Loathly Woman" is common in folklore -- indeed, Chaucer/Benson, p. 10, points out that the legend itself (with the sexes reversed) survives to this day in the folklore of "The Princess and the Frog." This is typically traced to the Grimm folktale of "The Frog King" (the first tale in most printed editions of Grimm). This has multiple English analogies, the closest probably being the Scottish ("The Well at the World's End," Jacobs, pp. 215-219; summarized on pp. 563-564 of Briggs, volume A1; the tale seems rare in English tradition). Note, however, that in "The Frog King," the princess does not kiss the frog; he in fact transforms when she throws him against the wall! The tale as it is now generally told has clearly done some post-Grimm evolving.
There is another reversed variant now best known as "Beauty and the Beast"; many versions have links to the ancient Greek tale of Eros/Cupid and Psyche, and some versions even have a sort of a parallel to the story of Janet pulling a rose in "Tam Lin" [Child 39]. There is a close English analogy in the tale of "The Small-Tooth Dog" (Briggs, volume A.1, pp. 487-489). But the usual version of "Beauty and the Beast" came into English from French; the version most of us know is from Mme. Leprence de Beaumont's 1756 _Magasin des Enfants_ (Jones-Larousse, p. 57) or from Charles Perreault (Pickering, p. 28); the version in Lang's _Blue Fairy Book_ is attributed to Madame de Villanueva.
The "Loathly Woman" is generally a more complex tale, and seemingly known in the British Isles at a much earlier date than either the Frog Princess or Beauty and the Beast. Indeed, Zipes, p. 47, declares that "Beauty and the Beast!" tales, which all require a woman's patient tolerance of an ugly man, have no companion tales in the modern period in which the obverse obtains, that is, a man who must love an ugly wife. In the medieval period, however, numerous companion tales circulated.
Tatar, p. 60, puts it even more bluntly: "Can we imagine, as Chaucer did in the Wife of Bath's tale, a story that could be called 'Handsome and the Beast'?"
The origin of the type is somewhat uncertain. One version goes back to the Irish tale of Niall of the Nine Hostages, summaries of which can be found in o hOgain, pp. 377-379 and Ellis, pp. 181-182. Niall was a historical figure of sorts, but OxfordCompanion, p. 388, can offer few hard facts: "Niall Noigiallach... eponymous ancestor of the Ui Neill [O'Neals], reputed to have flourished in the early 5th century. The earliest traditions about his career are ninth century in date, when he is remembered as a raider of Britain."
One version of the story makes him a contemporary of St. Patrick -- indeed, Niall is sometimes said to have been responsible for his kidnapping (McMahon, p. 10).
Most of the tales about him revolve around his difficult relationships with his four half-brothers (although the relationship is somewhat confused. Ellis, p. 182, describes him as being oppressed by his stepmother, who favored her other boys -- yet how could he have older brothers by a living stepmother? O hOgain, p. 377, offers an alternate explanation that he was the son of a concubine, perhaps captured in Britain.)
Only one incident in Niall's career need detain us. He and his brothers -- who always seem to be together despite their rivalry -- were out hunting, and wanted water. They came upon a hag in the forest (Ellis, p. 182, says she had black skin, grey hair, and green teeth), who offered water to the one who kissed her. Three of the brothers refused absolutely, the fourth pecked her on the cheek -- and Niall kissed her properly and, when she demanded he lie with her, complied. She then was transformed into a beautiful woman who promised him sovereignty in Ireland.
(I am not sure, but this may be a reflection of the early Irish notion that the King was the husband of every woman in the land, and responsible for fertility; for this idea, see Ford-Mabinogi, p. 7.)
The parallels with this song will be obvious, but the differences are also substantial, and the dating of the tale dubious.
The notion of shape-changing, and questions about it, occur in other Irish tales. Curtin, pp. 15-25, prints a tale, "The Three Daughters of King O'Hara." This is a fairly close parallel of Asbjørnsen and Moe's "East of the Sun and West of the Moon," which itself has its roots in the Latin tale of Cupid and Psyche, but the Irish version has the twist that three daughters wish for husbands, and all gain enchanted husbands -- two who are enchanted as seals, one as a dog. All three are asked the question that we shall meet below: Would the girls rather have their husbands be men by day and animals by night, or vice versa? The two older girls prefer that their husbands be men by day; the youngest prefers him a man by night and a white dog by day.

There were plenty of English-language parallels. The theme seems to have been very popular around 1400. Gower had a Loathly Woman story in the Tale of Florent in the Confessio Amantis (Chaucer/Benson, p. 872). We find it in ballads in "King Henry" [Child 32]. ("The Half-Hitch" [Laws N23], claimed by some extreme lumpers as a version of this ballad, also involves an ugly woman turned beautiful, but there the man is under a self-imposed oath; the two are not really parallel.) A very brief "catch" on the same theme is quoted by Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes, #206:

The hart he loves the high wood,
The hare she loves the hill;
The knight he loves his bright sword,
The lady loves her will.

From about the same time as Gower, and even closer to the ballad, is the fifteenth century romance "The Wedding of Sir Gawen and Dame Ragnall" (called "Dame Ragnall" by Sands). It is viewed by Sir Frederic Madden as the source of the ballad. The notes on pp. 378-379 of Shepherd amount to the same claim -- and treat the ballad as a romance. (Indeed, Shepherd, p. 380, dates this piece to the late fifteenth century, and suggests sundry links with Malory's Morte d'Arthur -- a rather difficult claim, given that it would be some time before the Morte became widely known.) Neither romance nor ballad is well-attested. We should note that, apart from the dubious piece in Niles-BalladBookOfJohnJacobNiles, the only extant version of this ballad is the copy in the Percy folio. And that is badly damaged; it is in the section where half of each page has been torn out, so we have only portions of the piece (which may or may not have been sung as a ballad -- even in its damaged form, it is more than fifty verses long, which is very long for an item maintained by oral tradition). Given that the Percy Folio contains several pieces that appear to be romances cut down to size, it strikes me as quite possible that there was once a fuller "Marriage" romance, which cannot have been "Dame Ragnall" because too many details are different. But if they are not directly dependent, the connection between this ballad and "Dame Ragnall" are hard to deny. If the song is not a recomposition of that romance, it certainly derives from the same immediate source. In the romance (retelling the summary in Sands, pp. 324-325), Arthur meets the huge "Sir Gromer Somer Jour," (a peculiar name -- as Hall notes on p. 157, "Gromer" is probably from the Old Norse "gromr," a boy or youth; "Sommer" is English "summer," and "Jour" is French "day." So Sir Gromer is a child's summer day in bits of three languages. Hahn, p. 42, says that his name "connects him with the licensed anarchy of Midsummer's Day"). Sir Gromer threatens Arthur with death because he has given away land that belongs to Sir Gromer. In order to avoid death, the king is forced to take an oath to return in a year and answer the question, "What do women want?" Gawain manages to learn what has happened from Arthur, and they set out to find an answer. Toward the end of the year, Arthur meets the Loathly Woman in Inglewood, who will answer the question but only if allowed to marry Gawain. Arthur pretends to refuse -- but then begs Gawain to marry her. Gawain, who comes off far better than Arthur, agrees. (In English romances of this period, he is consistently the paragon of honor and very commonly the romantic hero; CHEL1, p. 269). Arthur gets his answer, and is saved. That leaves Gawain to deal with Ragnall, who...

was so foulle and horrible.
She had two teethe on every side
As boris tuskes, I wolle not hide....
With grey heris many on.
Her lippes laye lumprid on her chin.
(lines 547-549, 553-554; Sands, p. 339)

Like Percy's "Marriage," the "Dame Ragnall" romance is found in only one manuscript, Bodleian MS Rawlinson C 86, which has lost a leaf containing probably about 70 lines after line 628. Sands, p. 325, speculates that it was deliberately cut out due to its indecent content. The missing leaf contains a portion of the marriage ceremony, but the key question -- "fair by day and foul by night or vice versa" (Sands, p. 325) survives. When Gawain and the loathly lady go to bed, she turns beautiful. Gawain, amazed, asks "whate are ye?" (line 644). She replies (lines 658-663)

My beauty wolle not hold:
Wheder ye wolle have me faire on nightes
And as foulle on days to alle men sightes
Or els to have me faire on days
And on nightes on the foulist wife.
Gawain finds the choice too hard, and in lines 677-680, declares:
But do as ye list nowe, my lady gaye
The choice I put in your fist.
Evin as ye wolle, I put it in your hand.
And, of course, since he gave her the choice, she is transformed and becomes beautiful both day and night.
Yet more famous, and from almost the same time as Gower, is Chaucer's Wife of Bath's Tale. Like "The Marriage of Sir Gawain," this has an Arthurian setting, with a knight raping a woman and being tried for it. Queen Guinivere, granted the right to sentence him, commands that he learn what women want. He finally locates a hag who promises the answer if he will marry her. Being under sentence of death, he agrees -- and learns that what women want is "sovereignty" -- i.e. control. She then offers him a choice: "foul and faithful" or "fair and faithless." (A choice which, in fact, reflects many of the tradeoffs in human biology; evolution has made us mostly but not quite monogamous, making this a very difficult question. Just think of the fraction of Shakespeare involved in questions of cuckoldry.) In the tale, he offers her the choice -- and, satisfied with him, she becomes beautiful and faithful.
(I should perhaps note that a number of scholars think the Wife of Bath's Tale is not the tale Chaucer originally meant for the Wife; some suggest that she was originally meant to tell the Shipman's Tale. But her tale is an excellent fit for her personality; if this hypothesis is correct, one must suspect that Chaucer encountered the Loathly Woman tale while the Canterbury Tales was already under construction -- perhaps from his friend Gower. Chaucer's direct source has never been identified; I suspect he revised -- and dramatically improved, with the "foul or fair" question -- whatever it was that inspired him. Unfortunately, in the process, he made the woman far less of a character than in the romance of Gawain and the loathly woman; as Hall notes on p. 155, Dame Ragnall -- clever, independent, and refusing to be shamed by things not her fault -- dominates the romance, which is "one of the great stories in Middle English.")
In a rather sad ending, Gawain is said to have loved Ragnall above all his other wives (he went through several, given all the tales about him), but she died within five years.
There is one other interesting sidelight on this: Gawain in this song not only takes on King Arthur's fate but his question. According to Mallory's Le Morte D'Arthur, Book III, Chapter 1 (and earlier versions of the Arthur/Lancelot/Guinivere story), "Merlin warned the king covertly that Guenever was not wholesome for him to take to wife, for he warned that Launcelot should love her, and she him again" (p. 71 in Malory/Rhys). Thus, since Guinivere was considered the fairest woman in the land and Arthur seems to have wanted her for her looks, Merlin presented Arthur with the same question that Gawain faced: "Fair and faithless or foul and faithful." It wasn't so stark for Arthur; Merlin promised to find him a beautiful (if not quite so beautiful) and faithful wife if he would wait. But Arthur chose "fair and faithless," and of course the consequence was his destruction and the destruction of his dream. Thus Gawain not only proved more honorable than Arthur but more wise. (Of course, none of this has anything to do with the historical Arthur; for background on that, see "King Arthur and King Cornwall" [Child 30].)
Jacobs, p. 256, comments of "The Laidly Worm of Spindleston Heughs" and "Kemp Owyne" [Child 34], "There is certainly something Celtic about the Laidly being and the deliverance kiss, as Mr. Nott, as pointed out, Academy, April 30, 1892, and Miss Weston has shown the connection in her Legend of Sir Gawain, p. 49. Indeed, may not Owein be identical with Gawain?" In the "Laidly Worm," Child Wynd recalls his sister by kissing her; in "The Marriage of Sir Gawain," Gawain turns Dame Ragnall beautiful by agreeing to love her.
The manuscript of the Ragnall romance is generally regarded as dating from about 1500. The poem itself is probably 50-150 years older (Sands, p. 325, argues it was composed around 1450 and seems to be in East Midland dialect) -- though the very confused writing makes things harder. I observe that, in the first 60 lines in Sands, there the name "Arthur" is spelled "Arthoure," "Arture," "Arthoure" again, "Arthure, and "Arthour."
Sands notes, p. 323, that the romance is generally not regarded as humorous, but "the Dame Ragnell poet seems to have taken delight in grotesque characterization and absurd social situations." He calls the poet an "indifferent artist who could tell a story with sufficient skill to make it effective." And, perhaps, sufficient skill to induce another poet to create a ballad of it. Several other ballads also derive loosely or from Middle English romance, or from the legends that underly it, examples being:
* "Hind Horn" [Child 17], from "King Horn" (3 MSS., including Cambridge Gg.4.27.2, which also contains "Floris and Blancheflour")
* "King Orfeo" [Child 19], from "Sir Orfeo" (3 MSS., including the Auchenleck MS, which also contains "Floris and Blancheflour")
* "Blancheflour and Jellyflorece" [Child 300], from "Floris and Blancheflour" (4 MSS, including Cambridge Gg.4.27.2, which also contains "King Horn," and the Auchenleck MS, which also contains "Sir Orfeo")

It is somewhat depressing to note that, even though Chaucer and the Ragnall romance between them pretty definitively said all that needs to be said about this topic, moderns still try to add to it. Lupack, pp. 314-317, lists a number of retellings, most recently a blank verse recasting, "Gawain and the Loathly Lady," by Marilyn Bechely. - RBW

Bibliography

- Briggs: Katherine Briggs, A Dictionary of British Folk-Tales in the English Language, Part A: Folk Narratives, 1970 (I use the 1971 Routledge paperback that combines volumes A.1 and A.2)
- Chaucer/Benson: Larry D. Benson, general editor, The Riverside Chaucer, third edition, Houghton Mifflin, 1987 (based on F. N. Robinson, The Works of Geoffrey Chaucer, which is considered to be the first and second editions of this work)
- Curtin: Jeremiah Curtin, Myths and Folk Tales of Ireland, originally published in 1890 as Myths and Folk-Lore of Ireland (I use the 1975 Dover edition with the full text of the tales but without the introduction)
- Hahn: Thomas Hahn, editor, Sir Gawain: Eleven Romances and Tales, TEAMS (Consortium for the Teaching of the Middle Ages), Medieval Institute Publications, Western Michigan University, 1995
- Hall: Louis B. Hall, The Knightly Tales of Sir Gawain, with introductions and translations by Hall, Nelson-Hall, 1976
- Jacobs: Joseph Jacobs, collector, English Fairy Tales, originally published 1890; revised edition 1898 (I use the 1967 Dover paperback reprint)
- McMahon: Sean McMahon, A Short History of Ireland, 1996; references are to the 1997 Dufour paperback edition
- O hOgain: Daithi O hOgain, The Lore of Ireland, Boydell Press, 2006
- Pickering: David Pickering, The Cassell Dictionary of Folklore, Cassell, 1999
- Sands: Donald B. Sands, editor, Middle English Verse Romances, Holt Rinehart and Winston, 1966
- Tatar: Maria Tatar, The Annotated Classic Fairy Tales, edited and with an Introduction by Maria Tatar, Norton, 2002

Last updated in version 5.3
File: C031
Married and Single Life (I)

DESCRIPTION: Singer warns young people of the perils of marriage, tells them to wait until age 21, and be sure of their sweethearts. "When a man's married he ain't his own man... But when a man's single he can live at his ease..."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1916 (Cecil Sharp collection)

LONG DESCRIPTION: Singer warns young people (mostly men) of the perils of marriage, tells them to wait until age 21, and be sure of their sweethearts, who can be deceitful. "When a man's married he ain't his own man... For selling his freedom to buy him a wife... But when a man's single he can live at his ease... he can rove through the country and live at his will / Kiss Polly, kiss Betsy, and he is the same still." He offers healths to the single and married alike

KEYWORDS: age marriage warning drink nonballad bachelor husband

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 73, "Married and Single Life" (1 text, 1 tune) DT, MARRSING

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bachelor's Hall (I)" (subject)
cf. "Single Girl, Married Girl" (subject)
cf. "I Wish I Were a Single Girl Again" (subject)
cf. "I Wish I Were Single Again (I - Male)" (subject)
cf. "When I Was Single (II)" (subject)
cf. "Sporting Bachelors" (subject)

NOTES [16 words]: This has parallel content to a lot of other "stay single" songs, but it's separate nonetheless. - PJS

File: ShrAp73

Married and Single Life (II)

DESCRIPTION: The singer warns young men "there is falsehood in the fairest ... a single life's the dearest." But, if you happen to get a wife who is modest, and so on, and let's a man "sit and sing In triumph like a king ... married life's the dearest"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan5)

KEYWORDS: marriage warning nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan5 1066, "Married and Single Life" (2 texts, 1 tune) Roud #6718

File: GrD1066

Married Man Going to Keep Your Secret (Hey Lilee)

DESCRIPTION: "Married man going to keep your secret, Hi-li-li-lee-o" (x2). "Single boy will talk about you."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry)

KEYWORDS: courting adultery nonballad

FOUND IN: West Indies(Bahamas)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 84-86, "Married Man Gonna Keep Your Secret" (1 text, 1 tune) Roud #15650

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Married Man Going to Keep Your Secret
Hey Lilee Lilee Lo
Hey Li Lee Li Lee

File: LoSi084
Married Man, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer looks back fondly on seven years of marriage: His wife cares for him (even when he drinks too much), and never questions or scolds. He advises girls to keep this in mind. "So, girls, mind you this when you marry."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: marriage drink husband wife warning
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H701, p. 501, "The Married Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST HHH701 (Full)
Roud #9465
File: HHH701

Married Man's Blues

DESCRIPTION: Singer is ready to leave his wife and boy after he "gave ten years." His wife "just hollers all the time." "I'm going out west and I'm never coming back So you'll never see me any more."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (StuffDreams1)
KEYWORDS: shrewishness marriage farewell home parting rambling separation travel nonballad children wife
FOUND IN:
Roud #21347
RECORDINGS:
Wade Ward, "Married Man's Blues" (on StuffDreams1)
File: RcMaMaBl

Married to a Mermaid

DESCRIPTION: Farmer loves a knight's daughter, the knight has him pressed. At sea the farmer falls overboard. As his comrades look for him he pops up and tells them how he found and then married a mermaid. The sailors wish him well. Choruses of "Rule Britannia."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1870 (Broadside, Bodleian library)
KEYWORDS: sailor mermaid/man pressgang farming marriage
FOUND IN: Britain US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 174-176, "Married to a Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hugill-SongsOfTheSea, p. 184, "Married to a Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9143
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Rule Britannia" (tune and chorus)
cf. "Down in the Diving Bell (The Mermaid (II))" (theme of marrying a mermaid)
NOTES [169 words]: This was obviously based on "Rule Britannia," keeping the tune and popular chorus and replacing all the other text. According to contemplator.com it was credited in the "Scottish Student's Handbook" to "A.J.C." and also appeared in Toser's "Sailor's Songs of Chanties." It seems to have been made popular by [music hall performer] Arthur Lloyd (1839-1904) but I could find no indication that he was responsible for the words. One of the Bodleian broadsides state that it was sung to the tune of "The Revelers." - SL n a strange semi-folkloric note, J. R. R. Tolkien is said to have translated a traditional song called "The Mermaid" into Old English (Christina Scull & Wayne G. Hammond, The J. R. R. Tolkien Companion and Guide: Reader's Guide, Houghton Mifflin, 2006, p. 769). The one line quoted ("It was in the broad Atlantic") appears to be from "Married to a Mermaid" instead of Child 289, but I can't imagine where Tolkien would have found that, and we know that Tolkien knew the Child collection well. - RBW

Marrowbone Itch, The
DESCRIPTION: "Look out, boys, better watch your hands, Joe's got the itch... That marrowbone itch is a-killing me." "That marrowbone itch... You have to scratch it day and night." It makes the hands crack; many people have caught it
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry)
KEYWORDS: disease nonballad
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 110-111, "The Marrowbone Itch" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #15605
File: LxSi110

Marrowbones [Laws Q2]
DESCRIPTION: An old wife goes to the doctor for a potion to blind her husband. The doctor suggests (eggs and) marrowbones. He says he wishes to die and asks her to push him off a cliff. As she runs to do so, he steps aside. She drowns; he says he cannot see to help
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1874 (quoted in Mark Twain, _Life on the Mississippi_)
KEYWORDS: suicide trick drugs death
FOUND IN: US(Ap,MA,MW,NE,Ro,SE,So) Britain(England(Lond,South),Scotland)
Canada(Mar,Newf,Ont) Ireland
REFERENCES (56 citations):
Laws Q2, "The Old Wife of Slapsadam (The Wily Auld Carle; The Old Woman in Dover; etc.)"
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #13, p. 1, "The Wily Auld Carle" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan2 318, "The Wife o' Kelso" (11 texts, 7 tunes)
Gatherer-SongsAndBalladsOfDundee 68, "The Wife o' Dundee" (1 text, 1 tune)
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 237-239, "Johnny Sands" (2 texts, but only the second, with no letter, is this piece)
Randolph 754, "Johnny Sands" (2 texts, 2 tunes, but the "A" text goes with "Johnny Sands" [Laws Q3] while the "B" text belongs with this piece)
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 176-178, "The Rich Old Lady" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scarborough-ASongCatcherInSouthernMountains, pp. 239-240, "A Cruel Wife" (1 text)
Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 30, "An Old Woman's Story" (1 text)
Neely/Spargo-TalesAndSongsOfSouthernIllinois, pp. 151-152, "The Old Woman from Slab Cty" (1 text)
McIntosh-FolkSongsAndSingingGamesOfIllinoisOzarks, pp. 35-36, "Old Woman in Slab City" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 93-94=Wolford/Richmond/Tillson-PlayPartyInIndiana, p. 232, "There Was An Old Woman in Ireland" (1 text, 1 tune, a short text, converted into a playparty, with only a few words of this song)
Flanders/Olney-BalladsMigrantInNewEngland, pp. 13-14, "The Drowning Lady (The Witch Song)" (1 fragment, 1 tune, which might be either "Marrowbones" or "Johnnie Sands")
Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 255-258, "The Old Woman in Dover" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cazden/Haufrecht/Studer-FolkSongsOfTheCatskills 141, "The Old Woman from Boston" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 55, "The Rich Old Lady" (3 texts, 3 tunes)
Peacock, pp. 261-264, "Eggs and Marrow-Bones" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 357-359, "There Lived an Old Woman in Dover (Eggs and Marrow Bones)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 113, "A Cruel Wife" (1 text, 1 tune)
Karpeles-FolkSongsFromNewfoundland 39, "The Rich Old Lady" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 122, "Marrow Bones" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 73, "Marrow Bones" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 109-110,243, "Cheese and Marrowbones" (1 text, 1 tune) text, 1 tune)
Ives-21FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 75-77,84, "There Was an Old Woman in Our Town" (1 text, 1 tune)
Vikár/Panagapka-SongsNorthWoodsSungByOJAbbott 16, "There Was an Old Woman" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 182, "The Old Woman's Blind Husband" (2 texts)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 182, "The Old Woman's Blind Husband" (2 excerpts, 2 tunes)
Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 44, "The Old Woman" (1 text, 1 tune)
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 103, "She Loved Her Husband Dearly" (1 text, 1 tune)
Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol2, p. 110, "The Cruel Wife" (1 text, 1 tune)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-1ed, pp. 207-209, "The Old Woman From Ireland" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brewster-BalladsAndSongsOfIndiana 60, "An Old Woman's Story" (1 text)
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, p. 172, "There Was an Old Woman in London" (1 text, 1 tune)
Carey-MarylandFolkLegendsAndFolkSongs, pp. 101, "Old Woman from Ireland" (1 text)
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, p. 281, "The Wife of Kelso (The Wily Auld Carle)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp/Karpeles-EightyEnglishFolkSongs 51, "The Rich Old Lady" (1 text, 1 tune)
Reeves/Sharp-TheldiomOfThePeople 99, "There Was an Old Woman" (2 texts)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 274, "The Rich Old Lady" (1 text, 1 tune)
Chase-AmericanFolkTalesAndSongs, pp. 130-131, "The Rich Old Lady" (1 text, 1 tune -- with a second verse created by Chase)
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #121, "The Old Woman of Clinton" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H174, p. 507, "The Auld Man and the Churnstaff" (1 text, 1 tune)
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 88, "Marrowbones" (1 text, 1 tune)
McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen 70, "The Wee Woman in Our Town" (1 text, 1 tune)
Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday 35, pp. 89-90,121,170, "Marrow Bones" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 208, "The Old Woman of Blighter Town" (1 text, 1 tune)
Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 114, "Marrow Bones" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 417, "Old Woman of Hyslop Town" (1 text)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #82, "Marrowbones" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cox-FolkSongsSouth 157, "An Old Woman's Story" (1 text)
Bush-FSofCentralWestVirginiaVol5, pp. 58-59, "The Old Woman of Slapsdam/The Old Lady from Dover/The Rich Old Lady" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Gainer-FolkSongsFromTheWestVirginiaHills, pp. 148-149, "A Blind Man He Can See" (1 text, 1 tune)
Boette-SingaHipsyDoodle, "Singa Hipsy Doodle" (1 text, 1 tune)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 144-145, "There Was an Old Lady" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 173, "Eggs And Marrowbones" (1 text)
DT 344, MARBONES* MARBONE2* MARBONE3* MARBONE4 MARBONE5 MARBONE6*
Roud #183
RECORDINGS:
Horton Barker, "There Was an Old Lady" (on Barker01)
Harry Cox, "Marrowbones" (on HCox01)
Betty Garland, "Love My Darlin' O" (on BGarland01)
Frank Hillier, "The Old Woman of Blighter Town" (on FSBFTX19)
Leonard Hulan, "Eggs and Marrow-Bones" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
Jimmy Knights, "Marrowbones" (on Voice06)
A. L. Lloyd, "Tigery Orum" (on Lloyd01)
John Maguire, "Marrowbones" (on IRJMaguire01)
Red Mick McDermott, "Marrowbones" (on IRHardySons)
Lawrence Older, "Woman from Yorkshire" (on LOlder01)
Ken Peacock, "Woman from Dover" (on NFKPeacock)
Wesley Smith, "Cheese and Marrowbones" (on MREIves01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Johnny Sands" [Laws Q3]
cf. "The Keach in the Creel" (tune, according to Greig/Duncan2)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Eggs and Marrowbones
Old Woman from Wexford

Dover

NOTES [253 words]: At one time witches were killed by drowning, and Flanders and Olney connect their fragmentary text (which mentions only the drowning and the husband pushing the wife in) with this phenomenon.

Mark Twain quotes a fragment of this piece in Life on the Mississippi.

The Catskills version has a peculiar ending in which the lady swims to the other shore and survives. Much as we would like this to be a feminist touch, it seems more likely that it was a lapse of memory.

Sam Henry had a text in which the man eventually rescued her. Pamela Reinagel points out to me that this is also true in Sarah Makem's version. Perhaps there was an onlooker around somewhere? Interesting that both versions with this trait are from Ireland.

Captain Francis Grose, A Classical Dictionary of the Vulgar Tongue, edited (and expanded) by Eric Partridge, 1931 (I use the 1992 Dorset edition), p. 229, notes that "marrow bones" are a nickname for the knees, and mentions a folk derivation from "Mary's bones." Partridge adds a mention of the "marquess of marrowbones" as a lackey. I don't know if any of these have any significance to the song.

A number of editors confuse "Johnny Sands" [Laws Q3] and "Marrowbones" [Laws Q2]. They obviously have thematic similarity, and probably have exchanged parts. But the "gimmick" is different in each case; there seems no doubt that they are now separate songs. - RBW

Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland and Ives-21FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland are the same July 15, 1963 performance. - BS

Last updated in version 6.0

File: LQ02

Mars Forevermore

DESCRIPTION: "Well now, brave boys, we're off to the main, Roar, Agamemnon, roar, To load our ships with the dollars of Spain, Mars forevermore!" Thirty French and Spanish ships are at sea, but they will have reason to remember 1805. The British will defeat them

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1987 (Browne-FolkSongsOfOldHampshire)

KEYWORDS: war battle nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Browne-FolkSongsOfOldHampshire, pp. 72-74, "Mars for Evermore" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Roll, Alabama, Roll" (form)

NOTES [35 words]: Although this is based on an event (Trafalgar) that predates the American Civil War, I can't help but think that it's based on "Roll, Alabama, Roll," or some related piece. The tune and form are both similar. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: BrHa072

Marseillaise, La

DESCRIPTION: French language: "Allons, enfants de la Patrie! Le jour gloire est arrive!" The listeners are urged to fight for France and freedom, and drive foreigners off French soil

AUTHOR: Rouget de Lisle

EARLIEST DATE: 1792 (sheet music)

KEYWORDS: patriotic France nonballad

FOUND IN: France

REFERENCES (7 citations):
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1384-#1386, p. 94, "La Marseillaise" (2 references, plus six various Martha Dexter

DESCRIPTION: Young Martha Dexter and her niece set out to visit the niece's mother. When they come to the river, the water is high and Martha's excitable horse throws her. She drowns. When her body is found at last, the family mourns

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1910 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)

KEYWORDS: death river drowning horse mourning

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Aug 1, 1824 - Death of Martha Decker near what is now Wilawanna, Pennsylvania

FOUND IN: US(MA,So)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 417-418, "Martha Dexter" (1 text)
Bronner/Eskin-FolksongAlivePart1 29, "Martha Deckert" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #4134

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Ballad of the Drover (Death of Harry Dale)" (theme)
cf. "The Mother's Malison, or Clyde's Water" [Child 216] (theme)

NOTES [76 words]: This is item dG34 in Laws's Appendix II.

My first reaction, upon reading the first half-dozen stanzas in Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, was that this is basically a variant of a "Marian Parker" ballad. It has that same cloying feel. But, of course, the song is based on an earlier event, and it takes a different direction at the end. The similarity is presumably due simply to the way semi-professional balladeers treat children. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.5
File: Beld417

Marthy Had a Baby

DESCRIPTION: "Marthy had a baby, and she said 'twas mine." "It must have been the walker's [walking boss's], 'cause it had blue eyes." "The walker couldn't stand to hear the baby cry." "Me an' my buddy stared lopin' down the road."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (collected from Roscoe McLean)
KEYWORDS: baby bastard prison father mother
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 385-386, "Marthy Had a Baby" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #15586
File: LoSi385

Marthy Wept (Mary Wept and Marthy Moaned)

DESCRIPTION: "Marthy wept and Mary moaned, A-weeoing on a willow tree -- tree -- tree, Don't you know? A-weeping...." "What did you do with my Lord? I left him on the other shore." "What did you do with that sinful man...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1932 (Henry, collected from Mrs. Samuel Harmon)
KEYWORDS: religious Jesus burial
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry-SongsSungInTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 190, "Marthy Wept" (1 text)
Roud #12123
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "We're All Surrounded" (lyrics)
NOTES [88 words]: The reference to "Martha wept and Mary cried" is presumably a reference to the sisters of Lazarus who mourned over their brother in John 11. The mention of a willow is not directly related to Jesus; the word "willow" is not even used in the King James New Testament. The reference is probably to Psalm 137. The question, "What did you do with my Lord?" seems to be an allusion to John 20:15. The question "What did you do with that sinful man" isn't ever asked in that form, though there are plenty of warnings to sinners. - RBW

File: MHAp190

Martin Said To His Man

DESCRIPTION: The singer says s/he saw various animals performing various activities, some of which are impossible or unlikely (E.g. "Saw a crow flying low"; "Saw a mule teachin' school"). In some versions, the narrator(s) are drunk, competing to tell the tallest tale.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1609 (Deuteromelia; registered as a ballad 1588)
KEYWORDS: contest drink lullaby nonballad nonsense paradox talltale animal bug
REFERENCES (18 citations):
Kinloch-TheBalladBook XIV, pp. 50-54, "The Man in the Moon" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan8 1703, "I Saw a Sparrow" (1 text plus a single verse on p. 401, 1 tune)
Porter/Gower-Jeannie-Robertson-EmergentSingerTransformativeVoice #10, pp. 125-126, "Soo Sewin' Silk" (1 text, 1 tune)
Reeves/Sharp-TheldiomOfThePeople 109, "Well Done Liar" (1 text)
Randolph 445, "Johnny Fool" (2 texts)
Roud #473

RECORDINGS:
Martha Hall, "Kitty Alone" (on MMOK, MMOKCD)
Lizzie Higgins, "Soo Sewin' Silk" (on LHiggins01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Gossip Joan (Neighbor Jones)" (theme)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Who's the Fool Now?
Old Blind Drunk John
Fooba-Wooba John

NOTES [616 words]: Referred to in Dryden's 1668 play "Sir Martin Mar-all, or the Feign'd Innocence" (act IV). It seems to have been very popular in the century prior to that.
Hyder E. Rollins, An Analytical Index to the Ballad-Entries (1557-1709) In the Register of the Company of Stationers of London, 1924 (I use the 1967 Tradition Press reprint with a new Foreword by Leslie Shepard), p. 146, #1681, gives the Stationer's Register entry for this as "Martyn said to his man, who is the foole now," printed November 9, 1588 by Thomas Orwin.
Rollins notes, in addition to Dryden's citation, that the title is used in Anthony Brewer's "Love-Sick King," Act III, and that someone named Collier in Notes & Queries, second series, XII, 143, connected this with someone by the name of Martin Skinck.
The American versions can generally be told by their narrative pattern, "(I) saw a () (doing something)," e.g. "Saw a crow flying low," "Saw a mule teaching school," "Saw a louse chase a mouse," "Saw a flea wade the sea."
The versions under the title "Kitty Alone" are sometimes a mix of this and "Frog Went A-Courting"; the first such text seems to have been in Gammer Gurton's Garland (1784), which has clearly a "Frog" plot but the form (and some of the exaggerations) of this piece.
I'm sure there are some who have argued that the ancient English "Martin Said To His Man" is not the same as the modern American texts. But there is continuity of verses, believe it or not, and the theme never changes. And there is no way to draw a dividing line.
There is a similar if not identical song that is even older than the "Martin" versions, which I was sorely tempted to lump with this. In the famous Richard Hill manuscript (Oxford, MS. Balliol College 354; see "MSRichardHill" in the Bibliography), folio 54 contains this lyric
I sawe a stokfysshe drawynge a harow, and a-noder dryveng a bowe,
and a saltfysshe shoteyng an arow,
I will have e whetstone, and I may.

I sawe an egg eating a [mag]pie.
Give me drink, my mouth is dry,
Yet ys not long syth I made a lye
I will have e whetstone, and I may.
I.e.
I saw an egg eating a [mag]pie.
Give me drink, my mouth is dry,
Yet [it] is not long since I made a lie,
I will have the whetstone, and I may.

References for this song include:
Martin, Tim, and Dan

DESCRIPTION: "Come all ye hustling chanty boys, a lesson take from me; Work steady in the lumber woods and don't go on a spree." The singer advises saving to buy a farm; he recalls learning to work as a logger. Chorus: "Martin, Tim, and Dan, Barney, Pat, and Sam...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EALEST DATE: 1934 (Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan)
KEYWORDS: logger lumbering farming work moniker
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 116, "Martin, Tim, and Dan" (1 short text)
ST GC116 (Partial)
Roud #3698

NOTES [25 words]: This may be related to some other lumbering song, but with only two verses and an easily-modified chorus, it will be very difficult to identify. - RBW

File: GC116

Martinmas Time

DESCRIPTION: A troop of soldiers forces farmer's daughter to promise she will come to their quarters that night. She arrives in disguise, but the quartermaster sends her away. She leaves her garters and ribbons tied to the gates to prove she'd been there.

AUTHOR: unknown
EALEST DATE: 1905 (Greig/Duncan1)
LONG DESCRIPTION: Troop of soldiers forces farmer's daughter to promise she will come to their quarters that night; she has her hair cut off and dresses in men's clothes. She goes to the soldiers' quarters, asking for lodgings for another troop of soldiers, but the quartermaster sends her away, saying there is no more room. She persists; he gives her money, for "tonight there comes a wench." She leaves her garters and ribbons tied to the gates to prove she'd been there, then blows a whistle, saying "you're not for a girl at all," and goes home in triumph

KEYWORDS: sex rape trick soldier cross-dressing disguise escape
FOUND IN: Britain(England(North),Scotland)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #84, p. 2, "It Fell Aboot the Mart'mas Time" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan1 161, "The Irish Dragoons" (16 texts, 10 tunes)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 308-309, "It Fell About the Martinmas Time" (1 text)
DT, MARTINMA*
Mary Acklin (The Squire's Young Daughter) [Laws M16]

DESCRIPTION: The father of a girl secretly sees her giving a ring to her sweetheart. He confines the girl and arrests the singer for robbery. The girl pleads for her lover and, rather than being transported, he is freed. The two marry and settle down

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1916 (Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks)

KEYWORDS: ring robbery prison reprieve marriage love

FOUND IN: US(NE) Canada(Mar,Newf) Ireland

REFERENCES (7 citations):
- Laws M16, "Mary Acklin (The Squire's Young Daughter"
- Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 93, "The Squire's Young Daughter" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks, pp. 82-84, "Mary Acron" (1 text)
- Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H30b, pp. 437-438, "Young Mary of Accland (a)"; H721, p. 438, "Young Mary of Accland (b)" (2 texts, 1 tune)
- Hayward-UlsterSongsAndBalladsOfTheTownAndCountry, pp. 110-111, "Mary Acklin" (1 text)
- Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 40, "Mary Riley" (1 text)

DT 581, MARYRILY

Mary Ambree

DESCRIPTION: Mary disguises herself to join her lover's regiment. When he is slain, she becomes an officer. She leads her men bravely, but is at last captured when her supply officer betrays her. Threatened with death by the enemy, she reveals her sex and is spared

AUTHOR: probably William Elderton

EARLIEST DATE: 1629 (broadside; see notes)

KEYWORDS: war cross-dressing disguise battle reprieve

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (5 citations):
- Hales/Furnival-BishopPercysFolioManuscript, volume I, pp. 515-519, "Marye Aumbree" (1 text)
- Percy/Wheatley-ReliquesOfAncientEnglishPoetry II, pp. 232-237, "Mary Ambree" (2 text, one from the Folio manuscript and one touched up by Percy for the _Reliques_)
- Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, pp. 158-161, "Mary Ambree" (1 text)
- Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 165, "Mary Ambree" (1 text)
- Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex, ZN468, "Captains courageous"; ZN2826, "When captains courageous, whom death could not daunt"

ST OBB165 (Partial)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
Mary and Martha

DESCRIPTION: "Mary and Martha just gone along (x3), To ring them charming bells." "Crying, free grace and dying love, To ring them...." "Oh! way over Jordan...." "The preacher and the elder just gone along...." "My father and mother's just gone along...."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1887 (College Songs)

KEYWORDS: religious love

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #129, "Mary and Martha" (1 text)
- ADDITIONAL: Henry Randall Waite, _College Songs: A Collection of New and Popular Songs of the American Colleges_, new and enlarged edition, Oliver Ditson & Co., 1887, p. 61, "Mary and Martha" (1 text, 1 tune) (p. 128 in the 1876 edition)

ST ColS061 (Full)
Roud #4989
File: ColS061
DESCRIPTION: "Oh fare thee well, my own true love, Oh fare thee well my dear, For the ship is waiting and the wind blows free, And I am bound away to the sea, Mary Ann." The singer compares his pain at parting to that of a mourning dove or a lobster in a pot

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1860 (broadside, LOCSinging as110580)
KEYWORDS: sailor separation love sea floating verses
FOUND IN: Canada(Que) US(Ap,MA,SE) Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (10 citations):
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Gl 147, "Farewell to Mary Ann" (1 text)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 300, "My Martha Ann" (1 text)
Fowke/Johnston-FolkSongsOfCanada, pp. 142-143, "Mary Ann" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs 48, "Mary Ann" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 75, "Mary Ann" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henderson-VictorianStreetBallads, p. 61, "My Mary Ann" (1 text)
Heart-Songs, p. 246, "My Mary Anne" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 147, "Mary Ann" (1 text)
Thatcher-ColonialMinstrel-Songsters, pp. 176-177, "My Mary Anne" (1 text, from the "Victoria Songster"; the text does not claim to be by Thatcher; it appears he added a few verses, e.g. comparing Mary Anne to a pumpkin and a calf "its nussin' days")

DT MARYAN *
Roud #4438

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Johnson Ballads 1111, "My Mary Ann," A. Ryle and Co. (London), 1845-1859; also Firth c.12(366), Firth c.12(368), "My Mary Ann"
LOCSinging, as110580, "Our Mary Ann," J. Andrews (New York), 1853-1859; also sb30400b, "Our Mary Ann"; as109170, "My Mary Ann"; Harding B 15(288b), "My Mary Anne"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Who Will Shoe Your Pretty Little Foot" (floating lyrics) and references there
cf. "Fare You Well, My Own True Love (The Storms Are on the Ocean, The False True Lover, The True Lover's Farewell, Red Rosy Bush, Turtle Dove)" (lyrics)
cf. "The Lass of Roch Royal" [Child 76] (lyrics)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Ten Thousand Miles

NOTES [304 words]: Cazden et al report that the distinct subtext of "pretty little foot" group "...was written by stageman Barney Williams to a variant of the traditional tune, ascribed to M. Tyle. It was published as sheet music in Baltimore during 1856...." The ascription to Tyte also appears in Heart-Songs.

Don Duncan reports of this version, "The melody is clearly related to the version re-popularized by Ian & Sylvia; Revels lists it in their songbook as having been collected by Marius Barbeau from a Canadian who had learned it from an Irish sailor "around 1850." I&S's "lobster/bluefish" verse is from the Williams version, which apparently was a bit of a spoof; the fourth verse is downright funky:
The pride of all the produce rare,
That in our garden grow'd
Was punkins, but none could compare
In angel form to my Mary Ann,
In angel form to my Mary Ann.
The Library of Congress has at least three song sheets (that is, I found three, one published in Baltimore and two in New York) in their American Memory 19th century song sheets collection... These have almost identical lyrics to the original, but rather than repeating the final line of each verse (as the original did) they use the first verse as a chorus. "Our Mary Ann," by de Marsan in New York... identifies it as a minstrel song." It is likely that some badly worn down versions of this song are filed with "Fare You Well, My Own True Love (The Storms Are on the Ocean, The False True Lover, The True Lover's Farewell, Red Rosy Bush, Turtle Dove)"; the latter song is a catch-all for songs of this type that don't mention Mary Anne or have the Roch Royal plot. - RBW

Mary Anne Mcguinan

DESCRIPTION: Mary Anne Mcguigan: if your "pritties" are good you must spray them again with bluestone. John James leads the dance with her and buys her a blouse of silk. Who will help her fix her house and thresh her oats? She is "swiggin" her porter.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Tunney-StoneFiddle)

KEYWORDS: farming dancing drink humorous nonballad clothes home

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Tunney-StoneFiddle, p. 68, "Mary Anne Mcguinan" (1 text)

Roud #17843

NOTES [307 words]: Each verse is independent of the others and of the chorus. Bluestone is sprayed as a potato fungicide. - BS

"Bluestone" in this case is not lapis lazuli, which is sometimes called by that name, but rather copper (II) sulfate, or chalcanthite, a copper mineral (CuSO $_5$H$_2$O), also known as blue vitriol. According to Emsley, p. 124, "Copper in the form of Bordeaux mixture(a blue gelatinous suspension of copper sulfate and lime in water) was one of the first agrochemical pesticides, developed to control downy mildew on vines."

Heiserman, p. 120, says that "Copper(II) sulfate, CuSO$_4$, is the best known and most popular of the copper compounds. It is a white crystal in its pure, anhydrous (waterless) form. It is better known in its pentahydrate form, CuSO$_4$・H$_2$O, which is a deep blue crystal. Sometimes called blue vitriol, the primary commercial applications of hydrated copper sulfate are in fungicides and algicides, and in ink pigments."

Schwarz, p. 69, notes that copper sulfate was first used on grapes to discourage theft, but that Pierre-Maris-Alexis Millardet, a professor of botany at Bordeaux, observed that the material also prevented the growth of fungus. He went on to offer Bordeaux mixture as the first widely-used fungicide. (Had it been on the market in the 1840s, it could perhaps have prevented the Irish potato famine, according to Coogan, p. 54 -- but although some of the antifungal effects were discovered in the 1840s, it was not until 1882 that Bordeaux mixture was marketed.) It is also used to clarify and purify swimming pools.

Schwarz also makes the ironic note that copper sulfate is no longer sold in home chemistry sets because it is considered dangerous -- but it is still sold to organic farmers who are allowed to use it as a fungicide!

For another song involving bluestone, see "Sergeant Neill." - RBW

Bibliography

- Schwarz: Joe Schwarz, Dr. Joe & What You Didn't Know: 177 Fascinating Questions & Answers about the Chemistry of Everyday Life, ECW press, 2003

Mary Arnold the Female Monster

DESCRIPTION: Mary Arnold, for reasons unknown, decides to blind her baby by covering its eyes with beetles held in walnut shells. Her deed is discovered, and she is sentenced to transportation

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1888 (Ashton)

KEYWORDS: mother children injury disability transportation
Mary Blain

DESCRIPTION: "I wish I were in Ireland, And sitting in my chair, And in my hand a glass of wine, And by my side my dear." "Oh, then, farewell, poor Mary Blain, Oh, do take care of yourself, my dear..." The singer promises to come back, and praises her great beauty

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Hudson-FolkTunesFromMississippi)
KEYWORDS: beauty love separation nonballad
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hudson-FolkTunesFromMississippi 3, "Mary Blain" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #4454
File: HudT003

Mary Celestia, The

DESCRIPTION: "The Mary Celeste she runned ashore, She _did_, she _did_, She'll never run the block no more, No more, no more!"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1890 (JournalOfAmericanFolklore, Bolton)
KEYWORDS: Civilwar crime commerce sea ship wreck
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sep 9, 1864 - "The blockade running steamer Mary Celestia, from Wilmington, N.C., via Bermuda, for Nassau, sunk off the south of Bermuda" (_The Troy (NY) Daily Whig_ (Sep. 15, 1864)). The cargo was munitions and bacon (Northern Shipwrecks Database)

FOUND IN: Bermuda
REFERENCES (1 citation):
JournalOfAmericanFolklore, H. Carrington Bolton, "Gombay, a Festal Rite of Bermudian Negroes", Vol. 3, No. 10 (Jul-Sep 1890), p. 224, "The Mary Celeste" (1 text)
NOTES [126 words]: The description is all of Bolton's text.
Writing in 1890, Bolton says, "About twenty-five years ago an old negro rejoicing in the soubriquet of 'Blind Isaac' used to go about the islands from house to house in quest of copper coins, and singing songs of his own composition;... During the years 1862-64, when exciting and profitable ventures in blockade-running made the port of St. George a scene of great activity, Blind Isaac used to sing about a vessel that was wrecked on the south shore: - 'The Mary Celeste ...' emphasizing the sentiment by striking the ground at each did with a thick stick.
The Mary Celestia is one of Bermuda's popular SCUBA wreck-diving sites. It is not the Mary Celeste found deserted in the Azores; that was in 1872. - BS
Last updated in version 5.3
File: JAFMaCel

Mary for the Love of Thee (Ay, Ay, Ay, Ay)

DESCRIPTION: "Mary, for the love of thee, Blythe and glad may we be, And I shall sing...." "The first joy was sent to thee, When Gabriel greeted thee." And so through the five Joys of Mary.
Chorus: "Ay, Ay, Ay, Ay, Gaude celi domina"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1537 (Richard Hill MS., Balliol Coll. Oxf. 354, folio 165b)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad MiddleEnglish
FOUND IN: Britain(England)
REFERENCES (8 citations):
Greene-TheEarlyEnglishCarols, #232, pp. 164-165, "(no title)" (3 texts)
Brown/Robbins-IndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse, #2098
Mary from Dungloe

DESCRIPTION: The singer is leaving Donegal and Mary from Dungloe for America. "It was your cruel father" that drove him from her but he plans to return. "I wished I was in sweet Dungloe and seated on the grass And by my side a bottle of wine and on my knee a lass"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1913 (OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads)
KEYWORDS: courting separation America Ireland floatingverses father
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 75, "Mary from Dungloe" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, MARYDNGL*
Roud #3001
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bowling Green" (floating verse)
cf. "Shady Grove" (floating verse)
NOTES [30 words]: The Digital Tradition lists this to the tune of "The Star of the County Down." The version I've heard (admittedly from The Irish Rovers) isn't quite that, but it may be a variant. - RBW

File: OLoc075

Mary Glennie

DESCRIPTION: "Marie Glennie she was there Dressed up like ony doo And aye as she gaed thro' the reel, Says Sandy I'm for you"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: dancing
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
Mary Had a Baby

DESCRIPTION: "Mary had a baby, oh Lord... People keep a-coming and the train done gone." "What did she name him?" "She named him Jesus." "Where was he born?" "Born in a stable." "Where did they lay him?" "Laid him in a manger"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1953 (R. C. Seeger, American Folk Songs for Christmas)

KEYWORDS: Christmas childbirth Jesus religious

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 375, "Mary Had A Baby" (1 text)
DT, MARYBABY

RECORDINGS:
Pete Seeger, "Mary Had a Baby" (on PeteSeeger37, PeteSeeger42)

File: FSWB375B

Mary Had a Little Lamb

DESCRIPTION: "Mary had a little lamb whose fleece was white as snow." Surely you know the rest....

AUTHOR: Words: Sarah Josepha Hale

EARLIEST DATE: 1830 ("Poems For Our Children"); a version with music credited to Lowell Mason was published in 1831 in "Juvenile Lyre or Hymns and Songs"

KEYWORDS: animal children

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (10 citations):
Randolph 360, "Mary Had a Little Lamb" (1 text, 1 tune, with some unusual words in the first verse) Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 341, "Mary had a little lamb" (1 text) Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #174, pp. 127-128, "(Mary had a little lamb)" Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel, p. 128, "Mary Had a Little Lamb" (1 text) Dolby-OrangesAndLemons, p. 106, "Mary Had a Little Lamb" (1 text) Heart-Songs, p. 345, "Mary Had a Little Lamb" (1 text, 1 tune)

Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, pp. 354-355, "Mary Had a Little Lamb"

cf. Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, pp. 51-52, "Mary's Little Lot" (1 text)

DT, (MARYLAM2* -- if you're broad-minded about what constitutes a version)

Roud #7622

CROSS-REFERENCES:

"Mary Had a William Goat" (tune & meter)
"Mary Had a Little Watch" (form)
"Goodnight Ladies" (partial tune)
"Mary's Little Lamb" by Commodore Jones (in which Mary raises various lambs, which won't follow her and get eaten; she fights the lamb over its wool, etc.)
SAME TUNE:
Mary's Little Lot/Mary Had a Little Lot ("Mary had a little lot, The soil was very poor, But she had it all the same And struggled to get more") (by Mary C. Hudson) (Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, pp. 51-52; Foner, p. 260)
Mary Had a William Goat (File: San336)
Mary Had a Little Watch (File: NJF171MH)
A Retrospect ("Freshman has a little cane, a little cane, a little cane") (Henry Randall Waite, _Carmina Collegensia: A Complete Collection of the Songs of the American Colleges_ first edition 1868, expanded edition, Oliver Ditson, 1876, p. 117)
NOTES [158 words]: Reported to be based on a true story. Which seems likely enough; who would make up something so trite?
The Baring-Goulds report a variant by "modern teenager[s]": The response to "Mary had a little lamb" is "And was the doctor ever surprised!"
According to John Julian, editor, _A Dictionary of Hymnology_, 1892; second edition 1907 (I use the 1957 Dover edition in two volumes), p. 481, the author's biography is as follows:
Hale, Sarah Josepha, nee Buell, b[orn] at Newport, New Hampshire, 1795, and married to David Hale, a lawyer, who died in 1822. Mrs. Hale edited _The Ladies' Magazine_, Boston, from 1828; and Godey's _Ladies' Book_, Phila[delphia], from 1837, besides publishing several works. Her ymn, "Our Father in heaven, we hallow Thy name" (The Lord's Prayer), appeared in Maron & Green's _Church Psalmody_, 1831, No. 553, in 2 st[anzas] of 8 l[ines]. Mrs. Hale, who was a member of the Protestant Episcopal Church, d[jied] in 1879. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.1
File: R360

Mary Had a Little Watch
DESCRIPTION: "Mary (Patty, etc.) had a little watch, She swallowed it one day, So now she's taking castor oil To pass the time away. But as the time went on and on, The watch refused to pass, So if you want to know the time, Just look up Mary's ass."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 ("Immortalia")
KEYWORDS: derivative humorous
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal, George W. Boswell, "Humor from the Kentucky Hills," Vol. XVII, No. 2 (Nov 1969), p. 75, "Little Patty Had a Watch" (1 text, with only the first half of the Immortalia version quoted in the description)
Roud #7622
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Mary Had a Little Lamb" (form)
NOTES [31 words]: Roud lumps this with "Mary Had a Little Lamb," from which it is clearly derived. But I would clearly distinguish them -- despite the "unprintable" second half, this is genuinely clever. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.1
File: NJF171MH

Mary Had a William Goat
DESCRIPTION: "Mary had a William goat, William goat, William goat, Mary had a William goat, Its stomach lined with zinc." "One day it ate an oyster can... And a clothesline full of shirts." "The shirts can do no harm inside... But the oyster can."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)
KEYWORDS: parody animal food derivative
FOUND IN: US Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, pp. 336-337, "Mary Had a William Goat" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Peacock, p. 19, "Mary Had a William Goat" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #4567
RECORDINGS:
Joshua Osborne, "Mary Had a William Goat" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
CROSS-REFERENCES:
ct. "Mary Had a Little Lamb" (tune & meter)
File: San336

Mary Hamilton [Child 173]

DESCRIPTION: Mary Hamilton, servant to the queen, is pregnant (by the queen's husband). She tries to hide her guilt by casting the boy out to sea, but is seen and convicted. She is condemned to die.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1790

KEYWORDS: pregnancy homicide abandonment punishment execution

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1542 - Accession of Mary Stewart
1548 - Mary Stewart sent to France (later married to King Francis II)
1561 - Mary Stewart returns to Scotland
1567 - Death of Lord Darnley. Mary Stewart deposed

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber,Bord)) US(Ap,MW,NE,SE,So,SW) Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (42 citations):
Child 173, "Mary Hamilton" (27 texts, 1 tune) {Bronson's #5}
Bronson 173, "Mary Hamilton" (12 versions+1 in addenda)

Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 173, "Mary Hamilton" (4 versions: #3, #5, #6, #11.1)

Lyle/McAlpine/McLucas-SongRepertoireOfAmeliaAndJaneHarris, pp. 86-89, "Mary Hamilton" (2 texts, 1 tune) {Bronson's #5} Barry/Eckstorm/Smyth-BritishBalladsFromMaine pp. 258-264, "Mary Hamilton" (2 texts plus some variants and a verse of "Peter Amberley" they claim floated in from this song, 1 tune plus some cited extracts) {Bronson's #7; the first short excerpt is from Bronson's #6}
Randolph 26, "The Four Maries" (1 fragment)

Abrahams/Riddle-ASingerAndHerSongs, pp. 133-136, "Four Marys" (1 text, 1 tune, plus some variants)

Gainer-FolkSongsFromTheWestVirginiaHills, pp. 70-71, "Mary Hamilton" (1 text, 1 tune)
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 35, "The Four Marys" (1 text, 1 tune)

Owens-TexasFolkSongs-1ed, pp. 63-65, "The Four Marys" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #9}
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, pp. 27-28, "The Four Marys" (1 text, 1 tune)

Flanders/Olney-BalladsMigrantInNewEngland, pp. 79-80, "The Four Marys" (1 text, 1 tune)
{Bronson's #7}

Flanders-AncientBalladsTraditionallySungInNewEngland3, pp. 163-169, "Mary Hamilton" (2 texts plus a fragment, with the fragment containing parts of "MacPherson's Lament"; 3 tunes)
{B=Bronson's #7}

Davis-TraditionalBalladsOfVirginia 36, "Mary Hamilton" (2 fragments from the same informant, 1 tune) {Bronson's #6}

Davis-MoreTraditionalBalladsOfVirginia 32, pp. 245-252, "Mary Hamilton" (1 text plus 2 fragments,
1 tune) {Bronson's #8}

Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 481-483, "Mary Hamilton" (1 text)

Leach-HeritageBookOfBallads, pp. 86-88, "Mary Hamilton (The Four Maries)" (1 text)

Friedman-Viking/PenguinBookOfFolkBallads, p. 184, "Mary Hamilton"; p. 219, "Mary Hamilton's
Last Goodnight" (2 texts, 1 tune) {Bronson's #6}

Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, pp. 22-23, "Mary Hamilton" (2 texts, 1 tune)

Creighton-FolkSongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 3, "Mary Hamilton" (1 text, 1 tune)

Pottie/Ellis-FolksongsOfTheMaritimes, pp. 94-95, "Mary Hamilton" (1 text, 1 tune)

Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 83, "The Queen's Marie" (1 text)

Grigson-PenguinBookOfBallads 61, "Mary Hamilton" (1 text)

Niles-BalladBookOfJohnJacobNiles 51, "Mary Hamilton" (2 texts, 1 tune)

Gummere-OldEnglishBallads, pp. 159-161+334-335, "Mary Hamilton" (1 text)

Combs/Wilgus-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernUnitedStates 32, pp. 124-126, "Mary Hamilton" (1 text)

Hodgart-FaberBookOfBallads, p. 138, "Marie Hamilton" (1 text)

Buchan-ABookOfScottishBallads 33, "Mary Hamilton" (1 text)

Chambers-ScottishBallads, pp. 106-111, "Marie Hamilton" (1 text)
Mary Jamieson

DESCRIPTION: "I loved you Mary Jamieson ... You ken I loved you Mary deare ye needna look sae high The time may come yet Mary when I may pass you by." The singer loved Mary "as a bridegroom loves his bride" -- but apparently unsuccessfully
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan4)
KEYWORDS: courting rejection
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan4 711, "Mary Jamieson" (2 fragments, 2 tunes)
Roud #6151
NOTES [15 words]: Greig/Duncan4: "Often sung in New Deer district forty or fifty years ago....
Noted 1906." - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD4711

Mary Kate White
DESCRIPTION: Gus courts Mary Kate White when her sweetheart Ned is laid up with an injury.
Gus takes her to a card game, an acceptable public courting site, but "it was labour in vain." Ned recovers "so now he and Kate play cards" with Gus as imaginary prize.
AUTHOR: Paul E. Hall (according to Bennett/Downey-JeromeJustOneMoreSong)
EARLIEST DATE: 1980 (Bennett/Downey-JeromeJustOneMoreSong)
KEYWORDS: courting rejection cards
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Bennett/Downey-JeromeJustOneMoreSong 15, pp. 111-115, "Mary Kate White" (1 text)
Roud #24298
RECORDINGS:
Jerome Downey, "Mary Kate White" (on NFJDowney01)
File: BeDo111

Mary L. Mackay, The
DESCRIPTION: About a voyage by the Mackay from Portland to Yarmouth. Driven by a gale, and handled by uninhibited officers, she ran 220 miles in 18 hours. The singer challenges others to best the mark, but admits the voyage was made on the power of Portland rum
AUTHOR: Words: Frederick W. Wallace
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Canadian Fisherman)
KEYWORDS: ship racing sailor drink storm
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 74, "The Mary L. Mackay" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 132, "The Mary L MacKay" (1 text, 1 tune) DT, MARYMKAY*
Roud #1831
NOTES [39 words]: This song is item dD50 in Laws's Appendix II.
According to Creighton, Wallace wrote this poem to describe an experience he had aboard the Effie Morrissey in 1913. She believes her informant, Edmund Henneberry, supplied the tune. - RBW
File: LoF074

Mary Le More
DESCRIPTION: "As I strayed o'er the common on Cork's rugged border" the singer meets Mary Le More, distracted. She tells that her brother and friend Connor have been murdered by soldiers and she has no one to avenge them. When troops appear she screams and runs away.
AUTHOR: George Nugent Reynolds (1770-1802) (see Notes)
EARLIEST DATE: before 1839 (broadside, Bodleian Firth b.34(174))
KEYWORDS: grief madness rebellion death brother friend soldier
FOUND IN:
Mary Machree

DESCRIPTION: "The flower of the valley was Mary Machree," whose beauty is described at length. Her soldier love goes away for many years, leaving her pining on the shore. At last, in the winter, he returns to her

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1842 (broadside, Bodleian Firth b.25(44))

KEYWORDS: love soldier separation reunion

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H485, p. 308, "Mary Machree" (1 text, 1 tune)
O'Connor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 154, "Mary Machree" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1391, p. 94, "Mary Machree" (1 reference)

Roud #3231

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth b.25(44), "Mary Machree," Birt (London), 1833-1841; also Harding B 15(187a), Firth c.26(239), "Mary Machree"

LOCSinging, sb30316a, "Mary Machree," H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878

SAME TUNE:
Come Home to Me, Love (per broadside LOCSinging sb30316a)

NOTES [70 words]: According to William H. A. Williams, 'Twas Only an Irishman's Dream, University of Illinois Press, 1996, p. 34, "machree" is a popular word in Irish song because it comes from Irish Gaelic "mo chroí," "my heart." - RBW

Broadside LOCSinging sb30316a: H. De Marsan dating per Studying Nineteenth-Century Popular Song by Paul Charosh in American Music, Winter 1997, Vol 15.4, Table 1, available at FindArticles site. - BS

Last updated in version 5.2

File: HHH485

Mary Mack (I)

DESCRIPTION: "Oh Mary Mack, Mack, Mack, All dressed in black, black, black...." The singer speaks of love, and engages in a series of unprofitable transactions. Much of the song consists of floating verses, e.g. "I went to the river... And I couldn't get across."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1846 (Halliwell)

KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad courting commerce

FOUND IN: Britain(England(West)) US(MA,MW,NW,SE,SW) Australia Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (18 citations):
Courlander-NegroFolkMusic, pp. 158-159, "(Mary Mack)" (1 text); p. 279, "Mary Mack" (1 tune, partial text)
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 72-73, "Johnnie Bought a Ham" (1 text, 1 tune)
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 145, "Miss Mary Mack" (4 texts, 1 tune)
Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads, p. 110, "Mary Mack" (1 text)
Cray-AshGrove, pp. 14-15, "Mary Mack" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gundry-CanowKernow-SongsDancesFromCornwall, p. 44, "(Harvey-Darvy dressed in black)" (1 fragment with this form although it's short enough it might be something else, 1 tune, filed with a group of songs under the general heading "Crowdy Crawn")
ADDITIONAL: Miss Allen, "Children's Game-Rhymes" in Relics of Popular Antiquities, &c., The Folk-Lore Record (London, 1878 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol. V, #14 p. 87, "Darby's Son" (1 text)
Henry Carrington Bolton, Counting-Out Rhymes of Children (New York, 1888 ("Digitized by Google")), #795 p. 117, ("Miss Mary Mack, dressed in black") (1 text)
James Orchard Halliwell, The Book of Nursery Rhymes Complete (Philadelphia, 1846 ("Digitized by Google")), #413 p. 202, ("Parson Darby wore a black gown"); #421 p. 205, ("Darby and Joan were dress'd in black") (2 texts)
G.F. Northall, English Folk-Rhymes (London, 1892 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 395, ("Betsy Blue came all in black, Silver buttons down her back") (1 text)
Mrs Lois Rather, "Circle Clap Chants" in Western Folklore, Vol. XVIII, No. 4 (Oct 1959 (available online by JSTOR)), #2 p. 294 ("Say, Say, Say, O Mary Mac, Mac, Mac") (1 text)
Harold Courlander, _A Treasury of Afro-American Folklore_, Crown Publishers, 1976, pp. 535-536, "Mary Mack" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gwenda Beed Davey and Graham Seal, _A Guide to Australian Folklore_, Kangaroo Press, 2003, p. 151, ("(Mary Mack)" (1 short text, described as a handclapping game)
Tom Nash and Twilo Scofield, _The Well-Travelled Casket: Oregon Folklore_, Meadowlark Press, 1999, p. 59, "Miss Mary Mack" (1 text, a clapping game)
Roud #11498 and 10999
RECORDINGS:
Hunter children "Miss Mary Mack" (on JohnsIsland1) _children of Lilly's Chapel School, "Mary Mack" (on NFMAla6, RingGames1)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Swapping Boy" (plot)
cf. "Turkey in the Straw" (floating lyrics)
cf. "Went to the River (I)" (floating lyrics)
NOTES [262 words]: Not to be confused with the music hall song of the same title, which involves what sounds to be a shotgun wedding. - RBW
Raudnitzky: "Once upon a time, now long ago, there lived in the city which we know as Gotham, two little sisters who were wont to amuse themselves with ... [Mary Mack]."
One spiritual includes the verse "Look over there what I see, Mary and Mac, Dressed in black. Where shall I be when the first trumpet sound? Where shall it be when it sound so loud? Goin' ter wake up de dead" (source: Anna Kranz Odum, "Some Negro Folk-Songs from Tennessee" in _The Journal of American Folklore_, Vol. XXVII, No. 105 (Jul 1914 (available online by JSTOR)), #3 p. 257 "Goin' ter Wake Up de Dead" (1 text)). Apparently not knowing about the rhyme, Odum reasonably takes Mac to be a corruption of Martha, Mary of Bethany's sister (John 11:1-12:11); or perhaps he has it right and the rhyme is corrupted.
On the other hand, Archer Taylor in _English Riddles from Oral Tradition_ (Berkeley, 1951) apparently lists "Mary Mack all dressed in black, Silver buttons down her back" as riddle #656 with the solution "coffin" (source: Robert A Georges and Alan Dundes, "Toward a Structural Definition of the Riddle" in _The Journal of American Folklore_, Vol. LXXVI, No. 300 (Apr 1963 (available online by JSTOR)), p. 114).
Mary Mahoney

DESCRIPTION: Mary Mahoney is a servant maid in Indiantown. She rejects Archie, a "brisk young mutineer." The landlady resolves to help him and sends him to Newcastle to get jewelry. Mary rejects him again when the "gold" rings prove fake.

AUTHOR: probably Larry Gorman (1846-1917)

EARLIEST DATE: 1947 (Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi)

KEYWORDS: courting rejection humorous ring

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 32, "Mary Mahoney" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-LarryGorman, pp. 65-66, "Mary Mahoney" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #9186

NOTES [97 words]: Indiantown, now Quarryville, is near the junction of the Renous River and Main Southwest Miramichi River. Newcastle is about twenty miles away, down river, near Miramichi Bay. Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi: "'And THAT'S by Larry Gorman,' he [the singer, Thomas Coughlan] said.... One of Larry's devastating satires, this song is aimed at the 'silly young gaw gaw,' Archie Woodworth, and his unsuccessful love affair.... Sandy Ives ... says several people have doubted Larry's authorship of the song, saying 'It just doesn't sound like him' but we both think it is authentic Gorman." - BS

Last updated in version 6.1

File: MaWi032

Mary McVeagh

DESCRIPTION: The singer recalls being young and handsome and having all the girls follow him. He loved only Mary McVeagh. Now he is old and fat and tired, but has grown rich. He returns to find Mary -- and finds a girl who looks just like her. Her grandmother was Mary

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1938 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: love separation return family mother children age

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H773, p. 229, "Mary McVeagh" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7980

NOTES [30 words]: Obviously a piece of fiction -- how many old men would actually admit to being nicknamed "Tubby" and confess that they are completely unattractive to women except for their money? - RBW

Last updated in version 4.3

File: HHH773

Mary Neal [Laws M17]

DESCRIPTION: The singer is on trial for kidnapping Mary Neal. She pleads for him and he is released. She steals some of her father's wealth; they marry and set out overseas. After a near-disaster on the ship, they reject her father's offer of land if they return

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1867 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(3843)); "from an Athlone ballad slip of about 1840," according to Sparling)

KEYWORDS: trial emigration love abduction

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar,Newf) Britain(England(South)) Ireland
REFERENCES (8 citations):
Laws M17, "Mary Neal"
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 92, "Mary Neal" (1 text)
Peacock, pp. 216-217, "Mary Neal" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 80, "Mary Nail" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H55, pp. 479-480, "Charming Mary O'Neil" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 38, "Charming Mary Neill" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 582, MARYNEAL
Roud #142
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(3843), "Mary Neal and John M'Cann," J. Harkness (Preston), 1840-1866; also 2806 b.11(66), "Mary Neill" ("I am a bold undaunted youth my name is John M'Cann"); 2806 b.11(259), Harding B 15(41b), "Charming Mary Neal"
Murray, Mu23-y1:044, "Mary Neal," James Lindsay Junr (Glasgow), 19C
NLScotland, L.C.Fol.178.A.2(063), "Mary Neil," James Lindsay Jr. (Glasgow), c.1875
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "William (Willie) Riley (Riley's Trial) [Laws M10]" (tune)
NOTES [82 words]: A correspondent of Sam Henry's claimed that this was a true story, with the girl being kidnapped to prevent a fight between two rival suitors. Yet another case where we can't prove it false but can hardly credit it, either.
Michael Harron of County Tyrone offers more substantial details. He reports that the ship involved was the Charlotte Douglas, which sank June 9, 1836. Harron has seen newspaper accounts of the ship's voyage, and reports that only three were killed in the wreck. - RBW
File: LM17

Mary o' the Dee (Mary's Dream) [Laws K20]

DESCRIPTION: Mary falls asleep thinking of Sandy. His ghost appears to her, bidding her to stop weeping; his body lies at the bottom of the sea and he is at rest. He warns her that they will soon meet. The cock crows and the ghost vanishes

AUTHOR: John Lowe
EARLIEST DATE: 1798 (The Vocal Magazine)
KEYWORDS: dream ghost separation death drowning
FOUND IN: US(Ap,MA,MW,NE,SE) Britain(Scotland(Aber)) Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (17 citations):
Laws K20, "Mary o' the Dee (Mary's Dream)"
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, pp. 151-152, "Mary's Dream" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan2 339, "Mary's Dream" (1 text, 1 tune)
Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 83, "Mary o' the Dee (Mary's Dream)" (1 text)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H54, pp. 144-145, "Mary's Dream" (1 text, 1 tune -- the latter added by Sam Henry)
Cox-FolkSongsSouth 147, "Mary o' the Dee" (1 text)
Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 40, "Mary and Sandy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 707,"Mary, Weep No More for Me" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #68, "Mary's Dream" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wolfe/Boswell-FolkSongsOfMiddleTennessee 28, pp. 50-51, "Mary's Dream" (1 text, 1 tune)
Beck-FolkloreOfMaine, pp. 102-103, "Mary's Dream" (1 text)
Huntington-SongsTheWhalemenSang, pp. 246-248, "Mary's Dream" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 65, "Mary's Vision" (1 text, 1 tune) Forget-Me-Not-Songster, p. 168, "Mary's Dream" (1 text)
cf. Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan, p. 481, "Mary's Dream" (source notes only)
DT 562, MARYDREM
ADDITIONAL: James Johnson, Editor, _The Scots Musical Museum_ [1853 edition], volume I, #37, p. 38. "Mary's Dream" (1 short text, 1 tune, plus a "new set")
ST LK20 (Full)
Mary of Sweet Belfast Town

DESCRIPTION: The singer meets Mary. He asks why she frowns. Her lover has "gone over the main And I hear he is married." The singer reveals that he is her lover returned after seven years. They marry next morning and settle, with his riches, in Belfast.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Hayward-UlsterSongsAndBalladsOfTheTownAndCountry)

KEYWORDS: love separation marriage reunion

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Hayward-UlsterSongsAndBalladsOfTheTownAndCountry, pp. 70-71, "Mary of Sweet Belfast Town" (1 text)
Hammond-SongsOfBelfast, p. 55, "Mary of Sweet Belfast Town" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #6535

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. esp. "John (George) Riley (I)" [Laws N36] and references there

File: HayU070

Mary of the Wild Moor [Laws P21]

DESCRIPTION: Abandoned Mary comes with her child to her father's door on a bitter winter night. Her father fails to hear or ignores her cries, leaving her all night on the doorstep. In the morning he finds her body. He dies of grief and the child of neglect

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1839 (broadside, Bodleian Johnson Ballads fol. 27)

KEYWORDS: death father children family hardheartedness grief

FOUND IN: US(Ap,MA,MW,NE,Ro,SE,So) Britain(England(North),Scotland(Aber)) Canada(Mar,Newf,Ont) Ireland

REFERENCES (43 citations):
Laws P21, "Mary of the Wild Moor"
Thompson-APioneerSongster 85, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text)
Sturgis/Hughes-SongsFromTheHillsOfVermont, pp. 44-46, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greig/Duncan6 1175, "Why Did I Leave My Auld Hame?" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 213-214, "The Wind Across the Wild Moor" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Gi 89)
Purslow-TheConstantLovers, p. 57, "Mary If The Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kidson-TraditionalTunes, pp. 77-78, "Mary Across the Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune) Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #124, "Mary Across the Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 48, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 239-240, "The Winds That Blew 'Cross the Wild Moor (Mary on the Wild Moor)" (1 text, 2 tunes)
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissouriFolkloreSociety, pp. 207-208, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text plus references to 5 more)
Randolph 72, "The Wild Moor" (3 texts, 3 tunes)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 107-108, "The Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 72A)
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 111, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-1ed, pp. 75-77, "The Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, pp. 69-70, "The Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 88, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, p. 216, "Young Mary" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brewster-BalladsAndSongsOfIndiana 45, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text)
Neely/Spargo-TalesAndSongsOfSouthernIllinois, p. 149, "Mary o' the Wild Moor" (1 text)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 78, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 78, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (3 excerpts, 3 tunes)
Joyner-FolkSongInSouthCarolina, pp. 51-52, "Mary on the Wild Moor" (1 reconstructed text, 1 tune)
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #213, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text)
Scarborough-A SongCatcherInSouthernMountains, pp. 335-336, "The Wind That Blew O'er the Wild Moor" (1 text, with local title "Poor Mary"); tune on p. 448)
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #114, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Stout-FolkloreFromIowa 20, pp. 26-30, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (3 texts)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 733-734, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text)
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 62, "Mary Across the Wild Moor" (1 text)
Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 61, "The Village Pride" (1 text)
McNeil-SouthernFolkBalladsVol1, pp. 132-134, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 466, "When Mary Came Wandering Home" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Botkin-TreasuryOfNewEnglandFolklore, pp. 548-549, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Pound-AmericanBalladsAndSongs, 35, pp. 81-82, "Mary o' the Wild Moor" (1 text)
Cox-FolkSongsSouth 148, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text plus mention of 3 more)
Cox/Hercog/Halpert/Boswell-WVirginia-A, #27, p. 103, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Bush-FSoFCentralWestVirginiaVol1, pp. 62-63, "Mary, of the Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gainer-FolkSongsFromTheWestVirginiaHills, pp. 133-134, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Boette-SingaHipsyDoodle, p. 155, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text, 1 tune)
Dime-Song-Book-2, p. 28, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1393, p. 95, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (2 references)
cf. Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan, p. 481, "Mary of the Wild Moor"
(source notes only)
DT 503, WILDMOOR* WLDMOOR1*
ST LP21 (Full)
Roud #155

RECORDINGS:
Blue Sky Boys, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (Bluebird B-8446/Montgomery Ward M-8667, 1940)
Jim Molloy, "Wind Across the Wild Moor" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
Letys Murrin, "Mary of the Wild Moor" (on Ontario1)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Johnson Ballads fol. 27[many illegible words], "Mary of the Moor," J. Catnach (London), 1813-1838; also Johnson Ballads 1802 View 2 of 2, Harding B 11(3), Harding B 11(2364), Harding B 11(2365), Harding B 11(1501), Firth c.12(443), Harding B 11(4232), Harding B 11(4233), Firth b.25(147), Harding B 15(188b), "Mary of the Moor"; Firth b.27(69), Harding B 26(600), "Poor Mary of the Wild Moor"; Firth b.34(229), Firth c.26(275)[some illegible lines], 2806 c.16(261), 2806 c.14(78), 2806 c.14(13)[some illegible words], "Mary of the Wild Moor[]"; Harding B 11(2789), Harding B 17(243b), Harding B 25(1538)[some illegible lines], 2806 c.18(252) [some illegible/missing words], "Poor Mary of the Moor"
LOCsSheet, sm1882 10438, "Mary of the Wild Moor," Oliver Ditson & Co. (Boston), 1882 (tune)
LOCSinging, sb30333b, "Mary of the Wild Moor," H. De Marsans (New York), 1861-1864; also as108620, as108630, "Mary of the Wild Moor"
Murray, Mu23-y4:018, "Poor Mary of the Wild Moor," unknown, 19C
NLScotland, L.C.178.A.2(072), "Poor Mary of the Wild Moor", unknown, c.1860

CROSS-REFERENCES:

SAME TUNE:
Robin's Petition (per broadside Bodleian Harding B 25(1538))

NOTES [55 words]: Quoted by Laura Ingalls Wilder in chapter 14 of By the Shores of Silver Lake. She does not repeat the sad ending, of course. - RBW

Broadside LOCSinging sb30333b: H. De Marsans dating per Studying Nineteenth-Century Popular Song by Paul Charosh in American Music, Winter 1997, Vol 15.4, Table 1, available at FindArticles site. - BS

Last updated in version 6.0

File: LP21

Mary on the Banks of the Lee

DESCRIPTION: Before the singer leaves Mary to go on the ocean he warns her not to stay out late on the moors. He writes her a letter but receives no reply. He returns and brings roses to place on her grave.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (IRPTunney01)
KEYWORDS: love warning separation death flowers
FOUND IN: Ireland Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
OCanainn-SongsOfCork, p. 56, "The Banks of the Lee" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, BNKSLEE*
Roud #6857
RECORDINGS:
Paddy Tunney, "Mary on the Banks of the Lee" (on IRPTunney01)
Sheila Stewart, "The Banks of the Lee" (on SCStewartsBlair01)

NOTES [40 words]: The description is from the text of "Lovely Banks of Lea" on "Oak - Country Songs and Music," Musical Traditions Record MTCD327-8 (2003) sung by Peta Webb, apparently following the text from Mary Connors. It is longer than Paddy Tunney's. - BS

File: DTbnksle

Mary Phagan [Laws F20]

DESCRIPTION: Mary Phagan works in a pencil factory. While there she is beaten to death by Leo Frank. An innocent bystander (who happens to be black) is arrested, but then Frank's guilt is established and he is sentenced to death

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1918 (JournalOfAmericanFolklore XXXI)
KEYWORDS: homicide accusation factory abduction rape execution lie abuse mother corpse Jew
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
April 26/27, 1913 - Murder (and suspected rape) of thirteen-year-old Mary Phagan at the National Pencil factory in Atlanta
Aug 26, 1913 - Despite evidence that Jim Conley committed the murder, Leo Frank found guilty of the crime and sentenced to death
June 22, 1915 - Georgia Governor Stanton commutes Frank's sentence to life imprisonment
Aug 16/17, 1915 - A lynch mob captures Frank and kills him

FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW,SE,So)
REFERENCES (17 citations):
Laws F20, "Mary Phagan"
Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 110, "Leo Frank and Mary Phagan" (1 text)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 144, "Little Mary Phagan" (1 text)
McNeil-SouthernFolkBalladsVol2, pp. 71-75, "Little Mary Fagan"; "Little Mary Phagan" (2 texts)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 253, "Little Mary Phagan" (4 texts plus 1 excerpt and mention of 1 more; Laws lists only three of these as this song, but this appears to be an error
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 253, "Little Mary Phagan" (1 excerpt, 1 tune)
Killion/Waller-ATreasuryOfGeorgiaFolklore, p. 260, "Little Mary Fagan" (1 fragment)
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #37, "Little Mary Phagan" (2 texts)
Arnold-FolksongsofAlabama. pp. 74-75, "Little Mary Fagan" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cambiaire-EastTennesseeWestVirginiaMountainBallads, p. 104, "Little Mary Fagan" (1 text)
Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices, p. 231, "Little Mary Phagan" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, p. 314, "Little Mary Phagan" (1 text)
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 61-64, "(Mary Phagan)" (1 text plus 2 long excerpts, 1 tune; one of these versions blames Conley rather than Frank, and is probably a rewrite); also an isolated couplet on p. 123
DT 774, MARYFAG
ADDITIONAL: Leonard Dinnerstein, _The Leo Frank Case_, second edition, University of Georgia Press, 1987, pp. 166-168, "The Ballad of Mary Phagan" (1 text, from JAFL)
Robert Seitz Frey and Nancy C. Thomson, _The Silent and the Damned: The Murder of Mary Phagan and the Lynching of Leo Frank_), 1988; Cooper Square, 2002, pp. 139-141( 3 texts, one from Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, one from Pearl Flake of Atlanta, and one unidentified; there is also a separate Mary Phagan poem)
Kristina Horton, _Martyr of Loray Mill: Ella May and the 1929 Textile Workers' Strike in Gastonia, North Carolina_, McFarland & Company, 2015, pp. 189-190, "Little Mary Phagan" (1 text, from Brown, included because it is the basis of "The Mill Mother's Lament")
Roud #696
RECORDINGS:
Rosa Lee Carson, "Little Mary Phagan" (OKeh 40446, 1925)
Vernon Dalhart, "Little Mary Phagan" (Columbia 15031-D [as Al Craver], 1925) (Romeo 332, 1927; rec. 1925)
Charlie Oaks, "Little Mary Phagan" (Vocalion 15099, 1925; Vocalion 5069, c. 1927)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Death of Roy Rickey" (tune)
SAME TUNE:
The Death of Roy Rickey (File: ThBa163)
The Mill Mother's Lament (File: GAFP250)
NOTES [15043 words]: [This] story was later made into a movie, "They Won't Forget," in which Lana Turner made her debut as Mary. - PJS
I've seen it called "They Don't Forget," though Internet sources seem to indicate that Paul is correct. The stills on the web don't make Turner a very good likeness of Mary Phagan, if it matters. (McNeil, p. 74, says that Turner was "totally inappropriate" in the role, though he gives no explanation. Hollywood would hardly care that the two didn't look alike.)
Although probably the best-known, "They Won't Forget" was in fact only one of many movies inspired by the case, beginning with a contemporary documentary of sorts, "Leo M. Frank and Governor Slaton," which included actual footage of Leo Frank in prison (it could hardly be called an "interview" in the days of silent film!) but largely ignored the actual case. The Turner movie was based on Ward Green's novel _Death in the Deep South_, which was not intended to be factually accurate. There was also a later TV movie. Books about the tragedy are commonplace, and continue to be published to this day. I have four, including three which as best I can tell are the most recent serious treatments of the subject still in print; for the list, see the Bibliography.
In addition to these three books, Dinnerstein's bibliography cites at least five other books devoted exclusively to the Leo Frank case, and numerous articles. WebFlag lists 13 books about the case, but four are novels and one appears to be more a sociological study than a work about the case itself.
As I re-read and update this entry about fifteen years after I first wrote it, I am amazed by the number of slips of the pen (word processor?). I can only say that I wrote it in real anger and shame at the American judicial system. MacLean, p. 160, suggests that the whole thing was influenced by the sort of reactionary populism which was not widely recognized when she wrote but that came to full flower in the election of 2016.... I still believe that the execution of Leo Frank could only be the result of vigilante justice fueled by what we now call "fake news," but I have tried to improve the account somewhat. Still, there will surely be traces of my earlier passion.
I wasn't the only one making mistakes. Laws, for what reason I do not know (it may be just one of the many typos in his work), gives the date of Mary Phagan's death as April 5, and this was used in earlier editions of the Index. Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan incorrectly give it as August 5. McNeil reports April 27, 1913 as the date of Mary Phagan's death; I think this is meant to refer to the date on which the body was discovered. A New York Times story (August 18, 1915) quoted by Brown gives a date of April 26. Mary's tombstone says April 26. This is also the date cited in Dinnerstein and Oney. F/T, p. 1, states that the body was found at 3:20 a.m. on April 27; Dinnerstein, p. 1, gives the time as 3:00 a.m., and Oney, p. 18, says it was found at 3:30 a.m. The date of the murder isn't the only thing that is uncertain. For example, Laws lists the date of the commutation of Leo Frank's sentence as June 22, but I made a note (from what source, sadly, I do not recall) that it took place in August. The June date is correct; Governor Slaton was out of office by August.

There seems to have been confusion over the date of Frank's murder as well. Even the date of Mary Phagan's birth is slightly uncertain, though this is not a case of modern misprints; it's an early error. Her tombstone says she was born June 1, 1900 (a photo is found in F/T following p. 68), but her mother implied a date in 1899 (F/T, p. 6). The best guess is that she was not quite fourteen at the time of her death. Her family's history is not entirely clear in the sources; her biological father was dead at the time of her murder, but F/T, p. 6, says her father was named John and died in 1911, while Oney, p. 4, says that her father William Joshua Phagan died in 1899 before Mary was born. F/T and Oney also disagree on her birthplace; F/T says Marietta, Georgia, which is where she grew up; Oney claims Alabama, saying the family moved to Marietta in 1900, then to Atlanta in 1907. WebFlag agrees with Oney.

What is certain is that Mary Phagan worked in the National Pencil Factory in Atlanta in 1913. If you're wondering what a thirteen-year-old was doing working in a pencil factory, Atlanta at this time was a very rough place. In 1905, it is claimed that a fifth of the population had work-related illnesses. (The first attempt at a national child labor law was passed in 1916; it was not until Franklin Roosevelt's administration that such a law passed court scrutiny. Dinnerstein, p. 7, states that in Georgia at this time, even children under ten often worked illegally in the factories, which were never inspected; some of these children earned only 22 cents a week -- by this measure, Mary Phagan was actually relatively well off. At least she seems not to have been one of the more than 50% of Atlanta children who, according to Dinnerstein, p. 8, suffered malnutrition or work-related illnesses.)

Atlanta at this time was a very rough place; in 1905, it is claimed that a fifth of the population had some sort of run-in with the police. Crime was still extremely widespread at the time of the Frank Dupre case nearly a decade later (see the notes to "Dupree" [Laws 111]). The poverty made the city a powderkeg; Dinnerstein, p. 9, thinks this explains the public hysteria caused by the Phagan case.

Another thing is certain: while in the factory, Mary was murdered. She wasn't even supposed to be there. April 26 was Confederate Memorial Day, so the factory was closed down and only a few people were in the building (F/T, pp. 4-5). As the song says, she went to the factory to collect her pay. The body was discovered by night watchman Newt Lee in the early hours of Sunday, April 27, 1913 (Dinnerstein, p. 1). Lee had apparently gone down to the basement to use the "colored" toilet (F/T, p. 32 -- remember, this was Atlanta in 1913, so the facilities were thoroughly segregated. Oney, p. 21, says that Lee was born a slave -- whatever that tells us).

Lee called the police, who found the corpse of a girl concealed by sawdust and grime so thick that the police could not immediately determine her race, her mouth filled with dirt, her skin covered with cinders (they probably stuck to her as the murderer choked her with her face to the ground), her cheeks slashed, her fingers out of joint, her head bashed in, blood coming from mouth and ears, with a 3/4 inch cord and a strip of her underclothes tied around her neck, and her clothing in shreds (F/T, p. 2; Dinnerstein, p. 2, Oney, p. 18; on p. 391, Oney says that her clothing was "cut" with knife or scissors, to expose body parts -- seemingly evidence of sexual fetishism). She clearly had fought her murderer, but equally clearly, the murderer had been a brute, and probably a very strong one. The issue in the Mary Phagan case is not whether the murderer deserved to be hung -- clearly the human race would have been better off without him (and I say that as an opponent of the death penalty). The issue is, who was the beast?

The police investigation was inept, leaving much physical evidence unexamined. The police expended a lot of energy, searching subjects' homes and checking time clock records (F/T, pp. 10-11), but showed little intelligence. (F/T, p. 11, points out the interesting fact that the Atlanta police chief would in later years be twice demoted for incompetence! -- James L. Beavers, had been appointed in 1911 and gone on a crusade against brothels, but was inept enough that he was deposed and resigned in 1915, then reappointed in 1917, ran for mayor in 1922 and didn't even make it to the second round, and was deposed again in 1923, only to be restored yet again 1925-1932; Garrett, pp. 574, 657, 699, 787, 794-795.) The coroner does not seem to have examined the body fully enough to rule on whether the murderer had engaged in anal rape, checking only for vaginal intercourse -- and even there, the results would prove less than definitive.

Mary's purse, described as a mesh handbag, had been taken and was never found (F/T, p. 3) -- a fact which is significant in considering the motive for the murder. Jim Conley would accuse Leo Frank of taking it (Oney, p. 257), but it never surfaced in Frank's possessions. Dinnerstein, pp. 169-171, mentions that a prisoner later claimed that Jim Conley gave him a purse which matched the description of Mary's -- but the account was said by the newspapers to have been discredited, though no explanation was given as to why. Whoever got it, the purse can't have held much; Mary was paid a few pennies an hour to put erasers in their metal holders (F/T, p. 5, says she earned 12 cents an hour; Oney, p. 5, claims 10 cents an hour). Other employees had been paid the Friday before the holiday, but because the eraser room had been temporarily shut down due to a supply problem, Mary had not been in the plant at the time and did not know about this. As a result, she came in a day late to pick up her $1.20 (F/T, p. 5. Ordinarily, she worked 55 hours a week, but this week she had worked only eight or ten hours; Oney, p. 9). Manager Leo Frank was in the office to compile the weekly production report, so she collected her pay from him (he reportedly did not know who she was, according to Oney, p. 27 -- not too surprising, since the factory employed 170 people, mostly teenage girls, according to Oney, p. 16. In the trial, it was shown that he rarely talked to his workers; Oney, p. 215). No one admitted to seeing her again until her body was found (F/T, p. 6). It was obviously murder, and a brutal one; some suspected rape as well. (McNeil-SouthernFolkBalladsVol2,, p. 72, says unequivocally that she had been raped, but it must be repeated, this is unproved.) The claim of rape was apparently was based on the testimony of janitor Conley (Tennessean, p. 3), and also on the fact that there was blood around her genitals (Oney, p. 19), though the limited physical evidence supplied by examiners would prove inconclusive. The room in which she was found was almost inaccessible; the only ways to reach it were by an elevator, a few shafts from the upper floors which could not be climbed from below, or a plank ladder which led to a long, narrow, minimally lighted corridor (Oney, p. 19). It sounds as if, had luck been different, Mary's body might not have been found for days. Remember that elevator, because Jim Conley later claimed that it was by this means that he and Leo Frank had carried Mary's body to the basement. Despite this, there seems to be no evidence that her body was ever in the elevator cage.

Support for the theory of rape probably came from the descriptions of Mary Phagan; according to Tennessean, p. 6, she was "a beautiful girl -- four feet, eight inches tall and weighing about 105 pounds. She had long, reddish-blond hair...." F/T, p. 6, says she was considered the prettiest girl in her neighborhood, and Oney describes her on p. 3 as follows: "Eyes blue as cornflowers, cheeks high-boned and rosy, smile beguiling as honeysuckle, figure busty (later, everyone acknowledged that 'she was exceedingly well-developed for her age'), she had undoubtedly already tortured many a boy." This largely matches the description of Mary given by a friend at the Leo Frank trial; Oney, p. 213. (Two men who sniffed after her actually became suspects in the case, according to Oney: One was a 24-year-old named Arthur Mullinax who supposedly had been attracted to her at a Baptist Christmas pageant in which she played Snow White; Oney, p. 33. There seems to be some confusion about this pageant; F/T, p. 7, says Phagan played "Sleeping Beauty" at the First Christian Church, which doesn't sound like a Baptist congregation. In any case, the police questioned Mullinax but eventually let him go; a sighting of him in suspicious circumstances was a case of mistaken identity; Oney, p. 62. Mary also apparently attracted the attention of James Milton Gantt, a 26-year-old former National Pencil employee; Oney, p. 47. He too came under suspicion, but had an alibi; Oney, p. 62.) Dinnerstein, p. 12, has a photo which does make her quite attractive, though her hair looks rather dark and I would have guessed her to be older than thirteen. It appears that the photos from this set are the only ones of her available, at least as a teenager; the cover of F/T, F/T, p. 26, Golden, before p. 177, and Oney, after p. 278, all show pictures of her in what appears to be the same clothing, though the photos themselves are not quite identical. People also described her as a "model girl" and said that everyone liked her (F/T, p. 6), though Oney, p. 3, sees a more rebellious streak in her letters, which talk about escaping her circumstances. But she had never done anything that seriously troubled her family. When she didn't come home on time, her mother and stepfather were frantic; when word eventually came (long delayed because the body had been hard to identify and because the Colemans had no phone, so a neighbor had to carry word), Mrs. Coleman literally collapsed over the fate of her daughter (Oney, pp. 23-24). Mary had not until then even been considered old enough to go dating.

(She may have been up to something on the side, though; MacLean, p. 159. Two medical examiners eventually looked at her body. One thought that she had been sexually abused but found no sperm in her vagina; Oney, p. 234. The other found that her hymen was not intact but, because there was little blood there, did not think it had been broken in the assault -- perhaps evidence that she had not been raped; Oney, p. 237. She definitely was not pregnant; F/T, p. 37.) The police abused and detained watchman Lee (Dinnerstein, p. 14; Garrett, p. 620, mentions the custody but not the abuse), and brought to light some inconsistencies in his testimony (F/T, p. 14) as well as finding a suspiciously stained (bloody?) shirt in his trash (Oney, p. 65). He had, however, punched his time clock pretty regularly on the night of the murder (Oney, p. 30), and they finally concluded he was innocent. (Unlike the papers, which at one point declared him unequivocally guilty.) The authorities also used strongarm tactics on fired former bookkeeper Gantt, again without results (F/T, p. 8).

The police had been so incompetent that plant manager Leo Max Frank called in the Pinkertons (Dinnerstein, p. 4). Oney, p. 20, thinks the first men on the scene did a relatively good job, but even he allows on p. 30 that the detectives messed up the trail over which Mary had been dragged, as well as destroying physical evidence when they took the elevator to the basement. In light of their performance, Oney, p. 54, makes the interesting observation that Atlanta's policemen at this time had only a week's training before being given a badge, and the department had no fingerprint expert. This is important, because Dinnerstein, p. 4, says that there were fingerprints on Mary's clothes, and probably in the vicinity, some bloody, but no examination was made of them, even though Frank himself asked if they had been looked at.

Hiring the Pinkertons may have been a mistake; Oney, p. 62, observes that the Pinkertons at this time were often hired to whitewash businesses, so hiring them was seen as a sign of some sort of guilt. They often supplied muscle that was used against ordinary people. In any case, they seem to have turned against Frank under pressure of public opinion; Dinnerstein, p. 20. Plus they weren't much help; F/T, p. 28, says that an Atlanta ordinance forced them into subservience to the police. Nothing much happened for a week after the murder: Investigators did haul in seven suspects -- but couldn't offer any real evidence (Dinnerstein, p. 15). Meanwhile, tensions in the community were increasing.

Because of the lack of results, Atlanta Solicitor-General H. M. Dorsey stepped in on May 5 (Oney, p. 92). "Solicitor-General" was the then-current term for what we would now call "District Attorney"; his main duty was managing prosecutions. Dorsey certainly brought more energy to the case, but it was hardly his job. (Dinnerstein, p. 154, calls his action "conduct unbecoming a state official.") Nor was Dorsey the last to intervene -- a coalition including one of the newspapers would hire the William Burns detective agency (Dinnerstein, p. 16). Burns was probably the most famous sleuth of the time (Oney, pp. 102-105), but though he sent a subordinate, he would not personally get involved until things had turned ugly.

So by early May there were four competing organizations investigating the Phagan case (Dinnerstein, p. 19): The Atlanta police, Dorsey's office, the Pinkertons, and Burns and Company. It was more a competition than anything else -- the investigators were actually spying on each other (Oney, p. 108). Sadly, this caused Burns -- the one competent investigator -- to pull out temporarily (Dinnerstein, p. 20; Oney, p. 112). By the time he returned, public opinion was too set for him to do much good.

While police were striking out with their original suspects, Leo Frank, the manager of the National Pencil factory, had come under suspicion. Oney, p. 24, describes Atlanta Detective John Black as a suspicious sort; he seems to have been set off by the fact that it was some hours before anyone answered the phone at the home where Leo and Lucille Frank lived with Lucille's parents. It didn't help that, when detectives came to the home, Frank appeared to be very agitated (Oney, p. 25). Frank's explanation -- which makes sense to me -- is that, when the police came to his door, no one was willing to say what was going on! (Oney, p. 26).

Later, the police put Newt Lee (whom they still suspected) and Frank in a room together to try to shake something loose, but with no results (Oney, p. 69). This somehow caused investigators to suspect Frank even more (Oney, p. 70).

By that time, the papers had roused tensions to a fever pitch. Unfortunately, one of the local papers was a Hearst organ -- and one that had only been part of the chain for a year, so it needed beefing up (Oney, p. 40). Crime stories were a favorite (Oney, p. 41). The Atlanta Georgian devoted over 17,000 column inches to the Phagan case in the first five months after the murder, forcing the other papers to give it attention as well (Dinnerstein, p. 13). The Georgian did not break the story; a sensationalist writer named Britt Craig induced the Atlanta Constitution to publish an extra (Oney, pp. 22-23).

But that was just the opening salvo. The papers competed in lurid coverage (including, e.g., a faked photo of Mary's head on another body; Oney, p. 35); naturally public opinion was inflamed! On the Monday after the murders, the Georgian printed at least eight extras, perhaps more (Oney, p. 37). The Georgian was not actually anti-Frank (according to Dinnerstein, pp. 29-31, only the Atlanta Constitution, which was closest to the police department, accepted police statements without question), but it hardly mattered. The Mayor of Atlanta, under pressure, proceeded to order the police to find the murderer or lose their jobs (Dinnerstein, p. 16). After all, they already had 13 unsolved murders on their books (F/T, p. 27) and a reputation for corruption (Oney, p. 54) -- though they also had a crusading reputation (Oney, p. 59).

Later on, another paper, Tom Watson's Jeffersonian, would prove even more troublesome. Thomas E. Watson (for whom see the notes to "Thomas E. Watson") called himself a populist, which in practice means that he combined the worst aspects of William Jennings Bryan populism with bigotry, appealing to base prejudices against foreigners, Jews, and Yankees, including the non-Georgian detective Williams Burns (Oney, p. 397. Dinnerstein, p. 95, says that -- in his early days at least -- Watson was not anti-Black. But that changed as he went from politician to publisher -- he even went so far as to rejoin the Georgia Democratic party, which at that time was still the party of racism and reactionary opinion).

Watson had been the populist vice-presidential nominee in 1896 -- producing a very strange situation, since William Jennings Bryan ended up being nominated for President by both the Democrats and the Populists, but with different vice presidential nominees. The Democrats chose Arthur Sewell, the Populists Watson. (That was the last time -- the only time, really -- that a presidential candidate had two significant vice presidential candidates associated with him.) This had come about because the Populists had wanted to support Bryan but did not want to merge their party with the Democrats (PresElections, p. 1812). They supported Bryan to promote free silver, but nominated Watson for vice president to maintain their separate organization.

According to PresElections, p. 1874, the populists were pretty well skunked in the popular vote -- William McKinley earned 7.1 million votes, Bryan with Sewell (or no specified vice president) 6.5 million, the Populist ticket only 222,000. In Georgia, Watson earned only 440 votes, to 94,672 for Bryan and Sewell. Yet, of the 176 electoral votes for Bryan that year, only 149 voted for Sewell, giving Watson 27 electoral votes. It was one of the strongest electoral college showings ever by a third party vice presidential candidate, and the high point of Watson's political career. Watson was the populist presidential candidate in 1904, but went nowhere in that election; the Populist party was dying.

Watson probably didn't help his future prospects in the 1896 campaign; PresElections, p. 1821, describes how he turned "angry and vituperative" when the regular Democrats hadn't paid more attention to him. In effect, he became the predecessor of angry conservative talk radio hosts -- and, arguably, of President Donald Trump.

Since his days on the national stage, Watson had turned into a popularity-grubbing nativist whose message was largely about hate; see Oney, p. 8, and his entry in the Dictionary of American Biography. Watson argued (obviously falsely) that there was no poverty in the early United States (Hofstadter, p. 62n.), but "We have become the world's melting pot. The scum of creation has been dumped upon us.... What brought these Goths and Vandals to our shores? The manufacturers are mainly to blame" (Hofstadter, pp. 82-83; on p. 81, he comments on Watson's behavior in the Frank case). Dinnerstein, p. 119, says that he called Frank a "jewpervert."

As the above shows, Watson had a way with words -- and his way was to flamingly condemn anything that his uneducated, poor, parochial readers might dislike. As best I can tell, the only thing he had in common with the broad-minded Thomas Jefferson is that both believed in an agrarian society.

The time of the murder was never firmly established (F/T, p. 37). The prosecution's doctor would estimate that she was killed around the time she was given her pay (Dinnerstein, p. 3). However, the forensics of the time had very little to go on -- the examiner's only evidence was the state of digestion of the contents of her stomach, which led him to estimate that she had eaten within an hour of the time she was killed. This worked out to a time between 12:00 and 12:15, which fit the state's case against Leo Frank; Oney, pp. 233-234. But while this might have been the most likely time, the defense brought in an expert who argued that the death might have occurred much later (Oney, p. 262) -- energetic activity could slow digestion, and even if you ignored being murdered,
Mary had a fairly busy itinerary on the last day of her life. The whole chronology is difficult (the following comes from Dinnerstein, pp. 48-49). Two employees said they came in to be paid around 11:45; Jim Conley said they came in around 1:00. Conley said that Mary Phagan had reached the factory before Monteen Stover. Stover testified that she reached Frank’s office at 12:05, failed to see him in his office (he may have been hidden behind an inner door, assuming her account is accurate), and left at 12:10. The conductor of the trolley Mary rode to work said she had gotten off at 12:10 at a point about three minutes’ walk from her work. Frank was seen at home (where he had lunch) between 1:00 and 1:30. Conley said Frank was at the factory at 1:30. And, as noted, the doctor claimed Mary was dead by 12:15. Obviously these times cannot all be reconciled, and the primary contradictions are between Conley, Stover, and the doctor who estimated the time of death -- all prosecution witnesses.

Quite a few people apparently visited the factory on April 26 (F/T, pp. 11-12). But it was alleged that at the time of the murder (based on the prosecution’s timeline, of course) only two men were in the factory -- manager Leo Frank and (Black) janitor Jim Conley. (Frank’s stenographer and office boy had both left around noon, shortly before Mary came to draw her pay; Oney, p. 29). The claim that no one else was there was extravagant -- the building was not ordinarily locked (F/T, p. 32), and Newt Lee, during the trial, would state that "anyone" could enter; Oney, p. 202. Plus the building was huge -- four stories high, and it occupied a whole city block. Oney, p. 9, reports that it was big enough to produce an average of 4.374 gross of pencils per week, or about 630,000. And the pencils weren’t even all identical; Oney, p. 273, quotes a staff member as saying they made dozens of different kinds of pencil, which meant that it wasn’t just one continuous assembly line; there were several separate production facilities. The obvious conclusion is that a sufficiently determined person could enter the building, and hide for an extended period if he so desired.

Still, the evidence indicates that Leo Frank was apparently the last person, other than the murderer, to see Mary alive, when he gave her her pay (Dinnerstein, p. 3). He said he heard no signs of a row during his time in his office. This even though a stain, which was said to be a pool of blood, was found in the "metal room" near Frank’s office (Dinnerstein, p. 5). Oney, p. 46, says witnesses thought it was new, and that an attempt had been made to hide it. Apparently, though, the only "proof" that the fluid was blood was the fact that it did not dissolve in alcohol. (Oney, p. 47, thinks the blood was Mary’s, but it appears no valid testing was done.) Hair was also found there, and one of the other workers in the metal room was sure it was Mary's.

(The claim that it was Phagan’s blood and hair turned out to be extremely weak; staff at the factory said that there was often blood there because saws were in use; F/T, p. 35. Plus it was on the path to the first aid station, so people sometimes came in bleeding; Oney, p. 231. In any case, Dinnerstein, p. 234, says that the stain was eventually demonstrated not to be blood. Also, a girl who had worked there with Mary said that the floor of the room often was spotted with paint and other fluids, and that girls sometimes combed out their hair there -- and that one of those girls had hair much like Mary’s; Oney, p. 216. The state biologist would later declare unequivocally that the hair was not Mary’s; Dinnerstein, pp. 84-85.)

Given Monteen Stover's testimony that Frank was not in his office around the alleged time of the murder (Dinnerstein, pp. 37-38), Frank was arrested on suspicion of murder on April 29 (F/T, pp. 11-12; Oney, p. 60). He would later be interrogated harshly without his lawyer being present. (In the light of what followed, we have to note that Frank was Jewish and came from New York; Phagan of course was a southern girl.) Since her purse was missing, it was evident that she had been robbed as well as murdered. Frank, however earned a salary of $150 per month (F/T, p. 37), which was at least five times Mary’s income, and no one seems ever to have alleged that his pay was inadequate to his needs. Even if his salary hadn’t been enough, what are the odds that he would have cared about Mary’s $1.20? No physical evidence was ever found to implicate Frank. The only real evidence against Frank seems to have been his nervousness when informed of the murder and his vigorous attempts to blame someone else (Oney, p. 63. To which I say, What would you do if you were falsely charged with murder?)

A number of witnesses came forward to attack Frank’s sexual morality. A young man named George Epps said Mary Phagan was afraid of him (Dinnerstein, p. 17). This seems dubious -- given the labor shortage in Atlanta, she could have found other work had she been suffering harassment. Plus the strong evidence is that Leo Frank did not know who she was. Topping it all off -- would she have gone to collect her pay on that day, when no one else was around, if she had been afraid of him? If she were really afraid, she would surely have gone to the factory only when there were witnesses around!

Accounts differed about whether Frank hassled other female employees (and, naturally, when one of them made charges against him, it got bigger headlines in the papers than when someone Conley had an extensive record of petty crime (F/T, pp. 37-28, says he had been in prison seven or should be kept in mind. He took Mary's body to the basement after Frank murdered her, so this did not prove his guilt. But it removed -- knew just where the body had lain (Oney, p. 142). To be sure, his final story said that Conley -- who had not been present when Mary's corpse was found or Frank was physically abnormal -- but doctors testified that he was not (Oney, p. 276). When asked to re-enact the murder, Conley claimed the stain was rust) -- but no one even subjected the blood to scientific examination! (Dinnerstein, p. 21). Conley was the one who charged Frank with having sexual liaisons at the factory, adding that claims were based on racist opinions about Black intelligence, but most were based on sober profile case for political reasons, which seems likely enough given his rather poor record in past cases; Oney argues on p. 100 that Dorsey intended to use pubic opinion to make it easier to win a conviction. But that still doesn't explain why he went after Frank rather than Conley.

Police hauled in a servant of the Franks, and sweated some comments out of her that vaguely supported their theory of the case (Oney, pp. 162-165). Once released, she declared her entire affidavit false (Dinnerstein, pp. 26-27). Given the circumstances, her statements against Frank are clearly unreliable; she had been kept in prison without charge or warrant, and police apparently gave her the impression she would be hanged. In essence, it was a confession under torture. The strange question is, why wasn't 27-year-old janitor Jim Conley, the other person who was known to have been in the National Pencil factory around the time of the murder, given this sort of attention? Although he was taken into custody a few days after the murder, Oney, p. 118, states that no one even took a statement from him for fifteen days after he was arrested! True, he was eventually questioned repeatedly, but apparently this was because the examiners expected him to lie because he was Black (Oney, pp. 140-141). Instead of the changes in his story being considered evidence against him, they were considered evidence that his final story was true! The prosecution was so intent on making a case against Frank that at one point they formally put Conley back on the street on the grounds that he wasn't even a material witness! (Oney, p. 51).

We might note in addition that he was a Reform Jew (Oney, p. 597); he was clean-shaven and had attended Cornell (Oney has several photos of him in college). His subject was mechanical engineering (Dinnerstein, p. 5).

Police hauled in a servant of the Franks, and sweated some comments out of her that vaguely supported their theory of the case (Oney, pp. 162-165). Once released, she declared her entire affidavit false (Dinnerstein, pp. 26-27). Given the circumstances, her statements against Frank are clearly unreliable; she had been kept in prison without charge or warrant, and police apparently gave her the impression she would be hanged. In essence, it was a confession under torture. The strange question is, why wasn't 27-year-old janitor Jim Conley, the other person who was known to have been in the National Pencil factory around the time of the murder, given this sort of attention? Although he was taken into custody a few days after the murder, Oney, p. 118, states that no one even took a statement from him for fifteen days after he was arrested! True, he was eventually questioned repeatedly, but apparently this was because the examiners expected him to lie because he was Black (Oney, pp. 140-141). Instead of the changes in his story being considered evidence against him, they were considered evidence that his final story was true! The prosecution was so intent on making a case against Frank that at one point they formally put Conley back on the street on the grounds that he wasn't even a material witness! (Oney, p. 173).

Dinnerstein, p. 19, and Oney, p. 94, hypothesize that prosecutor Dorsey needed to win a high-profile case for political reasons, which seems likely enough given his rather poor record in past cases; Oney argues on p. 100 that Dorsey intended to use pubic opinion to make it easier to win a conviction. But that still doesn't explain why he went after Frank rather than Conley.

Notes which proved to be in Conley's handwriting were found by Mary's body (Dinnerstein, p. 21; Garrett, p. 619 has the texts), yet at one time he claimed to be unable to write (F/T, p. 26; Oney, p. 119; Dinnerstein, p. 22, says that Frank himself had told police that Conley could write -- he had gotten notes from the man asking for loans). Later, having admitted literacy, Conley claimed Frank dictated the "murder notes," but outside analysts generally felt that Conley composed them to try to divert suspicion (they accuse someone of the murder, and they blame it on a Black -- but seemingly a tall dark-skinned Black; Conley had relatively light skin; WebFlag). Some of these claims were based on racist opinions about Black intelligence, but most were based on sober stylistic analysis. One would come from Conley's own lawyer (Oney, pp. 427-430, 483).

Conley was found trying to wash blood from his shirt (Oney, p. 118, though Conley claimed the stain was rust) -- but no one even subjected the blood to scientific examination! (Dinnerstein, p. 21). Conley was the one who charged Frank with having sexual liaisons at the factory, adding that Frank was physically abnormal -- but doctors testified that he was not (Oney, p. 276). When asked to re-enact the murder, Conley -- who had not been present when Mary's corpse was found or removed -- knew just where the body had lain (Oney, p. 142). To be sure, his final story said that he took Mary's body to the basement after Frank murdered her, so this did not prove his guilt. But it should be kept in mind.

Conley had an extensive record of petty crime (F/T, pp. 37-28, says he had been in prison seven or eight times in five years, and three times in the two years he had worked for National Pencil). His job performance had been bad enough that he had been demoted from elevator operator to sweeper (Oney, p. 119) -- it was said that the whole National Pencil Factory was filthy (MacLean, p. 168). There was eyewitness testimony that he was drinking in the period before the murder (Dinnerstein, pp. 21-22), and there were other reports of him being drunk on the job in the past (Oney, p. 119). We might also note that he lived with a woman without being married to her (Oney, p. 145, etc.)

Under questioning, Conley changed his story repeatedly (how often depends on how you count changes, but it was certainly three times, and F/T, p. 39, would make it five times). Each recital adding more incriminating statements against Frank (Dinnerstein, pp. 22-25), with his version on the witness stand being even more detailed than the statements to police. His final pre-trial story was that he only helped Frank dispose of the body, plus he was almost the only person to describe actual sexual liaisons in the National Pencil building. He never mentioned the fact (which came out later) that Mary's clothing had been carefully cut up. The story he told had inconsistencies; the Georgian stated clearly, "Careful study of the negro's story has revealed absurdities in its structure which bring the deed to Conley's door" (Oney, p. 133).

Much of Conley's testimony was contradicted by reputable witnesses during the trial (F/T, pp. 40-41). A senior National Pencil employee testified that Conley often tried to borrow money from his co-workers (F/T, p. 42), which would provide motive for robbery. Two women he claimed to have seen on the day of the murder contradicted his timeline for the encounters (Oney, p. 283). An expert testified that Conley's claims for the time he needed to transport Mary's body was too short to be physically possible (Oney, p. 284).

Conley stated that he repeatedly stood watch while Frank engaged in his sexual activities (Oney, p. 239). Had this been true, of course, he would almost certainly have been seen doing it, and he never was.

We do not know if Mary was raped, but if rape it was, Conley seems the much more likely perpetrator; letters he wrote from prison are pornographic and utterly disrespectful to women (Oney, pp. 390-391. quotes a small sample. They make disgusting reading -- Dinnerstein alludes to them on p. 102, but, even in 1966, apparently didn't dare quote such filth).

Conley was also crude enough to have defecated down an elevator shaft in the factory on the day of the murder (F/T, p. 46) -- an important point, because it proved that part of his testimony about Frank was a lie. He claimed that he and Frank had used the elevator on that day in moving the body -- but if they had, it would have smashed the pile of excrement, which was untouched when the police arrived. This point -- the "shit in the shaft" -- was not brought out until later, but it is still evidence against him.

In summary, here we have a robber, a liar, and a drunk -- yet, somehow, he became the prosecution's star witness.

On the witness stand, Conley would confess to lying repeatedly, and whenever a question came up regarding a matter on which he had not given specific testimony, he "disremembered." Somehow, he managed to remember many details about Leo Frank's misdeeds, but he "disremembered" almost everything else (Oney, p. 249).

After the trial, a witness would come forward to say that he had tried to assault her (F/T, p. 67; Oney, p. 120, reports that he once shot at a lady friend and wounded a bystander). Mary Phagan's mother Fannie Phagan Coleman eventually brought suit for $10,000 against National Pencil in what we would now call a Wrongful Death case (F/T, p. 74). I can't help but think she would have had a great case -- if Conley had been convicted of murder. I find it incomprehensible that National Pencil did nothing to control or fire this hooligan. It seems the question of why he wasn't fired came up at trial; an officer of the company apparently declared that "trustworthy" Blacks were hard to find (Oney, p. 275).

Eventually a Grand Jury wanted to indict Conley; in fact, a week before Frank's trial, they tried to bring a charge against Conley when they hadn't even been convened (Oney, p. 185). Solicitor Dorsey, who clearly wanted to convict Frank, browbeat them out of it (Dinnerstein, p. 29). At the trial, a Pinkerton agent testified that the police guided Conley to his story (F/T, p. 40). When the time came, Frank was placed on trial for murder, and Conley was primarily as a witness for the prosecution. The trial began on July 28, 1913 (Oney, p. 190).

Due to the high levels of poverty, and the extremely low levels of education, the population of Atlanta is said to have been very xenophobic. Lynchings were common. People even raised the suggestion of "blood libel" -- that Phagan's killing had been a ritual murder. Despite this, jury selection went surprisingly quickly, considering that four of the first seven groups of prospective jurors produces no jurors at all (Oney, p. 195). It took less than a day to form the jury.
The prosecution treated the case very seriously -- Dorsey and his staff evidently knew they had a weak case, so they worked jurors' emotions to the limit. The first witness called was Fannie Coleman, Mary Phagan's mother (Oney, p. 196). She of course had absolutely no evidence to bring against Leo Frank (in all likelihood she had never even seen him before!) -- but she broke down several times on the stand, including when her daughter's bloodstained clothes were brought in; it was a clear attempt to make the jurors desperately want revenge on the murderer. (I can't say I blame them. I would have wanted to avenge Mary, also. I'd just like to have gotten the man who murdered her rather than a scapegoat.)

In addition, the prosecution (plus his lawyer William Smith) had clearly gotten to Jim Conley, tidying him up and, based on his behavior on the witness stand, coaching him on how to present his story (Dinnerstein, pp. 40-44; Oney, pp. 188-189). In the court, he gave a dramatic -- though not very reasonable -- account of how Frank had had him dispose of Phagan's body. And the defense could not shake him (Dinnerstein, p. 45). Having failed, they made little attempt to point up the inconsistencies of his story.

Frank hired top-flight defense lawyers (Dinnerstein, p. 37; Oney, p. 191, notes that no fewer than eight attorneys were present for the defense). But they handled the case badly. F/T, p. 55, suggested that the lawyers simply didn't believe a Georgia jury would convict a white man on the testimony of a black man. Despite the mob baying for blood, they never requested a change of venue (Dinnerstein, p. 57), which was clearly necessary (in fact, the failure to request a change of venue was later used by the prosecution as support for the claim that the trial was fair; Oney, p. 493). Given the Georgia summer heat, it was sometimes necessary to open the court windows, allowing outside demonstrations to be heard (Oney, pp. 210-211). The judge never even cleared the court (F/T, p. 51), except for a brief time when he ordered the women out (Oney, p. 246), which turned the whole thing into a circus. I don't understand why the defense even wanted a jury trial; it cost Frank his life.

The defense did break down the testimony of the first investigators (Oney, p. 208), and of the lead detective (F/T, p. 33; Oney, pp. 218-220). They also largely demolished the testimony of George Epps and Helen Ferguson, young people who vaguely linked Frank to Mary (Oney, pp. 270-271, 273), and Oney, p. 238, seems to think they were ahead "on points," so to speak, when Conley came to the stand. But Conley was the key to the whole case -- the "only" witness or evidence linking Leo Frank to the murder of Mary Phagan -- and they did not break him down. They didn't even object when Conley testified to other misdeeds allegedly committed by Frank (Oney, p. 242. Presumably they thought they would be able to discredit these charges. To a great extent, they did -- but it didn't matter. The jurors got the message.)

When it came time to present a defense, the real disaster began. The defense lawyers had failed to penetrate Jim Conley in cross-examination, but they never presented a real alternative to Conley's claims. They surely could have gone after Conley (who, if Frank was innocent, was almost certainly the murderer). Instead, they spent most of their energy to paint Frank as a saint who would never have done such a thing.

The primary argument seemed to be that Frank had done nothing unusual on the day of the murder (Dinnerstein, p. 48). They did illustrate the inconsistencies in the times of events as stated by the various witnesses, and showed that Frank's whereabouts were accounted for in most of the two hours around the time the murder was thought to have been committed (Dinnerstein, p. 49). Indeed, a stenographer testified that he had asked her to stay the entire period (Oney, p. 279), but she had other duties. But they made no real use of the limited forensic evidence available, and made no attempt to find more (F/T, p. 56).

And then there were the character witnesses. Under 1913 Georgia law, all witnesses had to be sworn in at the start of the trial. Oney, p. 192, notes that the defense wanted to delay submitting its witness list. Told they could not do so, but allowed additional time to compile the list, they huddled, then turned in the list. They proceeded to offer the names of many prominent Jews and alumni of Cornell, Frank's old college. "Plainly, this list of well over one hundred names was more than just a list -- it was a theory of the defense, one that carried with it the prospect that in rebuttal, the state would introduce witnesses to testify to Frank's bad reputation" (Oney, p. 192).

The main effect of these witnesses seems to have been simply to stretch out the proceedings and irritate all involved (F/T, p. 56). Plus they gave Dorsey the chance to ask all of them more questions about Frank's alleged perversions (e.g. Oney, p. 286). In all this, probably the only defense witnesses who really mattered were the outside accountants who testified that the work he did on the fatal Saturday would have required him to stay at his desk all day (Oney, pp. 277-279) -- he would have had no time for attempted seduction, rape, or murder.

Oney, p. 281, shows a typical example of how the character witnesses were treated. Dorsey took a defense witness who had done distinct damage to the prosecution case and kept asking him about homosexual acts by Frank. As the defense stated, no one could get a fair trial in those circumstances (Oney, p. 282). The judge often struck Dorsey's questions from the record, and the witnesses usually said that Frank didn't do any such thing anyway, but it didn't matter; the insinuation that he was some sort of pervert was kept before the jury's mind. The whole trial took four weeks (Dinnerstein, p. 52). Dinnerstein's description makes the whole prosecution case little more than a smear campaign, and the accounts in F/T and Oney are only slightly more charitable to Dorsey. Golden, p. xiv, declares, "It is unlikely that anyone could be convicted in the America of the 1960s on the evidence and the testimony which convicted Leo Frank in 1913." Dorsey's tactics were so vile that at times it appeared the attorneys for the two sides would come to blows (Oney, p. 290).

At the end, Frank made a statement in his own defense; I assume that this was unsworn (a quirk of Georgia law allowed -- in effect, almost demanded -- the accused to speak, not under oath, but without help or guidance of counsel). He spent four hours in this, and declared it "the whole truth." His family was in tears afterward. (Garrett, pp. 623-624). But -- he was Jewish.

The outcome, in Dinnerstein's view, was inevitable; judge and lawyers had been presented with death threats, and possibly the jurors also (Dinnerstein, p. 60. F/T, p. xix, declare that "The jury were scared, the judge was scared, and the prosecutors were scared"). The prosecution spent three days theatrically summing up the case (Oney, p. 337), reminding the jury again and again that Frank was a Jew (Dinnerstein, p. 53). The defense called for a mistrial (Oney, p. 339), but was turned down. The judge spent mere minutes instructing the jury (Oney, pp. 339-340), and then, only an hour and a half after Dorsey finished shrieking "guilty! guilty! guilty!" like a demented fury as church bells tolled, the jury began to deliberate.

It took the jury only four hours to decide the case (Dinnerstein, p. 55); they reported only two ballots; (Oney, p. 340). To prevent riots, the court had (finally!) been cleared (F/T, pp. 52-53), so there were few people around when the court declared Frank guilty of first degree murder. (Frank would comment, "My God! Even the jury was influenced by mob law" -- Dinnerstein, p 56; Oney, p. 342). Not even Frank was allowed to be present when the verdict was announced, which, according to F/T, p. 53, should have been by itself grounds for a new trial. (The jurors needed to see the accused they were about to convict.) The next day, Frank was sentenced to hang, in a proceeding so secret that not even his wife was allowed to be present (Dinnerstein, p. 57). The execution was scheduled for October 10, 45 days after the sentencing date of August 26 (F/T, p. 54).

Despite the claim by F/T that the jury was scared of the mob, they seem to have been more playful than anything; they had become friends and made up nicknames for each other (F/T, p. 52). From what we know of their deliberations, not one seems to have been bothered by the possibility that they were committing judicial murder.

Clarence Feibelman, who knew Frank and was in high school at the time, reported later, "There was no possibility of him not being found guilty. There were mobs outside the courthouse. It was hot, it was the summertime. And the mobs outside were hollering, 'Kill the Jew!' and 'Lynch the Jew!' and all that sort of stuff. And I'd be on the streetcar and sometimes I'd get off and walk past there, and it was just harrowing to hear these people. It made your blood run cold" (Kuhn/Joye/West, p. 12)

When the verdict came down, it did much to arouse the nation's Jewish community. There were comparisons to the Dreyfus Affair in France, where a Jewish officer had been falsely convicted of treason on even flimsier evidence (Oney, p. 346; Chapter III of Dinnerstein is titled "An American Dreyfus"; Golden, p. xiv, mentions Dreyfus while mentioning the key difference that Dreyfus was not sentenced to death). In one sense, the outrage helped -- it brought in more money for Frank's legal defense (Frank's initial defense had cost about $50,000, according to Oney, p. 365, and he of course didn't have that sort of money). But it also caused the xenophobic Georgians to suspect some sort of Jewish conspiracy (Dinnerstein, p. 92). There was a widespread belief that anyone who supported Frank had been bribed. As a result, there was fear in the Jewish community that they would suffer if they seemed to be openly supporting him.

While the verdict convinced the mob, it did not convince Frank's bosses. National Pencil executives still consulted him on policy while in his prison cell (Oney, p. 349).

There was, of course, an appeal -- but the Georgia constitution didn't care about guilt or innocence, or tainted juries; the only grounds for appeal was an error in law or procedure (Dinnerstein, p. 77; F/T, p. 66, remarks that this was the effect of a constitutional amendment adopted in 1906. To put it another way, having bad lawyers was a hanging offense.)

There were good grounds for the appeal. Frank's lawyers listed 115 reasons why there should be a new trial (Oney, p. 349) -- though some of them should surely have been brought up in the first trial. The most dramatic of the reasons: Two jurors had apparently declared Frank guilty in advance
The judge who tried the original case declared in refusing the motion for a mistrial, "I have thought more about this case than any other I have tried. I am not certain of the man's guilt. With all the thought I have put on this case, I am not thoroughly convinced that Frank is guilty or innocent. The jury was convinced. There is no room to doubt that. I feel that it is my duty to order that the motion for a new trial be overruled" (Dinnerstein, p. 79; Oney, p. 364, points out that the jury's verdict, once reached, bound the judge -- he could not overrule them unless there were procedural errors, and the defense should have pointed those out earlier). The flip side is, Judge Roan ruled that his uncertainty should be included in the appeal request. In other words, he felt bound by the law but probably hoped Frank would get a new trial. The Atlanta Journal also called for a new trial (Garrett, p. 625).

F/T, to be sure, have another hypothesis: based on a book published in 1959, they think Judge Roan knew (based on an account from Conley's lawyer) that Conley was guilty. But, rather than inflame public opinion, he denied the motion for a new trial, hoping the furor would die down and that the appeal would clear Frank (F/T, p. 58-59). Roan's brother said something similar about his brother's motives before the pardon commission (Oney, p. 481). I can't see how this is in any way morally superior to the other.

That left the Georgia Supreme Court. They listened to arguments from the lawyers for four hours, then decided 4-2 not to allow a new trial (Dinnerstein, p. 81). Oney, pp. 368-370, notes that this appeal opened very little new ground, so perhaps it is no surprise that nothing came of it -- though the judges needed 142 pages to say so. But it appears that their ruling boiled down to "it's up to the trial judge." Judge Roan, as we have seen, thought it was up to the Supreme Court. Frank's first appeal was denied because both courts said, "You go first." As a result, a new execution date was set, by a new judge -- April 17, 1914, Frank's thirtieth birthday (Oney, p. 377).

In the period after the first appeal, much new evidence came out. The parties finally consulted a scientist, who said that hairs alleged to have been torn from Mary's head during the murder were not hers (Dinnerstein, pp. 84); those hairs were important to the prosecution's case, but the scientific evidence was suppressed by prosecutor Dorsey (Oney, p. 371), who declared the testimony of his witnesses to be worth more than mere scientific fact (Dinnerstein, p. 85). This was clear misconduct by the prosecution (Oney, p. 370). There was even a witness who said the blood in the "metal room" was probably his.

The "murder notes" that Conley had written and left by the body were shown to have been written on old stationary, stored in the factory basement, not on the current stationary Frank would have had in his office (Dinnerstein, p. 87; Oney, pp. 379-380). Yet Conley claimed that he had written them in Frank's office. The prosecution argued that Frank had dictated the notes to Conley, but there was strong evidence that Frank could not have used the language they contained (Dinnerstein, p. 90); they used words which strongly implied that Conley -- who certainly did the actual writing -- also composed them. This issue would come up again, even more forcefully.

In addition, a number of witnesses changed their story (Dinnerstein, pp. 86-87), with most though not all of them saying that their previous evidence against Frank was false. One of these, George Epps, had been one of the keys to Dorsey's reconstruction of events (Oney, pp. 197-198), and he now accused the police of telling him what to say on the stand (Oney, p. 373). At least seven girls who had testified to Frank's "bad character" changed their accounts, most way that they had been coached (Oney, p. 389, who adds that one testified as she died because she didn't know what "lasciviousness" meant). There were reports of the police having bribed or threatened other witnesses (F/T, pp. 66-67; Oney, p. 372).

Two separate sources, in this period, gave evidence that Frank had not committed the murder (Dinnerstein, pp. 102-105). One was a woman who said Conley had confessed to it while proposing (! -- Oney, p. 395), the other was hearsay testimony from a minister who overheard a congregant saying that he, not Frank, had committed the murder (Oney, p. 396). The minister, C. B. Ragsdale, said he didn't know who had made the comments -- but it obviously wasn't Frank! I suspect both would have been inadmissible in court; in any case, both ended up being retracted. The girlfriend later denied receiving Conley's letters and promises, perhaps under pressure from the prosecutors; the minister also retracted his testimony, claiming that he had been bribed (Oney, p. 398). This ruined one possible grounds for appeal and of course made Frank look bad (F/T, p. 69). The minister involved eventually resigned his pastorate -- after all, he had both sides mad at him!

Other witnesses who changed their stories were threatened by Dorsey with perjury charges (Oney,
In the end, most of those who recanted would re-recant (Oney, pp. 411-413). None of it mattered anyway; under Georgia law, perjured testimony stood unless the witness were convicted of perjury (Oney, p. 418). In other words, here again, Georgia law did not consider innocence to be grounds for a new trial.

During this period, the famed detective Williams Burns finally took a personal role in the case, showing that Mary's clothing had been cut up in a sexually explicit way, implying "deviancy" on the part of the murderer (Oney, p. 391); they failed to find any genuine witnesses to deviancy of this sort on Frank's part (Oney, p. 392).

It is noteworthy that Conley's lawyer refused to let Conley talk to Burns (Oney, p. 393). Monteen Stover, the young girl who claimed Frank was out of his office at a crucial time (making her one of the most important prosecution witnesses other than Conley) also avoided Burns. Burns eventually was driven from Georgia; when he went to visit Mary's hometown of Marietta, he was chased from the town (Oney, pp. 401-403). Witnesses for Frank also suffered the wrath of Georgia; Mineola McKnight, who had testified for Frank, was slashed in the face during the appeals (Oney, p. 422).

In the end, Georgia justice refused to act; the judge (not Judge Roan) responsible for deciding on a new trial barred most of the defense's best evidence (Oney, pp. 403-411), and the state Supreme Court promptly concurred (Oney, p. 446).

Frank's lawyers finally appealed to the United States Supreme Court. Reading the description in Dinnerstein, pp. 109-113, it really sounds as if the Court used a series of quibbles to refuse to intervene -- but refuse they did. A first appeal was denied without explanation (F/T, p. 70; Oney, p. 452, notes that the only statement was the single word "denied"). The second appeal (on the broader grounds of habeas corpus) at least reached the full court (Oney, p. 460), but was denied on April 19, 1915 (Dinnerstein, p. 117) by a vote of 7-2 (Hall, p. 317), with justices Hughes and Holmes dissenting.

(You have to wonder what might have happened had the case come up two years later, after Justice Brandeis joined the court, but this was 1914, not 1916. The flip side is, the blatantly anti-Semitic justice James Clark McReynolds, who was such a boor that he could not even speak civilly to justices Brandeis and Cardozo, had joined the court in 1914; Hall, pp. 542-543.)

Those wishing to look up the case in legal articles will find it under "Frank v. Mangum." The court majority's decision was written by justice Pitney, who considered the Georgia appeals process to have eliminated any irregularities in the original trial; Hall, p. 317. Pitney, appointed to the court by President Taft in 1912, had never studied law formally and had a firm belief in individualism, the overwhelming authority of contracts, states' rights, restricted rights of labor, and extremely limited government -- although, oddly enough, he supported workmen's compensation; Hall, pp. 635-636. Hall, p. 317, declares the Frank case a "clear miscarriage of justice."

F/T, pp. 71-72, notes that the court would later reverse itself in a similar case: In Moore v Dempsey, which reached the high court in 1923 (Hall, p. 560; this was a year after justice Pitney left the court; Hall, p. 636), the court found that irregularities such as those found in the Frank case were grounds for a new trial. (The case involved a riot in Arkansas in which hundreds of Blacks and five whites were killed. Several Blacks, convicted of murder, appealed for habeas corpus, which was denied by the lower court but upheld 6-2 by the Supreme Court; Hall, pp. 560-561). But that was later. The court decisions left Frank's friends with no recourse but an appeal for clemency. While that was going on, William Smith, the lawyer for Jim Conley, released a statement concluding that Conley had committed the murder (Dinnerstein, pp. 114-115). This obviously sounds like a violation of attorney-client privilege, but Smith had two reasons for thinking otherwise. First, Conley had never told him what he felt was the truth, so he was not violating a confidence. Smith's declaration, according to Oney, pp. 427-430, was based solely on evidence he had found that Conley had lied (Dinnerstein, p. 115, says that Smith offered "no [single] convincing proof"; he was convinced by an accumulation of evidence).

In any case, Smith felt that to Conley was safe from further prosecution due to the law against double jeopardy; Conley had already been convicted of a lesser charge. In this connection, it is noteworthy that Dorsey declared that he thought Conley should not be punished at all. But the jury needed only twelve minutes to convict Conley of the lesser crime with which he was charged; Oney, p. 385. He was sentenced in February 1914 to a year on the chain gang, and actually served ten months (WebFlag). So Smith made the statement to try to save Frank (F/T, pp. 70, 78).

But such was the climate of the time that those convinced of Frank's guilt thought Smith had been bribed; Dinnerstein, p. 115. Georgians by and large dug in their heels and refused to listen to reason.

Smith, like Judge Roan, would carry the Frank case to his death; the last words he ever wrote were a testament to the "innocence and good character of Leo Frank" (Oney has a photo preceding p.
The appeals for clemency came from all over the country; Dinnerstein, p. 118, counts nine governors (many of them southern), at least seven senators, "scores" of congressmen, and many resolutions by state legislatures. F/T, p. 75, says that the state received 15,000 petitions for clemency; p. 86, claims that the governor was sent more than a hundred thousand requests. Dinnerstein, p. 118, claims that over a million people signed one or another petition. Eventually, even vice president Thomas R. Marshall would speak up, though not until later (Oney, p. 491). But the Georgia Prison Commission, claiming incredibly that no additional evidence had come in (Dinnerstein, pp. 121-122), voted 2-1 to deny Frank relief (F/T, p. 78). They did not explain their reasoning (Oney, p. 488), but one suspects that they were influenced by the large crowds who demonstrated against clemency (Oney, p. 486).

That left only governor John M. Slaton, whose term came to an end a few days after Frank's scheduled execution (Dinnerstein, p. 123). He apparently had hoped that the appeals process would drag out long enough that ye would not have to make a decision before his term ended (F/T, p. 70; Oney, p. 472, notes that he did not wish to act on a case involving Frank's lead defense lawyer Luther Rosser, who was technically his law partner, though Dinnerstein, p. 124, notes that the firms of Slaton & Phillips and Rosser & Brandon did not combine until after Slaton became governor; Slaton was a courtesy partner in the new firm and the two had never practiced together). In the end, though, the matter landed on his desk.

As had happened in all these cases, Hugh Dorsey represented the prosecution and a large team handled the presentation of the defense case. The one major new point was the state of the excrement Conley had left in the elevator shaft (Oney, p. 489). This of course demonstrated that a major portion of Jim Conley had left in the elevator shaft (Oney, p. 489). This of course demonstrated that a major portion of Jim Conley's testimony was inaccurate.

Slaton examined the evidence more thoroughly than any other judicial investigator, even testing the workings of the National Pencil elevator which played such a large role in the case (Oney, p. 501). The governor spent many days on his decision, apparently knowing that commuting Frank's sentence to life imprisonment would damage his political career and maybe even cause his assassination. (There was apparently no question of pardoning Frank; that would have been too controversial.) Finally Slaton decided to commute the sentence (Dinnerstein, p. 125).

It was, as F/T remark on p. 81, "political suicide." In a folkloric touch, his wife is said to have told him, "I would rather be the widow of a brave and honorable man than the wife of a coward" (Dinnerstein, p. 126). She very nearly was; it took militia to force the crowds away from Slaton's home (Oney, p. 504). He ended up leaving the state for years (Dinnerstein, p. 159), even taking up residence in ruined Romania during World War I (Oney, p. 609). Prosecutor H. M. Dorsey, on the other hand, rode his fame into the governor's mansion. To give him his due, Oney, p. 614, says that he proposed the broadest civil rights agenda of any southern governor of the time.

Slaton's summary of the case brought forward much more evidence than the actual criminal trial, and showed strong evidence of Conley's guilt (Dinnerstein, pp. 126-129) -- most, including Dinnerstein, consider it overwhelming evidence. Slaton pointed out the absolute proof that Conley had lied about using the elevator to move the body, argued that Frank was not strong enough to carry the body as far as he would have had to, and noted that there was not enough blood in the room where Conley said the body was found, and that the hairs did not match (F/T, pp. 86-87).

Slaton knew the commutation would cause trouble, and he prepared carefully for his ruling, trying to move Frank to a safer location (Dinnerstein, p. 126). Decoys were actually used to keep Frank safe on his journey (F/T, p. 86). Slaton also called out the militia -- wisely, since rioters tried to reach his home (Dinnerstein, p. 126); martial law continued until the new governor took office (F/T, p. 89).

The reprieve didn't help Frank much; he paid a high price for being left in custody. Although the commutation of his sentence meant that he was moved to a more pleasant prison, four weeks after he arrived, another inmate, William Creen, cut his throat (Dinnerstein, p. 137) using a butcher knife from the prison kitchen (Oney, p. 547); he would have died had their not been doctors among the prisoners to treat him immediately. Such was the sickness of the time that letters reached the new governor demanding that Creen be pardoned for his attempted murder (Dinnerstein, p. 138). The demagogue who led this campaign, Thomas Watson, publisher of The Jeffersonian, openly advocated lynching Frank (F/T, p. 90), and rejoiced when it was said, falsely, that the knife had been used to butcher hogs (Oney, p. 550).

About a month later, on the night of August 16, 1915 a mob broke into the prison where Frank was housed, where they handcuffed him (Dinnerstein, pp. 139-141). This was no casual break-in; F/T, p. 93, says that 25 men were involved, and they drove seven cars. Oney, pp. 511-524, catalogs some of those involved in planning the operation; they included lawyers, a judge, and a former governor (though none of these took part in the actual raid). One of them, in fact, was the solicitor.
responsible for prosecuting crimes in the area of the lynching! Naturally, he did nothing to seek the lynchers (Oney, p. 586).

It is evident that the raiders had tools, knowledge of the prison, and a careful plan. Insiders may have had some knowledge of what was coming; Oney spends many confusing pages discussing this, and Alan M. Dershowitz, who wrote an introduction to the Notable Trials edition of Dinnerstein, explicitly states that some prison officials were in on the plan. It took only seven minutes to kidnap Frank (F/T, p. 94).

It was hard for the authorities to call for help; most of the phone and telegraph lines had been cut, and the warden's car's gas line was cut. Clearly, the lynch mob didn't care that they were creating an opening for other prisoners to escape.

The mob then drove 175 miles, over mostly unpaved roads, to Marietta, Mary Phagan's home town (F/T, p. 95). There they hooded and hanged Frank. Inexpertly; his neck was not broken; rather, he suffocated and bled to death after his neck wound reopened; Oney, p. 566. Despite their ineptitude, the lynchers had accomplished their goal; Frank was dead.

At least one witness kicked the body and stomped on Frank's face after he was cut down (Dinnerstein, p. 144). Souvenir hunters cut off portions of his clothing (F/T, p. 97), and photos of his lifeless body were sold for 25 cents (F/T, p. 98). The oak from which he was hung became the site of a perverse sort of pilgrimages (Dinnerstein, p. 145). A local coroner's jury refused to return indictments against men known to have taken part (Dinnerstein, p. 145; Oney, p. 586, says that the local coroner had been a member of the original Ku Klux Klan) -- even though some of the lynch mob actually volunteered to talk to reporters (F/T, p. 105). Only one man had the decency to recover Frank's wedding ring for his wife, and he seemingly had to do so anonymously (F/T, p. 106).

A man who had known Leo Frank and declared that "He couldn't be guilty of such a thing" recalled the time of the lynching: "I happened to be at Five Points [in downtown Atlanta] the morning after Frank was lynched. There must have been five or six of these men, they would be called red-necks, drove into Five Points. And they displayed a piece of the rope with which they had lynched Frank. They were pretty well received by the folks at Five Points. You can imagine how I felt. They were hazardous times. They were frightening times. We were all frightened" (Kuhn/Joye/West, p. 253).

Supposedly the whole incident led to a revival of the Ku Klux Klan in the area (Dinnerstein, p. 150; F/T, p. 95; Oney, p. 607, tells of them openly applying for a state charter in 1915); certainly the Klan was still making pilgrimages to Mary's grave more than half a century later. They also sent a great cross of flowers when Tom Watson died (Oney, p. 615); after all, it was his poisoned pen that had inspired their rebirth. (For more on Watson and his death, see "Thomas E. Watson," a song written by Andrew Jenkins after his decease.)

Is it any wonder that Frank's family took his body north for burial? It is worth noting that, in this period, Georgia experienced several dozen lynchings per year, and is said to have been the lynching-est state in the Union (Oney, p. 122). In 1915, all but one of the 22 people lynched were Black (Oney, p. 513). The one exception was Frank. Whether innocent or guilty, there is no real question that the reason Frank died is that he was a Jewish Yankee living in Georgia.

Although many, including the new governor, Nathaniel E. Harris, publicly condemned the lynching, none of Frank's murderers were ever brought to trial (Garrett, p. 628).

More data came in after Frank's death. In 1922, a reporter discovered that there were photos of bite marks on Mary's body, and concluded based on what was known about Frank's teeth that Frank could not have made those bites (Dinnerstein, p. 158; Oney, p. 617). The reporter's reward was to have his car forced off the road; for years, the data was suppressed.

Even more dramatically, in 1982, a witness came forward with evidence that Conley had lied about his part in the affair. Alonzo Mann, a boy who had been in the factory on the fatal day, had seen Conley carrying Mary Phagan's body around the time of her murder. What's more, he saw Conley with the body "on the first floor" and not in the presence of Frank; according to Conley's testimony, he had taken it from the second floor to the basement via the elevator, meaning that he should never have stopped on the first floor, and that Frank should have been with him even if he had (WebFlag). Having been threatened by Conley, Mann was advised by his mother to keep quiet at Frank's trial (F/T, p. 157). He did tell his story to a few people, but for a long time no one, not even the Jewish community, wanted to reopen old wounds (F/T, p. 148). Only much later did The Tennessean become interested and interview Mann. He took a polygraph test to verify his story. (Tennessean, p. 2.) He was also examined psychologically (F/T, p. 150). He passed both tests. Several of the major witnesses against Frank had interesting careers in the years after his trial. Monteen Stover, the fourteen-year-old girl who claimed that Frank was not at his desk at the time the prosecution claimed the murder took place, would some years later be charged with being the lure in a "badger scam" to extort money from married men who had affairs (Oney, p. 618). George Epps, who had claimed Mary Phagan was afraid of Frank (an odd claim, given that she risked being alone with him when she collected her pay) was sent to a reformatory in late 1913 for stealing (Dinnerstein, p. 86). It was Jim Conley, though, who had a truly extraordinary record. On November 1, 1915, Conley (who, you will recall, had a common law wife) was picked up in a "disorderly house." He escaped a prostitution charge by claiming he wanted to marry one of the girls -- and he was so popular that the judge and spectators put up the license fee which he said he could not afford. But he was arrested "three times" for wife beating in the next three and a half months (Oney, p. 612). In 1919, he was injured in an attempt to burglarize a drug store, and was sentenced to twenty years. In 1941, he was arrested for gambling. In 1947, he was picked up for drunkeness. Dinnerstein, pp. 158-159, cites at second hand an obituary notice from 1962. Oney, p. 647, says that there is no record of his death though a witness in 1970 said he had died. WebFlag notes the lack of an obituary or death notice but cites the 1962 date. A memorial to Mary Phagan was erected in 1915. One speaker went so far as to refer to her as "sainted" (Dinnerstein, p. 136). The inscription was written by none other than Tom Watson, according to WebFlag. Although we have no absolute evidence for when this song was composed, it seems to be a pretty good reflection of the murderous mood in Georgia. It is also a fairly accurate reflection of the story told at the trial. The list below summarizes factual details listed in the various versions. I have listed the versions which contain each fact. I have also listed which statements are true, false, or disputed. The versions cited are those of:

Burt1: The first full text of Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 61-62, sung by Thelda Barris and collected probably around Ibapah, Utah, c. 1926; quoted by F/T (with incorrect stanza divisions), pp. 139-140. This version is fascinating in that it never mentions Leo Frank, which makes it seem that Newt Lee was the criminal. However, it cannot be an early version of the song, since it mentions Judge Roan and prosecutor Dorsey. The version of Cambiaire-EastTennesseeWestVirginiaMountainBallads, interestingly, also seems to follow this outline, and does not mention Roan or Dorsey.

Burt2: a partial text of Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 62-63, from Pearl Flake, who was originally from Atlanta though apparently she was working for Burt c. 1940 when the song was collected. F/T quote this on pp. 140-141.

Burt3: A fragment, printed by Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 63-64 with no source listed and repeated by F/T on p. 141.

Cambiaire: From Cambiaire-EastTennesseeWestVirginiaMountainBallads, p. 104. No source information given. The murderer is unnamed, and the trial is not mentioned.

Carson1: Fiddlin' John Carson, as given by Wiggins, Fiddlin' Georgia Crazy, and quoted by Oney, p. 492f.

Carson2: Fiddlin' John Carson, apparently as given in the Atlanta Constitution, August 18, 1915, and quoted by Oney, p. 571f. This seems to be the earliest report of the song, but I suspect the reporter managed to take down only part of it.

Eddy: Eddy, p. 252. A very incomplete text, which Eddy had from Mrs. Lawrence Davis of Perrysville, Ohio. In this, the version is called "Mary Pickford" (obviously an error for the actress, who however was still alive at the time Eddy collected the song!). I suspect fragments of other songs may have mixed with this -- it even appears to say that "Mary" called a policeman. The murderer is not named.

G/C: Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan, p. 144. Sung by Margaret Tuggle of Detroit but apparently learned in Virginia.

JAFL: Journal of American Folklore, 1918; quoted by Dinnerstein on pp. 166ff.

McNeil1: McNeil, Southern Folk Ballads II, p. 71, from Mrs. Artie Waggoner, Creston, Louisiana, 1977. In this the murderer is called "Leo Benton," presumably a mix-up with other ballads of this type.

McNeil2: McNeil, Southern Folk Ballads II, p. 72, from Reba Cheyne, Fort Smith, Arkansas, 1979. A defective version which appears to include primarily the early verses.

The historical details found in the versions are as follows:
* Correctly states that Mary worked in a pencil factory (versions of JAFL, Cambiaire-EastTennesseeWestVirginiaMountainBallads, Carson1, Carson2, Burt1, Eddy, G/C, McNeil1, McNeil2)
* Correctly states that Mary was going to collect her pay (Carson1, Carson2, Burt1, Cambiaire-EastTennesseeWestVirginiaMountainBallads, Eddy, G/C, McNeil1, McNeil2)
* Correctly states that Mary was very pretty (G/C)
* States, probably correctly, that Mary was going to see the Memorial Day parade (JAFL)
* Correctly states that the murder took place on a holiday, in this case, Confederate Memorial Day (JAFL, Carson1, Burt1)
* Correctly states that she went left home around 11:00 on the fatal day; she had the lunch of cabbage and bread that caused the forensics people so much trouble shortly after 11:00 and then set out for the trolley (JAFL, Carson1, Carson2; Burt1 and McNeil2 incorrectly give the time as 7:00)
* Correctly states that Jim Conley was given a year's sentence (though the song implies that Frank and Conley were tried together, which is false) (JAFL)
* Correctly states that the body was found in the basement (JAFL, Cambiaire-EastTennesseeWestVirginiaMountainBallads, Carson1, Burt1, Burt2, McNeil1)
* Correctly states that Newt Lee found her body (JAFL, Carson1, Burt1; Cambiaire spells it "Nute Lee"; Burt2 calls him "Nemphon"; McNeil1 has "Jim Newt" -- perhaps combining "Jim Conley" and "Newt Lee"?)
* Correctly states that Lee was imprisoned for a time (JAFL, Carson1)
* Correctly states that Mary's mother was wild with grief (JAFL, Carson1, Burt1, Burt2, Burt3, G/C, McNeil1)
* Correctly states that Solicitor H. M. [Dorsey] was the prosecutor (JAFL, Carson1, Burt1)
* Correctly states that Judge Roan tried the case (Carson1, Carson2, Burt1; McNeil1 calls him "Judge Long")
* States that Mary was murdered in the metal room, agreeing with the prosecution but not the defense (JAFL, Carson1, Burt1; McNeil1 and others call it the "little room"; Cambiaire-EastTennesseeWestVirginiaMountainBallads has "middle room")
* States that Leo Frank called on Jim Conley to carry the body, agreeing with the prosecution but not the defense (JAFL, Carson1)
* States that "the janitor" lured Mary to a dreadful fate, agreeing with the defense but not the prosecution (Burt3, G/C)
* States incorrectly that "the janitor" let Mary into the factory (Burt3, G/C; since the factory was not locked, she would not have needed admission
* States incorrectly that Frank had children (JAFL); that may, however, be a holdover from its source, since the song is based on the "Charles Guiteau"/"Murder of F. C. Benwell"/"Ewing Books" family.
* States incorrectly that Mary was "bound both hands and feet" (JAFL, Carson1); there was cord around her neck, but none on her hands and feet.
* States incorrectly that Mary was her mother's "sole support" (Burt3, G/C)
* States incorrectly that "the janitor," rather than Frank, was strung up (Eddy, G/C)

Looking at the versions, it appears that the song exists in three "states." In one, it seems to have ended with the discovery of the body and the police telling Newt Lee that he "must go" (presumably to prison). A second state, associated particularly with Fiddlin' John Carson, brings in Leo Frank, accuses him of the murder, and credits H. M. Dorsey with convicting him, but does not mention the appeals or the lynching. A third state mentions the lynching, though the versions I've seen seem to describe the janitor (i.e., Conley), rather than Frank, as being lynched.

The data is not sufficient to form an absolute conclusion, of course, but this would seem to imply three stages of composition: A very early version, in circulation before Frank's trial; a second completed after he had been convicted (and probably after Conley had been convicted also, given the mention of his sentence), and a third after the lynching. Possibly this last stage involved two rewrites, one to add the lynching, the other (perhaps northern) to blame Conley, and these two fused.

And, yes, I know that's an extremely complicated reconstruction based on very flimsy evidence! But how else to explain versions which explicitly blame Leo Frank, explicitly blame "the janitor," and implicitly blame Newt Lee? It's hard to see such changes happening by accident.

Few of the sources I've seen credit this song to an author, but Malone, p. 220, credits it to Fiddlin' John Carson, whose daughter Rosa Lee is credited with the first recording of it. His footnote lists several sources for the murder, but it's not clear how authorship was established. Dinnerstein, p. 121, says that Carson was singing the song at rallies in Georgia in this period -- but his footnote as to sources contains no reference to Carson. Oney, p. 491, cites Fiddlin' Georgia Crazy by George Wiggins as the source of the attribution, and says that Carson sang it during the hearing before Governor Slaton.

Nonetheless, I don't think the evidence quite strong enough to prove that Carson wrote the song (or, rather, the lyrics, since the tune is borrowed). He does seem to be particularly associated with the second version, which convicts Frank but does not mention the lynching. It strikes me as likely that he converted the first stage of the song to the second, and the evidence is strong that he made it popular enough that Vernon Dalhart recorded it -- and that, of course made it popular indeed. But I would not wish to bet on whether he wrote the first version. And I strongly doubt that the lynching version is his.

So who killed Mary Phagan? It is unlikely that we will ever be able to acquire any evidence beyond what has already been discussed. Alonzo Mann, the last significant witness, died soon after giving his testimony. Oney, p. 647, says that the physical evidence collected by Hugh Dorsey is gone. WebFlag notes that the National Pencil Company building was demolished June 6, 1994. Even if the family consented to having it exhumed (which seems unlikely), we can hardly hope to learn anything from Mary's body at this late date. Jim Conley's last resting place seems to be unknown, so we couldn't get DNA evidence from him under any circumstances. So all we have is the records of the evidence collected at the time. On this basis, Oney manages the curious summary that "the argument [will] never move beyond Conley's word versus Frank's" (p. 647). That is indeed the key point, but surely we can go beyond "He said, he said" to express probabilities.

(To give Oney his due, according to WebFlag, which reviews Oney's book, Oney is personally convinced that Frank is innocent and Conley guilty.)

Basically, we have three possible murderers: Leo Frank, Jim Conley, or an unknown someone else. There is no evidence for someone else, though we cannot deny the possibility given the ease with which many people entered the National Pencil building. (The one person we know was there at the time, Monteen Stover, seems never to have come under suspicion. Nor does she seem a likely suspect; I mention her only to show that the possibilities have not been fully examined.) However, if it were someone else, why would Conley have implicated Frank? And why write the murder notes if not to divert suspicion? (For this point see WebFlag.) Since Conley is unequivocally known to have carried the body, based on Mann's testimony, and also wrote the murder notes, he surely knew who committed the crime. Since he mentioned only himself and Frank, Conley's testimony strongly implies that either he or Frank did it.

If we look at the classic tests of a crime, "motive, means, and opportunity," we know that Conley had greater motive (either man might have had a sexual motive, but Conley also had robbery as a motive, plus we known that he had quite the sex life). Conley is known to have had the opportunity -- after all, Mann saw him carrying her body! By contrast, there is no evidence linking Frank directly with Mary, though he of course did see her on the day of her death. As for means, Conley was a strong man who could have overcome her; Frank was a weak man who was unlikely to win a battle to the death even with a thirteen year old, and he showed no scars of such a fight. Also, nearly all testimony against Frank was either perjured (if a witness makes a claim and then denies it, we can hardly treat either claim as reliable, no matter what Georgia law said) or from very questionable sources such as Monteen Stover.

Finally, we have the known facts that Conley was a robber, and a wife-beater, and a drunk. His first accounts of the crime were perjured, and the "shit in the shaft" and the testimony of Alonzo Mann show that his final testimony was also perjured. I can imagine no reasons to commit perjury except to cover up crimes of his own (which must mean the murder of Mary Phagan) or to punish Frank somehow (which is hard to believe, given that Frank had kept him on the payroll despite his repeated petty crimes. Conley should have been incredibly grateful to Frank!)

Unlike Conley, Frank had no criminal record. Yes, he ran a company that was little more than a sweatshop, but that was the law at the time. Oney wonders why there were so many allegations of sexual impropriety against him, but ignores the fact that the witnesses didn't even agree on whether he was a homosexual, a heterosexual paedophile, or a fetishist (and very few people are all of these). Plus most of his accusers were ex-employees who might have carried a grudge. And, while many people claimed to have seen him having illicit liaisons, "no one every came forward admitting to being one of the liaisons".

As best I can tell from Oney, only one of Frank's alleged conquests, a woman named Daisy Hopkins, was ever mentioned by name (Oney, p. 245; it was Conley who gave her name, and Oney, p. 247, shows that Conley knew nothing about her except a name, though one C. Brutus Dalton also mentioned her; Oney, p. 258). A Daisy Hopkins was brought before the court, and she denied any sexual relationship with Frank (Oney, pp. 265-266), though she apparently wasn't a very convincing witness (Oney, p. 268). Still, William Smith, who apparently knew her, later declared that he didn't believe there was such a liaison (Oney, pp. 436-437).

So my conclusion is that it is nearly certain that Jim Conley killed Mary Phagan. Dershowitz in the introduction to Dinnerstein, Dinnerstein himself, F/T, WebFlag, and the Tennessean all agree with this. It is probably impossible to prove beyond reasonable doubt at this stage, but it is clearly the highest probability. And even if Conley were innocent, he was still guilty of perjury, for which he was never tried.
The next highest probability is surely that, despite Jim Conley's behavior in accusing Frank, an unknown person (probably someone known to Jim Conley) committed the crime. In this case, the unknown person must also have had a hold on Conley. (Not unlikely, given Conley's history.) Leo Frank is almost certainly innocent. Even if (perhaps a chance in a thousand) he were guilty, the testimony presented at his trial clearly was not enough for conviction. It wasn't even enough for a mistrial. Judge Roan should have declared him innocent and not even sent the case to the jury. But that would very likely have cost Roan his life (and, very possibly, Frank's as well; he would probably have been lynched before he could get out of the state).
After Alonzo Mann came forward, a first attempt to have Frank cleared failed when, amazingly, some of Mary's living relations objected (F/T, p. 153), but a second appeal succeeded. Frank's name was formally cleared in 1986 (F/T, p. xix), 71 years after he died, an innocent man whose only crime was to be "different." Frank's wife Lucille had remained faithful to him all her life, but died in 1957 without seeing him given the justice he deserved.
Dinnerstein, p. 156, states that "With the Supreme Court so zealous in its defense of civil liberties today, it is extremely unlikely that another Frank case could occur." He wrote that in the days of the Warren Court. But the "convict 'em or else" mentality that motivated so much of what happened in the Frank case persists today, and increasingly the courts and legislatures are re-imposing the sort of "innocence is no excuse" rules that deny appeals not filed in a timely and legally correct way. The old-time singers often added the interjection "Young girls, take warning" to this song. But the real warning may be for us. - RBW

Bibliography

- Dinnerstein: Leonard Dinnerstein, The Leo Frank Case, was originally published by Columbia University Press in 1968 (it began as a doctoral thesis). I use a special edition from "The Notable Trials Library," 1991, which includes Dinnerstein's new preface to a 1987 edition of his book, plus the special article from The Tennessean cited below. Of the books on Mary Phagan cited here, this and Golden are the only one written before Alonzo Mann gave his testimony, so they operate on essentially the same data as was available in 1915. This gives it an interesting perspective in light of what followed. Dinnerstein is also, I think, the volume most interested in the matter of Frank's Judaism, and certainly the one most concerned with how the social unrest caused by urbanization created a climate of xenophobia. (I'm not sure I believe that part; recent indications are that some of the things Dinnerstein blames on culture are in fact biological.) The text of the article from The Tennessean is cited under that name, since it has its own separate pagination.
- F/T: Robert Seitz Frey and Nancy C. Thompson, The Silent and the Damned: The Murder of Mary Phagan and the Lynching of Leo Frank, 1988 (I use the 2002 Cooper Square Press edition). This is, apart from its appendices, the shortest of the three recent books, and perhaps more popular and less scholarly than the others; it has footnotes, but is not nearly as heavily documented as the others. My guess is that it was inspired by the Mann revelations; it claims to be the first book about the Phagan case written after Mann's testimony.
- Oney: Steve Oney, And the Dead Shall Rise: The Murder of Mary Phagan and the Lynching of Leo Frank, 2003 (I use the 2004 Vintage Books edition). This is by far the most detailed book -- in some ways, too detailed, more of a chronicle than an analysis, and much of the detail not really relevant (does it really "matter" that one of those who arranged Frank's lynching had a brother who got in trouble at school?). Sometimes it feels more like a ping-pong match, as pro- and anti-Frank forces gain an advantage. Strangely, Oney never once says who he thinks murdered Mary Phagan. This is the third of the three books I read, and I'm glad of that. It would be too easy to lose the overall thread of the case otherwise.

- Tennessean: The Tennessean magazine, special article, March 7, 1982 edition, which details the evidence given by Alonzo Mann. This article has been reprinted (with separate pagination) in the Notable Trial Library edition of Dinnerstein, from which I have cited it.
- WebFlag: http://tinyurl.com/tbdx-webflag. After this article was almost finished, I found this review of Oney, part of which apparently appeared first in Flagpole magazine and which is in fact much more than a review; it is an analysis of the case almost entirely from scratch. It doesn't really add much new information, but it includes much analysis. The site also includes information gathered since Oney was published, including notably much information on research on members of the lynching party.

Last updated in version 6.1
File: LF20

Mary Rolled the Stone Away
DESCRIPTION: "Mary rolled the stone away Early on a Easter Sunday morning ... Angel came from heaven Mary rolled the stone away" My brother brings the news from Heaven.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (USSealsland01)
KEYWORDS: religious Bible nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
RECORDINGS: Moving Star Hall Singers, "Mary Rolled the Stone Away" (on USSealsland01)
NOTES [51 words]: The Marys find the stone rolled away from the Christ's sepulchre in Matthew 28:1-2, Mark 16:1-2 and John 20:1. Matthew 28:2: "... the angel of the Lord descended from heaven, and came and rolled back the stone from the door ...." [King James]. The current description is based on the USSealsland01 text. - BS
Last updated in version 4.0
File: RcmRTSA

Mary Smith, the Maid of Mountain Plain
DESCRIPTION: "Ye maids of Columbia... I beg your attention and now pity me"; he has been wounded by love. He spells out Mary Smith's name to describe her beauty and virtues. He wishes he were Adam and she Eve. He will wander forever if he can't gain her love.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love rejection wordplay
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation): Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H636, p. 235, "Mary Smith, the Maid of Mountain Plain" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9469
File: HHH636

Mary Thompson
DESCRIPTION: "In Manchester in Lancashire A damsel she did dwell, In service a long time she lived, Till this to her befell"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1910 (Greig/Duncan2)
KEYWORDS: courting homicide servant
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
Mary Vickery and Connelly Donnelly

DESCRIPTION: Mary runs away from home. Her father thinks her dead. When a woman's body is found it is thought to be Mary. Conley is arrested for the murder. A jealous woman swears she saw him do it. He is sentenced to life. Mary returns and clears Conley.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: homicide prison trial jealousy lie return pardon hiding
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 819-820, "Mary Vickery and Connelly Donnelly" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9806
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Return of Mary Vickery

NOTES [42 words]: "Conley Dabney, sentenced to life imprisonment in 1926 for the supposed murder of Mary Vickery at Williamsburg, Ky., was freed when she returned home on Mar 19, 1927, to clear his name" -- from Country Music Sources by Guthrie T Meade Jr, p. 93 - BS
File: Pea819

Mary Was a Bad Girl

DESCRIPTION: Mary, a bad girl, says "I won't." A good girl, the singer says "I will." In school she says "I write." Leaving, she says "Hooray." Courting, she says "a boy." She gets engaged, marries, has a baby who dies (boo, hoo). Her husband dies (hooray). She dies.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1985 (Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)
KEYWORDS: courting wedding childbirth death playparty
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 71, "Mary Was a Bad Girl" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Nuts in May" (tune, per Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)
File: OpGa071

Mary Was a Red Bird

DESCRIPTION: Lullabye. "Mary wore her red dress, red dress, red dress, Mary wore her red dress, All day long," "Mary wore her red ha," "Mary wore her red shoes." Additional verses ask where she got her shoes, groceries, etc. Song concludes, "Mary was a red bird...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry)
KEYWORDS: lullaby bird clothes commerce
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 98-99, "Mary Was a Red Bird" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11588
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Mary Wore Her Red Dress
File: LoSi098
Mary Was a Three-badge Wren
DESCRIPTION: "Mary was a three-badge Wren, Her hair was fair and curly, She joined the Wrens in 1910, just 30 years too early." "As a glamour girl she wished to pass." She tries to snag a sailor (or more), but ends up with someone undesirable; other Wrens are warned
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1987 (Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy)
KEYWORDS: sailor courting clothes derivative warning
FOUND IN: Britain(England)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy, pp. 119-120, "Mary Was a Three-badge Wren" (1 text, tune referenced)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Yankee Doodle" (tune)

Mary With Her Young Son
DESCRIPTION: "Then Mary took her young son, And set him on her knee, Saying, 'My dear son, tell me, Tell me how this world shall be.'" Jesus responds by foretelling his death and resurrection
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (Terry)
KEYWORDS: Jesus religious
FOUND IN: Britain(England)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Bronson 54, "The Cherry Tree Carol" (Item #31 to this song, in the appendix, is this piece under the title "Mary's Question")
Dearmer/VaughnWilliams/Shaw-OxfordBookOfCarols 66, "The Cherry Tree Carol" (1 text (separated into smaller parts, the last being "Mary With Her Young Son"), 4 tunes)
Roud #453
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Cherry Tree Carol" [Child 54]
cf. "Als I Lay Upon a Nith (As I Lay Upon a Night II)" (theme of the young Jesus foretelling his future)
NOTES [191 words]: The earliest extant version of these stanzas is in Sandys's version of "The Cherry Tree Carol," allowing the possibility that they are an original part of that ballad. But it is certainly not necessary to that ballad -- which is, of course, very episodic.
Of the thirty versions of "The Cherry Tree Carol" in Bronson (not all of which have complete texts), only two have this item in its full form, but many more have a brief section in which Joseph asks the unborn baby about the future. This could well have attracted a separate song on the same theme.
Thus it is equally possible that "Mary With Her Young Son" is a broken-off fragment "or" that it is a separate song grafted in. A. L. Lloyd, in his notes to the recording by The Valley Folk, is noncommittal, and Bronson's treatment is equally noncommittal.
There is, of course, no scriptural basis for any of this; although the adult Jesus repeatedly spoke of his future fate, only the Gospel of Luke mentions any foretellings before his ministry, and even that passage (Luke 2:49, "Didn't you realize that I must be in my Father's house?") is dated to the twelfth year of Jesus's life. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.3
File: C054A

Mary Wore Three Links of Chain
DESCRIPTION: Floating religious verses with the chorus, "All my sins been taken away, taken away." Sample verses: "Mary wore three links of chain (x3), Ev'ry link bearing Jesus's name." "I don't know but I've been told (x3) Streets of heaven are paved with gold."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)
KEYWORDS: religious Bible nonballad sin floatingverses
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Mary, Mary, Brummagem Mary

DESCRIPTION: "Mary, Mary, Brummagem Mary, how does your allotment grow? You've 'ad some shy knock through workin' at Kynoch's. Althouh you don't mind we all know. You've never seen Arizona and Texas is not your abode, You're just Mary... what lives up Pairsher street"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1971 (Palmer)

KEYWORDS: home work nonballad derivative

FOUND IN: Britain(England(West))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

ADDITIONAL: Roy Palmer, _The Folklore of Warwickshire_, Rowman and Littlefield, 1976, pp. 149-150, "Mary, Mary, Brummagem Mary" (1 short text, 1 tune)

File: RPFW149A

Mary, Mary, Quite Contrary

DESCRIPTION: "Mary, Mary, quite contrary, How does your garden grow? With silver bells and cockle shells And pretty maids all in a row."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: cf. 1744 (Tommy Thumb's Pretty Song Book, according to Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes)

KEYWORDS: gardening

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (4 citations):

Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 342, "Mary, Mary, Quite Contrary" (1 text)

Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #9, p. 31, "(Mistress Mary)"

Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel, p. 133, "Mary, Mary, Quite Contrary" (1 text)

Dolby-OrangesAndLemons, p. 83, "Mary, Mary, Quite Contrary" (1 text)

Roud #19626

NOTES [93 words]: This is one of those pieces for which a vast variety of explanations has been suggested. The Opies mention several religious explanations, but observe that different denominations give different meanings to the symbols. They also mention a possible connection to Mary Queen of Scots, leading them to add that the "pretty maids" might be the Four Maries of "Mary Hamilton" [Child 173]. Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel also mentioned Mary Queen of Scots, plus Mary Tudor, and finally the Virgin Mary, in which case the garden has something to do with Mary's virginity. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.3

File: 002342
Mary, She Did Dream a Dream
DESCRIPTION: "Mary, she did dream a dream, As she was floating down the stream. When she woke, she gave a sigh, The grey cat kicked out the black cat's eye."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)
KEYWORDS: animal dream fight
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 190, (no title) (1 fragment)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Gray Cat on the Tennessee Farm" (lyrics)
File: ScaNF190

Mary, the Maid of the Don
DESCRIPTION: "Nae mavis nor larkie sang blither than I" but Mary has left the singer and "caused me to roam." "Nae mair I'll herd sheep upon yon hills sae steep But I'll die for my Mary, the maid o' the Don."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan6)
KEYWORDS: love separation nonballad shepherd
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #110, p. 2, "Mary, the Maid of the Don" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan6 1239, "Mary, the Maid of the Don"; Greig/Duncan8 Addenda, "Mary, the Maid of the Don" (6 texts, 7 tunes)
Roud #6265
NOTES [6 words]: This River Don is in Aberdeenshire. - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD61239

Mary, the Pride of Killowen
DESCRIPTION: The singer describes the fine summer night when he emigrated from Coleraine and Mary. He recalls courting her, and says he will never forget the place or the girl He blesses the spot they met.
AUTHOR: Andrew Orr
EARLIEST DATE: 1847 (Derry Standard)
KEYWORDS: love separation emigration
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H26b, p. 250, "Mary, the Pride of Killowen" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13340
NOTES [44 words]: In this particular instance, the song's author Andrew Orr did emigrate (to Australia). Whether the rest of the song is historical is not clear; it's interesting that he wrote at least one other song (Ann o' Drumcroon) with the same plot but a different heroine. - RBW
File: HHH026b

Mary, the Pride of the Shamrock Shore
DESCRIPTION: Henry returns and finds Mary with a squire. The squire is her true love now since her previous sweetheart "is no more." Henry kills the squire in a duel. Mary kills Henry and recognizes him by a private token. She is sentenced to life in jail.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1839 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(699))
KEYWORDS: courting homicide prison fight return lover
Mary's Ass

DESCRIPTION: The singer mentions Mary, "a beautiful lass, And the song I will sing is about Mary's ass." She rode the beast, a gift from her uncle, regularly. At last it falls, knocking Mary off, and dies. It is buried, and the bad smell from the Ass Hole described

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1968
KEYWORDS: bawdy humorous animal
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, pp. 158-159, "Mary's Ass" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #3351
File: MA158

Mary's Mad

DESCRIPTION: "Mary's mad and I am glad And I know what'll please her, A bottle of wine to make her shine and [so-and-so] to (please/squeeze/tease) her."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1962 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)
KEYWORDS: playparty courting
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5, p. 546, "Mary's Mad" (1 short text, 1 tune)
NOTES [16 words]: The current description is all of the Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 fragment. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.1
File: BrS5546

Maryborough Miner, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer describes all the places where he has been digging. At Fitzroy River the boss calls him a loafer, so he burns his office and left. He tells further tall tales, ending "I'm a Maryborough miner, and I'm one of the good old time."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934
KEYWORDS: mining work rambling
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia, pp. 78-79, "The Maryborough Miner" (1 text, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Murrumbidgee Shearer" (tune, theme)
NOTES [134 words]: Fahey's version was collected by A.L. Lloyd, and he suspects Lloyd may have retouched it. The notes to Patterson/Fahey/Seal on "The Murrumbidgee Shearer" make this even more explicit: they declare this to be Lloyd's rewrite of that. Similarly Gwenda Beed Davey and Graham Seal, A Guide to Australian Folklore, Kangaroo Press, 2003, pp. 185-186; they note that it describes an improbably long life for one person, and say that it is Lloyd's production, and that it became controversial at Australian folk festivals as a result.
On p. 195, Davey/Seal report, "In the original song, the shearer has had a chequered career of prospecting for gold, burning the sheds of uncooperative squatters and robbing gold escorts. He finishes up by spending 'ten years on Cockatoo,' Sydney's colonial island prison." - RBW
Last updated in version 4.1
File: FaE078

Maryland Battle Cry, The

DESCRIPTION: "Hark! the trumpet calls to duty, See, our glorious flag unfurled...." "So let the Southerns do as they will, We are for the Union still." The singer declares the southerners "traitors" and "rebels" and calls Marylanders to defend the flag

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 2008 (Cohen)
KEYWORDS: patriotic nonballad Civilwar
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, p. 175, "The Maryland Battle Cry" (1 text)
File: CAFS1175

Maryland Martyrs, The

DESCRIPTION: "They bore them to a gloomy cell And barred them from the light Because they boldly dared to tell The people what was right." The singer urges all to support the cause of "Freedom," and calls their Unionist captors "despots"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 2008 (Cohen); 19th Century (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets)
KEYWORDS: Civilwar political prison
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 173-174, "The Maryland Martyrs" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #C104, p. 191, "The Maryland Martyrs" (2 references)
File: CAFS1173

Maryland, My Home

DESCRIPTION: "Sweet Maryland, thy groves are green, And sparkling are thy rills... Though far away I plow the seas... My heart with fondness clings to thee, Sweet Maryland, my home!" The singer looks forward to seeing his home once again

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 2008 (Cohen); 19th Century (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets)
KEYWORDS: home nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, p. 176, "Maryland, My Home" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #C106, p. 191, "Maryland, My Home" (1 reference)
File: CAFS176A

Maryland! My Maryland

DESCRIPTION: "The despot's heel is on thy shore, Maryland, my Maryland." The state's heroic history is recalled; the singer wants and expects her to join the Confederacy: "Huzza! She spurns the northern scum! She breathes! She burns! She'll come!"

AUTHOR: Words: James Ryder Randall
EARLIEST DATE: 1861
KEYWORDS: Civilwar patriotic nonballad derivative
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
April, 1861 - Clashes between Massachusetts troops and the residents of Baltimore
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (13 citations):
Jackson-PopularSongsOfNineteenthCenturyAmerica, pp. 130-133, "Maryland! My Maryland" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 168-172, "Maryland, My Maryland" (2 texts plus a broadside pring, one being Randall's original and another a less Confederate version perhaps by Septimus Winner)
Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 70-72, "Maryland, My Maryland" (1 text, 1 tune); also p. 73, "Answer to 'My Maryland'" (1 text, a parody of the preceding); p. 73, "Kentucky! O Kentucky!" (1 text, a parody of the preceding)
Silber-SoldierSongsAndHomeFrontBalladsOfCivilWar, pp. 60-61, "Maryland, My Maryland" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hill-PoemsAndSongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 195-197, "My Maryland" (1 text)
Krythe-SamplerOfAmericanSongs 9, pp. 142-149, "Maryland, My Maryland" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, pp. 355-357, "Maryland, My Maryland -- (O Tannenbaum, O Tannenbaum!); Lauriger Horatius")
Heart-Songs, p. 456, "Maryland! My Maryland" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #16, "My Maryland" (1 text)
Colonial-Dames-AmericanWarSongs, pp.126-127, "Maryland! My Maryland!!" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #C107, p. 191, "Maryland, My Maryland" (6 references); also sundry parodies on p. 95, mostly titled, "Maryland, My Maryland"; see also "My Maryland" on p. 104
ST RJ19130 (Full)
Roud #V19764
RECORDINGS:
Harry Macdonough, "Maryland, My Maryland" (CYL: Edison 2033, c. 1897)
Tandy Mackenzie, "Maryland, My Maryland" (Columbia 80320, n.d.)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "O Tannenbaum (Oh Christmas Tree)" (tune) and references there
cf. "General Lee's Wooing" (tune, subject)
cf. "My Delaware" (form)
cf. "My Normandy" (tune, in some printings)
SAME TUNE:
Answer to "My Maryland" ("The Rebel horde is on thy shore") (Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, p. 73; Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, p. 95)
Kentucky! O Kentucky! ("John Morgan's foot is on thy shore") (Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, p. 73)
Our Maryland (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 361 -- one of four "Maryland, My Maryland" rewrites on pp. 360-361, all the others being titled "Maryland, My Maryland")

Husbandman! O Husbandman! ("Thou art the tiller of the soil, Husbandman! O Husbandman!") (by A. P. Knapp) (Albert P. Knapp, _Grange Songster_, 1915, p. 9)
To Labor ("Should you complain who feed the world? Who clothe the world, who house the world?") (by Charlotte Perkins Gilman) (Foner, p. 177)
See also the entries under "O Tannenbaum (Oh Christmas Tree)"

NOTES [663 words]: James Ryder Randall was a native of Baltimore. At the time of the Civil War he was teaching English at Poydras College in Louisiana. He wrote this poem on April 26, 1861, after hearing of the Baltimore riot; the piece was published in a New Orleans paper on May 5. Randall hoped it would help encourage Maryland to secede.
Randall's expectations were disappointed; Maryland never joined the Confederacy. The Union could not possibly allow it; the loss of Maryland would place Washington inside Confederate territory. The federal government moved quickly to prevent the state's succession. One side effect of this was the riots in Baltimore that inspired "Maryland! My Maryland."

Chances are, however, that Maryland would not have seceded. Baltimore favored the rebellion, but the rest of the state seems to have been Unionist. A fair number of Maryland citizens went south -- Lee's army contained a Maryland battalion -- but more served in the Northern armies. The reference to the "patriotic gore / that flecked the streets of Baltimore" is, of course, to the Baltimore riots. "Carroll" is Charles Carroll, one of the signers of the Declaration of Independence. I believe "Howard's warlike thrust" refers to Major John Eager Howard, who led the handful of troops who cut their way out of a British trap at the Battle of Camden (1780).
It should be noted that the sung version of this song does not quite match the written version. In Randall's poem, the internal refrain was not "Maryland, my Maryland"; he used this only in the final line. The internal phrase was simply "Maryland." This was expanded to fit the tune. For a time the poem was sung to the tune "Manormandie," but this was not a success. The "O Tannenbaum" tune is said to have been fitted by a Baltimore girl, Jennie Cary.

Even though Randall's authorship was widely known, a few other names also circulated. Wharton's War Songs and Poems of the Southern Confederacy, for instance, credits it to Lamar Fontaine. Dichter and Shapiro think that this is because Randall sent a copy of the poem to a friend shortly after writing it, and the other distributed it without Randall's knowledge. The apparent first edition is anonymous; by 1862, printings circulated which had Randall's name printed and declared that they were the only authorized versions.

There is a long chapter on the song, and on Randall, in E. Lawrence Abel, Singing the New Nation: How Music Shaped the Confederacy, 1861-1865, Stackpole, 2000 (chapter 3, pp. 67-80). Apparently Randall, after hearing of the Baltimore riots, flew into extreme agitation. He couldn't sleep, and couldn't sit still, and eventually cranked out this poem (Abel, p. 68). His students urged him to publish. Jenny Cary, who set the tune, was a daughter of a prominent Maryland family with Confederate sympathies, and her parents hosted a glee club. So it was easy for her to make her tune popular -- although the sheet music was published anonymously (Abel, pp. 70-71). The Carys eventually went south to avoid the political fallout.

Randall after the war became a journalist. He continued to write poetry, but was remembered only for "My Maryland" -- which he resented (Abel, pp. 78-79); it made it harder for him to get recognition for his other work. Nonetheless, his wife insisted on naming one of his daughters "Maryland," so that she could call the girl "My Maryland" (Abel, p. 79). He died in 1908 (so Studwell/Schueneman and his entry in the Dictionary of American Biography; Abel says 1907), apparently of pneumonia (Abel, pp. 79-80). "My Maryland" was made the state song in 1939 (Abel, p. 80). - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1
File: RJ19130

Mashering a Doo a Day

DESCRIPTION: Mashering a doo a day Mashering a doo a daddie, O, Mashering a doo a day"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan8)

KEYWORDS: drink

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Greig/Duncan8 1752, "Mashering a Doo a Day" (1 fragment, 1 tune)

Roud #13529

NOTES [122 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan8 fragment. Greig/Duncan8: "Mrs Gillespie does not remember the song, but thinks it may be 'Whisky, punch, and toddy O' [possibly [Greig/Duncan4] 918 'Come All Ye Young Men That Want a Wife' which includes the words 'rum punch and toddy O']. The refrain partly occurs in [[Greig/Duncan7] 1378 'Come Ye Inksmen' B ['The Old Maid's Song' (I)]. [This] is a refrain, and after each verse ends with the last line of that verse." - BS

I strongly suspect her memory is just a little off, and she is remembering a version of "Whisky in the Jar (The Irish Robber A) [Laws L13A]/The Irish Robber B (McCollister) [Laws L13B]." There are versions of that with a chorus very similar to this. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.5

File: GrD81752

Maskin' Rung, The

DESCRIPTION: A maid puts off a young man by saying she'll meet him that night in the woods.
She makes a "maid" from a masking rung, branches, and an old widow's clothes. This "maid" smiles but does not speak. When he lifts her skirt he sees he has been fooled.

Author: unknown
Earliest Date: 1828 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2)
Keywords: courting clothes trick
Found In: Britain(Scotland(Aber,Bord))
References:
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #173, p. 2, "The Maskin Rung"; #177, p. 2, "The Maskin Rung"; #153, p. 3, ("I wonder what does ail my love") (2 texts plus 1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan2 323, "The Maskin' Rung" (8 texts, 6 tunes)
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 124, "Hir Hands War Made o' Willan Wands"; Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2, pp. 190-194, "The Masking Rung" (2 texts)
DT, MASKNRNG*
Roud #5868
Cross-References:
cf. "The Battle of Harlaw" (tune of the chorus, according to Greig/Duncan2)
Alternate Titles:
The Masculine Rung
The Holland Green
The Hollin It Grows Green
Notes: Greig: "'masking rung' is defined as a rod for stirring malt in the mash-tub." A number of the Greig/Duncan2 texts have a title taken from the chorus: "For the holland grows, the holland grows, And the holland it grows green. There's nae a tree in a' the wood Like the birk and the holland green." - BS

---

Mason Laddie, The

Description: "Leaning oer a window ...I spied a mason laddie who gave my heart a wound." She compares masons to ministers, millers, ploughmen, cobbiers, weavers, and smiths, and prefers "my bonnie mason laddie" to each.

Author: unknown
Earliest Date: 1843 (Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong)
Keywords: love work nonballad
Found In: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
References:
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #40, pp. 1-2, "The Bonnie Mason Laddie" (1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan3 465, "The Mason Laddie" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 119, "The Mason Laddie"
Roud #5883
Cross-References:
cf. "Johnny Lad" (tune, per Greig/Duncan3)
cf. "Sandy Ower the Lea" (tune, per Whitelaw)
cf. "The Masons" (subject: praise of masons)
cf. "The Bonnie Mason Laddie" (subject: praise of masons)
Notes: Greig's text fragment is the first and last verses from Whitelaw's Book of Scottish Song. - BS

---

Mason's Bonny Daughter, The

Description: "The mason's bonny daughter, The mason's lassie braw, Hey the mason's bonny daughter, She's stown me heart awa'"

Author: unknown
Earliest Date: 1914 (Greig/Duncan4)
Keywords: love beauty
Found In: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
Mason's Daughter, The

DESCRIPTION: Isabel refuses to marry her steward. He drugs and seduces her. She tries to kill her baby in a well. He rescues it. When Isabel admires the baby the steward reveals that it is hers. She murders the baby. The steward cries when she was arrested.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1826 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1)
KEYWORDS: love seduction homicide childbirth baby servant
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber,Bord))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
  Greig/Duncan2 196, "Fair Isabel" (1 text, 2 tunes)
  Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1 39, "The Mason's Dochter" (1 text)
Roud #3850
ALTERNATE TITLES:
In Fair London City
File: GrD2196

Masons, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer sees a bridge where masons are working. She praises their work and would give up her fortune to wed a mason. She admires smiths but "if it had not been for oor mason lads ye would all died of cold." She admires soldiers, printers and tailors.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: work nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
  Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #40, p. 1, "The Mason Lads" (1 text)
  Greig/Duncan3 463, "The Masons" (5 texts, 5 tunes)
Roud #5644
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Bonnie Mason Laddie" (subject: praise of masons)
cf. "The Mason Laddie" (subject: praise of masons)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Freemasons
From the City to the New Toon
From the Seatown to the Newtown
NOTES [14 words]: Greig/Duncan3: "'Heard at Aberdour fifty-three years ago.'" [counting from 1909?] - BS
Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD3463

Massa's in the Cold, Cold Ground

DESCRIPTION: "Round de meadows am a ringing, De darkeys’ mournful song.... Down in de cornfield Hear dat mournful sound: All de darkeys am a weeping, Massa’s in de cold, col ground." The "darkeys" loved him because he was so kind; the singer cries and plays banjo

AUTHOR: Stephen C. Foster
EARLIEST DATE: 1852 (sheet music)
KEYWORDS: slave death burial
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
  Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 149, "A Medley" (1 text, 1 tune, starting with the chorus of "Sweet Adeline," then "The Old Oaken Bucket," "In the Evening by the Moonlight," "Rufus Rastus Johnson
Massacre of Glencoe, The

DESCRIPTION: Glencoe is wakened by cannon. "Naked mothers were shot with their babes as they ran, For the English had risen to murder the clan." Five hundred McDonalds are killed including Flora's Donald. She dies of grief. "The pride of Glencoe" are buried together.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1867 (broadside, Bodleian 2806 c.14(26))

KEYWORDS: battle burial death Scotland

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Feb 13, 1692 - The Massacre of Glencoe

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan1 115, "The Massacre of Glencoe" (2 texts, 1 tune)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 c.14(26). "Flora and Donald" or "The Massacre of Glencoe" ("O dark lour'd the night on the wide distant heather"), J. Harkness (Preston), 1840-1866
Murray, Mu23-y1:082, "Flora and Donald" or "The Massacre of Glencoe," James Lindsay (Glasgow), 19C
NLScotland, L.C.Fol.178.A.2(021), "The Massacre of Glencoe," James Lindsay (Glasgow), c.1856

NOTES [3837 words]: Greig/Duncan1: ".. 13 February 1692 ...."

When Maclain of Glencoe, a MacDonald clan subdivision, was late in swearing loyalty to the crown, William III's forces, augmented by the MacDonald enemy Campbells killed 38 in Glencoe and forced "countless others into the snow-topped Scottish mountains (where many died)."

(source: "British Timeline: Massacre of Glencoe 1692" at the BBC site). - BS

The Massacre of Glencoe remains controversial to this day. The reason is the complicated set of circumstances which led to it. In some ways it was just another case of clan-on-clan warfare (Campbells versus MacDonalds), and by no means the most bloody. But it ended up with a taint of royal favoritism and injustice -- and a deserved reputation as a "brutal crime" (Willson, p. 467). The story, according to Thomson, p. xv, began "with the violent death of a Campbell chief in 1296[..]he feud then went on for about 450 years. There were numerous clashes and cullings inflicted by both sides, among which the incident at Glencoe in 1692 just happens to have been the best publicised."

It became known because King William III (William of Orange) approved it. The problem was that William III, who had come to power by ousting James II, was shaky on the throne. (The "Glorious Revolution" which brought him to the throne had happened as recently as 1689; see the notes to songs such as "Lilliburlero" and "The Vicar of Bray.") Scotland in particular was restive, and the Highlands most restive of all. "The Jacobite Rising of 1689 had left the Highlands in turmoil. The government hurriedly built a new garrison fortress at Fort William, at the head of Loch Linhe, and troops were deployed at several other strategic points. These were men King William urgently needed in Flanders, where he was embroiled in a war with France. How was the problem to be settled?" (Magnusson, pp. 522-523).

"It is probable that the government, and especially the Joint-Secretary, Dalrymple, hoped that the recalcitrance of the Highland chiefs would provide a pretext for a crusade against them" (Mackie, p. 251).

"In the spring and summer of 1691 there were signs of unrest among the clans of the north-west, who had hopes of a French invasion; and the government distributed several thousands of pounds of bribes to keep them quiet, at the same time ordering the suspected chiefs to take an oath of allegiance before the fixed date of New Year's Day 1692. In anticipation of widespread refusals 'letters of fire and sword' were drawn up in the long accustomed form, ordering wholesale ravaging..." joined in virtually every raid southwards or eastwards since Alastair MacColla first mobilised the Glencoe. "He had spend some time acquiring polish in Paris.... The Glencoe MacDonalds had Thomson, pp. 84-85, takes a very low view of Alastair MacIain MacDonald, the twelfth chief of Glengarry being the other -- not to take the oath on time.) MacLean, p. 143, claims that he was one of only two chiefs -- the powerful MacDonell of

with the Campbells, not true loyalty to the Stuarts. And -- their chieftain was late to submit.

behave of Charles I (Prebble, p. 48) -- though Prebble thinks this was because of the usual rivalry with the Campbells, not understood Highland issues -- he was impatient with the attitudes of the chiefs to William's sovereignty and did not appreciate their values and way of life.... To negotiate with the chiefs he rightly chose a Highlander who could go among them but unwisely chose a man whom nobody could ever begin to trust. The Earl of Breadalbane had never been known to do anything straightforwardly...."

(Tarbat's career was fascinating, incidentally -- he had gotten in trouble in the reign of Charles II, had wormed his way into favor with James II, but then managed to gain the trust of William Ill also; Prebble, p. 85. Talk about slick....)

Prebble, p. 87, describes what happened this way: "Joining in the clamour of voices and the prodigal expenditure of ink there came the Earl of Breadalbane, whom few men trusted but all credited with a unique knowlege of Highland robbers and murderers, being descended from a long line of them himself. He had no original proposal. He blandly took Tarbat's, with this difference -- he should treat with the chiefs, he should distribute the money among them. He had a plausible tongue, and he persuaded the King... to give him a commission 'to meet, treat and correspond with any of the Highlanders in order to reduce them to submission and obedience'. But if few men in the Lowlands could be found to trust the Earl of Breadalbane there were even fewer in the Highlands, and for the moment his commission was no more than paper in his pocket. He had not, in any case, been sent the money, and felt no obligation to move until he was."

The continued Jacobite threat (leading to the Battle of the Boyne) made William especially worried about Scotland. He wanted the place pacified, whatever it took. And the battle of the Haughs of Cromdale in 1690 (the real one, not the fictional story in the song of that name) inclined him to be forceful; Cromdale gave the government forces the initiative they had largely lost after Killiecrankie. In practice, it hardly matters whether Stair preferred to use the carrot or the stick. He prepared both -- and in the end used both. "Tarbat's plan had miscarried because Stair was not the right man to carry it out, but the unity of the band of chiefs was gone" (Mitchison, p. 287). "By the end of the year it was clear that nearly all the clan chiefs were prepared to swear the required oath of allegiance" (Magnusson, p. 522). (It may not have been a sign that their allegiance to the Jacobite cause was waning; MacLean, p. 143, notes that "From his exile in France King James at the last moment authorized the chiefs to swear allegiance to his Dutch son-in-law.")

What happened next is somewhat unclear. What is certain is that the MacDonalds of Glencoe were not liked. Their chief "had fought at Killiecrankie and his men were reputed to be as troublesome as any in the Highlands" (Clark, p. 269). It sounds as if they raided Campbell lands on their way back from Killiecrankie, where of course they fought for the Stuarts (Prebble, pp. 71-72).

"The MacDonals were thus still seen as semi-barbarian and the Glencoe branch of the family was particularly unpopular for its frequent raids on Glenlyon and Inverary" (Thomson, p. 83). "By the end of the sixteenth century it was agreed that the men of Glencoe were the most incorrigible and troublesome of the gallows herd, and had their land been as desirable and as accessible as Clan Gregor's they too might have come under the Crown's proscription" (Prebble, p. 45). The chief himself had already been imprisoned once, and was accused of executing some of his own men -- a severe crime by Highland standards (Prebble, p. 57). Plus, they had fought with Montrose on behalf of Charles I (Prebble, p. 48) -- though Prebble thinks this was because of the usual rivalry with the Campbells, not true loyalty to the Stuarts. And -- their chieftain was late to submit. (MacLean, p. 143, claims that he was one of only two chiefs -- the powerful MacDonell of Glengarry being the other -- not to take the oath on time.)

Thomson, pp. 84-85, takes a very low view of Alastair Maclain MacDonald, the twelfth chief of Glencoe. "He had spend some time acquiring polish in Paris.... The Glencoe MacDonalds had joined in virtually every raid southwards or eastwards since Alastair MacColla first mobilised the MacDonalds in 1645....

"Numerous mysteries still surround the massacre, not least with regard to the behavior of the 12th Chief. [H]e had been accused of murdering some of his own men. He had been arrested in 1673 and imprisoned at Inveraray but then escaped." [Prebble, p. 58, says that no one knows how he pulled this off, but notes that it caused quite a stir.]

Thomson continues, "The other mystery about Alastair Maclain is why he made such a mess of his capitulation. He as an experienced campaigner and not a stupid man. Soon after the end of August 1691 he must have received the offer of pardon extended to all Highlanders by William of Orange as long as they reported to their local sheriff by 1 January of the following year. He knew that for him it meant a trip down to Inveraray, yet he left everything to the last minute and then reported to the wrong town, Fort William.... Then after a slow midwinter journey from Fort William to Inveraray he arrived too late and because it was the new year holiday had to wait another three days before being allowed to sign. Since the Sheriff, Colin Campbell of Ardkinglas, had been a heavy recent sufferer from Glencoe depredations it was not surprising that he made Glencoe sweat it out." MacLean, p. 143, agrees that Glencoe's delay was "partly from dilatoriness and partly through the inclemency of the weather." Few other authorities are so willing to blame Glencoe. Clark, p. 269, says that he arrived late "by accident."

Magnusson, p. 523, declares, "By an extraordinary series of mishaps, Alasdair Maclain Macdonald of Glencoe had missed the deadline for taking the oath of binding loyalty to King William. He was one of the many chieftains who had waited for formal permission from 'the king across the water' to take the oath, which permission did not arrive in the Highlands until 28 December. With time running out fast, Macdonald set out at once and presented himself at the newly-built government fortress at Fort William on 31 December. But there he was told that the military commander could not accept the oath -- only the sheriff at Inverary could do that. Macdonald now had to make the freezing, ninety-five kilometre journey... carrying a helpful explanatory letter from the commander at Fort William. On the way he was stopped by a party of grenadiers who refused to accept the validity of the letter and held him for twenty-four hours. By the time he reached Inverary the deadline had passed.... His oath was forwarded to Edinburgh, but the government lawyers refused to accept responsibility for it."

"Some very underhanded dealings by the clerks of the Privy Council meant that the Council had not been officially informed that Glencoe had taken the oath; and Stair, who had been informed, stuck to it that all that mattered was that the time limit had been passed" (Mitchison, p. 287). And so the government decided to use Glencoe as an example: they "were a much softer target [than the other chiefs who had not sworn], living in scattered huts at the foot of a glen which could easily be blocked at both ends. According to Dalrymple, they were also 'the only popish clan in the kingdom, and it will be popular to take severe course with them'; in fact, they were probably Episcopalian, if anything. But they were the ideal victims for a terrible and symbolic act of punishment to frighten everyone else into submission" (Magnusson, p. 523). (The statement that the Glencoe sept was Episcopalian is probably based on the fact that they were part of the Highland Host of 1678 that tried to convert the Lowlands from Calvinism to episcopacy; Prebble, p. 59. However, a Catholic sept might well have supported episcopacy against Presbyterianism; Prebble, p. 34, agrees with the claim that the MacDonalds were were Catholic.)

The glen was indeed a trap: "Running east to west along the northern border of Argyll, and eight miles in length, [the vale of Glencoe] is a deep scar left by the agony of Creation. It is an arm bent at the elbow, with sinews of quartz and muscles of granite. It is both fortress and trap, for the only natural entrances are at either end -- across Rannoch Moor in the east and by Loch Levenside in the west, and the high passes to the north and south lead ignorant men to higher hills only. Before the building of a road the Rannoch gate itself was frequently closed by winter snows and summer storms...."

"Only the people of Glencoe, and the broken men of Clan Gregor who hid on its fringe, knew the paths across Rannoch.... The northern wall of the glen is a rippling, saw-toothed escarpment called Aonach Eagach, the Notched Ridge. It is three thousand feet and more in height, and unbroken except in the west where it twists sharply toward Loch Leven, dips, and rises again.... At the eastern end of Aonach Eagach is the only path to Glencoe from the north, a narrow, crooked path that climbs cautiously from the head of Loch Leven... It is rightly called The Devil's Staircase.... [O]pposite the Devil's Staircase [stands] Lairig Gartain, the green pass to Glen Etive in the south, and this too is no escape from or entrance to Glencoe...." (Prebble, pp. 19-20).

It was neither a large nor a productive territory, which never could field more than 150 swords, and so presumably never had more than about 500 people (Prebble, p. 27). The population seems to have been significantly less than that in 1689, even though the land was good (Prebble, p. 29). The glen did support about a thousand cattle, a major source of food for the winter (Prebble, pp. 30-31). There was no central keep or defensive fortification of any kind (Prebble, p. 28).

Little is known of the history of the MacDonalds of Glencoe. Although Alastair MacDonald was said to be the twelfth chief, we have no list; the number may be wrong (Prebble, p. 34). Indeed, Alastair is almost the only chief about whom we know anything: "He was born late in the third decade of the [seventeenth] century, with the red hair of his family, and he grew to an extraordinary height, six feet seven inches it was said. In his youth he went to Paris, where the sons of Highland chiefs were often sent to lacquer their splendid savagery and pride.... The death of his father brought him home in 1650" (Prebble, p. 34).

"[Alastair MacDonald] took a wife from among the Keppoch MacDonalds who, living to the north of Loch Leven, were the Glencoe men's constant companions in raiding and in war. By her he had two sons, John who would succeed him, and Alasdair Og, Alexander the Younger, a man of eager spirits and a hot temper. There was also at least one daughter, of whom little is known but her existence. John's wife was the daughter of the tacksman of Achtriachan, but Alasdair Og's came from outside the glen. She was Sarah Campbell, daughter of Campbell of Lochnoll, great-granddaughter of a Breadalbane Campbell, and niece of the Glenlyon Campbell who would one day come to cut her husband's throat" (Prebble, p. 35).

How much William of Orange knew about the plan is uncertain; Clark, p. 269, says that Dalrymple "laid before the king an order for their extirpation. It is probable that the king did not read it: we know that he often signed papers so hurriedly that he did not know their contents." But whether he agreed with the idea or not, "his signature is still to be seen on the paper" (Clark, p. 269). The sept of Glencoe was to be destroyed.

"Hamilton [the commander of Fort William]... passed on the orders to Major Duncanson of the Earl of Argyll's regiment on 12 February 1692: '...pursuant to the commander in chief's orders for putting into execution the service against the rebels in Glencoe the orders are that none be spared'. "That same day Duncanson wrote to Captain Robert Campbell of Glenlyon... 'You are hereby ordered to fall upon the rebels, the MacDonalds of Glencoe and to put all to the sword under seventy. You are to have a special care that the old fox and his sons upon no account escape your hands. This you are to put in execution at 5 of the clock precisely.' Thus, like so many war crimes over the centuries, the guilt was spread thinly from top to bottom" (Thomson, p. 85. MacLean, p. 145, has a copy of the written order).

Campbell, being a Campbell, had a grudge against the MacDonalds anyway, and he was not the sort to show mercy: "Captain Robert Campbell of Glenlyon, a kinsman of the Earl of Breadalbane... was sixty years old, an inveterate gambler, and in a notoriously hard-drinking age he drank harder than most" (Magnusson, p. 524).

The way the attack was carried out was particularly odious. The day before, "Robert Campbell actually dined with the head of the sept, who was totally unaware of the plot about to be murderously carried out" (Fry/Fry, p. 180). "Rather more than a hundred soldiers from Fort William, most of them highlanders of Argyll's regiment, were quartered on the valley. After living amicably with their hosts for more than a week they set about the work of massacre" (Clark, p. 269).

"[Campbell's] obedience [to the order for massacre] is even less remarkable when we remember that it was mainly the Glencoe MacDonalds who had caused his ruination by so many raids on his farms. They had also recently burned down the castle of Achallader, south of Glencoe, which belonged to his cousin, Campbell of Glenorchy. What is more surprising -- and this is the main reason why Robert Campbell's reputation has remained so black -- is that if he was aware of the purpose of his expedition to Glencoe for the ten days between arriving there and receiving his final orders, how could he bear to enjoy the MacDonalds' hospitality to hypocritically for all that time? This dishonesty was made even more objectionable by the fact that his own niece was married to one of Alastair Maclain's sons and was living in the glen" (Thomson, p. 86).

"At about five in the morning the next day the Campbells rose quietly and crept toward the homes of the Macdonalds, and in a few swift minutes slaughtered thirty-eight people, including two women and a child of six" (Fry/Fry, p. 180).

The only good news is that the massacre was not as complete as intended. "It was a botched affair -- the passes were to have been closed by Argyll's followers and by troops from Fort William, but many of the victims got through in spite of the bad weather that the high mountains bring down upon the narrow glen" (Mitchison, p. 287). "It was snowing hard, and additional contingents from Fort William and Ballachulish who were intended to block off the escape routes did not arrive in time.

"At five in the morning, two of Glenlyon's officers burst into the house of 'the old fox' at Carnoch and shot him as he was getting out of bed. The sound of gunfire there, and in another house at Achtriachtan, alerted the rest of the Macdonalds, who ran, half-naked, for the icy sanctuary of the hills. Both of Alasdair Maclain Macdonald's sons, and his baby grandson, escaped. Nevertheless, at least thirty-eight of the clan -- men, women, and children -- were systematically slaughtered; many others died in the raging snowstorm" (Magnusson, pp. 524-525).

"Parties of soldiers went from cottage to cottage, slaughtering the sleeping MacDonalds and setting light to their houses. Maclain himself was shot by one of his guests of the night before. A Campbell soldier gnawed the rings from Lady Glencoe's fingers with his teeth. A child of six, who clung, begging for mercy, to Glenlyon's knees, was promptly dispatched. As the massacre proceeded, snow began to fall. Some of the inhabitants of the glen were able to escape in the confusion. Others died in the snow" (MacLean, pp. 144-146).

"The final mystery about Glenlyon is that, given the fact that he did so totally deceive the unsuspecting MacDonalds... why did he not do a better job of exterminating them? ... He had not obeyed his orders very thoroughly; indeed, he had left people alive who could act as witnesses of the way he had behaved. And he managed to lose three of his own men as well... Of the roughly 150 men who took part in the massacre, under 10 per cent were Campbells, but these included the commanding officer, two junior officers and a corporal" (Thomson, p. 86).

"Such was the public outcry that the Scottish parliament was forced to react when it met in March 1693. A committee was appointed to look into the Massacre, but its report was not published and nothing was done. Two years later, as public revulsion showed no signs of abating, a royal commission was appointed to examine the chain of events leading up to the events at Glencoe. It published its report a month later, in June 1695. This time there was no cover-up: the Massacre had been an act of murder, and the government was condemned for having 'barbarously killed men under trust'. There had to be a scapegoat; the blame was laid squarely at the door of Dalrymple, who resigned his office as secretary of states, unrepentant but totally discredited" (Magnusson, p. 525).

"In due course, however, Stair was rewarded with an earldom, while Campbell of Glenlyon was promoted to colonel" (MacLean, p. 147).

"The earl of Breadalbane, who had acted with [Dalrymple/Stair], was charged with high treason, but never brought to trial. That was all that was done to punish the offenders" (Clark, p. 270).

William III "attempted to deny prior knowledge of the plot, but the documents showed otherwise and he was never trusted again in Scotland" (Fry,Fry, p. 180).

"In its immediate object terrorism succeeded, as it usually does. The resistant chiefs made their peace at once. Within a fortnight of the slaughter Colonel Hill had occupied Glengarry and Castle Eilean Donan, and was expecting the submission even of McNeill of Barra. But though the clans yielded to the threat of force the basic cause of discontent in the growth of Campbell power remained.

"William's government to the end of his reign rested on uncertain foundations. Jacobitism remained an open, or openable, question far longer in his northern kingdom than in England" (Mitchison, p. 288).

"The general execration of the deed helped to build up the British sense of justice and humanity. There were still to be scenes of cruelty in the Highlands as long as the Stuarts called their friends to arms; but never again were the worst methods of frontier warfare combined with the worst methods of secret police" (Clark, p. 270).

"Despite William's concessions, Scotland was never reconciled to his rule, and bitterness in England was greatly increased by a commercial failure in 1799" (Willson, p. 467).

It will be observed that the song bears almost no resemblance to the actual massacre: The first shots were not fired by artillery, and the casualties in the song are exaggerated more than tenfold. You almost wonder if the song might not be about another clan-on-clan massacre. Except -- it blames it all on the English.... - RBW

Bibliography

- Fry/Fry: Peter and Fiona Somerset Fry,The History of Scotland, 1982 (I use the 1995 Barnes & Noble edition)
- MacLean: Fitzroy MacLean,A Concise History of Scotland, Beekman House, 1970
- Prebble: John Prebble,Glencoe, Martin Secker & Warburg, 1966 (I use the 1968 Penguin edition)
- Thomson: Oliver Thomson,The Great Feud: The Campbells & The MacDonalds, revised Massacre of Ta Phairshon, Ta

DESCRIPTION: "Phairshon (MacPherson) swore a feud Against the Clan MacTavish And marched into their land...." His small force quickly disperses to chase cattle. He encounters his rival; they exchange insults, and Phairshon is killed

AUTHOR: Aytoun and Martin?

EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Ford); reputedly composed 1844

KEYWORDS: feud death humorous

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 287-290, "Ta Massacre of Ta Phairshon" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13100

NOTES [14 words]: Said to be based on an extended party joke, and with about that level of quality. - RBW

File: FVS287

Massacre of the Whole of the Passengers and Part of the Crew of the Sea Horse, The DESCRIPTION: "You landsmen and you seamen bold, Attention give to me, While I a tragedy unfold Upon the briney sea." Sailors on the "Sea Horse," from Australia, drug and murder the passengers and crew in order to take the gold, but another ship captures them

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (Anderson-FarewellToOldEngland); Anderson dates his broadside c. 1854

KEYWORDS: drugs homicide ship gold

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Anderson-FarewellToOldEngland, pp. 199-200, "The Massacre of the Whole of the Passengers and Part of the Crew of the Sea Horse" (1 text)
Roud #V41926

File: AnFa199

Master Kilby

DESCRIPTION: "In the heat of the day When the sun shines so freely, There I met Master Kilby" and asks where Kilby is bound. He is going west to Nancy, "the fairest of girls" He would give anything he could gain for her

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Cecil Sharp collection)

KEYWORDS: love courting travel

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 60, "Master Kilby" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1434

NOTES [50 words]: This refers to "King William." This would seem to mean William IV (reigned 1830-1837); the language is too modern for William III (reigned 1689-1702). Admittedly the song appears to have been collected just once, so it could have been modernized, But it doesn't feel like a seventeenth century song. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: KaCr060
Master McGrath

DESCRIPTION: The great Irish greyhound wins the Waterloo Cup, beating Rose, "the pride of all England." (The two dogs discuss their respective countries. The owners bet large sums. The Irish celebrate the fact that their dog was better than an English dog.)

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: racing dog gambling
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1868, 1869, 1871 - Years in which Master McGrath, a hound belonging to Lord Lurgan, won the Waterloo Cup
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (7 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H161c, pp. 32-33, "A Ballad of Master M'Grath" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hodgart-FaberBookOfBallads, p. 215, "A ballad of Master McGrath" (1 text)
OLochlann-IrishStreetBallads 33, "Master McGrath" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hayward-UlsterSongsAndBalladsOfTheTownAndCountry, pp. 61-62, "A Ballad of Master McGrath" (1 text)
Behan-IrelandSings, #49, "Master McGrath" (1 text, 1 tune, modified)
DT, MASMCGR*
Richard Hayward, Ireland Calling (Glasgow,n.d.), p. 16, "The Ballad of Master McGrath" (text, music and reference to Decca F-2604 recorded Oct 4, 1931)
Roud #3041
NOTES [24 words]: The date and master id (GB-3359) for Hayward's record is provided by Bill Dean-Mcatt, MPhil. compiler of the Scottish National Discography. - BS
Last updated in version 3.2
File: Hodg215

Master of the Sheepfold, The

DESCRIPTION: Cho.: "The Master guards the sheepfold bin/Comes and calls, is my sheep brung in?/And he's calling...for them all to be gathering in." The Master calls the sheep; the shepherd says some are lost, but the rest will come. The Master goes out and gathers

AUTHOR: Sarah Pratt McLean Greene
EARLIEST DATE: 1986 (recording, Art Thieme)
LONG DESCRIPTION: Cho.: "The Master guards the sheepfold bin/Comes and calls, is my sheep brung in?/And he's calling, calling...for them all to be gathering in" The Master calls the sheep; the shepherd answers that some are wan, weathered, lost or good-for-nothing, but the rest will come. The Master goes out on the wind and rain path, lets down the bars to the sheepfold, and gently calls the sheep to come in; they do

KEYWORDS: religious sheep
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
DT, SHEEPFOL
RECORDINGS:
Art Thieme, "The Master of the Sheepfold" (on Thieme04) (on Thieme06)
NOTES [90 words]: Please pardon a personal remark: this song is unlike any other I've heard in the emotional effect it creates from a spare lyric; the only comparison, I think, is with Blind Willie Johnson. - PJS
Although Art Thieme comments that the song, "means different things to different folks," there is little doubt that it comes from the New Testament images of Jesus and the sheep, e.g. John 10:7-16, especiallay v. 14: "I am the good shepherd; I know my own and my own know me." Compare also the parable of the lost sheep (Matt. 18:12f., etc.). - RBW
File: DTsheepf

Master-Watch, The

DESCRIPTION: While men are preparing for the seal hunt, an old man reminisces in a long nostalgic monologue about the days when he used to go sealing. He dies at the end of his recital.
Masters in This Hall

DESCRIPTION: "Masters in this hall, hear ye news today." The singer announces the good news "brought from oversea" of the birth of Jesus. The shepherds go to visit the child.

AUTHOR: Words: William Morris / Music: Tune: Marin Marais, "Marche pour les Matelots," from the opera _Alcyone_ (1706)
EARLIEST DATE: 1860 ("Antient (sic) Christmas Carols"); the tune is said to be French and to predate the lyrics
KEYWORDS: Christmas religious

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Dearmer/VaughnWilliams/Shaw-OxfordBookOfCarols 137, "Masters in this Hall" (1 text, 1 tune)
Rickert-AncientEnglishChristmasCarols, pp. 288-291, "Masters, in this Hall" (1 text)
Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 288, "Masters in This Hall" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 375, "Masters In This Hall" (1 text)

ADDITIONAL: Ian Bradley, _The Penguin Book of Carols_ (1999), #51, "Masters in This Hall." (1 text)

RECORDINGS:
Pete Seeger, "Master in This Hall" (on PeteSeeger42)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
ct. "The Female Saylor," a country dance first published in 1706 by Raoul Auger Feuillet as "La Matelotte" and first called "The Female Saylor" in 1710, using Marin Marais' dance from _Alcyone_ (tune)
NOTES [102 words]: The carol books say that this is by William Morris and based on a French piece. But I note a curiosity. Item #56 in Richard Greene, editor, _A Selection of English Carols_, Clarendon Medieval and Tudor Series, Oxford/Clarendon Press, 1962 (pp. 116-117) begins
Nowel, nowel, nowel,
Sing we with myrth;
Cryst is come wel,
With us to dewell,
By hys most noble byrth.
This comes from Bodleian MS. Eng. poet e. 1, one of the great carol manuscripts, of the fifteenth century. Greene, p. 223, suggests that it is a "religious imitation of a secular lyric." I can't help but wonder if this somehow influenced Morris. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.0
File: FSWB375C

Matelot's Prayer, The
DESCRIPTION: "Now I lay me down to sleep, I pray my soul the Lord shall keep, And grant no other sailor take My shoes and socks... But if some poor soul should... try to take these things away, I'll punch his bleeding head in!"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1987 (Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy)
KEYWORDS: humorous clothes sailor religious warning
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy, p. 121, "The Matelot's Prayer" (1 text)
File: Tawn121

Matilda
DESCRIPTION: "Matilda, she tke me money and run Venezuela." The singer had saved up his money to buy house and land, hiding it in his bed, but she locates it, sells his cart and horse, and leaves the country. The singer warns against trusting women
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1953 (recorded by Harry Belafonte, according to Wikipedia)
KEYWORDS: love separation robbery theft emigration
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
NOTES [56 words]: The origin of this song is unclear. Harry Belafonte made it popular, and appears to have copyrighted his version, but it seems to have existed before that. Courlander seems to say that a text was printed in _Caribbee Cruise_ in 1938, as sung by "Duke of Iron," but Courlander's citations are so sloppy that I cannot be sure of this. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.4
File: Crln108

Matin Je Me Leve, Un (One Morning I Get Up)
DESCRIPTION: French. A young soldier is being sent away for six years; he comes to his beloved's chateau to tell her. She despairs; he says other young men of the village will entertain her in his absence. She says they will never take his place in her heart
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (recording, Mrs. Louis Amirault & Mrs. Sephora Amirault)
KEYWORDS: courting love farewell parting separation foreignlanguage lover soldier war
Matt Hyland

DESCRIPTION: A lord's daughter loves Matt. "But when her parents came to know, They swore they'd drive him from this island." The girl bids Matt flee before he is transported. Eventually her father relents, and she bids him come home to marry her

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1825 (broadside, Bodleian 2806 c.18(344))

KEYWORDS: nobility love separation exile transportation servant

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South)) Ireland US(NE) Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster 1, "Matt Hyland" (1 text, 1 tune)
Beck-FolkloreOfMaine, pp.95-97, "Mathireland" (1 text, 1 tune, a composite with the first two verses and the tune from Maine, the rest from Newfoundland)
DT, MATTHYL

Roud #2880

RECORDINGS:
Din Dobbin, "Matt Ireland" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
John James, "Matt Ireland" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
Liz Jefferies, "Matt Highland" (on Voice06)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 c.18(344), "Young Mat Hyland," W. Armstrong (Liverpool), 1820-1824; also 2806 b.9(235), 2806 c.15(139), "Mat Hyland"

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Young M'Tyre" (plot)
cf. "Richie Story" [Child 232] (plot)
cf. "The Kitchie-Boy" [Child 252] (plot)

NOTES [186 words]: This song has been claimed by Irish and Scottish sources, and I've also heard it sung by English singers. Interestingly, all the versions are very close, suggesting there is some single, recent source. This theory is supported by the ornate language, so atypical of traditional song. But no one seems to know what the source is. There are several broadsides, at least one dated c. 1825 (though such datings are notoriously unreliable), entitled "Mat Hyland" or "Young Mat Hyland." None match the traditional text commonly sung; they are without exception wordier and poorer poetry. Still, they provide a strong indication that the song originated as a broadside -- though these prints (e.g. in the Bodleian collection) are probably not the original source, as no tune seems to be indicated!
In addition, a manuscript volume called "Songs and Ballads in use in the Province of Ulster...1845" is said by Hugh Shields to contain a version of the song, but I do not know if the dating of the volume is considered reliable. Still, there seems no doubt that the song was in existence by the early nineteenth century. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.2

File: DTmatthy

Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John (I)

DESCRIPTION: A child's prayer, asking the apostles for a blessing: "Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John / Bless the bed that I lie on / Four bright angels at my bed / Two at the bottom and two at the head / Two to hear me as I pray / And two to bear my soul away"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1891 (Baring-Gould); original probably from 1656 (Ady, according to Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes)

KEYWORDS: nonballad religious

FOUND IN: US(Ap,NE,SE)

REFERENCES (8 citations):

File: DTmatthy
Chase-AmericanFolkTalesAndSongs, p. 209, "The Bedtime Prayer" (1 text)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5, p. 544, "A Parody" (1 partial text, 1 tune, listed as a parody of this piece, but the only text is that found in the proper song)
Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #548, p. 221, "(Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John)"
Dolby-OrangesAndLemons, p. 177, "(Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John)" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Tony Deane and Tony Shaw _The Folklore of Cornwall_, B. T. Batsford, 1975, p. 49, "(Matthew, Mark, Luke and John)" (1 short text)
Walter de la Mare, _Come Hither_, revised edition, 1928; #457, "Before Sleeping" (1 composite text, of a number of children's prayers; it may have inspired some later uses of the text.)

ST FO033 (Full)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Go And Dig My Grave" (lyrics)
cf. "The Little Beggar Boy" (floating verses)
cf. "Old Lead (Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John II)" (lyrics)

NOTES [142 words]: The first two lines of this piece can be dated to Thomas Ady in 1656 -- but could easily have been used in another context. Similar pieces are common e.g.
Montgomerie/Montgomerie-ScottishNurseryRhymes 95 runs "Matthew, Mark, Luke, John, Hold the horse till I leap on; Hold it succar, hold it sure, Till I win o'er the misty moor". Peter and Iona Opie, _I Saw Esau: Traditional Rhymes of Youth_, # 84, is similar: "Matthew, Mark, Luke, and John, Hold the horse till I leap on; When I leapt on I could not ride; I fell off and broke my side" (also in Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes #347, p. 305); they suspect this is a hobby horse rhyme.
I'm not really convinced, e.g., the Chase-AmericanFolkTalesAndSongs and Flanders/Olney-BalladsMigrantInNewEngland texts are the same -- but how do you separate two pieces with the same words and no tune? - RBW

Last updated in version 4.3

File: F0033

Mattie Walla Lef (What Matty Left Over)

DESCRIPTION: Jamaican patois: Matty, running to meet her lover, drinks rum, laughs, gets up, and runs some more. The singer doesn't want Matty's left overs.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (Murray-FolkSongsOfJamaica)

KEYWORDS: courting lover nonballad drink

FOUND IN: West Indies(Jamaica)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Murray-FolkSongsOfJamaica, p. 50, "Matty Walla-Lef" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Noel Dexter and Godfrey Taylor, _Mango Time - Folk Songs of Jamaica_ (Kingston: Ian Randle Publishers, 2007), p. 74, "Matty Walla Lef" (1 text, 1 tune)

RECORDINGS:
Edric Connor with the Caribbeans and Earl Inkman, "Matty Walla-Lef" (on WIEConnor01)

File: JaMu050

Matty Broon's Soo (Tam Gibb and the Soo)

DESCRIPTION: Song with recitation. Tam's wife says they could afford a pig. He goes to buy Matty's sow. Old lovers, they fall to joking; he leaves lightheaded. The sow does not want to follow; when he trips over a stone, it escapes him; he says he likes fish anyway

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (Greig/Duncan3); 19C (broadside, NLScotland L.C.Fol.70(51))

KEYWORDS: animal commerce humorous escape

FOUND IN: Ireland Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #162, pp. 1-2, "Tam Gibb and the Soo"; "Folk-Song in Buchan," p. 29, ("Quo' Nell my wife the other day") (1 text plus 1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan3 497, "Tam Gibb and the Soo" (3 texts, 2 tunes)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H671, p. 22, "Matty Broon's Soo" (1
Matztown Cornet Band, Di (The Mertztown Cornet Band)

DESCRIPTION: German song which can be about any band. "In (Matztown) meet un Cornet Band." In Matztown meets a Cornet band" which plays in the schoolhouse. The members of the band, and their instruments, are listed, with tales or jokes about their lives.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage music nonballad moniker
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends, pp. 114-117, "Di Matztown Cornet Band (The Mertztown Cornet Band)" (1 German text with non-poetic English translation, 1 tune)
File: KPL114

Maurice Crotty

DESCRIPTION: Green hand Crotty understands nothing about sealing. When the Dan reach the seals Crotty boxes with a big one until he is rescued. Crotty is thankful the seal's breath smelled of whisky, else he might have been beaten to death.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1900 (Burke & Oliver)
KEYWORDS: fight rescue hunting ship humorous animal
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Peacock, pp. 73-74, "Maurice Crotty" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 74, "Maurice Crotty" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Ryan/Small-HaulinRopeAndGaff, pp. 86-87, "Maurice Crotty"; p. 88, "The Spring of the Wadhams" (2 texts, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Michael P. Murphy, _Pathways through Yesterday_, edited by Gerald S. Moore, Town Crier Publishing, 1976, pp. 155-156, "The Spring Maurice Crotty Fought The Od Dog Hood" (1 text)
ST Pea073 (Partial)
Roud #6649
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Grandfather Bryan" (tune)
NOTES [456 words]: Although Ryan/Small-HaulinRopeAndGaff's two texts have different titles, they are clearly the same song, as both involve the strange exploits of Maurice Crotty. It is possible, however, that the piece was rewritten, because a full version would have many anachronisms -- in particular, references to steamships at a time when there were no steam-powered sealers. Only a handful of versions have the opening referring to the Spring of the Wadhams. This may be one of the items that floated in somehow, for several reasons. One is that the Spring of the Wadhams was a disastrous year (more on this below), and there is no hint of it here. Another is that several versions refer to "steamers," yet the first steamer did not go to the ice until 1863, eleven years after the Spring of the Wadhams! (Ryan/Drake, third [unnumbered] page of introduction). Third, while the song does not say that the ship Dan was a steamer, the mentions of steamers hint that it was, and we know there was no steamer named Dan or anything like it. (I can't find a sailing sealer named Dan, either, but there were enough small sealing vessels in the pre-1860 period that doesn't mean much.) Michael P. Murphy attributes this to Johnny Burke (for whom see "The Kelligrew's Soiree"), which based on the style of the song is possible, but no one else mentions the attribution, and I don't find the song in the collections of Burke's work. According to Ryan/Small-HaulinRopeAndGaff, "1852 is generally known and spoken of as the 'Spring of the Wadhams.'" Seals were found very plentiful in the vicinity of the Wadhams, (islands located in Notre Dame Bay S.E. of Fogo Island), and the majority of vessels were caught in a fearful gale of NNE wind which caused great destruction to the fleet."

Similarly Busch, p. 50, writes of "the 'spring of the Wadhams' (1852), when the seals were found near those desolate rocks and forty vessels were driven to their destruction by rafting ice pushed by a north-northeast gale."

Chafe, p. 41, reports, "It was calculated that upwards of 40 vessels were smashed to matchwood by the rafting ice, while more were destroyed by fire by the upsetting of stoves. About 200 men arrived from Greenspond, who reported leaving 1,500 men behind them who only saved what they stood in. "The crews were sheltered on the 'Wadham Island' from the 5th to the 12th of April, till a relief ship was sent them by the government." (Feltham, p. 54, however, considers this exaggerated -- although, if he is right in saying there were forty lost ships, averaging 25 in their crews, this comes out to a thousand or so lost.)

Feltham, p. 54, quotes a newspaper article saying that there were storms on the fourth and tenth of April in that year. - RBW

Bibliography

- Feltham: John Feltham, Northeast from Baccalieu, Harry Cuff Publications, 1990

Last updated in version 6.1
File: LeBe075

Maurice Hogan's Song

DESCRIPTION: The singer, now sixty-four, compares the happy "dark depression days" of his youth to the go-go girl, T.V., mini-skirt-changed times he sees now. "O how I long for those bright days"

AUTHOR: Maurice Hogan
EARLIEST DATE: 1977 (Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou)
KEYWORDS: age lament nonballad
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 75, "Maurice Hogan's Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #28975
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Good Old Days of Adam and Eve" (theme) and references there
NOTES [38 words]: As best I can tell, all the many songs in which old guys complain about young women's casual clothing (and there are many; see the cross-references) come from guys who aren't having the slightest luck with said young women.... - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1
File: LeBe075

Maurice Kelly

DESCRIPTION: "Maurice Kelly one night when about three parts loaded" is beaten by a ghost.
"Twas Kelly's wife dressed up in white to keep him from drinking... he got such a fright he won't stir after night But right after supper goes ... straight off to bed."

AUTHOR: Johnny Burke?
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland)
KEYWORDS: fight drink humorous wife ghost
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (7 citations):
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 78, "Maurice Kelly" (1 text, 1 tune)
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 122, "Kelly and the Ghost" (1 text, 1 tune)
Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 228-229, "Kelly and the Ghost (Maurice Kelly)" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, MAUKELLY*
ADDITIONAL: Johnny Burke (William J. Kirwin, editor), _John White's Collection of Johnny Burke Songs_, Harry Cuff Publications, St. John's, 1981, #13, p. 28, "How Kelly Fought the Ghost" (1 text)
Michael P. Murphy, _Pathways through Yesterday_, edited by Gerald S. Moore, Town Crier Publishing, 1976, pp. 158-159, "How Kelly Fought the Ghost" (1 text)
Roud #16894
RECORDINGS:
Ralph Pennell, "Kelly and the Ghost" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Kate and Her Horns" [Laws N22] (gimmck)
NOTES [15 words]: For background on probable author Johnny Burke, see the notes to "The Kelligrews Soiree." - RBW
Last updated in version 4.4
File: GrMa078

Mautman, The

DESCRIPTION: The mautman arrives to demand his pay, "or maut ye'll ne'er get mair." He says it is very good maut, but she complains of the"unruly crew" that "pierc'd my dochter's barrel." (The answer is that kissing is no sin, else so many would not do it.)
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1724 (Ramsay, The Tea-Table Miscellany)
KEYWORDS: food seduction sex money
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Kinloch-TheBalladBook XXIX, pp. 86-88, "The Mautman" (1 text)
Roud #5508
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Kissing's No Sin (I)" (lyrics)
cf. "Behave Yoursel' Before Folk" (theme of avoiding public kissing)
NOTES [108 words]: The Kinloch text of this song seems to be composite; the first part is an argument about seducing an auld wife's daughter, in very irregular meter. It then breaks into a much more regular section stating that "some say kissing's a sin, but I think it's nane ava, For kissing has been in the world When there was but only twa."
The first part is all that is found in Ramsey.
Ewan MacColl has a fragment, "Kissing's No Sin," with only that second part, followed by a part about how lawyers and others go kissing. The latter also appears in "The Hog-Tub." The nature of the dependence is not clear to me given the small number of texts I've seen. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.0
File: KinBB29

Maw Canny Hinny

DESCRIPTION: "Where hes te been, maw canny hinny? An where hes te been, maw bonny “bairn?” The singer tells of all the places she(?) has looked for him, and the people she has talked to. He describes what he has been doing.

AUTHOR: Words: Thomas Thompson

EARLIEST DATE: 1827 (Thompson et al)

KEYWORDS: questions reunion

FOUND IN: Britain(England,Scotland)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Stokoe/Reay-SongsAndBalladsOfNorthernEngland, pp. 156-157, "Maw Cann Hinny" (1 text, 1 tune)

ADDITIONAL: T. Thompson, J Shield, W. Midford, H. Robson, and others, _A Collection of Songs, Comic, Satirical, and Descriptive, Chiefly in the Newcastle Dialect: And Illustrative of the Language and Manners of the Common People on the Banks of the Tyne and Neighbourhood_, (John Marshall, Newcastle, 1827), p. 14, "May Canny Hinny" (1 text)

ST StoR156 (Partial)

Roud #3168

NOTES [47 words]: This is a difficult song to describe; it spends too much time talking about people and places that it becomes almost a moniker song. The Stokoe version, at least, has a curious change in mid-song: After seven verses with the same chorus, the last two use two different choruses. - RBW

File: StoR156

May and December

DESCRIPTION: The singer (May) would not be a husband bought by a codger (December). He wants "a young damsel so brisk as a bee." He is "nimble and active" and "not so old as you take me to be." "Come to my wedding" and we'll fill the glasses and push them about.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle)

KEYWORDS: age courting wedding dancing drink nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 90, "May and December" (1 text)

Roud #1051

File: ReCi090

May Day Carol

DESCRIPTION: The singer has been wandering and will return with a branch of may. It is to celebrate the Lord's handiwork (in bringing forth the plants in spring). The singer wishes the listeners well: "God bless you all both great and small And send you a joyful May."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1877 (Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland)

KEYWORDS: religious ritual carol

FOUND IN: US(Ap) Britain(England(Lond,South))

REFERENCES (12 citations):

Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, pp. 386-387, "The Hitchin May-Day Song" (1 text)

Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs, pp. 98-99, "May-Day Carol" (1 text, 2 tunes)

Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 303, "May Song of the Children at Shilton" (1 text)

(also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 290, "May Song")

Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #4, "May Song" (1 text, 1 tune, the first half of which comes fro "The Moon Shines Bright (The Bellman's Song)" and the last verses from the "May Day Carol," two songs which often swap verses)

Broadwood-EnglishTraditionalSongsAndCarols, pp. 84-85, "Bedfordshire May Day Carol" (1 text, 1 tune)

Hamer-GarnersGay, p. 32, "May Song -- North Bedfordshire" (1 text, 1 tune); p. 33, "May Song -- Bedfordshire" (1 text, 1 tune, which I don't really think is the same song and which might have some element of "The Cuckoo")

Hamer-GreenGroves, pp. 32-33, "May Song" (1 composite text, 1 tune)

Ritchie-SingingFamilyOfTheCumberlands, pp. 238-239, "[May Day Carol]" (1 text, 1 tune)
May God Guard and Prosper England

DESCRIPTION: A mother and son are on the deck of "Florizel." He is leaving to "tread the fields of battle" in World War I. She recounts his growing up. He asks that she and his father, weeping at home, pray for him. She gives him "freely to our king"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA-Leach)
KEYWORDS: war parting separation ship father mother youth soldier
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
Roud #26347
RECORDINGS:
Mrs. Michael Devereaux, "May God Guard and Prosper England" (on MUNFLA-Leach)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
 cf. "The Wreck of the Steamship Florizel" (subject of the ship "Florizel")
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Emigrant from Newfoundland
NOTES [35 words]: We know this refers to World War I because Florizel was wrecked February 1918. - BS
And the ship had spent part of the war serving as a transport. For her story, see "The Wreck of the Steamship Florizel." - RBW
Last updated in version 5.2
File: ML3MGGPE

May Irwin's Frog Song (The Foolish Frog, Way Down Yonder)

DESCRIPTION: A bull frog "with nothin else to do" falls, jumps around, and falls in a well. The preacher warns that the Devil is looking for folks with "nothin else to do" If you want your wings, stay home with your family instead of going to other frogs' farms

AUTHOR: Credited to Charles E. Trevathan
EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (recording, May Irwin); Protobilly gives a composition date of 1896, but with no documentation
KEYWORDS: animal humorous talltale
FOUND IN: US(SE) West Indies(Bahamas)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 189, "Way Down Yonder in Pasquotank" (1 fragment); also 435, "The Dummy Line" (2 short texts; the "B" version is a mixed text that seems to be mostly this with a "Some Folks Say a Nigger Won't Steal" verse
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 189, "Way Down Yonder in Pasquotank" (1 tune plus a text excerpt); 435, "The Dummy Line" (1 tune plus a text excerpt)
Roud #15891
RECORDINGS:
Blind Blake Higgs, "Foolish Frog" (on WIHIGGS01)
Frank Corso, "Foolish Frog" (Flying Lady, no number, 2017; on Protobilly) [Note: this is the Bahamas version]
May Irwin, "May Irwin's Frog Song" (Victor 5156, 1907; Victor 17253, 1913; on Protobilly)
NOTES [360 words]: This is a confusing situation. I have met this chorus only once in tradition, in the form quoted below from Brown. But folkies will know it from Pete Seeger's "Foolish Frog." That is apparently a tall tale concocted by Charles Seeger based on a vaudeville item called "May Irwin's Frog Song." Hence the title I use. Beyond that I cannot trace the piece.
May Irwin was a notable popular singer who was at the height of her powers in the 1890s; In Sigmund Spaeth's A History of Popular Music in America she is credited with the song, "Mamie, Come Kiss Your Honey Boy" (pp. 265-266), and with popularizing George M. Cohan's "Hot Tamale Alley"(pp. 282, 339) as well as such songs as "I Couldn't Stand to See My Baby Loose" (p. 347) and "Mister Johnson, Turn Me Loose" (p. 285). Her biggest success of all was apparently "May Irwin's Bully Song," written by Charles E. Trevathan; it is indexed as "The Bully of the Town [Laws I14]," though most folk versions are far removed from the May Irwin original.
According to Stanley Appelbaum, editor, Show Songs: from The Black Crook to The Red Mill, Dover Publications, 1974, pp. xxix, "May Irwin... did not use blackface. Her performances, and those of Ben Harney, gave white urban audiences their first exhilarating taste of what was soon to be called ragtime, and eventually became jazz." She had her first starring role in "The Widow Jones," in which she sang "May Irwin's Bully Song," for which see "The Bully of the Town" [Laws I14]. That song also has more background on Irwin.
There is at least one book about Irwin, Sharon Ammen, May Irwin: Singing, Shouting, And The Shadow Of Minstrelsy, University of Illinois Press, 2016(?) - RBW
The description is from the May Irwin recording. The Higgs version is very close to Irwin, switching some lines from verse to verse, and adding another verse in the same vein: beware or you'll not be happy on Judgement Day.
The Brown version ("Way down yonder in Pasquotank, Where the bullfrogs jump from bank to bank, They jump so high they break their shank, The old grey goose went 'yankety-yank'") seems an early ("probably in 1913") parody of the Irwin recording. - BS
Last updated in version 5.2
File: Br3189

May Morning Dew
DESCRIPTION: Winter is pleasant but summer is coming with memories of old times when "we tripped through the heather" The old house has fallen, garden overgrown, and all the neighbors "like the red rose they are faded from the May Morning Dew"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Tunney-StoneFiddle)
KEYWORDS: flowers nonballad family home
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations): Tunney-StoneFiddle, pp. 30-31, "May Morning Dew" (1 text, 1 tune) DT, MAYMRNDW
Roud #5405
RECORDINGS:
Kitty Hayes, "May Morning Dew" (on IRClare01)
File: DTmaymor

May Peace and May Plenty Her Footsteps Attend
DESCRIPTION: A toast "to the lass wi' the lang pedigree": "to the poor and the lowly she's aye been a friend"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1910 (Greig/Duncan8)
May Queen, The

DESCRIPTION: "Our Queen up the river And we'll keep her there forever with your yah-yah-yah ... Your Queen down the river ... Our Queen can tumble a pole ... birl her leg ... smoke a fag ... ate a hard bap ... The darkie says he'll marry her Because she is a Queen"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1978 (Hammond-SongsOfBelfast)
KEYWORDS: bragging ritual nonballad
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hammond-SongsOfBelfast, pp. 14-15, "The May Queen" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [39 words]: Hammond-SongsOfBelfast describes Belfast May Day rituals and children's May Queen parades. "The encounters with rival Queens are always exciting and vituperative. Modesty and restraint are not predominant features of the occasion." - BS
File: Hamm014

Mayn Yingele (My Little Son)

DESCRIPTION: Yiddish: The father comes home to his little boy, whom he sees "only while he sleeps." The mother tells him that he is a fine boy but he misses his father. But father can only be there while the child sleeps; he must work all day

AUTHOR: Morris Rosenfeld
EARLIEST DATE: 1887
KEYWORDS: work family separation foreignlanguage
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 290-291, "Mayn Yingele (My Little Son)" (2 texts (1 English, 1 Yiddish), 1 tune)
File: SBoA290

Mayogall Asses, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer describes a "cavalcade of donkeys" taken to Mayogall. The animals, in all sorts of conditions, are set to carry a load of cabbages to market. The driver convinces the animals to come, where he sells cabbages and animals both

AUTHOR: Words: James O'Kane
EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: animal commerce
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H130, pp. 26-27, "The Mayogall Asses" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13350
NOTES [30 words]: When I read this, I get the feeling something has been lost -- it seems completely pointless.
The story of Saul and his father's missing donkeys is told in 1 Samuel 9:3-10:16. - RBW
File: HHH130
The Mayor of Waterford's Letter

DESCRIPTION: The letter is addressed to the Archbishop of Dublin. It makes the argument for the legitimacy of Henry's claim and ridicules the claim of Lambert, now in the Tower of London. It criticizes the archbishop's silence and asks for reconciliation.

AUTHOR: John Butler (Mayor of Waterford), James Rice, Wm Lyncolle (source: manuscript quoted by Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)

EARLIEST DATE: 1487 (quoted in Dr Smith's _History of Waterford_, according to Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland)

LONG DESCRIPTION: O thou most noble pastour, chosen by God, Walter, Archbishop of Dublin."

The song hopes that the traditional closeness between the people of Dublin and Waterford, "now late broken of thy parte onely," be restored. It claims "that Henry vijth is king" by descent on his mother's side, like Christ, and other kings of England. It claims his marriage to Elizabeth [heir presumptive], "maried both by amiable accord" settles the matter. It recounts his claims, including "bull papall ... affirming theis titles." Of the opposition to Henry "if thow be cause for this perversitie ... We know it not; but certaine we can saie, Thou keepest silence, and said not once nay" The claim of Lambert, "now kept in the Tower of London," is ridiculed. "It is tyme for you to be reconciled ... Correct yourself." "Thinke not in us no malice."

KEYWORDS: rebellion England Ireland nonballad political religious clergy royalty Jesus

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1485-1509: Reign of Henry VII (associated with Elizabeth of York until her death in 1503)
1487 - Battle of Stoke. Defeat of the forces supporting Lambert Simbel

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland, pp. 293-312, "The Mayor of Waterford's Letter" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Thomas Kinsella, _The New Oxford Book of Irish Verse_ (Oxford, 1989), pp. 130-131, "A Letter Sent by the Mayor and Inhabitants of Waterford unto Walter, archbishop of the Citie of Dublin, the Mayor and Citizens of the same, in the time of their Rebellion" (1 text, excerpted from Croker)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Praise of Waterford" (structure)

NOTES [4660 words]: Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland: The texts of "The Mayor of Waterford's Letter" and "The Praise of Waterford" are included in "the collection of some laborious antiquary about the end of the reign of Elizabeth.... 'Ballad royal,' or rhyme royal, was the name given to the measure in which the ballads or songs about Waterford are written: each verse has seven ten-syllable lines with an a/b/a/b/b/c/c rhyme scheme.

[Rhyme royal was a popular medieval format, iambic pentameter with, as ben says, an ababbcc rhyme scheme. According to Rossignol, p. 308, Chaucer was the first English poet to use it, for _The Parlament of Fowls, Troilus and Creseyde_, and a number of the Canterbury Tales, those of the Man of Law, the Clerk, the Prioress, and the Second Nun. Others to use it include Lydgate, Hoccleve, Skelton, and Shakespeare, as well as _The Kingis Quair_. But it is a very artificial format; it doesn't seem to have had any success with folk poets. - RBW]

"To the end of his reign Henry [VII] was troubled by Yorkist claimants to the throne and by pretenders... In the autumn of 1486 ... came disturbing news of a pretender, claiming to be the young Warwick, who, it was rumoured, had escaped from the Tower. Lambert Simnel, who had been carefully groomed for this impersonation ...." (Williams/Fraser, p. 171)

Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland quotes the prose introduction to "The Mayor of Waterford's Letter." It discusses Lambert, "a boy, an organ-maker's sonne, [who] was crowned at Dublin Kinge of England and Lord of Ireland, in the third yere of Henry the 7." The Mayor of Dublin, the governor Earl of Kildare, and Walter, Archbishop of Dublin, then Lord Chancelor of Ireland, were among Lambert's supporters. Among those loyal to Henry VII was the Mayor of Waterford. He sent messages to other mayors to support Henry. In the end "the counterfeite kinge, with his Erle tutor, Walter, Archbishop of Dublin, and many others, wer taken prisoners, and carried to the towr of London...." The Mayor of Warwicke sent a "metrical letter" to the Archbishop of Dublin on October 20, 1487. Croker says "it does not seem improbale that the mayor's metrical letter was sung before Sir Richard [Edgecombe], upon the occasion of his public entertainment by the city of Waterford." - BS

This immensely complex poem (I doubt it was ever a song) is an argument from history supporting the claims of King Henry VII. It is an argument worthy of a very fancy lawyer with a guilty client: There is a lot of stuff thrown out to the listener, most of it completely invalid. This is understandable, for the good and simple reason that Henry Tudor's only serious claim to the throne was right of conquest over Richard III (prior to his crowning, his highest title had been Earl of Richmond, and even that was a shadow title: He claimed it, but another was in possession of the Earldom).

Henry was descended from King Edward III (died 1377, more than a century before Henry took the throne in 1485), but it was through Edward's third son John of Gaunt, and the claim ran through the Beaufort family, children of a woman who was not even John's wife when they were born; they had been specifically excluded from the succession. What's more, Henry VII's mother Margaret Beaufort was still alive when Henry took the throne, so even if his claims were upheld, she, not he, should have been the monarch. (For background on all this, see "The Rose of England" [Child 166], "The Children in the Wood (The Babes in the Woods)" [Laws Q34], and "The Vicar of Bray." The essential point is that Henry didn't have supporters because he had a claim to the throne; he had supporters because it is human nature to form factions and he was the only faction head left other than Richard III.) Little wonder, then, that he was troubled by pretenders -- he was himself a pretender who got lucky!

But the song refers to events long before the time of Henry VII. Croker has some notes on this, but there is a great deal more to be said.

"Henry [VII]... is king, by grace, of England and Fraunce, and lord of Ireland": King Edward III had claimed the title "King of France," and started the Hundred Years' War to back it up, and although England had lost all French soil except Calais by 1453 (an event which in fact helped provoke the Wars of the Roses and eventually led to Henry VII's taking the Kingdom), the English monarch continued to claim the title for centuries.

"Moses had... commandment, If a man died without issue male": The song links this to the "daughters of Sulphact in Numery 17." Croker correctly refers this to the daughters of Zelophehad in Numbers 27 (also Numbers 26, 37, Joshua 17:3), and wonders about the chapter numbering in earlier Bibles. The easiest explanation is, of course, that this is an error -- or maybe a combination of Numbers 27 with Joshua 17. In the Greek Old Testament, the chapter is still Numbers 27, though the man's name is Salpaad. It's chapter 27 in the Latin Bible also, but the name is "Salphaad," which isn't far from "Sulphact."

"King Henry the First... he passed his traunce without issue male." Henry I of England (reigned 1100-1135), the third and youngest son of William the Conqueror, had dozens of bastard children, but only two legitimate offspring who lived past infancy: Matilda (sometimes called Maud, as in the song) and William of the White Ship. William, Henry's only legitimate son, died without issue in 1120 in the wreck of the White Ship (Brooke, p. 175).

At this time, England had no law of primogeniture (until William the Conqueror, the Witan elected the new king, from the royal family of course, and William himself had been succeeded initially by his second son William II Rufus, and then by his third son Henry I, even though the Conqueror's eldest son Robert Curthose was still alive at the time both William Rufus and Henry succeeded. For that matter, William the Conqueror in his lifetime was called "William the Bastard," because he succeeded to the Duchy of Normandy despite being illegitimate). What's more, few thought a woman competent to rule. So when Henry I died, there was much debate over the succession. Stephen, the son of William the Conqueror's daughter Adela, was the male heir closest to the conqueror (see Brooke's genealogy of the Norman kings, and Brooke, p. 39).

Stephen (who inherited the title Count of Blois, hence the description "Earle of Bloyes" in the song) proved an absolute disaster; he was too indecisive to rule, especially with many of his barons rallying to Matilda's cause. In theory, he reigned from 1135 to 1154, but there was civil war for much of that time, and in 1153, Matilda's son Henry of Anjou invaded. (The title Henry inherited from his father was Count of Anjou, hence the reference to his "Earldome of Angeoi" in the song.)

A peace was patched up in which Henry became Stephen's heir (Brooke, p. 39); he was crowned Henry II in 1154 after Stephen's death, reigning until 1189. He was called "Fitz Empress" (son of the empress) because his mother Matilda had for a brief time been married to the Holy Roman Emperor Henry V (who, however, died in 1125, while she was still young. Matilda lived until 1167, so she was still alive when her son became King -- as with Henry VII, Henry II really shouldn't have been monarch; his mother should have been).

The statement that Henry's "issue raigned King of England... from sonne to sonne" shows this particular item to be a piece of propaganda. Henry was indeed succeeded by his son Richard I (reigned 1189-1199) -- but Richard had no sons (he was possibly homosexual; see the notes to "Richie Story" [Child 232]), and the throne then passed to Henry's youngest son John (reigned 1199-1216) rather than Henry's grandson Arthur, the child of the son between Richard and John in age. John was succeeded by his son Henry III (1216-1272), and Henry by his son Edward I (1272-1307), Edward I by his son Edward II (1307-1327), Edward II by his son Edward III (1327-1377) -- but Edward III was succeeded by his grandson Richard II (1377-1399), who was deposed by his cousin Henry IV (1399-1413), who was the grandson of Edward III's third son John of Gaunt even though there were living descendants of Edward's second son Lionel, Duke of Clarence. Henry IV was succeeded by his son Henry V (1413-1422), and Henry V by his son Henry VI (1422-1461). Henry VI was ineffectual and eventually went insane; his incapacity eventually caused the Wars of the Roses to break out. He was succeeded by Edward IV (1461-1483, minus a brief interruption due to a revolt in 1470-1471), who was the proper heir of Edward III via Lionel, but who -- far from being Henry VI's son -- was his third cousin twice removed. (To be fair, the song may simply be noting that Henry VI was descended from Henry II entirely in the male line, while Edward IV had two female links in the chain. But in fact Edward IV also had a link in direct male line to Edward III; we'll get to that.)

The song finally manages to cover Edward IV's descent, noting that Edward was descended from "Leonell" via "the Duke's daughter of Clarence." Lionel's daughter was Philippa; her son was Roger Mortimer, his daughter Anne Mortimer, her son Richard of York, and Richard's son was Edward IV. The song draws from the examples of Henry II, Stephen, and Edward IV the ironic conclusion that the "female In England shall succeed for fault of the male." This is by contrast to France, where the Salic Law was held to bar succession in the female line (not only were female ruling queens barred, but the royal title could not be transmitted through a woman; Seward-Hundred, p. 21, though Seward describes the Salic Law as an after-the-fact discovery). However, these precedents are mostly meaningless, because Stephen and Henry II were elected kings, and Edward IV, while his claim to priority over Henry VI was based on descent from Lionel of Clarence in the female line, was also descended from Edward III's fourth son Edmund of York in the male line, and -- if you treated the Beauforts as illegitimate, as nearly everyone did -- was Henry VI's heir in the male line once Henry's son Edward was disposed of.)

The song then goes on to seemingly claim that Jesus was King of Jerusalem by female line. But there are two genealogies tracing the ancestry of Jesus back to David: One in Matthew 1, the other in Luke 3. These two genealogies cannot be reconciled, leading some to claim that one is a genealogy of Mary -- but this is simply balderdash; both link Jesus to David via Joseph, not Mary. In any case, even if one of the genealogies of Jesus is accurate (which neither one can be; that of Matthew doesn't have enough names and that in Luke does not transmit the legal succession), that wouldn't make Jesus David's heir; it would just make him a descendant of David -- which would be true of effectively everyone in Judea a thousand years after David had his zillion or so children. It is really, really interesting to note that the song eventually, in effect, gives up its claim on behalf of Henry VII, noting that Edward's title "is fallen to our soveraigne ladie, Queene Elizabeth, his [Edward IV's] eldest daughter liniall; To her is com all the whole monarchie." In other words, Elizabeth -- not "the" Elizabeth of a century later, but her grandmother -- is the woman with the real right to the throne. Which lies at the heart of Henry VII's kingship. Keep in mind that, as noted above, Henry's claim in his own right was pitifully weak.

The one thing Henry could do to bolster his claim was to marry into the real Royal Family. Which he did; he married Elizabeth. There was some slight doubt about Elizabeth's legitimacy (which is why Richard III had been able to seize the throne), but there wasn't really much doubt but that she was Edward IV's surviving heir. (And, since all of Henry's children were her offspring, and every monarch of England has been descended from that union, in fact every King of England since has been legitimate heir. It was only Henry VII who had a problem.)

The song goes on to note six supports to Henry's claim: first, "Gode's provision" (hard to prove either way); second, election by the Lords and Commons (meaningless, since parliament was always tossing the crown back and forth during this period); third, Elizabeth's claim to the throne (his single best argument, but it was an argument for her, not him); fourth, right of conquest; fifth, "the old Brittaine storie." Croker is not sure what this refers to; I think it refers to Henry's Welsh ancestry on his father's side; he claimed to be descended from Rhys ap Gruffyd of Deheubarth (Ashley, p. 625), and before that from Cadwallader and maybe even King Arthur (Henry in fact named his oldest son Arthur to support this claim); and finally, Papal sanction (received in 1486, according to Ashley, p. 627 -- but that, again, was easily changed; in all likelihood, if someone overthrew Henry, that someone would quickly earn Papal sanction also).

Thus every one of Henry's claims to the throne cited in the song is rather weak. Everyone knew that Henry had usurped the throne, and had little strength of his own. Even after Bosworth, there were many people with clear prior claims -- a fact which, ironically, would help Henry, since it made it hard for the opposition to coalesce around a particular potential monarch.

Making everyone's problems worse was the matter of The Princes in the Tower (for details on this, see the notes to "The Children in the Wood (The Babes in the Woods)" [Laws Q34]). Edward IV had had two boys, Edward (briefly Edward V in 1483) and Richard, Duke of York. The elder was only twelve when Edward IV died, too young to rule (Edward IV had died while in his early forties), and Edward IV's brother Richard of Gloucester had convinced the leaders of the realm to set them aside (digging up a claim against their legitimacy to make it look legal). Early in Richard's reign, the Princes vanished. Literally. Their fate is a complete mystery; we don't know when or how they died, though there seems little doubt that they did. There are some bones which some have thought are theirs -- but the British royal family has refused to dig them up to allow DNA testing. Odds are that the boys were killed by Richard (or, just possibly, by someone in his official family without him knowing about it), but it was done so secretly that, when the time came, Henry VII couldn't prove who did them in; it's even possible he killed them himself. (It seems pretty safe to say that, had they still been alive, Henry would have disposed of them.) But if Henry didn't know where they were, neither did anyone else. Hence the possibility of pretenders.

And all this was in the aftermath of the Wars of the Roses, in which the crown had changed hands six times (though there were only five kings involved), and every reign had either begun or ended in blood. Henry VII came to the throne as a result of the Battle of Bosworth on August 22, 1485, where Richard III was killed in a death-or-glory charge. That was late enough in the year that there really wasn't time for another revolt in 1485. But early in 1486, Humphrey Stafford and Lord Lovell rebelled. This revolt was quickly suppressed. (Gillingham, p. 247.)

The Stafford revolt had quickly run into the Heir Problem caused by the mystery of the Princes in the Tower. To vastly oversimplify, there were four potential Yorkist heirs after Edward IV and Richard III died: The Princes in the Tower, if they were alive; Elizabeth of York, their older sister; the Earl of Warwick, who was the son of Edward and Richard's brother George of Clarence (who was born after Edward but before Richard); and the Earl of Lincoln, the son of Edward and Richard's oldest sister. The problem with the Princes was that they weren't available. Elizabeth was hardly a possible Yorkist heir since she was married to Henry.

The Warwick claim was weak; he was alive and his location known (since he was in Henry's custody), but George of Clarence had been attainted and executed for rebelling against his brother Edward. (And, yes, he was guilty, and no, Richard III had nothing to do with the execution!) It was generally held that an act of attainder barred all heirs from the succession; in any case, it was reported -- we don't know how accurately -- that young Warwick was feeble-minded (Kendall, p. 349). Henry VII would eventually solve the Warwick problem by executing the boy. Although there was one interesting sidelight on that: When Edward IV executed George, one of the charges against him was that he had hidden his son in Ireland; Ross, p. 242. That might have set someone thinking.)

John, Earl of Lincoln was in many ways the best candidate -- he was an adult, male, known to be of sound mind, undeniably legitimate, and with no acts of parliament against him. Richard III had seemingly appointed him his heir (Kendall, p. 350) after flirting with the idea of Warwick. Unfortunately, Lincoln was also junior in the succession to the Princes, to Elizabeth, and to Warwick, assuming their disabilities were eliminated.

As it turned out, the Stafford rebellion threw its support behind Warwick -- but failed in part because they couldn't get their hands on him (Seward-Wars, p. 315).

The next attempt, in 1487, did better -- not least because it had, or pretended to have, the actual Warwick. This was the first of two significant imposters to arise against Henry: First Lambert Simnel, then Perkin Warbeck.

Lambert was apparently the creation of an Oxford priest named Richard Simons, who passed him off as Warwick (Gillingham, p. 248); Seward-Wars, p. 315, agrees with Croker's notes in calling him an organ-builder's son, from Oxford, and Weir, p. 235, says he was born around 1475 -- the same year that Warwick was born and a bit more than a year after the birth of Richard of York. She notes, however, that she can find no records of a Simnel family in Oxford (or, indeed, anywhere in England at this time); she suspects that even Lambert's "real" name was a pseudonym. Weir, p. 232, says that the original plan was to have him portray Richard of York, the younger of the Princes in the Tower, but the decision to have him portray Warwick was made before Lambert had become well-known.

Williamson, p. 25, offers a possible reason for the change: The conspirators thought that Henry VII had executed Warwick, and so would need to reveal his guilt if he wished to expose them.

Chrimes, p. 75, points out that George of Clarence was born in Dublin, so pretending that Lambert was his son might earn him local support.

Unfortunately for them, Henry was smarter than that; he hadn't executed Warwick -- yet. He was able to answer the conspirators by bringing out the real live earl.

It hardly mattered. Very many Yorkists would have supported anyone who might overthrow Henry Tudor. (It's hard to blame them, since one of Henry's acts was to repeal almost every grant of title or lands made since 1455; Williamson, p. 20. That cost the surviving nobles a "lot" of money; little wonder they were resentful!) Lambert was a cause to rally. He earned major support: John of Lincoln (who doubtless intended to use Lambert to get rid of Henry and then intended to take charge himself; Weir, p. 232); Gerald Fitzgerald, eighth Earl of Kildare, the of the family which produced most of the Deputy Lieutenants of Ireland (meaning in effect that he was the ruler of English Ireland -- which, to be sure, was by this time only a small strip on the east coast); and Margaret of Burgundy, another sister of Edward and Richard (Gillingham, p. 249).

It was a situation in which Ireland was unusually crucial in English affairs. The old Duke of York, father of Edward IV and Richard III and grandfather of the Princes in the Tower, had for a time been Lieutenant of Ireland -- and he was unique among Lieutenants in actually doing a good job and treating the Irish fairly; the Irish were firm supporters of the Yorkist dynasty. If Ireland supported a pretender, it meant big trouble for Henry VII; if Ireland rejected the pretender, Henry was probably safe.

And most of Ireland supported Lambert. Williamson, p. 26, reports, "Margaret [of Burgundy] and the English leaders knew without a doubt that Simnel was an imposter.... The Irish lords seem to have believed in him. They crowned him as Edward VI, did homage to him, called a parliament, struck coins and issued writs in his name. Waterford in the south held out for Henry VII, but for the moment he had lost all the rest of Ireland."

The Archbishop of Dublin was actually responsible for crowning him "Edward VI" (Seward-Wars, p. 316) -- even though it had to be done with a circlet borrowed from a statue of the Virgin Mary (Chrimes, p. 75). Hence this song.

Chrimes, p. 73, declares "Of the two impostitures [Simnel's and later Warbeck's], Simnel's, although by far the more far-fetched, yet for a time attained a startling and menacing success, whilst Warbecks... never attained such distinction. The reason for the difference is to be found in Irish politics. To comprehend how it came about that Lambert Simnel, the ten-year-old son of an Oxford joiner, could come to be crowned King Edward VI in Christchurch, Dublin, on 24 May 1487, supported by many Irish lords, including Gerald, eighth earl of Kildare (the 'uncrowned' king of Ireland), and several Irish bishops, is impossible without some excursion into the circumstances of Irish history during the preceding decades at least."

Waterford had a strong tradition of loyalty to the crown (a loyalty which had earned it significant privileges), and it stayed loyal to Henry VII, trying to convince the Yorkist Archbishop to come back to the fold -- a not-very-successful quest, obviously. (In fact, it was in many ways a really dumb idea for Waterford; after all, it was the Tudors who finally really conquered Ireland. And when Henry VIII turned England Protestant, Waterford stayed even more staunchly Catholic than the rest of Ireland, and suffered for it.)

In that context, it is interesting to note than one of Henry Tudor's claims against Lambert was that his entourage included a Lollard, or proto-Protestant (see Russell, pp. 56-57). The story is clearly not true (Henry claimed the guy said something anti-Catholic, dropped dead, and turned black), though it it likely enough that Lollards were against the oh-so-Catholic Henry VII. But it earned Henry more support from the Pope.

During the Simnel rebellion, Waterford was besieged by the Earl of Desmond for six weeks due to its loyalty to Henry VII. The city earned praise from Henry VII for its efforts. In 1488, a counter-attack by Henry's forces was based in Waterford (Chrimes, p. 79).

The song argues that an English king could not be crowned in Ireland, but while Ireland had never produced a monarch, English kings "had" been crowned away from Westminster -- e.g. Henry III was crowned at Gloucester (Ashley, p. 531), and Edward IV, although formally crowned at Westminster, had made himself king well before that. Indeed, Henry VII had picked up Richard III's crown at Bosworth. Nor had the Archbishop of Canterbury always been responsible for the coronation; Aldred, Archbishop of York, had crowned William the Conqueror (Linklater).

Lambert, who had support from Burgundy, eventually sailed from Ireland to Furness in Lancashire (landing June 4, less than two weeks after the "coronation"; Chrimes, p. 76; Gillingham, p. 250). Due to a lack of sources, we know very little about the resulting Battle of Stoke (June 16, 1487).

Burne, pp. 308-309, says that there are only two independent sources, Polydore Vergil's history (followed by all the later Tudor historians) and an anonymous herald in Henry's army. The herald was an eyewitness but had a limited viewpoint; Vergil was not an eyewitness, and though he tried to be objective, it appears based on his coverage of other events that it was extremely easy to lead him around by the nose. In any case, both these accounts are from Henry's side.

It seems that the rebels sailed from Ireland to Lancashire (Williamson, p. 27), because they wanted to take advantage of the Yorkist support in the north of England (Richard III had been very popular in the north, and the Yorkists in general were preferred there). The Yorkist force supposedly included 2000 continental mercenaries, assorted Irishmen (mostly poorly equipped), and of course the English exiles (Burne, p. 305; Chrimes, pp. 76-77). Burne thinks they may have totalled as many as 9000 troops, though they were a very mixed bag; Williamson (who has a very strong pro-Tudor bias) however thinks that they found little support in England. Estimates of their forces made at the time of course varied heavily; Gillingham, p. 252, cites two Acts of Attainder against the rebels, one of which claims they numbered 8000, the other 5000.

However many they were, the rebels did not head for York, where they could probably have expected support. Instead, they headed south. Henry VII gathered an army very quickly, and both sides seemed to be heading for Newark when they ran into each other at Stoke (about three miles from Newark, near the river Trent). The herald, disappointingly, gives us no details of the battle, and Vergil has hardly more, and Burne's map on p. 312 shows them to be irreconcilable anyway. The bottom line is, Henry VII's forces won (with the credit perhaps largely due to the Earl of Oxford rather than Henry; Burne, p. 313); Lincoln was killed, as was mercenary commander Schwartz and the Irish leader Thomas Geraldine; Richard III's friend Viscount Lovell vanished, and Lambert was captured (Gillingham, p. 252; Williamson, p. 27; Burne, p. 314; Chrimes, p. 77). Henry, who rarely showed much evidence of humanity, in this case was merciful and sent Lambert to work in the kitchens (Gillingham, p. 253). Apparently the lad was loyal enough to eventually be let out of the King's service, and he lived until at least 1525 (Poole, p. 15).

Stoke was the last battle of the Wars of the Roses, though hardly the end of opposition to Henry VII. The people of Northumberland murdered their earl Henry Percy for failing to support Richard III at Bosworth (Kendall, pp. 458-459; contrary to the lies Shakespeare told, Richard III was very popular in the north of England, where he had ruled a sort of palatinate in the final years of Edward IV’s reign). Henry VII himself executed Sir William Stanley, the man who had won the Battle of Bosworth for him by killing Richard III! (Kendrick, p. 457; Weir, p 236; Poole, p. 18, mentions the suspicion that Henry killed him out to get his hands on Sir William’s money).

Henry even went so far as to seize the property of his mother-in-law Elizabeth Woodville (Weir, pp. 232-233, who notes the strangeness of the idea of Elizabeth plotting against her own daughter, while mentioning a theory that Elizabeth believed Henry VII, not Richard III, had killed her sons. But Weir thinks, and I tend to agree, that Elizabeth Woodville did not plot against Henry; Henry degraded her just to get his hands on her money).

And then there came Pretender #2, Perkin Warbeck, who (after some indecision about which member of the Yorkist dynasty to impersonate) decided that he was Richard of York, the younger of the Princes in the Tower. He proclaimed himself in 1491, in Cork (Chrimes, p. 81), and managed to get the support of Margaret of Burgundy and others. But by this time, Henry had quite a spy network built; Perkin aroused a lot of interest, but never managed to mount a real invasion; he landed in Cornwall with a few hundred men (Weir, p. 238), but ended up in Henry's custody, tried to escape, and was executed in 1499 (Seward-Wars, pp. 320-323). Warwick was executed soon after (Weir, p. 239). Presumably that was after this piece was written; for the story of Warbeck, see "The Praise of Waterford." - RBW

Bibliography

- Ashley: Mike Ashley,British Kings and Queens, Barnes & Noble, 2000 (originally published as The Mammoth Book of British Kings and Queens, 1998)
- Gillingham: John Gillingham,The Wars of the Roses, Louisiana State University, 1984
- Poole: Stanley B. R. Poole, Royal Mysteries and Pretenders, Barnes & Noble, 1993
- Ross: Charles Ross, Edward IV, 1974 (I use the 1997 paperback edition in the Yale English Monarch series with a new introduction by R. A. Griffiths)
- Seward-Hundred: Desmond Seward, The Hundred Years War: The English in France, 1337-1453, 1978 (I used the 1982 Atheneum paperback)
Maypole Song, The
DESCRIPTION: "Come, lads and lasses, take leave of your dads, And away to the maypole hie, For every he has got him a she, And the minstrel's standing by." "Begin," says Hall; "Aye, aye," says Mall. The youths call for dances and exchange remarks
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1671 (_Westminster Drollery_)
KEYWORDS: dancing courting music dialog
FOUND IN: Britain(England)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Dixon-AncientPoemsBalladsSongsOfThePeasantryOfEngland, Song #11, pp. 184-187,246, "The Rural Dance about the May-pole" (1 text)
Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, pp. 384-386, "The Rural Dance About the May-Pole" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: J. Woodfall Ebsworth, editor, Westminster Drolleries Both Parts of 1671, 1672 (Boston, 1875 (Digitized by Google )), pp. 80-84, The Rurall Dance about the May-pole (1 text)
ST BeCo284 (Partial)
Roud #22885
File: BeCo284

Mazlim's Mill
DESCRIPTION: "Now I am a bullock driver and I work for Mazlim's Mill, And pulling timber from Vine Creek I've nearly had my fill." The singer complains about the rain and advises listeners that it's better to "turn your bullock out" than work at the mill
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1968
KEYWORDS: work hardtimes
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, p. 108, "Mazlim's Mill" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: MA108

McAfee's Confession [Laws F13]
DESCRIPTION: McAfee, the singer, is raised by an uncle after being orphaned. As a youth he runs away and turns wild. Married to a good woman, he has an affair with Hettie Stout and murders his wife by giving her poison instead of medicine. He is condemned to die
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1868 (Musick-JAF-TheOldAlbumOf-William-A-Larkin)
KEYWORDS: homicide orphan adultery execution
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Mar 28, 1825 - Hanging of John McAfee
FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW,SE,So)
REFERENCES (19 citations):
Laws F13, "McAfee's Confession"
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 317-321, "McAfee's Confession" (2 texts plus references to 4 more, 1 tune)
Randolph 133, "McFee's Confession" (2 texts plus a long excerpt, 1 tune)
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #33, "McAfee's Confession" (1 text)
Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 129, "McAfee's Confession" (1 text)
McAllum's Lament

DESCRIPTION: McAllum, a poacher, bids farewell to the woods and the game he hunted. He had been trapped by police and shot one man dead. He curses the lairds and laws and warns poachers to "lay aside your guns while you're able and free"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan2)
KEYWORDS: homicide poaching prison police
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan2 251, "McAllum's Lament" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Roud #5847
File: GrD2251

McCaffery (McCassery)

DESCRIPTION: A young man enlists in the 42nd Regiment; mistreated by his captain and confined to barracks for a trivial offense, he decides to kill the captain. He accidentally shoots his colonel instead, and is tried (at Liverpool Assizes) and hanged.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1962 or 1966 (collected from Caroline Hughes)
KEYWORDS: army violence crime execution homicide punishment revenge death soldier
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland,England(West)) Ireland
REFERENCES (4 citations):
MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland 86, "McCaffery" (1 text, 1 tune)
Dallas-TheCruelWars-100SoldiersSongs, pp. 170-172, "McCaffery" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hamer-GreenGroves, pp. 47-48, "McCaffery" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, MCASSERY
Roud #1148
RECORDINGS:
May Bradley, "Calvery" (on Voice08)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Gallant Forty-Twa" (subject: 42nd Highlanders or Black Watch) and references there McCarthy

DESCRIPTION: St. Patrick's night, John McCarthy and William Toole go to play cards and drink. At the dance hall they have a fight with Dickie Costello. Costello sues McCarthy over the fight. McCarthy wins. Everyone "pity Dickie for being such a fool"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA-Leach)
KEYWORDS: fight trial cards dancing drink gambling
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
Roud #26239
RECORDINGS:
John Connors, "McCarthy" (on MUNFLA-Leach)
File: ML3McCar

McCarthy's Song

DESCRIPTION: McCarthy stops in Pope's Harbour for a bottle at Brian's tavern. He treats all hands and he sleeps it off on the floor. Next morning the landlord wants his money. He staggers to Mrs. Haws who nursed his wounds at no charge. He swears not to return again.

AUTHOR: Michael McCarthy, school teacher at Taylor's Harbour, N.S. (Source: Creighton-NovaScotia)
EARLIEST DATE: 1932 (Creighton-NovaScotia)
KEYWORDS: drink ordeal landlord
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 133, "McCarthy's Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST CrNS133 (Partial)
Roud #1832
NOTES [8 words]: This song is item dH52 in Laws's Appendix II. - BS
File: CrNS133

McCarty's Widow

DESCRIPTION: "It's just a year ago today I took to me a wife, And ever since she's proved to be the burden of my life." The woman licked McCarty to death, but now that he is married to her, the singer vows she won't beat him. He hopes to beat her until she behaves

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Dean-FlyingCloud)
KEYWORDS: marriage fight
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Dean-FlyingCloud, p. 93, "McCarty's Widow" (1 text)
McClanahan's Jean

DESCRIPTION: The singer praises the beauty of McClanahan's Jean. When her father learns that they are courting, he vows "that in marriage we ne'er should be buckled thegither." He wants her to wed a rich old man. The singer casts scorn on her potential husband.

AUTHOR: David Herbison? (Tune supplied by Sam Henry)

EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: love courting father beauty lover

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenry'sSongsOfThePeople H81, pp. 430-431, "McClanahan's Jean" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #7959

File: HHH081

McClure, The

DESCRIPTION: McClure sails for Naples with cargo of fish. They are boarded by sailors from a submarine who sink McClure with bombs. The crew are allowed to leave and are rescued by an Italian destroyer who take the Captain and crew of six to Cadiz.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1977 (Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou)

KEYWORDS: war sea ship ordeal

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- May 22/24, 1917 - McClure, out of St John's, captured and bombed by a German submarine off Cape Carbonara, Sardinia (Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou, Northern Shipwrecks Database)

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 76, "The McClure" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #28974

NOTES [97 words]: Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou note that there is uncertainty about how the McClure was destroyed in 1917. The song claims the Germans captured and scuttled it, but others report it was sunk by gunfire or torpedoes. I haven't found proof one way or the other, but it's nearly certain that it wasn't a torpedo -- submarines had guns because some boats (such as schooners with crews of just six) weren't worth a torpedo; subs only had a limited supply of "fish." Putting a bomb aboard was possible, but it took a lot of time. So I'd guess the McClure was actually sunk by gunfire. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: LeBe076

McCranken's Ghost

DESCRIPTION: The singer encounters McCranken's ghost at midnight. He recounts the deaths of Irish heroes of the rebellion. He advises: take by force the Reform the English would not yield. You will free "the Green Isle and receive the world's thanks"

AUTHOR: James Hope and James Orr (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

EARLIEST DATE: c.1893 (Young's _Ulster in '98_, according to Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

KEYWORDS: rebellion England Ireland patriotic ghost

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1798 - Irish rebellion against British rule
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 112, "McCracken's Ghost" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Henry Joy McCracken (I)" (character of Henry Joy McCracken) and references there
NOTES [40 words]: It sounds as if this may have been written with reference to Gladstone's unsuccessful proposals for Home Rule. For background, see the notes to "Home Rule for Ireland"; for Henry Joy McCracken, see the notes to "Henry Joy McCracken (I)." - RBW
File: Moyl1112

McDonald Family, The
DESCRIPTION: "Sons of freedom, only ponder, On McDonald's awful doom." The five members of the family die in the great fire (of 1871). The singer imagines them dying. He particularly remembers "poor Jeanette," beautiful and a teacher, and believes she is in heaven
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (Beck-TheyKnewPaulBunyan)
KEYWORDS: fire death family
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Beck-TheyKnewPaulBunyan, pp. 172-175, "The McDonald Family" (1 text)
Beck-LoreOfTheLumberCamps 83, "The McDonald Family" (1 text)
Roud #4142
NOTES [7 words]: This is item dG44 in Laws's Appendix II. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.2
File: BBun172

McDonald of Salmonier
DESCRIPTION: Captain Mike McDonald's fog-bound fishing schooner "struck at Johnson's Point up in Trepassey Bay." McDonald's sons make it to land but the captain, "the last to leave," drowns. His body is found three days later and is returned to Salmonier.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA/Leach)
KEYWORDS: death drowning fishing sea ship wreck father
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
Roud #18225
RECORDINGS:
Gerald Aylward, "McDonald of Salmonier" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
Cyril O'Brien, "Mike McDonald" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
NOTES [14 words]: Salmonier and Trepassey Bay are on the eastern part of Newfoundland's south coast. - BS
Last updated in version 4.2
File: RcMacdoS

McDonald's (Is Your Kind of Place)
DESCRIPTION: "McDonald's is your kind of place, Hamburgers in your face, (French fries) up your nose, (Catsup) between your toes. The last time I was there, They stole my underwear, McDonalds (is the place for me/is your kind of place)."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1984
KEYWORDS: nonballad parody humorous
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 38, "McDonald's" (1 text, tune referenced) NOTES [57 words]: I make the assumption that, if I learned a kids's song from a source other than my parents or school, it qualifies as a folk song. This seems to fit that bill. The Pankakes claim that the tune of this is "Down by the Riverside." Not in the version I know! There is similarity, but they are definitely not the same. But I may not be typical. - RBW

File: PFCF038b

McGinty's Model Lodge

DESCRIPTION: The singer is "a kind of overseer in a famous hotel" in Glasgow: "a 'Model' lodging house where working men do stay.... All the fighting men in Glasgow's in MacGinty's model Lodge." He describes the fights over imagined offenses.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1988 (McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen)

KEYWORDS: fight humorous nonballad worker

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):

McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen 54, "McGinty's Model Lodge" (1 text, 1 tune)

File: McB1054

McKenna's Dream, The

DESCRIPTION: McKenna dreams of Ireland's heroes: Brian Boru, Sarsfield, St Ruth, Billy Byrne from Ballymanus, Reilly "on the hill of Screen," Father Murphy, the pikemen, Napoleon. "I looked around, but could not see One foeman on the plain... So ends McKenna's dream"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1850's (Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)

KEYWORDS: rebellion war Ireland dream patriotic

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (5 citations):

Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 65, "The McKenna's Dream" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 133, "McKenna's Dream" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Healy-MercierBookOfOldIrishStreetBalladsVol2, pp. 48-50, "M'Kenna's Dream" (1 text)

ADDITIONAL: Kathleen Hoagland, editor, One Thousand Years of Irish Poetry (New York, 1947), pp. 279-281, "MacKenna's Dream" (1 text)

Roud #2377

RECORDINGS:

John Joe English, "Mackenzie's Dream" (on ITMA/CapeShoreNL)

BROADSIDES:

* Bodleian, Firth b.25(357), "The Irishman's Vision," E.M.A. Hodges (London), 1855-1861; also Firth b.25(357), "The Irishman's Vision"; 2806 b.10(133), "MacKenna's Dream"; Harding B 19(92), Harding B 26(434), 2806 c.8(115), "M'Kenna's Dream[!]"

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Captain Rock" (tune, per Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion, Hoagland)
cf. "The Irish Sixty-Ninth" (tune, apparently, according to the sheet music)

NOTES [280 words]: Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion: "Donal O'Sullivan ... tells me that towards the end of the last century, at Buncrana, a street-singer would often be brought before the R.M. who asked: 'What is the charge in this case?' The answer would usually be: 'Singing McKenna's Dream, Sir.'"

At the Battle of Clontarf, 1014, Brian Boru defeated a combined force of Vikings and rebels from Leinster, but died in the battle. [For Brian, see "Remember the Glories of Brian the Brave." - RBW]

At the Battle of Aughrim, 1691, the Irish Catholic forces [are finally defeated] and the commander of their French allies, St Ruth dies [see "After Aughrim's Great Disaster" - RBW].

Sarsfield is the Irish commander in 1691 who is on the field at Aughrim and Limerick (cf. "The Jackets Green")

United commander Billy Byrne is hanged in 1799 (cf. "Billy Byrne of Ballymanus")

The Wexford rebels under Father John Murphy defeat the North Cork militia in 1798. Father Murphy is caught and executed later in 1798 (cf. "Father Murphy (I).")

The pikemen fought for the rebels in the 1798 rebellion (cf. "General Monroe").

Reilly "on the hill of Screen" [i.e., Tara]. I don't know the reference, but "Rebels posted on Tara Hill, County Meath, were routed on May 26." (Zimmermann, p. 155) - BS
Although one would expect, from the contents of this song, that McKenna was a well-known Irish patriot, I have not been able to find any suitable candidate to be the dreamer. - RBW
The ballad is recorded on one of the CD's issued around the time of the bicentenial of the 1798 Irish Rebellion. See:
Franke Harte, "McKenna's Dream" (on "The Croppy's Complaint," Craft Recordings CRCD03 (1998); Terry Moylan notes) - BS
Last updated in version 4.5
File: Zimm065

McKenzie and His Dog

DESCRIPTION: "John McKenzie stood in the Mataura store, And looked at the yokes and chains," and sets out to haul cargo. He discovers a large plot of good land -- but he also makes off with a thousand sheep. Still, they name the region for McKenzie and his collie

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Colquhoun-NZ-Folksongs-SongOfAYoungCountry)
KEYWORDS: sheep travel thief dog New Zealand

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1855 - the disappearance of the sheep and McKenzie's capture. He is sentenced to five years, but the sentence is commuted after nine months and he returns to Australia

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Colquhoun-NZ-Folksongs-SongOfAYoungCountry, p. 68, "MacKenzie and His Dog" (1 text, 1 tune) (p. 42 in the 1972 edition, where it is called "McKenzie and His Dog")

RECORDINGS:
Rudy Sunde, "McKenzie and His Dog" (on NZSongYngCntry)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
* cf. "Mackenzie and His Dog (I)" (subject) and notes there

NOTES [45 words]: The John/James McKenzie of this song should not be confused with Sir John McKenzie (1839-1901), who spent about twenty years in the New Zealand parliament and in some liberal governments; Sir John was a generation younger and did not arrive in New Zealand until 1860. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: Colq042

McKinley Brook

DESCRIPTION: The singer describes the poor conditions in the McKinley Brook logging camp: The buildings leak ("for comfort, as you plainly see"); there is a risk of flood ("for they deserve it well, it's true") and the gambling and bawdy singing rarely stops

AUTHOR: George Calhoun (around 1869?)
EARLIEST DATE: 1951
KEYWORDS: logger work hardtimes flood
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 220-221, "McKinley Brook" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9426
File: Doe220

McLellan's Son

DESCRIPTION: On April 18 Daniel McLennan is shot accidentally by Tim who claims he was playing carelessly with a gun he did not know was loaded.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1883 (Smith/Hatt/Fowke-SeaSongsBalladFromNineteenthCenturyNovaScotia)
KEYWORDS: homicide death friend youth
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
McNab's Island

DESCRIPTION: Sergeant John McCafferty marches you "forty hours a day ... in the regular army." "I went down to McNab's Island" to fight Indians but "we got bald-headed And never lost a hair." "I got blisters... bunions...."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1932 (Creighton-NovaScotia)

KEYWORDS: army humorous nonballad soldier

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 134, "McNab's Island" (1 short text, 1 tune)
- ST CrNS134 (Partial)
- Roud #1833

NOTES [16 words]: Creighton-NovaScotia: "McNab's Island includes part of the fortification of Halifax Harbour" - BS

File: CrNS134

McNally's Row of Flats

DESCRIPTION: "Down in Bottle Alley lived Timothy McNally, A wealthy politician and a gentleman at that," owner of flats occupied by tenants from "Ireland and Italy, Jerusalem and Germany"; not even "the Tower of Babylonium" could match it

AUTHOR: Words: Edward Harrigan / Music: David Braham

EARLIEST DATE: 1882 (sheet music published by Wm. A. Pond & Co, New York, from the show "The McSorleys" or "McSorley's Inflation")

KEYWORDS: home humorous nonballad soldier

FOUND IN: US(NE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Finson-Edward-Harrigan-David-Braham, vol. II, #85, pp. 15-17, "McNally's Row of Flats" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Roud #32438

RECORDINGS:

Mick Moloney, "McNally's Row of Flats" (on HarriganBrahamMaloney)

BROADSIDES:

NOTES [386 words]: For background on Harrigan and Braham, see the notes to "The Babies on Our Block." Although no field collections of this song have ever been printed, Helen Hartness Flanders did pick up a copy of the chorus (only) from Thomas Armstrong on June 22, 1942. Like many Harrigan/Braham songs, its hold in tradition was tenuous, but it had one. And Armstrong, in some respects, had the words more correct than the recording by Mick Moloney, which has been slightly cleaned up.

Franceschina, p. 152, says of this song that it was "a lively hornpipe with another schottische dance break," but it was only a modest hit. Indeed, the whole show "McSorley's Inflation, from a musical standpoint, doesn't seem to have been particularly successful. Franceschina, p. 152, summarizes the plot:
The drama "dealt with Peter McSorley (Harrigan), a tenement landlord and candidate for the local coronership. Ashamed of the successful poultry-stall run in Washington Market by his wife, Bridget (Tony Hart), McSorley attempts to destroy her seller's permit. Bridget hides the document in her mattress, which is subsequently taken away by a black politician, Rufus Rhubarb (John Wild), at McSorley's request. Bridget follows the mattress robber to his home, where a group of African Americans are assembled to hear the political platforms of McSorley and his opponent, Coroner Slab (Edward Burt). Bridget, with the help of the female constituency, manages to recapture the bed, and McSorley, who has been knocked out by Tom Tough (Michael Foley), a bruiser in the employ of Coroner Slab, decides against a political career and vows never again to try to interfere with his wife's poultry business."

Moody, p. 133, explains that "Dan Mulligan [hero of a whole series of Harrigan plays; see again the notes to "Babies on Our Block"] had been rechristened Peter McSorley to honor the saloon [McSorley's Saloon, later McSorley's Old Ale House, a landmark near where the play was performed] and to take account of Yeaman's absence from the company" [Annie Yeaman played Cordelia Mulligan, wife of Dan Mulligan, and her absence was temporary -- she was still visiting Harrigan in the last days of his life]. The play premiered November 27, 1882 (Moody, p. 132).

For another song from "McSorley's Inflation, see "I Never Drink Behind the Bar." - RBW

Bibliography

Last updated in version 5.2
File: HaBrMcNa

McNulty's Family
DESCRIPTION: The logger's camp, owned by McNulty, is "all populated by McNulty's family... some from every place you'll find upon a map": Irish, French, and Yankee loggers. The crew are all named. "It's pleasant in the evening when your day's work is done"

AUTHOR: James O'Hara? (possible, per Ives-FolksongsFromMaine)
EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (Ives-FolksongsFromMaine)
KEYWORDS: lumbering food moniker logger
FOUND IN: US(NE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ives-FolksongsFromMaine 2, "McNulty's Family" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: IveMa02

McSorley's Twins
DESCRIPTION: "Mrs. McSorley had fine bouncing twins, Two fat little devils they were." The parents determine on a grand christening; many come to join the party. As guests get drunk, fights break out; at last "they smothered the two little twins."

AUTHOR: Gus Philipps ("Oofty Gooft"), according to College Songs
EARLIEST DATE: 1887 (College Songs)
KEYWORDS: baby humorous party mother father fight twins
FOUND IN: US(MW) Canada
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Dean-FlyingCloud, pp. 46-47, "McSorley's Twins" (1 text)
DT, MCSORTWN
Roud #5501
ALTERNATE TITLES:
McSorley's Beautiful Twins
McTavish is Dead

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, McTavish is dead and his brother doesn't know it, His brother is dead and McTavish doesn't know it. They're both of them dead and they're lying in bed And neither one knows that the other is dead."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1983 (Warner-FolkSongsAndBalladsOfTheEasternSeaboard)
KEYWORDS: death
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Warner-FolkSongsAndBalladsOfTheEasternSeaboard, p. 2, "MacTavish is Dead" (1 text)
Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 122, "McTavish Is Dead" (1 text, tune referenced)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Irish Washerwoman" (tune)
cf. "The Railroad Corral" (tune and references for the "Irish Washerwoman" tune)
cf. "John Dolan" (theme of two people both being dead)
NOTES [34 words]: Said to have been used as mouth music for dancing. Presumably it is one of the several attempts to provide a lyric for "The Irish Washerwoman" -- in this case, probably just to help remember the tune. - RBW

Me and My Baby and My Baby's Friend

DESCRIPTION: Floating verse song (even the chorus changes): "Me 'n' my baby 'n' my baby's friend Can pick mo' cotton dan a cotton gin." "I got a baby and a honey too." "Boat's up de ribber and she won't come down." Etc.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)
KEYWORDS: floatingverses love work
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 236, (no title) (1 text, which appears more a collection of blues stanzas than an actual song, but verses from songs such as "Boat's Up the River" and "I Got a Gal in de White Folks' Yard")

Me Done Done What You Told Me To Do

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: Leader: "O Lord, aye." Response: "Me done done what you told me to do." Verse: "You told me to pray And I done that too"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 2008 (USSealsland04)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious
FOUND IN: US(SE)
RECORDINGS:
Gullah Kinfolk, "Me Dun Dun" (on USSealsland04)

Me Johnny Mitchell Man

DESCRIPTION: A miner's song in "Slavic" dialect, telling how the immigrant has been working in the mines, in bad conditions, for many years. When "Me Johnny Mitchell man" calls a strike, the singer will welcome it

AUTHOR: Con Carbon
EARLIEST DATE: 1938
1899 - John Mitchell becomes President of the United Mine Workers of America. He devoted much of his energy to soothing tensions between Slavs and longer-settled workers so that the UMW could effectively strike against the mine owners.

Me Old Ragadoo

DESCRIPTION: Michael Chaser was born "with me hands in the pockets of me old ragadoo." At forty he meets Suzy Lagan but claims he won't shame her by taking her to the altar in his old ragadoo. She is fine with that and bids him adieu. He marries someone else.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1977 (Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 77, "Me Old Ragadoo" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #900

RECORDINGS:

Anita Best, "Me Old Ragadoo" (on NFABest01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Little Beggarman" (tune, words)

NOTES [81 words]: Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou: "A 'ragadoo' is a general name for a tattered garment, presumably with pockets."

This is close enough to "The Little Beggarman" that I could not argue too long if they were considered the same song. [Indeed, Roud lumps them. - RBW] Clearly, one is derived from the other. The difference is that this song, in Lehr/Bes...
Meagher's Children [Laws G25]
DESCRIPTION: Two girls, four and six years old, lose their way in the woods and die. It takes a hundred men a week to find their bodies.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1932 (Creighton-NovaScotia)
KEYWORDS: children death
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Apr 11, 1842 - "Two little girls from Preston Road into the woods did stray"
FOUND IN: US(NE) Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (8 citations):
- Laws G25, "Meagher's Children"
- Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 135, "Meagher's Children" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, pp. 204-205, "Meagher's Children" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Beck-FolkloreOfMaine, pp. 103-105, "Meagher's Children" (1 text)
- Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 75-77, 248-249, "Lost Babes of Halifax" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Ives-21FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 37-40, 80-81, "The Lost Babes of Halifax" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 30, "The Lost Babes of Halifax (Meagher's Children)" (1 text, 1 tune)
- DT 347, MEAGCHLD
Roud #1834
NOTES [60 words]: Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi: The initials of the author are disputed. Creighton refers to a copy with initials B.G.V. and Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi refers to a copy with initials D.G.B. "An article in the Dartmouth Free Press, by Dr J P Martin, April 12, 1962, says decidedly that the author is Daniel G Blois, of The Gore, Hants County, Nova Scotia." - BS
Last updated in version 3.6
File: LG25

Mealy-Mou'd Charlie
DESCRIPTION: Charlie warns "fan ye mairry tae manage yer wife." When she nagged him and he took a stick to beat her she took it and beat him. She scratches him when he drinks. Though she reads the Scriptures she is the devil that breaks "hen-ridden" Charlie's bones.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan7)
KEYWORDS: shrewishness marriage warning violence drink humorous nonballad wife
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Greig/Duncan7 1300, "Mealy-Mou'd Charlie" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7198
File: GrD71300

Mean Mistreater Blues
DESCRIPTION: "It seems mighty hard when you're sleeping all by yourself And the one you love she's loving someone else." "I feel so lonesome sad and blue today I had a darn good woman but my kindesses drove her away."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1980 (USFlorida01)
Medicine Jack

DESCRIPTION: Medicine Jack, "a jolly old quack," hopes to sell his pills, powders to be taken in vodka, and "very cheap" plasters for pains. "I am the man" for pulling teeth. "Since you will not buy my goods I'll go and sell elsewhere"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1884 (broadside, Bodleian Bod6599 Firth b.25(172)); 1951 (MUNFLA/Leach)

KEYWORDS: bragging lie promise commerce medicine humorous nonballad

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

RECORDINGS:
- John A. McLellan, "Medicine Jack" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Bod6599 Firth b.25(172), "Medicine Jack" ("Good people all both great and small"), H. Disley (London), 1860-1883; also Bod21930 2806 c.16(225), Firth c.26(116), Harding B 11(1675), "Medicine Jack"

File: BdMedJac

Meditations of an Old Bachelor (The Good Old-Fashioned Girl)

DESCRIPTION: "The girls today are different from those I used to know, They never seem contented unless they're on the go." He complains about makeup, short hair, etc.; "Womenly characteristics we loved and prized are few." He wants a "good old-fashioned girl."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: hair clothes courting bachelor

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 57, "Meditations of an Old Bachelor" (1 text)

Roud #7843

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "The Good Old Days of Adam and Eve" (theme) and references there
- cf. "The Braw Servant Lasses" (subject)

NOTES [56 words]: All I can say to the singer is, "You couldn't get a woman back when they were modest; why should they want you now when you're old and a grump?"

Despite this sort of whine, it's worth noting that the population of the planet has doubled repeatedly since this grouse was written (1920s?). Evidently most men can adapt to modern women. - RBW

File: Br3057
Meeks Family Murder (I), The [Laws F28]

DESCRIPTION: The Meeks Family (husband, wife, and three children) are lured from home by the Taylors. The parents and two children are killed, but wounded Nellie escapes to report the crime (the song details Nellie's story, and ends before the villains are captured)

AUTHOR: Arthur Wallace
EARLIEST DATE: 1913
KEYWORDS: homicide family escape
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
May 11, 1894 - Gus Meeks, his wife, and two children are killed by William and George Taylor (who are suspected of cattle stealing). William Taylor was hanged; George escaped and was not recaptured
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Laws F28, "The Meeks Family Murder I"
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 404-412, "The Meeks Family Murder" (11 texts, 2 tunes, grouped into types A-E; the "A" group of 3 texts and 1 tune is this song; Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety however believes that A1 and A3 are mixtures of F28 and "The Meeks Family Murder (IV)," which is Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety's "B" group. "C" is "The Meeks Family Murder (V)", "D" is too brief to categorize, and "E" is not traditional)
Randolph 152, "The Meeks Murder" (4 texts, 1 tune; with the "B" and "C" texts being this song; the A text is Laws F30, and D is Laws F29)
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 232-234, "(The Meeks Massacre)" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 719, MEEKMUR1*
Roud #2266
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Meeks Family Murder II" [Laws F29]
cf. "The Meeks Family Murder IV"
cf. "The Meeks Family Murder (V -- Nellie's Lament)"
NOTES [214 words]: Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety has detailed notes on the history of this piece; it appears that the Taylors were unsavory sorts, perhaps guilty of cattle stealing, and their employee and tenant Gus Meeks -- given a pardon by the governor -- was going to provide evidence of their financial wrongdoing.

The Taylors, knowing they were in trouble, offered Meeks a better job, and convinced him to go along with them, then tried to kill the whole family with axes and burn their bodies. The hay used in the fire, however, was wet, and so Nellie Meeks, once she awoke, was able to escape alive and report the crime.

Both brothers were sentenced to be hanged, but George escaped and no reliable evidence of his later career is available. Folklore, however, attended both George Taylor and Nellie Meeks for many years (e.g. Nellie is said to have borne a "dint" from the blow of the axe to her head for the rest of her life).

To tell this piece from the other Meeks ballads, consider this first stanza:
About a mile from Brownington
At the foot of Jenkins's hill,
Took place this awful murder
By the Taylors, George and Bill.
(Other versions of the song use stanzas of eight lines of this sort.)
This song seems to have mixed heavily with "The Meeks Family Murder IV."

- RBW
File: LF28

Meeks Family Murder (II), The [Laws F29]

DESCRIPTION: The Meeks Family (husband, wife, and three children) are lured from home by the Taylors. The parents and two children are killed, but wounded Nellie escapes to report the crime. The Taylors are captured and sentenced to die

AUTHOR: credited to Marion Anderson (1894)
EARLIEST DATE: 1942 (Randolph)
KEYWORDS: homicide children escape execution
May 11, 1894 - Gus Meeks, his wife, and two children are killed by William and George Taylor (who are suspected of cattle stealing). William Taylor was hanged; George escaped and was not recaptured.

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Laws F29, "The Meeks Family Murder II"
Randolph 152, "The Meeks Murder" (4 texts, 1 tune, but Laws considers only the "D" text to be this song; "A" is F30 and "B" and "C" go with F28)
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, p. 235, "(The Meeks massacre)" (1 excerpt)
DT 797, MEEKMUR2
Roud #2267

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Meeks Family Murder IV"
cf. "The Meeks Family Murder (V -- Nellie’s Lament)"

NOTES [48 words]: For more historical details on this piece, see the notes to "The Meeks Family Murder" (I).

To tell this piece from the other Meeks ballads, consider this first stanza:
'Twas in the lovely springtime,
In the merry month of May,
When Meeks, his wife, and children
Were induced to go away. - RBW

File: LF29

Meeks Family Murder (III), The [Laws F30]

DESCRIPTION: Nellie Meeks recounts her fate. Her family (father, mother, and three children) are lured from home by the Taylors. The parents and two children are killed, but wounded Nellie escapes to report the crime and tell of being an orphan.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1915 (Randolph)

KEYWORDS: homicide family children orphan

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
May 11, 1894 - Gus Meeks, his wife, and two children are killed by William and George Taylor (who are suspected of cattle stealing). William Taylor was hanged; George escaped and was not recaptured.

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Laws F30, "The Meeks Family Murder III"
Randolph 152, "The Meeks Murder" (4 texts, 1 tune, but Laws considers only the "A" text -- which has the only tune -- to be part of F30; "B" and "C" are F28 and "D" is F29)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 151-153, "The Meeks Murder" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 152A)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 372-373, "The Meeks Murder" (1 text)
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 235-236, "(Nellie’s Lament)" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 796, MEEKMUR3

Roud #2268

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Meeks Family Murder II" [Laws F29]
cf. "The Meeks Family Murder IV"
cf. "The Meeks Family Murder (V -- Nellie’s Lament)"

NOTES [93 words]: For more historical details on this piece, see the notes to "The Meeks Family Murder" (I).

Rumor has it that Nellie (elsewhere called Sadie) Meeks herself sang this variant in the 1890s. One person who claimed to be a family relative denied this, saying that Nellie stayed with her grandmother until she married, gave birth, and died at the age of eighteen.

To tell this piece from the other Meeks ballads, consider this first verse:
We lived upon the Taylor's farm
Not many miles from town;
One night while we were all asleep
The Taylor boys came down.

- RBW

Last updated in version 2.7
File: LF30

Meeks Family Murder (IV), The

DESCRIPTION: George Meeks is in prison, but is offered a pardon to testify against the Taylors. The Taylors offer him a job and money to come with him, but then kill him and his family. Nellie escapes and laments being an orphan

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1912 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)
KEYWORDS: homicide family children orphan
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
May 11, 1894 - Gus Meeks, his wife, and two children are killed by William and George Taylor (who are suspected of cattle stealing). William Taylor was hanged; George escaped and was not recaptured
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 404-412, "The Meeks Family Murder" (11 texts, 2 tunes, grouped into types A-E; the "B" group of 5 texts and 1 tune is this song, though Laws lists only three texts -- B1, B3, and either B2 or B4, probably the latter -- as this piece; in addition, some of Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety's "A" texts, which belong to "The Meeks Family Murder (I)" appear to have mixed with this piece. Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety's "D" is too brief to categorize, and "E" is not traditional)
Roud #2269
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Meeks Family Murder II" [Laws F29]
cf. "The Meeks Family Murder (V -- Nellie's Lament)"
NOTES [54 words]: For more historical details on this piece, see the notes to "The Meeks Family Murder" (I).
This is item dF49 in Laws's Appendix II.
To tell this ballad from the other Meeks Murder songs, consider this first stanza:
In Milan, Sullivan County,
There lived a family poor,
A father and a mother,
Three children around the door. - RBW
File: Beld408A

Meeks Family Murder (V -- Nellie's Lament), The

DESCRIPTION: The singer laments, "Once I had a mamma, likewise a papa too." She recalls a beautiful, sunny day; the next thing she can remember is a pain in her head and the bodies of her family. Having told her tale, she regrets her fate

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1913 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)
KEYWORDS: homicide family children orphan
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
May 11, 1894 - Gus Meeks, his wife, and two children are killed by William and George Taylor (who are suspected of cattle stealing). William Taylor was hanged; George escaped and was not recaptured
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 404-412, "The Meeks Family Murder" (11 texts, 2 tunes, grouped into types A-E; the "B" group of 5 texts and 1 tune is this song, though Laws lists only three texts -- B1, B3, and either B2 or B4, probably the latter -- as this piece; in addition, some of Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety's "A" texts, which belong to "The Meeks Family Murder (I)" appear to have mixed with this piece. Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety's "D" is too brief to categorize, and "E" is not traditional)
Murder" (11 texts, 2 tunes, grouped into types A-E; the "C" text is this song, while "A" is "The Meeks Family Murder (I)" and "B" is "The Meeks Family Murder (IV). Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety's "D" is too brief to categorize, and "E" is not traditional)
Roud #2270
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Meeks Family Murder II" [Laws F29]
cf. "The Meeks Family Murder (IV)"
NOTES [67 words]: For more historical details on this piece, see the notes to "The Meeks Family Murder" (I).
This is item dF50 in Laws's Appendix II.
To tell this ballad from the other Meeks Murder songs, consider the first line above and the chorus:
Sad, sad to be an orphan here,
No more to see my little sisters dear,
They are in heaven, the voices they are still,
The fatal blows were given upon the Jenkins Hill. - RBW
File: Beld407B

Meerschaum Pipe
DESCRIPTION: "O who will smoke my meerschaum pipe (x3), When I am gone away? Allis Bazan, Patsey Moran, Mary McCann, Cann, Cann." Similarly, the singer asks who will use his umbrella and boots, and who will kiss his girl
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Heart-Songs)
KEYWORDS: drugs courting separation
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Heart-Songs, p. 413, "Meerschaum Pipe" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #28864
File: HeSo413

Meet Half Way (Miss Liking)
DESCRIPTION: "'Meet half way to your best like-'em/likeness (x3), You're the one my darling." (Or, "Won't you be my partner?") "Right hand round your best like-'em." "Five dollars if you touch her." "Trip her up and down as long as you love her."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Botkin, The American Play-Party Song)
KEYWORDS: playparty courting
FOUND IN: US(MW,Ro)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Spurgeon-WaltzTheHall-AmericanPlayParty, pp. 137-138, "Meet Hal Way with Your Best Likeness" (1 text, 1 tune, with the verses being from "Meet Half Way (Miss Liking)" but the chorus being "Ten Little Indians (John Brown Had a Little Indian)"
Lewis-FavoriteMichiganFolkSongs, p. 34, "Miss Liking" (1 text, tune referenced)
Roud #7923
CROSS-REFERENCES:
ct. "Old Brass Wagon" (tune)
File: Spurg137

Meet Me In Galilee
DESCRIPTION: The leader sings a line such as "Tell me Mary," "One morning soon." "Just roll the stone away." "Tell my disciples," the congregation sings "Ay, Lord." Leader: "If you want to see me"; Congregation: "Meet me in Galilee."
AUTHOR: unknown
Meet Me in St. Louis, Louis

DESCRIPTION: Louis returns from work to find Flossie not at home. Her note says that life is too slow, and tells him to "Meet me in St. Louis, Louis, Meet me at the fair; Don't tell me the lights are shining Any place but there." A despondent Louis prepares to move

AUTHOR: Words: Andrew B. Sterling / Music: Kerry Mills

EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (sheet music)

KEYWORDS: love travel separation abandonment

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1904 - St. Louis Louisiana Purchase Exposition (World's Fair), for which Kerry Mills wrote this song

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Randolph 514, "Meet Me at the Fair" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 255, "Meet Me In St. Louis, Louis" (1 text)
Geller-FamousSongsAndTheirStories, pp. 241-244, "Meet Me in St. Louis, Louis" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Robert A. Fremont, editor, _Favorite Songs of the Nineties_, Dover Publications, 1973, pp. 191-194, "Meet Me in St. Louis, Louis" (1 text, 1 tune, the 1904 sheet music)
Margaret Bradford Boni, editor, _Songs of the Gilded Age_, with piano arrangements by Norman Lloyd and illustrations by Lucille Corcos, Golden Press, 1960, pp. 16-18, "Meet Me in St. Louis, Louis" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7597

RECORDINGS:
Billy Murray, "Meet Me In St. Louis, Louis" (Victor 2850, 1904)

NOTES [331 words]: Although the song pronounces the name of the town "St. Louie", no St. Louis resident ever uses that pronunciation, and we look upon it with disdain. - PJS

According to Geller, Sterling and a couple of friends visited a bar run by a man named Louis (Louie), and they called his product Louie as well. When Sterling came in, one of the others said, "Another Louie, Louie," and that inspired the idea. (Boni et al have the minor variant that beers from Saint Louis were called Louis. They agree that the phrase "Another Louie, Louie" inspired this song.)

This is probably the most popular tune by Kerry Mills (whose publishing company F. A. Mills used his actual initials; "Kerry" was a nickname) -- but he had plenty of others, including in this index "Red Wing (I)" and "Whistling Rufus" (although he did not write the texts of any of them). Probably his other biggest hit was "At a Georgia Campmeeting" (1897). This was one of the many "cakewalks" published by Mills, who according to David A. Jasen, _Tin Pan Alley: The Composers, the Songs, the Performers and their Times: The Golden Age of American Popular Music from 1886 to 1956_, Primus, 1988, p. 18, had been largely responsible for the cakewalk craze with his 1895 coon song/cakewalk "Rastus on Parade." Mills went on to produce rags and other modern music; Jasen, p. 19, says, "Through Kerry Mills, the cakewalk became the first major dance form of Tin Pan Alley, breaking the dominance of the waltz and adding a syncopated kick."

Incidentally, the 1904 World's Fair turned out to have a great deal of cultural influence (and waistline influence). Joe Schwarcz, _That's the Way the Cookie Crumbles_, ECW press, 2002, pp. 214-218, notes that among the inventions popularized there were the ice cream cone (ice cream was well known, but until then it had been served mostly in dishes), the hot dog bun, peanut butter (originally designed as a protein source for those with poor or no teeth), cotton candy, and Dr. Pepper soda. - RBW

Meet Me in the Bottoms
DESCRIPTION: "Meet me in the bottoms with my boots and shoes, Whoo Lordy mamma, Great God A'mighty...." The singer "got to leave this town now." He notes that he sees both the woman he loves and the woman he hates every day
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (recording, Davie Lee)
KEYWORDS: love separation clothes
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Courlander-NegroFolkMusic, pp. 97-98, (no title) (1 text); p. 274, "Meet Me in the Bottoms" (1 tune, partial text)
ADDITIONAL: Harold Courlander, _A Treasury of Afro-American Folklore_, Crown Publishers, 1976, pp. 520-521, "Meet Me in the Bottoms" (1 text, 1 tune)
RECORDINGS:
Davie Lee, "Meet Me in the Bottoms" (on NFMAla6)
NOTES [24 words]: Despite the fact that Davie Lee's version appears in the series of recordings, "Negro Folk Music of Alabama," he was recorded in Mississippi. - PJS

Meet Me Over There
DESCRIPTION: "A little child was dying, And called her father near, And on his arm reclining, She whispered in his year, 'I'm going home to glory, A golden crown to wear, O meet me... Meet me over there." The sinful father, after she dies, turns to Jesus
AUTHOR: Elisha A. Hoffman (1839-1929) (source: several hymnals listed on hymnary.org)
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)
KEYWORDS: death father sin
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 756, "Drunkard's Dream" (1 short text, 1 tune)
NOTES [59 words]: Despite the Brown/Schinhan title, there is no indication, in Hoffman's original text, that the father was a drunkard. He is merely described as a sinner and "no Christian." The other work by Hoffman in the Index is "Leaning on the Everlasting Arms." If this piece of dreck is typical of his work, little wonder he never put anything else into tradition. - RBW

Meet Me Tonight in the Moonlight
DESCRIPTION: The singer calls on his sweetheart to "Meet me tonight in the moonlight." He bids her come alone and hear his sad story. He is being sent to sea, and they must part. He expresses his hope to return in metaphors of a fine ship, angels' wings, etc.
AUTHOR: Joseph A. Wade (died 1875)
EARLIEST DATE: 1924
KEYWORDS: separation love
FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW,So)
REFERENCES (12 citations):
Randolph 746, "Meet Me Tonight" (3 texts plus a fragment, 1 tune, although the "C" text is probably "The Prisoner's Song (I)") Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 489-491, "Meet Me Tonight" (1 text, 1 tune --
McNeil-Southern Mountain Folksong, pp. 47-48, "Meet Me in the Moonlight" (1 text, plus a text of "The Prisoner's Song" and extensive background notes and text), culminating on pp. 50-51 with "Prisoner's Song (Tragic Romance)" (1 text, 1 tune)

Brown/Belden/Hudson-Frank CBrownCollectionNCFolklore 350, "The Prisoner's Song" (7 texts plus 1 fragment, 2 excerpts, and mention of 1 more; "A"-"C," plus probably the "D" excerpt, are "The Prisoner's Song (I)"; "E" and "G," plus perhaps the "H" fragment, are "Meet Me in the Moonlight"; "J" and "K" are "Sweet Lulur"

Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, pp. 216-217, "Moonlight" (1 text plus an excerpt, 1 tune)

Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, p. 494, "Beautiful Light o'er the Sea" (1 text, possibly mixed with something else)

Scarborough-ASongCatcherInSouthernMountains, pp. 346-351, "New Jail/Prisoner's Song/Here's Adieu to all Judges and Juries" (1, not collected by Scarborough, of "Judges and Juries," plus 6 texts from her collections: "New Jail," "I'm Going To My New Jail Tomorrow," "New Jail," "Meet Me in the Moonlight," "The Great Ship," "Prisoner's Song"; 3 tunes on pp. 449-450: the "A" fragment is probably "Meet Me Tonight in the Moonlight"; "B" and "D" are "New Jail" types; "C" is too short to classify; "E" is a mix of floating verse, "If I had a great ship on the ocean," "Let her go, let her go and God bless her," "Sometimes I'll live in the white house, sometimes I live in town..."; "F" may well have some Dalhart influence)

Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol1, pp. 60, "The Old Prisoner's Song" (1 text, 1 tune, the first verse of which probably floated in from "Broken Ties (I'm Thinking Tonight of My Blue Eyes" although the rest is clearly "Meet Me Tonight in the Moonlight" or part of that family)

Richardson/Spaeth-AmericanMountainSongs, p. 55, "Meet Me by the Moonlight" (1 text, 1 tune)

Neely/Spargo-TalesAndSongsOfSouthernIllinois, pp. 239-240, "Meet Me by the Moonlight Alone" (1 text)

Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, p. 296, "Meet Me by Moonlight" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #767

RECORDINGS:

Burnett & Rutherford, "Meet Me in the Moonlight" (Supertone 9443, 1929)

Carter Family, "Meet Me by Moonlight Alone" (Victor 23731, 1928; Bluebird B-5096/ Electradisk 2011/ Sunrise S-3174, 1933; Montgomery Ward M-7149, 1937)

Bradley Kincaid, "I Wish I Had Someone to Love Me" (Vocalion 02686, 1934)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Prisoner's Song (I)"

cf. "I'm Dying for Someone to Love Me" (lyrics)

ALTERNATE TITLES:

I Wish I Had Someone to Love Me

NOTES [267 words]: This song later became merged with a version of "Botany Bay/Here's Adieu to All Judges and Juries" to produce "The Prisoner's Song (I)." See notes on that piece also, as they often cannot be distinguished. It doesn't help that that song was built out of traditional materials by Vernon Dalhart (or someone), and the Carter Family patched up a version also.

Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety's "Beautiful Light o'er the Sea" is a curiosity; it doesn't really look like this song -- but two of its three verses go with this song, and the whole theme is very similar. Since I haven't met the "other half" that gave it its title (indeed, it sounds more like a hymn than anything else), it seemed proper to file it here so people will realize that the "half and half" song exists.

Richardson/Spaeth-AmericanMountainSongs's version also has an ending not found in the typical version: She promises to be true, and says that heaven will bless him; she proves faithful, but he dies and her life is "blighted." This looks like a graft onto the song; the poetry seems less skillful although not actually defective.

Richard Dress informs us that Joseph Augustine Wade (1796?-1845) wrote the lyrics 'Meet me by moonlight alone, And then I will tell you a tale Must be told by the moonlight alone" around 1826. It seems to have been the only thing he ever did of significance; my sources don't even agree on whether his middle name was "Augustus" or "Augustine."

This latter piece can be found as broadside NLScotland, L.C.Fol.70(83b) "Meet Me by Moonlight Alone," Poet's Box (Dundee), n.d. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.1

File: R746
Meet, O Lord!

DESCRIPTION: "Meet, O Lord, on the milk-white horse, An' de nineteen wile in his hand. Drop on, drop on the crown on my head, And rolly in my Jesus's arms. In that morning all day (x3), When Jesus the Christ been born." "Moon went into the poplar tree...."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad Jesus

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 43, "Meet, O Lord!" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11998
File: AWG043A

Meeting at the Building

DESCRIPTION: "Meeting at the building Soon be over (with) (x3), Meeting at the building soon be over (with), All over this world." "Preaching at the building...." Continue with shouting, praying, etc.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1962 (Leadbelly Songbook)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 354, "Meeting At The Building" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Moses Asch and Alan Lomax, Editors, _The Leadbelly Songbook_, Oak, 1962, p. 44, "Meeting at the Building" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11694
SAME TUNE:
Elizabeth Cotten, "Praying Time Will Soon Be Over" (on Cotten03)
File: FSWB354

Meeting of Tara, The

DESCRIPTION: Thousands attend to support O'Connell and Repeal. The counties are represented. Dan appears: 3 cheers for Victoria, 9000 for Repeal. Wellington and Peel would face more men at Tara than at Waterloo. "Come rouse my brave Repealers be obedient to the law"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1900 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 19(102))

KEYWORDS: Ireland political

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Aug 15, 1843 - Repeal meeting at Tara (source: Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 50B, "The Meeting of Tara" (1 fragment)
Healy-MercierBookOfOldIrishStreetBalladsVol2, pp. 79-81, "The Meeting of Tara" (1 text)
Roud #V4967

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 19(102), "Meeting of Tara" ("On the 15th day of August in the year of 43"). J.F. Nugent & Co. (Dublin), 1850-1899; also 2806 b.9(269), 2806 c.15(118), "The Meeting of Tara"; 2806 c.15(277), "The Tara Monster Meeting"
NLScotland, L.C.Fol.178.A.2(065) , "The Tara Monster Meeting," James Lindsay (Glasgow), c.1843 [? see Notes]
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Glorious Repeal Meeting Held at Tara Hill" and references there
cf. "Daniel O'Connell (I)" (subject: Daniel O'Connell) and references there NOTES [742 words]: The description is from broadside Bodleian Harding B 19(102). A line from the broadside hints that it may date from after October 8 when the Clontarff meeting was abandoned: "Such a grand sight was never seen nor will till times no more."
The commentary for broadside NLScotland L.C.Fol.178.A.2(065) states "The meeting at Tara, Co. Meath in the summer of 1843, is now estimated to have been attended by 750,000 people." It is interesting that that version, seemingly a duplicate of Bodleian 2806 c.15(277), is shortened to omit all reference to O'Connell: not only the final five verses but also the lines in the first verse ("On the Royal Hill of Tara, Irish thousands did prevail, In Union's hands to join their hands with Dan, for the Repeal" becomes "On the Royal Hill of Tara, Where thousands did prevail, In union's bonds to join their hands, To sign for the repeal.")

Be skeptical about NLS dating. L.C.Fol.178.A.2(065) has two entries which, when put together, seem the same as Bodleian 2806 c.15(277). "The Irish Girl" half has the printer's information; "The Tara Monster Meeting" half, of course, has no printer information. NLS dates "The Irish Girl" "Probable period of publication: 1860-1890" and "The Tara Monster Meeting" "Probable date published: 1843" - BS

Be skeptical about NLS numbers estimates, too -- 750,000 people was a tenth of the population of Ireland! Kee1, p. 208, mentions this estimate, but notes that it was from The Nation -- which was pro-Irish. Gavin Duffy in 1880 spoke of 500,000 to 750,000 (Moody/Martin/Keogh/Kiely, p. 225).

O'Connell's estimate was an even more absurd million and a half. These wildly inflated guesses still command occasional modern support (e.g. Coogan, p. 47, accepts the 750,000 figure). A more realistic estimate is a quarter of a million (Woodham-Smith, p. 11).

Nonetheless it is clear that O'Connell faced more people than Wellington at Waterloo. Wellington (who had been Prime Minister from 1828, and in fact granted Catholic emancipation, if unwillingly; Moody/Martin/Keogh/Kiely, p. 221) at Waterloo had faced only about 72,000 men under Napoleon. "Repeal" was of course O'Connell's basic political platform; he wanted repeal of the Union between Ireland and Great Britain. For this purpose, he organized some forty mass meetings in 1843 (Moody/Martin/Keogh/Kiely, p. 223).

Sadly, the Monster Meetings accomplished little. As Kee writes on p. 209, "The real question was whether the giant had a giant's strength. The closer O'Connell got to his goal the nearer came the moment when the question of how exactly he hoped to get Repeal if the government continued to stand firm had to be answered. This critical moment was in fact just seven weeks away." O'Connell published a platform of reforms he sought, then scheduled another Monster Meeting for Clontarf, where Brian Boru had won his great victory -- and close enough to Dublin Castle to seem like a direct threat (Coogan, pp. 47-48).

The day before the meeting was to take place (October 5), the government decided it didn't trust O'Connell's protestations of loyalty. They banned the meeting. O'Connell could surely have held it anyway. But he stood firm to his principle of loyalty, cancelled the meeting -- and saw his movement all but collapse. He had blinked, and from being distrusted by the British, he now saw himself distrusted by the extreme radicals also.

Shortly after this, the government had O'Connell arrested. He was convicted in a farce trial and was sentences to a fairly brief spell of minimum-security detention. But, by the time he was free to move about again, the potato blight had arrived. Repeal was a fine principle, but what Ireland needed was food; the Liberator perforce spent his last years trying to prod a stubbornly non-interventionist government to provide aid.

The "Iron Duke" is of course the Duke of Wellington, victor at Waterloo, and a former Prime Minister; although his official government role was relatively slight by this time, he had an important role as an advisor to Sir Robert Peel's government and was overjoyed at the ending of the Monster Meetings. Sir Robert Peel himself (1788-1850) was Prime Minister for most of this period; some of his legislation, ironically, was pro-Irish, but he was anti-Whig and anti-O'Connell (and later would earn deserved infamy for his lack of response to the potato famine). Basically he believed in small government -- in all the bad senses. - RBW

Bibliography

- Kee I: Robert Kee, The Most Distressful Country, being volume I of The Green Flag (covering the period prior to 1848), Penguin, 1972

Last updated in version 5.1
File: Zimm050B
Meeting of the Waters, The

DESCRIPTION: "There is not in the wide world a valley so sweet As the vale in whose bosom the bright waters meet" The magic of the spot "twas that friends, the beloved of my bosom, were near"

AUTHOR: Thomas Moore (1779-1852)
EARLIEST DATE: before 1835 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(2174))
KEYWORDS: lyric nonballad friend river
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (6 citations):
Moore-IrishMelodies-1846, pp. 16-17, "The meeting of the waters" (1 text)
O'Connor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 54, "The Meeting of the Waters" (1 text)
Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 80, "The Meeting of the Waters" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1415, p. 96, "The Meeting of the Waters" (3 references)
ADDITIONAL: Charles Sullivan, ed., Ireland in Poetry, p. 15, "The Meeting of the Waters" (1 text)
ST OCon054B (Partial)
Roud #30116
RECORDINGS:
Mrs. Bulger, "Meeting of the Waters" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(2174), "Meeting of the Waters", G Walker (Durham), 1797-1834; also Harding B 11(584), Johnson Ballads fol. 18 View 2 of 2, Harding B 45(23) View 3 of 3, Harding B 11(4323), Harding B 11(4189), Harding B 15(195a), Harding B 17(193a), ["The] Meeting of the Waters"
SAME TUNE:
The Head of Old Dennis (broadside Bodleian Harding B 17(193a))
NOTES [24 words]: This is among the most popular of Moore's poems; Granger's Index to Poetry cites four anthologies -- and none of them the usual suspects. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.1
File: OCon054B

Meg Steg

DESCRIPTION: Meg Steg had Bill John's baby; Bill and Jamie Jess "Bor't a hole in Meg's arse." Jock "kissed the cow ahint the tail"; the cow shit; crazy Jock licked the butter. Dirty arse went out to shear gorse and came home with the sickle in his arse.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1828 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2)
KEYWORDS: sex childbirth nonballad scatological
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Bord))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 168, "Meg Steg" (1 text)
Roud #15096
File: LyCr2168

Melancholy Accident, A -- The Death of M. Hodge

DESCRIPTION: "Far distant friends will drop a tear When of this accident they hear." A group of girls visits Betsy Green's school. With bad weather coming, parents gather six girls -- but the horses fall on a slope; Mira is killed instantly; Eliza succumbs weeks later

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan)
KEYWORDS: death horse injury disaster wreck
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 126, "A Melancholy Accident -- The Death of M. Hodge" (1 text)
ST GC126 (Partial)
Melancholy News of the Convict Ship George the Third

DESCRIPTION: "Farewell, dear friends and comrades all"; the singer, who is being transported, wishes those he leaves behind well. They strike a rock near the mouth of the Derwent in Tasmania. The guards keep them on the ship. 134 are killed in the wreck.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (Anderson-FarewellToOldEngland); Anderson dates his broadside c. 1835, but with no printer's data, this is probably just a guess.

KEYWORDS: transportation, wreck, disaster, death

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Mar 12, 1835 - Wreck of the _George III_ with the loss of 134 of 294 aboard (source: Wikipedia)

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Anderson-FarewellToOldEngland, pp. 155-156, "Melancholy News of the Convict Ship George the Third" (1 text)
Roud #V46385

CROSS-REFERENCES:

File: AnFa155

Mele No Ka Hula Ala'a-Papa (Song for the Hula Ala'a-Papa)

DESCRIPTION: Hawaaiian: "A Koolau wau, ike i ka ua." The singer encounters rain in Koolau. It accompanies dust storms and produces mud. The song is full of strange analogies.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Emerson, "The Hula," Unwritten Literature of Hawaii, according to Cohen)

KEYWORDS: foreign language, nonballad

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, p. 687, "Mele No Ka Hula Ala'a-Papa (Song for the Hula Ala'a-Papa)" (1 Hawaiian text plus English translation)

File: CAFS687P

Melven Vine

DESCRIPTION: "The melven vine grows around the tree" (x2). "Go write her name and send it to me." "Morris Jones his name shall be." "So rise you up and she will sit down."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1916 (Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana)

KEYWORDS: playparty, nonballad

FOUND IN: US (MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 66-67=Wolford/Richmond/Tillson-PlayPartyInIndiana, p. 143, "Melven Vine" (1 text)
Roud #7889

NOTES [24 words]: Roud appears to lump this with the much more common "Sleeping Beauty (Thorn Rose, Briar Rose)." This is possible, but I'd want more evidence. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.2

File: Wolf066

Memory of the Dead, The DESCRIPTION: "Who fears to speak of Ninety-Eight? Who blushes at the name?" The listeners are urged to recall the soldiers of the Irish rebellion, and to cherish their values.

AUTHOR: Words: Joseph Kells Ingram (1823-1907)
EARLIEST DATE: 1843 (Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion: "According to _The Nation_, 12 April, 1843, 'The Memory of the Dead' was first sung in a 'Symposium' held on St. Patrick's Day")
KEYWORDS: Ireland rebellion memorial
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1798 - the 1798 Rebellion
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (12 citations):
O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, pp. 48-49, "The Memory of the Dead" (1 text)
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 51, "The Memory of the Dead" (1 text, 1 tune)
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 136, "The Memory of the Dead" (1 text, 1 tune)
Galvin-IrishSongsOfResistance, pp. 39-40, "The Memory of the Dead" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 64, "The Memory of the Dead" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1418, p. 96, "Memory of the Dead. 'Who Fears to Speak of Ninety-Eight?''" (1 reference)
D'T, MEMRYDED*
ADDITIONAL: Edward Hayes, The Ballads of Ireland (Boston, 1859), Vol I, pp. 276-277, "The Memory of the Dead"
Kathleen Hoagland, editor, One Thousand Years of Irish Poetry (New York, 1947), pp. 505-506, "The Memory of the Dead (1798)" (1 text)
Charles Sullivan, ed., Ireland in Poetry, p. 90, "The Memory of the Dead" (1 text)
Donagh MacDonagh and Lennox Robinson, _The Oxford Book of Irish Verse_ (Oxford, 1958, 1979), pp. 80-82, "The Memory of the Dead" (1 text)
Roud #V5143
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Orange Yeomanry of '98" (lyrics)
SAME TUNE:
Easter Week (The Song of 1916) (Kathleen Hoagland, editor, One Thousand Years of Irish Poetry (New York, 1947), pp. 263-264)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Who Fears to Speak of Ninety-Eight?
NOTES [111 words]: According to Robert Kee in _The Most Distressful Country_ (being Volume I of _The Green Flag_), p. 203, this poem served to rehabilitate Ireland's memory of the 1798 rebellion, which at the time it was published "had been under a polite historical cloud for nearly half a century."
In an irony pointed out by the semi-parody "The Orange Yeomanry of '98," it was initially published anonymously.
In another irony, Ruth Dudley Edwards, _The Seven: The Lives and Legacies of the Founding Fathers of the Irish Republic_, Oneworld Books, 2016, p. 41 note, says that author Ingram was not an Irish nationalist because he thought Ireland incapable of governing itself. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.1
File: PGa039

Memphis Flu
DESCRIPTION: In 1929 people in Memphis are dying from influenza. Doctors say they will control the flu soon, but God shows his power by making them sick too. Influenza, "puts a pain in every bone/a few days you are gone/to a place in the ground called the grave."
AUTHOR: Words: Elder David Curry/Music: Benjamin Hanby
EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (recording, Elder Curry & congregation)
LONG DESCRIPTION: In 1929 people in Memphis are dying from influenza. Doctors say they will have the flu under control in a few days, but God shows his power by sending the doctors and nurses to sickbeds too. Influenza, "puts a pain in every bone/a few days you are gone/to a place in the ground called the grave." Ch.: "It was God's mighty hand/He is judging this old land...Yes, He killed the rich and poor/And he's going to kill more/If you don't turn away from your shame"
KEYWORDS: disease death religious doctor gods
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1918 - Influenza pandemic kills tens of millions worldwide.
FOUND IN: US(SE)
RECORDINGS:
Elder Curry & Congregation, "Memphis Flu" (OKeh 8857, 1931; rec. 1930; on Babylon)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Darling Nelly Gray" (tune)
NOTES [42 words]: The 1918 pandemic was the most devastating in [recent] history; smaller outbreaks occurred in later years. Curry may be conflating one of these with the 1918 disease, the symptoms of which were closer to his description than those of "normal" flu. - PJS
File: RcMemFlu

Men Are Like Ships
DESCRIPTION: "Men are like ships upon the main, Exposed to every gale, Each passion is a fatal blast That tears away a sail." "Each pleasure is a latent rock And life a stormy sea." "Yet oft... our pilot sleeps Or leaves his place to pride... the vessel drives ashore"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1832 (Journal of the Condor)
KEYWORDS: sailor ship religious nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation): Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, p. 359, "Men Are Like Ships" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #27508
File: HGam359

Men Awaiting Trial for the Murders in Phoenix Park, The DESCRIPTION: The men will be tried for murder on the evidence of the double-dyed informer Carey. He duped them and "pointed out the victims, the men that were to be stabbed"; "let us hope further fair play won't be denied." Carey should be given justice
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1966 (Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)
KEYWORDS: betrayal homicide trial nonballad
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
The Phoenix Park murders (source: primarily Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion, pp. 62, 63, 281-286.)
May 6, 1882 - Chief Secretary Lord Frederick Cavendish and the Under Secretary Thomas Henry Burke are murdered by a group calling themselves "The Invincible Society."
January 1883 - twenty seven men are arrested.
James Carey, one of the leaders in the murders, turns Queen's evidence.
Six men are condemned to death, four are executed (Joseph Brady is hanged May 14, 1883; Daniel Curley is hanged on May 18, 1883), others are "sentenced to penal servitude," and Carey is freed and goes to South Africa.
July 29, 1883 - Patrick O'Donnell kills Carey on board the "Melrose Castle" sailing from Cape Town to Durban.
Dec 1883 - Patrick O'Donnell is convicted of the murder of James Carey and executed in London (per Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast)
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation): Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion, p. 63, "A New Song on the Men Awaiting Trial for the Murders in Phoenix Park" (1 fragment)
Roud #V8797
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 26(427), "A New Song on The Men Awaiting Trial for the Murders in the Phoenix Park ("In the dark dismal dungeons and the cold prison cell," unknown, n.d.
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Phoenix Park Tragedy" (subject: the Phoenix Park murders) and references there NOTES [68 words]: Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion p. 62: "The Phoenix Park murders and their judicial sequels struck the popular imagination and were a gold-mine for ballad-writers: some thirty songs were issued on this subject, which was the last great cause to be so extensively commented upon in broadside ballads."
Zimmermann p. 63 is a fragment; broadside Bodleian Harding B 26(427) is the basis for the Men of County Clare, The

DESCRIPTION: Toast "The men of County Clare!" Brian Boru's call to defeat of the Danes, and de Valera's call "to strike for native land" were answered by "the mighty men of Clare". Toast "Our land a nation free again From Cork to Antrim's shore!"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1987 (Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan)
KEYWORDS: battle Ireland nonballad patriotic
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan 48, "The Men of County Clare" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #5237
NOTES [111 words]: At the Battle of Clontarf, 1014, Brian Boru defeated a combined force of Vikings and rebels from Leinster, but died in the battle. The song mentions Eamon de Valera. The Anglo-Irish Treaty of December 6, 1921 established the Irish Free State. The Civil War that followed was between the pro-treaty and anti-treaty factions. De Valera led the ant-treaty faction. (source: Irish Civil War at the Wikipedia site).
For more on Brian Boru, see the notes to "Remember the Glories of Brian the Brave." For de Valera, the Free State, and the Civil War, see e.g. the notes to "The Irish Free State" and "General Michael Collins"; also "The Boys from County Cork." - RBW
File: RcMoCoCl

Men of Merry England, The

DESCRIPTION: "Oh the men of merry, merry England, Search ye the wild world round, And take ye the best From the East to the West, Where are such to be found?" The name is "a passport to all that is free." The singer raises a glass to the people of England

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Henderson-VictorianStreetBallads)
KEYWORDS: patriotic nonballad drink
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henderson-VictorianStreetBallads, p. 131, "The Merry Men of England" (1 text)
Roud #13658
NOTES [24 words]: This song makes me wish we had a keyword along the lines of "willfully blind." Or at least "drawing conclusions with absolutely no evidence." - RBW

Last updated in version 4.4
File: HenV131

Men of the West, The

DESCRIPTION: "Forget not the boys of the heather Who rallied their bravest and best When Ireland was broken in Wexford And looked for revenge to the West." The brief success and final failure of the western rising are recounted.

AUTHOR: William Rooney
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (IRClancyMakem03)
KEYWORDS: rebellion Ireland death derivative
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1798 - Irish rebellion
Aug 22, 1798 - 1100 French troops under General Humbert land at Killala Bay in County Mayo. He would surrender on Sept. 8, and by May 23 the Mayo rising had been suppressed with some brutality
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Galvin-IrishSongsOfResistance, pp. 30-31, "The Men of the West" (1 text, 1 tune)
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 114, "The Men of the West" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT, MENWEST*

RECORDINGS:
The Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem, "The Men of the West" (on IRClancyMakem03)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Rosin the Beau" (tune) and references there
cf. "Eoghan Coir" (tune according to Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815, which tune we generally index as "Rosin the Beau")
cf. "Rouse, Hibernians" (subject)
cf. "The West's Asleep" (subject)
cf. "The Frenchmen" (subject)

NOTES [462 words]: The 1798 rising had already been crushed (see the notes on "The Shan Van Vogt" and "Boulavogue") when French general Humbert landed, largely on his own initiative, in County Mayo (August 1798). A few local peasants rose, and the local British forces were defeated at the "Races of Castlebar." Castlebar was one of the most ignominious defeats in history: The Loyalists were on the defensive, in prepared trenches; their forces are thought to have been larger, and they had the overwhelming edge in artillery. But their Irish militiamen fled, and the handful of steadier forces could not hold in those circumstances. Humbert, however, had only three ships, all frigates -- not enough men to do anything of significance. There was supposed to be another French force, under Hardy -- but it was delayed while its commander tried to pry the money needed to pay the troops out of the French government. Nor was the country particularly receptive when Humbert landed. Connaught had not rebelled at the height of the 1798 rising; a few French troops could not inspire a real rebellion. Worse still, the recruits he did get were Catholics, with few weapons, poor training, and no contact with the United Irish movement. Humbert hardly helped his cause by an explosive temper. Nor did he help his cause by having no money; he issued drafts on the "Republic of Connaught," but in a country that had no banks, few even understood the cheques they were given in lieu of payment for what was requisitioned. It's probably no surprise that Humbert soon had to surrender. He chased around the west of Ireland, and tried to open a way to Dublin, but eventually was trapped between forces led by Cornwallis and Lake; with no reliable troops except his French veterans, he had no choice but to yield to superior force on September 8, 1798. That was the effective end of Humbert's career; indeed, most references I checked don't even list his death date. (If it matters, Robert Kee's The Most Distressful Country, being Volume I of The Green Flag, gives a brief account of his later career on page 140: He fell out with Napoleon and went to the United States, participating in the Battle of New Orleans. He participated in Mexico's 1815 rebellion against Spain, then went back to the U.S. where he died in 1823.) There would be two more French naval expeditions in 1798; for the second, a single ship carrying Napper Tandy, see the notes to "The Wearing of the Green." The third and largest expedition, with Wolfe Tone aboard, is described under "The Shan Van Vogt." - RBW "Eoghan Coir" [the listed tune for this piece in some Irish sources] is a poem by Riocard Bairead (1740-1819) (source: "Riocard Bairead" in the Ar gCeantar and Beyond project at the Inver National School site). - BS

File: PGa030

Merchant Shipping Act, The

DESCRIPTION: "'Come all you fo'c'sle lawyers that always take delight By brooding o'er your troubles to set all matters right." The singer complains about the Merchant Shipping Act. Sailors must endure the bad food, the work, the bad officers, because of the Act

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Clements)
KEYWORDS: sailor hardtimes
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1894 - Merchant Shipping Act combines various earlier shipping regulations and adds more.
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Merchant's Daughter of Bristol, The

DESCRIPTION: A merchant's daughter loves a "gallant youth." Her parents ship him overseas. She takes ship to follow him to Padua. The parents follow her. She finds him condemned to die for religion. She prepares to die with him, but the authorities relent.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1725 (A Collection of Old Ballads); what is probably this piece was registered in 1595.

KEYWORDS: love, sailor, father, mother, brother, sister, ship, cross-dressing, reunion, death, execution, religious reprieve.

FOUND IN: Britain.

REFERENCES (4 citations):
- Hales/Furnival-Bishop/Percy's Folio Manuscript, volume III, pp. 374-384, "Maudline" (1 text)
- Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, pp. 216-224, "The Merchant's Daughter of Bristow" (1 text)
- Ashton-RealSailorSongs, #67 insert, "The Bristol Garland; or the Merchant's Daughter of Bristol" (1 text)

ST BeCo216 (Partial)

Roud #892

ALTERNATE TITLES:
- Fair Maudlin

NOTES [107 words]: Hyder E. Rollins, An Analytical Index to the Ballad-Entries (1557-1709) In the Register of the Company of Stationers of London, 1924 (I use the 1967 Tradition Press reprint with a new Foreword by Leslie Shepard), pp. 148-149, lists the following Stationer's Register entries for what is presumably this ballad:
- #1707, "the first parte of the merchauntes daughter of Bristoll," Thomas Creede, registered February 24, 1595.
- #1709, The merchants daughter of Bristoll," printer not listed, registered March 1, 1675.
- There is also
- #1708, "the second parte of the mercchantes Daughter of Bristowe," Thomas Creede, registered March 17, 1595.

Last updated in version 5.3

File: BeCo216

Merchant's Only Son, The [Laws M21]

DESCRIPTION: A young man's parents send him to America to keep him from marrying a poor girl. He reaches land despite his ship's wreck. He meets a rich girl who offers marriage, but he remains true to the girl at home. The rich girl gives him money to return to her.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1900 (broadside, Bodleian 2806 b.11(224))

KEYWORDS: transportation, exile, courting, poverty, ship, wreck, escape, return.

FOUND IN: US(MW), Ireland.

REFERENCES (4 citations):
- Laws M21, "The Merchant's Only Son"
- Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, pp. 48-49, "The North Star" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 74, "The Merchant's Only Son" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT 764, MERCHSON

Roud #1019

RECORDINGS:
- Martin Howley, "The North Star" (on IRClare01)
Merchant's Song, The

DESCRIPTION: "You are put under... by the merchants and the government right here in Newfoundland." The season is over. Fishermen go on the dole in winter. Merchants sell cheap necessities at high prices. Government won't help but say "go home and sell your cattle"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA-Leach)

KEYWORDS: greed poverty clothes commerce fishing hardtimes nonballad canal commerce factory farming

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

Roud #26131

RECORDINGS:
Leo Martin, "The Merchant's Song" (on MUNFLA-Leach)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Rigs of the Times" (subject: Newfoundland's truck system)
cf. "Squarin' Up Time" (subject: Newfoundland's truck system)
cf. "The Merchants of Fogo" (subject: Newfoundland's truck system)
cf. "The Merchants" (subject: Newfoundland's truck system)

NOTES [502 words]: Newfoundland, because it was so capital-poor, had few proper banks and little ability to invest. As a result, fishermen and others had to operate on the "truck system," where merchants advanced merchandise to fishers and farmers in return for their produce, which the merchants bought at whatever rate the merchants set (Major, p. 186).

O'Flaherty, pp. 4-5, describes it this way:
"The wage system that emerged in the Newfoundland fishery was also curiously tilted one way. In this system the merchants provided credit that enabled the fisherman to obtain the gear he needed and supplies for his family from that merchant's store; the fisherman then brought him his fish, thereby repaying what was owed. The 'settling up' time, when the fisherman's earnings from fish and the debt he owed the merchant were adjusted, was the fall, normally toward the end of October. A balance toward the fisherman might be settled in goods -- again at merchant-controlled prices from his store -- a combination of goods and cash, or (certainly by 1858) just cash. In some cases the fisherman might use the merchant as a banker, and simply leave any balances accruing in his hands. A balance in favour of the merchant, too often the case, would be added to the fisherman's debt, which of course increased when he was supplied anew. (If he was supplied anew. Withholding supplies could be as productive of distress as a poor fishery.)

"This 'truck' or credit system -- the terms came to be used synonymously in Newfoundland -- had some benefits to the fisherman as well as the merchant. Obviously, the availability of credit meant that the fisherman didn't have to draw on his own savings, supposing he had any, to get his voyage underway. The system also forced the merchant, to some degree, to share the risks of catching the often elusive cod.... The fact that this credit/wage method operated, though in a reduced and altered form, into the 1950s and that efforts to end it, in particular the assault on it in the early 20th century by W. F. Croaker [for whom see 'Croaker's Dream']... were resisted not just by the merchants but by the fishermen themselves, may indicate that it was less of an enslavement than many have claimed. [Or it might indicate that most Newfoundlander flat-out hated anything that smacked of progress].... Yet the credit system as it operated in Newfoundland offered the merchant ample room for the exercise of arbitrary power, and it would be disingenuous to suggest that such power was not often abused."

Like most such systems, those who had to live under it resented it. (Compare the complaints in "The Farmer Is the Man." It's the same problem.) In fact the merchants seem to have been only moderately rapacious. But it was hard for the fishermen to see that, given that they lived their entire lives in alternating between poverty (in years when the fishing was good) and possible starvation (when it was not).
For more examples of the effects of the truck system, see the cross-references - RBW

Bibliography

Last updated in version 5.3
File: ML3TMeSo

Merchants of Fogo, The

DESCRIPTION: "Come all ye toil-warn fishermen ... lend an ear; Beware of those cursed merchants, in their dealings they're not fair; For fish they'll give half value." All local merchants are thieves except the Hodge brothers; "they've showed justice to each man"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland)

KEYWORDS: greed accusation commerce nonballad

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 149, "The Merchants of Fogo" (1 text)

Roud #17749

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Merchant's Song" (subject: Newfoundland's truck system) and references there

NOTES [490 words]: Fogo, on Fogo Island, is up the East Coast about 170 miles north of Saint John's. Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland states "This song with its coarse slander and gossip was made up in praise of the Hodge Brothers [by] ... a man ... hoping to curry favor." Mr Hodge, however, was not impressed. - BS

That this is about real merchants seems likely; the Earles were a well-known merchant family, and they worked in Fogo: "Another long-lived Fogo merchant establishment, and the one most familiar to older residents today, was run by the Earle family" (Clarke, p. 153). DictNewfLabrador does not mention a Pat Earle, but we have a likely relative:

EARLE, HENRY J. (1841-1934). b. St. John's 25 Dec.; established business on own account 1870; M[ember] H[ouse of] A[sembly] 1900-1913; d. Glovertown 26 Dec... Earle went to Twillingate in 1864 as a clerk for Slade and Co. When that firm was dissolved Earle and a partner took over the business. After this partnership ended Earle continued to operate a general fishery supply business based in Fogo. He was elected MHA for Fogo four times as a liberal. (DictNewfLabrador, p. 95).

Based on Clarke, pp. 153-154, Henry John Earle was the patriarch of the Earle family, going into partnership with John W. Owen in 1869 and taking sole ownership of the Fogo business in 1893. There is a photo of him on p. 153 of Clarke.

In 1912 the company became "Earle, Sons & Company"; in 1917, "Earle Sons & Company Ltd," run by Henry's son Harold. The various Earle operations, which came to include a canning plant as well as stores and which were eventually run by Brian Earle, shut down in 1967/1968 (Clarke, p. 154).

Clarke also gives us a hint about 'Thomas Hodge and John Hodge." On p. 152, Clarke says, "From the 1870s on, the Watermans were partnered with Thomas and Richard Hodge, Thomas having been William Waterman and Company's Fogo agent.... As of 1871 Thomas had set up premises on Wigwam Point.... Later, another member of the family, John Wheadon Hodge, the company's agent at Tilting, bought out the company's assets on both Fogo and Change Islands. John W. Hodge ran the enterprise until 1918 when, on the death of his two Sons (sic.), he retired to Toronto." Pickett, pp. 128-129, says that "In the 1860s the Slade interests in Fogo were sold to John W. Owen [eventually to be taken over by the Earles] and a second major merchant establishment was started by Thomas W. Hodge (these two firms were the major merchant establishments in Fogo well into the Twentieth Century, known asr owner changes, as Henry Earle and Sons and the Newfoundland-Labrador Export Company."

A good look through the Earle Company records would probably either find a Pat Earle or tell us who is really meant (since the name might have been distorted or deliberately hidden). This hints that the other characters in the song could also be identified, if one could check the Fogo records. - RBW
Merchants of the Bay

DESCRIPTION: The merchants of the village of St Peter's Bay are named and characterized: good and bad. "Oh those were spirit stirring times, some twenty years ago" Times have changed for the worse; some remaining moderns are named.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland)

KEYWORDS: commerce nonballad

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 23-24, "Merchants of the Bay" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #12478

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Twenty Years Ago (Forty Years Ago)" (tune)

NOTES [11 words]: St Peter's is on the north coast of Kings, Prince Edward Island - BS

File: Dib023

Merchants, The

DESCRIPTION: "It's all about the cruel rogues of merchants No pity or love do they show." They live a life of ease and luxury and sell poor goods and show no charity. But death found rich and poor on Florizel and Titanic and will find the merchants too.

AUTHOR: Paddy Dover

KEYWORDS: hardheartedness poverty commerce nonballad

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 78, "The Merchants" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #26131

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Merchant's Song" (subject: Newfoundland's truck system) and references there

NOTES [315 words]: Florizel and Titanic, of course, are famous Newfoundland wrecks with songs of their own. - BS

It's a sad irony to note that, on the Titanic at least, losses were heavier among the third class passengers (who were down below) than the rich in first class.

The bitterness in this song is not at all surprising. Newfoundland was a very poor place, with much of the population isolated and ill-educated and unable to really express its desires politically -- in an island where the population was scattered in "outports" with no connection but by sea, and where every town was too small to have local politics or taxes (in 1901, there were only 18 towns with a population of even 1000 people; Noel, p. 18 n. 1), it was almost impossible to form a political movement anywhere in St. John's.

The effect of this was to put control of almost everything in the (relatively) well-off hands of the St. John's merchants. J. D. Rogers concluded that "the merchant 'acted as banker, mint, and clearing-house, besides acting as money-lender, export-agent, and import-agent" (Noel, p. 8). In other words, the people had to sell their fish and crops to the merchants at the merchants' price, and they had to buy everything else at the merchants' price.

The result that the merchants of St. John's (often referred to as "Water Street," after the road on which many of them were located) had disproportionate influence -- and were perceived as having even more than they did. In the early years of the twentieth century, political, economic, and even physical conflicts between "Water Street" and the ordinary people were common; see e.g. Cadigan, pp. 1, 170-171 (there are several other passages in the book affirming this same point).

For background on the Florizel, see "The Wreck of the Steamship Florizel." For the Titanic, see "The Titanic (XV) ("On the tenth day of April 1912") (Titanic #15)." - RBW

Bibliography

- Cadigan: Sean T. Cadigan, Newfoundland and Labrador: A History, University of Toronto Press, 2009
- Noel: S. J. R. Noel, Politics in Newfoundland, University of Toronto Press, 1971

Last updated in version 6.1

File: LeBe078

Merie Sungen the Muneches Bennen Ely (Merry Sang the Monks of Ely)

DESCRIPTION: "Merie sungen the munches binnen Ely, Tha Cnut ching reu therby; Roweth, cni(c)tes, noer the land, And here we thes moneches saeng." "Merry sang the monks of Ely, When King Cnut rowed there by, Row, knights, near the land, And hear we the monks sing."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1300 (Trinity College/Cambridge MS 1105)

KEYWORDS: royalty clergy river nonballad MiddleEnglish

FOUND IN: Britain(England)

REFERENCES (11 citations):
- Stevick-OneHundredMiddleEnglishLyrics 1, "Myrie songen the monkes binne Ely)" (1 text)
- Brown/Robbins-IndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse, #164
- DigitalIndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse #3487

- John Edwin Wells, _A Manual of the Writings in Middle English 1050-1400_, 1916 (references are to the 1930 fifth printing with three supplements), p. 490, "The Canute Song" (1 text)
- E. K. Chambers, _English Literature at the Close of the Middle Ages_, Oxford, 1945, 1947, p. 73, "(Merie sungen the muneches binnen Ely)" (1 text); p. 177 (the same text, but this time with its Latin context in the Liber Eliensis)

J. R. R. Tolkien, "The Homecoming of Beorhtnoth Beorhthelm's Son," published in _Essays and Studies for 1953_; I use the version published in _The Tolkien Reader_, Ballantine, 1966, p. 5, "(no title)" (1 text, with presumably the original orthography)

MANUSCRIPT: Oxford, Bodleian Library MS. Laud misc. 647 (Bodleian 1595), folio 45

MANUSCRIPT: Cambridge, Trinity College MS O.2.1 (1105), folio 73

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Judas" [Child 23] (subject: The Earliest English Ballad) and references there

NOTES [2496 words]: Gummere, according to Chambers, p. 177, offered the hypothesis that there were ballads before the transcription of "Judas" [Child 23], usually held to be the earliest ballad. This single-verse fragment was the only supporting evidence for the hypothesis. Greene, _Early English Carols_, accepted this hypothesis to the extent of including this fragment among the carols, and Julian, p. 208, also calls it a carol, and actually attributes it to King Canute (and gives a very different version of the text). A Scandinavian scholar by the name of Just Bing joked about those different versions by saying that the monks of Ely rowed near the land ("Merie sungen the moneches saeng"). On that basis, I include the piece. But a great many cautions are required. For one thing, Lawson, p. 141 seems to thinks (I say "seems" because Lawson is an incredibly incomprehensible writer) that the monks of Ely wrote about this to commemorate a visit by Cnut -- and used it to bolster their claim that he gave them a charter of liberties. But no such charter has survived.

There are also questions about the source. The document containing the text is the so-called _Liber
Eliensis, the most important copy of which is Cambridge, Trinity College MS. O.2.1 (or MS. 1105). (The Liber is also found in Bodleian MS. Laud misc. 647 and in a copy at Ely. In all three cases, it is the only piece of Middle English poetry in the volume.) James, volume III, p. 79, describes the vellum manuscript at Cambridge as "Cent. xii late, in a beautiful hand." That is, based on the handwriting, it appears to have been written between 1150 and 1200. On the basis of the manuscript, Stevick (e.g.) dates "Merry Sang...." to c. 1150. But while James was a most excellent paleographer and cataloger (and I mean that very strongly -- he catalogued all the early books in the Cambridge libraries and several other places, and his catalogs are still in use today. Interestingly, he was also a successful author of ghost stories and a fantasy novel, The Five Jars), paleography is an imprecise art. MS. O.2.1 is written mostly in Latin (the English poem is an insertion into a Latin text). Latin writing styles changed dramatically between the twelfth and fourteenth centuries -- but only very slightly between the twelfth and thirteenth. A thirteenth century hand would typically be somewhat narrower than a twelfth, and the symbols for abbreviation, if used, were typically less artistic (Thompson, pp. 436-455, esp. p. 450). But the changes were small enough that possibility must always be admitted that a manuscript which appears to date from the twelfth century may in fact be from the thirteenth. Indeed, when I looked at the photographs of the manuscript (now available on the Cambridge library site at https://mss-cat.trin.cam.ac.uk/viewpage.php?index=629&history=1), I thought the text was thirteenth century, not twelfth. I am not the paleographer that James was, and I didn't study it as much; I only say this to make it clear that paleographic dating is a chancy thing.

And the content of the manuscript gives several arguments for a later date. According to Gordon, p. 7, a primary source of the Liber Eliensis was the history of one Richard -- and this Richard was also credited with the romance of Hereward the Wake. But the Hereward romance is clearly built up mostly of legends. It is much easier to understand how a late book would take him seriously than an early book.

A second argument for a late date is the inclusion in the Cambridge MS. of the "Passion of St Thomas of Canterbury" (James, p. 81). It appears this is in the original hand. Also included is a catalog of the Kings of England, ending with Henry III (James, p. 81), who wasn't even born until the thirteenth century. James, p. 80, appears to say that section is in a thirteenth century hand. But, given the nature of hands of this period, all we can say with certainty is that it is in a different hand, not that it is later. (The fact that multiple hands were involved is no surprise; the manuscript is very miscellaneous.)

Looking at the dates of these materials, we note that Thomas Becket died in 1170, and was canonized in 1173. The main tribute to him was by John of Salisbury (died 1180), who worked under Becket (he was apparently present at the murder) and wrote the Archbishop's life immediately after his martyrdom (Kunitz/Haycraft, p. 292). Other tributes to him would probably have been written in Canterbury or London, not Ely, so we must allow time for a copy to make it to Ely. Henry III ascended in 1216, and died in 1272. His inclusion in the kings list may well be an addition, but this is not certain. Thus, due to the mention of Becket, the earliest possible date for our manuscript is c. 1175, and a date fifty or more years later, in the reign of Henry III, is perfectly possible. If we take the latter date, it eliminates the problem of this alleged carol coming into existence so long before all other known ballads (since we are now only a century or so earlier than "Judas"). But we should not stop with paleographic evidence; we must still look at the internal evidence of the poem.

One point stands out dramatically: Although the poem claims to be by King Canute (GArnett-IHearAmericaSinging/Gosse, p. 62), and this claim is actually accepted by GArnett-IHearAmericaSinging/Gosse, and also by Julian, p. 208 (and even Tolkien, p. 5, seems to think it an early reference to Canute), "the poem is in Middle English." GArnett-IHearAmericaSinging/Gosse note that all but two words of the original are "good modern English." Indeed, allowing for sound shifts, it appears there is only one ("binne," line 1) which is not directly related to its modern English equivalent.

But King Canute, who came to the throne in 1016 and died in 1035, did not speak Middle English. The language did not even exist then -- and Canute, who was a Danish invader, spoke as his native language a form of Old Norse. Old Norse and Old English were close enough that they could sometimes be mutually understood with effort -- but what are the odds that Canute produced a poem even in Old English that could be converted into Middle English? Not even Gummere accepts that part (Gummere, p. 298).

For that matter, Hodgart, p. 74, correctly points out that Old English and Old Norse poetry was not written in rhyming couplets; it was alliterative verse. So why would Canute compose in a form that didn't even exist in his time? Hodgart's conclusion is that this piece "does not prove that the genre of ballads is of great antiquity; it is simply part of the evidence showing that the ballads rest on verse forms which had been current since the twelfth century."

Keen, p. 34, calls this "one of the earliest snatches of genuine popular poetry" but adds "of the post-conquest period."

The provenance of the manuscript also raises concerns. There appears to be no question but that the Cambridge manuscript is from Ely. (It would have come to Cambridge after Henry VIII dissolved the monasteries.) It includes a special mark in the margin of the first page which is characteristic of the Ely library. The contents includes a list of obituaries of benefactors and monks of Ely (James, p. 79) and a catalog of bishops and abbots of Ely (James, p. 80). But this raises another interesting question. The song's description of Ely is accurate enough (it is an island). But would the residents of Ely have wanted to remember any associations with Canute in the period immediately after his reign?

It is true that Canute gave substantial gifts to Ely (Hindley, p. 313). This they surely appreciated. But then things got complicated. There are several reasons why the residents of Ely might not want to remember Canute. For starters, he may have been suspicious of them. A mention in a manuscript from Ely (I think the same manuscript as the one containing this song, although the note in Barlow, p. 32, is unclear) says that the future King Edward the Confessor was given to Ely by his parents to be educated as a monk. Barlow, p. 33, goes on to explain why this is effectively impossible. But Edward might have been sheltered there during the Danish invasions (Barlow, pp. 33-34), giving Canute reason to wonder about the monks' loyalty. Could he have rowed by, or visited, for purposes of spying?

Even more complicated is the story of Canute's stepson Alfred.

Canute, when he came to the throne, married as his second wife Emma of Normandy, the widow of the old King Ethelred II (O'Brien, pp. ix, xvii). Emma already had two sons (Alfred and Edward) and at least one daughter by Ethelred. When Canute died, there was a succession crisis, since he had two sons who were possible successors -- one, Harthcanute, by Emma, his more official wife (O'Brien, p. xix) and the older, Harold I Harefoot, by his less official wife Ælfgifu, whom Canute had married first, but never put aside when he made Emma his queen (O'Brien, p. xi). Let's put that another way: Ælfgifu (the mother of Harold) was Canute's wife even after he married Emma (the mother of Harthcanute), but Ælfgifu was never his Queen; Emma held that role. The marriage with Ælfgifu seems to have been at least partly for love (although it was also politically useful), that with Emma for politics. With Canute dead, there arose a Harold/Ælfgifu faction and a Harthcanute/Emma faction. In the end, it proved moot -- Harold got the throne first, but died without issue in 1040, and then Harthcanute took the throne and died without issue in turn in 1042. But in 1036, before any of that was sorted out, Alfred, one of Emma's sons by Ethelred, decided to come to England (Humble, p. 174; Walker, p. 15, suggests that both Alfred and Edward invaded England at their mother's request).

Whatever Alfred's reason for coming, he was captured, bound, taken to Ely, and blinded (Swanton, pp. 158-160). He would soon die of the wounds he suffered (O'Brien, p. 180). There is disagreement in the sources whether Earl Godwine or King Harold Harefoot is to blame (Walker, p. 17). There are no accounts which blame the folk at Ely -- but it must have been a painful memory. If I had been from Ely, I wouldn't want to remember the reign of Canute!

On the other hand, that feeling might fade over time, since Ely did not directly oppose Canute (indeed, at his great victory of Assandon/Ashington, they wrote that they had carried the relics of St. Wendreda -- whoever that was -- to help him win the victory; Bolton, pp. 88-89), and many later kings had trouble with the island. Ely for a time was the base of the rebels associated with Hereward the Wake, the last real rebel against William the Conqueror (Keen, pp. 12-13 -- although Keen notes on p. 19 that it was the monks of Ely who negotiated with William to give the place up). Danish invaders also took over Ely for a time (Brondsted, pp. 100-101), so the locals definitely had trouble in the Conqueror's reign.

William the Conqueror's son William Rufus had trouble with just about everyone, so there was nothing special about his problems with Ely -- but no one wanted to remember his reign.

Things were even worse a third of a century later, in the reign of Stephen, who was King from 1135 to 1154. The reason is that Bishop Nigel of Ely opposed Stephen (Bradbury, p. 30). Stephen would attack Ely over their quarrel (Bradbury, p. 78). Later, the active rebel Geoffrey de Mandeville defied Stephen from the area of Ely (Bradbury, p. 130).

A case could be made that the piece must date before 1189, when Richard I became king. When he went on crusade, Richard named William Longchamp, Bishop of Ely, as one of his justiciars (Gillingham, p. 217) -- i.e. Longchamp ran the country while Richard was away. The flip side is, Longchamp had been named bishop by Richard after Richard had appropriated much of the property of the previous bishop when that bishop died intestate (McLynn, p. 125). And Longchamp proved a very unsuccessful governor. Still, he was from Ely; if the song were composed after Richard's accession, the Lionheart might have been a logical name to plug in rather than Canute.
But that's a very hypothetical chain of reasoning; I don't buy it.

Could the poem be even later? As we have seen, the date of the manuscript does not absolutely preclude a thirteenth century date. But I can't think of a reason for composing such a piece in the thirteenth century. So the twelfth century date, even though we can't prove it by the manuscript, seems likely. Still, I think we cannot claim this as by Canute, we cannot be certain that it existed before the thirteenth century -- and, frankly, we can't even be sure it's a carol. It's just a fragment of a Middle English poem. It may have passed from scribe to scribe in its day. That hardly makes it a folk song.

Thus, although we cannot prove that the poem was in existence in the twelfth century, there is a fair amount of reason to think it might have been written in the twelfth rather than the eleventh (which would still make it a century more recent than Canute, and also make it much more likely that it would be in something recognizable as Middle English). By that time, the bad associations with Canute might well have been forgotten by the Ely monks, and the locals might have wanted to remember a king who, if not exactly monogamous, was (other than William the Conqueror) probably the most efficient monarch of the previous two centuries. (As Humble notes on p. 46, a typical public relations method for kings was "deliberately evoking memories of the last efficient king to rule." Why wouldn't a monastery do the same? Especially since Canute, after becoming Christian, became enthusiastic about attending services and supporting the church.)

The simplest explanation for the existence of this piece would seem to be that the monks of Ely were trying to butter up Canut, as they had with their claim of carrying saints' relics for him. But why?
What good would it do to make such a claim when Canut and his dynasty were gone? Ultimately I think this poem remains a mystery.

All that said, even if this is as old as sometimes claimed, is it a ballad? riedman, pp. 15-16, says that "In the course of a single volume, Sir Edmund Chambers tries these couplets as parts of a boating song, carol, pure lyric, and ballad-like narrative. Long ago Grundtvig concluded that they were the refrain of some lost epic or chronicle poem." So: Old? Maybe. Ballad? Maybe. Traditional?
Well, maybe.

Folk song or not, mystery or not, one strange place this item did show up, however, is an essay by Lewis Carroll. He made it the centerpiece of his introduction to "The Guildford Gazette Extraordinary," one of his more obscure publications. It doesn't really tell us anything about this piece, and Carroll modernized the lyrics, but if you really want to see what he had to say about it, the essay can be found on pp. 327-330 of Hudson. - RBW

Bibliography

- Barlow: Frank Barlow, Edward the Confessor (one of the English Monarchs series), University of California Press, 1970
- Bolton: Timothy Bolton, Cnut the Great (one of the Yale English Monarchs series), Yale
  University Press, 2017
- Bradbury: Jim Bradbury, Stephen and Matilda: The Civil War of 1139-1153, 1996 (I use the 1998 Sutton paperback)
  published 1960; English translation, Pelican, 1965
- Chambers: E. K. Chambers, English Literature at the Close of the Middle Ages, Oxford, 1945, 1947
- Garrett-IHearAmericaSinging/Gosse: Richard Garrett-IHearAmericaSinging and Edmund Gosse, English Literature: An Illustrated Record four volumes, MacMillan, 1903-1904 (I used the 1935 edition published in two volumes)
- Gordon: E. V. Gordon, editor, The Battle of Maldon, 1937 (I use the 1966 Appleton-Century-Crofts American paperback edition)
- Gummere: Francis B. Gummere, Old English Ballads, Ginn & Company, 1894, 1897
- Hindley: Geoffrey Hindley, A Brief History of the Anglo-Saxons: The Beginnings of the English Nation, Carroll & Graf, 2006
- Hudson: Derek Hudson, Lewis Carroll, Constable (MacMillan), 1954
- James: M(ontague) R(hodes) James, Litt.D, The Western Manuscripts in the Library of Trinity Mermaid (II), The
DESCRIPTION: "To yon fause stream that, near the sea, Hides mony an elf and plum... A witless knight did come." A mermaid comes up to lure him into the water. She convinced him; he holds out his hand, and she laughs as he is sucked into the water, never to rise
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1808 (Finlay, according to Bell)
KEYWORDS: mermaid/man river death
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, pp. 186-188, "The Mermaid" (1 text)
ST BeCo186 (Partial)
File: BeCo186

Mermaid (III), The
DESCRIPTION: The singer day dreams at the wheel of the Pretty Peggy, bound for Dundee. A mermaid jumps on board. She wants him to go with her but he "cannot breathe the brine." If she joins him on land they could get rich with her on display. She slaps him. He wakes
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA/Leach)
KEYWORDS: sea ship dream humorous mermaid/man courting injury
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
Roud #18227
RECORDINGS:
Jacob Noseworthy, "The Mermaid" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
File: RcJNoTMe

Mermaid, The [Child 289]
DESCRIPTION: A group of sailors see a mermaid (meaning that they can expect a shipwreck).
Various crew members lament the families they are leaving behind. The ship sinks.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1765?
KEYWORDS: mermaid/man ship sea wreck
FOUND IN: Britain(England(All),Scotland(Aber)) US(All) Canada(Mar,Newf) Ireland
REFERENCES (59 citations):
Child 289, "The Mermaid" (6 texts)
Bronson 289, "The Mermaid" (42 versions)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 289, "The Mermaid" (5 versions: #2, #25, #30, #35, #40)
Greig/Duncan 27, "The Mermaid" (8 texts, 3 tunes) {A=Bronson's #16, B=#2, C=#6}
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 333-334, "The Mermaid" (1 text plus a fragment)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 42, "The Mermaid" (3 texts plus 1 fragment, 4 tunes) {Bronson's #17, #41, #24, #14}
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 151-152, "The Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune) {compare Bronson's #41}
Bronson-Eckstorm/Smyth-BritishBalladsFromMaine pp. 363-368, "The Mermaid" (3 texts plus a fragment and a version from the Forget-me-not Songster, 1 tune) {Bronson's #25}
Flanders-AncientBalladsTraditionallySungInNewEngland 4, pp. 271-280, "The Mermaid" (4 texts plus a fragment, 3 tunes) {E=Bronson's #39}
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 101-102, "The Mermaid" (1 text)
Randolph 39, "The Wrecked Ship" (3 texts, 2 tunes) {Bronson's #42, #40}
Abrahams/Riddle-ASingerAndHerSongs, pp. 83-85, "Merrimac at Sea" (1 text, 1 tune, which is mostly this although the first verse probably floated in from somewhere else)
Davis-TraditionalBalladsOfVirginia 48, "The Mermaid" (8 texts plus 4 fragments, the last of which may not be this song; 2 tunes entitled "The Stormy Winds," "The Mermaid"; 1 more version mentioned in Appendix A) {Bronson's #22, #12}
Davis-MoreTraditionalBalladsOfVirginia 44, pp. 344-349, "The Mermaid" (3 texts, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore 48, "The Mermaid" (2 texts)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore 41, "The Mermaid" (1 excerpt, 1 tune)
Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 23, "The Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune) {compare Bronson's #9}
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #175, "The Mermaid" (1 text)
Hudson-FolksongsOfMississippi 26, p. 127, "The Mermaid" (1 short text)
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 57, "The Ship A-Raging" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scarborough-ASongCatcherInSouthernMountains, pp. 189-190, "The Mermaid" (1 text)
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 26, "The Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp. 106-107, "The Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #31}
Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 16, "The Royal George" (1 text)
Blondahl-NewfoundlandersSing, p. 90, "Black Friday" (1 text, 1 tune)
Smith/Hatt/Fowke-SeaSongsBalladFromNineteenthCenturyNovaScotia, p. 38, "Then Turn Out You Jolly Tars" (1 fragment)
Thomas-BalladMakingInMountainsOfKentucky, pp. 34-35, (no title) (1 fragment)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 673-674, "The Mermaid" (1 text)
Friedman-Viking/PenguinBookOfFolkBallads, p. 404, "The Mermaid" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Stout-FolkloreFromIowa 8, pp. 14-15, "The Mermaid" (1 text plus a fragment)
Cazden/Haufrecht/Studer-FolkSongsOfTheCatskills 71, "The Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune)
Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales, pp. 216-217, "(The Murmaid)" (1 text)
Thompson-APioneerSongster 9, "The Mermaid" (1 text)
Musick-JAF-TheOldAlbumOf-William-A-Larkin 33, "The Sailiers" [sic] (1 text)
Niles-BalladBookOfJohnJacobNiles 62, "The Mermaid" (2 texts, 1 tune)
VaughanWilliams/Lloyd-PenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs, pp. 70-71, "The Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #36}
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #13, "The Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune) {Bronson's #4}
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 84, "While the Raging Seas Did Roar" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Oxford)
Cohen/Seeger/Wood-NewLostCityRamblersSongbook, pp. 98-99, "Waves on the Sea" (1 text, 1 tune)
Botkin-TreasuryOfNewEnglandFolklore, pp. 562-563, "The Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune)}
Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 147-149, "The Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 560, "The Mermaid" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Shay-AmericanSeaSongsAndChanteys, p. 124, (no title) (1 fragment, almost certainly of this song)
Kinsey-SongsOfTheSea, pp. 156-157, "The Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune)
Spaeth-ReadEmAndWeep, pp. 71-73, "The Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune)
Pound-AmericanBalladsAndSongs, 11, pp. 26-27, "Three Sailor Boys" (1 text)
Cox-FolkSongsSouth33, "The Mermaid" (1 text)
Gainer-FolkSongsFromTheWestVirginiaHills, pp. 98-99, "The Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Ashton-RealSailorSongs, #41, "The Mermaid"; #42, "The Seaman's Distress" (2 texts)
Palmer-OxfordBookOfSeaSongs50, "The Seaman's Distress" (1 text, 1 tune)
Heart-Songs, pp. 360-361, "The Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #150, "The Mermaid" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1422, p. 96, "The Mermaid" (1 reference)
Forget-Me-Not-Songster, p. 79, "The Mermaid" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 93, "The Mermaid" (1 text)
Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex, ZN2143, "On a Friday morning we set sail"
DT 289, MERMDFR" MERMAID3* WAVESSEA* MERMAIDS*
ADDITIONAL: Walter de la Mare, _Come Hither_, revised edition, 1928; #413, "One Friday Morn" (1 text)
Henry Randall Waite, _Carmina Collegensia: A Complete Collection of the Songs of the American Colleges_ first edition 1868, expanded edition, Oliver Ditson, 1876, part III, p. 47, "The Mermaid" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST C289 (Full)
Roud #124
RECORDINGS:
Emma Dusenberry, "The Mermaid" (AFS, 1936; on LC58) {Bronson's #40}
William Howell, "The Mermaid" (on FSBBAL2)
 Bascom Lamar Lunsford, "The Mermaid Song" (on BLLunsford01) {cf. Bronson's #32}
New Lost City Ramblers, "Raging Sea" (on NLCR02)
Ernest Stoneman & His Blue Ridge Corn Shuckers, "The Raging Sea, How It Roars" (Victor Vi 21648, 1928) {Bronson's #20}
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 c.17(273), "The Mermaid" ("One Friday morning we set sail"), W. Armstrong (Liverpool), 1820-1824; also Harding B 11(3641), Harding B 11(3642), 2806 c.17(272), Harding B 11(2228), Harding B 11(2519), Firth c.12(413), 2806 c.17(271), 2806 c.17(275), Harding B 11(2404), Harding B 11(2603), Harding B 11(2403), "The Mermaid"; 2806 c.13(248), Firth c.12(414), Harding B 11(3146), "The Mermaid" or "The Gallant Ship"
LOCsinging, sb20297a, "The Mermaid," H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878
CROSS-REFERENCES:
 cf. "Three Times Round" (verse form and some lines)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Sinking Ship
Oh, the Lamp Burns Dimly Down Below
The Stormy Winds Do Blow
The Gallant Ship

NOTES [1199 words]:
Legend has it that a ship that sees a mermaid will be destroyed. (Some versions say that all aboard are to be drowned as well, but they could hardly drown at the time; else how would anyone know what destroyed the ship?) Ord-BothySongsAndBallads also notes that it was considered unlucky for ships to sail on a Friday -- and most versions do seem to involve sailing on that day.

One of the verses of this, "three times around went our gallant ship," seems to have circulated independently as a nursery rhyme; see, e.g., Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #862, p. 322. It is often stated that mermaids were sailors' mistaken impression of manatees or dugongs (so, e.g., Benet, p. 715; Jones-Larousse, p. 300; Pickering, p. 193). But Cordingly, pp. 165-166, makes the noteworthy points that, first, manatees and dugongs aren't very attractive. Second, and even more decisive, dugongs live in the Indian Ocean and in the coastal areas of Indonesia and Australia -- areas European sailors would not have seen. Similarly, manatees are found in Florida, the West Indies, Brazil, and the Congo. Neither mammal is found anywhere near European waters. In a side note, Dawkins, p. 216, notes that the Afrotheres, which includes the order of Sirenia (dugongs and manatees) are the most remote of all placental mammals from modern humans, having split off from the human lineage more than 100 million years ago. Thus the dugongs and manatees are, logically, the mammals least likely to attract human male interest. Dawkins himself comments on p. 222 that the sailors "who first spotted the likeness must have been at sea for a very long time." He adds two rather interesting points. First, "Sirenians are, with whales, the only mammals that never come on land at any time." In other words, you will not see a manatee or dugong "sitting on a rock," as in this song. Second, "Their vegetarian died requires an immensely long gut and a low energy budget. The high-speed aquabatics of a carnivorous dolphin contrast dramatically with the lazy drifting of a vegetarian dugong: guided missile to dirigible balloon." Thus the Sirenians neither look nor act anything like mermaids.

If there is any physical reason for the Sirenians being identified with mermaids, it may be because of the way they nurse their young. Binney, p. 206, makes the interesting point that "While suckling their single young the [female Sirenians] cradle the babies to their breasts with one flipper in the manner of human mothers." Simpson/Roud, p. 234, make the interesting observation that mermaids seem to have been originally tailless -- an elaboration of the siren legend. (Hence the name Sirenia for the order containing the dugongs and manatees.) Which makes sense -- how could a warm-blooded mammal like a mermaid (and it is obvious that they are mammalian!) have a cold-blooded, scaled fish tail? A dolphin's tail, maybe, but a fish's tail?

To be sure, one of the earliest documented sightings, by two of Henry Hudson's crew in his Northeast Passage exploration of 1608, described a creature with a porpoise's tail -- although with the coloration of a mackerel. The skin of the creature's upper body was very white, the hair very dark. Hudson noted the sighting, but did not see the alleged creature himself (Mancall, p. 58).

Cordinally, p. 168, does note an upsurge in alleged mermaid sightings "during the age of exploration," and cites mentions from seemingly hard-headed observers as Hudson's crew. Possibly the dugongs and manatees helped along the transition from siren to creature half-human half-fish -- but even this would be hard to prove. Maybe the sailors were seeing Sirenians -- or maybe their long absence from home made them particularly lusty, and the scurvy they probably experienced made them particularly imaginative. He also notes, p. 169, some instances of people allegedly keeping mermaids. It would be nice if someone had kept a skeleton....

In any case, we see our first human half-fish creature in mythology before Europeans reached the seas where the sirenians are found: The demon Melusine/Melusina, who, when first seen, was a beautiful woman Sunday through Friday, but who hid on Saturdays because her half-fish form (he notes that "flatterers are like to nickers (sea-fairies), which have the bodies of women and the tails of fish") and sing sailors to sleep. - RBW Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs moves the locale to New York City: "board bill on Fifth Avenue," "sweetheart in Madison's Square," and the wreck [took place] as "we neared Jersey flats, Sandy Hook was on our lee." - BS Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia's "The Royal George" ("O the Royal George turned round three times") would seem to have adapted "The Mermaid" to the sinking of the Royal George, "flagship of Admiral Kempenfelt, ... on 29 August 1782 with the loss of eight hundred lives, including Admiral Kempenfelt himself." (source: "The Loss of the Royal George" at The Cowper and Newton Museum web page at the Milton Keynes Heritage Association site). You can see William Cowper's poem on the subject at Charles W. Eliot, editor, English Poetry Vol II From Collins to Fitzgerald (New York, 1910), #314, pp. 533-534, "Loss of the Royal George." - BS I note parenthetically that Keegan, p. 51, spells the name "Kemenfelt." This may be a printing error, however, as the name is used only once, with reference to the revised signal system he invented. Dupuy/Johnson/Bongard gives his dates as 1718-1782, and says of him, "An intelligent and learned officer, Kempenfelt was noted as a scientist, scholar, and author, known both for his concern for his men's health and welfare, and for his scholarly approach to naval issues; his success at Ushant showed initiative, daring, and a clear grasp of strategy and tactics."

The Royal George itself, according to Paine, p. 439, was ordered in 1749 but not finished until 1759; she was a first rate battleship, said to be the "first warship to exceed 2,000 tons burden." She fought under Hawke at Quiberon Bay (for which see "Bold Hawke"). Put in the reserve in 1763 with the conclusion of the Seven Years' War, she was put back in commission in 1778 as the French and Americans made war on Britain. She was taking on supplies at Spithead "when on August 29 Royal George was being heeled at a slight angle to make some minor repairs below the waterline. At the same times, casks of rum were being loaded aboard and the lower deck gunports were not properly secured. At about 0920 the ship suddenly rolled over on her beam ends, filled with water, and sank, taking with her 800 people, including as many as 300 women and 60 children who were visiting the ship."

In a strange semi-folkloric note, J. R. R. Tolkien is said to have translated a traditional song called "The Mermaid" into Old English (ScullHammond, p. 769). The one line quoted ("It was in the broad Atlantic") appears to be from "Married to a Mermaid" instead of Child 289, but I can't imagine where Tolkien would have found that, and we know that Tolkien knew the Child collection well. - RBW

Bibliography

- Cordingly: David Cordingly, Women Sailors and Sailors' Women, Random House, 2001 (I use the undated, but later, paperback edition)
- Pickering: David Pickering, The Cassell Dictionary of Folklore, Cassell, 1999

Last updated in version 6.0

File: C289

Merman, The (Pretty Fair Maid with a Tail) [Laws K24]

DESCRIPTION: The crew is waiting for a breeze to carry them south when a merman appears with a shout. The ship's anchor has stopped his front door! The merman reveals that he is a sailor who was washed overboard. Having married a mermaid, he grew a tail

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1900 (broadside, Bodleian Firth c.26(152))

KEYWORDS: ship mermaid/man

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf) Ireland

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Laws K24, "The Merman (Pretty Fair Maid with a Tail)"
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 64, "The Pretty Fair Maid with a Tail" (1 text, 1 tune)
Harlow-ChantyingAboardAmericanShips, pp. 131-133, "The Merman" (1 text)
Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, pp. 30-31, "The Merman" (1 text)
DT 564, MERMAN

Roud #1898

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth c.26(152), "The Merman", T. Pearson (Manchester), 1850-1899

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Down in the Diving Bell (The Mermaid (II))" (plot)
cf. "Change Islands Song" (plot)
cf. "Married to a Mermaid" (theme of marrying a mermaid)

File: LK24
Merner Song, The
DESCRIPTION: In November Billy Merner came to Darlingtown and moved in with the Sargents. At Christmas he got drunk, "raked poor Bessie," and left. No one whose "Head is good and sound ... let Will Merner come back to Darlingtown."
AUTHOR: Wilmot MacDonald
EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Ives-FolksongsOfNewBrunswick)
KEYWORDS: home drink hunting
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ives-FolksongsOfNewBrunswick, pp. 83-87, "The Merner Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1950
File: IvNB083

Merrimac (I), The
DESCRIPTION: "The Merrimac she went out; The Yankees wa'n't a-thinking. The fust thing the Yankees knew, the Cumberland was a-sinking... Holler, boys, oh, holler! ... You ought to seen her go down." The Merrimac sinks the Congress also
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE:
KEYWORDS: battle Civilwar navy war ship
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
March 8, 1862 - U.S. frigates Congress and Cumberland sunk by the CSS Virginia (formerly USS Merrimac). The Minnesota runs aground; had not the Monitor arrived the next day, the Merrimac would have sunk that ship also
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 226, "The Merrimac" (1 text, probably fragmentary)
Roud #6569
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Cumberland Crew" [Laws A18] (subject) and references there
File: BrII226

Merry Mormons, The
DESCRIPTION: "What peace and joy pervade my soul, And sweet sensations through me roll... Since I became a Mormon. Aye the merry, aye the merry, I'm a merry Mormon. I never knew what joy it was Till I became a Mormon." He will marry none but Mormons
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1881 (The Mountain Warbler, according to Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah)
KEYWORDS: courting religious
FOUND IN: US(Ro)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #212, "Daddy, I'm a Mormon" (1 text plus an excerpt, 1 tune)
Roud #10878
File: Hubb212

Merry Christmas to the Master
DESCRIPTION: "A merry Christmas to the Master (x3), And a merry Christmas to you all." "A merry Christmas to the Mistress." "A merry Christmas to the children." "Master, mistress, and children, A merry Christmas, a merry Christmas... A merry Christmas to you all"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal)
KEYWORDS: Christmas nonballad
Merry Haymakers, The

DESCRIPTION: In (May), the creatures cavort in the fine weather. Assorted men and women join together to cut the hay and frolic. Several are introduced as they arrive. In addition to cutting the fields, they may find other ways of making hay....

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1846 (Dixon-AncientPoemsBalladsSongsOfThePeasantryOfEngland); c.1720 (broadside, Bodleian Douce Ballads 2(154))
KEYWORDS: farming work love courting
FOUND IN: Ireland Britain(England(Lond,South))
REFERENCES (9 citations):
Dixon-AncientPoemsBalladsSongsOfThePeasantryOfEngland, Song #15, pp. 192-193, "The Haymakers' Song" (1 text)
Copper-ASongForEverySeason, pp. 228-229, "Pleasant Month of May" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H697, pp. 278-279, "Tumbling through the Hay" (1 text, 1 tune)
Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 78, "Tumbling Through the Hay" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 187-188, "The Haymakers" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Gl 46)
Purslow-TheConstantLovers, p. 58, "The Merry Haymakers" (1 text, 1 tune)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 255, "The Merry Haymakers" (1 text, 1 tune)
Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #9, "Pleasant Month of May" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, MONTH MAY
Roud #153
RECORDINGS:
Bob & Ron Copper, "The Merry Haymakers" (on FSB3)
Sam Larner, "The Pleasant Month of May" (on Voice05)
Levi Smith, "The Haymakers" (on Voice11)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Douce Ballads 2(154), "The Merry Hay-makers" or "Pleasant Pastime, Between the Young- Men and Maids, in the Pleasant Meadows" ("In our country, in our country"), S. Bates (London), [c.1720]; also Mus. 1 c.118(6e)[title and many words illegible], "The Merry Hay-makers"
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Month of May
File: HHH697

Merry It Is on a May Morning

DESCRIPTION: "Mery hyt ys in May mornying, Mery wayys for to gone." "And by a chapell as Y came, Mett Y wythe Jhesu to chyrcheward gone." Peter, Paul, Thomas, John, St. George, and Collas (Nicholas?) attend. All take part in the chapel service

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: fifteenth century (National Library of Wales MS. Porkington 10)
KEYWORDS: religious Jesus clergy nonballad MiddleEnglish
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (8 citations):
Greene-TheEarlyEnglishCarols, #323, p. 223, "(And by a chapell as Y came)" (1 text)
Brown/Robbins-IndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse, #298
DigitalIndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse #298
Maxwell S. Luria & Richard Hoffman, _Middle English Lyrics_, a Norton Critical Edition, Norton, Merry Man, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer drinks whisky with friends from morning till night. He hates men too miserly to spend their money on drink. He wants no crying or paid keeners at his wake: everyone should toast his journey. All should sing when carrying his body to the grave.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1820 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 25(549))
KEYWORDS: death money drink nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Croker-PopularSongsOfIreland, pp. 101-105, "The Merry Man" (1 text)
Roud #7060

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 25(549), "Drinking Song" ("I am a young fellow that loves to be mellow"), J. Pitts (London), 1802-1819

File: CrPS101

Merry May the Maid Be

DESCRIPTION: "Merry may the maid be that marrys the miller." Jamie wooed the singer; she was impressed by his home, animals, and food. Her mother advised her to marry. Now her mother is happy with them. "Who'd be a king a petty thing when a miller lives sae happy"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1796 (Scots Musical Museum #123)
KEYWORDS: courting marriage food animal mother miller
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #56, p. 2, ("Merry may the maid be") (1 fragment)
Merry Shanty Boys, The

DESCRIPTION: "We are a band of shanty boys, as merry as can be, No matter where we go, my boys, We're always gay and free." The men go out in the morning to cut the trees, sharpen their axes and relax in the evening, bring the logs to market, and celebrate.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (Rickaby-BalladsAndSongsOfTheShantyBoy), from a nineteenth-century broadside

KEYWORDS: logger work food nonballad

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Rickaby-BalladsAndSongsOfTheShantyBoy 31, "The Merry Shanty Boys" (1 text)
Rickaby/Dykstra/Leary-PineryBoys-SongsSongcatchingInLumberjackEra 31, "The Merry Shanty Boys" (1 text)

Roud #8898

NOTES [33 words]: Rickaby-BalladsAndSongsOfTheShantyBoy prints this, but it appears to be entirely from print. And, despite his comment about its quality, it strikes me as something no shantyman would actually sing. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.3

File: Rick122

Merry Tippler, The

DESCRIPTION: "When first I was a little boy my mammy did begin, She sent me early in the morning to fetch her cargo i. So I drink some you must know, must know." The singer tells how he and his mammy tried various drinks; now he doesn't care; he'll drink it all.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Gardiner MS.)

KEYWORDS: drink mother humorous nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Purslow-TheConstantLovers, p. 59, "The Merry Tippler" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #1661

File: PCL059

Messenger Song, The

DESCRIPTION: The horse, a descendent of Messenger, reports on its frisky behavior with its handlers. They respond by beating the animal. It breaks down the door and flees; it boasts of its new freedom and its abilities.

AUTHOR: John Calhoun?

EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi)

KEYWORDS: horse abuse escape freedom

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, p. 266, "The Messenger Song" (1 text)
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 33, "The Messenger Song (John Calhoun's Colt)" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST Doe266a (Partial)
Met Mister Rabbit

DESCRIPTION: "Met Mister Rabbit one night, All dressed in his plug hat, He turned his nose up in the air, Said, 'I'se gwine to Julia's ball, So good night, possums all."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)
KEYWORDS: animal dancing
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 176, (no title) (1 short text)

Metamorphoses, Les (Metamorphoses)

DESCRIPTION: French. The male magician is trying to seduce the female. She will be game in a pond and he will hunt her.... She will die and go to heaven and he will be St Peter to open the door. She says, Since you are inevitable, you may as well have me as another.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage rape seduction shape-changing magic FOUND IN: Canada(Newf,West) US(MW)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Peacock, pp. 788-789, "Je me mettrai gibier dans un etang" (1 text, 1 tune)
Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes, p. 42, "La Chanson des Metamorphoses (The Song of Transformation)" (1 text + translation, 1 tune); also p. 64, "J'ai fait une maîtresse (I've Found a Maiden)" (1 text + translation, 1 tune)

RECORDINGS:
Mme. Josephine Costard, "Je me mettrai gibier dans un etang" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Twa Magicians" [Child 44] (theme) and references there
cf. "Un Canadien Errant" (tune of "La Chanson des Metamorphoses" in Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Si tu reviens Dimanche

NOTES [297 words]: Child, in his notes to The Twa Magicians [Child 44] gives an extensive description of this ballad [in] the French form. He cites 14 sources, often with names that translate along the lines of "Transformations," "The Mistress Won," and "The Pursuit of Love." Incidentally, he notes that the "French ballad generally begins with a young man's announcing that he has won a mistress, and he intends to pay her a visit on Sunday...."

In that connection, the Brandon [Manitoba] University site for the journal Ecclectica inludes two verses of the ballad, collected in Manitoba, under the title "Si tu reviens dimanche" (If you return Sunday), "The Songs of Their Fathers" by Lynn Whidden, Ecclectica, August 2003

Peacock's version is not as complete as Child's summary. The male verses end "par amitie" (by friendship) while the female verses end "Tout ce que t'auras de moi aucun agrement" (what you have of me is without my agreement). She will be game in a pond and he will hunt her. She will be a rose and he will be a fireman to warm her. She will be the moon and he will be a cloud to cover her. She will become sick and he will be a doctor to cure her. She will die and go to heaven and he will be St Peter to open the door.

Peacock ends here but, according to Child, "she says, Since you are inevitable, you may as well have me as another; or more complaisantly, Je me donnerai à toi, puisque tu m'aimes tant." - BS

Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes suggests the theme is found "in the folk-lore of France, Canada, and southwestern Louisiana." No documentation other than the songs in that book, though. The Methodist Pie

DESCRIPTION: The singer attends a camp meeting and reports on the goings-on. (S)he enjoys food and music greatly. (S)he maintains, "Oh, little children, I believe (x3); I'm a Methodist till I die...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1912 (Perrow)
KEYWORDS: music religious
FOUND IN: US(SE,So)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Randolph 291, "Methodist Pie" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 248-250, "Methodist Pie" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 291A)
DT, METHPIE
Roud #7823
RECORDINGS:
Ashley's Melody Men, "Methodist Pie" (Victor 23661, 1932)
Bob Atcher, "Methodist Pie" (Columbia 20482, 1948; rec. 1947)
Gene Autry, "Methodist Pie" ((Banner 32308/Oriole 8103/Romeo 5103/Perfect 12764, 1931)
Bradley Kincaid, "Methodist Pie" (Gennett 6417/Champion 15631 [as Dan Hughey]/Supertone 9210/Silvertone 8220, 1928) (Brunswick 420/Silvertone S-2018, 1930)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Hard Trials" (floating verses)
File: R291

Metisse, Le (Song of the Metis Maiden)

DESCRIPTION: Canadian French: "Je suis metisse et je suis orgueilleuse." "I am a girl of the small Metis nation" who is proud of her heritage. She hopes to marry one of the soldiers who fight for Metis freedom. Schultz is captures; McDougall is forced back

AUTHOR: supposedly Louis Riel
EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (MacLeod-SongsOfOldManitoba); probably written 1870
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage Canada love fight
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Nov. 2, 1869 - Louis Riel's men seize Upper Fort Garry, taking many prisoners.
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
MacLeod-SongsOfOldManitoba, #8, pp. 51-55, "Song of the Metis Maiden" (1 French text plus English translation, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Riel's Song" (subject of the Metis rebellion) and references there
cf. "Chanson des Metis (Song of the Metis, or McDougall at the Border)" (subject of McDougall's attempt to govern the Metis)
cf. "Les Tribulations d'un Roi Malheureux (Misfortunes of an Unlucky 'King')" (subject of McDougall's attempt to govern the Metis)
File: Mac108

Mettons la Chaloupe a L'eau

DESCRIPTION: French. Forebitter shant: "Mettons la chaloupe a l'eau (x2), Matelot tomba dans l'eau, Mentendez vous?" A sailor falls overboard. His arm is hurt. He will not have it amputated. When they reach port, the singer wants pipe and tobacco

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1977 (Hugill-SongsOfTheSea)
Mexico, The
DESCRIPTION: Mexico is wrecked on Keeragh rocks when the captain "lost his bearings." Fourteen Fethard men set out to rescue the crew "but their boat was smashed upon the rocks": Nine are drowned; the remaining five get the crew to an island and 12 are rescued.
AUTHOR: John Codd
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast)
KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship storm wreck sailor rescue
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Feb 20-21, 1914 - The Mexico wreck
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, pp. 28-30, "The Mexico" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #20525
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Fethard Life-Boat Crew (I)" (subject)
cf. "The Fethard Life-Boat Crew (II)" (subject)
cf. "The Fethard Life-Boat Crew (III)" (subject)
cf. "Loss of the Life-Boat Crew at Fethard" (subject)
NOTES [87 words]: February 20, 1914: "Nine members of the Fethard lifeboat were drowned when going to the assistance of the Norwegian steamer Mexico.... Eight of the Mexico's crew were saved by the five lifeboat survivors. All but one of the stranded survivors were saved with great difficulty the next day." (source: Bourke in Shipwrecks of the Irish Coast v1, pp. 52-53) - BS
We note that at least four poems were written about this disaster (see the cross-references); one suspects a campaign to raise money for someone's family. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: Ran028

Mhaighbhdean Mara, An (The Mermaid)
DESCRIPTION: Irish Gaelic. Blond Mary Chinidh, whose mother is a mermaid, swims Lake Erne forever. She loves blond sailor Patrick.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (recording, Kitty Gallagher)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage love nonballad supernatural family mother mermaid/man
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Tunney-StoneFiddle, p. 58, "An Mhaighdean Mara" (1 text)
RECORDINGS:
Kitty Gallagher, "An Mhaighdean Mhara (The Mermaid Song)" [fragment] (on Lomax42, LomaxCD1742)
NOTES [67 words]: The description follows the translation for "An Mhaighdean Mara" at Clannad on Celtic Lyrics Corner site. - BS
Paul Stamler gives this description of Kitty Gallagher's version, which is however a translation of an excerpt of a fragment: "The singer, Mary Heeney, having swum the Erne, speaks to her girl Maire and (husband?) Patrick. Maire then speaks, saying that her mother was a mermaid." - PHS, (RBW)
File: TSF058

Miami Hairikin
DESCRIPTION: "God A'mighty moved on the water, And the peoples in Miami run. And the lady left Miami; She left in lightning speed. Every time the lightnin' flash She thinks about her dirty deeds." Various people's troubles in the Miami hurricane are told
Michael Boylan

DESCRIPTION: Boylan, a United man, is taken prisoner to Drogheda June 3. Dan Kelly swears falsely that Boylan had 10,000 at his command "to assist the French invaders as soon as they would land ... and the jury cried out, Boylan you must die by martial laws"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1798 (Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)
KEYWORDS: rebellion betrayal execution prison Ireland
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
June 22, 1798 - Michael Boylan is hanged at the Tholsel, Drogheda. (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 15, "Michael Boylan" (1 text, 1 tune)
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 66, "In Collon I Was Taken" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [152 words]: "Michael Boylan" has the form of a gallows-confession except that the condemned man is a hero rather than a criminal. We have the usual farewell to an "aged father" and mother and the final request that "good Christians pray for me."
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815's account of the event has Kelly, the informer, enraged by Boylan's defection: Boylan was supposed to lead the pikemen to fight on Tara May 23, 1798 but, on that night, he refused to leave his house. - BS
Drogheda, we note, is in County Louth, near the border with Meath, north of Dublin and at the southern edge of Ulster. Collon is about a dozen miles north and west of there, again in County Louth.
Unless Boylan was taken far away from the city where he was tried, the charges against him do sound exaggerated; there weren't that many active rebels in that area. The nearest rebel activity was in County Meath, and that pretty feeble. - RBW
File: Zimm015

Michael Davitt

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, the Lords and and the Commons, Bill Gladstone and Bright" passed Coercion "and arrests and evictions are going on still." Davitt, Dillon, Parnell, "Kettle and Brennan, and two hundred more" are arrested. "[T]he land it is ours and we mean to be free"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1881 (Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)
KEYWORDS: prison farming Ireland political
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 80, "A New Song on Michael Davitt" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #29516

BROADSIDES:
cf. "The Blackbird of Avondale" or "The Arrest of Parnell" (subject)
cf. "The Land League's Advice to the Tenant Farmers of Ireland" (subject)
cf. "Erin's Lament for her Davitt Asthore" (subject of Michael Davitt)
cf. "Garryowen (II)" (tune, per broadside Bodleian Harding B 40(17))

NOTES [846 words]: Bodleian, Harding B 40(17), "A New Song on Michael Davitt ("Then up with the flag, raised by Davitt, our head"), J.F. Nugent and Co.? (Dublin?), 1850-1899 is apparently this ballad but I could not download the image to verify that. It has the tune as "Garryowen."

"A Coercion Act, I should explain, is defined to be a statute which is not a part of the general law, but applies only to some specified portion of the kingdom. And within the limits to which it applies it arms the police with powers unknown to the ordinary law, and sometimes foreign to the spirit of that law." (source: The Lighter Side of My Official Life by Sir Robert Anderson, 1910 on the Casebook site re Jack the Ripper).

In 1881 Gladstone established "the Irish Coercion Act that let the Viceroy detain people for as 'long as was thought necessary.'" (source: "William Ewart Gladstone" in Wikipedia)

Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion: "A.J Kettle and Thomas Brennan were Land Leagers arrested in 1881.... John Dillon was arrested in May 1881, but was released later on grounds of ill-health." Zimmermann p.281: "Michael Davitt, who had been sentenced in 1870 to fifteen years' penal servitude for his share in the Fenian movement and released in 1877, was re-arrested in February 1881. Released in 1882, he was again prosecuted for seditious speeches and imprisoned for four months in 1883 ...." - BS

Considering that Gladstone worked for most of his career trying to improve conditions in Ireland, and passed much relief legislation, and on one occasion lost a confidence vote over a proposal for Home Rule, this is a pretty unfair accusation. It was the Tories who opposed rights for Ireland (Lyons, pp. 182-187, especially p. 183). Yes, Gladstone at times was forced to clamp the lid down, but it was hardly something he desired. Unfortunately, he inherited an Ireland which was in turmoil over tenants' rights (see, e.g., "The Bold Tenant Farmer"). He also had to contend with the Phoenix Park Murders (see the notes to "The Phoenix Park Tragedy"). The situation was bad enough that any government would have been forced into a crackdown.

Kettle is, I assume, Andrew J. Kettle, a Land League organizer, whose son Thomas was a nationalist but died at the Somme (Boylan, pp. 185-186).

John Bright (1811-1889) is a more confusing case: He was a pacifist, but an imperialist, and supported more freedom for Ireland and India, but opposed Home Rule in 1886.

Michael Davitt (1846-1906), having seen his family evicted from their land at five and then lost his arm in an industrial accident at the age of 11 or 12 (Boylan, p. 84; Kee, p. 74), started out as a radical, and though he moderated over the years, he was sentenced to 15 years imprisonment in 1870. Released after half that time, he allied with Charles Stewart Parnell to form the Land League, though they would later fall out violently. He was imprisoned again from 1881-1882, this time apparently for more conservative views. (Altogether he is a very confusing figure, at least to me.) In 1886, he supported home rule (Kee, p. 119).

His popularity is a bit ironic, given that he was anti-clerical and inclined toward socialist solutions. As Boylan says on p 85, "Ironically, 'the land for the people' meant to Davitt the nationalisation of the land, whereas to the tenants it could mean only one thing, ownership by themselves."

Moody/Martin/Keogh/Kiely, p. 248, describe Davitt this way, "Davitt was the son of an evicted small tenant, exiled in 1850 from Mayo to Lancashire... in the cotton town of Haslingden. At the age of nine he was working twelve hours a day in a cotton mill. He was just over eleven when in 1857 he lost his right arm in a machine he was minding. This led to four years of unexpected schooling and employment with the local postmaster. A life of comparative security seemed to be opening up when in 1865 Davitt threw himself into the Fenian movement. His Fenian activities earned him in 1870 a sentence of fifteen years' penal servitude, of which he served seven years, mainly in Dartmoor Prison. His release on ticket-of-leave in December 1877 was the outcome of a long and persistent agitation of amnesty for the Fenian prisoners, in which Butt, Parnell, and others took a leading part. He emerged from prison a far more formidable enemy than he went in. He was still a Fenian but critical of Fenian methods and dogmatism.... A Catholic who had been taught by a Wesleyan schoolmaster, he accepted religious diversity as a social fact and not a ground of estrangement...."

For more on Davitt, see the notes to "The Bold Tenant Farmer"; he is also the subject of "Erin's Lament for her Davitt Asthore."

John Dillon (1851-1927) came from a wealthy background but spent most of his life campaigning for land reform; he was four times imprisoned despite spending most of the years 1880-1918 in
For Parnell (1846-1891), see the various songs in the cross-references.
The other imprisoned Land Leaguer, Brennan, was not noteworthy enough to show up in the histories I checked. - RBW

Bibliography

- Kee: Robert Kee, The Bold Fenian Men, being volume II of The Green Flag (covering the period from around 1848 to the Easter Rising), Penguin, 1972

Last updated in version 5.2
File: Zimm080

Michael Dwyer (I)

DESCRIPTION: "At length brave Michael Dwyer and his undaunted men Were scented o'er the mountains and tracked into the glen." Dwyer and three men are trapped by the British in a house afire. One, wounded, tries to delay the police, but only Dwyer escapes

AUTHOR: Timothy Daniel Sullivan (1827-1914)

EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland); Anderson estimates his broadside as c. 1803 but does not have publication details

KEYWORDS: Ireland rebellion police escape death

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

February 15, 1799 - Michael Dwyer escapes from the Glengarry Regiment (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (5 citations):
O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, pp. 44-45, "Michael Dwyer" (1 text)
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 142, "Michael Dwyer" (1 text, 1 tune)
Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan 30, "Michael O'Dwyer" (1 text, 1 tune)
Galvin-IrishSongsOfResistance, pp. 95-96, "Michael Dwyer" (1 text, 1 tune)
Anderson-FarewellToOldEngland, pp. 110-112, "Michael Dwyer" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #5219

RECORDINGS:
Tom Lenihan, "Michael O'Dwyer" (on IRTLenihan01)
Jack Swain, "Mike Dwyer" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Michael Dwyer (II)" (subject)
cf. "Captain Dwyer" (subject)
cf. "Michael Dwyer's Lament" (subject)
cf. "The Mountain Men" (subject)
cf. "Twenty Men from Dublin Town" (subject)

NOTES [274 words]: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815: "Michael Dwyer was a Wicklow man, a member of the United Irishmen, who fought during the 1798 rebellion, and who waged a guerilla war in the Wicklow mountains for several years afterwards."
Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan: "Michael Dwyer (1771-1826) is a genuinely romantic figure in Irish history. An outlaw 'on his keeping' in the Wicklow hills after the rebellion of 1798 he is remembered by the folk is the same light as Robin Hood or Jessie James are in other traditions." - BS

Sullivan is the author of a number of Irish patriotic poems, of which "God Save Ireland" is probably the best-known. Dwyer also attracted the attention of that militant writer, Peadar Kearney, who produced the Irish national anthem "The Soldier's Song," as well as such pieces as "Whack Fo' the Diddle (God Bless England)."

As a historical figure, Dwyer was less important; of the five histories I checked, only Robert Kee's The Green Flag mentions him, and only to note that he was a Catholic (unlike many leaders of the 1798 rebellion), and that after the United Irish collapse, he fought on in the Wicklow Mountains until about the time of Robert Emmet's rebellion.

According to the Oxford Companion to Irish History, his dates were 1771-1826; he surrendered to the British in 1803 and was transported to Australia. He became High Constable of Sydney in 1815. He does not seem to have been notable in that post (none of my histories of Australia mention him) -- but I find it somewhat ironic to imagine the former outlaw commanding the forces responsible for tracking down outlaws and bushrangers. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2

File: PGa095

Michael Dwyer (II)

DESCRIPTION: "Have you heard of Michael Dwyer and his mountain men?" Dwyer fought when "our flag went down And the nation's hope was banished." Ireland won't have Liberty again "till we strike like Michael Dwyer and his mountain men"

AUTHOR: Peadar Kearney (1883-1942) (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

EARLIEST DATE: 2000 (Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

KEYWORDS: rebellion nonballad patriotic Ireland

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- 1798 - Irish rebellion against British rule

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 143, "Michael Dwyer" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Michael Dwyer (I)" (subject of Michael Dwyer) and references there

NOTES [238 words]: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815: "Michael Dwyer was a Wicklow man, a member of the United Irishmen, who fought during the 1798 rebellion, and who waged a guerilla war in the Wicklow mountains for several years afterwards." - BS

Peadar Kearny was the author of, among other things, the Irish national anthem "The Soldier's Song," as well as such pieces as "Whack Fol the Diddle (God Bless England)"; for more on him, see the notes to the latter song. It is perhaps no surprise to find him writing in praise of a covert warrior. Dwyer also attracted the attention of T. D. Sullivan, author of "God Save Ireland," who wrote "Michael Dwyer (I)."

As a historical figure, Dwyer was less important; of the five histories I checked, only Robert Kee's The Green Flag mentions him, and only to note that he was a Catholic (unlike many leaders of the 1798 rebellion), and that after the United Irish collapse, he fought on in the Wicklow Mountains until about the time of Robert Emmet's rebellion.

According to the Oxford Companion to Irish History, his dates were 1771-1826; he surrendered to the British in 1803 and was transported to Australia. He became High Constable of Sydney in 1815. He does not seem to have been notable in that post (none of my histories of Australia mention him) -- but I find it somewhat ironic to imagine the former outlaw commanding the forces responsible for tracking down outlaws and bushrangers. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.3

File: Moyl143

Michael Dwyer's Lament

DESCRIPTION: "To Wicklow's Glens he'd started, from Father Murphy parted." Michael Dwyer continues the fight from the mountains. Some 1798 battles and United Men are listed: "Their Cause it could have gained, then, a Liberty for all!"

AUTHOR: Mick Fowler (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

EARLIEST DATE: 2000 (Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)

KEYWORDS: rebellion Ireland nonballad patriotic

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- 1798 - Irish rebellion against British rule

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Michael Finnegan

DESCRIPTION: Of the exploits of Michael Finnegan, constantly urged to "begin again" after a variety of escapades such as the wind blowing his whiskers back into his chin, or growing fat and then growing thin

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1971

KEYWORDS: nonballad nonsense humorous

FOUND IN: US(MW) New Zealand

REFERENCES (5 citations):
- Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 134, "(Little Michael Finnigan)" (1 text)
- Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang, p. 66, "Michael Finnigan" (1 short text)
- Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 242, "Michael Finnigan" (1 text)
- Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 201, "Michael Finnigan" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #10541

NOTES [38 words]: It perhaps says something about the American education system that this song was forced upon me in grade school, but the schools would never have even contemplated a serious ballad with something resembling actual content.... - RBW

Last updated in version 4.5

File: FSWB242B

Michael James

DESCRIPTION: "I'm as happy as can be, Faith, there is merriment in me," because the singer, when he came home, found he was the father of a boy. He had waited ten years for his first child. He will name the boy Michael James, and boasts of how he will care for it

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Dean-FlyingCloud)

KEYWORDS: baby father

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Dean-FlyingCloud, p. 77, "Michael James" (1 text)

Roud #9566

File: Dean077

Michael O'Brien

DESCRIPTION: "Come all you girls ... A man like me with property free -- how can you pass him by?" He lists his assets. But "the girls won't keep my company, they say my breath is bad ... So I'll take a stroll for the good of my soul and see my neighbor's wife"

AUTHOR: Larry Gorman (1846-1917)

EARLIEST DATE: 1957 (Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland)

KEYWORDS: courting bragging humorous nonballad bachelor

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 52-53, 249, "Michael O'Brien" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-LarryGorman, pp. 42-44, 196, "Michael O'Brien" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13990
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bachelor's Hall (III)"
NOTES [58 words]: Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland: "It's worth pointing out that this song exhibits three Gorman hallmarks. First, it is about a man looking for a wife. Second, like 'Bachelor's Hall,' it develops its theme through a list of possessions. And third, it is said to have been made up on someone who had asked Gorman to song someone else." - BS
Last updated in version 6.1
File: IvDC052

Michael Power

DESCRIPTION: "On my road to Dungarvan" Michael Power finds a pistol, holds up a postboy and a dragoon, kills four yeomen on the road, twelve more in Carrick and Carey the hangman. He goes to Fulham barracks where he is convicted and sentenced to be hanged.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1976 (recording, Straighty Flanagan)
KEYWORDS: rebellion execution trial humorous outlaw
FOUND IN: Ireland
Roud #8141
RECORDINGS:
Straighty Flanagan, "Michael Power" (on Voice08)
NOTES [29 words]: Hall, notes to Voice08, describes "Michael Power" as "a humorous unlikely tale of fiction, ... set in the counties of Waterford and Wexford in those dangerous times of 1798." - BS
File: RcMicPow

Michael Roy

DESCRIPTION: "In (London/Brooklyn) city there lived a maid, And she was known to fame." Her name is Mary Jane. The charcoal man, McCloskey, loves her, but when she is thrown through a window, he stabs the donkey responsible and goes to Salt Lake City
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1887 (College Songs)
KEYWORDS: love commerce travel mother animal
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 332, "Michael Roy" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Heart-Songs, pp. 408-409, "Michael Roy" (1 text, 1 tune) ADDITIONAL: Henry Randall Waite, _College Songs: A Collection of New and Popular Songs of the American Colleges_, new and enlarged edition, Oliver Ditson & Co., 1887, p. 68, "Michael Roy"
(1 text, 1 tune) (part III, pp. 40-41 in the 1876 edition)
ST CSon068 (Partial)
Roud #6655
NOTES [14 words]: I have the feeling this is a stage Irish comic song, but I cannot trace the origin.
- RBW
Last updated in version 6.0
File: CSon068

Michael, Row the Boat Ashore

DESCRIPTION: "Michael, row the boat ashore, (h)allelujah" (x2). Remaining verses tend to be about the difficulty of crossing (Jordan) to heaven: "Jordan's river is chilly and cold, (h)allelujah; Chills the body but not the soul...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen, Ware, Garrison)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad travel river ship work worksong floating verses shanty
Michié Préval

DESCRIPTION: Creole French: "Michie Preval li donne youn bai..." Preval hosts a ball, charging three dollars for admission. The festivities reach the stable, where the horses are "astonished." The prison warden likes it so much that he is tempted to stage his own ball

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage party animal clothes

FOUND IN: US West Indies

REFERENCES (3 citations):

Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 111, "Calinda" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 213-214, "Michié Préval" (1 text plus translation, 1 tune)
Courlander-NegroFolkMusic, pp. 166-167, (no title) (1 text plus literal translation, 1 tune)

NOTES [51 words]: Lomax and Courlander accent the name of the title character differently (Lomax: Michié Préval; Courlander, Michié Preval), but the plot is the same in both versions of the song. The earliest version, Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates's, agrees with Lomax, so I've used that as the song name. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: CNFM166

Michigan Girls

DESCRIPTION: Playparty: "Up to the head and you I call, The invitation is to all, The way is broad, the road is clear, Michigan girls, come volunteer! Volunteer, volunteer! Michigan girls, come volunteer!"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1920 (JournalOfAmericanFolklore, volume 33, according to Lewis-
Michigania

DESCRIPTION: "Come all ye Yankee farmers who would like to change your lot." The singer lists the problems with life in various parts of the country (from cold Vermont to "the land of Blue Laws" to tax-heavy Massachusetts) and urges listeners to come to "Michigania"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Gardner & Chickering)

KEYWORDS: home nonballad

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Botkin-TreasuryOfNewEnglandFolklore, pp. 555-556, "Michigania" (1 text)
- Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 406-407, "Michigan-i-a" (1 text)

Roud #4745

File: BNEF555

---

Mick Magee

DESCRIPTION: Magee is a dealer in tobacco and tea who does not bother with licenses. Accidentally taking his wares to a police station, he is pursued by the force. He lends his bag to a beggar and lets himself be trapped. Since he has nothing illegal, he is released

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1938 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: commerce trick police escape

FOUND IN: Ireland Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeopleH740, pp. 56-57, "Mick Magee" (1 text)
- Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 74, "Mick McGee" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST HHH740 (Partial)

Roud #2764

ALTERNATE TITLES:
- Mick McGee

File: HHH740

---

Mick Riley

DESCRIPTION: "'Twas in the summer season in the year of seventy-six" the singer fished one summer on Ocean Lark, whose owner is a cobbler in winter. The song claims this cobbler is a cheat and robber and will be so until "he'll find himself in Hell's eternal flames"

AUTHOR: Larry Gorman (1846-1917)

EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland)

KEYWORDS: greed thief fishing ship humorous

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, p. 87, "Mick Riley" (1 text)
- Ives-LarryGorman, pp. 36-37, 196-197, "Mick Riley" (1 text)

Roud #14003

CROSS-REFERENCES:
Mickey Burke

DESCRIPTION: The singer's wife takes in Mickey Burke as a boarder. She and Burke blow the singer's wages on liquor. One night she hits the singer and when he "raised a fist to strike her" they beat him. The singer plans to shoot Burke and put his wife in jail.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA-Leach)

KEYWORDS: marriage violence money drink ordeal wife

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

Roud #30139

RECORDINGS:
Paddy Duggan, "Mickey Burke" (on MUNFLA-Leach)

File: ML3MiBur

Mickey Free

DESCRIPTION: "I'm from the town of Banjor, down in the state of Maine, A native American Irishman That spakes the English plain." The singer arrives in Stillwater and works in many logging camps (in Wisconsin). He considers taking up farming in Bashaw.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (Dunn, _The St. Croix_, from an uncited source)

KEYWORDS: logger work travel farming

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

NOTES [411 words]: The only printed version of this seems to be Dunn's, and Dunn, unfortunately, gives very little information about this song; he says it "first made its appearance" in Taylors Falls (on the St. Croix) in 1878, and in the introduction to the revised 1979 edition of his book, says on p. xi that the song describes the life of Ed Hart. Since, however, Dunn gives no real biographical information about Hart, this is little help.

The song does seem a very Midwestern product. Other than Bangor, Maine, and Stillwater, Minnesota, every place mentioned is in northwestern Wisconsin. The spots mentioned are all in the region north of Hayward, south of Ashland, west of Spooner, and east of the St. Croix -- and all are small and require a very detailed map to locate.

Namekegon is a town and a river. The river flows through Hayward to join the St. Croix just north and east of the point where the St. Croix ceases to mark the Minnesota/Wisconsin border. Namekegon town is on Garden Lake about half way between Hayward and Ashland.

Clam Lake is a lake and down. The lake is near Siren, not far from the St. Croix, and is on the Clam River.

Clam Lake the town is not on the Clam River; it is about ten miles ESE of Namekegon town.

The Yellow River (and Yellow Lake) are almost due north of Clam Lake the Lake, the lake being about five miles from the St. Croix town of Danbury.

Tototatic is a river that is a tributary of the Namekegon, and there is a Totogatic Lake north of Hayward.

Bashaw, where the singer expects to settle, is a very small town -- or perhaps "region" is the right word -- about five miles WNW of Shell Lake and not too far from the Yellow River. Since it is not very good farming country, I would suggest a slight possibility that this should be emended to Wabasha, Minnesota.

Overall, the plot of this song is pretty clear. The singer's story begins in 1853 in Stillwater. Stillwater -- founded in 1843 and incorporated in 1854 -- was in its early years a logging center and one of the chief towns of what was then Minnesota Territory. It was also the northernmost town on the St. Croix -- the only convenient way to reach the areas in Wisconsin mentioned in the song, especially in the early 1850s before the Soo Canal opened, making it possible for ships to enter Lake Superior. The singer came from Maine to Minnesota in 1853, worked in the lumber camps for a couple of dozen years, and at the time the song ends is contemplating retirement. - RBW

File: JTDST254

Micky Jim MacNeil

DESCRIPTION: Micky Jim MacNeil was "the tightest of the Scotchmen." Out on the ice, he falls in and is rescued. The rescuers tease him that he has drowned his [only?] bosom friends [that is, his lice]: "the ones he hadn't lost all had a better appetite"

AUTHOR: Paul E. Hall (according to Bennett/Downey-JeromeJustOneMoreSong)

EARLIEST DATE: 1980 (Bennett/Downey-JeromeJustOneMoreSong)

KEYWORDS: rescue river humorous bug

FOUND IN: Canada (Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Bennett/Downey-JeromeJustOneMoreSong 24, pp. 143-147, "Micky Jim MacNeil" (1 text)

Roud #24329

RECORDINGS:

Jerome Downey, "Micky Jim MacNeil" (on NFJDowney01)

Hector MacIsaac and Jerome Downey, "Scotchie Town" (on NFHMacIsaac01)

Hector MacIsaac, "Scotchy Town" (on NFHMacIsaac02)

File: BeDo143

Middlesex Flora, The

DESCRIPTION: Bound from London in a storm, "the proud waves did beat her to staves, her name was The Middlesex Flora, and they did sweep our men to the deep." Strangers on the coast pick up the rich cargo. Captain James Bell and the lost crew of thirteen are named.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1876 (Christie)

KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship storm wreck sailor shore

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

1825: "Middlesex Flora of London was wrecked at Dundrum... en route from Barcelona to Belfast.... Twenty four were drowned." (source: Bourke in _Shipwrecks of the Irish Coast_ v2, p. 25; Irish Wrecks Online site)

FOUND IN: Ireland Britain (Scotland)

REFERENCES (4 citations):

Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #63, pp. 2-3, "The Middlesex Flora" (1 text)

Greig/Duncan1 29, "The Middlesex Flora" (5 texts, 4 tunes)

Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, pp. 72-74, "The Middlesex Flora" (1 text, 1 tune)

ADDITIONAL: W. Christie, editor, Traditional Ballad Airs (Edinburgh, 1876 (downloadable pdf by University of Edinburgh, 2007)), Vol I, pp. 254-255, 294, "The Middlesex Flora" (2 texts, 1 tune)

Roud #3810

BROADSIDES:

Bodleian, Firth c.12(119), "The Middlesex Flora," H. Such (London), 1863-1885

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Old Mayflower" (theme of wreckers) and references there

ALTERNATE TITLES:

The Downs

NOTES [33 words]: Christie: "The Editor was informed by a native of the Enzie, who died in 1847, aged 85 years, that he heard "The Middlesex Flora" sung by two sailors on the streets of Buckie about the year 1780." - BS

File: Ran072
Middletack Cliack

DESCRIPTION: The singer, a miller, is invited to "a meal and ale" at Middletack farm. "When we got the lasses out we did commence to dance." He names some of the "pretty charming maids" and some of the men. The party ended peacefully after three o'clock.

AUTHOR: John Sim (composed 1860) (source: Greig/Duncan3)

EARLIEST DATE: 1917 (Greig/Duncan3)

KEYWORDS: dancing drink food party moniker

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan3 631, "Middletack Cliack" (1 text)
Roud #6066

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Castles in the Air" (tune, per Greig/Duncan3)

NOTES [36 words]: Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv, of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Middletack (631) is at coordinate (h6,v0) on that map [roughly 35 miles N of Aberdeen]. - BS

Last updated in version 2.4

File: GrD3631

---

Midnight

DESCRIPTION: "Under this sod lies a great bucking horse. There never lived a cowboy he couldn't toss. His name was Midnight, his coat black as coal. If there's a hoss heaven, please, God, rest his soul."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1963

KEYWORDS: horse death recitation

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1924 - First appearance of the bucking horse "Midnight" at the Calgary Stampede
1933 - Midnight is retired
1936 - Death of Midnight. This poem was reportedly inscribed on his monument

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ohrlin-HellBoundTrain 80, "Midnight" (1 text)
File: 0hr080

---

Midnight Messenger, The

DESCRIPTION: Death: "the time is come that thou shalt be no more." Rich man: "sure it cannot be; Depart therefore, you are not sent for me." Convinced, rich man says "serve ye the Lord, obey his holy will"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1846 (Dixon-AncientPoemsBalladsSongsOfThePeasantryOfEngland)

KEYWORDS: virtue money death dialog religious

FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, pp. 244-249, "The Midnight Messenger" (1 text)
Roud #V2951

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Fortune My Foe (Aim Not Too High)" (tune) and references there

NOTES [61 words]: Dixon-AncientPoemsBalladsSongsOfThePeasantryOfEngland prints the following, apparently from his source: "A sudden call from an earthly glory to the cold grave in a dialogue between Death, and a Rich Man; who in the midst of all his Wealth, received the tidings of his Last Day, to his unspeakable and sorrowful Lamentation. To the tune of 'Aim not too high,' &c." - BS

Last updated in version 5.0
Midnight on the Stormy Deep

DESCRIPTION: "Twas midnight on the stormy deep, My solitary watch I'd keep, And think of her I'd left behind, And ask if she'd be true and kind." He is forced away by war. She asks him not to leave; "The deep deep sea may us divide." One or the other betrays the other

AUTHOR: attributed to "B. E. L." in the 1857 sheet music, perhaps based on a poem "Die Schildwache" by Wilhelm Hauff (1802-1827)

EARLIEST DATE: 1857 (sheet music published by Miller & Beacham)

KEYWORDS: love courting separation

FOUND IN:
Roud #18034

RECORDINGS:
The Blue Sky Boys, "Midnight on the Stormy Deep" (Bluebird 6480)
Mac & Bob (Lester McFarland & Robert Gardner), "Midnight on the Stormy Deep" (Vocalion 5125)
Ernest V. Stoneman, "Midnight on the Stormy Deep" (CYL: Edison ???, 1928)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Loved You in the Days of Joy" (lyrics)

NOTES [50 words]: The common version of this has a text substantially different from the 1857 sheet music, and the tunes are somewhat different also. So even though I can't cite a traditional version, there may have been some oral transmission along the way. Of course, it could just be that it was A. P. Carter-ized. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.3

File: RcMotSD

Midnight Serenade

DESCRIPTION: "The voices of the night, love, (Are singing/have hushed) their lullaby, The little stars are bright." "Awake to the notes of my guitar And listen to your lover true." The girl is the man's dream and blessing. He apologizes for waking her

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1953 (Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric)

KEYWORDS: love courting music

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 23, "Midnight Serenade" (2 texts, 2 tunea)
Roud #11336

File: Brne023

Midnight Special, The

DESCRIPTION: "Let the Midnight Special shine its light on me; Let the Midnight Special shine its ever-loving light on me." The prisoner describes how he was arrested, the difficult conditions in prison, and a visit from his girlfriend

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (recording, Dave Cutrell)

KEYWORDS: prison hardtimes warning crime police train

FOUND IN: US(SE,So)

REFERENCES (15 citations):
Cohen-LongSteelRail, pp. 478-484, "The Midnight Special" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph 292, "The Midnight Special" (1 text, 1 tune)
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 171, "The Midnight Special" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, pp. 26-27, "The Midnight Special"; 217, "Midnight Special" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-FolkSongUSA 91, "The Midnight Special" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 71-75, "The Midnight Special" (1 text, 1 tune) Jackson-WakeUpDeadMan, pp. 70-71, "Yon' Come Roberta" (1 text, 1 tune. The song lacks a chorus and the tune is "completely different," according to Jackson, but most of the lyrics belong here); pp. 92-93, "Midnight Special" (1 text, 1 tune, unusually full) Botkin-TreasuryOfAmericanFolklore, pp. 908-909, "The Midnight Special" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 528-529, "Midnight Special" (1 text)
Coleman/Bregman-SongsOfAmericanFolks, pp. 112-113, "The Midnight Special" (1 short ext, 1 tune)
Arnett-IHearAmericaSinging, p. 142-143, "Midnight Special" (1 text, 1 tune)
Seeger-AmericanFavoriteBallads, p. 55, "Midnight Special" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 71, "Midnight Special" (1 text)
DT, MDNTPC
ADDITIONAL: Moses Asch and Alan Lomax, Editors, _The Leadbelly Songbook_, Oak, 1962, p. 71, "Midnight Special" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6364
RECORDINGS:
Jesse Bradley, "Midnight Special" (AFS 218 A1, 1934)
Dillard Chandler, "Gastony Song" (on Chandler01, DarkHoll)
Bill Cox, "The Midnight Special" (Banner 32891/Melotone M12797/Oriole 8271/Perfect 12942/Romeo 3271/Conqueror 8230, 1933; Panachord (UK) 25626, 1934) (See Notes)
Dave Cutrell (known as "Pistol Pete") with McGinty's Oklahoma Cowboy Band, "Pistol Pete's Midnight Special" (OKeh 45057, 1926); McGinty's Oklahoma Cowboy Band (now led by Otto Gray), "The Midnight Special" (Vocalion 5337; c. 1929)
Folkmasters, "The Midnight Special" (on Fmst01)
Frank Jordan & Group, "Midnight Special" (AFS 619 A1, 1936)
Lead Belly, "Midnight Special" (on ClassRR)
Leadbelly & the Golden Gate Quartet, "The Midnight Special" (Victor 27266, 1941; rec. 1940)
Pete Seeger, "The Midnight Special" (on PeteSeeger18) (on PeteSeeger26) (on PeteSeeger43) Pete Seeger & Big Bill Broonzy, "The Midnight Special" (on BroonzySeeger1) (on BroonzySeeger2)
[Wilmer] Watts & [Frank] Wilson, "Walk Right In Belmont" (Paramount 3019, 1927; on TimesAint04)
Ernest Williams, "Midnight Special" (AFS CYL-11-5, 1933)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Jumpin' Judy"
cf. "Mississippi Jail House Groan" (floating lyrics)
cf. "Early in the Morning (IV -- prison song)" (lyrics)
cf. "The Woolston Ferry" (primary tune)
NOTES [238 words]: I seem to recall a legend that, should the light of the Midnight Special shine on a convict, he would soon be freed. I can't remember where I heard this, though. I've more recently found this mentioned in Sing Out magazine, Volume 37, #2 (1992), pp, 54, but I'm sure I heard it somewhere else. That issue of Sing Out refers to another legend, in which highly favored convicts were allowed visits from prostitutes brought in on a special train. (The problem with this, of course, is that someone had to pay the prostitutes, so I rather doubt it.)
Carl Sandburg, on the other hand, believes that the song refers to suicide: That the convict would rather be dead under the wheels of the train than spend another twenty years in prison. Cohen quotes Mack McCormick to the effect that several versions show localization to an unsuccessful 1923 jailbreak, but offers evidence that the song, or at least pieces of it, are much older. The version he prints, "Pistol Pete's Midnight Special" by Dave Cutrell, has several verses not heard in the common Leadbelly version. - RBW
The Bill Cox recording consists of floating train-song verses, e.g., "I've rode the Southern, I've rode the L&N." It does have a chorus "Let the Midnight Special shine its light on me/Way out on that old I.C.:" so I place it with the other versions of the song. Oh, the I.C. Is the Illinois Central railroad, which ran through Mississippi to New Orleans. -PJS
Last updated in version 5.0
File: R292

Midnight Train, The

DESCRIPTION: "The midnight train and the fo' day train run all night long (x2) They run till the break of day." "Twas the same train carried yo' mother 'way, run all night long (x2) It run until the break of day."
AUTHOR: unknown
Mighty Bright Light

DESCRIPTION: First verse/chorus: "(It was) a mighty bright light that was shining down." "Oh, tell me who was that light that was shining down?" "King Jesus was the light that was shining down." "My mother saw the light that was shining down...."

AUTHOR: unknown

Mighty Day

DESCRIPTION: Refrain: "Wasn't that a mighty day"(4x). Verse: The book of Revelations is opened. The singer is invited "to see the mystery." He sees the red and black horses and the pale horse takes his father. Satan is chained and burned. The dead rise and are judged.

AUTHOR: unknown

Mighty Day (Wasn't That a Mighty Storm)

DESCRIPTION: The story of the Galveston tidal wave. Despite evacuation efforts, many die on land and at sea. Chorus something like, "Wasn't that a mighty day/storm, when the storm winds struck/swept the town."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934
KEYWORDS: storm disaster death
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Sep 8, 1900 - Galveston hurricane and flood. Some 6000 die
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Botkin-TreasuryOfSouthernFolklore, p. 728, "Wasn't That a Mighty Storm!" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 53, "Mighty Day" (1 text)
DT, MIGHTDAY
Roud #12206
RECORDINGS:
"Sin-Killer" Griffin & congregation, "Wasn't That a Mighty Storm" (AFS 185 B2, 1934; on LC10)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Wasn't That a Mighty Time (Galveston Flood)" (subject, floating lyrics)
cf. "Galveston Storm" (subject)

NOTES [91 words]: This song shares many of its lyrics, and even some musical elements, with "Wasn't That a Mighty Time (Galveston Flood)." It is quite likely that the two have common roots. The "feel" of the resulting songs is so different, however, that I list them as separate pieces. The "popular" version, as recorded by the Chad Mitchell trio, reportedly was touched up somewhat by Bob Gibson. - RBW

In the LC version... the chorus is: "Wasn't that a mighty storm/Wasn't that a mighty storm, great water/Wasn't that a mighty storm/That blew the people away." - PJS

Last updated in version 4.5
File: BSoF728

Mighty Fortress Is Our God, A (Ein Feste Burg)

DESCRIPTION: Originally in German; now English: A mighty fortress is our God, a bulwark never failing." God is a help in the world's troubles, and can rescue those who cannot save themselves. God endures forever

AUTHOR: Martin Luther / usual English words by F. H. Hedge EARLIEST DATE: 1529 (sources: Johnson, Julian); English words 1852 (Julian)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Warren-EveryTimeIFeelTheSpirit, pp. 241-242, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 278, "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God (Ein' Feste Burg)" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Charles Johnson, One Hundred and One Famous Hymns (Hallberg, 1982), p. 21 "A Mighty Fortress Is Our God" (1 text, 1 tune)
John Julian, editor, _A Dictionary of Hymnology_, 1892; second edition 1907 (I use the 1957 Dover edition in two volumes), pp. 321-325, "Ein Feste Burg ist Unser Gott" (1 German text)
SAME TUNE:
What Gives the Wheat Fields Blades of Steel? (File: SBoA236)

NOTES [445 words]: I suspect the fact that this hymn does not seem to have been collected in tradition indicates primarily that relatively few collectors have worked the Upper Midwest. My experience is that almost all Lutherans (the dominant Christian denomination in Minnesota and other Midwestern states) know at least one verse by heart, but with folk processing errors, and I have included it on that basis.

According to Johnson, p. 20, this "was written in 1529 shortly after the Diet of [Speyer], when German princes made formal protest against revoking some of their liberties and received the name Protestants." This contradicts an account by Heinrich Heine, who claimed that it was a "battle hymn" sung as Luther attended the Diet of Worms in 1521 (Julian, p. 323). Julian points out that Heine's account is surely wrong; had the song been in existence by then, Luther would have published it in his 1524 hymnal, which he did not do. Julian agrees with Johnson's belief that it was probably written in 1529, before the Diet of Speyer. The earliest surviving text, however, was published in 1531.

Julian, pp. 324-325, lists eighteen translations in "common use" and another 44 that are not in common use, and lists four more on pp. 1561 and 1631, but the "A Mighty Fortress" lyric is the one everyone sings; the others are probably used only to shake up congregations once in a while. Admittedly I'm not a Lutheran, but the only one that sounds even slightly familiar to me is Godfrey Thring's "A Fortress Sure is God Our King," from 1882. One rendering that does not seem to have become well-known was made as early as 1539 by Miles Coverdale, who also created the first officially approved English Bible; it begins "Oure God is a defence and towre, A good armour and good weapon" (Reynolds, p. 24). Reynolds, p. 25, claims that an 1852 translation by Frederick H. Hedge (1805-1890), a Unitarian minister and professor of German, is popular, but it's new to me. The German text is allegedly based on Psalm 46, but Julian grants (p. 704) that it "takes... hardly anything from the Psalm." The psalm perhaps gave the idea rather than any real text; it refers to God as a "strength" and a "refuge," and it isn't far from there to the "Feste Burg." Incidentally, even English versions that mention the Mighty Fortress may not be very close to the Luther text; according to McKim, p. 185, the version sung by Presbyterians has only the first two lines from Luther (translated by Frederick Henry Hodge); the rest was made up by the Roman Catholic musician Omer Westendorf ("J. Clifford Evers") and published in 1964; this version was intended to bring it closer to the actual Psalm 46. - RBW

Bibliography

- Julian: John Julian, editor, A Dictionary of Hymnology, 1892; second edition 1907 (I use the 1957 Dover edition in two volumes)

Mighty Mississippi

DESCRIPTION: "Way out in the Mississippi valley, Just along the plain so grand, Rose the flooded Mississippi River, Destroying the works of man." The Mississippi River flood of 1927 is described, and the plight of those flooded out detailed

AUTHOR: Words: Kelly Harrell

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (recording, Ernest Stoneman)

KEYWORDS: flood river disaster

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1927 - Mississippi River floods, devastating the Delta region and leaving thousands homeless

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Cohen/Seeger/Wood-NewLostCityRamblersSongbook, p. 87, "Mighty Mississippi" (1 text, 1 tune) DT, MGHTYMSS*
Roud #21713

RECORDINGS:
New Lost City Ramblers, "Mighty Mississippi" (on NLCR02)
Mike Seeger, "The Story of the Mighty Mississippi" (on MSeeger01)
Ernest Stoneman, "The Story of the Mighty Mississippi" (Victor 20671, 1927)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Great American Flood Disaster" (subject)
cf. "Backwater Blues" (subject)
cf. "Mississippi Heavy Water Blues" (subject)
cf. "The Mississippi Flood (The Murrumbidgee Flood)" (subject)
cf. "Cairo (II)" (subject)

NOTES [100 words]: Kelly Harrell wrote this poem but never attempted to record it (shows how different attitudes toward composed songs were back then); it was Ernest Stoneman who took the piece, found a traditional tune for it, and recorded the result. - RBW

And the recording was out within a few months of the disaster -- probably by September, 1927. - PJS

According to Kip Lornell, Virginia's Blues, Country & Gospel Records 1902-1943, the recording session was even more timely: It was made May 21, 1927. Stoneman also cut "Jim Hoover's Mississippi Flood Song" in that session, but Victor declined to issue it. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.1
File: CSW087

Mighty Mount Saint Helens
DESCRIPTION: "We listened to you rumble, we listened to your roar, We watched the smoke roll fro, your top like we'd never seen before" as "Mighty Mount Saint Helens" prepares to erupt. They "never understood your rage" but now share her wrath.
AUTHOR: Jeanie Bigbee
EARLIEST DATE: 1998 (thesis by J. Revell Carr III)
KEYWORDS: disaster
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Mar 27, 1980 - Beginning of the Mount Saint Helens eruption
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, p. 629, "Mighty Mount Saint Helens" (1 text)

Mighty Rocky Road
DESCRIPTION: Chorus: I'm bound to carry my soul to Jesus, Carry my soul to the Lord\(\) (2x).
Verse: "It's a mighty rocky road and I'm most done travelling"(3x). "Christian's (mourner's, sinner's) on the road and he's most done travelling...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1899 (Barton-OldPlantationHymns)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious Jesus
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Barton-OldPlantationHymns, p. 6, "Mighty Rocky Road" (1 text, 1 tune)
Work-FolkSongOfTheAmericanNegro, p. 70, "Might Rocky Road" (1 text)
Roud #12078
NOTES [11 words]: The description is based on the Barton-OldPlantationHymns text. - BS

Mike
DESCRIPTION: "Section men a-workin' there all side by side." One of them, Mike, boasts of his work on the railroad. He works and fights hard. One day he works in the jimson, picks up a crosstie, is attacked by a snake, and flees
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934
KEYWORDS: work railroading animal
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
May 1869 - Transcontinental railroad complete
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, p. 23, "Mike" (1 text)
Roud #15523
NOTES [49 words]: The chorus of this piece runs, "Damned be the President, My name's Mike, I got a hand in it, I drive the spike." I assume this refers to the famous "driving of the golden spike" (May 10, 1869 in Promontory, Utah), completing the first transcontinental railroad. This is only a guess, though. - RBW

Mike and Jerry
DESCRIPTION: "Mike and Jerry going down the main line" (spokten: "Southern"). "Oh, they saw it come by (here) never got no coal never got no (water). Must've been a gasoline (burner), For he never stopped by here."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1919 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)
KEYWORDS: technology
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 749, "Mike and Jerry" (1 short text, 1 tune)
NOTES [36 words]: The current description is based on the Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 fragment. I've no idea what it's about, although my gut feeling is that Mike and Jerry are either mules or escaped prisoners. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.1
File: BrS5749

Mike Bolin
DESCRIPTION: The captain hires Mike Bolin, a fisherman who could do everything. Nevertheless, they catch nothing but sculpin and dogfish, and they run short of gas when jigging and so must row to shore
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA-Leach)
KEYWORDS: fishing sea ship shore humorous
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
Roud #30140
RECORDINGS:
John Conway, "Mike Bolin" (on MUNFLA-Leach)
NOTES [33 words]: Although I cannot give precise dates for this song, it is probably late, since it features a boat that has an engine but evidently no sails. Also, they use jiggers, which were eventually banned. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.4
File: ML3MiBo1

Milatraisse Courri Dans Bal
DESCRIPTION: Creole French. "Milatraisse courri dans bal, Cocodrie po' te fanal, Trouloulou! C'est pas zaffaire a tou (x2), Trouloulou!" The mixed-blood woman goes to the dance; a full-blood black "holds the lantern"; the musician is asked what difference it makes
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1886 (Cable in Century Magazine)
KEYWORDS: Black(s) dancing foreignlanguage
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, pp. 122-123, "Milatraisse Courri Dans Bal" (1 short text plus loose English translation, 1 tune)
File: ScaNF122

Militia's Broken Up and Wir Jock's Come Hame, The
DESCRIPTION: Jock has come home in his soldier clothes. He's a fine looking lad and his father was too, so it must run in the blood.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan8)
KEYWORDS: nonballad soldier father beauty
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan8 1762, "The Militia's Broken Up and Wir Jock's Come Hame" (1 text)
Roud #13010
File: GrD81762
Milk-Maid's Life, The

DESCRIPTION: "You rural goddesses, That woods and fields possess, Assist me with your skill" to praise "them who choose this trade to use... To carry the milking-pail." They are gay and free from care, they are not idle, they are healthy, they do good work AUTHOR: Martin Parker?

EARLIEST DATE: 1877 (Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland)

KEYWORDS: work nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):

ST BeCo446 (Partial)

NOTES [120 words]: The earliest copy of this known to Bell carried the initials "M. P."; he conjectured that this is Martin Parker. This is not absolutely convincing, but certainly the piece has the hallmarks of Parker's flowery style and ignorant praise of a life he would hever in fact have gone near.

A. W. Pollard, G. R. Redgrave, et al, A Short-Title Catalogue of Books Printed in England, Scotland & Ireland And of English Books Printed Abroad 1475-1640, The Bibliographical Society [of London], 1963, also attributes it to Parker; it is #19257 on p. 440, and is listed under the title "The milke-maids life. A pretty new ditty." It is signed "M. P." and was registered by T. Lambert 22 March 1634 and published in the same year. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.3

File: BeCo446

Milk-White Steed, The

DESCRIPTION: "My hour is come, my day is spent, The jailer's at the door; I've been a noted highwayman." The singer recalls his robberies. At a fair, he races with the sheriff and is spotted. He would have escaped, except that his horse was killed. Now he will die too

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Finger-FrontierBallads)

KEYWORDS: robbery crime prison death horse racing

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Finger-FrontierBallads, pp. 36-38, "The Milk-White Steed" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #8833

File: Fing037

Milking Pails (China Doll)

DESCRIPTION: The child begs, "Mama, buy me a china doll." The mother asks where the money will come from. The child proposes selling Papa's bed. Mama asks where Papa will sleep. The child keeps proposing ideas, each more impractical. Finally Mama ends the discussion

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1810 (Gammer Gurton's Garland)

KEYWORDS: commerce children family mother playparty dialog

FOUND IN: US(Ap,MA,So) Britain(England)

REFERENCES (11 citations):
Randolph 356, "Buy Me a China Doll" (1 text, 1 tune)

Randolph/Cohen-ÖzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 291-293, "Buy Me a China Doll" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 356)

Abrahams/Riddle-ASingerAndHerSongs, pp. 47-49, "China Doll" (1 text, 1 tune)

Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 166, "Buy Me a Rocking Chair" (1 text, 1 tune)

Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 63, "Milking Pails" (2 texts, 1 tune)

Montgomerie/Montgomerie-ScottishNurseryRhymes 192, "(Buy me a milking pail)" (1 text)

Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #114, "Milking-pails" (1 text)

JournalOfAmericanFolklore, May Ovington, "A Dance-Rhyme of Children in Brooklyn, N.Y.," Vol. XXXI, No. 120 (Apr 1918), pp. 293-294 ("Mamma bought me a pincushion, pincushion, pincushion") (1 text)
Milking Song, The

DESCRIPTION: "Pbroo, pbrou! my bonnie cow! ... Ye ken the hand that's kind to you; Sae let the drappie go, hawkie." The calf is sleeping in the pen, but will come soon. The milk makes visitors glad.

AUTHOR: Robert Jamieson

EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (Ord-BothySongsAndBallads)

KEYWORDS: animal food nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 244, "The Milking Song" (1 text)

Roud #3939

NOTES [101 words]: Ord-BothySongsAndBallads believes that Jamieson produced this as an imitation, or perhaps an improvement, of an actual milking song. It seems likely enough. I know of no purely traditional collection.

And, no, I have no idea how one pronounces "pbrou"!

Similar milking rhymes are of course common. Baroing-Gould-MotherGoose 490, p. 213, runs

Cushy cow, bonny, let down thy milk,
And I will give thee a gown of silk;
A gown of silk and a silver tee,
If thou wilt let down thy milk to me.
There is a similar text in Montgomerie/Montgomerie-ScottishNurseryRhymes -- #29, "(Bonnie lady, Let down your milk)." - RBW
File: Ord244

Milkwhite Lammie, The

DESCRIPTION: Annie overhears Johnny comforting a lost lamb while complaining of Annie's scorn. Annie reveals herself and offers to marry Johnnie. They share "a moment's leisure," for which she would not exchange being Scotland's queen, and marry the following Sunday.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1797 (Aberdeen Magazine, as Greig/Duncan 988D)

KEYWORDS: courting, love, marriage, farming, sheep

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES: (2 citations):
- Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #29, p. 1, "The Milk-White Lammie" (1 text)
- Greig/Duncan 988, "The Milkwhite Lammie" (6 texts, 1 tune)

Roud #5635

File: GrD5988

Mill (I), The

DESCRIPTION: "Clip, clap goes the mill by the swift running brook, clip, clap, By day and by night is the miller at work, clip clap! He grindeth the corn to make bread for the year, And with plenty of this we have nothing to fear; Clip clap...."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland)

KEYWORDS: miller, work, river, nonballad

FOUND IN: US(NE)

REFERENCES: (1 citation):
- Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 240-241, "The Mill" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #3750

NOTES: 47 words: Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland says of this, "This song in transition has lost its music-box characteristics, which are so apparent in the German form." A curious statement, since she never tells us what the German form is. Possibly "Es klappert die Mühle am rauschenden Bach"? - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: Lins240

Mill (II), The

DESCRIPTION: "Beside of clump o' needlewood we anchor down the mill." The singer describes building the mill. It isn't fancy; "no wealth of Yankee gear" or clerks or large crew; there are just nine or ten of them. The trees are going down; soon "we'll be all cut out"

AUTHOR: Words: C. H. Winter? (source: Colquhoun-NZ-Folksongs-SongOfAYoungCountry)

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Colquhoun-NZ-Folksongs-SongOfAYoungCountry)

KEYWORDS: lumbering, work, technology

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES: (1 citation):
- Colquhoun-NZ-Folksongs-SongOfAYoungCountry, p. 93, "The Mill" (1 text, 1 tune) (p. 54 in the 1972 edition)

RECORDINGS:
- Bill Taylor, "The Mill" (on NZSongYngCntry)

File: Colq054

Mill Mother's Lament, The

DESCRIPTION: "We leave our homes in the morning, We kiss our children goodbye, While we slave for the bosses, Our children scream and cry." They have no money for clothing and little for food. "Let's stand together, workers, and have a union here."

AUTHOR: Ella May Wiggins

EARLIEST DATE: 1953 (Greenway), but Wiggins was shot to death in 1929

KEYWORDS: children hardtimes labor-movement

FOUNDED IN:

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, pp. 250-251, "The Mill Mother's Lament" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: (no author listed), _Let's Stand Together: The Story of Ella Mae Wiggins_, Metrolina Chapter, National Organization for Women (Charlotte, NC), 1979, p. 18, "The Mill Mother's Lament" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Mary Phagan" [Laws F20] (tune)

NOTES [104 words]: This is said to be the most popular and most requested song by Ella May Wiggins, although I have no evidence that it went into tradition. The song was sung by Wiggins's grave at her funeral after she was murdered. Much of it is based on her own experience as (for practical purposes) a single mother working for inadequate wages in a mill -- and one who had had four of her nine children die because of the effects of poverty. It is said to be based on "Mary Phagan" [Laws F20]; for the irony of that, and for background on Wiggins, and on the Gastonia strike that led to her murder, see the notes to "Chief Aderholt." - RBW

_last updated in version 6.1_

File: GAFP250

Mill o' Lour, The

DESCRIPTION: "We a' agreed at Martinmas On Mill o' Lour to dwell, They said it was a very fine place, But it turned out not so well." The singer describes how hard it is to work the mill, and the people and teams involved.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Ford)

KEYWORDS: work home horse miller

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 330-331, "The Mill o' Lour" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 255, "The Mill o' Lour" (1 text)

Roud #5573

File: FVS330

Mill Wheel (I), The

DESCRIPTION: "In darkest shades the mill wheel Still sings its busy lay, My darling once did dwell there, But now he's far away"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1908 (Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast)

KEYWORDS: love separation miller

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #56, p. 2, "The Mill Wheel" (1 fragment)

NOTES [9 words]: The current description is all of the Greig fragment. - BS

_last updated in version 2.6_

File: Grg056a

Mill Wheel (II), The

DESCRIPTION: "Turn, turn, turn the big wheel, Round, round, round the big wheel, Whirr, whirr, hear the big wheel, What a pleasant sound." "Who is come on a visit to me? Put on the kettle and pour out tea. Welcome, dear neighbor... Please say 'Good day.'"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1920 (JournalOfAmericanFolklore, volume 33, according to Lewis-FavoriteMichiganFolkSongs)

KEYWORDS: nonballad playparty

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lewis-FavoriteMichiganFolkSongs, p, 33, "The Mill Wheel" (1 text, tune referenced)
Roud #7924

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Bow, Belinda" (tune)

NOTES [65 words]: I suspect the "Bow, Belinda" tune cited by Lewis-FavoriteMichiganFolkSongs is that which is better known as "O Belinda" and is part of the family we've filed as "Old Betty Larkin (Betsy Larkin, You Stole My Pard, Steal Partners, Stole My Partner)." Since neither Gardner in JournalOfAmericanFolklore nor Lewis-FavoriteMichiganFolkSongs gives an actual tune, however, I can't prove it. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.1

File: LeMi033

---

Mill, Mill O, The

DESCRIPTION: "Beneath a green shade I found a fair maid, Was sleeping sound and still." The singer has his way with her, then departs to fight in Flanders. Ten years later, he returns to find that she has a child and knows not the father. He marries her

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1803 (_Scots Musical Museum_ #242)

KEYWORDS: sex rape mother children reunion marriage soldier

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig/Duncan7 1437, "The Mill, Mill, O" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 165, "The Mill, Mill, O" (1 text)
James Johnson, Editor, _The Scots Musical Museum_ [1853 edition], volume III, #242, pp. 250-251, "The Mill Mill O" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #8486

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Binnorie" (tune, per Greig/Duncan7)

File: Ord165

---

Millbank Rocking, The

DESCRIPTION: A Millbank party: "Ranten Lads and Lasses Gaed West a bit ... neer did a mair motely Squad As this e'er lea the Toun" The partiers are named. Lots of dancing and drinking. When the fiddler thought it time to quit they all left after "A Roun o Mountain dew"

AUTHOR: Neil Walker (source: Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2)

EARLIEST DATE: 1828 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2)

KEYWORDS: dancing fiddle drink food music party moniker

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Bord))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 148, "The Millbank Rocking" (1 text)
Roud #15107

NOTES [16 words]: Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 glossary: "rocking, n, convivial gathering of neighbours" - BS

Last updated in version 2.6

File: LyCr2148

---

Miller and the Lass, The

DESCRIPTION: A maid takes her corn to be ground. The miller says he can't grind right now "my stones is high and my water low." She stays with him until "the mill would grind." "She swore she'd been ground by a score or more (But never been ground so well before"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Reeves/Sharp-TheIdiomOfThePeople)
KEYWORDS: sex miller
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South,West))
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Reeves/Sharp-TheIdiomOfThePeople 63, "The Miller and the Lass" (1 text)
Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, "The Miller's Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
Purslow-TheConstantLovers, p. 60, "The Miller and the Lass" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1128
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Maid Gaed to the Mill" (theme: sex and a miller; grinding corn as the metaphor) and references there
File: ReSh063

Miller Boy, The (Jolly is the Miller I)

DESCRIPTION: Playparty: "Happy is the miller boy who lives by the mill, The mill turns around with its own free will, Hand on the hopper and the other on the sack, Lady keeps a-going, gents turn back." Other verses about courting, milling, weather
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1719? (Pills to Purge Melancholy) (American version 1903/Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren)
KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad miller
FOUND IN: Britain(England(West),Scotland(Aber)) US(Ap,MA,MW,Ro,SE,So) Canada(Ont) New Zealand
REFERENCES (25 citations):
Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 67-70=Wolford/Richmond/Tillson-PlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 179-180, "Miller Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
List-SingingAboutIt-FolkSongsInSouthernIndiana, pp. 124-131, "The Miller Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore, p. 214, "The Miller Boy" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan 1604, "There Was a Jolly Miller" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph 518, "The Miller Boy" (5 texts, 2 tunes)
Spurgeon-WaltzTheHall-AmericanPlayParty, p. 97, "Dusty Miller" (1 text, 1 tune)
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #132, "The Jolly Miller" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 75, "The Miller Boy" (3 one-stanza fragments)
Brown/Schinhan/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 75, "The Miller Boy" (1 tune plus a text excerpt); also p. 522, "The Jolly Miller" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Hudson-FolksongsOfMississippi 153, pp. 300-301, "The Jolly Miller" (1 text)
Cambiaire-EastTennesseeWestVirginiaMountainBallads, p. 137, "The Miller's Boy" (1 text)
Bush-FSoCentralWestVirginiaVol4, pp. 4-6, "The Dusty Miller" (3 short texts, 2 tunes)
Skean-CircleLeft-FolkPlayOfKentuckyMountains, p. 40, "Jolly Is the Miller Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Neely/Spargo-TalesAndSongsOfSouthernIllinois, p. 197, "Happy is the Miller" (1 short text)
Abernethy-SingInTexas, p. 73, "(Happy was the miller who lived by the mill)" (1 short text, in the notes to "Turkey in the Straw")
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 75, "Jolly Miller" (4 texts, 1 tune)
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #40, "Happy is the Miller" (3 short texts)
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 40, "(There was a jolly miller)" (1 text, which open with verses from "The Miller Boy (Jolly is the Miller I)" and continues with "A-Hunting We Will Go")
JournalOfAmericanFolklore, F.W. Waugh, "Canadian Folk-Lore from Ontario," Vol. XXXI, No. 119 (Jan 1918), #638 p. 54 ("Happy is the miller who lives by himself") (1 text)
DT, OVRHILL5*
Miller o' Drone, The

DESCRIPTION: A miller grinds a maid's corn. She praises him to her mother. Mother has her corn ground. When the old man goes he is beaten. When he understands the game he beats mother and daughter until they promise not to return to Drone. They return anyway.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1877 (Poet's Box broadside "Miller of Drone," according to Greig/Duncan7)

KEYWORDS: sex violence miller father mother

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #41, p. 1, "Miller o' Drone" (1 fragment)
- Greig/Duncan7 1435, "The Miller o' Drone" (3 texts, 2 tunes)

Roud #7155

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "The Battle o' Harlaw" (tune, per Greig/Duncan7)
- cf. "The Maid Gaed to the Mill" (theme: sex and a miller; grinding corn as the metaphor) and references there

File: GrD71435

Miller of Dee, The

DESCRIPTION: The jolly miller "worked and sang from morn till night, no lark more blythe than he." He is happy because "the bread I eat my hands have earned... in debt to none I be." Listeners are urged to follow his example

AUTHOR: probably C Jonson (see NOTES)

EARLIEST DATE: 1729 ("Village Opera" (see NOTES))

KEYWORDS: work drink nonballad miller worker

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South),Scotland)

REFERENCES (13 citations):
- Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 194-195, "The Miller of the Dee" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 283)
- Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 635, "Miller of the Dee" (1 text)
- Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland (229), "The Jolly Miller" (1 text, located in the notes)
- Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 352, "There was a jolly miller once" (1 text)
Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel, p. 257, "The Miller of Dee" (1 text plus a later rewrite)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1433, p. 97, "The Miller of the Dee" (1 reference)
Heart-Songs, p. 443, "The Miller of the Dee" (1 text, 1 tune) Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd #2, "The Miller of Dee" (1 text; #3 is James Whitcomb Riley's "rewrite for The Northwestern Miller")
cf. Chappell/Wooldridge-OldEnglishPopularMusic II, p. 124, "The Budgeon It Is a Delicate Trade" (1 tune, partial text)
DT, MILLDEE* MILLDEE2* ADDITIONAL: J. Woodfall Ebsworth in Notes and Queries (London, 1901 ("Digitized by Google")), Ninth Series, Vol. VIII, No. 199, Oct 19, 1901, p. 331, "[Query]Scott Quotation ["I live by my mill, God bless her! She's parent, child and wife"]" "The Jolly Miller" ("There was a jolly miller once lived on the river Dee")
Matilda Blair, The Violet Speaker (New York, 1906 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 188-189, "The Miller of the Dees" (1 text)
Kathleen Hoagland, editor, One Thousand Years of Irish Poetry (New York, 1947), pp. 347-348, "(Song)" (1 short text)
Roud #503 BROADSIDES
Bodleian, Harding B 11(449), "There Was a Jolly Miller" ("There was a jolly miller once") , J.O. Bebbington (Manchester]), c.1850; also Bodleian, Firth b.25(278), "Miller of the Dee," W.S. Fortey (London), 1858-1885; Harding B 15(200a), "Miller of the River Dee"; Harding B 15(199b), "The Miller of the Dee"; Harding B 11(450), "There Was a Jolly Miller"
CROSS-REFERENCES: cf. "The Jolly Miller" (subject)
The Jolly Grinder (File: DTjollgr)
NOTES [1139 words]: Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland makes rather a hash of his notes on this song, observing that it is quite close to "The Jolly Miller," which may derive from the same sources. True enough. But "The Jolly Miller" is not "The Miller of Dee," and though Kennedy identifies the tune of the latter (correctly) with "The Budgeon It Is a Delicate Trade," "The Miller of Dee" and "The Budgeon" do not use the same tune as "The Jolly Miller," at least as transcribed by Kennedy. "The Budgeon," which Chappell finds in "The Quaker's Opera" in 1728, is in the natural minor; Kennedy's "The Jolly Miller" is in Ionian (major).
Kennedy makes things worse by saying "The Budgeon" is the same tune as "All Around My Hat" -- which again is in Ionian, not natural minor. - RBW
The Bodleian attributes authorship to Isaac Bickerstaffe, though none of the broadsides have that attribution on its face. Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 352: "This song, a general favourite in Scotland, and of Sir Walter Scott in particular, became well known after it was sung by John Beard in Bickerstaffe's Love in a Village. The music of this successful opera, performed at Covent Garden in 1762 ...."
Verse 1 of broadside Bodleian Firth b.25(278) is almost the same as verse 1 of Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 352, "There was a jolly miller once" (earliest date in Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes is 1762). - BS
The Opies say that it was "Love in a Village" was first performed in 1762, "arranged and largely composed by Arne," with this song sung by John Beard. Stanley J. Kunitz and Howard Haycraft, Editors, British Authors Before 1800: A Biographical Dictionary, H. W. Wilson, 1952 (I use the fourth printing of 1965), p. 43, give the publication date of "Love in a Village" as 1763.
I looked up several editions (Hoagland; Richard Aldington, The Viking Book of Poetry of the English-Speaking World) of the "Love in a Village" text, and it's clearly this song -- but there appears to be only one verse. So Bickerstaffe (1735?-1812?) isn't the whole story; the additional text must have come from another source.
According to Stanley J. Kunitz and Howard Haycraft, p. 42, "Love in a Village" was based on ideas produced by others: "The plot, as was often the case with Bickerstaffe's dramas, was derivative, put together from Charles Johnson's Village Opera, Wycherley's Dancing Master, and Marivaux's Le Jeu de l'Amour et du Hasard."
Bickerstaffe, incidentally, is almost as confusing as the piece he wrote, because he was a real person, but shared a name (almost) with Isaac Bickerstaff, who was not. There was also an actor with a name something like this (Kunitz/Haycraft, p. 42). And some sources confuse the spellings -- e.g. Henry Boylan, A Dictionary of Irish Biography, second edition, St. Martin's Press, 1988, p. 22, spells the name of the real one "Bickerstaff." He reports that Bickerstaffe was born around 1735, served in the marines, wrote twenty-odd plays -- but in 1772 was accused of murder and fled to Europe. He died in poverty around 1812.

Bickerstaff (no e on the end) was a pseudonym adopted by Jonathan Swift in a controversy with John Partridge. Bickerstaff made a claim Partridge was dead, and even wrote an elegy (1708), provoking an indignant exchange of pamphlets with the very-much-alive Partridge. This was amusing enough that Richard Steele used the Bickerstaff name for a writer of The Tatler Starting 1709. Then Bickerstaffe (with an e) was born a few decades later.- RBW

Ebsworth, successor to William Chappell as editor of The Roxburghe Ballads, gives a history of this song in Notes and Queries, cited above. He writes that "the foundation [of Bickerstaff's song] was C Jonson's 'Village Opera,' 1729. ... There was a jolly miller once lived on the river Dee; He work'd and sang from morn till night, no lark more blithe than he; And this the burthen of his song for ever used to be, 'I care for nobody, no, not I, if nobody cares for me. I live by my mill, God bless her! she's kindred, child, and wife; I would not change my station for any other in life: No lawyer, surgeon, or doctor e'er had a groat from me: I care for nobody, no, not I, if nobody cares for me.' This is the entire genuine song, but two other stanzas were afterwards added, unnecessarily, by inferior hands, printed in The Convivial Songster, 1782, p. 334, and 'Edinburgh Musical Miscellany,' 1793, p. 209, commencing:-- When Spring begins his merry career, oh, how my heart grows gay! and Thus like the miller, bold and free, let us rejoice and sing.... Let me add that a fraudulent modern version was sent by an Islington correspondent, 'Pallas,' to the Illustrated London News, circa 1856, and printed therein, as if from a flyleaf MS. It gave the genuine first stanza, omitted the second, 'I live by my mill,' &c., and added three stanzas of no value, viz., 'The reason why he was so blithe,' 'A coin or two I've in my purse,' and 'So let us his example take, and be from malice free,' &c. It was not trustworthy, but good-natured William Chappell gave it renewed currency on p. 667 of his Popular Music of the Olden Time; but on p. 668, in giving the music notes, he utterly 'sophisticated' the second verse and turned it into a drinking song [compare W. Chappell, Popular Music of the Olden Time (London, n.d. [1859 per Internet Archive]), Vol II, pp. 666-668; incidentally, Chappell re Bickerstaff: "he appropriated so many songs from other sources, without acknowledgement, that this [The Jolly Miller] may also have been introduced."]. The Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO text is the four-verse version Ebsworth has in the 1782 The Convivial Songster.

Common to all texts are lines to the effect, "I envy nobody, no, not I. Nor ..." something close, in 1762 in "Love in a Village." That is indeed all there is in "Love in a Village" in 1791 (source: Isaac Bickerstaff, Love in a Village (London, 1791 ("Digitized by Google", bound with and linked as John Milton, Comus, a Mask (London, 1791))), p. 19); Hoagland quotes this one verse. The description above goes with the text in Kennedy's note and with DT MILLDEE, a 1782 text, and DT MILLDEE2, possibly an earlier text than Bickerstaff. There are two sets of Bodleian broadsides from the mid-19th century: The "Miller of Dee" set adds a conversation between the miller and "old King Hal" in which the miller explains his happiness and the king concludes "Thy mealy cup is worth my crown"; the "There Was a Jolly Miller" set has a noble lord ask miller Ralph how to be happy and Ralph would have the lord "leave pomp and pageantry aside, be from ambition free." Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames is an "old King Hal" version. The claimant as author of "old King Hal" is Charles Mackay (1814-1889), according to Blair. - BS

Last updated in version 6.0

File: K229A

Miller Tae My Trade

DESCRIPTION: The singer reports, "I am a miller tae my trade... And mony a bag of meal I've made, And mony a lassie I hae laid." He describes one night on which a girl came to his mill and sought his services. (They end up being married)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1906

KEYWORDS: miller work seduction bawdy marriage sex work

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South),Scotland(Aber)) Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (4 citations):

Greig/Duncan 1489, "I Am a Miller to My Trade" (7 texts, 7 tunes)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 218, "The Buchan Miller" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 31, "The Miller" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT, MILLTRAD
Miller's Daughter (I), The (The Fleeing Servant)

DESCRIPTION: The youth and the miller's daughter find themselves on the hill; she starts to seduce him. He flees to the miller, saying, "'O, I have served you seven long years and never sought a fee, And I will serve you seven more if you'll keep your lass from me."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1827 (Kinloch)

KEYWORDS: seduction humorous miller sex rejection

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (3 citations):
- Kinloch-TheBalladBook V, pp. 23-24, (no title) (1 text)
- Greig/Duncan7 1476, "The Caul's Takin' Me, Gudeman" (3 texts, 1 tune)
- Grigson-PenguinBookOfBallads 84, "The Miller's Daughter" (1 text)

ST KinBB06 (Full)

Roud #7151

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "The Miller's Daughter (II)" (theme: miller's daughter's, like millers, have a big sexual appetite)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
- The Waukin' o' the Kline

NOTES [174 words]: Kinloch has no title for this piece, and of course doesn't list a source -- but I have to think it's traditional, simply because it doesn't make much sense as it stands. If the young man wants nothing to do with the girl, why does he go walking with her? It seems likely that a stanza is missing -- either one explaining how she trapped him alone, or one along the lines of "The Warranty Deed," explaining why she is desirable only when clothed. The Penguin version of this apparently comes from A. L. Lloyd, and isn't much more detailed -- but looks to have been tidied up just a little.

This is one of the handful of humorous treatments of male fidelity -- a theme going back to the tale of Joseph and Potiphar's wife (Genesis 39:1-20), as well as in the Egyptian "Tale of Two Brothers" which may have inspired it (for which see, e.g., Anthony S. Mercantante, Who's Who in Egyptian Mythology, Clarkson N. Potter, 1978, pp. 197-204). The theme is also the the source of such tragic ballads as "Child Owlet" and "The Sheffield Apprentice." - RBW

Last updated in version 2.6

File: KinBB06

Miller's Daughter (II), The

DESCRIPTION: The man says he'd give half year's fee to lie with the miller's daughter. "She said she'd gie him wark enough." She wears him out and he dies.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1996 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfursCollectionVolume2)

LONG DESCRIPTION: The man said he'd give half year's fee to lie with the miller's daughter. "She said she'd gie him wark enough." The first night they had sex nine times; the second night seven times; the third night five times; the fourth night three times; the fifth night not at all. He dies, apparently from exhaustion, and "his mother brought him the winding sheet"

KEYWORDS: sex death miller

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Bord))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Miller's She-Ass, The

DESCRIPTION: A miller could not pay the rent on his mill. The landlord offered the mill and arrears for the miller's wife. For appearances' sake they contract that the miller lend the landlord his she-ass in return for the mill. The miller enforces the contract.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1845 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(2055))

LONG DESCRIPTION: An honest miller could not pay the rent on his mill. The landlord loved the miller's wife. Drunk, he offered to trade the mill and arrears to sleep with the miller's wife. For appearance sake they agreed that the miller would appear to loan the landlord his she-ass in return for the mill. A lawyer wrote the contract. The next day the landlord's servant called on the miller to complete the deal. The miller had the servant take the she-ass. Sight unseen, the landlord ordered the she-ass put in his bed. The ass kicked the landlord out of bed and was turned out on the street.

"The miller he came and his ass he did own And through all the village the story was known"

KEYWORDS: sex bargaining trick hardtimes drink humorous animal wife landlord miller lawyer

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan2 310, "The Miller's She-Ass" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #5864

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(2055), "The Landlord Outwitted" or "The Crafty Miller and his She-ass" ("Good people attend I pray you draw near"), J. Pitts (London), 1819-1844

File: GrD2310

Miller's Wife o' Blaydon, The

DESCRIPTION: "The miller's wife o' Blaydon (x2), Sair she bang'd her ain gudeman For kissing o' the maiden."

"Yet aye the miller sings and swears... For one kiss o' that bonny mouth He'd freely give up twenty."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1900 (Stokoe/Reay-SongsAndBalladsOfNorthernEngland)

KEYWORDS: miller abuse adultery

FOUND IN: Britain(England(North))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Stokoe/Reay-SongsAndBalladsOfNorthernEngland, pp. 152-153, "The Miller's Wife o Blaydon" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST StoR152 (Full)
Roud #3167

File: StoR152

Miller's Will, The (The Miller's Three Sons) [Laws Q21]

DESCRIPTION: The dying miller, to decide which of his three sons will inherit, asks each boy how much he would charge. The first son would take an honest toll; the second, half; the last, all and swear to the sack. The miller joyfully gives the mill to the last son

AUTHOR: unknown
 EARLIEST DATE: before 1764 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 5(7))
 KEYWORDS: death father children robbery crime bequest lastwill
 FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW,NE,Ro,SE,So) Canada(Mar) Britain(England(All),Scotland(Aber))
 REFERENCES (49 citations):
 Laws Q21, "The Miller's Will (The Miller's Three Sons)"
 Flanders/Ballard/Brown/Barry-NewGreenMountainSongster, pp. 11-13, "The Miller's Three Sons"
 (1 text, 1 tune)
 Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 244-246, "The Miller and his Three Sons" (3 texts)
 Randolph 359, "There Was an Old Miller" (4 texts plus an excerpt, 3 tunes)
 Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 126-129, "There Was an Old Miller" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 91D)
 Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 61, "The Dishonest Miller" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
 List-SingingAboutIt-FolkSongsInSouthernIndiana, pp. 226-230, "The Miller's Will" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection, p. 137, "The Miller's Will" (1 text)
 Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 98, "The Dying Miller" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore, pp. 173-175, "The Miller and His Three Sons" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 177, "The Miller and His Three Sons"
 (2 text plus 5 excerpts and mention of 3 more)
 Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 177, "The Miller and His Three Sons" (4 excerpts, 4 tunes)
 Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 106, "The Miller" (1 fragment)
 Lunsford/Stringfield-30And1FolkSongsFromSouthernMountains, pp. 12-13, "The Old Man and His Mill"
 (1 text, 1 tune)
 Jones-MinstrelOfTheAppalachians-Bascom-Lamar-Lunsford, pp. 207-208, "The Dishonest Miller"
 (1 text, 1 tune)
 Burton/Manning-EastTennesseeStateCollectionVol1, pp. 27-28, "The Miller's Will" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #205, "The Miller's Will" (1 text plus a fragment, 1 tune)
 Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 145, "The Old Miller" (1 text plus mention of 1 more, 1 tune)
 Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 107, "The Miller That Made His Will" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Scarborough-ASongCatcherInSouthernMountains, pp. 240-242, "The Miller's Advice to His Three Sons, on Taking of Toll" (2 texts, both called "The Old Miller"; 2 tunes on p. 419)
 Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #188, "The Dying Miller" (2 texts, 1 tune)
 Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp.234-236 , "The Miller of Derbyshire" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 94, "The Miller" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 161, "The Miller's Will" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
 Sharp/Karpeles-EightyEnglishFolkSongs 56, "The Miller's Will" (1 text)
 Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 113, "The Three Sons" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 192-193, "The Miller and His Three Sons" (1 text)
 (also Williams-Willshire-WSRO Wt 381)
 Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 232, "The Miller's Last Will" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #32, "The Miller and His Three Sons" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast 41, p. 1, "The Miller's Three Sons" (1 text)
 Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #100, "The Miller's Three Sons" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Greig/Duncan3 703, "The Miller's Will" (3 texts, 1 tune)
 Stokoe/Reay-SongsAndBalladsOfNorthernEngland, pp. 58-59, "The Miller and His Sons" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Dixon-AncientPoemsBalladsSongsOfThePeasantryOfEngland, Song #21, pp. 204-206, "The Miller and his Sons" (1 text)
 Bell-Combined-EarlyBallads-CustomsBalladsSongsPeasantryEngland, pp. 414-415, "The Miller and His Sons" (1 text)
 Cohen/Seeger/Wood-NewLostCityRamblersSongbook, pp. 80-81, "The Miller's Will" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Chase-AmericanFolkTalesAndSongs, pp. 144-145, "The Miller's Will" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #41, "The Miller of Gospont" (1 text)
 Botkin-TreasuryOfNewEnglandFolklore, pp. 546-547, "The Miller's Three Sons" (1 text, 1 tune)
 Cox-FolkSongsSouth 155, "The Dishonest Miller" (3 texts plus mention of six more, 1 tune)
 Cox/Hercog/Halpert/Boswell-WVirginia-B, #18A-B, pp. 163-165, "The Miller and His Sons," "The Miller" (1 text plus a fragment, 1 tune)
Millman and Tuplin Song, The

DESCRIPTION: June 18 at Margate, Mary "went to meet her young lover, who a few nights before
Said he'd make all things right when they'd meet on that shore." He shoots her and "sunk her body deep down" in the river. He is convicted in 1898.

AUTHOR: Dan Riley

EARLIEST DATE: 1957 (Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland)

KEYWORDS: courting homicide trial lover

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
June 28, 1887 - Murder of Mary Tuplin by William Millman
1888 - Execution of Millman

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 46-47, 249-250, "The Millman and Tuplin Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-21FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 42-44, 82, "The Millman and Tuplin Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
Manny/Wilson-SongsOffMiramichi 50, "Young Millman (The Tuplin Song)" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST IvDC046 (Partial)
Roud #9179
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Prince Edward Island Murder" (subject)
cf. "The Murder of Mary Tuplin" (subject)
cf. "The Millman Song" (subject)

NOTES [165 words]: Roud has at least five different numbers for this event:
Roud #1837: Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 140, "Prince Edward Island Murder" [Laws dF59]
Roud #4129: Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 285-286, "The Millman Song" (also Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 180-181, "The Millman Murder Trial") [Laws dF60]
Roud #9179: Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 46-47, "The Millman and Tuplin Song" (also Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 50, "Young Millman")
Roud #9552: Shea, pp. 174-179, "The Millman Tragedy"
Roud #12463: Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland pp. 72-73, "The Murder of Mary Tuplin"
The Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland text has the trial in 1898 instead of 1888. That's understandable since the rhyme still holds. [We note that the version in Manny & Wilson has the date right. - RBW]
Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland and Ives-21FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland are the same June 25, 1957 performance. - BS
Last updated in version 3.6
File: IvDC046

Millman Song, The

DESCRIPTION: Mary "Cuplon" is pregnant by Millman. The father, rather than admit the deed or marry the girl, murders her and throws her in the river. Her body is found, and Millman is sentenced to death. The singer reminds parents to watch their children

AUTHOR: Attributed to John Calhoun
EARLIEST DATE: 1968 (Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland)
KEYWORDS: homicide pregnancy river trial execution

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
June 28, 1887 - Murder of Mary Tuplin by William Millman
1888 - Execution of Millman

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 285-286, "The Millman Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 180-181, 250, "The Millman Murder Trial" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST Doe285 (Partial)
Roud #4129
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Prince Edward Island Murder" (subject)
cf. "The Murder of Mary Tuplin" (subject)
cf. "The Millman and Tuplin Song" (subject)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Millman Murder Trial

NOTES [117 words]: This song is item dF60 in Laws's Appendix II. - RBW
Roud has at least five different numbers for this event:
Roud #1837: Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 140, "Prince Edward Island Murder" [Laws dF59]
Roud #4129: Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 285-286, "The Millman Song" (also Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 180-181, "The Millman Murder Trial") [Laws df60]
Roud #9179: Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 46-47, "The Millman and Tuplin Song" (also Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 50, "Young Millman")
Roud #12463: Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland pp. 72-73, "The Murder of Mary Tuplin" - BS
File: Doe285

Milly Molly Mandy

DESCRIPTION: The first lines of each verse are "Milly Molly Mandy Sweet as sugar candy." Each verse has a third line: "I'm in love with you," or "Your pretty little eyes are blue."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1978 (Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)
KEYWORDS: playparty love
FOUND IN: Britain(England(North))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame, p. 480, ("Milly Molly Mandy") (1 text)
NOTES [65 words]: Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame: "The first Milly-Molly-Mandy Stories, by Joyce Lankester Brisley, were published in 1928." - BS
Based on the artwork I have seen, and the intended readership of the stories, it would seem that Miss Millicent Margaret Amanda was intended to be about eight. Interesting to see her apparently being courted. Presumably her audience grew up even if she didn't. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.6
File: OpGa480A

Milwaukee Fire, The [Laws G15]

DESCRIPTION: The "oft-condemned" Newhall House catches fire; passers-by watch in horror as the residents die in the flames. In particular, a servant girl leaps to her death, and a mother watches her son trapped in the fire

AUTHOR: probably J. W. Kelley
EARLIEST DATE: 1922
KEYWORDS: fire disaster death
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Jan 1883 - Fire at the Newhall House. At least 63 people die
FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW,SW)
REFERENCES (6 citations):
Laws G15, "The Milwaukee Fire"
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, pp. 245-246, "The Newhall House Fire" (1 text, 1 tune)
Neely/Spargo-TalesAndSongsOfSouthernIllinois, pp. 166-167, "Milwaukee Fire" (1 text)
Pound-AmericanBalladsAndSongs, 62, pp. 138-140, "The Milwaukee Fire" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 435-437, "The Milwaukee Fire" (1 text plus a copy of the Kelley broadside)
DT 682, MILWAUKF
Roud #3255
RECORDINGS:
Warde Ford, "Milwaukee Fire" (AFS 4198 B1, 4198 B2, 1938; tr.; in AMMEM/Cowell)
Robert Walker, "The Milwaukee Fire" (AFS, 1941; on LC55)
NOTES [155 words]: John W. Kelley (who also produced such pieces as "The Bowery Grenadiers") wrote a piece called "The Milwaukee Fire" in 1884, and some sources equate this song with that item. The fire, however, was the subject of a great deal of press coverage, and doubtless produced several pieces. The version of the song reproduced by Cohen appears to be the same song but is entitled "The Newell House Fire" and does not appear to have a chorus. This makes me wonder about a rewrite along the way. None of the folk sources I have consulted equate the traditional song with the Kelley piece, and so I am attributing the authorship only tentatively until I see better evidence.
According to Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, the Milwaukee Fire was the worst in American history until 1946. The informant in Peters, Ella Mittelstaedt Fischer, claimed to have witnessed the Min Mand Han Var en Sjomand (My Man He Was a Seaman)

DESCRIPTION: Swedish shanty. Cautionary song, children ask "where is father? He's resting in the grave." Warns girls not to wed a sailor or they'll end up a widow with children. Source doesn't give a chorus, verses may have been repeated as refrains.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1904 (Eivind Jartved)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage shanty sailor wife death
FOUND IN: Sweden
REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 529-530, "Min Mand Han Var en Sjomand" (2 texts, Swedish & English, 1 tune)
- Hugill-SongsOfTheSea, p. 106, "Min Mand Han Varen Sjomand" (2 texts, Swedish and English, 1 tune)

NOTES [24 words]: Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas got this from Sternvall's Sang under Segel (1935) with a note that it was taken from "Eivind Jartved" in 1904. - SL

Mine Ain Love

DESCRIPTION: "They say I may marry the laird if I will, The laird of high degree, With jewels so rare to wear in my hair, A lady I'll surely be." "But where, o where, will my heart be?" "Oh, I will marry mine ain love... For true of heart am I."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1957 (collected from Nancy Stevenson by Boswell)
KEYWORDS: love money rejection
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Wolfe/Boswell-FolkSongsOfMiddleTennessee 13, p. 26, "Mine Ain Love" (1 short text, 1 tune)

Roud #11036

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Lad That's Far Awa" (theme)

NOTES [52 words]: This has much in common with "The Lad That's Far Awa," including the theme of the young woman being true to her love even though she could marry a man of "high degree." I would not be surprised if they go back to a common original. But the three verses found by Boswell are simply too short to prove identity. - RBW

Mine at Baie Verte, The

DESCRIPTION: George McNaughton finds asbestos. "The mineral was taken and shipped for higher test And when they got their answer it was the best." "Baie Verte will be mining in nineteen sixty-three"

AUTHOR: Gordon Rice (source: Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports)
EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports)
KEYWORDS: mining nonballad technology
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 263-265, "The Mine at Baie Verte" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #25327

RECORDINGS:
Gordon Rice, "The Mine at Baie Verte" (on NFAGuigné01)
Mine Eyes Have Seen the Glory of the Burning of the School

DESCRIPTION: "Mine eyes have seen the glory of the burning of the school, We have tortured every teacher, we have broken every rule." The students describe (with many variations) how they overthrew the scholastic regime

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal)

KEYWORDS: rebellion derivative

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (4 citations):
- Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 100, "Mine Eyes Have Seen the Glory of the Burning of the School" (1 text with many variants, tune referenced)
- NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal, Nancy Hunnicutt and Donna Southards, "The Foxfire Music Program," Vol. XXVI, No. 1 (May 1978), p. 29, "(Mine eyes have seen the glory of the burning of the school)" (1 text, tune referenced)

DT, BURNSCHL
ST PHCFS100 (Full)
Roud #30929

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "John Brown's Body" (tune)
- cf. "Mine Eyes Have Seen the Horror of the Ending of the Term"

NOTES [62 words]: I wonder if this isn't the most popular folk song in America today. Roud used to lump this with "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," from which it is patently derived, but it is clearly a separate song now, sung by many children who do not know the Battle Hymn. Even I heard it at some time in my youth. The Hunnicutt and Southards article says that all children know it. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: PHCFS100

Miner Hill

DESCRIPTION: "Come, boys, if you'll listen, I'll sing you a song... It's up here at Cutting's, at Camp Number One, The boys call the firm here Cutting and Son." The singer lists various specialists in the came, complains of the work, and says he won't be back

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1981 (Bethke-AdirondackVoices)

KEYWORDS: lumbering moniker hardtimes cook logger

FOUND IN: US(MA)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Bethke-AdirondackVoices, pp. 125-127, "Miner Hill" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #2975

File: Beth125

Miner, The

DESCRIPTION: The miner goes to work "With his calico cap and his old flannel shirt, his pants with the strap round the knee, His boots watertight and his candle alight His crib and his billy of tea." He works to support his family, and hopes to have money for tobacco

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1964
KEYWORDS: mining work family poverty
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia, pp. 74-75, "The Miner" (1 text, 1 tune -- collected as a fragment inserted into another piece)
Fahey-PintPotAndBilly, pp. 42-43, "The Miner" (1 text, 1 tune)
Manifold-PenguinAustralianSongbook, p. 43, "The Miner" (1 text, 1 tune)
Paterson/Fahey/Seal-OldBushSongs-CentenaryEdition, pp. 131-134, "The Miner" (1 text, collected as a conflation of "The Miner" and "The Dream of the Miner's Child")
NOTES [48 words]: Manifold comments, "This is one of the few songs from the later period of gold-mining, after the alluvial gold was finished." In other words, it is a true mining song, not a prospecting song. Such things are not rare in America, of course, but they do seem to be unusual in Australia. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: FaE074

Miner, The (Butte Miner)

DESCRIPTION: "The miners in the mines of Butte Are in rebellion fairly, The gathering clouds of discontent Are gathering fast and surely." The singer describes a miner's hard life. He declares that the mighty system trembles. The revolution's coming fast.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1918, according to Cohen
KEYWORDS: mining labor-movement hardtimes
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, p. 563, "The Miner" (1 text)
File: CASF564B

Miner's Doom, The [Laws Q36]

DESCRIPTION: Although a miner's life may be happy, the risks are great. This miner is riding back to the surface when the elevator rope breaks. His death causes his wife to die of grief, leaving their three children orphans
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (recording, Vernon Dalhart); reportedly sung to Korson in 1925
KEYWORDS: mining death orphan
FOUND IN: US(MA) Britain(Wales)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Laws Q36, "The Miner's Doom"
Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends, pp. 388-390, "The Miner's Doom" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 544, MINRDOOM*
Roud #1015
RECORDINGS:
Vernon Dalhart, "The Miner's Doom" (Brunswick 139, 1927; Supertone S-2014, 1930)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Orphan Girl" (the subtext "The Coal Miner's Child" has a plot very like this)
NOTES [84 words]: Laws lists this as an old Welsh song, and Korson claims to have picked it up from a Welshman in 1925. But I wonder. There seem to be only two known traditional versions: Korson's, which he claims to have heard in 1925 but who did not record it until 1946, and Lloyd's. Thus, apart from Korson's unverifiable claim of a 1925 date, there is no evidence of this song being in circulation prior to Vernon Dalhart's recording. One has to suspect that Dalhart at least contributed to its (bare) survival. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.2
File: LQ36
Miner's Dream of Home, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer, away from home for ten years, dreams of "the old homesteads and faces I loved" and thinks of hearing the New Year's bells as a boy. In his dream he promises his parents that he'd no't roam again.

AUTHOR: Will Goodwyn and Leo Dryden [George Dryden Wheeler (1863-1939 [per Wikipedia])]

EARLIEST DATE: 1892 (Wehman)

KEYWORDS: homesickness emigration home return reunion separation dream England Ireland father mother

FOUND IN: Britain(England(North)) Ireland Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
- OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 187, "'Tis Ten Weary Years" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 354-356, "Ten Weary Years (The Miner's Dream of Home)" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Wehman's [Universal Songster] Collection of Songs No. 34 (New York, 1892, digitized by Internet Archive), p. 28, "The Miner's Dream of Home" ("It is ten weary years since I left Ireland's shore") (1 text)
- David Hillery, _Vernacular Song From a North Yorkshire Hill Farm: Culture, Contents and Comparisons_, (Newcastle: University of Newcastle, 2005 [submitted ... for the degree of Doctor of Philosophy]), Vol. II, #4, "The Bells Were Ringing" ("It's ten weary years since I crossed England's shore") (1 text, 1 tune) [sung by Jack Beeforth] [may be downloaded as a pdf from https://theses.ncl.ac.uk/dspace/bitstream/10443/158/2/hillery05v2.pdf]

Roud #1749

RECORDINGS:
- Elizabeth Cronin, "'Tis Ten Weary Years" (on IRECronin01)

NOTES [73 words]: Published 1891 per Wikipedia article "Leo Dryden" accessed July 27, 2013. The words to "The Miner's Dream of Home" are printed at http://www.poppyrecords.co.uk/lifebeforevinyl/P15.htm. They are the same as Cronin's except that "home" for Goodwyn/Dryden is England, while Cronin has Ireland, and Goodwyn/Dryden refer to "old village bells" while Cronin sings "old Shandon bells." Note that the ADDITIONAL sources also differ on "home." - BS

Last updated in version 4.2
File: OCC187

Miner's Lifeguard

DESCRIPTION: A union song with religious overtones. The miner is advised to "Keep your hand upon the dollar and your eyes upon the scales."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1940

KEYWORDS: nonballad mining religious labor-movement

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (6 citations):
- Botkin-TreasuryOfSouthernFolklore, p. 730, "Miner's Lifeguard" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, pp. 15-16, "(Life Is Like a Mountain Railroad)" (1 text, plus fragments of assorted parodies, of which this is the first)
- Foner-AmericanLaborSongsOfTheNineteenthCentury, p. 208, "Miner's Lifeguard" (1 text)
- Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 138, "Miner's Lifeguard" (1 text)
- DT, MNRLFGRD*

Roud #3510

RECORDINGS:
- Mary Travers, "Miner's Lifeguard" (on PeteSeeger01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Life's Railway to Heaven (Life Is Like a Mountain Railroad)" (tune) and references there

NOTES [8 words]: A parody of "Life Is Like a Mountain Railroad." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: BSoF730
Miner's Prayer, A

DESCRIPTION: "I keep listening for the whistles in the morning, But the mines are still; no noise is in the air." The miner's children are crying with hunger and cold, but with no work, there is no food. All he asks is that the rich city folk give him work

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1940 (Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends)
KEYWORDS: mining hardtimes food poverty
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends, pp. 382-383, "A Miner's Prayer" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7721
File: KPL382

Miner's Song (II)

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, the farmers go around and fill their legs tied up with straw, The miners they go underground and never miss a blaw. Oh, a-mining we will go, my boys...." They work where they must. They go broke with the girls. They pay for their beer -- eventually

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (Gundry-CanowKernow-SongsDancesFromCornwall)
KEYWORDS: mining worker humorous money courting
FOUND IN: Britain(England(West))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Gundry-CanowKernow-SongsDancesFromCornwall, p. 53, "Miner's Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #3317
NOTES [47 words]: The last verse of Gundry-CanowKernow-SongsDancesFromCornwall's text is "And where we're up we're up, And when we're down we're down, And where we're only half way up, We're neither up nor down," from "The Noble Duke of York." But it obviously has a different meaning for miners.... - RBW
Last updated in version 4.5
File: Gund953B

Miners' Fate, The [Laws G10]

DESCRIPTION: A cave-in five hundred feet below the ground traps the Pittston miners. There can be no rescue; not even the bodies can be brought out. The families grieve

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE:
KEYWORDS: mining disaster death family
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
June 28, 1896 - The Pittstown cave-in
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Laws G10, "The Miners' Fate"
DT 786, MINRFATE
Roud #3261
File: LG10

Mines of Carriboue, The

DESCRIPTION: "On the banks of the Mississippi my parents reared me well, There was nothing for to hinder me along with them to dwell," but he was restless and went to the mines of Carribou. He warns of a hard trip and nine years spent unsuccessfully seeking gold

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (Rickaby/Dykstra/Leary-PineryBoys-SongsSongcatchingInLumberjackEra)
KEYWORDS: travel hardtimes mining warning
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Minister o' Birse, The

DESCRIPTION: "Ye sanna need to lie ther'oot And me ther'in, and me ther'in"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan4)

KEYWORDS: seduction clergy

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Greig/Duncan4 793, "The Minister o' Birse" (1 fragment, 1 tune)

Roud #6200

NOTES [19 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan4 fragment.

Greig/Duncan4: "Birse is on Deeside near Aboyne." - BS

Last updated in version 2.5

File: GrD4793

Minister's Farewell

DESCRIPTION: "Dear friends farewell, how do you tell, Since you and I must part? I am going away and here you stay, But still we are joined in heart. Your love to me has been most free, Your conversation sweet. How can I bear to journey where With you I cannot meet?"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1944 (Morris, Southern Folklore Quarterly 8)

KEYWORDS: separation clergy

FOUND IN: US(SE,So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #97, "Minister's Farewell" (1 short text, 1 tune)

Roud #5058

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Now Our Meeting Is Over" (lyrics)

NOTES [50 words]: This has so much in common with "Now Our Meeting Is Over" that I have to think they are mutually dependent. But with only two texts (Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida's and one in the John Quincy Wolf Arkansas collection), both very short, telling the exact nature of the connection is almost impossible. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.7

File: Morr097

Minister's Wife Has Learned a Sang, The

DESCRIPTION: "The minister's wife has learned a sang And she cares not how grit it be if it be lang"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1917 (Greig/Duncan8)

KEYWORDS: music wife clergy

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Greig/Duncan8 1869, "The Minister's Wife Has Learned a Sang" (1 fragment)

Roud #13583

NOTES [45 words]: The current description is all of the Greig/Duncan8 text. - BS

Ben conjecturs that "grit" in the second line is "great." This seems likely, but I might conjecture that it is from "greet," "weep" -- i.e. she doesn't care how mournful the song is if it's long enough. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.5

File: GrD81869
Minnehaha, Laughing Water

DESCRIPTION: "Minnehaha, Laughing Water, Cease your laughing notes for aye," because "savage hands are red with slaughter Of the innocents today." The singer's home is on fire. His wife and children are dead. He wishes he were dead also

AUTHOR: Words: Richard H. Chittenden / Music: Frank Wood (died 1899)

EARLIEST DATE: 1863 (according to Dunn)

KEYWORDS: death homicide river Indians(Am.)

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Rickaby/Dykstra/Leary-PineryBoys-SongsSongcatchingInLumberjackEra 53, "Minnehaha, Laughing Water" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Peg Meier, _Bring Warm Clothes: Letters and Photos from Minnesota's Past_, Minneapolis Star/Tribune, 1981, p. 100, "(no title)" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Haunted Wood" (approximate plot) and the extensive notes there on the relationship between the two songs

NOTES [205 words]: At the time I entered "Haunted Wood" into the Index, there was no evidence that this song had gone into tradition, and so I put all my research about "Minnehaha, Laughing Water" into the notes on that song. They're at least as relevant to this one, though, so I'd advise you to look them up. One small excerpt:

"[T]here is at present no reason to doubt that Frank Wood's 'Minnehaha' was the first song by a Minnesota to find local publication.... It followed Wood's initial composition by eight months, appearing in October, 1863. The words -- 'Minnehaha, laughing waters, cease thy laughing now for aye' -- were written by Richard H. Chittenden, a captain in the First Wisconsin Cavalry, who took part in the Sioux Uprising. The song is dedicated 'To the memory of the victims of the Indian Massacre of 1862.' It deals in lurid words the terrors of the Indian revolt and was as close to the Civil War as any of the local music came."

I would add (as the "Haunted Wood" notes make clear), there is no truth in this story. There was violence during the Dakota Conflict -- but not THIS violence. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.3

File: RDL053

Minnie Quay (Winnie Gray) [Laws G20]

DESCRIPTION: Slandered by a young man, sixteen-year-old (Minnie) finds that her parents have turned against her and wish her dead. She drowns herself in Lake Huron

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1941 (Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks)

KEYWORDS: suicide family lie drowning

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Laws G20, "Minnie Quay (Winnie Gray)"
Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks 77, "Minnie Quay" (1 text)
Beck-LoreOfTheLumberCamps 98, "Minnie Quay" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, p. 411, "Minnie Quay" (1 text)
DT 835, MINIQUAY

Roud #8850

NOTES [32 words]: [Beck notes that] Minnie Quay's tombstone can be found in the village of Forester, on the shore of Lake Huron. [The author of the song is] possibly William J. Smith, of Port Huron, Michigan. - PJS

Last updated in version 5.2

File: LG20

Minstrel Boy, The

DESCRIPTION: "The minstrel boy to the war is gone, In the ranks of death you'll find him. His father's sword he has girded on And his wild hard slung behind him." The minstrel falls in battle, destroying his harp so that "no chains shall sully thee."
AUTHOR: Words: Thomas Moore (1779-1852)
EARLIEST DATE: 1813 ("A Selection of Irish Melodies")
KEYWORDS: soldier harp music death
FOUND IN: REFERENCES (9 citations):
Moore-IrishMelodies-1846, pp. 99-100, "The Minstrel-Boy" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1440, p. 97, "The Minstrel Boy" (1 reference)
Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #86, "The Minstrel Boy" (1 text)
Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 57, "The Minstrel Boy" (1 text)
Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 226, "The Minstrel Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 279, "The Minstrel Boy" (1 text)
Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, p. 369, "The Minstrel-Boy"
DT, MINSTBOY
ADDITIONAL: Kathleen Hoagland, editor, One Thousand Years of Irish Poetry (New York, 1947), p. 375, "The Minstrel Boy" (1 text)
Roud #13867
RECORDINGS:
The Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem, "The Minstrel Boy" (on IRClancyMakem03)
Vernon Stiles, "The Minstrel Boy" (Columbia A-2435, 1917)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 25(1037), "The Minstrel Boy", B. Tirt (London), 1828-1829; also 2806 b.9(243), 2806 c.15(207), Harding B 11(1471), Harding B 16(49c), Firth b.26(434)[some words illegible], Firth b.25(385), Harding B 11(2293), 2806 c.16(197), Firth b.27(457/458) View 1 of 4, Johnson Ballads fol. 26, Harding B 40(2) View 3 of 4[some words cut out], Harding B 19(48), Firth b.26(87)[some words illegible], "The Minstrel Boy" LOCSheet, sm1879 02687, "The Minstrel Boy", Edw Schuberth (New York), 1879; also sm1882 21694, sm1882 22258, sm1884 25744, sm1885 05300, "The Minstrel Boy" (tune)
LOCsinging, sb30345a, "The Minstrel Boy", H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Fisherman's Son to the Ice Has Gone" (tune)
SAME TUNE:
My Northern Boy to the War Has Gone! (by John Ross Dix) (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets p. 104)
The Soldier's Funeral ("He mingled not with the glorious slain," by John Ross Dix) (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets p. 145)
NOTES [231 words]: Usually sung, in these days, as an anti-war song, but originally composed as an Irish freedom piece. The music is said to be "The Moreen," though that song is obscure. Songs That Never Grow Old (1909, 1913) credits the music to the popular composer Michael W. Balfe (who wrote the music to "Killarney") -- but doesn't mention Thomas Moore! This is another of Moore's "big works"; Granger's Index to Poetry cites it from 13 different anthologies. Ironically, I'm not sure it has ever been found strictly in tradition. There was a broadside, "The Coal Black Steed." The most common edition was published by Thomas M. Scroggy of Philadelphia (I own one, and have seen about eight others online). This edition is subtitled "An Original Glee -- Words by John Moore." It begins, "The Knight is on his steed again, To the fields of war he's going." (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets #323; Roud V364; Bodleian, Harding B 18(88), Firth b.34(118), Harding B 15(47b), Harding B 11(4218), 2806 c.16(30)=Harding B 11(992), Harding B 11(626), Harding B 11(993)). No tune is indicated, but the form, some of the words, and even the authorship by "Moore" hint that it is a parody of "The Minstrel Boy." - RBW
Broadside LOCsinging sb30345a: H. De Marsan dating per Studying Nineteenth-Century Popular Song by Paul Charosh in American Music, Winter 1997, Vol 15.4, Table 1, available at FindArticles site. - BS
Last updated in version 6.1
File: FSWB279A

Mione

DESCRIPTION: French cumulative song, in which the singer describes each of the items given by Mione: "If I had the beautiful shoes/stockings/hat/etc. which Mione gave to me...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1919 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)
Mirabeau

DESCRIPTION: "You may talk of equine heroes from Ajax to Grand-van-Ur.... But there's one more worthy of song... [is] Johnson's Mirabeau." The horse is far behind at the three quarters mark, but comes on to win

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1968

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 517-518, "Mione" (1 text, badly defective and conjecturally restored)

File: Beld517B

Miracle Flower, The

DESCRIPTION: A man murders and buries a girl. A flower grows from her grave and blooms the year round. If anybody plucks the blossom, it blooms again right away. The killer comes to see it. The flower it turns to blood in his hands and reveals his guilt

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1950

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp. 188-189, "The Miracle Flower" (1 fragment, 1 tune)

Roud #3345

NOTES [35 words]: [Creighton notes], "Although I have told many singers this story, I have yet to find one who knows the song." [The fragmentary text reads] "And wondered how so fair a flower could bloom and flourish there." - BN

File: CrSe188

Miramichi Fire, The [Laws G24]

DESCRIPTION: A great fire covers an area 42 by 100 miles. In less than a day it burns forest, houses, and towns, killing or wounding vast numbers. There is little for the survivors to do but bury the dead

AUTHOR: John Jardine = Thomas M. Jordan (?)

EARLIEST DATE: 1947

REFERENCES (7 citations):
Laws G24, "The Miramichi Fire"
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, pp. 201-202, "The Miramichi Fire" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 62-64,250-251, "The Miramichi Fire" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-21FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 33-37,82, "The Miramichi Fire" (1 text, 1 tune)
Beck-FolkloreOfMaine, pp. 251-254, "The Miramichi Fire" (1 text)
Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 34, "The Miramichi Fire" (1 text, 3 tunes)
DT 324, MIRAMICH
NOTES [231 words]: By the early nineteenth century, with the fur trade moving into the Canadian west, the eastern provinces were turning increasingly to logging as a source of income, sending most of their wood products to England. This had significant effects on the ecology. As the old forests were cut down, second growth invaded, which was naturally more flammable -- and if the fire grew big enough in one of the clear patches, it could spread to the old growth as well. The result was a constant fire danger. Although none of the fires was as large as the one described in this song, at least one (the "Great Fire") is said to have burned 400 square miles. Adding a zero to that might perhaps have helped inspire this song. - RBW

Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland: "Shortly after [the fire], John Jardine of Black River wrote a ballad about it which he almost certainly had printed and sold. Either he or, what is more likely, later singers put tunes to it.... At the moment ... no tune has a better right than the present one to be called, if not the 'original,' at least the most widespread." - BS

Laws cites the Bulletin of the Folk-Song Society of the Northeast (#11) in attributing this song to Thomas M. Jordan. Obviously Jordan and Jardine are oral variants on each other. Jardine is the more likely; Manny and Wilson have a photograph of John Jardine (obviously in later life). - RBW

Last updated in version 4.4

File: LG24

Mirie It Is While Sumer Ylast (Merry It Is While Summer Lasts)

DESCRIPTION: Early Middle English: "Mirie it is whil somer ylast, With fughles song." Merry it is while summer lasts, With fowls' song, But now neigh winter's blast, And weather strong. Ei! Ei! What, this night is long, And I, from much wrong, sorrow, mourn, and fast

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: c.1225? (Oxford, Bodleian Library MS. Rawlinson G.22)

KEYWORDS: hardtimes bird MiddleEnglish

FOUND IN: Britain(England)

REFERENCES (13 citations):

Stevick-OneHundredMiddleEnglishLyrics 2, "(Myrie it is whil somer ylast)" (1 text)
Sidgwick/Chambers-EarlyEnglishLyrics I, p. 1, "(no title)" (1 text)
Hirsh-MedievalLyric-MiddleEnglishLyricsBalladsCarols, #2, "(Mirie it is while sumer i-last)" (1 text)
Brown/Robbins-IndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse, #2163
DigitalIndexOfMiddleEnglishVerse #3486.5
ADDITIONAL: Carleton Brown, editor, _English Lyrics of the Xllth Century_, Oxford University Press, 1932, p. 14, "Now Comes the Blast of Winter" (1 text)
Reginald Nettel, _Seven Centuries of Popular Song_, Phoenix House, 1956, p. 13, "(no title)" (1 short text)
Karin Boklund-Lagopolou, _I have a yong suster: Popular song and Middle English lyric_, Four Courts Press, 2002, p. 42, "(no title)" (1 text)
Bruce Dickins & R. M. Wilson, editors, _Early Middle English Texts_, 1951; revised edition 1952, #XXV, p. 118, "Winter Comes" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Judas" [Child 23] [subject: The Earliest English Ballad] and references there

NOTES [182 words]: Mark this down as yet another instance of a claimed "earliest known ballad." Nettel, p. 13, offers it as his first popular piece. The idea seems to predate him; Brown, p. xiv, reports "E. W. B. Nicholson, sometime Bodley's librarian, dated [this] 'about 1225' and pronounced [it] to be 'the oldest known song in the English language.'"
I doubt it truly qualifies for that description, but it is an early English piece with music, so I'm putting it in here just because we try to list all the claimed "earliest ballads." At least it has a tune in the manuscript, as most of the other candidates do not. Hirsch-MedievalLyric says, "The powm has been discussed widely, including Raymond Oliver, Poems Without Names: The English Lyric, 1200-1550 (1970) and Edmund Reiss, The Art of the Middle English Lyric: Essays in Criticism (1972), but retains its mystery." Apparently this poem was not originally meant to be part of MS. Rawlinson G.22 (which is mostly classical material); it was a sheet that was stuck into the volume. It is apparently the only Middle English poem in the manuscript. - RBW

Bibliography

- Brown: Carleton Brown, editor, English Lyrics of the XIIIth Century, Oxford University Press, 1932 (I use the 1962 reprint)
- Nettel: Reginald Nettel, Seven Centuries of Popular Song, Phoenix House, 1956

File: DIMMIIWS

Miss Bridget Adair

DESCRIPTION: Bridget Adair is a forty year old spinster. One morning a man comes to her door and said "Miss Bridget, I die for you." She likes his demeanour. Then he gives her silks she had sent him to dye "a beautiful mazarine blue." She cries with disappointment.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Hayward-UlsterSongsAndBalladsOfTheTownAndCountry)

KEYWORDS: oldmaid

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Hayward-UlsterSongsAndBalladsOfTheTownAndCountry, pp. 74-75, "Miss Bridget Adair" (1 text)

Roud #6536

NOTES [47 words]: The Albert Memorial, cited in the song ["It was just as the Albert Memorial struck nine, And Miss Bridget was just out of bed"], was completed 1876 (source: The Victorian Web site). That puts an earliest possible date on the Hayward-UlsterSongsAndBalladsOfTheTownAndCountry version. - BS

File: HayU074

Miss Cochrane

DESCRIPTION: "It was on an Easter Monday which happened of late, Young Marg’ret got ready and set on her way." Her boat blows out to sea and she is drowned. Her body is never found. Her father says he warned her against sailing on Logh Foyle

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1924 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: death drowning ship father

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H42a, p. 148, "Miss Cochrane" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #9452

SAME TUNE:

Eirigh Suas a Stoirin (Kennedy, #34)

File: HHH042a

Miss Dinah

DESCRIPTION: "I wish I was an apple, Miss Dinah was another. And O! what a happy pair we'd make On the tree together." "Oh, I love Miss Dinah so." One day a wind blows them together, then into the water. "Miss Dinah she was raked ashore, But I was never founded"

AUTHOR: unknown
Miss Forbes's Farewell to Banff
DESCRIPTION: "Farewell ye fields an' meadows green, The blest retreat of peace and love." The singer tells of the beauties of home, and admits, "I'm loath to leave the scene again." The singer bids farewell, hoping all the while to return
AUTHOR: John Hamilton (died 1814) ?
EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (Ord-BothySongsAndBallads)
KEYWORDS: home love emigration
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 358, "Miss Forbes' Farewell to Banff" (1 text)
Roud #5607
File: 0rd358

Miss Gordon of Gight
DESCRIPTION: "O, whare are ye gaun, bonnie Miss Gordon... Ye're gauin wi' Johnny Byron To squander the lands o' Gight awa." "Your Johnny's a man frae England just come, The Scots dinna like his extraction ava... he'll spend a' your rent."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (Ord-BothySongsAndBallads)
KEYWORDS: warning home money marriage
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 390, "Miss Gordon of Gight" (1 text)
Roud #3891
NOTES [39 words]: According to Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, Catherine Gordon of Gight married John Gordon on May 12, 1785. The poet Lord Byron was their son -- but the fears of this song did come true: The Byrons did sell her family estate of Gight. - RBW
File: 0rd390

Miss Green
DESCRIPTION: Miss Green courted Sean O'Farrell. He left "for the love of old Ireland" and was greeted in New York by a band; he toasted the Yankees. Tomorrow she will follow him and they will marry. She hopes to return
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)
KEYWORDS: courting marriage emigration America Ireland nonballad patriotic
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan 47, "Miss Green" (1 text, 1 tune)
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 127, "Sean O'Farrell" (1 text)
Roud #5236
CROSS-REFERENCES:
File: RcMisGre

Miss Hattie Stold His Heart Away
DESCRIPTION: "Under my uncle's kind and friendly roof... Then to my so distressful life I took unto myself a wife." But then Miss Hattie beguiled him and caused him to kill his wife with poison disguised as medicine, then strangled her. His wife had been good to him

Miss Liza

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, Miss Liza, oh, mah darlin'! -- hoo ah hoo! Gwine away to leave you... Gwin away tomorrow... Ain't you mighty sorry?" "Oh, miss Liza... Comin' back to you... Won't you be my honey?" "Don't you know I lub you?... Don't you want to marry?"

Miss Lucy

DESCRIPTION: "I went to see Miss Lucy; I'd never been there before. Last time I saw Miss Lucy, She was rolling on the floor."

Miss Lucy Loo

DESCRIPTION: Shanty. "Bend yer backs take in the slack, roll me over, Lucy. To me way, hay, hay, ho, hu! Bend yer backs take in the slack, roll me over, Lucy. We're rollin down to Trinidad to see Miss Lucy Loo" No story line, verses one line each repeated w/choruses.
Miss Mary Jane (Riding in the Buggy, Who Moan for Me)
DESCRIPTION: "Ridin' in the buggy, Miss Mary Jane... Long way from home. Who moan for me...." "Sally got a house in Baltimore... And it's three stories high. "Sally got a house in Baltimore, filled with chicken pie."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)
KEYWORDS: courting home nonballad nonsense
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 117, "Miss Mary Jane" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 259, "Miss Mary Jane" (1 text, 1 tune)
Coleman/Bregman-SongsOfAmericanFolks, pp. 104-105, "Who Mou'n fo' Me?" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST LoF259 (Partial)
Roud #11595
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Letter from Down the Road" (lyrics)
NOTES [9 words]: I know it looks like "Old Joe Clark." But it's not. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.2
File: LoF259

Miss Susanna Jane
DESCRIPTION: "Miss Sue, Miss Sue; Somebody's in your cellar, Mis Sue, Miss Sue, Somebody's in your cellar, Miss Susie Anna Jane." "Did you ever see a monkey make a motion, Miss Sue...." "Did you ever see a monkey make a motion, Miss Sue...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1962 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)
KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad animal
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5, p. 510, "Miss Susianna Jane" (1 short text, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Monkey Motions" (mention of Monkey Motions)
File: BrS5511

Miss Ramgoat (Mister Ramgoat)
DESCRIPTION: Jamaican patois. Mr Ramgoat, the barber has come. Please lend me your razor to shave off my long beard.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (Murray-FolkSongsOfJamaica)
KEYWORDS: nonballad worksong animal
FOUND IN: West Indies(Jamaica)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Murray-FolkSongsOfJamaica, p. 39, "Missa Ramgoat" (1 text, 1 tune)
RECORDINGS:
Edric Connor with the Caribbeans and Earl Inkman, "Missa Ramgoat" (on WIEConnor01)
NOTES [31 words]: Murray-FolkSongsOfJamaica has this as a song "from Jamaican folklore, which may mean a cante-fable song. Dexter/Taylor say "a song sometimes used to accompany work or as a mento piece." - BS
Last updated in version 3.7
File: JaMu039

Misses Limerick, Kerry and Clare
DESCRIPTION: Three girls civilly compare their county's heroes. "The Limerick people, they were never beaten." Kerry and Clare both claim O'Connell, "that great Lib'rador." Limerick also claims O'Connell: "we have his staue as well as ye" and Parnell besides.

Mission Song
DESCRIPTION: The workers at the Mission "get the milk skimmed and de relations de cream." The poor get only rags while the Manager is off spending the proceeds in places like Carboneer or Boston.

Missionary's Farewell, The
DESCRIPTION: "Yes, my native land I love thee, All thy scenes I love them well... Can I leave thee, can I leave thee, Far in heathen lands to dwell?" The singer rehearses all that (he) would be leaving, but concludes that preaching the gospel is worth it

Mississippi County Farm Blues
DESCRIPTION: "(Wish I was a babe in my mama's arms"(3x) Wouldn't a been here working on the county farm.") Floating blues verses include "And I hate to hear that big bell dong ... Poor boy, poor boy, you're going on."
Son House, "Mississippi County Farm Blues" (on StuffDreams1)

NOTES [69 words]: Three line blues: the first line is repeated -- more or less -- and the last line completes the thought.

Son House's "hate to hear" verse takes off on Blind Lemon Jefferson's "Have you ever heard the church bell dong" ("See That My Grave Is Kept Clean") by tolling on his bass string. Other floating verses comment on life in jail: "Some got six months and some a year ... Poor me, poor me got a lifetime here." - BS

Last updated in version 5.2

File: RcMCFB

Mississippi Flood, The (The Murrumbidgee Flood)

DESCRIPTION: "Another great disaster has come upon our land, Down where the Mississippi flows on her way so grand." A great flood comes. The levee breaks. Many are killed. The singer has no explanation but believes the dead will have crowns in heaven

AUTHOR: Carson J. Robison?

EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (Scott-ACollectorsNotebook-31TraditionalSongs)

KEYWORDS: death disaster river flood

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

1927 - Mississippi River floods, devastating the Delta region and leaving thousands homeless

FOUND IN: US(So) Australia

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Scott-ACollectorsNotebook-31TraditionalSongs, p. 12, "The Murrumbidgee Flood" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #10441 and 22608

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Mighty Mississippi" (subject) and references there

NOTES [84 words]: Scott calls this the "Murrumbidgee Flood," but admits in his notes that the singer called it the "Mississippi Flood," although he heard another version in which the river was the Murrumbidgee. It's not really surprising that a song about the Mississippi was known in Australia, since it was recorded by Vernon Dalhart. Roud splits the versions about the two rivers (the American versions are Roud #10441, Scott's version is #22608), but I'd call them the same, given that Scott rewrote his version. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.5

File: ScCo1012

Mississippi Heavy Water Blues

DESCRIPTION: Singer tells of destructive power of Mississippi River floods of 1927; his woman and his home have both been washed away. Refrain: "That's why I'm cryin', Mississippi heavy water blues."

AUTHOR: Robert "Barbecue Bob" Hicks

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (recording, "Barbecue Bob" Hicks)

LONG DESCRIPTION: Singer tells of destructive power of Mississippi River floods of 1927; his woman and his home have both been washed away; he hopes for her return and yearns for another pay day. Refrain: "That's why I'm cryin', Mississippi heavy water blues." He says "Ain't no womens out here, for they all got washed away." "Mississippi shakin', Louisiana sinkin', the whole town's a-shrinkin', Robert Hicks is singin'. That's why I'm cryin', Mississippi heavy water blues."

KEYWORDS: grief homesickness loneliness lover river flood lament

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

1927 - Mississippi River floods, devastating the Delta region and leaving thousands homeless

FOUND IN: US(SE)

RECORDINGS:

Robert "Barbecue Bob" Hicks, "Mississippi Heavy Water Blues (Columbia 14222-D, 1927)
Roscoe Holcomb, "Mississippi Heavy Water Blues" (on Holcomb02)
Josh Thomas, "Mississippi Heavy Water Blues" (on ClassBanj)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Great American Flood Disaster" (subject)
Mississippi Jail House Groan

DESCRIPTION: Singer, in jail, sleeps "with my back turned to the wall." His woman brings coffee and tea -- everything but the jailhouse key. His parents say he has too many women; he looks at his mother, hangs his head, cries; if his woman kills him he's ready to die.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (recording, Rube Lacy)
KEYWORDS: captivity prison floating verses father lover mother prisoner
FOUND IN: US (SE)
RECORDINGS:
Rube [Reubin] Lacy, "Mississippi Jail House Groan" (Paramount 12629, 1928; on BefBlues1)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Midnight Special" (floating lyrics)

NOTES [15 words]: Again, the narrative in this song just sneaks under the wire as a ballad, but it does. - PJS

Mississippi Sawyer

DESCRIPTION: Fiddle tune, with no words listed, but very well known.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1921 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)
KEYWORDS: nonballad fiddle
FOUND IN: US (SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 671, "Mississippi Lawyer" (1 tune)

NOTES [56 words]: Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 gives only a tune for this, no words, but says it was "Sung by Miss Jewell Robbins." It is described as a "jog." It is of course a well-known fiddle tune, and we don't index fiddle tunes, but this is just enough of a dubious case that I put it in. But it probably should be excluded. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.1

Missus in the Big House

DESCRIPTION: "Missus in the big house, Mammy in the yard. Missus holdin' her white hands, Mammy workin' hard." "Old Marse ridin' all the time, Niggers workin' round. Marse sleepin' day time, Niggers diggin' in the ground."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1963
KEYWORDS: work slave discrimination
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Courlander-NegroFolkMusic, p. 117, (no title) (1 text)
Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, p. 96, "Missus in de Big House" (1 text)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 246-247, "De Black Gal" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Fly Around, My Pretty Little Miss"

NOTES [73 words]: Metrically, this reminds me very much of "Fly Around, My Pretty Little Miss." Hard to tell if they are the same without a tune and with only two verses.
The Lomax text does not share the two verses of the Courlander and Greenway versions, but the form and content (contrasting white luxury with Black work and poverty) seem to place the songs together. The Lomax text may be composite anyway; they give no information about its origin. - RBW

File: CNFM117
Mister Carter

DESCRIPTION: "Mister Cyarter, Mister Cyarter, Won't you be (i.e. buy?) my dawg? He won't bite a sheep But 'e will bite a hog."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: dog nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 110, "Mister Carter" (1 text)

File: Br3110

Mister Costler

DESCRIPTION: Lorn Costler has the mail contract for outports. When he and his engineer, Billy Warren, work, "the day must be fine, the sea must be calm." He "gives out the mail at a terrible rate" in order to leave quickly even with no danger from ice or wind.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1977 (Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou)

KEYWORDS: cowardice commerce storm

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 80, "Mr Costler" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #28972

NOTES [75 words]: The mail route for Costler's ship, The Packet, is along the south coast about 70 miles east of Port-aux-Basques. - BS

Since the ship in the song carried the mail, and had an engine, it was very likely a member of the "Alphabet Fleet," for which see the notes to "The Wreck of the Steamship Ethie." On that basis, it might be possible to work out which ship it was, since the ships each were responsible for part of the circuit around Newfoundland. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: LeBe080

Mister Dooley's Geese

DESCRIPTION: "I've a very noisy neighbor, Mister Dooley is his name, He's fond of ructions, likewise of raising game; For it's all day long they're marching, Wth their quack, quack...." The singer is always fighting Dooley's birds

AUTHOR: Words: Edward Harrigan / Music: David Braham

EARLIEST DATE: 1884 (sheet music published by William A. Pond & Co.)

KEYWORDS: humorous bird fight clothes

FOUND IN: Canada(Que)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Finson-Edward-Harrigan-David-Braham, vol. II, #109, pp. 99-100, "Mister Dooley's Geese" (1 text, 1 tune)

BROADSIDES:
LOCSheet, M 3500 M2.3.U6A44,, "Mister Dooley's Geese"," Firth, Pond & Co. (New York), 1884

NOTES [320 words]: For background on Harrigan and Braham, see the notes to "The Babies on Our Block."

Franceschina, p. 171, reports this as one of five songs for the play McAllister's Legacy: "'Mister Dooley's Geese,' a narrative patter song complaining about a noisy neighbor, has an attractive march chorus evoking the quacking sounds of geese, the gobbling noises of turkeys, and the rooster's cock-a-doodle-doo."

The play "McAllister's Legacy," according to Franceschina, p. 170, starts with a typical Edward Harrigan absurdity: old Morgan McAllister, from Ireland but living in Australia, leaves most of his relatives worthless legacies such as a pair of pants or a wooden leg, but one is given a plot of land and another the building on the land. The two then fight over how to dispose of the property. It eventually turns out that the lawyer who read the will is actually McAllister, disguised, attempting to find out which of his relatives is worthy of the property. Molly McGouldrick (played by Tony Hart), who had been granted the building, had been kind to all, ends up with the entire inheritance.
Moody, p. 146, mentions a few other features: a communist planting bombs in clocks, a veterinarian who treats humans "while off duty," a wild parody of the stock market. The play sounds interesting, but it was to have sad side effects: On the night of November 22, 1884, after the Harrigan and Hart company rehearsed the play (which was supposed to premier in two weeks), the theater burned down (Moody, p. 143). The play managed to find a new stage fairly quickly, but did not last long (Moody, pp. 146-147), and no doubt that contributed to the eventual split between Harrigan and Hart. Although I have not been able to hear it, Edith Fowke collected a song by this title, with the correct first line, in Quebec; hence the "Found In" entry. As of this writing, despite the collection from tradition, it has no Roud number.- RBW

Bibliography

Last updated in version 5.2

File: HaBrMDoG

Mister Garfield

DESCRIPTION: Song-story about the assassination of President Garfield. Garfield, shot, tells doctor he's badly wounded. He gives dying advice, and hopes to go to heaven. Sheriff arrests Charles Guiteau for the murder; he says "I'll hang on the 6th day of June."

AUTHOR: Unknown, but much of the text may have been written by Anderson Williams

EARLIEST DATE: 1949 (recording, Bascom Lamar Lunsford)

LONG DESCRIPTION: Song-story describing the assassination of President James Garfield. Garfield's been shot; tells doctor he's badly wounded. Preacher asks where he'd like to spend eternity: Garfield says "Heaven." His wife asks if he should die, should she remarry? He tells her, "Don't you never let a chance go by." Sheriff arrests Charles Guiteau for the murder; he says "I'll hang on the 6th day of June." Mrs. Garfield brings her husband roses

KEYWORDS: grief marriage questions violence crime execution homicide punishment death dying wife doctor

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

July 2, 1881 - James A. Garfield is shot by Charles Guiteau, who thought Garfield owed him a patronage job. Garfield had been president for less than four months

Sept 19, 1881 - Death of Garfield

June 30, 1882 - Hanging of Charles Guiteau

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Jones-MinstrelOfTheAppalachians-Bascom-Lamar-Lunsford, pp. 212-214, "Mr. Garfield" (1 text, 1 tune)

NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal, John Forbes (transcriber), "Songs Collected by Mr. Bascom," Vol. XXV, No. 1 (May 1977 -- special issue for Bascom Lamar Lunsford), pp. 17-20, "Mr. Garfield" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #9138

RECORDINGS:

Bascom Lamar Lunsford, "Mr. Garfield" (LOC AAFS L29, 1949) (Folkways FP 40, c. 1952) (on BLlunsford02)

J. C. "Jake" Staggers, "Garfield" (on FolkVisions2)

Art Thieme, "Mister Garfield" (on Thieme04)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Garfield" (form)

NOTES [82 words]: Lunsford is usually thought to have written this, but Art Rosenbaum believes it originated in the Black community. - PJS

Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices is comparing it to his song "Garfield," which is a story song about a murder involving a "Garfield." But it never says that the "Garfield" is the President. I have split Rosenbaum's "Garfield" from "Mister Garfield," although Roud lumps them.
For the story of James A. Garfield and his death, see the notes to "Charles Guiteau" [Laws E11]. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1
File: RcMrGarf

Mister McKinley (White House Blues)

DESCRIPTION: "McKinley hollered, McKinley squallled; The doc says, 'McKinley, I can't find the ball.'" Describing McKinley's assassination by Zolgotz, his poor medical treatment, and his funeral. McKinley is usually said to be "bound to die."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (recording, Charlie Poole)

KEYWORDS: death homicide doctor funeral political humorous

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Sept 6, 1901 - President William McKinley is shaking hands at an exhibition when he is shot by anarchist Leon Czolgosz, who felt McKinley was receiving too much attention.

MacKinley's wounds should not have been serious, but his inept doctor decided to operate immediately rather than wait for a specialist

Sept 14, 1901 - Death of MacKinley (due more to operative trauma than to his wounds). Theodore Roosevelt becomes President

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (12 citations):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 337, "Zolgotz" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Jones-MinstrelOfTheAppalachians-Bascom-Lamar-Lunsford, pp. 215-216, "Czolgosz" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cohen-LongSteelRail, pp. 413-425, "Cannonball Blues/Whitehouse Blues" (2 texts, 2 tunes, the first being "Mister McKinley (White House Blues)" and the second the "Cannonball Blues," plus a version of a song called "Mr. McKinley" from _The Week-End Book_, which is so different that I would regard it as a separate though perhaps related song, probably not traditional)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 118-119 "McKinley" (1 text)
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 256-257, "White House Blues" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 143, "Mister MacKinley" (sic) (1 text, 1 tune)
Dunson/Raim/Asch-AnthologyOfAmericanFolkMusic, p. 56 "White House Blues" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cohen/Seeger/Wood-NewLostCityRamblersSongbook, p. 228 "White House Blues" (1 text, 1 tune)
Rorwer-RamblingBlues-LifeAndSongsOfCharliePoole, p. 73, "White House Blues" (1 text)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 287, "White House Blues" (1 text)

DT, WHITHOU*

ADDITIONAL: Tristram P. Coffin and Hennig Cohen, _Folklore in America: Tales, Songs, Superstitions, Proverbs, Riddles, Games, Folk Drama and Folk Festivals_, Doubleday, 1966, p. 90, "McKinley" (1 text)

Roud #787

RECORDINGS:
Warde Ford, "Buffalo, Buffalo (Death of McKinley)" (AFS 4198 B3, 1938; tr.; in AMMEM/Cowell)
Bill Monroe & his Bluegrass Boys, "Whitehouse Blues" (Decca 29141, 1954)
Charlie Poole and the North Carolina Ramblers, "White House Blues" (Columbia 15099D, 1926; on AAFM1, CPoole01, CPoole05)
Riley Puckett, "McKinley" (Columbia 15448-D, 1929)
Swing Billies, "From Buffalo to Washington" (Bluebird B-7121, 1937)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Battleship of Maine" (tune)
cf. "Delia's Gone [Laws I5] (tune, some versions)
cf. "The Cannonball" (words)
cf. "Joking Henry" (tune)
cf. "White House Blues (II)" (structure, tune, words)
cf. "Huey Long" (lyrics, form)

NOTES [148 words]: I know of three derivative versions of this song: one collected in Kentucky in the 1930s, talking about Herbert Hoover (in this collection as "White House Blues (II)"), a second recorded by country-and-western singer Tom T. Hall in the 1970s, talking about Richard Nixon. Both share the title "White House Blues." The third is "Governor Al Smith." - (PJS)

McKinley had been unpopular among farmers, most of whom had supported Democrat William Jennings Bryan, and his passing was not much mourned among country people -- thus the jaunty, humorous tone of this song. - PJS

The reference to McKinley’s children earning a pension upon their father’s death is completely unhistorical; McKinley married Ida Saxton (1847-1907) in 1871, but his two daughters, Katie and Ida, both died in infancy, and Mrs. McKinley was an epileptic and an invalid by the time her husband was elected President. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.1

File: LoF143

Mister Rabbit

DESCRIPTION: "'Mister Rabbit, Mister Rabbit, your tail's mighty white.' 'Yes, bless God, been gettin' out of sight....'" Mister rabbit similarly explains its coat, ears, and other physical features

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)

KEYWORDS: animal questions dialog nonballad floatingverses

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, pp. 173-174, "Mister Rabbit" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-FolkSongUSA 6, "Mister Rabbit" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 240-242, "Cotton Field Song" (1 text, 1 tune, composite; the final portion goes here and the rest is largely floating verses or unidentifiable; some may go with "Fly Around, My Pretty Little Miss")
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 167, "Old Molly Hare (Mr. Rabbit)" (2 texts plus 4 fragments, 1 excerpt, and mention of 2 more; the "C," "D," and "E" fragments, plus probably "B," are "Old Molly Hare," "I" is "Mister Rabbit"; "A" and "G" mix the two)
ST LxU006 (Partial)
Roud #10058

RECORDINGS:
Horton Barker, "Hop, Old Rabbit, Hop" [with a couple of verses from "Poor Old Man"] (on Barker01)
Pete Seeger, "Mister Rabbit" (on PeteSeeger08, PeteSeegerCD02)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Rattlesnake" (theme)

NOTES [58 words]: Roud links together several rabbit songs under one number: "Mister Rabbit," "Ole Mister Rabbit (I'll Get You Rabbit)," even "Rabbit Hash." All are about rabbits raiding gardens (something they certainly do) and the attempts to punish them for it (rarely successful, even with modern technology). But the forms are quite distinct, so I split them. - RBW

File: LxU006

Mister Squirrel

DESCRIPTION: "'One day Mr. Squirrel went up a tree to bed. A great big hickory nut fell upon his head. 'Although I am fond of nuts,' Mr. Squirrel then did say, 'I'd very much rather that they wouldn't come this way.'"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Brown)

KEYWORDS: animal food humorous

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 171, "Mr. Squirrel" (1 short text)

File: Br3171

Mister, Please Give Me a Penny

DESCRIPTION: "'Mister, please give me a penny, For I ain't got any Pa, Mister, please give me a penny, I want to buy some bread for Ma."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1940 (Randolph)
Mistletoe Bough, The

DESCRIPTION: In the castle, beneath the mistletoe bough, the lord's daughter prepares to wed young Lovell. The girl, tired of dancing, decides to hide and have Lovell find her. He never does. Years later, her body is found "in a living tomb," trapped in a chest.

AUTHOR: Thomas Haynes Bayly?

EARLIEST DATE: 1855 (National Temperance Songster)

KEYWORDS: love marriage game hiding death Christmas

FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond,South)) US(MA,MW,ro,So)

REFERENCES (12 citations):
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 637, "Mistletoe Bough" (1 text)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #126, "The Mistletoe Bough" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph 802, "The Mistletoe Bough" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 466-468, "The Mistletoe Bough" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 802)
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, pp. 223-224, "The Mistletoe Bough" (1 text, 1 tune)
Stout-FolkloreFromIowa 31, "The Mistletoe Bough" (1 text plus a text of "Ginevra," for which see the NOTES)
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #35, "The Mistletoe Bough" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #72, "The Mistletoe Bough" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1723, p. 116, "The Old Oak Chest, or The Missletoe Bough" (sic.) (2 references)
(source notes only)
DT, MISTLETOE*

Roud #2336

BROADSIDES:

SAME TUNE:
The Workhouse Boy ("The cloth was laid in the workhouse hall") (Grigson-PenguinBookOfBallads 102; Henderson-VictorianStreetBallads, p. 42, "The Workhouse Boy"; cf. broadside Bodleian Firth c. 16(311), unknown, no date; a parody in "Dutch" dialect of this song, with very similar lyrics except that the girl is transformed to a boy in a poorhouse; Roud #29495)

Billy Jenkins, or The two houses of parliament (parody per broadside Harding B 11(2462), which also contains the original)

Hail to Old Tippecanoe ("Van Buren sits in his marble hall") (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 276)

The Greeley Pill, Mixed at Cincinnati and taken at Baltimore, July 19, 1872 ("There was an old doctor who wore a white hat; He made pills of Free Love and Free Farms and all that") (Lawrence-MusicForPatriotsPoliticiansAndPresidents, p. 456)

The Chinaman's Fate ("The cradles were rocking one fine summer's day, And the diggers were busily puddling away") (by Charles R. Thatcher, in "Thatcher's Colonial Songster") (Thatcher-ColonialMinstrel-Songsters, p. 72; Anderson/Thatcher-GoldDiggersSongbook, pp. 79-80)

NOTES [656 words]: Underwood, pp. 22-23, reports this of Bramshill House near Basingstoke in Hampshire: "An ancient chest in the panelled gallery is said to have been the 'death bed' of a young bride who died on the eve of her wedding." Her ghost is reported to have walked. Probably unrelated, but a garbled version might perhaps have inspired this song. The legend was certainly widespread; Alexander, pp. 195-196, reports versions of the story from Maxwell Hall, Owlesbury, Hampshire; Brockdish Hall, Norfolk; Minster Lovell hall, Oxfordshire (a place with a lot of other legends going back to the Wars of the Roses), and of course Bramshill, but Alexander thinks Maxwell Hall the original because it, in his account, has the ghost known as the Mistletoe Bride. Boase, p. 80, also lists Maxwell Hall as the place most associated with the legend and mentions the "Mistletoe Bride" title -- but points out on p. 81 that the ghost seen at Maxwell Hall could also be Anne Boleyn, who was held there before her execution.
On the other hand, Westwood/Simpson, p. 591, give particular attention to Minster Lovell, where there was a legend that, during a restoration, a walled-off room was located in which a dead body was found. This obviously sounds rather like this legend -- although most think the body was that of Francis, Lord Lovell, a close associate of King Richard III who fought at the Battle of Stoke in 1487 and, with his side having been defeated, was never seen again.
Hadlow, pp. 23-24, quotes a similar story told by Horace Walpole of the body of Count Konigsmark, the lover of Sophia Dorothea the wife of George I of England, who was made to disappear.
Alternately, the tale might come from the same roots as "Ginevra," by Samuel Rogers (1763-1855), which has the same story though the bride is Italian and the poem is set in Italy. I do not know the exact date of "Ginevra," but it is part of his massive multi-volume poem "Italy," published 1822-1828 and reissued in revised form in 1830, so his piece probably predates "The Mistletoe Bough."
Westwood/Simpson, p. 303, say that Rogers was working from the legend of "The Mistletoe Bride," i.e. the same legend as this song.
The final stanza of "Ginevra," as quoted in HouseholdTreasury, pp. 133-135, is as follows (the whole poem "Italy" is apparently in blank verse):
Full fifty years were past, and all forgot,
When, on an idle day, a day of search
'Mid the old lumber in the Gallery,
That mouldering chest was notices; and 'twas said
By one as young, as thoughtless as Ginevra,
"Why not remove it from its lurking-place?"
'Twas done as soon as said; but on the way
It burst, it fell; and lo! a skeleton,
With here and there a pearl, an emerald-stone,
A golden clasp, clasping a shred of gold.
All else had perished, -- save a nuptial ring,
And a small seal, her mother's legacy,
Engraven with a name, the name of both,
"GINEVRA."
There, then, she had found a grave.
Within that chest she had concealed herself,
Fluttering with joy, the happiest of the happy;
When a spring lock, that lay in ambush there,
Fastened her down for ever!
Incidentally, NewCentury, entry on "Ginevra," say that this story was told of several English castles.
And, no, I have no idea, Harry Potter fans, if it is significant that Ginny Weasley's real name was Ginevra!
Leach, p. 278, claims that "The Hunting of the Snark," Lewis Carroll's greatest work other than the Alice books, uses this song as a "leitmotif"; Turner, p. 221, also speculates that this might have inspired the method of hunting a snark, "They sought it with thimbles, they sought it with care...."
But although Leach et al claim that a theme in "The Mistletoe Bough" is the origin of one of Carroll's stanzas, the only words they have in common are "They sought." And Leach is full of speculations in the absence of evidence (often in direct defiance of evidence). So I don't think we need pay that particular hypothesis much attention. - RBW
Bibliography

- Hadlow: Janice Hadlow, A Royal Experiment: The Private Life of King George III, Henry Holt, 2014 (published in Britain by William Collins as The Strangest Family)
- HouseholdTreasury: [no author listed], The Household Treasury of English Song, T. Nelson and Sons, 1872
Mistress Paxton's Shop
DESCRIPTION: The singer tells about everything he finds in the shop: "bacca, saip and carpet shoon, screw nails and bakin soda,... split peas an fiddle rosit... whings, biscuits...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1989 (McMorland/Scott-HerdLaddieOTheGlen)
KEYWORDS: commerce humorous
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Bord))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
McMorland/Scott-HerdLaddieOTheGlen, pp. 82-83, 152, "Mistress Paxton's Shop" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #21745
NOTES [37 words]: An "outlandish catalog" song of a kind popular in Newfoundland ("The Kelligrews Soiree," "The Rich Wedding Cake" and "Trinity Cake") and the music hall (hear, for example, The Flanagan Brothers' "The Half Crown Song"). - BS
Last updated in version 3.2
File: McSc082

Mistress's Health (I), The
DESCRIPTION: "Here's a health unto the mistress, the fairest of twenty ... We'll drink him out so deep, and we'll sing ourselves to sleep"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1892 (Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs)
KEYWORDS: drink nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs, pp. 140-141, "The Mistress's Health" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #310
File: BrMa140

Mistress's Health (II), The
DESCRIPTION: "Our mistress's health we now begin, In spite of the Pope and the Spanish king"
She has gold and silver and can get more. Let's smoke and drink. "Let the mistress's health go round"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1893 (Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs)
KEYWORDS: drink nonballad royalty
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs, p. 141, "The Mistress's Health" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #21096
NOTES [121 words]: "The popularity of the poet's royal mistress, Queen Elizabeth, has been brought before us, in a drinking-song of the time, by Mr F.E. Sawyer, among the specimens of Sussex music (p. 322): 'Our mistress's health we'll now begin ....'" (source: T Morgan, "Review of
Mither, I Maun Hae a Man

DESCRIPTION: "Noo mither, I maun tell ye, I'm gaun to be a wife; For I'm sure it's nae pleasure To live a single life." The girl complains of the burdens her mother puts on her, and offers Biblical arguments for marriage, and concludes, "I mean to tak' a man."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan7)
KEYWORDS: oldmaid mother children marriage
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #105, pp. 2-3, "Mither, I Maun Hae a Man"; #101, p. 2, "Mither, I Maun Hae a Man"; #103, p. 2, "Mither, I Maun Hae a Man" (1 texts plus 3 fragments)
Greig/Duncan7 1333, Greig/Duncan8 Addenda, "Mither, I Maun Hae a Man" (7 texts, 3 tunes)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 148-149, "Mither, I Maun Hae a Man" (1 text)
Roud #5554
NOTES [113 words]: The girl here does not really quote the Bible, except for paraphrasing "be fruitful and multiply" (Genesis 9:1, etc.), but her argument is taken largely from 1 Corinthians 7, particularly 7:28, which states that it is no sin for a girl to marry.
The part about the girl being obedient has multiple sources in scripture, including the first part of 1 Corinthians 11 (the key verse here, 11:10, is actually close to making nonsense in Greek, but of course this is clarified -- usually to the detriment of the women -- in most translations). - RBW

Mo Chraoibhin Aoibhinn Aluinn Og (My Pleasant Beautiful Young Little Branch)

DESCRIPTION: The harper says his true love is "bound and bleeding 'neath the oppressor." Her riches and beauty gone, she is deserted by many "crouching now like cravens" "Arouse to vengeance, men of brav'ry"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1845 (_The Spirit of the Nation,_ according to OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads)
KEYWORDS: harp nonballad patriotic
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 85, "Mo Chreeveen Eeven Aulin Og" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: OLCM085

Mo Dhachaidh (My Ain Home)

DESCRIPTION: Gaelic. Our house by the ferry is surrounded with flowers and birds, protected by the hill from snow. My wife is "the star o' my hame ... the bairnies are singin'" We don't need riches.

AUTHOR: Malcolm MacFarlane
EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (The Celtic Monthly)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage lyric nonballad home wife
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
ADDITIONAL:
RECORDINGS:
Malcolm Angus McLeod, "Mo Dhachaidh" (on NovaScotia1)

NOTES [68 words]: The description is based on Moffat's translation by Alexander Stewart. - BS
Jaan Kolk pointed out to me the publication of this work in The Celtic Monthly with a report date of March 13, 1893; this was the winning poem in a Gaelic poetry contest. This first printing was signed "Tobar a' Chaibeil" ("The Well of the Chapel"?), but the prize was awarded to Malcolm MacFarlane, so the authorship is clear. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.2
File: RcMDMAH

Mo Leastar Beag
DESCRIPTION: Gaelic. "The poet takes his newly-churned butter for sale at the market, but the 'Taster' declares it impure. The song lament's the poet's misfortune."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1947 (OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage commerce food
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 89, "Mo Leastar Beag" (2 texts, 1 tune)
RECORDINGS:
Elizabeth Cronin, "Mo Leastar Beag" (on IRECronin01)
NOTES [17 words]: The description follows the "English Summary" provided by OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin. - BS
Last updated in version 3.2
File: OCC089

Mo Mhuirnin Ban
DESCRIPTION: Gaelic. The singer "laments his absence from his loved one... she is already betrothed to Lord Keane." She outshines all his other suitors.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage love beauty lament nobility
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 90, "Mo Mhuirnin Ban" (2 texts)
NOTES [17 words]: The description follows the "English Summary" provided by OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin. - BS
Last updated in version 3.2
File: OCC090

Mo Nighean donn a Cornaig
DESCRIPTION: Singer's fiancee, coming to church, is murdered by ruffians. The wine saved for their wedding is instead drunk at her funeral. The singer wishes he could find those who killed his beloved; he has a sword, and will test the strength of his arm with it.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1917 (Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland)
KEYWORDS: grief love sex wedding violence abduction crime homicide revenge beauty death funeral mourning foreignlanguage lament lover wine
FOUND IN: Scotland(Hebr)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 19, "Mo Nighean Donn a Cornaig [My Dark-Haired Maid from Cornaig]" (1 text in Scottish Gaelic + translation, 1 tune)
Kennedy-Fraser/MacLeod-SongsOfTheHebrides II, pp. 140-145, "A Tiree Tragedy (Mo Nighean
Mo-te A-pe Promene Sur La Rue Commune

DESCRIPTION: Creole French. "Mo-te a-pe promene sur la Rue Commune, Quand Mo-te a-pe boire un bon berre la bierre. Voila m'o culotte craquet et fais moin assi par terre." A man has a drink of beer and meets and forces the singer to the ground

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage drink

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 124, "Mo-te A-pe Promene Sur La Rue Commune" (1 short text, 1 tune)

File: ScNF124

Moab Alphabet, The

DESCRIPTION: "A stands for Amassy, in Moab he does dwell, B stands for Bartlett, the judge you all know well; C stands for Chairley, a young man on the flat," and so forth through the residents of Moab, Utah, omitting F, Q, U, V, X, and Y

AUTHOR: Hannah Somerville (source: Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah)

EARLIEST DATE: 1949 (Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah)

KEYWORDS: moniker wordplay home nonballad

FOUND IN: US(Ro)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #248, "The Moab Alphabet" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #21107

File: Hubb248

Moanin'

DESCRIPTION: Leader (preacher): "De trumpet sounds in my soul" (congregation echoes). "I ain't got long to stay here."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1934

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 579-580, "Moanin'" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #15563

File: LxA579

Mobile Bay

DESCRIPTION: Shanty. "From Liverpool Town we sailed away - CH: John come tell us as we haul away. Outward bound at the break of day - CH. Aye, aye, haul aye - CH." Several verses refer to Mobile Bay and to women. Probably started as a Negro cotton stowing song.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1894 (Alfred M. Williams, Studies in Folk-Song and Popular Poetry, p. 7)
KEYWORDS: shanty work
FOUND IN: Britain US
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Colcord-SongsOfAmericanSailormen, p. 118, "Mobile Bay" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Harlow-CHANTYINGABOARDAMERICANSHIPS, pp. 86-87, "Mobile Bay" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 287-288, "John, Come Tell Us As We Haul Away" (1 text, 1 tune) [AbEd, pp. 210-211]
Roud #4696
CROSS-REFERENCES:
 cf. "Stow'n' Sugar in de Hull Below" (some verses)
NOTES [25 words]: Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas explains that this was one of a very few shanties that would use two singers for the solo lines, alternating verses. - SL
Last updated in version 2.6
File: Hugi287

Mobile Blues

DESCRIPTION: A verse is two couplets followed by "mama, daddy got that mobile blues." Verses are about car wrecks and driving 'mobiles. Then, you won't find "your loving daddy" till you "drop on down in Florida"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1980 (USFlorida01)
KEYWORDS: travel death wreck nonballad wordplay technology
FOUND IN: US(SE)
RECORDINGS:
Emmett Murray, "Mobile Blues" (on USFlorida01)

File: RcMobBlu

Mochyn Du (The Black Pig)

DESCRIPTION: Shanty. Explains that the black pig is dying, and that now they'll have to do without bacon. Chorus laments the passing of the pig, "Oh, our hearts are very sore...." Based on a Welsh folk song.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas)
KEYWORDS: shanty worksong foreignlanguage animal food
FOUND IN: Wales
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, pp. 238-239, "Mochyn Du" (2 text-English & Welsh, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
 cf. "Hob-y-derri-dando" (English verses often interchanged with this)
 cf. "Cosher Bailey's Engine" (tune)
NOTES [44 words]: See also notes to "Hob-Y-Derri-Dando." English words often sung to the same tune go "Dave Davy comes from Nevin, an' he's got a little engine, An' he cannot do without it, 'Cos he thinks so much about it. Ch. Wass you effer see (x3) such a funny thing before?" - SL
File: Hugi238

Mode o' Wooing, The

DESCRIPTION: "Young men when that they do arrive Between a score and twenty-five... [are inclined] To gang away a-wooing, a woo woo wooing." The singer tells of asking advice on how to court, but the old men's advice is bad. He has better luck asking an old woman

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1900 (Stokoe/Reay-SongsAndBalladsOfNorthernEngland)
KEYWORDS: youth courting questions
FOUND IN: Britain(England(North),Scotland(Aber))
Model Church, The

DESCRIPTION: "Well, wife, I found a model church, And worshipped there today. It made me think of good old times." Because he is hard of hearing, they let him sit in front. The singing made him think he could hear. The music makes him feel happy that he won't sin more

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Boette-SingHipsyDoodle)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad husband wife

FOUND IN: US(Ap,So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Boette-SingHipsyDoodle, p. 148, "The Model Church" (1 text)

Roud #7523

NOTES [76 words]: The singer claimed that the service in the Model Church made him able to hear. On the evidence, it doesn't seem to have helped his ability to think.

The hymn "Coronation" referred to in the song is often known as "All Hail the Power of Jesus's Name," and is indexed under that title. "Coronation" isn't really a good name for it, since that is the name of the tune, and "All Hail" is sung to many tunes although "Coronation" is probably the most common. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.3

File: Boet148

Mole-Catcher, The

DESCRIPTION: The old molecatcher learns that his wife is carrying on with a young farmer. He catches them in the act, and demands ten pounds of the farmer for "tilling my ground." The farmer says that's a fair price, "For that won't amount t'above tuppence a time."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1905

KEYWORDS: adultery sex trick commerce humorous bawdy

FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond,South,West))

REFERENCES (8 citations):

Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 206, "The Mole-Catcher" (1 text, 1 tune)

Copper-SongsAndSouthernBreezes, pp. 268-269, "The Molecatcher" (1 text, 1 tune)

MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland 38, "The Molecatcher" (1 text, 1 tune)

Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 93, "The Molecatcher" (1 text)

Purslow-TheConstantLovers, p. 61, "The Molecatcher" (1 text, 1 tune)

Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #104, "The Mole Catcher" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #83, "The Molecatcher" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT, MOLECATCH*

Roud #1052

RECORDINGS:

Alec Bloomfield, "The Mole-Catcher" (on FSBFTX19)

A. L. Lloyd, "The Molecatcher" (on Lloyd01)

File: K206

Mollie and Willie

DESCRIPTION: When Mollie (?) refuses to marry Willie (?), he sets off to be a soldier. She dresses in soldier's clothes and follows him. He tells his fellow "soldier" of his love for Mollie. She starts to cry, and her identity is revealed
Mollie Darling

DESCRIPTION: "Won't you tell me, Mollie darling, That you love none else but me? For I love you, Mollie darling; You are all the world to me." He asks that her answer be a kiss. When he says goodbye, he asks her to dream of him.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5)
KEYWORDS: love courting separation dream flowers
FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE,So)
REFERENCES (6 citations):
Arnold-FolkSongsofAlabama, pp. 82-83, "Mollie Darling" (1 text, 1 tune)
Boette-SingaHipsyDoodle, p. 128, "Mollie Darling" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 708, "Molly Darling"; 709, "Molly Darling" (2 short texts, 2 tunes)
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 30, "Mollie Darling" (2 texts plus a fragment, an excerpt of a fourth, and mention of a fifth; 1 tune)
Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 41, "Mollie Darling" (1 text)
Roud #4966
File: BrS5708

Molly Agnew

DESCRIPTION: The singer is vexed that the Irish are "forced from their nation." He meets Molly Agnew, a poor servant girl. Her rich father had been slain in 1799, and his family driven "to beg, starve or die." She agrees to marry the singer and go to old Scotia.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1854 (broadside, Bodleian 2806 b.11(175))
KEYWORDS: marriage rebellion death servant hardtimes Ireland Scotland father
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar,Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 30, "Molly Agnew" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2750
RECORDINGS:
Mary Dunphy, "Molly Agnew" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 b.11(175), "Molly Agnew"[partly illegible] ("On the nineteenth of July, in the year twenty-nine"). The Poet's Box (Glasgow), 1854; also Harding B 17(196b), "Molly Angew"[sic but only in the title][partly illegible]
SAME TUNE: The Girl I Love Best (tune, per broadside Bodleian Harding B 17(196b))
NOTES [59 words]: The Bodleian broadsides 2806 b.11(175) and Harding B 17(196b) are more complete than Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick and are the source for the description. - BS
I have to suspect that this is based some other emigration song which lacks the political motif. It reminds me a bit of "The Poor Stranger (Two Strangers in the Mountains Alone)." - RBW

Molly and Tenbrooks [Laws H27]

DESCRIPTION: In the race between (Molly) and (Ten Broeck), Molly at first takes the lead. Ten Broeck tells his jockey to let him run free, and proceeds to overtake the mare.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE:

KEYWORDS: racing horse

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
July 4, 1878 - race between Ten Broeck and Miss Mollie McCarthy (won by Ten Broeck)

FOUND IN: US(Ap,MW)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Laws H27, "Ten Broeck and Mollie"
Thomas-BalladMakingInMountainsOfKentucky, pp. 126-127, (no title) (1 short text, probably of this song although it does little except describe Ten Broeck)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 253-254, "Ten Broeck and Mollie" (1 text)
DT 652, MOLLTEN (MOLLTEN2)

RECORDINGS:
Carver Boys, "Tim Brook" (Paramount 3199, 1930; rec. 1929; on StuffDreams2)
Warde Ford, "The Hole in the Wall / Timbrooks and Molly" (AFS 4210 A1, 1939; in AMMEM/Cowell)
Bill Monroe & His Blue Grass Boys, "Molly and Tenbrooks" (Columbia 20612, 1949)
Sonny Osborne, "Molly and Tenbrooks" (Kentucky 605, n.d.)
The Stanley Brothers, "Molly And Tenbrooks" (Rich-R-Tone 418, 1948)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Timbrook" (subject)
cf. "Old Timbrook Blues" (subject)
cf. "Liza Jane" (lyrics)
cf. "Run Mollie Run" (lyrics)
cf. "Skewball" [Laws Q22] (theme)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Run, Molly, Run

NOTES [239 words]: The "short description" above mirrors the plot as given by Laws. In my experience, however, almost all versions of this song credit Molly, not Ten Broeck, as the winner. Of course, many of these texts may have been influenced by the popularized Bill Monroe version, "Molly and Tenbrooks."

Every version of this piece that Laws was aware of came from two articles by Wilgus (both in Kentucky Folklore Record, Vol II, #3 and Vol. II, #4). Wilgus reports that "A match race in Kentucky was arranged at $5,000 a side for a three-heat race, all heats to be four miles each. If either horse was distanced in a heat, the other horse was to be declared automatically the winner."

"The July 4, 1878 match race in which the Kentucky thoroughbred Ten Broeck defeated the mare Miss Mollie McCarthy went into the record books as the last four-mile heat race in American turf history."

As it turned out, Mollie led for much of the first race, then staggered and was distanced, ending the contest. Both sides started trading charges: That Ten Broeck had been poisoned, that the state of the track affected the outcome, etc.

Wilgus sees a relationship with "Skewball" [Laws Q22], and the possibility of a relationship cannot be denied. Laws, however, does not note the connection. As Laws makes the observation that the ballad shows "extreme verbal variation," he may have thought that similarities to "Skewball" either coincidence or later grafts. - RBW

Molly and the Baby

DESCRIPTION: "There's a patient little woman here below, And a little kid that ought to have a show, Now I'll give the whiskey up and I'll take a coffee cup With Molly and the baby don't you know." The singer vows to give up drinking for the sake of his family

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (Aurora Advertiser)
KEYWORDS: drink family promise
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Randolph 338, "Molly and the Baby" (1 text)
  Roud #7810
File: R338

Molly Bawn (Mary Bawn or Boating on Lough Ree)

DESCRIPTION: The singer remembers happier days with beautiful Mary Bawn: "Her smiles she had for everyone, her kisses all for me." "She pledged herself to be my bride" but "an angel" took her. His hair is now silver but "her comely form still haunts my mind"

AUTHOR: John Keegan Casey (1846-1870) (source: Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, Roe)
EARLIEST DATE: 1878 (Roe); 1942 (The McNulty Family recording)
KEYWORDS: courting love death beauty nonballad lover
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
  Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 266-268, "Molly Bawn (Mary Bawn or Boating on Lough Ree)" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Owen Roe, Reliques of John K. Casey ("Leo") (Dublin: Richard Pigot, 1878 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 181, "Boating on Lough Ree" ("I'm sad and I am lonely now in this far-off West") (1 text)

Roud #24971
RECORDINGS:
  The McNulty Family, "Molly Bawn" (Decca 12257, 1942)
  Alphonse O'Driscoll, "Molly Bawn" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
NOTES [169 words]: Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports: "[Molly Bawn's] popularity in Newfoundland is attributed to the influence of the Irish American vaudeville group the McNulty Family, who popularized it.... McNulty records were readily available... in St. John's...." Guigné's tune is the same as on the McNulty recording. The McNultys made minor changes in every line of Casey's poem; for example, besides changing Mary Bawn's name to Molly Bawn, and the lake's name from Lough Ree to Lough Lee, they changed the first line from "I'm sad and I am lonely now in this far-off West" to "Well I am sad and lonely here in the distant West." The McNultys use Casey's second verse as a chorus. Guigné's text follows the McNultys rather than Casey and mishears some McNulty words (for example, the McNultys have "a-boating on Lough Lee" and Guigné has "alone beyond Lough Lee"). There are a few differences between O'Driscoll and Guigné. O'Driscoll also mishears "a-boating on Lough Lee," but as "of old beyond Lough Lee." - BS

Last updated in version 4.2
File: Guig266

Molly Bawn (Shooting of His Dear) [Laws O36]

DESCRIPTION: Jimmy goes out hunting and shoots his true love (Molly, mistaking her for a swan). He is afraid of the law, but is told that the law will forgive him. At his trial Molly's ghost appears and explains the situation; the young man is freed

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1806 (Jamieson, volume i, p. 194 -- a partial text in the notes to "Lord Kenneth and Fair Ellinour")
KEYWORDS: hunting death trial reprieve help ghost
FOUND IN: US(Ap,MA,MW,NE,SE,So) Britain(England) Ireland Canada(Mar,Newf)
REFERENCES (39 citations):
  *Laws O36, "Molly Bawn (Shooting of His Dear)"
  Randolph 54, "Molly Vaughn" (3 texts plus 2 fragments and 1 excerpt, 1 tune)
  Eddy-BalladsAndSongsFromOhio 77, "Mollie Vaughn (Polly Band)" (1 text)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 14, "Molly Baun" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 274-276, "Polly Van" (1 text, 1 tune)
Karpeles-FolkSongsFromNewfoundland 26, "Shooting of His Dear" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 111, "As Jimmie Went A-Hunting" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 76, "Molly Bawn" (1 text plus a fragment)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 76, "Molly Bawn" (3 excerpts, 3 tunes)
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #214, "Molly Baun" (3 texts, 1 tune)
Scarborough-A SongCatcherInSouthernMountains, p. 117, "Molly Vaughn" (1 text, properly titled "The Death of Molly Bender," with very peculiar orthography; it looks like it came from a semi-literate manuscript but is said to be from a field recording)
Chappell-FolkSongsOfRoanokeAndTheAlbermarle 57, "Polly Bond" (1 fragment)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 50, "Shooting of His Dear" (6 texts, 6 tunes)
Hudson-FolksongsOfMississippi 32, pp. 145-146, "Shooting of His Dear" (2 texts)
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 73, "Molly Bond" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wolfe/Boswell-FolkSongsOfMiddleTennessee 24, pp. 44-46, "Molly Bond" (1 text, 1 tune)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 700-701, "Molly Bawn" (1 text)
Leach-HeritageBookOfBallads, pp. 176-177, "Molly Bawn" (1 text)
Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends, pp. 46-47, "Molly Banding" (1 text, 1 tune)
Friedman-Viking/PenguinBookOfFolkBallads, p. 26, "Molly Bawn" (1 text)
Grigson-PenguinBookOfBallads 92, "Young Molly Ban" (1 text)
McNeil-SouthernFolkBalladsVol1, pp. 96-97, "Molly Van" (1 text, 1 tune)
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, p. 196, "Molly Baun Lavery" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hodgart-FaberBookOfBallads, p. 206, "Young Molly Ban" (1 text)
Graham-Jo-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 49, "Molly Ban Lavery" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H114, p. 143, "Molly Bawn Lowry" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 29, "Young Molly Ban" (1 text, 1 tune)
Morton/Maguire-ComedayGoDayGodSendSunday 1, pp. 1-2,99,154-155, "Molly Bawn Lowry" (1 text, 1 tune)
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 92, "Molly Bawn" (3 texts, 1 tune)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 330, "Polly Vaughan" (2 text, 1 tune)
Cox-FolkSongsSouth 102, "Mollie Vaughan" (3 texts, 1 tune)
Bush-FSofCentralWestVirginiaVol1, pp. 87-88, "Molly Bond" (1 text, 1 tune)
Bush-FSofCentralWestVirginiaVol3, pp 79-80, "Polly Bond" (1 text, 1 tune)
Boette-SingAHipsyDoodle, pp.58-59, "Molly Vaunder (Vaughn)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Pound-AmericanBalladsAndSongs, 33, pp. 78-79, "Mollie Bond" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1896, p. 128, "Polly von Luther and Jamie Randall" (1 reference)
Darling-NewAmericanSongster, pp. 133-134, "Molly Bawn"; "Molly Bander" (2 texts)
DT 308, POLLYVON POLLYVON1 POLLVON2
ADDITIONAL: Kathleen Hoagland, editor, One Thousand Years of Irish Poetry (New York, 1947), p. 304, "Young Molly Bawn" (1 short text)
Roud #166
RECORDINGS:
Louis Boutiler, "As Jimmie Went A-Hunting" (on MRHCreighton)
Anne Briggs, "Polly Vaughan" (on Briggs1, Briggs3, Briggs4)
Packie Manus Byrne, "Molly Bawn" (on Voice06)
Sara Cleveland, "Molly Vaughan" (on S Cleveland01)
Elizabeth Cronin, "Molly Bawn" (on IRECronin01)
Seamus Ennis, "Molly Bawn" (on Lomax42, LomaxCD1742)
A. L. Lloyd, "Polly Vaughan" (on Lomax41, LomaxCD1741)
John Maguire, "Molly Bawn Lowry" (on IRJMaguire01)
Maggie Murphy, "Molly Bawn" (on IRHardySons)
Pete Seeger, "Shoo Fly" (on PeteSeeger33, PeteSeegerCD03)
Phoebe Smith, "Molly Vaughan" (on Voice03)
Dan Tate, "Molly Van" (on OldTrad2, FarMtns1)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 19(11), "Young Molly Bawn," J.F. Nugent & Co. (Dublin), 1850-1899; also 2806 b.11(131), "Young Molly Bawn"
LOCSinging, as111140, "Polly Von Luther and Jamie Randall," J. Andrews (New York), 1853-1859
Molly Ban
Peggy Baun
Lord Kenneth and Fair Ellinour

NOTES [219 words]: Darling compares this to the story of Cephalus and Procris. The standard version is supplied by Ovid in the Metamorphoses (VII.685 and following; it starts on page 174 of the Penguin edition translated by Mary M. Innes). First he tested her love in disguise, and she passed the test. But then she heard a rumor of his unfaithfulness, and set out to watch him. He heard her in hiding, without seeing her, and threw his javelin on the assumption that she was a wild beast. It killed her.

Incidentally, Michael Grant and John Hazel, Gods and Mortals in Classical Mythology: A Dictionary, article on Cephalus, thinks Ovid's version of the story may conflate legends of two different heroes named Cephalus. In any case, I don't see a particularly strong parallel to the ballad; yes, the hunter kills his lover, but the motivations are very different.

There was a nineteenth century song "Molly Bawn," in which a young man tries to convince Molly to marry him; it can be found in New-Comic-Songster, p. 44 and Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 42. I do not know if this song inspired the (feeble) courting song. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1
File: L036

Molly Brooks (I)

DESCRIPTION: "Molly Brooks has gone to the isle (x3), And I hope she'll never return (x3), Molly Brooks has gone to the isle, And I hope she'll never return."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1916 (Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana)
KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad travel
FOUND IN: US(MW,So)
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana, p. 71=Wolford/Richmond/Tillson-PlayPartyInIndiana, pp. 194-195, "Molly Brooks" (1 text, 1 tune)
McIntosh-FolkSongsAndSingingGamesofIllinoisOzarks, pp. 78-79, "Molly Brooks" (1 text, 1 tune)
Randolph 529, "Molly Brooks" (1 text, 1 tune)
Spurgeon-WaltzTheHall-AmericanPlayParty, p. 139, "Molly Brooks" (1 text, 1 tune)
Huntington-SongsTheWhalemenSang, p. 274, "Moll Brooks" (1 text, 1 tune -- a fragment which is placed here by the manuscript title; Roud [#2075] files it with "I Lost My Love and I Dinna Ken Hoo," though it has really only one line in common)
Roud #7642

NOTES [49 words]: This probably springs from the same roots as Molly Brooks (II), a dance to the tune of "Malbrouk." Since, however, Randolph's version has lost the tune (which in this case is diagnostic), and Wolford-ThePlayPartyInIndiana appears to have a different tune, I have classified them separately. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: R529

Molly Hustan

DESCRIPTION: "Late at night, there I sped A barefoot maid trip o'er the street, Oh! the ground shone around...." The singer praises her beauty and comes to her window to court her. She turns him away. He still cannot resist her, and follows her; he spells her name

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1873 (Harris Manuscript; similar to Burns's "Mally's meek")
KEYWORDS: love courting rejection river wordplay
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lyle/McAlpine/McLucas-SongRepertoireOfAmeliaAndJaneHarris, pp. 156-157, "Molly Hustan" (1 text, 1 tune)
Molly Maguires, The

DESCRIPTION: A song "in praise of Molly's sons." "They can root out all Defenders and plant the Laurel Tree." Seeing them in St Patrick's day finery "while the Ribbon Bands did play" the singer prays "That the Lord may enable Molly's sons to tear down tyranny."

AUTHOR: John Maguire (source: Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday)

EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday)

KEYWORDS: Ireland nonballad political

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday 9, pp. 21-22,103,158, "The Molly Maguires" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #2923

NOTES [381 words]: Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday: "Tradition has it that the Molly Maguires were formed in the early nineteenth-century after the Catholic neighbors of a Co. Tyrone widow, Molly Maguire, had successfully foiled an attempt to evict her. The success spurred them to combine to carry out similar defensive action in other areas." Morton continues "I find John's song somewhat confusing for various reasons": The Defenders were a Catholic organization that you would expect to be on the same side as the Molly Maguires but, since there was no great Orange threat in Fermanagh, there could have been conflict between Catholic organizations; on the other hand there was no alliance between the Molly Maguires and the more extreme Catholic Ribbonmen.

Why a "laurel tree"? I don't find any association, for example, between the Liberty Tree and laurel (see "The Liberty Tree," "Ireland's Liberty Tree," "Plant, Plant the Tree" and Zimmermann's discussion of the Liberty Tree: pp. 41-43, 85-86, 255-256). - BS

In classical mythology, and in Roman history, the laurel, or the bay, is associated with victory, and is also said to ward off evil spirits. I don't know of any overwhelming reason to connect that legend with Ireland, but it's probably more likely than a link between "laurel" and "liberty."

The Irish Molly Maguires were not a particularly noteworthy group; I checked seven histories without finding a single mention of them. But they loomed larger in legend. Benet's Reader's Encyclopedia described them as "An Irish secret society organized in 1843. Stout, active young Irishmen dressed up in women's clothes, blackened faces, and otherwise disguised themselves to surprise those employed to enforce the payments of rents. Their victims were ducked in bog-holes, and many were beaten most unmercifully." And this Irish group inspired the American Molly Maguires, which fought against the Pennsylvania coal bosses -- and largely failed. The American Mollies are the chief subject of "Muff Lawler, the Squealer." [Laws E25]; see the entry on that song for background on the American Mollies.

The Mollies, in both their American and Irish forms, inspired sundry other songs -- e.g. there is one by Phil Coulter in the Digital Tradition. Few if any made it into tradition. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: MoMa009

Molly Malone

DESCRIPTION: Singer tells of meeting sweet Molly Malone in Dublin, where she sold shellfish from a barrow; her parents were also fishmongers. She dies of a fever; now her ghost wheels the barrow. Chorus: "Singing 'Cockles and mussels, alive, alive-o"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1876 (Waite, Carmina Collegensia)

KEYWORDS: death food worker ghost disease commerce

FOUND IN: US Ireland

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 22, "Cockles and Mussels" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 124, "Molly Malone" (1 text)
DT, MOLLYMAL"

ADDITIONAL: Kathleen Hoagland, editor, One Thousand Years of Irish Poetry (New York, 1947), p. 256, "Cockles and Mussels" (1 text)
Molly McGlocklin

DESCRIPTION: The marries Molly McGlocklin. She prefers Finnigan who "his gizzard he broke." Molly mourns; the singer hits her and fights the Finnigans. After the burial she attacks him; he throws her in the grave. He's single now and will dance but won't marry again

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1867 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(2962))

KEYWORDS: marriage fight death funeral burial humorous family

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf) Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):

O’Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 42, "Mister Finagan" (1 text)

Roud #19484

RECORDINGS:

Jack Swain, "Finnigan's Wake II" (on NFMLeach); "Finnegan's Wake (Version 2)" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

BROADSIDES:

Bodleian, Harding B 11(2962), "Pat Finnigan," J. Harkness (Preston), 1840-1866; also Harding B 26(37), "Barnaby Finegan"; 2806 b.11(184), "Barnaby Finnegan"

NOTES [19 words]: Leach (NFMLeach notes) says "Finnigan's Wake" "is a local title; it is more generally known as Molly McGlocklin" - BS

Last updated in version 5.2

File: RMo1McG

Molly Put the Kettle On (Polly Put the Kettle On)

DESCRIPTION: "(Molly/Polly/Kitty) put the kettle on, Sally blow the dinner horn... We'll all take tea."

Often a fiddle tune with the usual sorts of verses for a fiddle tune

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1841 (_Barnaby Rudge_ by Charles Dickens, according to Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes)

KEYWORDS: nonballad floatingverses food dancetune playparty

FOUND IN: US(Ap.MW) Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (11 citations):
Molly, Lovely Molly

DESCRIPTION: Molly hears a voice at her window; it is her old love returned. She bids him leave;
he has courted other women. He replies that it was his master's orders which took him away. His ship leaves tomorrow; will she come with him? She agrees to do so.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love separation reunion
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H557, pp. 478-479, "Molly, Lovely Molly" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9456
NOTES [50 words]: Some versions of The Cruel Ship's Carpenter [Laws P36] share a title and/or metrical form with this ballad. The plots are so completely different, however, that I would not even have noted the similarity had not there been a note in the Henry collection pointing out the (lack of) common material. - RBW
File: HHH557

Molly, My Dear

DESCRIPTION: When harvest is over the men's "hearts filled wi' love and their pockets wi' money" and they ask the girls to go with them. Dermot asks Molly to go north with him. She prefers him to Thady "wi' his blarney" and "love songs of the Lake o' Killarney"

AUTHOR: Robert Tannahill (1774-1810)
EARLIEST DATE: c.1838 (Ramsay)
KEYWORDS: courting farming harvest money Ireland Scotland
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig/Duncan4 861, "The Harvest is Ower" (1 text)
Roud #6246
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Miss Molly" (tune, per Ramsay)
File: GrD4861

Mon Amour (My Love)

DESCRIPTION: French. Singer tells the charms of her beloved shepherd and tells him (via a passing turtledove) to be true forever

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage love virtue nonballad shepherd lover bird
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes, p. 26, "Mon Amour (My Love)" (1 text + translation, 1 tune)
NOTES [4 words]: It's nicer in French. - PJS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: BerV026

Mon Berger (My Shepherd)

DESCRIPTION: French. Shepherdess sings about the merits of her shepherd. He's somewhere else, she knows not where, but if she knew she'd tell him she loves him. If he comes home, she swears she'll marry him tonight.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage love shepherd lyric
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes, p. 60, "Mon Berger (My Shepherd)" (1 text + translation, 1 tune)
Notes [53 words]: If it sounds cloying, that's because it is. Even the editors of Berry-FolkSongsOfOldVincennes suggest this is a composed piece, not long in tradition, suggesting delicately, "These compositions are often characterized by a definite artificiality of sentiment." - PJS
They are also characterized by shepherdesses.... - RBW
Last updated in version 4.1
File: BerV060

Mon Bon Ami Va Venir Ce Soir (My Good Friend Will Come This Evening)

Description: French. The singer's good friend comes to see his, undresses and sleeps in his bed. Near midnight she says Hello. The singer says thanks for the hello, but had hoped for more. To lead quail to corn, you have to know how to serve it.
Author: unknown
Earliest Date: 1959 (Peacock)
Keywords: foreignlanguage sex lover
Found In: Canada(Newf)
References (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 300-301, "Mon Bon Ami Va Venir Ce Soir" (1 text, 1 tune)
Recordings:
Mme. Josephine Costard, "Mon Bon Ami Va Venir Ce Soir" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
Notes [68 words]: "Quail" -- that is "caille" -- here likely has the same connotation, that is "young woman," in French slang as it does in US slang. See, for example "Suburban slang greets visitors to France" by John Lichfield, June 6, 2001, "In ...verlan -- the ... language of ... French, suburban youth -- there are more than 50 ways of referring to women. They include "...caille..." from the New Zealand Herald site. - BS
Last updated in version 2.6
File: Pea300

Mon Cher Voisin (My Dear Neighbor)

Description: French. My neighbor sent me to find a worn out old horse. Let's drink, sharpen our knives and skin it. He soothes the horse: no more demands will be made, no more pulling a master and his luggage.
Author: unknown
Earliest Date: 1961 (Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs)
Keywords: foreignlanguage execution horse
Found In: Canada(Mar)
References (1 citation):
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 129, "Mon Cher Voisin" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cross-References:
 cf. "Pawkie Paiterson's Auld Grey Yaud" (theme)
 cf. "Poor Old Horse (III)" (theme)
Notes [14 words]: The description is based on Alan Mills's translation in Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs. - BS
File: CrMa129

Monday Morning Blues

Description: On Monday morning the singer's woman left him crying. Now he's been in jail six weeks. At trial he's sentenced: "get a pick and shovel, let's go down in the mine." His "tears come rolling down." He asks for change of a dollar to get a lucky dime.
Author: unknown
Earliest Date: 1963 (MJHurt04)
Keywords: grief courting prison punishment trial mining prisoner money
Found In:
Recordings:
Mississippi John Hurt, "Monday Morning Blues" (on MJHurt04, MJHurt05)
File: RcMoMoBl
Monday Night
DESCRIPTION: "Monday night, Band of Hope, Tuesday night, pull the rope, Wednesday night a visitor [or, put on your coat]." Then, lines like "I love so-and-so" or "take her to the river ... Give her a kiss and send her back"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1895 (Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)
KEYWORDS: playparty
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond,West))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame 86, "Monday Night" (3 texts, 1 tune)
Roud #13182
NOTES [94 words]: Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame considers this rhyme descended from "My Nannie, O" via "Sunday Night." The argument, as the Opies recognize, seems tenuous: "This is the present stage of the game's evolution; and although scarcely a trace remains of the original structure, yet the bouncing jollity of the 1680's song somehow survives." All that's left of the link to the nineteenth century stage -- much less to the seventeenth century -- is that it starts with a night and that both have a bonny girl: now, "Monday night, Band of Hope"; then, "Sunday night an' Nancy o!" - BS
Last updated in version 2.6
File: OpGa086

Monday's Child
DESCRIPTION: "Monday's child is fair of face, Tuesday's child is full of grace, Wednesday's child is full of woe, Thursday's child has far to go, Friday's child is loving and giving, Saturday's child works hard for his living." Other lines regard Sunday or Christmas
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1838 (Bray, Traditions of Devonshire, according to Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes)
KEYWORDS: children
FOUND IN: Britain(England(North))
REFERENCES (7 citations):
Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 353, "Monday's child is fair of face" (1 text)
Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #533, p. 218, "(Monday's child is fair of face)"
Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel, p. 137, "Monday's Child is Fair of Face" (1 text)
Dolby-OrangesAndLemons, p. 46, "Monday' Child Is Fair of Face" (1 text)
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #149, "Counting Rhymes" (8 texts of the "One-ery, Two-ery, Ickery, Ann" type, 4 of "Eenie Meenie Minie Mo (Counting Rhyme)", 1 of "Intery Mintery Cutery Corn", 1 of "Alphabet Songs", 1 of "Monday's Child", and 20 miscellaneous rhymes)
Welsch-NebraskaPioneerLore, p. 276, "(no title)" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Marjorie Rowling, _The Folklore of the Lake District_, Rowman and Littlefield, 1976, p. 130, "(Monday's child is fair of face)" (1 short text)
Roud #19526
NOTES [44 words]: According to Dolby-OrangesAndLemons, the birth of Charles, the son of the soon-to-be Queen Elizabeth II, inspired a great debate in Britain about the "correct" version of this poem. I suspect that any "definitive" answer that was reached was, in fact, wrong. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.2
File: 002353

Mone, Member, Mone
DESCRIPTION: "Tell-a me who had a rod, Mone, member, mone! Hit was Moses, child of God, Mone, member, mone!" A call-and-answer sermon describing the crossing of the Red Sea, listing the order of those who will go to heaven, and calling for repentance
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1934
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 578-579, "Mone, Member, Mone" (1 text)
Roud #15562
NOTES [34 words]: One suspects that this was sort of a preacher's "zipper" text -- any story could be zipped in to replace the Exodus account. But I've never seen this in any other form, so I can't say with certainty. - RBW
File: LxA578

Money

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, money is the meat in the coconut, O money is the milk in the jug; When you've got lots of money You feel very funny, You're as happy as a bug in a rug."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)
KEYWORDS: money food
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 112, "Money" (1 short text (perhaps just the chorus), 1 tune)
Roud #19896
File: San112

Money Makes the Mare to Go (I)

DESCRIPTION: "Will you lend me your mare to go a mile?" "No; no she is lame, leaping over a stile." "But if you will her to me spare You shall have money for your mare." "Oh, ho! say you so? Money will make the mare to go."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1893 (broadside, Walsh)
KEYWORDS: request money nonballad horse
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 303, "Money Will Make the Mare to Go" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 190)
ADDITIONAL: William S Walsh, Handy-Book of Literary Curiosities (Philadelphia, 1893 ("Digitized by Google")), pp. 734-735, ("Will you lend me your mare to go a mile?") (1 text)
Roud #1332
NOTES [179 words]: The current description is all of the Walsh text. Walsh: "Money makes the mare go, an old English proverb of uncertain origin. It may be a far-off variant of the ancient phrase found in this form in Publius Syrus: 'Money alone sets all the world in motion.' (Maxim 656) There is an old glee that contains the following lines: ... There is no evidence, however, to show that the glee was not taken from the saw. In Caleb Bingham's 'American Preceptor,' published inj 1794, is a dialog called 'Self-Interest,' in which an English rustic, named Scrapewell, makes all sorts of false excuses to avoid lending his mare to a neighbor, but afterwards, finding that the loan is to be profitable to himself, he takes back all the excuses and lets the mare go. The author's name is given as Berquin. Probably it is a paraphrase from the French writer for children Arnauld Berquin (1749-91). The glee may have been founded on this dialogue, as it follows it in all essentials. And, as the proverb is not mentioned in the dialogue, the saw as well as the glee may have arisen therefrom." - BS
Last updated in version 2.6
File: WT303AB

Money, Money, Oh Sweet Money

DESCRIPTION: "Long time ago I had a beau, He came a-courting me, Because he thought that I had wealth...." The girl tests him by informing him she has no money. He drops her at once. She warns others, "Let them find you're minus of gold And you'll be minus of beaux."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1942 (Randolph)
KEYWORDS: love courting money abandonment
FOUND IN: US(So)
Moneygran Pig Hunt, The

DESCRIPTION: "There was racing and chasing in old Moneygran," as pigs bid humans catch them and say they are "Home Rulers and Fenians and Orange pigs too." The "warhawks" pursue, but "the pigs are the winners in old Moneygran."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: Words: 1924 (Northern Constitution); as a song, 1937 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: political racing animal

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H731, pp. 22-23, "The Moneygran Pig Hunt" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13345

CROSS-REFERENCES:
  cf. "The Bonnets o' Bonny Dundee" (tune)
  cf. "The Bold Tenant Farmer" (subject)
  cf. The Barrymore Tithe Victory" (theme)
  cf. "The Sow's Triumph Over the Peelers" (theme)

NOTES [216 words]: Said to be based on an incident from 1876, when law officials were sent to the Mercers estate to collect back rent. The tenants loosed their pigs, and the police tried to catch them.
The song is said to be associated with the Land Leagues, a group arising out of the complex interactions between Britain and Ireland. The election of 1868 brought Gladstone to power, but also gave Charles Stewart Parnell a decisive voice in parliament. In 1870, Gladstone passed a Land Act, but the House of Lords rejected it.
The Irish reaction was the Land Leagues, tenant organizations intended to curb excessive rents. They were basically non-violent, but they did resist pressure from landlords in all sorts of creative ways.
The Land Leagues finally faded in 1881 when Gladstone managed to get a true rent reform bill passed (though at the cost of a Coercion Act used to suppress the worst radicals). For further details, see the notes on "The Bold Tenant Farmer."
The reference to the pigs being "Home Rulers and Fenians and Orange" is an observation on the personal politics of those who wanted relief from rents: They ranged from radical Irishmen (Fenians) to conservatives, often Protestant, who wanted Home Rule, to the Ulster Protestants who wanted to be part of Britain but still needed rent reform. - RBW

File: HHH731

---

Monie Kings, Monie Queins

DESCRIPTION: The singer hears a killing in a wood and meets a dog that bites his finger off... yoke the plow... the shepherd takes the witch [?] home, shears her and puts her in the pot... Maggie bribed a boy "to tell the deed that she had done"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1828 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2)

KEYWORDS: farming hunting dog sheep shepherd injury

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Bord))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 120, "Monie Kings, Monie Queins" (1 text)
Roud #15099

NOTES [85 words]: Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 pp. xxxvii-xxxviii: "'Monie Kings, Monie Queins' may have been sung or spoken during seasonal house-visiting like other not dissimilar items discussed in my note in Scottish Studies 21 (1978) pp. 109-13 on "Mony Kings, Mony Queens' and its Possible Link with Seasonal Custom'."
I have no idea what's going on here. Not even in those parts I think I have translated correctly. It would help if someone could read and comment here on Lyle's Scottish Studies note. - BS
Monitor and Merrimac

DESCRIPTION: "I'm going to sing a song, I won't detain you long.... The Monitor went smak up to the Merrimac, And upon her sides played Yankee Doodle Dandy, O." The singer taunts Jeff Davis with the success of the Monitor, which he offers as evidence of Yankee skill

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 2008 (Cohen); 19C (Wolf)
KEYWORDS: Civilwar battle ship
HISTORICAL REFERENCES: March 8, 1862 - U.S. frigates Congress and Cumberland sunk by the CSS Virginia (formerly USS Merrimack). The Minnesota runs aground; had not the Monitor arrived the next day, the Merrimac would have sunk that ship also FOUND IN: REFERENCES (2 citations):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 195-196, "Monitor and Merrimac" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1453, p. 98, "Monitor and Merrimac" (9 references)
Roud #V20552
CROSS-REFERENCES: cf. "Yankee Doodle" (tune) and references there
NOTES [93 words]: For background on the Monitor and the Virginia/Merrimac, see the notes to "The Cumberland Crew" [Laws A18]. Although there is little evidence of this song entering tradition, it was popular in print; Edwin Wolf 2nd, American Song Sheets, Slip Ballads, and Political Broadsides 1850-1870, Library Company of Philadelphia, 1963, p. 98, lists nine different broadside prints, which surely dates it to the 1860s. The listed tune is "Yankee Doodle," but it really feels like it should be sung to "Jordan Am a Hard Road to Travel" or one of its relatives. - RBW

Monk McClamont's "Farewell to Articlave"

DESCRIPTION: In (18)40, the singer prepares to sail for America on the Provincial. The ship being becalmed, he has time to see, and mourn, the land he is leaving behind. He praises the captain and crew of the ship

AUTHOR: Monk McClamont
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: ship emigration farewell
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H65b, p. 166-187, "Monk McClamont's "Farewell to Articlave"" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13542
File: HHH065b

Monk of Great Renown, The

DESCRIPTION: A monk has sex with one or more women until his fellows abruptly put a halt to his misadventures.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead)
KEYWORDS: bawdy sex death burial clergy
FOUND IN: Canada Britain(England) US(MW,SW)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Cray-EroticMuse, pp. 37-42, "The Monk of Great Renown" (3 texts, 1 tune); a piece to a different tune but with the same sort of plot occurs on p. 265 under "Ditties"
Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead, p. 184, "The Old Monk" (1 text, 1 tune)
Monkey and the Baboon, The

DESCRIPTION: "The monkey and the baboon playing seven-up The monkey won the money And was scared to pick it up." "The monkey and the baboon Running a race. The monkey fell down And skint his face." "The monkey... climbed a tree... threw a cocoanut..."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)

KEYWORDS: animal cards humorous floatingverses

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 180, "The Monkey and the Baboon" (1 text)

NOTES [35 words]: The stanza about X and Y playing seven-up of course occurs with many protagonists (white man and black, David and Goliath, Adam and Eve); one wonders a little if its use here is not some sort of allegory. - RBW

File: ScaNF180

Monkey and the Elephant, The

DESCRIPTION: "The monkey and the elephant were riding on a rail, The elephant said, 'Oh, monkey, you look so doggone frail.'" Other animals also fight. So do the singer's Mom and Dad. The singer discusses his history of courting. Many verses float

AUTHOR: probably adapted by John Daniel Vass

EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (recorded by Shellans-FolkSongsOfTheBlueRidgeMountains from John Daniel Vass)

KEYWORDS: courting animal humorous mother father rejection humorous nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Shellans-FolkSongsOfTheBlueRidgeMountains, pp. 48-49, "The Monkey and the Elephant" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #7330

NOTES [86 words]: The number of floating lines in this song is high: "If I had a scolding wife," "I went to see Miss Annie, I'll never go no more, Her shoes and stockin's in her hand," and references to courting Cindy. Other portions feel adapted from traditional song. My suspicion is that this is a rewrite by John Daniel Vass of an assortment of traditional songs. Vass gave his treatment to several other songs, producing items which are long, invertebrate -- and, to my mind, not really very good when considered as a whole. - RBW

File: Shel048

Monkey Came Into My Shop One Day, A

DESCRIPTION: "A monkey came into my shop one day And asked for a bottle of beer. Where is your money? In my pocket. Where is your pocket? I left it at home. Well, please walk out."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1910 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)

KEYWORDS: playparty animal drink money

FOUND IN: New Zealand

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 90, "(A monkey came into my shop one day)" (1 text)

File: SuSm090A
Monkey Draw Bow (Monkey Jaw Bone)

DESCRIPTION: Jamaican patois: Singer goes to a pond hears a bull frog, asks the watchman what it said. Chorus: monkey jaw bone [or monkey draw bow] is so sweet. He hears an alarm in Linstead when "Sweetie tumble off a chair."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (Rovere: see Notes)
KEYWORDS: fiddle music nonballad animal
FOUND IN: West Indies(Jamaica)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Murray-FolkSongsOfJamaica, pp. 37-38, "Monkey Draw Bow" (1 text, 1 tune)
RECORDINGS:
Edric Connor with the Caribbeans and Earl Inkman, "Monkey Draw Bow" (on WIEConnor01)
NOTES [78 words]: The 1950 single verse is from a short story that follows the "monkey draw bow" line (Ethel Rovere, "Prempeh" in _14 Jamican Short Stories_ (Kingston: The Pioneer Press, 1950), p. 46, ("Go to Long Pnd fe water").
Lewin: "'Jawbone' probably refers to an instrument (made from the jawbone of an animal) which was used in old Jamaica. In some versions of this song the words 'draw bow' are sometimes substituted for 'jawbone' in which case reference is made to a fiddle." - BS
Last updated in version 3.7
File: JaMu038

Monkey Motions

DESCRIPTION: "I act monkey motions, too-re-loo, I act monkey motions, so I do; I act 'em well an' dat's a fact -- I act just like de monkeys act." "I act gen'man motions...." "I act lady motions...." Similarly for children's motions, preachers' motions, etc.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)
KEYWORDS: playparty nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 133, "Monkey Motions" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "What's the Lady's Motion? (Skip O'er the Mountain)" (form)
cf. "Miss Susianna Jane" (mention of Monkey Motions)
File: ScaNF133

Monkey Sitting on the End of a Rail

DESCRIPTION: "Monkey settin' on de end uf a rail, Pickin' his teeth wid de end uf his tail, Mulberry leaves un' calico sleeves, All school teachers is so hard to please." Rest floats: The redbird shaking 'simmons down, the singer is tired of sleeping alone

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Scarborough)
KEYWORDS: animal floatingverses bird food
FOUND IN: US(So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 193, (no title) (1 text, with varying stanza forms)
File: ScNF193B

Monkey Song (I)

DESCRIPTION: "Everything I do the monkey wanna do ... rapping ... going out ... drinking ... eating ... going home ... sleeping ... nothing in the world the monkey won't do"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Blind Blake Higgs: see WIHIGGS01)
KEYWORDS: animal nonballad
FOUND IN: West Indies (Bahamas)
RECORDINGS:
Blind Blake Higgs, "Monkey Song" (on W1HIGGS01)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Monkey" (theme; see notes)
NOTES [114 words]: King Radio, the Lion and the Tiger recorded "Monkey" in 1936 (on "Fall of Man: Calypsos on the Human Condition 1935-1941," Rounder CD 1141, 1999). The theme is the same as for Higgs's "Monkey Song" but the structure is different, as well as the words and tune. For example, here are three verses, of one line each, sung respectively by Lion, Tiger and Radio, with a group chorus in parentheses:
I make a dash, monkey made one too/ (We don't know what to say, we monkey won't do)/ I mean, I cover up, monkey cover up too/ (Well look, we don't know what to say, we monkey won't do)/ Oh when I take off me jacket, monkey take off too/ (So we don't know what to say we monkey won't do) - BS
Last updated in version 3.7
File: RcMonkSo

Monkey Turned Barber, The [Laws Q14]
DESCRIPTION: Pat enters the barber's and asks for a shave. A monkey in clothes winks and sets to work. Pat screams with pain; the monkey disappears. The barber enters. Pat accuses his "father" of having cut him. Finally the truth comes out
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1839 (Bodleian Broadside Harding B 11(2478))
KEYWORDS: animal abuse humorous
FOUND IN: US(MW,So) Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Laws Q14, "The Monkey Turned Barber"
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 249-251, "The Monkey Turned Barber" (3 texts, but B2 is "The Love-of-God Shave")
Beck-SongsOfTheMichiganLumberjacks 82, "Irishman's Lumber Song" (1 text)
Creighton/Senior-TraditionalSongsOfNovaScotia, pp. 239-240, "Wild Irishman" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 525, MONKBARB MANKBAR2
Roud #918
BROADSIDES:
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Wild Irishman
NOTES [42 words]: There is a broadside, NLScotland, F.3.a.13(5), "The Monkey Barber," unknown (Edinburgh), 1825, which tells this story in prose, with rather more substantial detail. It's not clear whether it is the source of this song, or a retelling; I suspect the latter.
Last updated in version 3.5
File: LQ14

Monkey, Monkey, Draw the Beer
DESCRIPTION: "Monkey, Monkey, draw the beer (or "...bottle of beer"), How many monkeys are there here? Two, four, six, eight, Out goes my best mate." (Or "O-U-T spells out," or the like)
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)
KEYWORDS: play party animal drink
FOUND IN: US( So) New Zealand
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Monkey's Wedding, The

DESCRIPTION: "The monkey married the baboon's sister, Gave her a ring and then he kissed her, He kissed so hard he raised a blister, She set up a yell." Verses, often nonsensical, about the proceedings at the wedding

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1865 (broadside, LOCSinging sb30342a); sheet music was published by Firth & Hall of New York some time after 1832

KEYWORDS: animal wedding nonsense humorous

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber)) US(Ap,MA,MW,NE,SE,So) West Indies(Bahamas)

REFERENCES (13 citations):
Greig/Duncan8 1903, "A Monkey's Wedding" (1 text)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 181, "The Monkey Married the Baboon's Sister" (1 short text plus 2 excerpts)
Richardson/Spaeth-AmericanMountainSongs, pp. 86-87, "The Monkey's Wedding" (1 text, 1 tune)
Bush-FSofCentralWestVirginiaVol5, pp. 54-55, "The Monkey's Wedding" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 197, "The Monkey's Wedding" (1 text)
Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland, pp. 241-243, "The Monkey's Wedding" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 113, "The Monkey's Wedding" (1 text, 1 tune)
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, p. 180, (no title) (1 text)
Spaeth-ReadEmAndWeep, pp. 68-69, [no title] (1 text, 1 tune)
Gilbert-LostChords, p. 114, [no title] (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1455, p. 98, "The Monkey's Wedding" (2 references)

Elsie Clews Parsons, Folk-Tales of Andros Island Bahamas (Lancaster: American Folk-Lore Society, 1918 ("Digitized by Internet Archive")), #115, pp. 166-167, "The Baboon's Sister" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST San113 (Partial)

Roud #3123

BROADSIDES:

LOCSinging, sb30342a, "The Monkey's Wedding" ("The monkey married the baboon's sister"), H. De Marsan (New York), 1861-1864

NOTES [62 words]: Linscott-FolkSongsOfOldNewEngland lists this as being sung to "The Drunken Sailor," and it will fit that tune -- but her tune is not quite the usual "Drunken Sailor." - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0

File: San113

Monmouth Rebel, The

DESCRIPTION: "I wasn't but a growing boy when first I came to arms Behind the Duke of Monmouth," but the troops they fought at Sedgemoor were "the best, the very best." He flees the country, and takes a pardon, but is frightened by what Jeffries did to Lady Lisle

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1987 (Browne-FolkSongsOfOldHampshire)

KEYWORDS: rebellion escape royalty punishment judge

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
July 6, 1685 - Battle of Sedgemoor

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
NOTES [215 words]: Charles II of England and Scotland, the first Stuart king after the Restoration, died in 1685 without a legitimate child. The clear heir was Charles's brother James VII and II -- but James was notoriously Catholic. (A fact that would result in his overthrow in 1688-1689; see the notes to "The Vicar of Bray," "The Boyne Water (I)," etc.) In 1685, most were willing to accept James on the throne -- after all, his daughters and heirs were Protestant. Most, not all. A few decided instead to support Charles II's illegitimate son the Duke of Monmouth. Monmouth raised a rebellion, but it was crushed at the Battle of Sedgemoor, described in this song. And there was, of course, a reckoning after the rebellion. George Jeffreys, First Baron Jeffreys, became known as the "Hanging Judge" because of the severity of the sentences he handed down; his name is still remembered today. Loyal to James II to the end, he was in prison in 1689 when he died; it was reportedly due to illness (he had been suffering some disease, described by Wikipedia as kidney disease, for some years), but he probably would have been in deep trouble with the new regime had he lived. "Lady Lisle" was one of his victims; apparently her only crime was helping fugitives from Sedgemoor, but Jeffries had her beheaded. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: BrHa075

Monongahela Sal
DESCRIPTION: "She was born in an old Monessen alley, And her maw and her paw, they called her Sal." One day, by the river, a boat pilot name Moat Hanley takes her aboard. He shoves her overboard. She hunts him, kills him, and is acquitted. The dirty river is mentioned
AUTHOR: Robert Smertz
EARLIEST DATE: 1947 (Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends)
KEYWORDS: river technology pilot travel homicide trial humorous
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends, pp. 462-465, "Monongahela Sal" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, MONONGAH
Roud #7748
File: KPL462

Monquhitter's Lonely Hill
DESCRIPTION: "I love Monquhitter's lonely hills." The singer was born there and knows "ilka neuk." He describes the heather bells, bonnie "woods and waters o' Auchry," a lovely spot by a mill, "the birdies' evening sang" and trout swimming in the brook.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: lyric home
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan3 510, "Monquhitter's Lonely Hill" (1 text)
Roud #5994
NOTES [36 words]: Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv, of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Auchry (510) is at coordinate (h5,v8) on that map [roughly 31 miles NNW of Aberdeen]. - BS
Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD3510

Montague, The
DESCRIPTION: "The Montague packet left Wexford at ten, With a fine stock of cattle and a fine crew of men, Hee Ho, Heave away, ho." Montague gets stuck in the sand and the cargo is lost: two cows, six sheep, a goat, and a sow.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1943 (Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast)
KEYWORDS: sea ship wreck animal
Montezuma

DESCRIPTION: "When I was young and runnin' wild I talked with Montezuma," who tells him to go to sea and attack his enemies. He ships in an "Indian Man," carrying cargo from India. Along the way, "I loved full many a woman, Many a woman loved I."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Niles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe)

KEYWORDS: sailor travel sex

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Niles/Moore-SongsMyMotherNeverTaughtMe, pp. 128-130, "(Montezuma)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #27885
File: NiMo128

Monthly Rose, The

DESCRIPTION: Man and woman compare each other, privately, to a diamond or pearl, a rose, and so on. She is afraid "another will enjoy him." He overhears her and proposes. "I'll lock the door with marriage So that none durst enter in"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1875 (Greig/Duncan5)

KEYWORDS: courting love marriage flowers

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #167, p. 1, "The Monthly Rose" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan5 990, "The Monthly Rose" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Roud #6299

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Oh Gin My Love War a Red Rose" (some verses)

NOTES [104 words]: Greig/Duncan5 990A fragment: "'From MS. of George F Duncan (1875) ...." The fragment text -- "But I'm sure it will never be me; Never be me; But I'm sure it will never be me" -- does not appear in the Greig text, which is also the other Greig/Duncan5 text. The editors must have included it here because of the source's memory of the drift of the song.

Greig: "From this song and another 'When you are on the sea sailing,' ... Burns evidently got material for his famous song 'Oh, my love is like a red red rose.'" See Robert Burns, The Complete Poems and Songs of Robert Burns (New Lanark,2005), p. 395, "A Red, Red Rose." - BS

Last updated in version 2.5

File: GrD5990

Months of the Year, The

DESCRIPTION: "January is the first month, the sun goes very low... We shall see an alteration, before the year comes round." The song catalogs the months, describing how farmers spend the time

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (Sharp)

KEYWORDS: nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 256, "The Months of the Year" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brocklebank/Kindersley-DorsetBookOfFolkSongs, pp. 18-19, "All the Months in the Year" (1 text, 1 tune)
Monto

DESCRIPTION: "Well, if you've got a wing-o, Take me up to ring-o, Where the waxies sing-o, all the day." Various people in Dublin set out to accomplish some end or other, fail, and console themselves by asking, "Take me up to Monto."

AUTHOR: George Hodnett

EARLIEST DATE: 1982 (Soodlum's Irish Ballad Book); reportedly written 1958

KEYWORDS: whore Ireland political

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (2 citations):
DT, MONTO*

ADDITIONAL: Frank Harte _Songs of Dublin_, second edition, Ossian, 1993, pp. 60-61, "Monto" (1 text, 1 tune)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Take Me Up to Monto

NOTES [794 words]: I have never seen definitely-traditional version of this song. But Irish bands seem to sing it without any knowledge of its origin, and the three versions I've seen (Harte's, that in Soodlum's Irish Ballad Book and that in Robert Gogan, 130 Great Irish Ballads (third edition, Music Ireland, 2004), 42) are somewhat different, with the differences being almost always clear errors of hearing, so it possibly belongs here.

The song is intensely political, but you have to know the code to realize what is going on. And I've never seen any analysis that covers everything. Here is what I have come up with, including some of my own conjectures.

"Waxies" are candlemakers.

"Monto" is Montgomery street, Dublin's red light district. Soodlum's says that 1600 prostitutes once worked there, before it was closed down in 1925; Gogan, which is prone to folkloric exaggeration, gives the number of prostitutes as 1800.

"Buckshot" Forster ("Butcher Foster" in Soodlum's and Gogan) is W. E. Forster, known as "Buckshot," a one-time British Chief Secretary for Ireland. According to Kee, p. 86, Forster was given his name because, during his tenure, the police were sometimes given buckshot for ammunition, rather than the more dangerous ball cartridges. This was not his decision, however, and he came to have a bad reputation for violence. Forster resigned his post in the 1880s when Prime Minister Gladstone released Charles Steward Parnell from arrest (for this, see e.g. "The Blackbird of Avondale (The Arrest of Parnell)"; also "Home Rule for Ireland" and the songs cited under those two; also Moody/Martin/Keogh/Kiely, p. 252).

It tells you something about the troubles of Ireland that Forster "had accepted the first secretaryship in a spirit of goodwill and conciliation toward Ireland" (Moody/Martin/Keogh/Kiely, p 250).

"Carey" and "Skin-the-Goat" were two of those involved in the deadly Phoenix Park murders of 1882 (for which see especially "The Phoenix Park Tragedy"; also "Murder of the Double-Dyed Informer James Carey" and "Skin the Goat's Curse on Carey").

These two mentions would seem to set the song in the mid-1880s. This fits with the mentions of Queen Victoria, who ruled 1837-1901 and who repeatedly visited Ireland (though I doubt she ever weighed eighteen stone even in her later years when she did become stout; she just wasn't tall enough).

A similar date also seems to be implied by the mention of "the Czar of Russia and the King of Prussia." My guess is that this is a reference to Victoria's Golden Jubilee of 1887. Wilhelm II, King of Prussia and Kaiser of Germany, was Victoria's grandson by her daughter Victoria; Nicolas II of Russia was married to Alexandra, the daughter of Victoria's second daughter Alice. Neither had ascended yet (Wilhelm I of Prussia died 1888, and his grandson came to the throne three months later; Nicholas II ascended in 1894) -- and there was a plot to assassinate Victoria, blamed on Irish anarchists, which might explain the mention in this song.
Arguing for a slightly later date is the mention of sending the Dublin Fusiliers overseas, which sounds like a reference to the Boer War which began in 1899; more than 20,000 troops were eventually sent to South Africa. But maybe it's a reference to some other small colonial conflict. There were certainly plenty to choose from.

The mention of the "Duke of Gloucester, the dirty old imposter" is frankly befuddling if we are to date this in the reign of Queen Victoria. At the time of Victoria's birth, the Duke of Gloucester (and of Edinburgh) was William, the nephew of George III (being the son of George's brother William), who died in 1834 (Sinclair-Stevenson, genealogy inside front cover). Due to the incestuous politics of the House of Hannover, he married late (to his cousin Mary, daughter of George III) and had no legitimate children. He was known as "Silly Billy" (Sinclair-Stevenson, p. 124), and even "The Cheesee" (Sinclair-Stevenson, p. 129), so I can imagine broadside writers having a lot of fun with him -- but he was dead before Victoria took the throne. And, strangely enough, none of Victoria's children was given the Dukedom of Gloucester; it eventually went to one of the sons of Victoria's grandson George V. So no matter when this song was set in Victoria's reign, there was no Duke of Gloucester.

I'm guessing this is an error of some sort, and that the actual reference is to Spencer Cavendish, the eighth Duke of Devonshire, who was one of the chief leaders of the Unionist party -- that is, the party that broke away from the Liberals over the issue of Home Rule (Massie., pp. 235-238). Of course, the song is said to have been written in the 1950s. I'm not sure what that proves, except that old grudges die hard. - RBW

Bibliography

- Kee: Robert Kee, The Bold Fenian Men, being volume II of The Green Flag (covering the period from around 1848 to the Easter Rising), Penguin, 1972

Last updated in version 2.8
File: Hart060

Monymusk Lads, The

DESCRIPTION: "As I cam' in by Monymusk And doun by Alford's dale," the singer goes "to see my Maggie dear," he visits at night, but the auld wife detects him and sounds an alarm. The auld man forces him out; he vows to return when the old man snores

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: nightvisit courting age escape
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (3 citations):
  Greig/Duncan3 375, "Monymusk" (2 fragments, 1 tune)
  Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 68-69, "Rural Courtship" (1 text, 1 tune)
  DT, MONYMUSK*
Roud #5568
RECORDINGS:
  Ewan MacColl and Peggy Seeger, "The Monymusk Lads" (on SCMacCollSeeger01)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
  cf. "The Auld Wife to the Bell-Rope Ran" (lyrics)
NOTES [77 words]: Greig/Duncan3: "The song was probably composed before 1876 when the farmer Robert Wilson died and left the farm to his daughter. The full song relates the attempts by a farm servant to court his sweetheart by entering her bedchamber at night."
Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv, of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Lethenty (375) is at coordinate (h3,v5-6) on that map [roughly 25 miles WNW of Aberdeen]. - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: 0rd068
Moody to the Rescue

DESCRIPTION: "Word came down to Derby town in the spring of '59: McGowan's men had smashed the pen & left for the Hill's Bar Mine." Col. Moody finds the miners do not wish to fight on Sunday. Moody says "Things look all right, so where's the fight?" and heads home.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1969 (Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs)
KEYWORDS: mining gold Canada political humorous
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1859 - Ned McGowan's War
FOUND IN: Canada(West)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs 5, "Moody to the Rescue" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #17698
SAME TUNE:
The Keach i' the Creel (File: C281)
NOTES [366 words]: In 1856 gold was discovered near on Fraser River (Vancouver Island), and subsequently the area was host to a massive influx of gold-seekers not only from Canada but America, Europe, and even Australia.

In 1859 two American miners were accused of assault by a man named Dixon. The local magistrate at Fort Yale, named of Whannell, put Dixon in jail for safe keeping and issued a warrant for the two Americans. When they were caught they were put into the jail at Hill's Bar, under the jurisdiction of another magistrate, Perrier. Perrier decided he was going to handle the case and sent a constable to Fort Yale to retrieve Dixon. Whannell refused to release Dixon and instead jailed Perrier's constable. When Perrier heard about this, he deputized Ned McGowan and sent him after Dixon and the constable.

McGowan arrived at Hill's Bar with a dozen armed men and arrested Whannell, charging him with contempt of Perrier's court. The exaggerated account of the proceedings that reached the capital indicated that American miners at Hill's Bar had broken into the jail and were attempting to overthrow the British authority. Colonel R.C. Moody and a force of Royal Engineers and marines were sent out. They arrived, arrested McGowan, and charged him with assault on Whannell. The presiding judge, Begbie, fined McGowan five pounds and lectured all parties (and Whannell and Perrier in particular) on the impartiality of British law. American miners were to receive the same treatment under British law as British citizens, and at the same time the American miners had to understand that on British soil they were to abide by local laws.

This incident became known as 'Ned McGowan's War.'

From Fowke/MacMillan-PenguinBookOfCanadianFolkSongs - Collected from Patrick Graber of Vancouver in 1970. Graber says he got the words from 92-year-old Henry Hawkins, who said he had heard it fifty years earlier. Hawkins could only recite the words, not the tune and Graber set the words to 'The Keach i' the Creel' (Child 281). Another source, Billy Wardell of New Westminster, said he had heard "old Harry Wiltshire" sing the song in 1927, and claimed the opening line should be "word came down to Sappertown." - SL

File: FowM005

Moon Shined on My Bed Last Night, The

DESCRIPTION: As the Moon shines, the singer finds no rest, thinking of the boy she left behind. When an old rich man wants to marry her, she ignores her parents' advice; she would rather live in poverty but with her love. She is bound to follow him to another country.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Jeannie Robertson)
LONG DESCRIPTION: As the Moon shone on her bed the singer can find no rest, thinking of the boy she left behind. If he were there she could sleep. She ignores talk of him and of her. When an old rich man wants to marry her, she ignores the advice of her parents, for she would rather live in poverty but with her love. She is bound to follow him to another country
KEYWORDS: age jealousy poverty courting elopement emigration lover family
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Porter/Gower-Jeannie-Robertson-EmergentSingerTransformativeVoice #65, p. 231-232, "The Moon Shined on My Bed Last Night" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6959
NOTE: This song has so far only been recorded by Jeannie Robertson and her immediate family in Aberdeen. - DGE

Moon Shines Bright on Charlie Chaplin, The

DESCRIPTION: "The moon shine bright on Charlie Chaplin, His boots are cracking For want of blacking And his (baggy/khaki) trousers They want mending Before we send him To the Dardanelles."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang)

KEYWORDS: soldier travel clothes

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brophy/Partridge-TommiesSongsAndSlang, p. 40, "The Moon Shines Bright" (1 text)
Roud #10558

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Red Wing (I)" (tune) and references there
cf. "Red Wing (II)" (lyrics)

File: BrPa940B

Moon Shines Bright, The (The Bellman's Song)

DESCRIPTION: "The moon shines bright And the stars give a light." Listeners are told to awake that they may hear the life of Jesus and of the passion: "We ne'er shall do for Jesus Christ as he hath done for us." Listeners are reminded that life is short

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1825 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 28(200))

KEYWORDS: religious Jesus death resurrection warning

FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond,South,West)) Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (14 citations):
Broadwood/Maitland-EnglishCountySongs, pp. 108-109, "The Moon Shines Bright" (1 text, 2 tunes)
Leather-FolkLoreOfHerefordshire, pp. 193-194, "The Moon Shines Bright" (1 text plus an excerpt, 2 tunes)
Broadwood-EnglishTraditionalSongsAndCarols, pp. 76-77, "The Moon shines bright [Christmas Carol]" (1 text, 1 tune)
Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 95, "The Moon Shines Bright" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #150, "The Moon Shines Bright" (1 text, 1 tune)
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #4, "May Song" (1 text, 1 tune, the first half of which comes fro "The Moon Shines Bright (The Bellman's Song)" and the last verses from the "May Day Carol," two songs which often swap verses)
Dearmer/VaughnWilliams/Shaw-OxfordBookOfCarols 46, 47, 48, "The Bellman's Song" (1 text, 3 tunes)
Rickert-AncientEnglishChristmasCarols, pp. 201-202, "The Moon Shone Bright; or, The Bellman" (1 text)
Cox-FolkMusicInANewfoundlandOutport, pp. 97-98, "The Moon Shines Bright" (1 text, 1 tune); pp. 193-194 (4 tunes)

DT, BELLMAN*

ADDITIONAL: William Sandys, Cristmas Carols, Ancient and Modern (London, 1833 ("Digitized by Google"), pp. 159-160, "The Moon Shines Bright" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Jon Raven, _The Urban and Industrial Songs of the Black Country and Birmingham_, Broadside, 1977, pp. 168-169, "The Moon Shines Bright" (1 text)
Ian Bradley, _The Penguin Book of Carols_ (1999), #80, "The Moon Shines Bright" (1 text plus sundry loose stanzas)
Roud #702
RECORDINGS:
Jasper Smith, "The Moon Shine Bright" (on Voice11)

BROADSIDES:

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "May Day Carol" (lyrics)
cf. "Hampshire Mummers' Carol (God Sent for Us the Sunday)" (lyrics)
cf. "Christ Made a Trance (God Made a Trance)" (lyrics)
cf. "Awake Awake (Awake Sweet England)" (lyrics)
cf. "Here We Come A-Wassailing"
cf. "Somerset Wassail"

NOTES [465 words]: Wakefield's text and tune are from Miss L.E. Broadwood; she took them down from her uncle, Mr. John Broadwood, probably around 1840 [p. 383]. - BS
This song in its current form seems to have originated in broadsides. It has some material in common with May carols, but whether the lyrics originated there (so A. L. Lloyd) or moved from this piece to the May songs is not clear.
The initial lines, "The moon shines bright The stars give a light" are found in Tommy Thumb's Pretty Song Book, volume II, from around 1744 (see Peter and Iona Opie, I Saw Esau: Traditional Rhymes of Youth, #55), but this is yet another separate piece:
The moon shines Bright
The Stars give a light
And you may kiss
A pretty girl
At ten a clock at Night.
The Baring-Goulds connect the above item with "Now I Am a Big Boy"; this appears possible but not certain.
A second stanza also occurs in nursery tradition: "God bless the master of this house, The Mistress bless also..." (see Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #423, p. 196).
Ravenscroft also printed a "Bellman's Song"; it is not the same thing.
According to Rickert-AncientEnglishChristmasCarols, p. 300, it was Husk who first suggested that this was sung by bellmen (watchmen) on their rounds. Rickert also suggests a relation with the lines
"This carol they began that hour
How that life was but a flower" from Act V, scene iv of "As You Like It" (the famous song "It was a lover and his lass"). I see the link, but I doubt a specific connection. The idea is too obvious.
Bradley in The Penguin Book of Carols says "This is not, as might appear from its first line, a song about Charlie Chaplin." Don't ask me what that is supposed to mean; I have no clue.
In the article "Whale or Boojum: An Agony" (printed in Guiliano: Edward Guiliano, editor, Lewis Carroll Observed, Clarkson N. Potter, 1976, pp. 111-131), Harold Beaver suggests that Lewis Carroll's The Hunting of the Snark "perhaps... [is] a deliberate (or is it unconscious?) parody of that traditional English carol popularly known as the 'Bellman's Song' (p. 116). This is not on its face entirely absurd -- The Bellman is the figure in Carroll's poem who organizes the hunt, and the Snark has been suggested as an allegory of death, as this song is a warning about the danger of early death. But would Charles Dodgson/Carroll have known the song -- and, more to the point, would he have known it as "The Bellman's Song"? The song had been printed in his time, and Dodgson had a fair knowledge of popular music -- but he shows no knowledge of traditional carols, and the early book printings call it "The Moon Shines Bright," not "The Bellman's Song" (which is the Oxford Book of Carols title) -- and the versions I know don't mention a bellman. So I strongly doubt the connection. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: DTbellma

Moonlicht Waters

DESCRIPTION: Laddies will come by with "pistols, guns and rappers [rapiers]"; there's a maid who has drunk "moonlicht waters." Chorus: She wears stays "that disna need nae lacin""

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan7)
KEYWORDS: clothes drink nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan7 1421, "Moonlicht Waters" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #7265
NOTES [11 words]: The current description is based on the Greig/Duncan7 fragment. - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD71421

Moonlight and Skies

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, come hear my story of heartaches and sighs, I'm a prisoner who's lonely for my moonlight and skies." The singer leaves his girl (daughter?) and sets out on a robbery. His partner is killed and he is taken. He wishes he were free and with the girl

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (recording, Jimmie Rodgers)
KEYWORDS: love separation robbery death prison
FOUND IN: US Canada(West)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ohrlin-HellBoundTrain 21, "Moonlight and Skies" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #4096
RECORDINGS:
Gene Autry, "Moonlight and Skies" (Conqueror 8002, 1932)
Hank & Slim "Moonlight and Skies" (Vocalion 02852, 1934)
Jimmie Rodgers, "Moonlight and Skies" (Victor 23574, 1931/Regal Zonophone [Australia] MR 2200, 1931; rec. 1930)
Stanley G. Triggs, "Moonlight and Skies" (on Triggs1)
SAME TUNE:
Jimmie Davis, "Moonlight and Skies - No. 2" (Decca 5104, 1935)
NOTES [46 words]: This was item #170 in the first edition of Randolph, but was deleted in the second edition. It is item dE36 in Laws's Appendix II. - RBW
Triggs found a logger's version of this song while working in a lumber camp at Salmo, BC; evidently it had already entered oral tradition. - PJS
File: 0hr021

Moonlight Attack on Curtin's House

DESCRIPTION: "Moonlighting heroes of late made a raid Down in Castlefarm in John Curtin's place" and shot Curtin and his son. "May those boys that's in jail be home before long." "Not forgetting Thady Sullivan," an assailant shot and killed in the raid.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1885 (Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)
KEYWORDS: homicide prison Ireland political
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Nov 13, 1885 - John O'Connell Curtin killed by "Moonlighters" at his farm in Molahiffe, County Kerry (source: Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 88, "Moonlight Attack on Curtin's House" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [93 words]: The ballad recalls "His grandfather ... brought to the gallows in the year '98 Four dozen of croppies ... For which he was highly rewarded." Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion notes "The Land War [roughly 1879-1885] took a particularly violent form in County Kerry where a secret agrarian organization revived the methods of the Whiteboys and Ribbonmen. John O'Connell Curtin was killed by some of these "Moonlighters."... Curtin was described by The Nation as a staunch nationalist.... The verses were sung at fairs and other gatherings, and much applauded." - BS
File: Zimm088
Moonlight in Glory

DESCRIPTION: "Moonlight/ sunlight/starlight in glory" (3x). "Jesus, he's risen from the dead" "Death where is your stinger" (3x). "Jesus, he's risen from the dead"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (USSealsland01)

KEYWORDS: death religious nonballad Bible Jesus

FOUND IN: US(SE)

RECORDINGS:
Moving Star Hall Singers, "Moonlight in Glory" (on USSealsland01)

NOTES [141 words]: Matthew 28.6: "... he is risen"; Mark 16.6: "... he is risen ..."; Luke 24.6: "He is not here, but is risen" [King James].
I Corinthians 15.55-57: "O death, where is thy sting? O grave, where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin; and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ" [King James].
The current description is based on the USSealsland01 text. - BS
The passage about death's sting ultimately derives from Hosea 13:14. However, the King James Version translates the passage in a way quite unlike this song, so the source is surely, as Ben indicates, the passage in 1 Corinthians, which is in turn derived from the LXX Greek translation of Hosea rather than the Hebrew. In other words, there was a whole lot of mistranslating going on in the text in Corinthians. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.0
File: RcMooLG1

Moonlight, Starlight

DESCRIPTION: "Moonlight, starlight, Bogey won't come out tonight."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)

KEYWORDS: playparty

FOUND IN: Britain(England) New Zealand

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 78, "(Moonlight, starlight)" (1 short text)

File: SuSm078

Moonshine

DESCRIPTION: "Come all you booze fighters, if you want to hear, 'Bout the kind of liquor that they sell around here...." The great power of the product is described: "One drop'll make a rabbit lick a hound dog." The large number of 'shiners and revenuers is mentioned

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1938 (Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl)

KEYWORDS: drink talltale

FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Warner-TraditionalAmericanFolkSongsFromAnneAndFrankWarnerColl 131, "Moonshine" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 42, "Moonshine" (1 text)
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #46, "Come All You Rounders" (1 text, 1 tune)
Richardson/Spaeth-AmericanMountainSongs, pp. 94-95, "Moonshine" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 230, "Kentucky Bootlegger" (1 text)
ST Wa131 (Partial)
Roud #3126

RECORDINGS:
Fruit Jar Guzzlers, "Kentucky Bootlegger" (Paramount 3113, 1928)
Buell Kazee, "Moonshiner Song" (on Kazee01)
New Lost City Ramblers, "Kentucky Moonshiner" (on NLCR08)
Red Fox Chasers, "Virginia Bootlegger" (Champion 15790 [as Virginia Possum Tamers]/Supertone 9492, 1929)
Moonshine Can, The
DESCRIPTION: Informers report Pat's whiskey still to the Mounties. He is called to court. His still is dumped in the bay. At a neighbor's house a health is drunk to all but the informers
AUTHOR: Pat Troy (see NOTES)
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA/Leach)
KEYWORDS: drink police
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Peacock, pp. 75-76, "The Moonshine Can" (1 text, 1 tune)
Blondahl-NewfoundlanderSing, p. 39, "Moonshine Can" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9949
RECORDINGS:
Omar Blondahl, "The Moonshine Can" (on NFOBlondahl01,NFOBlondahl05)
George Hatfield, "Moonshine Song" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
Frank Knox, "Moonshine Song" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
Kenneth Pink, "The Moonshine Can" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Blockader's Trail" (subject)
cf. "Ewie Wi' the Crookit Horn" (subject)
NOTES [241 words]: According to Philip Hiscock's notes to this song in West, p. 55, "This was composed by Pat Troy of Goose Cove in 1920 about real events he had undergone that year. Folklorist Julia Bishop has shown that The Moonshine Can was composed specifically to clear Troy's reputation." It appears to have gone into tradition based on radio performances by Blondahl and others -- note that, in Peacock's version, "Pat Troy" has become "Pat Roy."
"Doctor Grenfell," mentioned in Peacock's version, was Wilfred Thomason Grenfell (1865-1940), was the son of an English clergyman who became a doctor in 1886, but then was influenced by the famous American evangelist D. L. Moody and by a zealous doctor he worked with, Frederick Treves. Grenfell decided to devote his life to improving conditions in Labrador, and took a hospital ship there in 1892. Over the next several years, he treated patients in Labrador and lectured in Canada and elsewhere to support his mission; eventually his mission founded five hospitals, seven nursing stations, and three orphanages. He also tried to promote economic development in Labrador. Plus he encouraged activities such as Greenleaf and Mansfield's song collecting. He wrote a number of books, and was honored with many degrees and decorations, most notably Knight Commander of the Order of St Michael and St George. There are at least five biographies of Grenfell (CanadianBio, p. 317; DictNewfLabrador, pp. 133-134). - RBW
Bibliography
• West: Eric West,Sing Around This One: Songs of Newfoundland & Labrador Vol. 2, Vinland Music, 1997

Last updated in version 5.0
File: Pea075

Moonshine Informer, The
DESCRIPTION: John Snow "informed on those people for making moonshine" around Bonavista Bay and is driven from town by the women of Southern Bay.
AUTHOR: Moses Harris
EARLIEST DATE: 1976 (Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou)
KEYWORDS: crime punishment revenge drink
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):

File: Wa131
Moonshine Steer, The
DESCRIPTION: Two cowboys come across a still whose owner, thinking they are sheriffs, has fled. They get well and truly drunk, and see a steer with two heads, 12 legs, and 14 tails. At last they manage to give it a drink, and it disappears -- flying, according to them
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1935
KEYWORDS: drink cowboy talltale
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 73, "The Moonshine Steer" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #11202
File: FCW073

Moonshiner
DESCRIPTION: "I've been a moonshiner for sev'nteen long years, I've spent all my money for whiskey and beer, I'll go to some holler, I'll put up my still...."
"I'll eat when I'm hungry and drink when I'm dry; If moonshine don't kill me I'll live till I die...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)
KEYWORDS: drink nonballad floatingverses
FOUND IN: US(Ap) Ireland
REFERENCES (8 citations):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 291, "Cornbread When I'm Hungry" (2 fragments; the "A" text combines "Moonshiner" with "Make Me a Pallet on Your Floor"; "B" mixes "Moonshiner" with what appears to be a minstel song)
Roberts-SangBranchSettlers, #56, "Moonshiner" (1 text, 1 tune, with verses from many places, including probably "Moonshiner," "Rye Whiskey," and maybe even "Green Grows the Laurel"); also #57, "Short Life of Trouble" (1 text, 1 tune, opening with a "Moonshiner" verse but the rest is "Short Life of Trouble")
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, pp. 142-143, "Kentucky Moonshiner" (1 text, 1 tune)
Combs/Wilgus-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernUnitedStates 187, p. 189, "Moonshiner" (1 text)
Ritchie-FolkSongsOfTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 38, "God Bless the Moonshiners" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 134, "Moonshiner" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 229, "Moonshiner" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: _Sing Out_ magazine, Volume 29, #3 (1983), p. 1, "God Bless that Moonshiner" (1 text, 1 tune, from Currence Hammons)
ST San142 (Full)
Roud #4301
RECORDINGS:
The Clancy Brothers and Tommy Makem, "The Moonshiner" (on IRClancyMakem01)
Daw Henson, "Moonshiner" (AFS, 1937; on KMM)
Roscoe Holcomb, "Moonshiner" (on Holcomb-Ward1, HolcombCD1)
New Lost City Ramblers, "Moonshiner" (on NLCR08)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Country Blues" (words)
cf. "The Wagoner's Lad" (floating lyrics)
cf. "Wild Rover No More" (floating lyrics)
NOTES [55 words]: An early 1960s recording of this song by Bob Dylan, long circulated as a bootleg but released in the 1990s, became justly famous in the folk revival as one of his finest performances, and inspired multiple covers of his version. Listening to the Daw Henson field recording, it seems very likely that this was Dylan's source. - PJS
Moonshiner's Dream

DESCRIPTION: "Las night as I lay sleeping I dreamed one pleasant dream...." "Making blockade whiskey And selling at retail; But I woke up sad, broken-hearted In the Fulton County Jail." He laments the conditions, dreams of better, and warns others

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (recording, Riley Puckett)

KEYWORDS: prison drink dream

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 355, "Moonshiner's Dream" (1 text)
Roud #11729

RECORDINGS:
Riley Puckett, "The Moonshiner's Dream" (Columbia 15324-D, 1928)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Logan County Jail (Dallas County Jail)" [Laws E17] (theme, lyrics)

NOTES [25 words]: This shows clear signs of borrowing from "Logan County Jail" or a relative. But the dream motif seems important enough for me to list it separately. - RBW

File: Br3355

---

Moore and Jacoby

DESCRIPTION: "While I relate my story you oystermen give year, Jacoby's fading glory you presently shall hear... the Eloisa Moore can beat the Samuel Jacoby." The Jacoby can barely crawl along as the Moore has to take in sail. The reactions of townfolk are described

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 2008 (Cohen); the event apparently happened around 1900

KEYWORDS: ship racing humorous

FOUND IN: US(MA)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, p. 127, "Moore and Jacoby" (1 text)
Roud #22306

NOTES [30 words]: Jim Albertson, who recorded this song, used Henry Clay Work's tune, "Strike the Bell, Second Mate." This fits fairly well, but I strongly suspect the proper tune is "The Bigler." - RBW

Last updated in version 2.7

File: CAFS127A

---

Moorlough Maggie

DESCRIPTION: Singer owns sheep, cattle, and ships at sea. He offers each to Moorlough Maggie if she will go with him. She rejects each offer: "Tae gie consent, love, I darna gie Tae herd your sheep high in yon heathery hills"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (recording, Stanley Robertson)

KEYWORDS: love rejection nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

Roud #12939

RECORDINGS:
Stanley Robertson, "Moorlough Maggie" (on Voice15)

NOTES [12 words]: I have to suspect this is a fragment of something like "Lizie Lindsay." - RBW

File: RcMooMag

---

Moorlough Mary

DESCRIPTION: The singer recalls meeting Mary in Strabane, and being stricken. He describes how lovely it is to see her. He wishes he had education so he could wed and entertain her. Having no hope of wedding her, he departs Moorlough's banks forever.

AUTHOR: James Devine

EARLIEST DATE: before 1886 (broadside, Bodleian 2806 b.11(223))

KEYWORDS: love, courting, rejection, nonballad, shepherd

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H173, pp. 250-251, "Moorlough Mary" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 85, "Moorlug Mary" (1 text, 1 tune)
Tunney-WhereSongsDoThunder, pp. 59-61, "Moorlough Mary" (1 text)
OBoyle-TheIrishSongTradition 17, "Moorlough Mary" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #2742

RECORDINGS:
Brigid Tunney, "Murlough Mary" (on IRTunneyFamily01)
Paddy Tunney, "Moorlough Mary" (on IRPTunney02)

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 b.11(223), "Moorlough Mary" ("The first time I saw young Moorlough Mary"), H. Such (London), 1863-1885; also 2806 c.14(18)[some words illegible], "Moorlough Mary"; Firth b.27(232), "Moorlough Mary"[text uses "Moorlough Mary"]

NOTES [96 words]: Credited to James Devine by Sam Henry. Devine's one other song known to me ("The Pride of Glenelly") is a dreadful literary contraption; there is little real evidence that it went into tradition. This song is better-known, and not nearly as pretentious; it makes me wonder if Devine really wrote it. - RBW

Tunney-WhereSongsDoThunder: "It seems that Mary Gormley or Moorlough Mary was no great beauty at all." Peter Boyle's notes to IRPTunney02: "Local tradition has it that, though they were never married, he [Devine] remained in love with her until they both were very old." - BS

File: HHH173

---

Moorsoldaten, Die (Peat-Bog Soldiers)

DESCRIPTION: German: The prisoners, trapped in a concentration camp, carry their spades to work in the moors and bogs. There is no escape; they can only keep working. But the winter (of despair) will eventually end, and they can reclaim their corrupted homeland.

AUTHOR: unknown (see notes)

EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (reported written that summer at Borgermoor)

KEYWORDS: war, prisoner, hardtimes, abuse, political, foreignlanguage

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 354-355, "Die Moorsoldaten (Peat-Bog Soldiers)" (2 texts (1 English, 1 German), 1 tune)
Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 210 "The Peat-Bog Soldiers" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 307, "Peat Bog Soldiers" (1 text)
DT, PEATBOG*

ADDITIONAL: Shoshana Kalisch with Barbara Meister, _Yes, We Sang!: Songs of the Ghettos and Concentration Camps_, Harper & Row, 1985, pp. 92-96, "Moorsoldaten / Peat Bog Soldiers" (1 German text plus the "Peat Bog Soldiers" translation, 1 tune)

NOTES [106 words]: This is properly a German folksong, but the English translation has become so popular in revival circles that it probably belongs here. Most sources list this as anonymous, but Kalisch says the German words are by "Esser," adapted by Wolfgang Langhoff, and the music by Rudi Goguel. Klaisch, p. 92, claims that it was the "first song ever written in a Nazi concentration camp" (Borgermoor). That strikes me as unlikely, but it is very probably the most popular. Kalisch adds that some people had a false impression that it came from the Spanish Civil War, because it was recorded by Ernst Busch who fought in the International Brigade. - RBW

_Last updated in version 5.1_

File: SBoA354
Moose Song, The

DESCRIPTION: Izzie Walters sees a moose. The boys kill it. An informer sees them divide the meat. The magistrate says "Five dollars ... or fourteen days in jail." Next time I'll "pay the squealer b'y to keep his big mouth closed."

AUTHOR: George Croucher?
EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: hunting animal police punishment
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 77-78, "The Moose Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9950
RECORDINGS:
George Croucher, "The Moose Song" (on PeacockCDROM)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Terry Toole's Cabbage" (plot)
File: Pea077

Moosehead Lake

DESCRIPTION: "In eighteen hundred and ninety-two, Bant Breau and George Elliot they started a crew." Life in the camp, and the various characters there, are described. The singer talks about the combative men and the long hours

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1916 (Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks)
KEYWORDS: logger work
FOUND IN: US(NE) Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks, pp. 60-61, "Mell Whitten" (1 text)
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 226-228, "Moosehead Lake" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 58, "Moosehead Lake" (1 text, 1 tune)
Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 122, "In the Month of October" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1825
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Blue Mountain Lake (The Belle of Long Lake)" [Laws C20] (floating lyrics)
cf. "Derry Down" (tune) and references there
NOTES [283 words]: This song as found in Lomax shares several verses with "Blue Mountain Lake" (with which Roud lumps it) as well as the "Derry Down" tune, and may well have sprung from the same roots. The overall feeling is just different enough, however, that I have very tentatively decided to keep them separate.

Laws offers another explanation: "Lomax seems to have added some stanzas from [Blue Mountain Lake] to... 'Moosehead Lake.'_" - RBW

Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia begins "In the month of October eighteen-eight-two, Billy Williams from Bangor he scared up a crew, And forty brave fellows of us he did take, And he landed us over across head Moose Lake" - BS

The crew chief seems to vary more than the lake -- e.g. Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks's text megins "In the month of October eighteen eighty-two, Mell Whitten from Bangor he started a crew. A crew of young fellows with him he did take, And he landed them safely upon Moosehead Lake." Gray-SongsAndBalladsOfTheMaineLumberjacks's version also claims to have been composted by "Heyward the chopper, "White-headed Bob," and "Marshall the sled-tender."

All these versions seem to refer to Moosehead Lake in Maine, which is the largest lake in that state. There is also a Moosehead Lake in Minnesota, however, somewhat south and west of Duluth. I have seen no signs that this song was localized to the Minnesota lake. On the other hand, there is a legend that a Moosehead Lake is "the imprint of [Paul Bunyan's] 'broad shape behind'" (see Daniel Hoffman, Paul Bunyan: Last of the Frontier Demigods, 1952; Bison Books edition with a new Introduction by the author 1983, p. 40). That seems more likely with the Minnesota lake. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.4
File: LoF058
Morality

DESCRIPTION: "While beauty and youth are in their full prime, And folly and fashion affect our whole time, O let not the phantom our wishes engage; Let us live so in youth that we blush not in age." The singer vows to avoid youthful passion and be happy when he's dead

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1835 (Southern Harmony)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 667, "Morality" (1 short text, 1 tune)
NOTES [83 words]: Although this appears in a number of shape note hymnals (Sacred Harp, several editions of the Southern Harmony; Missouri Harmny, p. 54), Brown's appears to be the only traditional collection. In the 1971 Denson Revisions edition of the Original Sacred Harp, it is claimed to be "much older" than the earliest version it can cite from hymnals (which is the 1827 Missouri Harmony), "but none discloses the author of the music or words." I can find no hints of it in mainline Protestant sources. - RBW

More Pretty Girls Than One

DESCRIPTION: Singer is a rambler who likes women; his mother told him to settle down, but he won't. He cries, thinking of pretty girls, and hopes he'll never die; he leaves us this lonesome song: "Every town I ramble around/There's more pretty girls than one."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (JAFL)
KEYWORDS: loneliness rambling nonballad lyric floatingverses love separation travel farewell courting parting family
FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE,So,SW)
REFERENCES (14 citations):
Randolph 734, "Goodbye, Little Bonnie Blue Eyes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Shellans-FolkSongsOfTheBlueRidgeMountains, p. 10, "Hush, Little Bonnie" (1 text, 1 tune)
Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices, p. 96, "Goodbye, Little Bonnie, Blue Eyes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 284, "Bonnie Blue Eyes" (2 text plus 1 fragment and 1 excerpt); also 301, "High-Topped Shoes" (2 texts, both mixed; "A" is mostly "Pretty Little Foot" with verses from "Don't Let Your Deal Go Down" while "B" is a hash of "Don't Let Your Deal Go Down," "'More Pretty Girls Than One," "In the Pines," and others)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 301, "High-Topped Shoes" (2 tunes plus text excerpts, of which "B" has verses of this song)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 284, "Bonnie Blue Eyes" (3 tunes plus text excerpts)
Cambiaire-EastTennesseeWestVirginiaMountainBallads, pp. 23, "More Pretty Girls Than One" (1 text)
Henry-SongsSungInTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 170. "More Pretty Girls Than One" (1 text)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-1ed, pp. 193-195, "Goodbye Little Bonnie Blue Eyes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lunsford/Stringfield-30And1FolkSongsFromSouthernMountains, "My Little Bonny Blue Eyes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, pp. 99-100, "Goodbye Little Bonnie Blue Eyes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, p. 148, "Little Bonny" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cohen/Seeger/Wood-NewLostCityRamblersSongbook, p. 192, "More Pretty Girls Than One" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 142, "Goodbye, Little Bonnie, Goodbye" (1 text)
Roud #11505 and 762?
RECORDINGS:
Carolina Tar Heels, "Goodbye My Bonnie, Goodbye" (Victor 21193, 1928, rec. 1927)
The Carter Family, "Bonnie Blue Eyes" (Decca 5304, 1936)
Cranford & Thompson, "Goodbye Little Bonnie" (Supertone 2594, c. 1932)
Woody Guthrie, "More Pretty Gals" (Folk Tunes 150, n.d., prob. mid-1940s)
Ken Marvin, "More Pretty Girls" (Mercury 6366, 1951)
Ozarkers, "There's More Pretty Girls Than One" (OKeh 45573, 1932)
Prairie Ramblers, "There's More Pretty Girls Than One" ((Perfect 6-10-58/Melotone 6-10-58/Conqueror 8713, 1936)
Riley Puckett, "There's More Pretty Girls Than One - Parts 1 & 2" (Decca 5439, 1937)
Ridge's Fountain Citians, "Little Bonnie" (Vocalion 5389, 1930)
Rutherford & Foster, "There's More Pretty Girls Than One" (prob. Brunswick, 1930; on KMM)
Gordon Tanner, Smokey Joe Miller & Uncle John Patterson, "Goodbye, Little Bonnie, Blue Eyes" (on DownYonder)
Fields Ward and the Grayson County Railsplitters, "Good Bye Little Bonnie" (Gennett, unissued, 1929)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Ten Thousand Miles Away from Home (A Wild and Reckless Hobo; The Railroad Bum) [Laws H2]" (words, tune)
cf. "The Lass of Roch Royal" [Child 76] and its various offshoots (tune)
cf. "Lonesome Road" (words)
cf. "The Wagoner's Lad" (theme)
SAME TUNE:
Dixon Brothers, "Bonnie Blue Eyes - Part 2" (Bluebird B-6691, 1936)
Arthur Smith Trio, "There's More Pretty Girls Than One - Part 2" (Bluebird B-6889/Montgomery Ward M-7155, 1937)
Arthur Smith Trio, "Answer to More Pretty Girls Than One" (Bluebird B-7437/Montgomery Ward M-7476, 1938)
Howard Dixon & Frank Gerald (The Rambling Duet), "More Pretty Girls Than One - Part 3" (Bluebird B-7484/Montgomery Ward M-7464, 1938)

NOTES [257 words]: This song and "Danville Girl" [one of the various forms of Laws H2 - RBW] are siblings. - PJS
And the whole family is rather a mess. "More Pretty Girls Than One" is reasonably well-known. The Silber text "Goodby, Little Bonnie, Goodbye" has been found with this tune. Since both are largely floating verses, we decided to lump them.
Randolph's text also has a similar tune, and it shares the basic form of the Silber text, as well as some lyrics:
"Goodbye, little bonnie blue eyes (x2), I'll see you again, But God knows when, Goodbye, little...."
"I'm going on the railroad train... 'Cause I love you, God knows I do." "I'm goin' on the ocean blue.... " "Lay your hand in mine...."
Brown's two substantial texts ("A" and "B") are similar: Most of the same verses, but no chorus.
Note the absence of the "more pretty girls" verse, which originally caused us to classify separately. After some discussion, Paul Stamler and I decided to lump the lot, even though it's against our general policy, simply because none of the variations are really well-attested enough to be regarded as independent songs. But it should be noted that almost anything can be grafted onto this stalk.
The "Goodbye, Little Bonnie Blue Eyes" family, which includes Shellans-FolkSongsOfTheBlueRidgeMountains's "Hush, Little Bonnie" and Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices's "Goodbye, Little Bonnie, Blue Eyes," plus probably Lunsford's "My Little Bonny Blue Eyes," although it's short and somewhat different, is Roud #762. These texts often end with the singer coming back. - RBW

More We Are Together, The

DESCRIPTION: "The more we are together, The merrier we shall be; For our friends are my friends, And my friends are your friends, The more we are together, The merrier we shall be." May repeat with verbs like "The more we play together" or "The more we drink together"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (Nettel)
KEYWORDS: nonballad drink friend
FOUND IN: Britain(England)
Moreton Bay (I)

DESCRIPTION: The singer meets a prisoner. The prisoner, an Irish transportee, describes the various prisons he has been in, ending with Moreton Bay, which had no equal for harshness. He rejoices at the death of the sadistic commander, Captain Logan

AUTHOR: unknown (sometimes credited to "Frank the Poet" Macnamara)

EARLIEST DATE: 1879 (quoted the "Jerilderie Letter" of Ned Kelly; see Hughes, p. 444; Innes, pp. 81-82)

KEYWORDS: abuse prison transportation injury Australia

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1824-1842 - Period during which Moreton Bay served as a prison colony
1830 - Murder of Captain Patrick Logan by an aborigine
FOUND IN: Australia Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (11 citations):
Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia, pp. 38-39, "Moreton Bay" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fahey-PintPotAndBilly, pp. 52-53, "Moreton Bay" (1 text, 1 tune)
Manifold-PenguinAustralianSongbook, pp. 16-18, "Moreton Bay" (1 text, 2 tunes)
Paterson/Fahey/Seal-OldBushSongs-CentenaryEdition, pp. 52-54, "Moreton Bay" (1 text)
Anderson-StoryOfAustralianFolksong, pp. 13-14, "Moreton Bay" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ward-PenguinBookOfAustralianBallads, pp. 36-38, "A Convict's Lamentation on the Death of Captain Logan" (1 text)
Stewart/Keesing-FavoriteAustralianBallads, pp. 8-9, "A Convict's Lamentation on the Death of Captain Logan" (1 text)
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #114, "The Convict's Lamentation" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT, MORETONB*

Lyn Innes, _Ned Kelly: Icon of Modern Culture_, Helm Information Ltd., 2008, pp. 81-82, "The Convict's Lament" (1 text)
Roud #2537
CROSS-REFERENCES:
ct. "Youghall Harbour" (tune)

NOTES [1581 words]: Moreton Bay is the name of the sea inlet into which the Brisbane River empties, but early in the history of Australia, it was "the name formerly given to the district of New South Wales which is now... Queensland" (Morris, p. 303).

"Between his arrival at Moreton Bay and his violent death there four years later, Logan became a legend among the convicts -- so much so that he was the only commandant of an Australian penal station to have a whole ballad dedicated to him" (Hughes, p. 443). Specifically this song, which Hughes quotes in full. Logan (1792-1830) was a Scotsman who joined the 57th Regiment in 1810, coming to Australia in 1825 (Hughes, p. 445).

Learmonth, p. 321, says that "Little is known of the true personality of this hated commander except through official reports and the tales of flogging and escapes, and bitter ballads made by his convict charges whom he disciplined strictly and with some brutality." Hughes believe that Logan's brutal regimen was shaped by the experience of the British army, which -- being composed mostly of those who could find no other work -- was controlled largely by the lash.

Hughes, p. 446, reports that "Although the punishment registers for Moreton Bay in Logan's time are lost, it seems clear that Logan habitually worked prisoners in irons, whatever their sentences. He was also a relentless flogger. One sample record... show[s] that from February to October 1828, Logan ordered 200 floggings, for a total of 11,100 lashes." Few reports of what was going on escaped the colony, since prisoners could not escape and Logan had to endorse any papers that were sent out. It has been speculated that what reports did reach the world were actually leaks intended to make people fear transfer to Moreton Bay (Hughes, p. 447). But at last a manuscript by Thomas Matthew emerged detailing the brutalities (Hughes, p. 449) -- and Logan's caprice in applying them.

Paterson/Fahey/Seal-OldBushSongs-CentenaryEdition notes that, during Logan's tenure as commander of Moreton Bay, the death rate among the prisoners exceeded ten percent per year; there was a time when it exceeded 3% per month (cf. Hughes, p. 446). This is not entirely Logan's fault; there was a famine and an epidemic at the time. On the other hand, a pretty good way to kill a sick man is to flog him unmercifully. No wonder prisoners celebrated his death!

Moreton Bay is located in what is now southern Queensland. The penal colony there was founded in 1824 (though relocated slightly in 1825), and deliberately placed far away from the settled areas of Australia. Moreton Bay was intended for "doubly convicted felons" -- i.e. those who had stuck to their criminal ways after transportation to Australia, and so were thought effectively beyond redemption -- and it was thought that its remoteness would make it more secure.

Governor Brisbane, who gave his name to the local river and to the town which later arose on the site, wrote that "Port Macquarie [is] for first grave offenses [in Australia], Moreton Bay for runaways from the former, and Norfolk Island... is the 'ne plus ultra' (Hughes, p. 461). This policy of "security through distance" didn't work; squatters were settling near Moreton Bay by 1840. In 1842, the government gave in and opened the area to settlement.

The list of settlements the prisoner has inhabited in the song seems unlikely. For one thing, Norfolk Island should have been his last stop -- unless he had been on Norfolk Island in its first incarnation. But the island was closed in 1814 and not reopened until 1825, when it was determined that Moreton Bay was not sufficient to handle the die-hards (Clark, p. 54). And convicts sent there were not allowed to leave for at least ten years!

In addition, Norfolk Island (in both its incarnations) was as bad as Moreton Bay (the death rate was prodigious; some men received over a thousand lashes a year, and the most common reason for murders was that men would do anything to be sent to Sydney for trial). In one of those interesting folklore links, the governor of Norfolk Island in 1846 was John Price, who "became a byword for cruelty" (Alexander, p. 163). He was the husband of Mary Franklin, one of Sir John Franklin's nieces (Alexander, p. 161). Among his other crimes, Alexander thinks Price was an abusive husband. Little wonder he cared little for the convicts.

Interestingly, like Captain Logan, Price was murdered for his behavior. A mob of convicts attacked him in 1857, injuring him so severely that he died (Alexander, pp. 163-164).

Of the other sites mentioned:

Toongabbie is one of the farming areas near Sydney, and (despite being called "cursed Toongabbie") was said to be the easiest, not the worst, of the settlements.

Castle Hill probably refers to Newcastle (which was so called because it was near a Castle Hill); founded in 1821, it was another place destined for incorrigibles, but was close enough to Sydney that it didn't last long.

The reference to Moreton Bay as part of New South Wales as correct at the time; although it is now in Queensland, all the settled regions of Australia, save Van Diemen's Land, were initially called "New South Wales," and Queensland did not become a separate territory until 1859.

The reference to men dying of starvation in Moreton Bay also has its truth; the British were incredibly inept about organizing colonies, and prison colonies were the worst; they didn't even allow plows to till the soil. A crop failure in 1828/1829 caused Logan to cut the minimal rations in half. He also kept prisoners in irons whatever their punishment status; this can only have lowered their productivity.

A "triangle" was actually a tetrahedron, three sticks lashed together from which a man was hung to be flogged.

Logan (1792-1830) was assigned to Moreton Bay in 1826, and since he was judge, jury, and tribune, no word came out for some time; Governor Darling (who succeeded Brisbane in 1825) wanted it that way. But eventually a prisoner was brought to Sydney for trial, and though he was hanged, a manuscript he left behind revealed some of the truth.

Eventually Logan was ordered to India in 1830, but he stayed at Moreton Bay for some time to show his successor the ropes (Hughes, p. 450) and to testify to the state of things in Queensland. While waiting for the call to testify, he did some exploring, and was waylaid (Hughes, pp. 450-451).

His body was eventually found, partly buried; the physical evidence seemed to indicate that an aborigine had killed him. (Relations with the local natives had turned bad almost instantly, and they killed any intruders they could.) But there isn't much doubt that most of his prisoners would have murdered him given the slightest opportunity.

As with most such historical figures, there have been attempts to whitewash Logan (see Hughes,
The attempts strike me as ludicrous. Possibly he would have been a decent man in another job; perhaps he thought what he was doing was necessary. That does not make him less a sadist, brute, and fool, nor does it make Moreton Bay any less of a concentration camp. Paterson/Fahey/Seal-OldBushSongs-CentenaryEdition notes that this song is usually attributed to Francis "Frank" Macnamara/McNamara, but observes that other authors have also been suggested. Davey/Seal, pp.128, 178, 191, clarify by crediting it to "Frank the Poet," who is often said to be Macnamara (an Irishman born in 1811 and transported in 1832). Manifold, p. 31, mentions the connection to Macnamara -- but points out that there is no record that Macnamara was ever anywhere near Moreton Bay. Stewart/Keesing-FavoriteAustralianBallads say without question that "Frank the Poet" was McNamara (their spelling) but say he was transported in the "early 1820s," most likely for forgery. Thus details are very lacking; "Frank the Poet" was real, and may have been Macnamara, but it can't be proved, and it can't be proved that Frank (whoever he was) wrote this song.

The (online) Australian Dictionary of National Biography says that Macnamara (c. 1810-after 1861) was Irish, possibly from County Clare, and appears to have had some education. He was transported in 1832 for theft on the Eliza. Soon after arriving in Australia on September 6, 1832, he was assigned to an ironed gang and was repeatedly flogged -- so even if he didn't end up in Moreton Bay, he knew what the convicts experienced. In 1842, he was sent to Van Dieman's Land; he earned his ticket-of-leave in 1847, was pardoned in 1849, moved to Melbourne, and all but disappears from the record; we don't even know when he died, except that he was alive in 1861. His best-known piece (other than this) is said to have been "The Convicts Tour of Hell." See also "The Seizure of the Cypress Brig."

John Meredith is reported to have written a book about him, but I haven't been able to find it. Davey/Seal, p. 192, give the text of the relevant part of Ned Kelly's Jerilderie Letter, thought to be the earliest citation of the song:

...[they] were doomed to Port McQaurie Toweringabbie Norfolk island and Emu plains and in those places of tyranny and condemnation many a blooming Irishman rather than subdue to the Saxon yoke were flogged to death and bravely died in servile chains....

The resemblance to the standard text of "Moreton Bay" is obvious; literary dependence is almost certain. How many of the differences are the result of oral tradition, and how much the result of Ned Kelly's illiteracy, is less clear. - RBW

Bibliography

- Davey/Seal: Gwenda Beed Davey and Graham Seal, A Guide to Australian Folklore, Kangaroo Press, 2003
- Morris: Edward E. Morris, A Dictionary of Austral English, 1898 (I use the 1972 Sydney University Press with a new foreword but no new content)

Last updated in version 5.2
File: FaE038

Mormon Army Song

DESCRIPTION: "When Uncle Sam he did send out his army to destroy us, He though, 'The Mormons we will rout, so they cannot annoy us.'" But the Mormons defeat the American forces. They would have taken "Brigham YOung and Heber... but were afraid of Echo Canyon"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (Briegel, Old Time Mormon Songs, according to Cohen)
KEYWORDS: battle travel
FOUND IN: US(Ro)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, p. 602, "The Mormon Army Song" (1 text)
Mormon Coon, The

DESCRIPTION: "Young Abraham left home one day." A friend receives his note: "I'm out in Utah in the Mormon land, I'm going to stay because I'm living grand... Now every day I get a band new wife." He can spare six or seven wives, "For I am a Mormon coon."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1945 (JAFL 58)

KEYWORDS: rambling wife humorous

FOUND IN: US(MW,Ro)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #224, "Mormon Coon" (2 short texts)
ADDITIONAL: James P. Leary, Compiler and Annotator, _Wisconsin Folklore_. University of Wisconsin Press, 2009, article "The Wanigan Songbook" by Isabel J. Ebert, p. 218, "The Mormon Coon" (1 text, sung by Emory DeNoyer)
Richard M. Dorson, _Buying the Wind: Regional Folklore in the United States_, University of Chicago Press, 1964, pp. 530-532, "The Mormon Coon" (1 text)

Roud #10887

NOTES [225 words]: Ordinary Christians viewed Mormons as scandalous because they had multiple wives, and this song portrays a very flirtatious Mormon girl. In fact Mormons, except for being polygynous, were sexually strict. And in fact the church had abandoned multiple marriage by the time this song was collected. Today the Mormons' primary difference from Protestant Christianity is their acceptance of several books by Joseph Smith as scripture. There are other theological differences, to be sure (including some over how salvation is achieved) which are of great importance to scholars -- but they generally don't interest ordinary people much, and are not widely published.

It probably goes without saying that very few Mormon men were allowed as many wives as this song implies; there weren't enough available women for that! Even Brigham Young had only 17 living wives at the time of his death (see the notes to "Brigham Young"). Joseph Smith had somewhat more -- but if one reads the catalog of wives in Fawn M. Brodie, _No Man Knows My History: The Life of Joseph Smith_ 1945, 1971, it quickly becomes evident that many of these were middle-aged and even elderly women; while one cannot but suspect that Smith introduced polygamy to improve his reproductive life, he in fact doesn't seem to have spent much time rolling in the hay with pretty young women. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.8

File: EDeN218A

Mormon Cowboy (I), The

DESCRIPTION: Singer, a Mormon cowboy, is invited to a grand ball. He meets all the girls and enjoys the music. After dancing a few sets, he steps out for rest; later, a fight starts, with gunplay, but is quickly quashed. The cowboy rides off, vowing nevermore to roam

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (recording, Carl T. Sprague)

KEYWORDS: fight dancing music party cowboy

FOUND IN: US

Roud #11523

RECORDINGS:
Carl T. Sprague, "The Mormon Cowboy" (Victor V-40246, 1929; on AuthCowboys, WhenIWas1)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The High-Toned Dance" (plot)

File: RcTMorCw

Mormon Cowboy (II), The

DESCRIPTION: The singer sings "Concerning Archie Barber and his unhappy state." At 22, he marries, but he has "no tool at all" and can't satisfy the girl. Her mother tells her to try him before a female jury. The marriage is annulled; the girl marries a Mormon cowboy

Mormon Love Serenade, The (The Marriage Proposal)

DESCRIPTION: "O Susan, wilt thou come with me In sweet community to live." He promises "all the love that swells in my breast" and a sixteenth of his wealth. He has "only" 15 other wives, compared to Brigham Young's 44. He also offers a sixteenth of a kiss

Mormon Question, The

DESCRIPTION: "When Uncle Sam first set out His army to destroy us, Says he, 'Those Mormons we'll rout....' "There's a great commotion in the east About the Mormon question." But the expedition encounters much trouble and concludes "These Mormons beat the devil."

On the other hand, they eventually had to abandon polygamy to gain statehood, and once the United States surrounded them, they needed statehood for economic reasons. In the long run, I'd call their quarrel with the United States a draw. - RBW
Mormond Braes (I)

DESCRIPTION: A (lass/lad) laments a lost sweetheart, (who promised to marry but proved fickle). At last (she) says she will find another sweetheart elsewhere. "So fare ye weel, ye Mormond braes, Where after I've been cheerie... Sin I hae lost my dearie."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1894 (Murison collection, according to Lyle, _Fairies and Folk_)

KEYWORDS: love abandonment rambling

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 171-173, "Mormond Braes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #1, pp. 2-3, "Mormond Braes"; #6, p. 3, "Mormond Braes"; #107, p. 2, ("Farewell to Pulteney-banks"); #4, p. 3, ("Farewell ye Mormond Braes"); "Folk-Song in Buchan," pp. 63-64, "Mormond Braes" (3 texts plus 5 fragments, 1 tune)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 62-63, "Mormond Braes" (1 text, 1 tune)
MacColl-PersonalChoice, p. 25, "Mormond Braes" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT, MORMBRAE*

RECORDINGS:
Daisy Chapman, "Mormond Braes" (on SCDChapman01)
Ewan MacColl and Peggy Seeger, "Mormond Braes" (on SCMacCollSeeger01)

BROADSIDES:
NLScotland, L.C.Fol.70(124b), "Fareweel tae Blairgowrie," Poet's Box (Dundee), c. 1890

NOTES [98 words]: Greig #1: "The authorship of 'Mormond Braes' is usually attributed to Dr Gavin of Strichen, father of the late Dr Gavin. All traditions of this kind, however are to be received with extreme caution, even when there exist no specific grounds for doubting them. And in the present case we are confronted with an awkward problem." He then goes on to quote the text of "Fareweel to Blairgowrie," which is lumped with "Mormond Braes," and discusses the problem of which came first, which borrowed what, and whether there might be an earlier ancestor. "There is really no settling such points." - BS

Last updated in version 6.1

File: FVS171

Mormons, The

DESCRIPTION: "Some folks talk about the Mormons, and I think it is very sad...." Most people try to make the Mormons look bad for having many wives, but the singer thinks "they have lots of fun, Do the Mormons!" He described the loose Mormon customs AUTHOR: Herbert W. Taylor?

EARLIEST DATE: 1942 (Randolph)

KEYWORDS: marriage wife sin humorous

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Randolph 500, "The Mormons" (1 text)
Roud #7638

NOTES [116 words]: Ordinary Christians viewed Mormons as scandalous because they had multiple wives, and this song portrays a very flirtatious Mormon girl. In fact Mormons, except for being polygynous, were sexually strict; public nudity was unacceptable. And in fact the church had abandoned multiple marriage by the time this song was collected. Today the Mormons' primary difference from Protestant Christianity is their acceptance of several books by Joseph Smith as scripture. There are other theological differences, to be sure (including some over how salvation is achieved) which are of great importance to scholars -- but they generally don't interest ordinary people much, and are not widely published. - RBW

File: R500

Morning After (I), The

DESCRIPTION: "Sometimes, old scout, in the morning, when the dawn looks cold and gray," the singer ponders life's troubles and wonders 'Is it really worth the while?' He lists various problems. Then he gets serious about the day, for "tomorrow you may die."

Morning After (II), The

DESCRIPTION: "A gilded mirror, a polished bar, A million glasses, straws in a jar... Are my recollections of last night." The singer a long, dirty road to his home. His hangover makes him sick. Will he quit? No, "I got soused again."

Morning Dew, The

DESCRIPTION: "The pink, the lily, and the blooming rose Grow in the garden where my true love goes. The little birds they do rejoice When they think they hear my love Jimmy's voice. O James Machree, I do love you well; I love you better than tongue can tell...."

Morning of the Fray, The

DESCRIPTION: Frank Gardner leads his gang against a coach at the Eugowra Rocks. The outlaws scatter the escort and take the rich prize. Chorus: "You can sing of Johnny Gilbert, Dan Morgan, and Ben Hall, But the bold and reckless Gardiner he's the boy to beat them all"
Morning Star

DESCRIPTION: "Morning star begin to rise Just before the break of day Children of God awake... I'm goin down by da morning train ... For da evenin' train shall be too late"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1899 (Barton-OldPlantationHymns)
KEYWORDS: nonballad religious
FOUND IN: US(SE) West Indies(Jamaica,Tobago)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Elder-FolkSongAndFolkLifeInCharlottesville, p. 50, "Morning Star" (1 text, 1 tune)
Barton-OldPlantationHymns, pp. 33-34, "Git On the Evening Train" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [49 words]: Barton-OldPlantationHymns has a "morning train" verse as well as an "evening train" verse but loses the "evening train will be too late" line. It adds verses "Gabriel's trumpet shall blow," "Let God's people get on board," "Swing low chariot swing low," and "Old Death is staying in the grave." - BS
Last updated in version 4.0
File: ElCh050A

Morning Trumpet, The (O When Shall I See Jesus)

DESCRIPTION: "O when shall I see Jesus, And dwell with him above, And drink the flowing fountains Of everlasting love. When shall I be delivered, From this vain world of sin?" "But now I am a soldier, My Captain's gone before.... And tells me not to fear."
AUTHOR: unknown (sometimes attributed to John Leland, 1754-1841))
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Jackson)
KEYWORDS: religious Jesus soldier nonballad
FOUND IN: US(Ap,So)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
DT, SEEJESUS
Roud #15077
NOTES [121 words]: The text of this is widely attributed to John Leland, an American Baptist minister who worked in Massachusetts and Virginia; this attribution has been accepted, e.g., by George Pullen Jackson. But John Julian, editor, _A Dictionary of Hymnology_, 1892; second edition 1907 (I use the 1957 Dover edition in two volumes), p. 671, says, "This vigorous lyric is ascribed y Dr. Hitchcock, in _Hymns and Songs of Praise_, 1874, to Leland. It has generally been regarded as anonymous, and is of uncertain date, cir[ca] 1807, or probably earlier." In the supplement on p. 1683, Julian pushes that date back to 1805 (in _The Christian Harmony, or Songster's Companion_ by Jeremiah Ingalls), but still is not certain of the author. - RBW
Last updated in version 3.7
File: dtSEEJE

Morning Was Charming, The

DESCRIPTION: The hunters rise early to follow the stag or hare. In some versions the hare is killed. In another, at day's end hunters are warned "to govern their passions ... and see heaven at last when he sees no more hounds"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1785 (_The Humming Bird_)
KEYWORDS: hunting nonballad animal dog horse
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (3 citations):
   Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 59, "The Morning Was Charming" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 236)
   Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, "Hare Hunting Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: The Humming Bird (Canterbury, 1785 (third edition) ("Digitized by Google")), p. 3,
("The morning is charming, all nature looks gay") (1 text)
Roud #580
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Red, Rosy Morning" (same theme and shared lines)

Morris Ellsworth

DESCRIPTION: "My name is Morzie Ellsworth, the truth I'll tell to you." He has left home and parents. His ship goes to Miramichi; he joins a logging crew. He sees many creatures such as the "savage owl" and "celebrated rabbit" and "wicked robins." It's a hard life

AUTHOR: Larry Gorman (1846-1917) ?
EARLIEST DATE: 1957 (Ives-LarryGorman)
KEYWORDS: humorous logging animal bug travel
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
   Ives-LarryGorman, pp. 58-59, 197, "Morris Ellsworth" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #25133
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. The Maine-ite in Pennsylvania" (imagery)
NOTES [40 words]: Sandy Ives (Ives-LarryGorman, p. 197) claims that this is the same as "The Maine-ite in Pennsylvania." I wouldn't go that far, but they are similar in concept (e.g. the idea that rabbits are a threat) and may have cross-fertilized a bit. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.1

Morrisite Massacre, The

DESCRIPTION: "We'll see Morris, Banks, and others, Joseph, Hyrum with the Martyrs, On Mount Zion in great glory With the savior and his army," "Slain by Burton, cruel Mormon," the song tells of the coming joys for the believers

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Burt-AmericanMurderBallads)
KEYWORDS: religious homicide
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
June 13, 1862 - The Morrisite Massacre
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
   Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 121-122, (no title) (1 text)
NOTES [3000 words]: The Morrisites are an effectively extinct sect (earlier editions of the Index said they were entirely exting), largely because of the actions described in this song.
Joseph Morris was born in England (though Powell gives the date as 1817 and Anderson, p. 31, as December 15, 1824, near Chester; I assume Anderson's date is based on the fact that George Morris said Joseph was 38 when he died -- Anderson, p. 33). He was said to be the fifth of eight children.
As a young man, he was a farm worker and coal miner in England (Anderson, pp. 31-32); he suffered at least one severe burn while working in the mines (Anderson, p. 32)
Morris became a Mormon in the late 1840s, moving to America, arriving in Utah in 1853 (Powell).
During his early years in America he was married to one Mary Thorp (Anderson, p. 33). When he went on one of his peregrinations, she left him and took all that he owned, leaving him penniless. He then married a widow named Elizabeth Mills; she too dumped him (Anderson, p. 35). He had a child somewhere in there (Anderson, p. 40). In 1857, he managed to find another wife, Elizabeth Jones (Anderson, p. 41).

This is typical of his lack of social success; one of his surviving letters describes his quest to marry Jones; which went badly -- which he came to blame on the Mormon hierarchy (Anderson, p. 13; Morris's long letter explaining the situation, which I found close to incomprehensible, is on pp. 13-15). He also had trouble getting a decent job (Anderson, p. 25). According to Anderson, p. 22, he never ceased to believe in Joseph Smith; his disagreement was with Brigham Young and the post-Smith organization of the church. In this he had plenty of company, since Mormonism split half a dozen ways when Smith was murdered! The difference was, Morris came later and was active after, not before, the Church moved to Utah -- instead of founding a Mormon sect well separated from the main branch of the Latter-Day Saints, he was an irritant right there in the middle of them. Morris had always been prone to "spiritual manifestations" (not by itself a crazy thing in Mormon circles; they had been founded by a modern-day prophet, after all!) George Morris described his brother as having the "gift of tongues" but "was unwise in the use of them" (Anderson, p 33). From the sound of things, he was a genuine visionary, i.e. psychotic, rather than a con artist such as Joseph Smith; he believed what he was telling people. His brother attributed his mental aberrations to the psychological effects of his mining accident as a young man plus an illness he suffered while in the United States (Anderson, p. 33, quotes George Morris as saying that after the illness he became "very flighty and visionary in his mind" -- but he was already convinced "that he was in very high estimation with the Lord"). Morri's notion is barely possible; it's rare for disease to cause loss of contact with reality in those who are too young for a dementia, but it does happen once in a while. Usually, though, psychotic episodes simply come about because of a deeper mental condition with genetic roots, normally schizophrenia or bipolar disorder. Morris clearly didn't have the latter; his failures with people might be additional evidence for the former.

His visions caused him to invent a truly original cosmology (Anderson, p. 37): his view of the "Rounds of Eternity" envisioned a universe over a billion years old, with 144,000 worlds. Much of this reminds me of first- and second-century gnosticism, which he can't possibly have known about. He also believed in transmigration of souls -- an idea that had some pedigree in both orthodox Christianity and Mormonism (Anderson, p. 37, thinks he got it from a Mormon schismatic named Charles B. Thompson), but his notion of the "Keys of the Priesthood" seems to have been his own. In addition to its cosmological ideas, Morris's system envisioned a series of angels who had "missions" on earth. Morris was the incarnation of the angel Seth, who previously had been Moses (Anderson, pp. 39-40). It's all very strange, and too screwy for me to try to summarize; if you really want to see it, consult pp. 36-40 or so of Anerrson.

The schism with the Mormons came about because, in 1857-186, he received a series of revelations that contradicted the party line (Powell).

He believed that he was called to replace Brigham Young as prophet of the Mormon Church. (Maybe as secular head, too, but certainly as prophet; Anderson, p. 2). In all, he recorded more than 300 revelations (Anderson, p. 26). He had no education, so when he wrote to Young, the result was near-gibberish: "to si exelency Governor young" (Anderson, p. 11; I checked that orthography twice!). Little wonder Young, or someone, scribbled in the margin, "He's weak minded" (Anderson, p. 12). Nonetheless, his writings show a clear familiarity with the style and language of the King James Bible (which Joseph Smith had imitated, somewhat imperfectly, in the Book of Mormon -- but which, it should be noted, was not the style of the actual Bible; the King James Bible was slightly archaic even when it was published, whereas the original Greek and Hebrew of the Bible was the normal language of the time. Thus the evidence is that Morris -- and Smith -- did not have a hot line to God, because God would have told them to talk English, not a fake jargon.) His second message to Brigham Young, shown on pp. 27-29 of Anderson, shows him shifting smoothly from archaizing to modern English as he shifts from his alleged divine message to his suggestions to Young.

The Mormons did not accept his revelations (not surprising, given that he called Brigham Young a fallen prophet!), so after being ignored by Young yet again in late 1860 (Anderson, pp. 51-53), he finally set out on his own. Few took him seriously for a long time (any sane man would surely have given up!), but eventually a Mormon bishop named Richard Cook accepted his revelation and he was in business (Anderson, p. 62). He gathered followers among the Mormons and founded his own community (Powell), very close to Salt Lake City -- on the banks of the Weber River (Anderson, p. 3).

By mid-1861, Morris had managed to gather some 300 followers, with the number of members reaching 507 by 1862 (Anderson, p. 66) -- surprising, since he was anything but eloquent and made few efforts to recruit new followers (Anderson, pp. 67-68). It is possible that the eloquent John Banks, another disappointed ex-Mormon from England, made up for Morris's lack of charisma. Morris's ability to deal with people was a problem, though; there was apparently already some internal dissension about organization almost from the start (Anderson, p. 65). Their base was called "Kington Fort," but it was unfinished and, being in a valley with hills on all sides, hard to defend -- but isolated from the people around it (Anderson, p. 64).

His inability to come up with clear revelations was both strength and weakness. When he seemed to predict the Second Coming in the fall of 1861, he probably drew followers (for some reason, a lot of people seemed to expect the end of the world around then!) -- but of course it meant a lot of disappointment when the world stayed put. Morris did offer another vision to correct things (Anderson, pp. 72-73) -- but he had made no attempts to found an economically viable organization (Powell), and many failed to raise crops or do useful work that year. The community lived for a time on the proceeds of the members' selling their property (Anderson, p. 35). When they ran out of cash from this, Morris was unable to control dissension among his followers. The armed guard that had earlier been formed to hold off Mormon harrassers was by 1862 being used to intimidate some of the Morrisites themselves (Anderson, p. 86). Morris was even having to aim revelations at his two leading followers, Cook and Banks, who were apparently not friendly (Anderson, pp. 86-87). Certainly Morris's personal skills hadn't improved much; he managed to find a bride, Mary Olsen, among his followers -- but within a month, they were apparently fighting so much that Morris had a revelation directed "explicitly to her" telling her to stop arguing and obey him (Anderson, p. 87). Even if God had nothing better to do than be Morris's relationship counselor, God would at least be competent at it! The two did have a son, born in May 1862, but it died almost at once (Anderson, pp. 104-105) -- perhaps a small mercy, since it spared the boy from inheriting his father's mental condition, plus he would have been orphaned within wees.

Some think the Mormons would have come down on the Morrisites in 1861, except that the American government was threatening to suppress the Mormons themselves; Brigham Young and his supporters didn't want to get in more trouble (Anderson, p. 81). But that protection (if protection it was) would not last. Both Morris's visions of the Second Coming -- which was saying would come any day -- and his political problems were reaching a crescendo. A disgruntled follower named William Jones tried to leave (Anderson, pp. 96-100). The exact details are hazy -- the witnesses disagree, and all are biased -- but Jones and two others ended up in Morrisite custody, in chains. The Morrisites were not a government body; they did not have the right to imprison people.

Then one of them, Lars Gurtsen, escaped (Anderson, p. 100) and called on the Utah authorities, who -- being left largely free of federal control due to the Civil War -- could now safely settle the dissident faction (Powell). A judge, John F. Kinney -- a non-Mormon but one who generally accepted Mormon advice (Bagley, p. 251) -- issued a writ of habeas corpus, addressed to Morris, Banks, Cook, and one other (Anderson, p. 105). A group of deputies tried to deliver the writ. The Morrisites refused to accept it -- some witnesses said they burned it (Anderson, p. 101). Morris, in fact, was having revelations telling his followers to ignore the authorities (Anderson, p. 102. It simply amazes me that anyone would believe God would worry about things like that at a time when, for instance, the Civil War was killing thousands of young men each week!). Morris also gave a new date for the Second Coming: May 30, 1862 would be "Foreshadowing of the Kingdom of God Day" (Anderson, p. 103).

Morris may not have been worried, but the situation was critical. The Morrisites were in open defiance of the law. The state marshal was unwilling or unable to serve a writ in circumstances which might result in violence (Anderson, pp. 107-108), but his top assistant was up for the job. Deputy marshal Robert T. Burton led a posse against the community (Powell). No one knows how many were involved, but there were probably several hundred, most of them Mormons of the Nauvoo legion -- the Mormon militia, although it was technically considered a Federal force (Anderson, pp. 110-111).

The idea was probably to induce a surrender (Anderson, p. 111), but apparently Morris had a revelation anticipating a large army coming. He took it as more evidence of the second coming, and perhaps had another revelation. So there was no surrender. (Many of the Morrisites were probably afraid to surrender. They were aware of the Mountain Meadows Massacre -- Bagley, p. 251 -- where a group of Mormons attacked a passing wagon train, induced the people to surrender, then slaughtered them; for background on this, see "The Mountain Meadows Massacre" [Laws B19].)

Burton captured a Morrisite herder and sent him in with a demand for surrender. It is claimed that he allowed only thirty minutes to think about it, which simply wasn't enough time for the message to be brought to the leaders, let alone for them to decide what to do (Anderson, pp. 112-113), though others claim Burton allowed two hours.
Whatever the timing, Burton fired shots -- warning shots, some said, but the first one fell among the assembled Morrisites (Anderson, pp. 114-115), killing two and leaving one teenager with a permanently disfigured jaw (Anderson, p. 127; p. 119 shows the disfigured woman in later life). Morris, rather than do something useful, reeled off another vision promising better things to come (Anderson, pp. 127-128). For about a day, both sides settled down to a siege; during this, one of the attackers, Jared Smith, was killed (Anderson, p. 132). The next day brought heavy rain, which was hard for the Morrisites in their damaged fort (Anderson, p. 134), especially as they were almost out of ammunition and even food.

Burton apparently sent a message to the territorial governor asking for instructions, pointing out that the Morrisites were resisting and that a man had been killed. Acting Governor Fuller told him to enforce the law (Anderson, p. 133). So, even though the next day was Sunday (Anderson, pp. 134-135), Burton moved in. He ordered a small group of men to storm one of the outbuildings of the fort. One of those who went in, Peter Wahlin, became the second fatality among the Mormons, but they took the building and brought up more equipment (Anderson, pp. 136-137). The Morrisite position was no longer tenable, and they surrendered (Anderson, p. 137).

Burton then occupied the place (Powell). What happened once he and his troops met the assembled, mostly-unarmed Morrisites is unclear -- the witness accounts disagree, and all are self-serving. What is clear is that Burton personally killed a few people including Morris and Banks (Anderson, pp. 138-139). Then his troops took prisoner those men who had been found with arms or were listed as part of the Morrisite army (Anderson, pp. 140-141; this was about ninety people, according to Powell).

With the attack over, the question was what to do about the survivors. Two of the state militia had died, after all. Most of the armed men eventually went on trial. In 1863, although two men were acquitted, seven men were convicted of second degree murder and 66 of "resistance." The latter group were fined; the former were given prison terms of ten years and up (Anderson, p. 143). Territorial governor Stephen S. Harding, who thought he saw in this more resistance to Federal control, pardoned them (Powell) -- on the grounds, one suspects, that "the enemy of my enemy is my friend," even though the Morrisites were no more pro-United States than the Mormons.

As early as 1863, there were people who wanted Burton charged with murder. (Justifiably, I think; we don't know how Morris and Banks died, but it's hard to believe they attacked Burton or his troops after the surrender!) In 1870 a grand jury brought charges against him, but in 1872 the U. S. Supreme Court threw the case out on a technicality (Anderson, pp 148-149). Apparently that ended the possibility of charging him for those deaths, which were probably the ones easier to link to him. In 1879, Burton was charged with another of the Morrisite deaths (Anderson, p. 149; on p. 228, Anderson notes that this was only after Burton's supporter Brigham Young was dead), but was acquitted (Powell).

You'd think that seeing their psychotic "prophet's" visions dramatically disproved would have spelled the end of the Morrisite movement. And some did abandon the faith, either returning to Mormonism or abandoning both Utah faiths and moving away (Anderson, p. 142). But a surprising number tried to preserve their belief system (Anderson, p. 222, concludes that Morris's death actually helped preserve his movement, because his mismanagement had been driving his church into the ground). Few wanted to stay in Utah, though -- most had lost their property, and they faced a hostile population. So they took the opportunity to migrate. In the process, they became divided into two groups (Anderson, pp. 156-157). At first, the separation was merely geographical, but in a denomination that was built around a prophet, the two soon became separate in other ways. There were several post-Morris branches; Anderson has photos of their some of their leaders and one of their meeting sites. Some of them lasted a long time, but none was in any way noteworthy; I checked my several catalogs of denominations and histories of the church without finding any hint of the Morrisites. Such importance as they have seems to be greater for the history of Utah than the history of Christianity.

C. Leroy Anderson's book about this -- the main reference for anyone who cares -- was published under three titles. The first edition, For Christ Will Come Tomorrow: The Saga of the Morrisites, was published in 1981. In 1988 a slightly revised edition was published by Utah State University Press as Joseph Morris and the Saga of the Morrisites. The final version, from 2010, is Joseph Morris and the Saga of the Morrisites (revisited), which is the version cited here. Those wishing to see Morris's own writings may attempt to find Joseph Morris, The Spirit Prevails: Containing the Revelations, Articles, and Letters Written by Joseph Morris, George S. Dove and Company, 1886. Dove was one of Morris's associates (Anderson, p. 3; Dove is all over Anderson's index); I doubt the portrayal is unbiased (and Anderson more than enough Morris quotes for my taste, thank you!). There is also a book about Colonel Burton, Janet Burton Seegmiller, Be Kind To The Poor: The Life Story Of Robert Taylor Burton. Although copies are obtainable, the prices were too ridiculous for me to bother trying to find a copy. This poem definitely seems to be by a Morrisite, and probably near-contemporary, since it refers to seeing Morris and Banks in the afterlife. It also correctly refers to the massacre as being on the banks of the Weber, to Morris as being slain by Burton, refers to Burton as a Mormon, Joseph and Hyrum are, of course, the brothers Joseph and Hyrum Smith, who were slain by a mob near Nauvoo, Illinois, one of the key events in Mormon history. They were off the scene by the time Morris started having his visions. - RBW

Bibliography

- Powell: Allan Kent Powell, editor, Utah History Encyclopedia, University of Utah Press, 1994. The cited section is from the article on The Morrisites on pp. 381-382

Last updated in version 6.1
File: Burt121

Morrissey and the Benicia Boy

DESCRIPTION: The Benicia Boy -- Heenan -- challenges Morrissey saying "no man from Ireland before him could stand." They agree to fight for $5200 in North America. Morrissey wins in the eleventh round and takes the championship belt.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland)
KEYWORDS: fight gambling sports
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Oct 20, 1858 - American Heavyweight Championship fight between John Morrissey and John C Heenan at Long Point, Canada. Heenan broke his hand during the fight. This is Morrissey's last fight
FOUND IN: Ireland US(MW)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 44, "Morrissey and the Benicia Boy" (1 text)
OLochlann-IrishStreetBallads, pp. 252-253, "Morrissey and the Benicia Boy" (1 text, tune referenced: OLochlann-IrishStreetBallads 26)
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, p. 254, "The Bold Benicia Boy" (1 text)
Roud #9781
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Morrissey and the Black" (subject)
cf. "Morrissey and the Russian Sailor" (subject)
cf. "Donnelly and Cooper" (tune)
NOTES [487 words]: Source: Re historical references--"Troy Boxing -Round Two" by Don Rittner on The Mesh site. I have not been able to find which Long Point in Canada was the site of the fight. - BS

John Morrissey was born in Ireland in 1831 but was raised in New York and apparently went to California at the time of the Gold Rush. In 1852 he gained fame as a boxer by defeating George Thomson. The climax of Morrissey's career came in 1858 (so DAB and other sources; I've seen a date of 1860 cited), when he defeated champion John C. Heenan and promptly retired. In the years that followed his gambling resort in Saratoga Springs proved very successful, and Morrissey was twice elected to congress. He died in 1878. In addition to his boxing prowess, he is said to have been a "hatchet man" for the New York Tammany Hall machine. - RBW

America Singing at the Library of Congress American Memory site does not have this ballad but has another about Morrissey and Heenan:
LOCSinging, sb10143a, "The Great Prize Fight Between Morrissey and Heenan, the Benicia Boy, at Long Point, Canada, Oct 20, 1858 for $5000," H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878
Bodleian Library site Ballads Catalogue does not have this ballad among its "prizefighting" broadsides. However, among the broadsides at that site, there are many celebrating Heenan. For example:
Bodleian, 2806 c.15(229), "Heenan's Challenge to Mace," unknown, n.d.; also Harding B 19(62), "Heenan's Challenge to Mace"
Bodleian, Firth b.25(587/588), "Heenan and King," J.F. Nugent & Co. (Dublin), 1850-1899 [could not be downloaded]
Bodleian, Harding B 13(12), "Sayers' and Heenan's Struggle for the Championship and GBP400," J.O. Bebbington (Manchester), 1858-1861
Bodleian, Harding B 13(7), "The Bold Irish Yankee Benicia Boy," J.O. Bebbington (Manchester), 1858-1861 [tune: "Irish Molly"]
Bodleian, Johnson Ballads 2161a, "Coburn's Challenge to Heenan," P. Brereton (Dublin), c.1867; also 2806 c.8(234), "Coburn's Challenge to Heenan"
Bodleian, Johnson Ballads 1448B, "Maugh Bonamalath" or "Charles Heenan, the Champion of the World," W. Pratt (Birmingham), c.1850
There is a different broadside there for this fight:
Bodleian, Harding B 40(15), "The glorious victory of John Morrissy, of Templemore, Ireland, over the Yankee Buffalo boy, on Long Island, North America," J.F. Nugent and Co.? (Dublin?), 1850-1899 [could not be downloaded]

Morrissey has many fewer but at least two have been collected (see cross-references above)

Broadside LOC Singing sb10143a: H. De Marsan dating per Studying Nineteenth-Century Popular Song by Paul Charosh in American Music, Winter 1997, Vol 15.4, Table 1, available at FindArticles site. - BS

Last updated in version 2.6
File: 0Con044A

Morrissey and the Black [Laws H19]

DESCRIPTION: Morrissey agrees to fight "Ned the black of Mulberry town" for a stake of ten thousand pounds. By the fourteenth round Morrissey is unconscious or nearly, but he is revived and knocks out his opponent in the twenty-fifth round

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia)
KEYWORDS: fight
FOUND IN: US(NE) Canada(Mar,Newf)
REFERENCES (8 citations):
Laws H19, "Morrissey and the Black"
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 175, "John Morrissey and the Black" (1 text)
Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 136, "Morrissey and the Black" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 186-187,251, "Morrissey and the Black" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ives-FolksongsOfNewBrunswick, pp. 30-32, "Morrissey and the Black" (1 text, 1 tune)
Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 269-271, "Morrissey and the Black" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fahey-Joe-Watson-AustralianTraditionalFolkSinger, [p. 9, page headed "MORRISSY AND THE BLOCK"], "Morrissey and the Block" (sic.) (1 fragment, which the editor thinks is "Morrissey and the Russian Sailor" [Laws H18] but is in fact this song)
DT 706, MORRBLK
Roud #1884
RECORDINGS:
Alexander March, "Morrissey and the Black" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Donnelly and Cooper" (subject)
cf. "Morrissey and the Benicia Boy" (subject)
cf. "The Napan Heroes" (theme)
NOTES [217 words]: John Morrissey was born in Ireland in 1831 but was raised in New York and apparently went to California at the time of the Gold Rush. In 1852 he gained fame as a boxer by defeating George Thomson. The climax of Morrissey's career came in 1858 (so the Dictionary of American Biography and other sources; I've seen a date of 1860 cited), when he defeated champion John C. Heenan and promptly retired. In the years that followed his gambling resort in Saratoga Springs proved very successful, and Morrissey was twice elected to congress. He died in 1878.

In addition to his boxing prowess, he is said to have been a "hatchet man" for the New York Tammany Hall machine. - RBW

Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland says Morrissey was also a Congressman and State Senator for New York.

Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland: ".. there is no record of a fight between Morrissey and anyone with a name remotely resembling 'Ned the blackman' from Melbourne or anywhere else." - BS

There had been, however, a tendency to recruit Black boxers in the early nineteenth century (see Christopher Sinclair-Stevenson, Blood Royal: The Illustrious House of Hanover, pp. 142-143). This was apparently due to the success of one Molineaux, called "The Moor." This may well have been remembered. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.5

File: LH19

Morrissey and the Russian Sailor [Laws H18]

DESCRIPTION: A Russian sailor in Tierra del Fuego challenges Morrissey to a duel. Morrissey takes on the challenge to uphold the honor of Ireland. The fight, for a large stake, takes 38 rounds, and each knocks the other down, before Morrissey is victorious

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland)
KEYWORDS: fight patriotic
FOUND IN: US(MW,NE) Canada(Mar,Newf) Ireland Australia
REFERENCES (13 citations):
- Laws H18, "Morrissey and the Russian Sailor"
- Rickaby-BalladsAndSongsOfTheShantyBoy 48, "Morrissey and the Russian Sailor" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Rickaby/Dykstra/Leary-PineryBoys-SongsSongcatchingInLumberjackEra 48, "Morrissey and the Russian Sailor" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Dean-FlyingCloud, pp. 4-5, "Morrisy and the Russian Sailor" (1 text)
- Finger-FrontierBallads, pp. 44-47, "Morrissey and the Russian Sailor" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia, pp. 216-217, "Morrissey and the Russian Sailor" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, pp. 398-399, "Morrissey and the Russian Sailor" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 325, "Morrissey and the Russian Sailor" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 135, "Morrissey and the Russian" (1 text)
- O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 30, "Morrissey and the Russian" (1 text)
- OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads, pp. 255-256, "Morrissey and the Russian Sailor" (1 text, tune referenced: see OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 26)
- Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 38, "Morrissey and the Russian Bear" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT 694, MORRRUSS MORRRUS2*
Roud #2150
RECORDINGS:
Joe Heaney, "Morrissey and the Russian Sailor" (on Pubs1, Voice08)
Alexander March, "Morrissey and the Russian Sailor" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
Denis McGrath, "Morrissey And The Russian Bear" (on ITMA/CapeShoreNL)
Johnny McDonagh, "Morrissey and the Russian Sailor" (on Lomax42, LomaxCD1742)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Donnelly and Cooper" (subject, tune)
cf. "Morrissey and the Benicia Boy" (subject)

NOTES [363 words]: John Morrissey was born in Ireland in 1831 but was raised in New York and apparently went to California at the time of the Gold Rush. In 1852 he gained fame as a boxer by defeating George Thomson. The climax of Morrissey's career came in 1858 (so the Dictionary of American Biography and other sources; I've seen a date of 1860 cited), when he defeated champion John C. Heenan and promptly retired. In the years that followed his gambling resort in Saratoga Springs proved very successful, and Morrissey was twice elected to congress. He died in 1878.

In addition to his boxing prowess, he is said to have been a "hatchet man" for the New York Tammany Hall machine.

There is no record of Morrissey ever fighting a Russian sailor -- and certainly not in Tierra del Fuego! On the other hand, he did fight some very long matches; in 1853 it took Morrissey 37 rounds to defeat James Sullivan.

(That win, incidentally, made Morrissey arguably the American champion; Sullivan in 1849 had beaten Tom Hyer in what the February 2006 issue of American History magazine says was "considered to be the [first] American championships prizefight") - RBW

O'Connor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland's last verse refers to other fights. Specifically, "Our hero conquered Thompson, the Yankee Clipper, too, The Benicia Boy, and Sheppard he nobly did subdue."

We have a ballad for "Morrissey and the Benicia Boy", at least.

"Thompson" was George Thompson, California champion, who lost a controversial fight to Morrissey in 1852.

The "Yankee Clipper" refers to Morrissey's controversial victory over Yankee Sullivan to become "Champion of America". See "The Fight at Boston Corners" and "The Great Prize Fight Which Took Place at Boston Corners, Oct 12, 1853" broadsides at the Library of Congress American Memory site.

There is also a broadside "Rough and Tumble, or the Amos Street Fight between Poole & Morrissey" at the Library of Congress American Memory site.

Sources: Biography of John Morrissey on the International Boxing Hall of Fame site; Biography of John Morrissey on the HarpWeek Explore History site; "Yankee Sullivan (James Ambrose)(alias Frank Murray)" at Cyber Boxing Zone site. - BS

Last updated in version 4.5

File: LH18

Morro Castle Disaster

DESCRIPTION: "As the fire filled the air maddening scenes were everywhere, The flame-swept decks were far beyond control." Hundreds take a trip on the Morro Castle. The captain is dead. Many die. Investigations won't help. God will judge those involved.

AUTHOR: Bob Miller

EARLIEST DATE: 1934 (recording, Ray Whitley)

KEYWORDS: ship fire wreck death disaster

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Sep 5, 1934 - The Morrow Castle begins its voyage

Sep 8, 1934 - The Morrow Castle fire

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsAREgionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 133-134, "Morro Castle Disaster" (1 text)

Roud #22305

RECORDINGS:

Ray Whitley, "Morro Castle Disaster" (Conqueror 8383, 1934)

NOTES [6427 words]: There have been at least five books written about this event, of which I have seen Burton, Gallagher, Hicks, and Thomas/Witts. Gallagher is responsible for the suggestion that George White Rogers started the fire that sank the Morro Castle, so he has a bit of an axe to grind. Thomas/Witts I consider sensational -- as Hicks, p. xiii, says, there are "mountains of misinformation" about this event. Burton and Hicks, as their frequent citations below will surely show, seems much more reliable, although I think Hicks has less understanding of what constitutes evidence than does Burton (e.g. he's much too willing to accept eyewitness testimony over forensic -- "circumstantial" -- evidence when we know that eyewitness testimony is extraordinarily unreliable).

The Morrow Castle tragedy is one of the saddest in the history of shipping, because it was clearly preventable. The ship itself was new, having been built in 1930 (Paine, p. 345). It had been designed with safety in mind (the Ward Line was proud of saying it had never lost a passenger; Burton p. 13), including safety from fire -- there was an advanced firefighting system and a (rather less effective) fire detection system (Burton, pp. 9-10). Although far smaller than major British liners, a newspaper at the time of her commissioning called her the finest and luxurious liner of built for Americans (Burton, p. 12), and experience in a hurricane showed that she was genuinely well suited to deal with the sea itself (Burton, p. 20).

On the other hand, her crew was poorly paid and poorly kept (the food was reported to be terrible; Burton, pp. 15-16), and there was apparently little sense of teamwork -- they didn't even all speak the same language! There are reports that some were even smuggling drugs to augment their minimal pay (Burton, p. 17).

The Morro Castle sailed as a passenger liner, primarily between New York and Havana -- often with passengers making the voyage to escape the limits of prohibition (Burton, p. 8). It was on its way from Cuba to the United States on its final trip (Ritchie, p. 136). It was far from full; the line had repeatedly cut fares because of the Depression, until they were about half the original price (Hicks, p. 18), but it still wasn't enough, especially with prohibition over. But the ship had no choice but to sail; the Morro Castle made its money carrying cargo and the mail. The passengers were for profit, but the cargo "had" to be carried; Hicks, p. 9. Indeed, the ship had been built with government loans because the government felt the country needed merchant ships; Hicks, p. 14.

On September 8, Captain Robert Wilmott (this is the usual spelling; Hicks spells it "Willmott") complained of stomach pains, then died (Hendrickson, p. 292). Most believe he had a heart attack (Paine, p. 346) -- he was overweight and reportedly had had two earlier mild heart attacks (Burton, p. 19), and had had some sort of problem as recently as the last week of August (Hicks, pp. 48-49). The ship's doctor and three other physicians on board agreed that heart disease was the cause of death (Burton, p. 22). But he was only 52 years old (Hicks, p. 8), and there are some who think he was poisoned (Hendrickson, p. 292). They includes the ship's own cruise director; Burton, p. 53, and Fourth Officer Howard Hansen, who said he "had reason to believe" the captain "was given a Micky Finn which could have brought on a heart attack," although he apparently did not present his reasons (Gallagher, p. 27). And the doctor died in the disaster, so he couldn't testify about the matter afterward (Hicks, p. 206).

After the tragedy, a body was identified as Wilmott's and autopsied. However, there is much doubt about the identification (it was too badly burned to recognize, so it was identified by location, and there is some doubt about where it was found, because the man who recovered it did not know the layout of the ship; Gallagher, p. 231; Hicks, p 187), and the results of the autopsy were not helpful (Gallagher, p. 232).

Wilmott -- a British-born sailor who had become an American citizen in 1904 and had been captain of an earlier Morro Castle for 13 years before taking over the new one (Hicks, p. 8) -- was a masterful and suspicious man, whose own suspicions may have played a role in his death, by increasing the stress he was under; he supposedly distrusted some of his crew (Burton, p. 20) -- being convinced, e.g., that the radio operators meant to sabotage the ship (Burton, p. 21).

In the aftermath of Wilmott's death, first officer William Warms took command -- producing a complicated command situation, since Warms was only a "three stripe" officer, and Chief Engineer Eban Abbott was a "four stripe" officer. Abbott was thus senior, and Hicks, p. 76, seems to think that he should have taken command -- but he wasn't a line officer, and most agree that that meant he was out of the chain of command. What's more, it appears that the Ward Line didn't entirely trust Warms -- on the several occasions when Wilmott had skipped a cruise, the Ward Line brought in another captain rather than let Warms sail the ship (Hicks, pp. 77-78).

My guess is that they just didn't consider Warms personable enough to represent the ship to the passengers, but the possibility exists that his superiors didn't trust his judgment. He was regarded as a loner as well as being prone to changes of mind (Burton, p. 19), and Captain Wilmott's wife later said that her husband had not trusted him (Gallagher, p. 24). So his command experience was very limited, and he had no experience dealing with emergencies.

It was in this peculiar situation that a fire broke out in a sealed cabinet. It was discovered fairly quickly, but it was too large to put out with a fire extinguisher, and there was too little water pressure in the fire hoses, so it quickly grew out of control (Burton, pp. 34; Gallagher, p. 89, notes that when people opened the ship's fire hydrants, they neglected to close the unused hydrants, so all of them lost pressure -- one of the inevitable results of refusing to train the crew to deal with fires). Apparently Captain Wilmott had ordered most of the fire control system disabled a month before, after a leaky hydrant had cause a woman to break an ankle (Burton, p. 40).

The smoke detection system was also mostly inoperative, because the ship was carrying a cargo of fresh animal hides, and the only way to keep the smell away from the passengers was to turn it off (Burton, p. 148); this was arguably the worst bit of planning in the entire miserable saga. The ship's fire doors had been changed from automatic to manual, and no one seems to have thought to close them (Burton, p. 151). It is also reported that the bos'un who should have led the fire crew was drunk (Burton, p. 38). And Warms, who as first officer in the past was the other possible leader of the fire crew, was now acting captain and couldn't do it (Gallagher, p. 35). So there was no one to lead the fire crews.

What caused the fire is unknown; many have suspected arson by a crewman (Ritchie, p. 136). This opinion seems to have been widespread among the ship's officers; Acting Captain Warms, Cruise Director Smith, and at least three other watch-standing officers testified to that effect (Burton, pp. 149-150). Warms declared in his testimony to the Dickerson Hoover commission, "I believe the fire was set. I think somebody put something in that locker" (Hicks, p. 179). Junior officers Freeman and Hackney agreed, although on other points they disagreed with their superior officer.

Gallagher, p. 53, suggests that the fire meets three criteria for arson: if it is intense by the time it is discovered; if it spreads in a rapid, unusual manner (which officer Hackney said it had; Hicks, p. 180); and if water causes the flames to change color, indicating chemical accelerants. However, the third of this is clearly irrelevant (whatever was burning when the crew turned water on it, it wasn't the original chemicals -- and Gallagher, p. 77, notes that there was extremely flammable chemical-treated wood everywhere; Hicks, p. 98, says much of it was re-varnished weekly with a toxic and flammable varnish). The second argument is probably irrelevant (there aren't enough liner fires to compare it against), and the first would have a lot more force if the fire detection system hadn't been turned off! What's more, all the claims are based on memories, not photos or actual forensic examination.

The Dickerson Hoover commission decided not to investigate claims of arson, since it was outside their purview, but did say that it was a strange thing to do, since the arsonist would have been in danger of dying in the fire. It concluded that most of the loss of life was due to the crew's "laxness" -- although Hicks, pp. 284-285, says that most of the crew (except for Chief Engineer Abbott) did their best for the passengers.

You'd think such paranoid officers would have been prepared for sabotage -- but they weren't. There was no real procedure for dealing with fires, and Captain Wilmott had not done much to train the crew or drill the passengers (Hendrickson, p. 292). This even though there had been a fire on board in August! (Hicks, p. 49). When the fire was detected, it probably could have been stopped by closing fireproof doors, but no one was responsible for closing them and, as mentioned, it apparently it did not happen. And it happened in hurricane weather, which undoubtedly distracted the crew (Burton, p. 37).

Commanding officer Warms did not respond well to the disaster -- stressed out, perhaps, by the loss of his commander? (Burton, p. 148, and Hicks, p. 69, say he actually discovered the body, although Gallagher, p. 21, says it was a junior officer, Howard Hansen). Or overworked (Warms had supposedly been on duty without sleep for more than a day; Burton, p. 30)? Cowed by the fact that he had always been forced to obey Wilmott exactly (Burton, p. 163), and needing time to start thinking independently? Or just antisocial?

Warms apparently tried to alter course so the wind would not affect the ship as strongly (Paine, p. 346), but he did not send an SOS (Hendrickson, p. 293). An emergency signal would have made the ship subject to salvage, which was very expensive for the owners; one may speculate that he did not wish to risk potential promotion by saddling the company with a high repair bill (Burton, p. 118; Warms's son would say that Warms was "a company man" who did not want to hurt the company; Burton, p. 130. Of course, the fact that it would probably cost him his job also played a part). Particularly since the ship was almost back in port; she was off Atlantic City, New Jersey (Paine, p. 346).

Whatever his reasoning, the ship's high speed fanned the flames; the fire was soon out of control. The powder for the line-throwing gun exploded at about 3:00 a.m. making matters even worse (Burton, p. 39), and at 3:10 a.m. the electricity went out (Burton, p. 40). At almost the same moment, the steering controls on the bridge went out, and Warms did not attempt to transfer control to the emergency rudder system at the stern of the ship, instead slowing down and trying to steer the ship by her propellers (Burton, p. 41). That did no good; about the time he tried that, the engine room had to be evacuated because of the smoke, and the engines had to be shut down lest they explode (Hicks, p. 115).

The high speed posed another problem: It meant that passengers -- especially those near the stern, where most of them had been trapped by the fire -- could not jump from the ship, because they would be sucked into the propellers (Hicks, p. 113). And by the time Warms ordered the engines stopped, it was almost impossible -- the ventilation system sucked smoke, not clean air, into the engine room, making it almost impossible to manage the controls (Gallager, pp. 112-113). There is conflict about what happened on the bridge in the next ten minutes (one officer claimed to have sluged Warms to get him to do what needed to be done), but at about 3:20, the ship let down her anchor and stopped. Then came the order to abandon ship; Burton, p. 41. Warms still hadn't ordered a distress call sent. The radio operators tried to keep the airwaves clear, but the window for sending a distress signal was only three minutes long -- and it passed before Warms did anything (Burton, pp. 42-43). George White Rogers, the senior radioman, finally started to call for help on his own initiative (Paine, p. 346). The ship was already in bad enough shape that he had to use the emergency backup transmitter power (Hendrickson, p. 293). As it turned out, he signalled just in time, because all power went out a few minutes later.

The actual distress call (as opposed to a signal to stand by) went out at 3:23 a.m. (Burton, p. 45), and already the power was so low, or the operators so overheated, or the fire producing enough static, or something, that the ships listening could not entirely comprehend it. They receiver had already permanently failed by then; Rogers -- who had done an emergency fix to keep the transmitter working -- was sending without being able to hear any responses (Gallagher, p. 133). The last signal went out at 3:24.

The heat of the fire made things even worse. Even for those far from the fire, the deck was uncomfortably hot, because it was planking over steel, and the steel conducted heat. And, as the planking heated, the chemicals applied to it began to change state, making the deck sticky and releasing noxious fumes (Gallagher, p. 101).

The crew, meanwhile, was abandoning ship without the passengers; the first boats to go off had almost no passengers aboard -- Paine, p. 346, reports that only six of the first 98 people to reach land were passengers! The #1 lifeboat, even though it carried the chief engineer (the senior person aboard other than Warms) was only half full, and of those 31 people, all but three were crew members (Burton, p. 81). Not every boat was lowered (some caught fire, some were hard to reach because of the fire, and it appears that one had been so heavily whitewashed that the tackle no longer worked; Hicks, p. 115), but the six that were lowered had a capacity of 408 people -- but they carried only 85, and most of those 85 were crew! (Burton, p. 82). One of the passengers bitterly remarked, "Officers and stewards were simply splendid, but ordinary seamen went over the side at the first opportunity" (Gallager, p. 157).

The worst of it is, given the heavy storm, most of the boats could not be maneuvered because there were too few aboard to row or handle them in the bad weather! (Hicks, p. 120). Had the ship been far from help, or had the SOS not been sent, those crew members who abandoned ship hastily would have died as a result of their lack of discipline. Indeed, some of the lifeboats from the rescue ships got in trouble due to the extreme conditions (Hicks, p. 148, who notes on p. 150 that one boat from The City of Savannah could not even return to her ship and had to be rescued herself). Indeed, the storm was so bad that at 2:30 the following afternoon (i.e. about eleven hours after the distress call went out), the Coast Guard was forced to call off search-and-rescue operations (Hicks, p. 156).

It should have been possible to save everyone except the few who were direct victims of the fire; the lifeboats alone could have carried 816 (Gallager, p. 159), which is hundreds more than there were people aboard, and there were also life preservers and other equipment; counting them all, Gallager, p. 160, reports that there was life-saving equipment for 1900, which was more than three times the number of people aboard. The problem was that it was misused, or not used at all. At least some people died, for instance, because the life jackets (of hard cork) knocked them unconscious as they went into the water, causing them to drown (Hicks, p. 150).

Part of the problem was inexperience. Gallagher, p. 161, reports that ordinary seamen were paid $35 per month by the Ward Line, and able seamen $50 per month; even executive officer Warms made only $180 per month, so it didn't get good crews. Worse, because no one particularly wanted to work for them, they often recruited crew at the very last moment, so the crews were not very good and not very experienced (Hicks, pp. 24-33).

Although the crew had roused some passengers when the fire broke out, those who fled to the stern never received word to abandon ship, and were cut off from the lifeboats; they had little choice but to go into the sea, and it was non-line officers such as the purser and the cruise director who decided when the passengers should go over the side (Hicks, p. 131). Burton, p. 84, thinks that ships in the area were slow to respond (in particular, the Coast Guard was hampered because a transmitter was temporarily down; Burton, p. 86), but several eventually turned up and, once they arrived, did very good work, taking off hundreds of survivors (Paine, p. 346). Still, 133 of 435 people aboard died (Ritchie, p. 136). To add to the controversy, 29 percent of the passengers died (86 of 318), but only 18 percent of the crew (49 of 231; Burton, p. 5). I would guess that some of the problems were caused by the gale force wind and poor visibility. Some people died simply because the spray was filling their lungs (Burton, p. 95). Others suffered severely from hypothermia (Burton, p. 101); the water in the area is reported to have been about 70 degrees Fahrenheit -- chilly enough to cause hypothermia if one spent enough time in the water.
George Alagna, being a radical, was actually taken into custody for a time (Hicks, p. 183, although ordered the entire crew to stay in New York for a year (Hicks, p. 171). Second radio operator Hoover involved in one of them (Hicks, p. 175). A grand jury issued subpoenas, and a judge (Hicks, p. 172), and there were four investigations going within a week (Hick, p. 177), with J. Edgar Edgar's brother) began the Steamboat Inspection Service inquiry just two days after the disaster.

Naturally there were hearings after the event -- the commission headed by Dickerson Hoover (J. Edgar's brother) began the Steamboat Inspection Service inquiry just two days after the disaster (Hicks, p. 136), although not as quickly fatal as, say, the waters when the Titanic sank. Many small boats that would otherwise have been able to come out and perform a rescue simply could not put to sea in the storm (Gallagher, p. 177). It is perhaps ironic to note that one of the rescue ships, the Monarch of Bermuda, would itself be destroyed by fire thirteen years later (Gallagher, p. 190).

Acting Captain Warms and a handful of his officers were the last survivors off the ship. By then, they were so out of it that, when it came time to cut the ship's anchor cable, they insisted on doing it with a hacksaw blade (which took three hours) rather than letting the tow ship use a real cable cutter (Gallagher, pp. 212-213). It was a minor point, but indicative of the sort of stupidity that doomed the ship. This prevented some people from being rescued -- when the Coast Guard ship Tampa came on the scene, it didn't engage in rescue operations, because it was hanging around waiting for Warms and no one told the Tampa's captain that there were still people in the water! (Hicks, p. 150).

Gallagher, pp. 213-221, reports that this delay would destroy and chance of salvaging the ship -- she couldn't be towed while she was anchored, obviously, and by the time they cut the cable, the storm had reached such intensity that the attempt to tow her failed (the Coast Guard's Tampa could hardly pull her against the storm; shortly after 6:00 p.m., the 12 inch tow line snapped) and she drifted away, still burning (Burton, pp. 132-133; Hicks, p. 157).

Despite a fire so severe that parts of the ship's structure glowed red (Burton, p. 119) and made the whole ship appear to be afire (Burton, p. 115), the Morro Castle did not sink. Still burning, the Morro Castle grounded off Asbury Park (Burton, pp. 133-134), so close to the convention center that people in the building actually feared it might hit them (Hicks, pp. 161-162). Smoke came from the wreck for days, and small bursts of flame as the fire found new things to burn (Hicks, p. 180). Huge crowds gathered to watch the burning ship -- one estimate says 150,000 (Burton, p. 143), another claims that a quarter million visited the site -- now claimed by some as a murder scene -- in less than a week (Hicks, p. 180). Some tried to help the passengers, but many were gawkers and had to be controlled (Burton, p. 137).

The city actually made overtures to buy the wreck and use it as a tourist attraction (Hicks, p. 187), but nothing came of that.

It proved hard to get aboard the ship to investigate -- the only way to reach the deck was by ropes that had been used to let passengers off the stern; arrangements had to be made to rig a breeches buoy to carry people up and down (Hicks pp. 162-163). Just as well; the ship was still burning and very dangerous.

Although she had brought a lot of business to Asbury Park at first, eventually they wanted to be rid of her. She shifted at times, and people kept getting into trouble while visiting the wreck (Hicks, pp. 210-211). Even once the fires burned out, the ship stank -- those hides were now both untanned and burnt, plus there was all the smoke, as well as the occasional dead body (Burton, p. 165; Hicks, p. 163). The ship was finally towed away to be scrapped on March 14, 1935. The ship that had cost millions to build was sold as scrap for $33,605 (Gallagher, p. 236). In a non-trivial irony, the ship caught fire again while they were cutting her apart (Burton, p. 166).

Insurance eventually paid out more than four million dollars -- more than the estimated value of the ship. The company paid much of this to survivors and heirs, who received an average of $894 (Burton, p. 167); the total amount paid out was $890,000, which was not quite three-fourths the amount claimed (Gallagher, p. 236), which strikes me as pretty good by the standard of the time. The New York Post, however, claimed the company had made a $263,000 profit on the disaster, even after the expenses were paid (Hicks, p. 209).

The Ward Line knew it was in trouble, and reacted swiftly -- even before the Tampa reached the shore with Warms and the other officers, they managed to get a lawyer on board via one of the pilot boats, and he gave the officers instructions: Don't talk to reporters or government investigators, call it an Act of God. They were even told to stonewall the U. S. Attorney! (Hicks, pp. 166-167). But the second radio operator, George Alagna, was an activist, and he knew he was going to be out of a job, and he wouldn't put up with it (Hicks, p. 167). Indeed, the Line's attempts to browbeat him just made him more stubborn; he convinced others that they should not follow the company's official position (Hicks, p. 173). The company's mistreatment of its sailors was coming home to roost.

Naturally there were hearings after the event -- the commission headed by Dickerson Hoover (J. Edgar's brother) began the Steamboat Inspection Service inquiry just two days after the disaster (Hicks, p. 172), and there were four investigations going within a week (Hick, p. 177), with J. Edgar Hoover involved in one of them (Hicks, p. 175). A grand jury issued subpoenas, and a judge ordered the entire crew to stay in New York for a year (Hicks, p. 171). Second radio operator George Alagna, being a radical, was actually taken into custody for a time (Hicks, p. 183, although... it seems to have been regarded as protective custody so that the company lawyers -- who were doing their best to control the story -- couldn't get to him). When Acting Captain Warms was called to testify, it was the first federal hearing ever broadcast on radio (Burton, p. 147). He didn't come out very well, and other witnesses -- notably Alagna -- clearly described his near-stupor. Indeed, Alagna called Warms a murderer (Hicks, p. 182).

(Later, Warms would give much better performances as a witness, helped by Ward Line lawyers; Hicks, p. 207. These were in the Coast Guard hearings, with the company apparently trying to pin everything on George Alagna. But Alagna was never asked to testify, and the hearings produced no real results; Hicks, p. 208. Alagna grew so frustrated, and found it so hard to get a job afterward, that he attempted suicide; Hicks, p. 213)

Five officers had their licences temporarily suspended (Burton, p. 161).

The story was eventually driven from the headlines by stories of an arrest in the Lindbergh kidnapping case (Hicks, p. 202).

Warms eventually faced charges of negligence, as did Chief Engineer Abbott and the company (Burton, p. 164). (Abbott had, by all accounts, been completely useless in the emergency, had left the ship early, and even claimed an injury that others could not see, according to Gallagher, p. 129. It sounds as if the stress caused him to develop delusions; certainly he did not do all he could have.) There were several charges against the officers; they largely came down to not properly organizing and preparing the crew for possible disasters (Burton, pp. 164-165). The company, it turned out, allowed a man who barely spoke English to hire its crews; inevitably the crews were not properly vetted (Burton, pp. 167-168).

Warms, who had reverted to his near-stupor in the trial (Hicks, p. 218), was sentenced to two years in prison, Abbott was given a four year term, and the company and one of its officers fined (Burton, p. 170), but a higher court overturned the sentence (Ritchie, p. 136; Burton, p. 170, notes that the famous Justice Learned Hand was one of those who voted to overturn and that the fines against the company were sustained). To give Warms what credit we can, he had at least stayed with the ship rather than abandoning it -- a fact that was actually mentioned in the court documents overturning his conviction (he "stay[ed] on the vessel until the bridge had burned from under him"; Gallagher, p. 235).

Warms was allowed to go back to sea, but a year later, he ran his new ship aground. That, finally, put an end to his sea career (Burton, p. 171), although he spent time in the navy in World War II (Hicks, p. 283).

The only good to come out of the mess was a series of stronger laws for maritime safety (Hendrickson, pp. 293-294), as well as a deeper understanding that things like wood and paint were flammable and their use had to be restricted (Burton, p. 180). The whole Ward Line, which ran the ship, and the umbrella company which owner it, did not dissolve at once, but the first steps in that direction began after the Morro Castle inquiry (Burton, p. 181).

You'll note that a lot of conspiracy theories arose about the tragedy: That the captain was poisoned, that the fire was arson. This strikes me as pretty unlikely; too many things went wrong that couldn't have been planned for. But there were genuinely suspicious signs; Thomas/Witts, p. 13, point out that a newspaper in the Asbury Park region of New Jersey had said that the area needed a shipwreck to attract tourists. Problem is, the editorial involved was fifty years old at the time of the Morro Castle fire; surely the article had been forgotten! And Thomas/Witts don't actually think this was the explanation for the disaster; they blame fears of a communist conspiracy plus arson by the psychopathic radio operator George White Rogers.

Gallagher, p. 18, also declares that "George W. Rogers was a psychopath with a criminal record going back twenty years. According to one of several subsequent psychiatric reports, all of which agreed diagnostically, he was 'a sociopathic personality; a shrewd individual who attempts to manipulate his environment.'" This statement is notably problematic; see the excursus at the end of this entry.

Nonetheless, Rogers did have a criminal past dating back to his teens (Burton, p. 174; Gallagher, pp. 249-250, catalogs the deeds, which included both theft and, as a teenager, assault, probably sexual, on a younger boy), and he had been repeatedly thrown out of school as a teenager, eventually being permanently barred from the California school system (Hicks, p. 220). None of this was discovered because they didn't do background checks back then -- and he was genuinely skilled with radio equipment. It also appears that the Navy discharged him in 1920 for malingering or bad behavior, although there was no explicit record of his misdeeds (Hicks, pp. 220-221). But it proved relatively easy for J. Edgar Hoover's agent on the case to trace multiple instances of theft -- and fire (Hicks, pp. 202-204). He even lied about his birth date (Hicks, p. 219).

After the Morro Castle disaster, Rogers ended up working for the Bayonne police department, which had recently installed two-way radios in its cars -- the first city in the country to do so, which meant of course that they needed radio technicians (Hicks, pp. 222-223). It was an officer named Vincent Doyle who had set up the system; Rogers became his assistant (Hicks, p. 224). Then, in 1938, Doyle suffered a murder attempt (Gallagher, pp. 239-240) -- people made a habit of giving Doyle odd gadgets to fix (Hicks, p. 229), and someone gave him a fish tank heater to upgrade. When he worked on it, it exploded. Strong circumstantial evidence pointed to Rogers, who might have been in line to get Doyle's job (Burton, pp. 172-174; Hicks, p. 237, says that this was the only motive police had for the crime) and who had quarreled with Doyle from the day they met after Doyle caught Rogers in a flamboyant lie (Hicks, pp. 190-191).

After Rogers got out on bail, the police had to start protecting the recuperating Doyle (whose left hand had been wrecked and his left leg crippled), since a series of incidents, each petty in itself, seemed to add up to another attack on him, or an attempt to frame someone else for the Doyle murder (Hicks, pp. 240-241). And, interestingly, one involved anonymous notes, a technique which someone had used to get Rogers the position as senior radio operator on the Morro Castle (during his trial, the prosecution had found the people who had sent those notes on Rogers's behalf; Hicks, p. 246), as well as to get Doyle to play with the gadget that nearly killed him. Rogers even tried to cheat his lawyer of most of the money friends had gathered for a legal defense fund (Hicks, pp. 244-245). Little surprise, perhaps, that said lawyer made only a perfunctory attempt to mount a defense (Hicks, p. 248).

Rogers was convicted and sentenced to prison (Gallagher, p. 251), but paroled to do military work (Burton, p. 175; Hicks, p. 253, says that many, including the president, said he should not be paroled, but New Jersey freed him anyway). In the mid-1940s, he became a foreman at an electronics factory where, after a girl turned down his advances, a water fountain was found to have been laced with a poison (Hicks, pp. 256-259).

Later, Rogers became friends with an elderly rich man, William Hummel, who lent him money for various business schemes that, somehow, never came to anything (Hicks, pp. 259-261); Hummel himself recorded that he lent Rogers $7500 by 1949, and more after that (Hicks, pp. 270-271, 273). When he prepared to move south and leave Rogers behind, Hummel and his spinster daughter ended up as murder victims -- with Rogers supposedly noticing that they were missing days before anyone else did (Hicks, p 264, although based on the account on p. 273, this was based on one man's memory of one word said by Rogers, which isn't anything I would regard as evidence. Still, Rogers seems to have liked to hasten the discovery of his crimes; he had nagged Doyle about the exploding tank heater, and this time, he blabbed about the Hummels, whose bludgeoned bodies were found in their home more than a week after; Hicks, pp. 265-266). The trial took a long time, in no small part because it was hard to find a jury, but this time, Rogers went to prison until he died in 1958 (Burton, pp. 175-176). It took the jury just half a day to convict him of first degree murder; they chose life imprisonment over the death penalty (Hicks, pp. 276-277).

It certainly sounds like the career of a man with no sense of morality. Even during the hearings after the wreck, Rogers told tales about George Alagna, the man who had perhaps saved his life (Hicks, p. 186) -- and did so in a way that seemed to make Rogers look much better than he actually was.

On the other hand, there is no direct evidence that Rogers had anything to do with the Morro Castle fire. It can't even be shown that it was set. Every text except Burton is sure he did it, but their evidence is extraordinarily thin.

The most interesting thing is a statement that allegedly was made by Rogers himself. Rogers is recorded as having told Officer Doyle of how a fire could be set to start after a delay, hinting that he knew what caused the Morro Castle fire (Gallagher, pp. 238-239). Obviously a criminal might wish to boast of his acts -- but then, too, a man who had been in a traumatic fire might wish to talk about how it happened! "If" the fire was set, Rogers is the obvious criminal on the crew, but was it set? Doyle supposedly once asked Rogers "Why did you do it?" and Rogers replied, "The Ward Line stinks and the skipper was lousy" (Hicks, p. 228). But this is the only statement Rogers ever made about it, and it was heard only by Doyle, who had a grudge and who of course was human and might have remembered incorrectly, especially since he only reported it after the murder attempt on him -- long after Rogers made the statement, "if" he made the statement.

It should be noted that the official conclusion was that the cause of the fire was not, and could not be, known (Hicks, p. 285. Hicks, p. 286, seems convinced Rogers did it but admits that "There's no guarantee he could have been convicted." He also seems to think that Rogers arranged the death of Captain Wilmott, noting on p. 288 that Rogers used poison on other occasions but admitting that he would have had a hard time getting access to Wilmott's meal.) Burton, p. 177, says unequivocally (and clearly correctly) "Did [Rogers] start the fire? The only verdict has to be the Scotch verdict, "Not proven."

Robert Smith, the cruise director on the final trip, had a spooky story of his own: Captain Wilmott, what had spent the last 26 years of his life on the Ward Line, supposedly was once asked what he would do if he ever had to leave the Morro Castle. He replied, "In that case, I'll take her with me" (Burton, p. 11). He can't have planned it, but that's how it turned out. EXCURSUS: "Psychopathic personality disorder." Gallagher calls George W. Rogers a psychopath, and Hicks, p. 249, says that Charles E. Clark, of the New Jersey State Hospital for the Criminally Insane, examined Rogers after his conviction in the Doyle case and declared that he had a psychopathic personality.

Unfortunately for this diagnosis, prior to the 1970s, when the American Psychiatric Association published the third edition of its Diagnostic and Statistical Manual, there was no such thing as a psychiatric diagnosis. I'm serious. Prior to that, psychiatric terms had no definitions, so any psychiatrist could use any designation he liked. So Clark's diagnosis means nothing. Furthermore, neither "psychopathy" nor "sociopathy" is a recognized psychiatric diagnosis -- the only diagnosis in the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual is antisocial personality disorder. So Clark's diagnosis, and Gallagher's citation of it, is meaningless (not necessarily wrong, but meaningless). And Clark's evaluation was very likely done according to psychodynamic principles. And Robert Hare, who is the best-known psychopathy researcher in the world and who tried for decades to get psychopathy into the DSM, declares, "Although many books and hundreds of articles on the psychodynamics of psychopathy have been written over the past fifty years, in my opinion they have not greatly advanced our understanding for the disorder. To a large extent, this is because most psychodynamic accounts of psychopathy have an armchair, often circular, quality about them" (Hare, p. xii).

This must be stressed. Clark's evaluation has no evidentiary value, because he gave a diagnosis which had no meaning and was likely conducted according to principles which cannot produce meaning. That being said, it must be conceded that Rogers does appear to fit the diagnosis of antisocial personality disorder. According to the current (fifth edition) of the Diagnostic and Statistical Manual, to be diagnosed with Antisocial Personality Disorder, one must be at least eighteen years old (Rogers was), one must have shown signs of the problem by age fifteen (which Rogers had, as evidenced by his history of school expulsions), the behaviors must not be the result of schizophrenia or bipolar illness (Rogers showed no signs of either), and one must meet at least three criteria out of seven. It appears to me that Rogers met these:

(1) failure to conform to social norms with respect to lawful behaviors as indicated by repeatedly performing acts that are ground for arrest. Although not every instance is proved, there are repeated hints of robbery, at least the one accusation of homosexual rape, two different attempts at murder, multiple intimidation campaigns, and hints of several arsons. Some of these may not be valid. But the list is long enough that it seems nearly sure that Rogers meets this criterion.

(2) deceitfulness, as indicated by repeated lying, use of aliases, or conning others for personal profit or pleasure. Demonstrated, at minimum, by his use of anonymous letters.

(5) reckless disregard for safety of self or others. Demonstrated, at minimum, by his attempt on the life of Doyle.

(6) consistent irresponsibility, as indicated by repeated failure to sustain consistent work behavior or honor financial obligations. As an example, there is his cheating of his lawyer.

(7) lack of remorse, as indicated by being indifferent to or rationalizing having hurt, mistreated, or stolen from another. He displayed this constantly. Hence it seems reasonable to conclude that Rogers had antisocial personality disorder. And we note that criterion (5) includes reckless disregard for one's own safety. A person with ASPD is just the sort to start a fire on a ship that he was himself aboard. Which is not, however, proof that he did it. Or even evidence that he did it.

We know that Rogers was guilty of theft, and probably of arson as well. Formally, a person who has antisocial personality disorder cannot be diagnosed with either kleptomania or pyromania. Rogers clearly does not fit the diagnosis of kleptomania anyway. He comes closer to pyromania -- clearly he was fascinated with fire-starting devices, and there are signs that he meets some of the other criteria -- but the evidence still available to us does not allow a clear diagnosis on this point. - RBW

Bibliography

- Robert D. Hare,Without Conscience: The Disturbing World of the Psychopaths Among Us, Guilford Press, 1993
Moses Andrew Jackson

DESCRIPTION: "I's a-weary of my troubles and I'se tired of my woes... I tried my best to please you, but it really seems no use." "Good-by, you good-for-nothing Andy, Good-bye, you're gonna lose your Mandy." The girl consults a fortune-teller who tells her to get ou

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1953 (collected from Marion Taylor Page by Boswell)

KEYWORDS: separation humorous

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Wolfe/Boswell-FolkSongsOfMiddleTennessee 60, pp. 99-100, "Moses Andrew Jackson" (1 text, 1 tune)

File: BoWo060

Moses Donohoe

DESCRIPTION: "The news from Rome ... our Pope he was in danger." April 29, 1869 Irish volunteers leave Dublin on the Avatuskey. They are rammed in a gale on May 10 and sink, deserted by the crew. Moses Donohue of Killincooley is among those drowned.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1948 (Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast)

KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship wreck soldier war

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, pp. 123-124, "Moses Donohoe" (1 text)
Roud #20537

NOTES [231 words]: Did some ship, possibly named Avatuskey -- or some more Polish name -- sail on April 29, 1869 to sink following a collision on May 10, 1869? Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast says "I have not been able to check up the correctness of the name 'Avatuskey,' nor have I been able to verify the statement that Irish volunteers went to the defence of the Papal States in 1869." Rome was all that was left of the Papal States in 1869 and it fell to Italy in "The Battle of Porta Pia" on September 20, 1870. Newspapers in Galway and London for the dates may reveal the facts. - BS

We might note that the Papal States were annexed rather than directly conquered by Italy; Porta Pia was more demonstration than battle. Of course, if the Papacy had had an Irish regiment at hand, who knows what it might have tried?

Barbara Lee, of Crosby, Liverpool, writes with a likely explanation:
"[The ship] could perhaps have been the General Abatucci, a packet steamer sailing between Marseilles and Civitavecchia, whose sinking was reported in the Times of London on 13th May 1869. THE TIMES - 13 May 1869:
"Intelligence has been received of the loss of the steam packet General Abbatucci. A French Intendant General, the Pontifical Consul at Marseilles, 16 French soldiers and 15 Papal recruits, on their way to Civitavecchia, have perished...

"Moses was my great grandfather's first cousin." - RBW
Moses of the Mail

DESCRIPTION: "It was a dark and stormy night, The snow was falling fast, I stood on Thorpbridge Junction Where the reckless Moses passed." Although there is no description of a wreck, the song ends with the dying words of Moses

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1954 (MacColl-ShuttleAndCage-IndustrialFolkBallads)

KEYWORDS: train death storm

FOUND IN: Britain(England(West))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
MacColl-ShuttleAndCage-IndustrialFolkBallads, pp. 8-9, "Moses of the Mail" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [61 words]: Although the text in MacColl-ShuttleAndCage-IndustrialFolkBallads is described as composite, it doesn't make much sense: It is never made clear if there was a serious accident, or if engineer Moses retired after a minor injury, or if the whole thing is just a tall tale. The song is said to refer to an actual engineer, Henry "Moses" Poyser, who worked in the 1880s. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.1
File: MacCS08

Moses Paul

DESCRIPTION: "My kindred Indians, pray attend and hear... This day I warn you of that cursed sin That poor despised Indians wallow in." The preacher warns Indians against drink, which led Moses Paul to murder; he bids them turn to Christ

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Burt-AmericanMurderBallads)

KEYWORDS: drink homicide Indians(Am.) religious

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1772 - Execution of Moses Paul, an Indian, for the murder of Moses Cook.

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 152-153, "(Moses Paul)" (1 excerpted text)

NOTES [50 words]: Supposed to be based on the words of one Reverend Samson Occom, himself an Indian, who gave the funeral sermon for Moses Paul. Occom correctly noted the poverty in which the Indians lived, and noted the effects of drink -- but rather ruined the effect, I would say, by blaming these faults on Sin. - RBW

File: Burt152

Moses Ritoora-li-ay

DESCRIPTION: A policeman sees a man peddling in the street and hauls him in. A trial ensues in which the court tries to find out if Moses Ri-too-ral-i-ay is Irish. He turns out to be a Jew related to the judge. Moses is released, and the unhappy policeman fired

AUTHOR: attributed to Brian O'Higgins (1882-1966) but see NOTES)

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (recording, Margaret Barry)

KEYWORDS: police Jew humorous trial punishment

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
DT, MOSESRIT*
Roud #5197

RECORDINGS:
Margaret Barry, "Moses Ritoora-li-ay" (on IRMBarry-Fairs)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Vilikens and his Dinah (William and Dinah) [Laws M31A/B]" (tune & meter) and references there

cf. "The Sergeant's Lamentation" (theme)

NOTES [346 words]: In the period around the Easter Rising, it was a crime in Ireland to preach rebellion. Apparently many revolutionaries got around this by preaching in Irish (though this raised the possibility that the listeners couldn't understand them!). The police, who were often English and almost always anglophone, were told to learn Irish to try to figure out what was going on. This didn't work out all that well. (Gee, where have we heard that story before? The Habsburg Empire? Iraq?) The amused Irish created songs like this to celebrate the problem.

Brian O'Higgins (1882-1966) wrote a song about this topic, according to Frank Harte. But Harte believes the song on this topic is "The Limb of the Law," found in Songs of Dublin, second edition, Ossian, 1993, pp. 36-37. Could he have written two such songs?

Kee, p. 28, cites a Sinn Fein speech from 1918 claiming that "there were by then five hundred people in Ireland imprisoned under the Defence of the Realm Regulations on charges ranging from singing a song written seventy years before to presenting their names in Irish when accosted by a policeman." Unfortunately, he does not cite a precise source.

Then there is the mention, in the Clancy version, of "Briscoe." The DT notes mention Briscoe as Mayor of London. Which is true, but.... Boylan, p. 34, gives a capsule biography of Robert Briscoe (1894-1969) -- born in Dublin, but the son of an Orthodox Jew of Lithuanian ancestry. He left Ireland to avoid World War I, but returned in 1916 to support Irish independence. A hard-liner, he opposed the Free State and the Treaty with Britain after the war, and was a founder of Fianna Fáil. He was chosen Lord Mayor of Dublin in 1956 and 1960. Thus Briscoe cannot have been mentioned in the original version, which doesn't much resemble the Clancy version. The bottom line on the origin appears to be that O'Higgins wrote the original of this song, but it drifted somewhat, then was modified (deliberately? perhaps by the Clancys?) to mention Briscoe. This while O'Higgins was still alive. One wonders what he thought. - RBW

Bibliography

- Kee III: Robert Kee, Ourselves Alone, being volume III of The Green Flag (covering the brief but intense period from 1916 to the establishment of constitutional government in the 1920s), Penguin, 1972

Last updated in version 5.2

Moss o Burreldale, The

DESCRIPTION: Description of a rowdy gathering of Travellers at the market of Burreldale. A piper's bag bursts, and he's launched into the air; another man plans to fight but his Annie knocks him over, etc. (Some versions describe the participants and their trades)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (collected from Jimmy McBeath)

LONG DESCRIPTION: Description of a rowdy gathering of Travellers at the market of Burreldale. A piper's bag bursts, and he's launched into the air; another man plans to fight but his Annie knocks him over then challenges him to fight some more; a showoff horseman is thrown (I think). Another man challenges a Catholic to fight. Eventually all leave, but vow they will always remember the fracas. (Some versions describe the participants and their trades)

KEYWORDS: bragging fight commerce drink music party moniker worker Gypsy migrant

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

- Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 351, "The Moss o' Burreldale" (1 text, 1 tune)
- MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland 127, "The Moss o' Burreldale" (2 texts, 2 tunes)

Roud #1876

File: K351

Moss of Balloch Fair

DESCRIPTION: The singer meets Mary Ann at the fair. He takes her to see the show and buys candy. He takes her home that night; "the auld folks" consent. The next day they marry at the fair. In twelve months they have twins and plan to open a baby show at the fair.

AUTHOR: unknown
Mossie and His Mare

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, Mossie was a cunning man, A little mare did buy; For winking and for jinking There was few could come her nigh." After telling how Mossie captures her, various folks are warned against bad behavior; they will be punished "as Mossie catch'd his mare."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1813 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 22(179))

KEYWORDS: horse humorous warning Jacobites

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
- Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 39-42, "Mossie and His Mare" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Lyle/McAlpine/McLucas-SongRepertoireOfAmeliaAndJaneHarris, p. 143, "Mosey, Mare" (1 text)
- Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast 171, p. 1, "Mossie and His Meer" (1 fragment)
- Greig/Duncan3 677, "Mossie and His Meer" (2 fragments, 3 tunes)
- Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #234, p. 152, "(Moss was a little man, and a little mare did buy)"

Roud #6104

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Harding B 22(179), "Moss and his Mare" ("Moss was a cunning man a little mare did buy"). J. Evans (London), 1780-1812

NOTES [87 words]: The keyword "Jacobite" may be strange for this song, but Ford's text, after warning "gilpy lasses," "crafty ale wives," "lousy tailors," and "pettyfoggers," turns its attention to "A' ye Whigs about the land, Wha deny our lawful' King." - RBW

There is no reference to Jacobite politics in broadside Bodleian Harding B 22(179), the earliest text I have seen. Ford's second notion, "that [it] was rejuvenated in the first half of the last century," may explain "the Jacobitish dirl that occurs in the concluding stanza." - BS

Last updated in version 4.2

File: FVS39

---

Most Tragical Account of Woman's Murdering a Peddler, And Then Burning to Death Her Own Child, A

DESCRIPTION: "People and Friends of every name, Attend to what I write." A peddlar asks lodging with a farmer. The hosts search his pack; the wife kills him so they can sell his effects. Her daughter talks about her new clothes; the mother burns the child

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales)

KEYWORDS: homicide husband wife children begging clothes

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Thompson-BodyBootsAndBritches-NewYorkStateFolktales, pp. 433-435, "A Most Tragical Account of Woman's Murdering a Peddler, And Then Burning to Death Her Own Child" (1 text)
- Roud #V46538

NOTES [6 words]: We need a keyword "over-wrought." - RBW
Moth and the Flame, The

DESCRIPTION: Two old sweethearts meet. He says he still loves her; she says she is to be married to another. He tells the fable of the Moth and the Flame to reveal her lover is already married. At the wedding, the fiance kills his wife. The girl turns to her old love

AUTHOR: Words: George Taggart/Music: Max S. Witt

EARLIEST DATE: 1899 (sheet music by Jos. W. Stern & Co.)

KEYWORDS: love separation homicide wedding adultery

FOUND IN: US(50)

REFERENCES (4 citations):

Randolph 818, "The Moth and the Flame" (1 text)
Spaeth-ReadEmAndWeep, pp. 156-158, "The Moth and the Flame" (1 text, 1 tune)
Geller-FamousSongsAndTheirStories, pp. 155-160, "The Moth and the Flame" (1 text, 1 tune)

ADDITIONAL: Robert A. Fremont, editor, _Favorite Songs of the Nineties_, Dover Publications, 1973, pp. 199-202, "The Moth and the Flame" (1 text, 1 tune, the 1899 sheet music)

Roud #7433

NOTES [34 words]: Should be an opera. - PJS
It comes close. It's based loosely on an 1898 play by Clyde Fitch with the same title. Taggart wrote the words after seeing the play, then sought someone to write the music. - RBW

Mother Bunch

DESCRIPTION: Bessie's daughter would marry Andrew Carr. Mother objects. Maggie Spreul married Roger because she was pregnant; Andrew has had daughter's maidenhead. Daughter says, mother had done the same when she was young. Mother must agree and the couple marry.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1826 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1)

KEYWORDS: poverty courting marriage sex pregnancy dialog mother

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Bord))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume1 28, "Mother Bunch" (1 text)

Roud #3872

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Sprightly Young Damsel" (theme: daughter, wanting to marry, reminds mother of her own indiscretions)

cf. "Between the Meadow and the Moss" (theme: daughter, wanting sex, reminds mother of her own indiscretions)

ALTERNATE TITLES:

Andrew Carr

NOTES [179 words]: Mother Bunch objects to the marriage only because "scarce there's ane of the twa has a sark to put on your back." Unspoken is the threat that daughter may already be pregnant but does not yet show it, as Maggie Spreul had. Besides, says daughter, "when ye were young and braw Ye likit the lads yourslel As weel as ony ane o us aw."

The stories of Mother Bunch of Bonny Venture are reprinted by George Laurence Gomme from "the copy in the Pepsyan Library at Cambridge, dated 1685," "... a story of an old woman who lived in the west county, who took delight in studying how she might know what a sweetheart she might have, for at that time she thought she had tarried very long; she being full twenty years of age .... finding some [Grandmother strategies] to be true she took upon her to teach other maidens ...."

The stories are always of a maiden meeting Mother Bunch and being instructed how to find a man (see George Laurence Gomme, editor, _Mother Bunch's Closet Newly Broke Open, and the History of Mother Bunch of the West_ (London, 1885) ("Digitized by Microsoft")). - BS
Mother Carey's

DESCRIPTION: Capstan shanty. "The brave west wind it filled our top-s'ls and bore us out-ward bound... for Frisco Town.... Sheet it home- that big main top-s'l, sheet it home- boys, good and true, For we're bound to Mother Carey's, where she feeds her chicks at sea."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas)

LONG DESCRIPTION: Capstan shanty. "The brave west wind it filled our top-s'ls and bore us out-ward bound, out-ward bound across the Western, out-ward bound for Frisco Town. Chorus: Sheet it home- that big main top-s'l, sheet it home- boys, good and true, For we're bound to Mother Carey's, where she feeds her chicks at sea."

KEYWORDS: shanty ship travel return

FOUND IN: Britain

REFERENCES (1 citation): Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas, p. 192, "Mother Carey's" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [1119 words]: Hugill-ShantiesFromTheSevenSeas: "Mother Carey's chickens' was a sailor name for stormy petrels, seabirds found flying close to the crests of the great seas of the high latitudes." - SL

The origin and use of this name is the subject of some dispute. Numerous sources agree that Mother Carey's chickens are stormy petrels. Kemp, p. 561, refers the name particularly to Procellaria pelagica On the other hand, Hendrickson, p. 58, notes that there are several species of stormy petrels, and identifies Mother Carey's chickens in particular with Hydrobates pelagicus (the European Storm Petrel; hydrobatidae is the family name for the petrels, most of which belong to other genuses). Ditto Young, p. 46, entry "Carey's Chickens," which refers it to "one of two species of small petrels: the storm petrel [Procellaria pelagicala] and Leach's storm petrel [Oceanodroma leucorhoa]."

Neither of the latter pair give a source for the name. It appears to go back at least to 1834, however, when author Harriet Martineau saw them on an Atlantic voyage (Fox, p. 12). I suspect that its use in Newfoundland English makes it a good deal older than that; StoryKirwinWiddowson, p. 85, give a vague citation that perhaps goes back to 1767, and mention a "North Carey Island" apparently so named because careys (a short name for petrels) were common there.

Kemp p. 561, reports that the name "Petrel" is derived from Italian Petrello, a diminutive for Peter; supposedly petrels are "St. Peter's birds, because Peter followed Jesus's command to walk on water" (Binney, p. 158).

These birds, according to folklore, foretold approaching storms (Fox, p. 213). This is not as crazy as it sounds; birds, for obvious reasons, are acutely aware of atmospheric conditions, such as barometric pressure, and simple observation shows that they know when storms are coming -- anyone with a birdfeeder can see them stoking up before a storm hits. Presumably the petrels do the same at sea.

Benet, in the article on mothers, adds that Mother Carey's goose is "the great black petrel or fulmar of the pacific." (Interestingly, Brewer/Evans, p. 759, article on "Mother Carey's Chickens," has these definitions almost verbatim. I don't know who stole from whom, though.)

Benet and Brewer/Evans agree that the phrase "Mother Carey is plucking her goose" means that it is snowing.

Partridge dates the use of Mother Carey's Chickens as a name for snowflakes to 1861, citing Hotten's slang dictionary. This usage is also supported by Simpson/Roud. Partridge also cites a usage, "faring alike and paying the same, ca. 1820-1850," and lastly notes that Bowen's Sea Slang applies the phrase to "a small gun."

Opie/Tatem, p. 1878, quote A. MacGregor, Brahan Seer, p. 31, "Superstitions of Highlanders": "Sailors... greatly dread the storm petrel, or Mother Carey's Chickens, as they flutter at night around their masts and yards. The birds are regarded as objects of superstitions fear, believing that they are possessed of supernatural agency in creating danger for the... mariner."

But who is Mother Carey? Walker states that the name is an "English sailor's version of Mater Cara, 'Beloved Mother' [or 'Dear Mother'], the Latin Sea-goddess." She notes that the French call the petrels the "Birds of Our Lady." Similarly, Benet notes that the French call them "oiseaux de Notre Dame" or "aves Sanctae Mariae."

Walker's equivalence, although quoted also by Kemp, appears to be wrong, I checked four classical dictionaries, and not one mentions "Mater Cara" as a Latin goddess. There is a [Mater] Matuta," identified in Zimmerman as a "goddess of sea travel," or perhaps of harbors, but Lucretius (De Rerum Natura, B. 656) credits Matuta with bringing the dawn; she is also associated with childbirth. In any case, it's obviously a different name.
Of course, Mater Cara as a name for the Virgin Mary -- frequently addressed as the Mother of God in Catholic tradition, and often invoked as an intercessor -- is quite common, and Binney, p. 158, declares that petrels "are also called 'Mother Carey's Chickens,,' supposedly from the words 'Mater cara,' or 'Dear mother,' uttered by sailors when storms strike." But would nineteenth century English sailors be addressing Mary for help? (Indeed, if we're trying Latin for a goddess of sailors, how about "Mater Carina," which can mean "Mother of hulls/keels," I don't believe it, though.)

The REAL problem with the Mother Carey=Mater Cara equivalence is noted by Simpson/Roud: It has no support. We nowhere find references to Mother Carey without her birds. If we're looking for an equivalent of Mother Carey that might be known to sailors, we might also mention "Matrika," which is the Hindu name for a "Divine Mother"; there were said to be seven of them (Knappert, pp. 168-169). As a Hindu religious figure, the "Matrika" might well be treated as something of an alien power. There is no link to birds, however, so this too is pretty far-fetched. Simpson/Roud speculate that Mother Carey is the Old Woman of the Storms -- the hag who brings foul weather (sometimes illustrated as stirring the clouds or the sea with a very long finger; George MacDonald in The Princess and Curdie, Chapter V, calls her "Old Mother Wotherwop," but I don't know if this name is traditional or out of his head). The link strikes me as quite reasonable but beyond proof.

There is one other interesting note about that, though: It sounds as if Morgan le Fay, of King Arthur fame, also played a role as the Old Woman of the Storms -- and in this role may be connected with the Celtic goddesses Matrona and Modron (GawainStone, pp. 138-139) -- which is reminiscent of Mater. So we can build a nice mythological circle; we just can't tie it to Mother Carey or chickens. The "chickens" phrase is certainly famous, however. Kate Douglas Wiggin (1856-1923), best known for writing Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm, also wrote a book called Mother Carey's Chickens, which was made into a movie in 1938. As best I can tell from reading excerpts, though, it's just a book about chickens.

H. D. Traill in 1910 published a mock-ballad with the words "I'm writing a ballad, be still if you can, Little brother."

(O Mother Carey, Mother! What chickens are these between sea and heaven?)

(Friedman, p. 323)

Rogers/Rogers, p. 93, claim that J. R. R. Tolkien, somewhere in his works, explained Mother Carey, but give no explanation for why they say so. My guess is that they are thinking of Elwing's transformation into a bird at the end of the first age, and her coming to Earendil bearing the silmaril. But that is only a guess. In any case, Tolkien was offering at most a retrospective explanation for an existing phrase. - RBW

Bibliography

- Opie/Tatem: Iona Opie and Moira Tatem, editors, A Dictionary of Superstitions, 1989 (I use the 1999 Barnes & Noble edition)
- Partridge: Eric Partridge, A Dictionary of Slang and Unconventional English (combined fifth edition with dictionary and supplement), Macmillan, 1961
Mother Dear, Goodbye

DESCRIPTION: "I'll not be long with you, mother, I soon must say goodbye, But, mother, we shall meet again, In God's bright home on high." The singer rejoices that she(?) will join sister in heaven, and taste the joys there; she promises to pray for mother

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (Thomas)
KEYWORDS: death mother children
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Thomas-BalladMakingInMountainsOfKentucky, pp. 177, (no title) (1 text)
NOTES [40 words]: Thomas reports this to have been composed by Anna Messer on her deathbed, and that it was still being sung in 1936, 63 years after Messer's reported death. It's insipid enough to come from a dying girl -- but much too cutesy, I think. - RBW

Mother Malone

DESCRIPTION: The singer ridicules men out courting who are afraid to go into the house. He swaggered in, kissed Mother Malone, hugged the old man, gave one brother a dollar and shook the other's hand; "then I'd walk out with me girl Mary Ann." Now they are married

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1938 (see notes)
KEYWORDS: courting marriage humorous nonballad brother father mother
FOUND IN:
Roud #24278
RECORDINGS:
The McNulty Family, "Mother Malone" (on IRMcNulty-Night1)
NOTES [46 words]: According to Ethnic Music on Records: a Discography of Ethnic Recordings Produced in the United States, 1893 to 1942 by Richard K Spottswood (Urbana, c1990), Vol. 5, p. 2819, The McNulty Family, "Mother Malone" on 78 Decca 12195 is apparently another recording of this song. - BS

Mother Shipton's Prophecy

DESCRIPTION: "Carriages without horses shall go, And accidents fill the world with woe, Men in the air shall be seen In blue and black and white and green.... Under the water men shall walk... The world to an end shall come In eighteen hundred eighty-one."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin), but see the NOTES
KEYWORDS: prophecy technology nonballad
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, p. 77, "Mother Shipman's Prophecy" (1 text)
Roud #9077
NOTES [528 words]: Although the text in Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin (which has no tune -- an indication that it was never a traditional song) refers to "Mother Shipman," this is unquestionably a reference to the "prophetess" known as "Mother Shipton."

The quantity of Mother Shipman material on the Internet surprised me (at least until I remembered that there is still popular demand for, e.g., astrology columns). The typical story is that she was born Ursula Southill in about 1488, and lived until the reign of Elizabeth I. She was supposed to have lived near Knaresborough in Yorkshire. A cave where she took refuge is still pointed out; Alexander, pp. 198-199, notes that it was considered a dangerous place because high amounts of calcite in the runoff could enclose unmoving objects in stone very quickly.

But as Simpson/Roud note on p. 248, most of this information comes from a chapbook of her prophecies from 1641, nearly a century after her death; there is no reason to consider it reliable. If there are any valid references to Shipton from historical sources, I haven't seen them. BriggsAbbr, p. 299, has a slightly different version: "Most, if not all, of these stories are derived from a book published in 1684, 130 years after the reputed death of Mother Shipton, and it is uncertain how far they were the invention of the author, Richard Head." Westwood/Simpson, p. 832, note that this version makes her a child of the Devil. Briggs goes on to repeat a story of magic and witchcraft. BriggsDict, volume A.2, p. 549, has another tale, "Mother Shipton's House," which seems to show that even articles associated with her were considered magical.

She is reported to have prophesied the death of Cardinal Wolsey -- or at least his failure to reach York on his last trip (Westwood/Simpson, p. 832; Kellett, p. 118); this is considered the prophecy that validated her others, but the accounts of it are, of course, all after-the-fact. The version of the text found in Peters doesn't even go back to Shipton. In 1862, one Charles Hindley took an old Mother Shipton chapbook, edited it, and added some material, including the final couplet about the world ending in 1881 (an interesting number since it is symmetrical front-to-back and top-to-bottom; Westwood/Simpson, p. 833). This was taken seriously enough that there was panic in that year -- even though Hindley had admitted in 1873 to having written the account himself. A later version changed the year to 1991 (Kellett, p. 118), but that obviously didn't work out either.

Hindley had lots of company; according to Alexander, p. 199, more than fifty books of her prophecies have been published since the first one. Although Shipton's prophecies do often seem to have come true (e.g. the big about carriages without horses), there seems to be little indication that whoever originated the verses expected them to come about as a result of technology; the various Biblical apocalypses seem a greater source of inspiration (and probably explain why Hindley saw fit to add an apocalyptic ending). According to Kellett, p. 118, the species of insect Callistege me has the popular name "Mother Shipton's Moth." - RBW

Bibliography

- BriggsAbbr: Katherine Briggs, British Folktales (originally published in 1970 as A Dictionary of British Folk-Tales), revised 1977 (I use the 1977 Pantheon paperback edition)
- BriggsDict: Katherine Briggs, A Dictionary of British Folk-Tales in the English Language, Part A: Folk Narratives, 1970 (I use the 1971 Routledge paperback that combines volumes A.1 and A.2)

Last updated in version 4.1
File: Pet077

Mother, can I pick a rose? (Defiance)

DESCRIPTION: "Mother, can I pick a rose? Yes, my dearest daughter, if you don't tear your clothes... I picked a rose. I tore my clothes. Come home! I don't hear you. I'll send your (father/brother/sister) after you. I don't hear you." Etc., until the child is caught
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren)
KEYWORDS: playparty flowers clothes mother father
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #123, "Defiance" (2 texts)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Mother, May I Go to Swim" (question form)
File: Newe123

Mother, Don't You Cry
DESCRIPTION: "Oh, well I can remember now, When but a little boy, The fond caresses I received, I was my mother's joy," but he turned criminal, and "I am transported now, But, mother, don't you cry." Finally he received news of liberty
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (Anderson-FarewellToOldEngland); Anderson estimates his broadside is from c. 1840
KEYWORDS: separation mother exile transportation reprieve
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Anderson-FarewellToOldEngland, pp. 43-44, "Mother, Don't You Cry" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #V2969
File: AnFa043

Mother, He's Going Away
DESCRIPTION: Mother: Don't cry for that liar Barney; remember "how he served poor Kate Kearney." Nelly: He's going away; I dreamed of his ghost. Mother: All the better; remember you protested when he courted Jinny M'Cray last week. Nelly: He's going away ...
AUTHOR: Samuel Lover (1797-1868)
EARLIEST DATE: 1875 ("Barney's Courtship," according to John Franceschina, _David Braham: The American Offenbach_, Routledge, 2003, p. 84)
KEYWORDS: dialog love separation mother rake ghost
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 71, "Mother, He's Going Away" (1 text)
Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 147, "Mother, He's Going Away" (1 text)
Roud #V8731
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Firth b.28(5a/b) view 2 of 8, "Mother, He's Going Away", Richard March & Co (London), 1877-1884
NOTES [48 words]: It appears that this song was printed at least once in America; see the entry in Edwin Wolf 2nd, _American Song Sheets, Slip Ballads, and Political Broadsides 1850-1870_, Library Company of Philadelphia, 1963, p. 99. But it does not seem to have become traditional. It's fun, though. - RBW
Last updated in version 6.1
File: OCon071

Mother, Is Massa Gwine to Sell Us?
DESCRIPTION: A child asks mother whether master will sell him/her "down in Georgia." She says yes. The child tells mother "don't grieve after me ... I'll meet you in heaven"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Dett/Fenner/Rathbun/Cleveland-ReligiousFolkSongsOfTheNegro-HamptonInstitute); 1893 (see notes)
KEYWORDS: separation slavery dialog nonballad children mother
FOUND IN: US(SE)
Mother, Is the Battle Over?

DESCRIPTION: The boy asks, "Mother, is the battle over? Ten thousand have been slain, they say. Is my father coming? Tell me, Have the rebels gained the day?" The boy sees his mother crying, and assumes his father is dead. At last mother admits the truth

AUTHOR: Henry Werner

EARLIEST DATE: 1863

KEYWORDS: father battle death

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Randolph 243, "Mother, Is the Battle Over?" (1 text)
Cox-FolkSongsSouth 75, "Mother, Is the Battle Over?" (1 text)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1466, pp. 99-100, "Mother, Is the Battle Over?" (14 references)

DT, BTTLOVER*

Roud #5462

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Does Your Mother Know You're Out" (floating lyrics)

NOTES [58 words]: Although not especially popular in tradition, it was sufficiently well-known at the time of composition to inspire an "Answer." According to Wolf, p. 4, there were at least five different prints of "Answer to Mother I the Battle Over?" This four-verse piece began "Yes, my boy, the battle's over," and one print credits it to James Wakefield. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.5

File: R243

Mother, May I Go Out?

DESCRIPTION: "Mother, may I go out? All the boys are waiting, Just to take me out. Some will give me candy, Some will give me cake, Some will give me kisses, Behind the garden gate. I don't want any candy... But I wand (X) to kiss me Behind the garden gate."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1949 (McIntosh-FolkSongsAndSingingGamesofIllinoisOzarks)

KEYWORDS: courting playparty mother

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
McIntosh-FolkSongsAndSingingGamesofIllinoisOzarks, p. 101, "(Mother, may I go out)" (1 text)

File: McIn101

Mother, May I Go to Swim

DESCRIPTION: "Mother, may I go out to swim? Yes, my darling daughter. Hang your clothes on a hickory limb But don't go near the water."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1900 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren); before 1870 (see NOTES)

KEYWORDS: floatingverses clothes nonballad river

FOUND IN: US(SE,So) Canada(Ont) New Zealand

REFERENCES (8 citations):
Mother, Mother, Make My Bed

DESCRIPTION: A young woman, dying, sends for her true love. He hastens home, but finds her already dead. He kisses her, and dies the next day. They are buried side by side, and a rose and briar twine over their grave.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (VaughanWilliams/Lloyd-PenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs)

KEYWORDS: love death dying magic lover burial

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South,West)) US(SE)

REFERENCES (6 citations):
- Bronson (65), "Lady Maisry" (13 versions, of which #4, #5, #7, #8, #10, and perhaps #9 and #11 are this piece)
- Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads (65), "Lady Maisry" (3 versions, of which #8 is this piece)
- MacColl/Seeger-TravellersSongsFromEnglandAndScotland 22, "Mother, Mother, Make My Bed" (2 texts, 1 tune)
- VaughanWilliams/Lloyd-PenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs, p. 71, "Mother, Mother, Make My Bed" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Cologne/Morrison-WiltshireFolkSongs, pp. 32-34, "Lady Maisry" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Scarborough-ASongCatcherInSouthernMountains, pp. 137-139, "Laidy Maisry" (1 text, which despite the title appears closer to this than to "Lady Maisry," though it lacks the "Mother, Mother, Make My Bed" verse)

ST VWL071 (Partial)
Roud #45

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Lady Maisry" [Child 65] (floating verses)
cf. "Lord Lovel" [Child 75] (floating verses)
cf. "Bonny Barbara Allen" [Child 84] (floating verses)

NOTES [244 words]: This ballad shares verses with the cross-referenced titles; it's essentially a composite of floating verses and plot elements. -PJS

The problems with this song are myriad, though enough versions exist that it must be treated as a separate piece (at least; "I" say so; Roud lumps it with "Lady Maisry"). It shares material with many ballads (MacColl & Seeger see contacts with no fewer than ten Child ballads in their version, though some of these are stretched or verses found floating in several Child ballads -- e.g. the contact with "Little Musgrave" is the stanza "The first two miles the little boy walked, and the next two miles he run," which is an element which can float easily).

The real difficulty is, every version seems fragmentary. We don't know why the young woman is dying. If the ultimate source were "Lady Maisry," she is to be executed; if "Lord Lovel," she is dying for love. But neither explanation gains any support from the extant texts, implying that the cause of death was never stated. Paul Stamler suggests the possibility of plague. I doubt we'll ever know. It is worth noting that Bronson has thirteen tunes listed under "Lady Maisry," and that eight of them (#4-11) belong to his "C" group, and that "all" of the texts of "Mother, Mother" are in the C group, and every song in the C group is either "Mother Mother" or a fragment which could be either song. Thus "Mother Mother" in fact appears to have its own distinct tune group. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.2

File: VWL071

Mother, Mother, Pin a Rose On Me

DESCRIPTION: "Mother, mother, mother, pin a rose on me, Two little boys are after me. One is blind and the other can't see. Mother, mother, mother, pin a rose on me."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1970 (Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore)

KEYWORDS: mother courting flowers

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sackett/Koch-KansasFolklore, p. 120, "(Mother, mother, pin a rose on me)" (1 text)

Roud #11765

NOTES [16 words]: Roud appears to lump this with "Hesitation Blues." For this little fragment, I don't buy it. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.5

File: SaKo120D

Mother, Queen of my Heart

DESCRIPTION: The singer recalls leaving home and mother and taking up gambling. One day, "I had bet all my money... I needed one card to beat them and that card was a queen." The card shows his mother; she reminds him of what is right and he gives up gambling

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1932 (recording, Jimmie Rodgers)

KEYWORDS: cards gambling mother warning

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, p. 258, "Mother, Queen of My Heart" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT, MQNHEART

Roud #9708

RECORDINGS:
Jimmie Rodgers, "Mother, the Queen of My Heart" (Victor 23721, 1932; Bluebird B-5080/Bluebird B-5080/Electradisk 2008/Sunrise S-3167/Montgomery Ward M-4201, 1933; Victor 20-6408 [w. the Rainbow Ranch Boys overdubbed], 1956; HMV [UK] HR10137 [w. the Rainbow Ranch Boys overdubbed], n.d.; overdubs rec. 1955)

File: DTMQHrt
Mother's Love Is a Blessing, A

DESCRIPTION: An Irish boy about to cross the Atlantic says farewell to his mother. He will teach his children that a mother's love is a blessing. Love her when she's old and grey. "You'll never miss a mother's love till she's buried beneath the clay"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA/Leach)

KEYWORDS: age emigration farewell home parting separation travel Ireland children mother

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

Roud #4914

RECORDINGS:
The McNulty Family, "A Mother's Love Is a Blessing" (on IRMcNulty-Night1)
Mary Powers, "A Mother's Love Is a Blessing" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

NOTES [78 words]: The description follows the McNultys' recording. The Mary Powers recording has the same tune but no story. While the McNultys say "keep her while she's living," Powers concentrates on avoiding maltreatment: "do not treat her with scorn" and "do not speak hasty to her." On the other hand only Powers says that your mother "will help you through" when you are in trouble "and don't know what to do." Both agree that you'll never miss her until she's "beneath the clay." - BS

Last updated in version 4.2

File: RcMLisaB

Mother's Malison, The, or Clyde's Water [Child 216]

DESCRIPTION: Willie wishes to visit his lover. His mother bids him stay, and curses him to drown in Clyde if he goes. Willie, trusting in his horse, goes anyway, but his lover's mother bids him away. Returning, he drowns in Clyde; his lover drowns as she seeks him

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1800 (Riewerts-BalladRepertoireOfAnnaGordon-MrsBrownOfFalkland)

KEYWORDS: river death love drowning curse horse

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber,Bord))

REFERENCES (13 citations):
Child 216, "The Mother's Malison, or, Clyde's Water" (3 texts)
Bronson 216, "The Mother's Malison, or, Clyde's Water" (14 versions+2 in addenda)
Bronson-SingingTraditionOfChildsPopularBallads 216, "The Mother's Malison, or, Clyde's Water" (2 versions: #2, #12.1)
Chambers-ScottishBallads, pp. 268-271, "Willie and May Margaret" (1 text)
Riewerts-BalladRepertoireOfAnnaGordon-MrsBrownOfFalkland, pp. 252-253, "Willie and May Margaret" (1 text)
Buchan/Moreira-TheGlenbuchatBallads, pp. 125-127, "Sweet William" (1 text)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #60, pp. 1-2, "Clyde's Waters" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan6 1231, "Clyde's Waters" (10 texts plus a single verse on p. 582, 11 tunes) {A=Bronson's #7, B=#2, C=#1,D=#10, E=#9, F=#8, G=#5, H=#4, i=#12, J=#13, K=#11?}
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfursCollectionVolume2 98, "Willie an' May Marget" (1 text)
Leach-TheBalladBook, pp. 572-575, "The Mother's Malison, or, Clyde's Water" (1 text)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishBallads, pp. 38-39, "The Drowned Lovers" (1 text)
Quiller-Couch-OxfordBookOfBallads 90, "Clyde Water" (1 text)

DT 216, CLYDWATR*

Roud #91

RECORDINGS:
Stanley Robertson, "The Clattering of the Clyde Waters" (on Voice03)
John Strachan, "Clyde's Water (The Mother's Malison)" (on FSBBAL2) {Bronsons #12.2}

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Annan Water"
cf. "Lord Derwentwater" [Child 208] (lyrics)
cf. "Ballad of the Drover (Death of Harry Dale)" (theme)
cf. "Martha Dexter" (theme)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Drowned Lovers
Maggie's Bowers

NOTES [151 words]: A number of versions of this begin with Willie's nose bleeding. This sounds strange enough that at least one modern performer changed it to say that his heart began to bleed. But Iona Opie and Moira Tatem, editors, A Dictionary of Superstitions, 1989 (I use the 1999 Barnes & Noble edition) has several items on nosebleeds on pp. 287-288. It is noted as a sign of ill omen as early as 1180 (Nigel de Longchamps, Mirror for Fools), and there are also several mentions of a spontaneous nosebleed as a sign of affection.

David C. Fowler, A Literary History of the Popular Ballad, Duke University Press, 1968, pp. 300-301, seems to believe that Anna Gordon Brown, the great ballad singer, created this piece, using "The Lass of Roch Royal" [Child 76] as a model but adding a supernatural twist. Hers does seem to be the earliest version, but the popularity of the song seems to me to argue against this. - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2
File: C216

Motherless Child (II)

DESCRIPTION: "Sometimes I feel like a motherless child (I'd never been born, I'm a long ways from home, a homeless child)" (3x). "I get down on my knees and pray"(2x). "I wonder where my mother (baby, sister, preacher) has gone"(3x). "I get down on my knees...."(2x)

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1899 (Barton-OldPlantationHymns)

KEYWORDS: nonballad religious baby mother

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Barton-OldPlantationHymns, p. 18, "Motherless Child" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Sometimes I Feel Like a Motherless Child" (theme, some words, form)

File: Bart018

Motherless Child (III)

DESCRIPTION: "As I walk from door to door, And I have no where to go, And I hear my neighbors cry, That's a motherless child." "Everybody turn me down, Motherless child." "As I walk through the streets, Yes, my knee bones, they seem weak, For I am hungry...."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Killion/Waller-ATreasuryOfGeorgiaFolklore)

KEYWORDS: orphan mother hardtimes food rejection

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
*Killion/Waller-ATreasuryOfGeorgiaFolklore, p. 253, "Motherless Child" (1 text)

Roud #18172

File: KiWa253

Motherless Children

DESCRIPTION: "Nobody treat you like mother will when mother is dead." (Various surrogate parents are suggested, but the children "have no place to go." "Motherless children have a hard time when mother is gone.")

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Recording, Blind Willie Johnson)

KEYWORDS: orphan mother nonballad family

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Botkin-TreasuryOfSouthernFolklore, p. 761, "Motherless Children Sees a Hard Time" (1 text, 1 tune -- a lyric piece, but with enough common lyrics to apparently belong here)

Courlander-NegroFolkMusic, pp. 143-144, "(Motherless Children)" (1 text); pp. 269-270, "Motherless Children" (1 tune, partial text)

Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 58, "Motherless Children" (1 text)

DT, MOTHRLSS

ADDITIONAL: Harold Courlander, _A Treasury of Afro-American Folklore_, Crown Publishers, 1976, pp. 527-529, "Motherless Children" (1 text, 1 tune)
Motor Boat, Motor Boat, Go So Slow

DESCRIPTION: "Motor boat, motor boat, Go so slow, Motor boat, motor boat, Go so fast. Motor boat, motor boat, Step on the gas."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal)

KEYWORDS: playparty

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

File: NCF211MB

Motto for Every Man, A

DESCRIPTION: The singer warns about "Some people you've met in your life, Who never look happy or gay." But he has an answer: "Put your shoulder to the wheel" is a motto for every man.

"The weak must go to the wall," but hard work and a good home life bring success

AUTHOR: Words: Harry Clifton / Music: Charles Coote

EARLIEST DATE: before 1872 (in which year Clifton died)

KEYWORDS: work nonballad

FOUND IN: US(MW) Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, pp. 58-59, "A Motto for Every Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Peter Davison, _Songs of The British Music Hall_, Oak, 1971, pp. 26-27, "A Motto for Every Man" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #9079

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "You Never Miss the Water till the Well Runs Dry" (theme of hard work and frugality)

NOTES [29 words]: For background on author Harry Clifton, see the notes to "The Good Ship Kangaroo."

According to Davidson, the melody of the chorus is derived from "The Corn Flower Waltz." - RBW

Last updated in version 2.6

File: Pet058

Mouldering Vine, The

DESCRIPTION: "Hail! ye sighing sons of sorrow, Come learn with me your certain doom; Learn with me what's your fate tomorrow, Dead and perhaps laid in the tomb." Life should bring "to our mind the mouldering vine." People are dying; trees are dying; you are next

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1837 (William Caldwell's _Union Harmony_, according to McNeil)
Mount Massey the Flower of Macroomwn

DESCRIPTION: The singer "must roam far away from my home And sail o'er the wide raging sea" but hopes to return to the place he grew up, to his friends "and that colleen that dearly loves me"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)
KEYWORDS: homesickness courting love emigration separation dancing Ireland lover
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 93, "Mount Massey the Flower of Macroomwn" (1 text)
Roud #16249
File: OCC093

Mount Vernon Cyclone

DESCRIPTION: "The gentle breeze blew soft o'er Mount Vernon's quiet homes; The Sunday schools had closed for the day, when all at once there burst that awful, dread cyclone." First the tornado hits, then fire springs out; five hundred homes are destroyed

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1953 (collected from L. L. Jones by McIntosh)
KEYWORDS: disaster death
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Feb 20 1888 - A tornado hits Mt. Vernon, Illinois, followed by a fire caused by leaking gas. Almost the whole town is destroyed, dozens are killed, and hundreds injured or left homeless
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, p. 449, "Mount Vernon Cyclone" (1 text)
File: CAFS449A

Mountain Meadows Massacre, The [Laws B19]

DESCRIPTION: A wagon train is attacked by (Mormons disguised as) Indians. They surrender, but are slaughtered the moment they lay down their weapons. The assault is blamed on Brigham Young

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (collected from Mr. Harter of Kahlotus, Washington, according to Dorson); 19C (Wolf)
KEYWORDS: fight death Indians(Am.)
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sept 11, 1857 - The assault at Mountain Meadows. All members of the caravan except 17 small children are said to have been killed. John D. Lee, reported to have led the assault, was executed
Mar 23, 1877
FOUND IN: US(NW, Ro, SW)
REFERENCES (7 citations):
Laws B19, "The Mountain Meadows Massacre"
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #240, "The Mountain Meadows Massacre" (1 text, 1 tune)
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 117-120, "Mountain Meadows Massacre" (1 composite text, 1 tune, plus a loose stanza about the punishment of Lee)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 596-597, "Mountain Meadows Massacre"
The Mountain Meadows Massacre is one of those Great Mysteries of History. I've done a lot of research on what follows, but very little of what follows is absolutely certain, and much will be inherently controversial, especially to Mormons. Too much knowledge died with the victims of the massacre, or has been hidden away in one form or another. To those who disagree with what follows, I can only say that a church which will not open its archives will almost always be suspected of having something to hide.

Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah's notes on the song are fascinating -- they never really discuss the internal Mormon politics and the question of who is ultimately at fault, but his main informant, Salley A. Hubbard, mentioned a report that when someone visited the area and sang the song one night, he "was forced to leave before morning."

Almost from the moment Joseph Smith announced his first revelation, the Mormon Church suffered persecution. After all, they added new sacred scriptures to the Bible (something no significant sect had tried for roughly 1500 years), and they produced a doctrine of salvation completely unlike anything in orthodox Christianity.

And this was even before polygamy became an issue! But the pressures on the Mormons just kept getting greater. The sect was born in New York, but early on headed for the Midwest. In 1833, they became victim of a massacre organized by Missouri's then-Lieutenant Governor Lilburn Boggs (Brodie, pp. 136-137). In 1838, Boggs (by then governor) ordered the whole church destroyed (Brooks, p. 5), though his orders were not obeyed. Moving once again, this time to the east, they built a city in Nauvoo, Illinois, where leader Smith was lynched (Brodie, pp. 393-395). This, even more than the earlier massacre at Independence, Missouri, was psychologically very significant; as Stegner writes (p. 17), it "made zealots out of men and women who might otherwise have been only die-hards," while Walker, p. 209, observes that it "set in stone the Mormon hatred for the Gentile and gave the Saints a thirst for revenge that found a slaking thirteen years later."

Nor was the Mormon doctrine created by Smith entirely peaceful; Brooks, p. 59, notes a revelation in the Doctrine and Covenants stating "if he has sought thy life, and thy life is endangered by him [as Mormon lives obviously had been threatened], thine enemy is in thine hands and thou art justified." Easy to whip up a mob with texts like that!

Smith had also established a dangerous precedent of authoritarianism; although Stegner, p. 24, cites Brodie to the effect that the problems the Mormons had in Ohio, Missouri, and Illinois all arose from different causes, on pp. 25-27 he tells how Smith harassed and persecuted some of his own followers who disagreed with him (cf. Brooks, p. 6; Stegner, pp. 28-30). It was one of these internal quarrels that resulted in Smith's imprisonment and thus led to his lynching.

Smith was succeeded by Brigham Young (for whom see "Brigham Young"). The new Prophet's solution to the problem of living with the Gentiles was to head farther west, away from the rest of America, to the Great Salt Lake area, which would become the land of Deseret (Brooks, p. 7; Stegner, pp. 37-42). The reasoning was that no one would want to follow them there; not only was it a remote and inhospitable land, it was at that time Mexican rather than United States territory. For the Mormons, this was their Exodus -- both the test and the salvation that forged a people. Forced out of their homes by the pressures of the locals, they suffered much on the trail (Brooks, pp. 8-10, plus this is the main topic of Stegner; Bagley, p. 22, says that some 600 of the 6000 who were in their "Winter Quarters" that first year died). But their exile wasn't far enough. The Mexican War gave the United States control of the land of Deseret. And whereas Mexican control had been lax (indeed, non-existent), the United States wanted to use the land. They sent the explorer John Williams Gunnison to survey the area. In the process, he met and observed the Mormons in Deseret. And he published a book: The Mormons, or Latter-Day Saints, In the Valley of The Great Salt Lake: A History of Their Rise and Progress, Peculiar Doctrines, Present Condition, and Prospects, Derived from Personal Observation, During a Residence Among Them. The book came out in 1852 (Denton, p. 65). Denton believes that Gunnison was relatively sympathetic to the Mormons: If left alone, he expected their church to decay due to its internal contradictions. (Obviously he hadn't met many fundamentalists.) But Gunnison's book changed the whole debate. The Federals had made Brigham Young governor of Utah Territory (Denton, p. 66), a region rather smaller than the area of Deseret they had hoped to control (Bagley, p. 24), but the authorities didn't know much about the Mormons. Gunnison's publication made it clear: Mormons were polygamous. It didn't sit well with the regular population.

Gradually the Mormons and the government started heating up their cold war. In 1853, the Federal Government sent Gunnison on another surveying expedition in Utah. He thought the Mormons would let him work as before. They didn't. They (or someone) shot him down, along with most of his party, at the Sevier River on October 26, 1853 (Denton, p. 87). It was, in a way, the first blood of what was to follow.

The Sevier River massacre by itself did not cause war between the Mormons and the United States, but it made it easier to blame Mormons for their behavior -- especially as they did little to investigate it (Bagley, p. 44). Add in the church's fierce desire to run its own affairs, and you had trouble. In 1857, Brigham Young declared that he would decide which Federal laws were enforced in his domain (Denton, p. 108). As the government became more insistent, Young would make what amounted to a declaration of independence (Denton, p. 113); he also assembled troops to resist (Brooks, pp. 18-19). As this was going on, discipline among the Mormons was becoming more vigorous, in part because of bad harvests and the unrest they brought; to backslide was to risk death (Denton, pp. 104-107).

To be fair, Young's authoritarianism "was strongly approved by the Mormons when they found President Pierce [who served 1853-1857] appointing political hacks of bad personal character, prejudiced and quarrelsome, to executive and judicial offices in the Territory" (Nevins, p. 317). But Young's declaration was still an obvious attempt to block enforcement of Federal law in Deseret (Nevins, p. 318).

In 1857, President Buchanan ordered the army to suppress Brigham Young's government (Brooks, p. 13; Denton, p. 108; Walker, p. 210). Many think that Young's declaration was just a negotiating ploy. But Young was too smart to run a pure bluff. Young sent out orders to leaders in other communities to count up their arms and prepare to fight (Brooks, pp. 19-22, 31n; Denton, p. 116); all able-bodied men were drafted into a militia. Many, including John D. Lee, would take this very seriously indeed, calling the instructions "sacred commands" (Denton, p. 117). The Mormons also built up a stock of food, weapons, and ammunition, even trying (and failing) to start a lead mine for bullets (Brooks, pp. 25-27). Brooks, pp. 40-41, also tells of Brigham Young meeting with groups of Indian chiefs; he was probably trying to convince them to ally with him against the invaders -- a "hang together or hang separately" sort of situation. The stage was set for the Mormon War (or, as it is also known, the Utah War).

It was a war with an unusual number of bystanders, because the Great Salt Lake was along the route of most of the trails to the West Coast. There were several overland routes to California, all difficult due to the dry and deserted nature of the lands west of the Mississippi. Utah was one of the few places where water and help could be had. So it was quite normal for emigrants to come that way. Brooks, pp. 43-44, prints a journal that lists six emigrant parties reaching Salt Lake City over a period of 16 days in late July and early August 1857. Most probably took a northern route out of Utah, but at least one group -- the Fancher party, from Arkansas -- went south. Their route took them up the Arkansas River, then north to meet the Platte at Fort Kearney; from there they followed the North Platte to Fort Laramie, then through South Pass to Salt Lake City. From there, they evidently intended to head mostly south through the Great Basin; see the map in Denton, pp. 12-13.

What Denton's map doesn't tell you (and what her book clouds by describing the Massacre before the Utah War) is that the shooting between Mormons and "Gentiles" had already started on a small scale. At the time of the Massacre, the Mormons feared that any Gentiles among them might be spies, and any supplies they gave them would not be available during the coming fight. Indeed, even as the Massacre was starting, Brigham Young was negotiating with a federal officer, knowing full well that the U. S. Army was coming -- and that it had a very big supply problem (Denton, pp. 164-165; Brooks, p. 63, prints a letter from Young which seems to show that he was aware this. It also orders his followers not to "meddle" with emigrant trains. It is dated September 10, in response to a lost letter dated September 7. Yet Brooks, p. 64, notes that this letter might allow a massacre by Indians). On September 15, Young declared a scorched earth policy against the Federals. By the end of the month, Mormon guerillas were attacking army outposts (Denton, p. 168).

The Fancher party should perhaps have known better than to get mixed up in all this. The Fancher brothers, Alexander and John, had moved to California as early as 1850 and started a ranch (Denton, pp. 95-96). They made several trips to ferry cattle to California. Alexander's 1857 expedition was expected to be their last.
We don't have exact details on the Fancher party, but it included a number of families, and property estimated to be worth over $2500, plus cash on the order of $100,000 (Denton, p. 100; Walker, p. 213). There were at least 30, and perhaps more than 40, wagons in the train. There are estimated to have been about fifty men, forty women, and fifty children (Walker, p. 212), and perhaps close to a thousand cattle -- though Brooks would reduce those totals (see below).

The Fancher party hoped to simply pass through Mormon territory, purchasing supplies along the way -- but quickly found that the Mormons closed their doors (Denton, p. 119). It appears (though we cannot know for sure) that the members of the caravan were forced to resort to eating the cattle they had hoped to use to make their fortunes in California (Denton, p. 123). They circled their wagons at night to guard against attack, even as some Mormons, frightened of the Church’s strict regimentation, tried to join them.

Meanwhile, groups of Mormons were gathering to make plans. Brooks, pp. 60-61, makes the interesting point that John D. Lee, who would later suffer for the Massacre, was not present at these early meetings.

Despite all that hostility, the caravan almost made it through. Mountain Meadows is in southern Utah; the area is now a national forest, near the town of Enterprise, just east of the Nevada border and almost due north of Saint George, which is on the Arizona border.

They picked a bad place to camp. Mountain Meadows is just what the name implies, a relatively open field surrounded by high rocks on all sides, with excellent grazing for cattle (Brooks, p. 69). But it can be a trap; there are only two exits, and the rocks provide excellent cover for an attack on a train in the meadow (Denton, p. 129). In 1857, it was a desolate area; Brooks, p. 69, says that there was only one house within 20 miles. There is water, but the Fancher train camped at some distance from it (Brooks, p. 70, thinks it was because the ground was swampy). The camp simply could not be defended for an extended period (Walker, p. 218). Given how far they were from any settlement, the Fanchers probably thought they didn't need to worry about that.

It is noteworthy that the date of the Massacre is somewhat uncertain; Brooks, p. 62, writes that "among the many writers on the subject, many different dates have been used"; she then assembles what evidence she can for the date (pp. 63-67). This is significant because it bears directly on the guilt of high officials of the church.

The best guess is that, on Monday, September 7, 1857, the Fancher Train was attacked by people who apparently were dressed as Indians. John D. Lee, however, dated the attack to Tuesday, and said that there were seven defenders killed and three badly wounded at this stage; Brooks, p. 70, notes that we simply cannot test this.

Soon after the attack started, the Fancher party circled their wagons (Brooks, p. 70; Denton, p. 128), but they had no water supply, little food, limited ammunition, and no way to escape. When they tried to send out young girls to get water, the attackers shot them (Denton, p. 130). They tried to send out messengers seeking help; the only result of that was that several ended up dead and one returned to the camp wounded (and, according to Denton, pp. 130, 132, with news that the attackers were Mormons, though it's not clear how she could possibly know this; Brooks, p. 72, does note that the death of one of these men has been claimed as the cause of the massacre, since the victims would now know that their attackers were white, but this doesn't make much sense that I can see. A few messengers continued on -- Brooks, pp. 95-100 -- but they could not bring help in any reasonable time). Those who were left prepared to die; even if one of the messengers made it through, it would be a week or more before rescue arrived.

The ugliest part of the story is also perhaps the best documented. With the Fancher party close to despair, the Mormon elder John D. Lee came into the camp under a flag of truce (Brooks, p. 73). Denton, p. 134, says that he claimed the train needed to appease the Indians, and could survive by surrendering their weapons and cattle. (This even though the local Indians, the Paiutes, were relatively peaceful and ill-armed. The Indians admit to having taken some of the artifacts, but deny participation in the actual assault. Their actual role remains disputed; Denton seems to think they were not involved, but Walker and others think they were.) After much discussion, seeing no alternative, the survivors gave in (Denton, pp. 135-136).

The Mormon leaders, including Lee, broke them up into smaller parties -- and slaughtered them (Brooks, p. 74; Walker, p. 221). It was pure and simple murder; the only survivors were children under the age of eight, most of whom saw their parents and older siblings killed before their eyes. Supposedly 121 people were killed (Walker, p. 222), though there is uncertainty about the numbers; Brooks, pp. xix-xxiv, considers this to be "greatly exaggerated." She never ventures an exact number; I suspect she would have accepted 80-100 as reasonable. Brooks, pp. 101-103, counts 17 children recovered after the massacre; she thinks (pp. 104-105) that one other infant was raised by the Mormons.

Who gave the order for the murders is not clear; after it was over, no one wanted to admit responsibility (Brooks, p. 75). Supposedly the order was phrased, "Halt! Do your duty!" (Brooks, p. 70). Whoever said it -- it may well have been Lee -- the Mormon soldiers instantly obeyed (Denton, p. 137-143, which gives brutal details of the treatment of the prisoners).

Who was this man who was responsible for what Denton, p. 241, calls "the largest civilian atrocity to occur on American soil" prior to 1995 and the Oklahoma City bombing? (A disputed claim, but it probably does qualify as the largest white-on-white civilian atrocity in that time.) John D. Lee (1812-1877) was an orphan whose father had died of alcoholism when he was six (Bagley, p. 20).

Deprived of an inheritance, and raised strictly, he had joined the Mormon church in 1838 after fighting in the Black Hawk War (Walker, pp. 208-209). He was recruited into the Danites, the society of vigilantes who fought the Mormon's enemies (for other tales of the Danites, see "Old Port Rockwell").

Lee was one of Brigham Young's earliest lieutenants, who gave his allegiance to the prophet at the time when Young's power was still uncertain. Lee was in effect Young's adopted son (Brooks, p. 79; Walker, p. 214), for a time signing himself "J. D. L. Young" (Bagley, p. 19). Despite some minor quarrels (e.g. over a woman both wanted as a wife) he would surely obey the prophet almost without question (Walker, p. 215; Brooks, p. 40, stresses how all Mormons were urged to seek directions from higher authority whenever in doubt about anything) -- a significant point in assessing the conflicting blame for the Massacre.

When word of the Massacre came out, the government had to figure out how to respond. There were two basic questions: Who was responsible for the initial attack (Indians or Mormons)? And (since it was clear that the Mormons were responsible for the eventual slaughter) who was responsible for the Massacre (John D. Lee or someone higher in the church)?

There isn't much evidence. Federal officers took testimony from the surviving children, but all were very young, and many were traumatized; it is very likely that their testimony would today be considered tainted. The Mormon participants reportedly swore vows of secrecy.

Opinions have shifted over the years. The very first investigator was appointed by Brigham Young himself, who had promised the incoming governor that he would look into the Massacre (Denton, p. 182) -- but Young chose as his investigator George A. Smith, was one of those who had helped whip up the people behind the Massacre (Denton, p. 186). Smith's report is so far off the mark that it dates the massacre to September 21-25 rather than September 7-11, and it places almost the entire blame on the Indians (Denton, pp. 186-187).

A non-Mormon investigator, Jacob Forney, set out to investigate further. He recovered 17 children and much property in Mormon hands, and his 1859 report placed the blame squarely in the hands of the Mormons (Denton, pp. 192-194). And, indeed, forensic examination from that day to this show that firearms caused most if not all the deaths, confirming that the Indians were not responsible for the slaughter.

As for what historians have written, the earliest description of the massacre in my library is from Jameson, p. 433; he reports that the emigrants "were brutally murdered at Mountain Meadow, Utah, by a band of Indians, who were incited thereto by Lee, a Mormon fanatic." Note the complete absence of mention of any Mormon other than Lee! He goes on to say, "It was the period of the first troubles between the United States Government and the Mormons. Brigham Young had made threats of turning the Indians loose upon west-bound emigrants, but the Mormons, as a body, were innocent of a massacre."

Nevins, p. 322, reports that "In September, a party of one hundred and thirty-seven California-bound emigrants passing through southern Utah had been all but wiped out by a Mormon-Indian attack in the Mountain Meadows massacre." He as in a footnote, "Neither Young nor the Mormon church approved this murderous attack on the Missouri emigrant train."

Stegner, p. 277, comments, "The massacre of the Fancher party at Mountain Meadows in 1857 may have been, though it probably was not, planned with the knowledge of Brigham Young."

Walker's is the strangest account of all: On p. 216, he tells of the killers sending to Brigham Young for instructions, but then going ahead with the killings -- even as Young sent orders to leave the settlers alone. This makes no sense, unless it was a way for Young to establish plausible deniability. Walker, p. 224, adds that Young certainly knew about the massacre before he officially acknowledged guilt.

Brooks, probably the most careful historian of the event, is certain that Indians were involved, and looted the wagons (p. 95). But she admits that we simply can't be certain about Young's role; there just isn't enough information. She does say, p. 77, that the original plan was for a few whites to induce the Indians to harass the Fancher party; there was initially "no decision to exterminate them." John D. Lee claimed there were hundreds of Indians, angry at the repulse of their initial attack, thirsting for slaughter (Brooks, p. 80). Lee also claimed that a militia band had orders to destroy the Americans; Lee asserts that he prayed, then assented (Brooks, p. 82).
Yet Denton seems to possess no doubts whatsoever that Mormons did it -- and with the full knowledge of Brigham Young (presenting her arguments on pp. 153-159). This even though she confesses that the local leaders argued long and hard about what to tell him (Denton, pp. 147-148). And the planning seems to have been imperfect; while many of the attackers disguised themselves as Indians, there was no scheme to hide the corpses of the emigrants, except to leave them to the crows and wolves (Denton, pp. 149-150).

(I wonder a bit about Denton's motives. The dust jacket says she is "of Mormon descent" -- but she is not a practicing Mormon. She seems to have a strong prejudice against the church.)

Part of Denton's case seems pretty airtight: The massacre was the action of the Mormons, not the local Indians. Modern examination of the bodies -- though it was quickly halted by Mormon authorities -- seems sufficient to establish this.

The case against Young, though, rests on a very slender basis: The testimony of John D. Lee, published after his death and possibly fiddled with by its editor. There is also a "John D. Lee scroll," which if authentic would seem to confirm his guilt (Denton, pp. 242-243), but all that can be proved about it is that it seems to be from the appropriate era.

It is of course possible -- even likely -- that there is additional information in Mormon records, which are not accessible to the public; this would explain why the Mormons seem always to try to quash investigations into the matter. These may even include the journals of John D. Lee, which he reported giving to the church for safekeeping, and which they did not return when asked.

The only conclusion I can make is that it would be very hard to convict Young based on Denton's evidence; at best, he might be labelled an accomplice after the fact. And I would hate to be the prosecuting attorney on that one (even if you ignore the likelihood that Young's followers would have lynched any lawyer who brought the case).

In any case, President Buchanan had offered a near-blanket amnesty for all events of the Mormon War if the Mormons would just back down (Denton, p. 179). Which, for the most part, they did. Buchanan then took away the rights of the military investigators to seek information, stalling any investigation (Denton, p. 202). National dislike of polygamy, and other details, meant that Utah was kept a territory for decades after it had met the normal criteria for statehood, but once the Mormons eliminated polygamy and obtained guarantees of religious autonomy, statehood followed.

Which does not mean that the participants of the massacre were entirely safe. The Mormon church, after all, had every reason to want to clear its name. And once the transcontinental railroad was completed, it was much easier for journalists and others to head west and see what they could learn. For many years, Brigham Young remained close to John D. Lee (Denton, pp. 209-211), but eventually started to distance himself from Lee and the other leaders of the massacre. Lee and another Massacre leader, Isaac Haight, were excommunicated in 1870 (Denton, p. 214; Walker, p. 224).

Eventually Lee was pushed out of Utah altogether, spending some time with John Wesley Powell as the latter explored the Colorado River. He went on to found and operate Lee's Ferry (yes, the Lee's Ferry of the song of that name; Denton, p. 218). He was forced to sell his property in Utah (Denton, p. 215).

When, in 1874, the federal government took over direct control of justice in Utah (Denton, p. 219), it was the beginning of the end for Lee. He was arrested in that year. According to Bagley, p. 290, it was the most sensational trial in American history prior to the twentieth century. Initially, Lee stated that the Church, and Brigham Young, had no role in the massacre (Denton, pp. 219, 221; Bagley, p. 291, notes that a document Lee submitted placed all the blame on lesser men such as Haight and Higbee).

What happened next is fascinating. Even though Lee had been excommunicated, the Mormon Church provided two lawyers for his 1875 trial. Lee himself had three (Denton, p. 221). Bagley, p. 291, argues that this was a mistake for the church, since it led to claims of a cover-up. Denton thinks these two groups were at cross-purposes. The church lawyers had as their chief purpose to protect the church. Lee's lawyers wanted to keep him alive -- which would be very hard to do unless they could implicate the church. (After all, Lee had already given a partial confession.) The 1875 trial was defective in many ways. No testimony was taken from Indians. All sorts of tricks were used to obtain what should have been invalid testimony, or to block what should have been valid (Bagley, p. 291). Many Mormons were subpoenaed; fewer than half appeared. One of those who avoided testifying was Brigham Young (Denton, p. 225). There was conflicting testimony about who did what. Supposedly the lawyers didn't even know when the massacre happened (Bagley, p. 292; he comments acridly, "In their eagerness to answer larger questions about the massacre, the prosecutors apparently forgot they needed witnesses and evidence to convict Lee of murder"). But the defence was not noticeably better, because (as Lee himself noted) the defence lawyers were defending "some person not in court" (Bagley, p. 295).
Eventually the trial went to the jury, which -- being part Mormon, part Gentile -- deadlocked (Denton, p. 226); the Mormon jurors apparently wanted Lee acquitted, the Gentiles wanted him convicted (Walker, p. 226). Bagley, p. 296, claims that the church by this time wanted Lee convicted, but failed to give proper instructions to the Mormon jury members. If Denton is right (p. 228), the next step was simply despicable. A new U. S. attorney reached a deal with Brigham Young: Young would supply all needed witnesses to convict Lee -- as long as the attorney didn't do anything which would implicate the greater church. Since even Denton admits there are no records of this deal, we can hardly be sure of it. Bagley, p. 300, at least offers some slight justifications: The new prosecutor found, to his shock, that the Utah prosecutor's office had neither proper facilities nor equipment, so an independent prosecution was almost impossible. And he was under intense pressure to convict "someone", so that there could be an official scapegoat. Prosecutors often make plea bargains with defendends. Bagley suggests that Sumner Howard, who had no practice in dealing with the Mormons, instead made a deal with the LDS church. According to Bagley, p. 301, prosecutor Howard told the judge, "I have eaten dist and I have gone down out of sight in dirt and expect to eat more dirt." What is certain is that Lee's church-appointed lawyers withdrew from the case, and that the U. S. attorney would earn a reprimand over the matter (Denton, p. 232). We also know that none of the others we know to have taken part in the massacre was ever brought to trial (Walker, p. 226).

In 1876, Lee's second trial began -- this time with an all-Mormon jury. It was a much briefer trial: Seven prosecution witnesses, all Mormons, all of whom testified voluntarily. The defence called no witnesses at all (Denton, p. 229; Bagley, p. 305, says, "By the time the prosecution rested, Lee knew he had been betrayed [by the church]. He ordered his attorneys to present no defense"). According to Bagley, p. 306, "The jurors themselves knew that Brigham Young had furnished the witnesses and evidence to convict Lee." He strongly implies that only one juror proved even slightly reluctant, and the rest convinced him that it was better to sacrifice Lee than threaten the whole church.

Not surprisingly, Lee was found guilty of first degree murder, with the jury needing not quite four hours to convict (Bagley, p. 306). The judge sentenced him to execution (Denton, p. 230; Walker, p. 226); Lee chose a firing squad as a method of execution (Walker, p. 227). Denton notes the interesting point that, at this time, the Mormons practiced beheading as a means of "blood atonement" -- a sort of release from sin. She thinks that Lee, by rejecting the option of beheading, was stating that he did not think his actions needed atonement. In support of this, we note that Lee would write while in prison, "I have been treacherously betrayed and sacrificed in a most cowardly manner by those who should have been my friends" (Walker, p. 227). (I must admit to extreme disquiet about the whole affair. There can be no doubt that Lee was a mass murderer, and that he defiled the names "Christian," "American," and "human being." So Lee deserved everything the law could do to him, and more. Still, the Mormon practice of "blood atonement" -- ritual beheading -- surely made it easier to induce the attackers to massacre their victims; a church that's run like a Mafia shouldn't be surprised that its people turn into barbarians! Certainly Lee's trial should not have been conducted in Utah, there should have been no Mormons on the jury, and the parties involved should have taken real testimony. If there is a Hell, I can only hope Lee and the prosecuting attorney are confined together....)

Lee would write various statements about his actions as the appeals process worked itself out. Eventually, he delivered a large manuscript to his lawyer W. W. Bishop; in it, Lee would aim the blame directly at Brigham Young (Denton, p. 237). Lee was executed March 23, 1877 at the site of the Mountain Meadows Massacre.

In an interesting coincidence, Lee predicted before his end that Brigham Young would die within six months of his own execution. On August 23, 1877, Young took sick with an illness that killed him six days later (Denton, p. 238).

Fred W. Allsopp, Folklore of Romantic Arkansas, Volume II (1931), pp. 323-324, does not offer a text of this song, but reports the Arkansas belief that the Massacre was "the sequel to the killing in Arkansas of the Mormon Elder, Parley P. Pratt." This story is also reported in the literature on the Massacre: Pratt had become involved with an already-married women, Elenore McLean (Bagley, pp. 8-9). After a long and complicated pursuit across the country, McLean's husband succeeded in killing Pratt near Van Buren, Arkansas. It was extrajudicial -- but it was also popular; the locals had already hauled Pratt before the law on trumped-up charges (Denton, pp. 110-111). The basic reason for the hullabaloo was polygamy, but Denton, p. 112, and Brooks, p. 57, state that the Mormons viewed it as religious persecution. Hence, in Denton's view, their particular anger with the Arkansans of the Fancher party. Brooks, however, thinks (p. 61) that there is no evidence at all that the Mormons were after the Fancher party in particular; they just wanted blood in general.
(Denton does not say so, but this is, I think, an argument against the guilt of Brigham Young. He was too smart a politician to let things like that influence him.)

This song appears to be generally accurate in its details: The Fancher train of "thirty wagons" was attacked by "Lee's Mormon bullets" and by people "In Indian garb and colors." "While Lee... his word to them did give That if their arms they would give up He'd surely let them live." "When once they had given up their arms... They rushed on them." "Their property was divided Among this bloody crew." The one interesting element is found in what is the final stanza of Burt-AmericanMurderBallads's and Fife's texts: "By order of their president This awful deed was done... His name was Brigham Young." This, of course, is the point still in dispute -- but this verse has been sung by Mormons themselves!

Sundry references appear in the literature to a song, "The Ballad of John D. Lee." Denton, for instance, has a scrap of it on pp. 209-210. But almost all of her words are found in either the Burt-AmericanMurderBallads or the Fife text of "The Mountain Meadows Massacre." Until something clearer comes along, I am assuming these are the same song. - RBW

BIBLIOGRAPHY

Jameson: J. Franklin Jameson, Dictionary of United States History 1492-1895, Puritan Press, 1894 (yes, it was copyrighted a year before the last year it allegedly covered!)

Bibliography

- Jameson: J. Franklin Jameson, Dictionary of United States History 1492-1895, Puritan Press, 1894 (yes, it was copyrighted a year before the last year it allegedly covered!)

Last updated in version 3.8
File: LB19

Mountain Men, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer is one of Dwyer's mountain men. The Yeos can't trap us, he says. "The people all bless us, for many a cabin's left safe and secure" We are few but we control the mountains and, while we have strength, "we'll keep the old cause living still"

AUTHOR: William Rooney (source: Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)
EARLIEST DATE: 1887 (Madden's _Literary Remains of the United Irishmen of 1798_, according to Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815)
Mountains of Mourne, The

DESCRIPTION: The Irishman in London writes home to Mary to tell her of the city. He describes how the local women dress (or, rather, don't dress). He watches the King of England. He wishes he were home with Mary "where the Mountains of Mourse sweep down to the see"

AUTHOR: Percy French (1854-1920)

EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (recording, Peter Dawson)

KEYWORDS: love home separation homesickness clothes royalty

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1903 - Visit of King Edward VII to "Erin's Green Shore" (mentioned in the song)

FOUND IN: Ireland Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 272-274, "The Mountains of Mourne (Mountains o’Mourne)" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, MTMOURNE*

RECORDINGS:
Peter Dawson, "The Mountains O’ Mourne"(HMV [UK] B-3772, 1931; HMV [UK] B-9114, 1940)
Monica Rossiter, "The Mountains of Mourne" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

SAME TUNE:
The Green Hills of Antrim (File: HHH606)
The Stoker's Complaining (File: Tawn016)
Hospital Ship Song (File: Tawn073)

When a poor bloody pilot goes down in the sea (Reginald Nettel, _Seven Centuries of Popular Song_, Phoenix House, 1956, p. 232, mentions this as being in John Moore's _In the Season of the Year_, 1954)

NOTES [463 words]: Several sources say that the tune to this is properly known as "Carrighdhoun," but it is now much better known under French's title. The tune is reported by Robert Gogan, _130 Great Irish Ballads_ (third edition, Music Ireland, 2004), p. 12, to have been supplied by Houston Collison, who performed with French for many years.

The dating of the poem is more problematic. Gogan says that French is "reputed to have written it in 1896 on a very clear day when he could see the Mountains of Mourne from the Hill of Howth in North Dublin."

And yet there is the mention of England's King having "visited Erin's green shore." Now note that, in 1896, England "had" no King; the ruling queen was Victoria, and her husband Albert had died in the 1860s, when French was still a boy too young to notice girls, and had never been King anyway. The first English King to visit Ireland in modern times was Edward VII, who did not ascend until 1901 and who made his visit in 1903 (and "was regarded as a friend of Ireland and was the first of his line to be so," according to Edmund Curtis, _A History of Ireland_. sixth edition, 1950 (I use the 1968 University Paperbacks edition), p. 402).

Edward VII did visit Ireland, but, to repeat, the year was 1903. So how could this song have been written in 1896?
Whatever the explanation, Edward's visit had little real effect; five of six histories I checked had no mention of the event (and some other reference I used apparently had the wrong date, since earlier versions of this Index gave the date as 1905).

But Edward's trip did show an interesting change in Irish attitudes: quite a few radical nationalists were very upset about the visit, but the ordinary people seem to have loved it; Robert Kee (The Bold Fenian Men, being volume II of The Green Flag, p. 154) calls it an "outstanding success," and cites newspaper accounts of how he was greeted. Compare the song's mention of the singer "cheer[ing] with the rest."

Too bad the Easter Rebellion, and the British over-reaction, did such a find job of messing that up. For background on Percy French, see the notes to "Ballyjamesduff."

I can't help but relate one other interesting anecdote, from C. S. Lewis's stepson. According to Douglas H. Gresham, Lenten Lands: My Childhood with Joy Davidman and C. S. Lewis, Macmillan, 1988 (I use the 2003 HarperSanFrancisco paperback edition with a new afterword), p. 99, Fred Paxford, C. S. Lewis's long-time gardener, had a tendency to tunelessly sing odd songs as he went about his work. The text that Gresham cites is unquestionably this song, although much mangled. I can't help but wonder what Lewis would have done when Paxford mumbled (especially around a teenage boy) about women who "don't wear no tops to their dresses at all." - RBW

Mountains of Pomeroy, The

DESCRIPTION: A maid meets "her gallant Reynardine, on the mountains of Pomeroy." He is an outlaw "but keeps the flag of freedom safe." She is afraid for him. Her kinsmen would kill him. She leaves "her cruel kin and home" to go to him but drowns in a storm

AUTHOR: George Sigerson (1838-1925) (source: Celtic Lyrics site)
EARLIEST DATE: 1991 (Tunney-WhereSongsDoThunder)
KEYWORDS: love drowning storm Ireland patriotic outlaw derivative
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Tunney-WhereSongsDoThunder, pp. 146-147, "The Mountains of Pomeroy" (1 text)

Mountblairy

DESCRIPTION: "Mountblairy thy woods and walks are green ... Thy pleasant scenes in after years I'll lovingly review ... when I am far from you." The singer says Mountblairy's "trees can tell a tale ... but keep thee ever silent ... And I will ever love you."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: lyric home
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
Mountsandel

DESCRIPTION: The singer praises the "soft sylvan splendour" of Mountsandel. Wandering the land reminds him of childhood. He says that friendships grow in the central town of Coleraine

AUTHOR: George Graham

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: home nonballad

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H817, p. 169, "Mountsandel" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #13483

File: HHH817

Mourner, You Shall Be Free (Moanish Lady)

DESCRIPTION: A complex family, with no clear dividing line, known by the key chorus line "You shall be free When the good lord sets you free" (or "calls you home"). Verses can be serious or silly ("Oh! there was a moanish lady Lived in a moanish land...")

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1926 (recording, Uncle Dave Macon)

KEYWORDS: nonballad religious nonsense parody humorous floatingverses

FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE,So) West Indies(Bahamas)

REFERENCES (7 citations):
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 11, "Moanish Lady!" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Spaeth-ReadEmAndWeep, pp. 110-112, "Mona (You Shall Be Free)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 254-258, "When de Good Lord Sets You Free" (1 text, 1 tune -- an immense composite containing elements of "Moanish Lady," "Talking Blues," and probably other materials, to the tune of "Mourner, You Shall Be Free")
Scarborough-OnTheTrailOfNegroFolkSongs, pp. 163-164, "Old Marse John" (1 text, 1 tune, with this chorus and sundry floating verses: Ole Marse John and the mule he is riding till it dies; the singer standing on the corner doing no harm; the singer in the henhouse hearing the chicken sneeze); p. 172, "Po' Mournah" (1 fragment); p. 176, "Great Big Nigger Sittin'on a Log" (1 text, with this chorus and floating verses: Jakey hunting coons, the Big Nigger shooting at a hog; an humorous description of an unusual girl); p. 194, "Fragment from Pore Mournah" (1 text); p. 197, "There Was an Old Nigger, His Name Was Dr. Peck" (1 text, which uses this chorus); pp. 224-225, (no title), with this chorus and the "My old mistus promised me" and "Some folks say a nigger won't steal" lyrics; p. 293, with a variant on "Ain't no use me working so hard"
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, pp. 176-177, "Oh Mou'nuhs"; pp. 178-179, "You Shall Be Free" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Lomax-Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 254-258, "When de Good Lord Sets You Free" (1 text, 1 tune, a non-serious version)
ADDITIONAL: Moses Asch and Alan Lomax, Editors, _The Leadbelly Songbook_, Oak, 1962, p. 25, "We Shall Be Free" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #11685

RECORDINGS:
Jules Allen, "Po' Mourner" (Victor 23834, 1933; rec. 1928)
The Blue Chips, "Oh! Monah!" (ARC 6-09-55, 1936)
Bill Boyd & his Cowboy Ramblers, "You Shall Be Free, Monah" (Bluebird B-6694, 1936; Montgomery Ward M-7190/Regal Zonophone [UK] M-2433, 1937)
Carolina Tar Heels, "When the Good Lord Sets You Free" (Victor 20931, 1927)
Four Dusty Travelers, "Po' Mourner" (Columbia 14477-D, 1929; on VocalQ2)
Woody Guthrie, Lead Belly, Cisco Houseton & Sonny Terry, "We Shall Be Free" (on WoodyFolk)
Blind Blake Higgs, "Eighteen Hundred and Ninety One" (on WIHIGGS01)
Lions Quartet, "Moanin' Lady" (Columbia 1167-D, 1927)
Uncle Dave Macon, "Shout Mourner, You Shall Be Free" (Vocalion 5007, 1926)
Bill & Belle Reed, "You Shall Be Free" (Columbia 15336-D, 1928)
Frank Stokes & Dan Sane, "You Shall" (Paramount 12518, 1927; on Cornshuckers2)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Raise a Ruckus" (floating lyrics)
cf. "'Uncle Eph" (floating lyrics)
cf. "Talking Blues" (sometimes sung to a tune similar to this)
cf. "Some Folks Say that a Preacher Won't Steal" (floating lyrics)
cf. "The Deacon's Calf" (floating lyrics)
cf. "The Golden Axe" (gospel parody)

NOTES [516 words]: This is a complicated group, and the problem is not lessened by the way editors have handled it. The first three texts I indexed, for instance, were all messed with by editors. Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, e.g., derived his "Moanish Lady" from the spiritual "Mourner, You Shall Be Free," but printed only one verse because "the music is too superbly serious to have cheap lines."

It appears, however, to be the same as Spaeth's song about a no-count who hangs around rail yards and sponges off his girl, giving us a whole family of knock-offs.

Fred W. Allsop, in Folklore of Romantic Arkansas, Volume II, p. 161, says Moanish Lady "has been heard often in negro barber shops." Whatever that tells us. - RBW

"Moanish Lady" is derived from "Mourner, You Shall Be Free," and so is "You Shall," but the latter is quite a different song, with a different melody, having in common only the derivation.... [The hymn] seems to have spawned quite a few [parodies], mostly in African-American tradition, but even Bob Dylan created one. - PJS

For the moment, I'm still lumping the family. It's just too messy. - RBW

The Higgs Bahamian text begins with each year from 1891 to 1898 in which the singer explains how he avoids work: " Couldn't do it boys (you shall be free)/ Too lazy boys (you shall be free)/ When the good Lord sets you free."

After a verse about the whale throwing Jonah in a sweet potato patch, and another about a man trying to get to heaven on the tail of a kite, there are some standard floaters found in the U.S.: " settin by the log ... finger on the trigger and his eyes on the hog" [for example, Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 #311 p.566, "The Preacher Song", Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs p.255, "When De Good Lord Sets You Free", "Lester Flatt and Earl Scruggs, "Old Salty Dog Blues", Carolina Tar Heels, "When the Good Lord Sets Me Free"] and "no use of working so hard when I've got a gal in the white folks' yard." [for example, Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs p.257, "When De Good Lord Sets You Free", E.C. Perrow, "Songs and Rhymes from the South" in The Journal of American Folklore, Vol. XXVIII, No. 108 (Apr-Jun 1915 (available online by JSTOR)), #7.1 p. 135, "Oh Mourner", Carolina Tar Heels, "When the Good Lord Sets Me Free", Carolina Tar Heels, "There Ain't No Use Working So Hard", J.E. Mainer, "Old Hen Sitting in a Chimney Jamb"]. Of course, these examples may indicate that "Mourner, You Shall Be Free" is the source of these "floaters" rather than the passive receiver.

"Workin' in the white folks' yard" may not be so rare in the West Indies. Sam Manning's take off on "Linstead Market" seems to comment on his own position as a long-time West Indian recording artist: "With my basket on my head/Tryin' for my daily bread/Workin' in the white folks' yard/Lookin' for my Santa Claus." Sam Manning with the Melodettes and Felix and his Krazy Kats, "Lookin for Me Santa Claus," Decca 18259 (1941)) - BS

Last updated in version 5.1
File: San011

Mourning Souls

DESCRIPTION: "Ah, poor souls, why cast you down, And why art thou so sad?" The sinner confesses being bound down by his body and his sins; his soul confesses "its ruined state," it prays to Jesus, and is set free

AUTHOR: unknown
Mouse and Plum Cake, The

DESCRIPTION: "A mouse found a beautiful piece of plum cake." It "held the cake fast," not telling the other mice. "He kept gulping it down till he made himself ill." The doctor makes him tell of his greed. Children are warned to share or they too might become ill.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 2010 (Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection)

KEYWORDS: food animal warning

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection, p. 37, "The Mouse and Plum Cake" (1 text, 1 tune)

File: Grim037

Move, Daniel

DESCRIPTION: Directions to Daniel: "Move, Daniel," "Go the other way, Daniel" -- including obfuscation -- "Sinner in my way" and "Do the eagle wing"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Proctor recording)

KEYWORDS: warning trick nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

Roud #21455

RECORDINGS:
Lawrence McKiver and the McIntosh County Shouters, "Move, Daniel" (on McIntosh1)
Willis Proctor, "Daniel" (on LomaxCD1712, recorded 1959)

NOTES [59 words]: Art Rosenbaum’s liner notes to McIntosh1, quoting the lead singer, Lawrence McKiver: Daniel is on a mission for the other slaves. They warn him when the "ol' boss was comin' down... So ol' boss thought that they was singin' a party song, but they was tellin' Daniel how to get out the way, so that ol' boss wouldn't put that whiplash on him..." (p. 6). - BS

Last updated in version 4.1

File: RcMovDan

Move, Members, Move

DESCRIPTION: "Move members move Daniel (x4)! Move till I get (there/home), Daniel (x4) Got on my little John shoes, Got on my little John shoes Daniel (x3), Shoes gonna rocka me home Daniel... Who want to buy this land Daniel...."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (recording, Rosie Hibler & family)

KEYWORDS: playparty

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Courlander-NegroFolkMusic, pp. 230-233, "Move, Members, Move" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #10958

RECORDINGS:
Rosie Hibler & family, "Move Members Move" (on NFMAla2, NFMAfAm)

NOTES [67 words]: The form of this song, and the references to Daniel, would seem to imply a religious theme. But there are no religious references, and none of the phrases are reminiscent of the Biblical stories of Daniel. - RBW

Despite the fact that Rosie Hibler’s version appears in the series of recordings "Negro Folk Music of Alabama," she and her family were recorded in Mississippi. Just thought I’d mention it. - PJS
Moving On (The Bug-Out Ballad)
DESCRIPTION: "Hear the patter of running feet / It's the old First Cav in full retreat. / They're moving on; they'll soon be gone." The singer describes the unpleasant conditions in which he is fighting, and the many enemies approaching. He intends to head out
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: Korean War
KEYWORDS: soldier war battle escape
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1950-1953 - Korean War
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Cray-EroticMuse, pp. 412-414, "Moving On" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, BUGOUT*
Roud #10360
NOTES [14 words]: This parody was inspired by Hank Snow's immensely popular recording "Moving On." - EC

Moving-On Song
DESCRIPTION: "Born in the middle of the afternoon In a horse-drawn wagon on the old A5." Wherever travelers stop, they are ordered away -- they lower the price of property, they have no work. "You'd better get born in someplace else, so move along, get along, SHIFT!"
AUTHOR: Ewan MacColl
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1961 (radio ballad, "The Traveling People")
KEYWORDS: Gypsy travel childbirth rejection money
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
DT, MOVEON
Roud #6852
RECORDINGS:
Sheila Stewart, "The Moving-On ong" (on SCStewartsBlair01)
 NOTES [48 words]: Although this is obviously a modern composed song, I was surprised to find what amount to two "field collections" -- by Sheila Stewart and Johnny Connors. Does that make it traditional? It would seem to imply at the very least that it touched a nerve. I am, very hesitantly, indexing it. - RBW

Mower, The
DESCRIPTION: Singer meets a young woman; she has a small meadow needing mowing, it has never been mowed before. He mows all afternoon, but the grass remains standing; she tells him to sharpen his scythe, for the work's not finished
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1839 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(1187))
KEYWORDS: sex virginity farming harvest work
FOUND IN: Britain(England) US(MW) Canada(Ont)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario 14, "The Mower" (1 text, 1 tune)
Vikár/Panagapka-SongsNorthWoodsSungByOJAbbott 22, "The Mower" (1 text, 1 tune)
Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #69, "The Mower" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, THEMOWER
Roud #833
RECORDINGS:
Warde Ford, "The Mowing of the Hay" (AFS 4200 B2, 1938; tr.; in AMMEM/Cowell)
A.L. Lloyd, "The Mower" (on Lloyd 1) (on BirdBush1, BirdBush2)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 11(1187), "The Mower" ("It was on one summer's morning on the 14th day of May"), J. Catnach (London), 1813-1838; also Harding B 11(2505), Firth b.25(378), Johnson Ballads 559, 2806 c.16*(236)[some illegible words], Harding B 25(1275), Harding B 11(1929), Harding B 16(153c), Harding B 11(2282), "The Mower"; Harding B 25(391), "The Cocks of Hay" ("I am a roving mower, through this country I do stray")
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Next Market Day" (plot) and references there
cf. "One Man Shall Mow My Meadow" (imagery)
cf. "The Wanton Seed"
cf. "Mowing the Hay" (subject)
NOTES [36 words]: Lloyd remarks that the song "often appeared on 19th century broadsides," but as he gives no further dates I've refrained from citing that as earliest date. - PJS
The more so since this image is quite a common one. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.1
File: DTthemow

Mowing Machine, The
DESCRIPTION: The cowboy "used to go dashing," "But that was before they invented wire fences And started the cowboys to shoveling hay." He looks back to the good old days, curses the man who invented barbed wire, and requests a "mowing machine" for his tombstone
AUTHOR: Words: "Haywire Mac" McClintock
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1934 (recording, Charlie Marshall)
KEYWORDS: cowboy work technology
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ohrlin-HellBoundTrain 3, "The Mowing Machine" (1 text, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Streets of Laredo" [Laws B1] (tune & meter) and references there
File: Ohr003

Mowing Match Song
DESCRIPTION: "Come all ye jovial mowing lads Who have been up aloft To see that famous mowing match 'At were mown at Brimmy Croft." Curly and Tom compete to see who is the better mower. The ill-planned contest goes undecided, to Curly's great displeasure
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Palmer); the text refers to what may be a 1912 version
KEYWORDS: farming contest
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1842 - the Brimmy Croft mowing contest
FOUND IN: Britain(England(North))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Palmer-EnglishCountrySongbook, #121, "Mowing Match Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1143
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Nutting Girl" (tune)
File: PECS121

Mowing the Barley (Cold and Raw)
DESCRIPTION: A lawyer asks a pretty woman where she's going: "To my father a-mowing the barley." He propositions her; she scorns him, (telling him to keep his money for his wife at home). (He presses his case; she yields and marries "into a station above her")
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1697 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 39(152)); 1699 ("Pills to Purge Melancholy"; a bawdy version)
KEYWORDS: courting seduction marriage rejection lawyer
FOUND IN: Britain (England: South, West) Ireland

REFERENCES (15 citations):
Sharp-OneHundredEnglishFolksongs 60, "Mowing the Barley" (1 text, 1 tune)
Karpeles-TheCrystalSpring 62, "Mowing the Barley" (1 text, 1 tune)
Reeves/Sharp-TheIdiomOfThePeople 64, "Mowing the Barley" (1 text)
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 82, "The Lawyer" (1 text)
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #96, "The Lawyer" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brocklebank/Kindersley-DorsetBookOfFolkSongs, p. 20, "Lawyer's Wife" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cologne/Morrison-WilltshireFolkSongs, pp. 13-14, "Oh Where Beet Gwying?" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hammer-GreenGroves, pp. 26-29, "The Barley Mow" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs #49, "Mowing the Barley" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 61, "The Maid That Sold Her Barley" (1 text, 1 tune)
Chappell/Wooldridge-OldEnglishPopularMusic I, "Stingo, or The Oil Of Barley, or Cold And Raw" (1 tune)
Behan-IrelandSings, #5,"As I Was Going O'er the Moor" (1 text, tune)
Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex, ZN499, "Cold and Raw the North did blow"; cf. ZN2294, "Riding down a narrow lane, two or three hours after"
DT, MOWBRLY SOLDBRLY*
ADDITIONAL: Kathleen Hoagland, editor, One Thousand Years of Irish Poetry (New York, 1947), pp. 281-282, "The Maid That Sold Her Barley" (1 text)
Roud #922
RECORDINGS:
A. L. Lloyd, "Cold and Raw" (on Lloyd01)

BROADSIDES:
NLScotland, APS.4.84.18, "The Northern Ditty" or "The Scotchman Outwitted by a Country Damsel," unknown, 19C

SAME TUNE:
The Lusty Fryer of Flanders/Not long ago from hence I went (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN1898)
The Poor Contented Cuckold/Was e'er man so unfortunate (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN2731)
Roger's Renown..Fourth and Last Merry Ditty of Cold and Raw/Roger did a letter send (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN2302)
The Downright Wooing Of Honest John & Betty/Well met my pritty Betty (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN2778)
A General Summons ..Hen-Peck'd Frigate/Here is a summons for all honest men (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN1133)
The London Jilts Lamentation/Here is wonderful Strange News (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN1136)
The Miserable Mountebank/In a market town of late (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN1403)
The Wealthy Farmers Choice/Near a pleasant shady grove, in prime of summer weather (Olson-BroadsideBalladIndex ZN1863)
Up in the Morning Early (_Scots Musical Museum_ #140, probably a partial rewrite of this piece)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Cold and Raw
Lawyer Lee
The Maid Who Sold Her Barley

NOTES [325 words]: Although this song is most famous as "Cold and Raw" (see the numerous broadsides using this tune), there are versions which do not use this phrase, so I chose the title "Mowing the Barley." In addition, the "Cold and raw" refrain apparently exists as an independent nursery refrain; see Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #414, p. 194, "(Cold and raw the north wind doth blow)."

According to Arnold Kellett, The Yorkshire Dictionary of Dialect, Tradition, and Folklore, revised edition, Smith Settle, 2002, p. 175, "Stingo" (one of the names for this tune) is "strong beer from the first brewing."

There is a broadside, NLScotland APS.4.84.18, "The Northern Ditty; or The Scotchman Outwitted..."
by a Country Lass," which begins with the words of this song, but the rest sounds like a "Baffled Knight" plot. The photograph of the sheet is largely illegible. - RBW

Reeves/Sharp-TheIdiomOfThePeople: "And well in the station above her" is a Sharp emendation, following "They live in the happiest content of life," of "And will in the place above here." In the Bodleian broadsides, for example Harding B 11(2300) and Harding B 1(87), the girl takes his money and leaves him behind on the other side of a river he can't ford. Sequels or answers arose early. Some of the "Northern Ditty" broadsides listed above have "a second part" (for example, Douce Ballads 3(70a) and Harding B 1(87)).

See Bodleian, Don. b.13(12), "A third merry ditty of Cold and raw," J. Deacon (London), 1671-1704; Bodleian, Douce Ballads 2(187a), "Rogers Renown" or "The fourth and last merry ditty of Cold and raw," J. Blare (London), 1683-1706

Bodleian attributes its "The Northern Ditty" broadsides' authorship to Thomas D'Urfey. I don't find that attribution on the face of any of those broadsides. For information about Thomas D'Urfey see The Contemplator's Short Biography of Thomas D'Urfey (1653-1723) at the Contemplations from the Marianas Trench contemplator.com site. - BS

Last updated in version 5.1

File: ShH60

Mowing the Hay

DESCRIPTION: Singer goes to Dublin to hire to mow hay. He is hired by a farmer for one thousand a year. He apparently meets a girl and gets consent of "daddy and mammy." They marry and "Whilst the money it will hold out, We'll make the old-tap-room shake"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1985 (IRTravellers01)

KEYWORDS: courting marriage farming drink

FOUND IN: Ireland

Roud #16878

RECORDINGS:

Andy Cash, "Mowing the Hay" (on IRTravellers01)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Mower" (subject)

File: RcMowtHa

MP that Goes Shilly Shally, The

DESCRIPTION: An MP says he's a good Protestant but does not speak out or vote on critical issues. He won't insist on letting the Bible into school. "He hates the name of 'Orangeman,' 'They go it far too strong; They hit too hard at Popery, And that is very wrong!'"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1987 (Smyth/Bush/Long-OrangeLark)

KEYWORDS: Ireland humorous nonballad political religious

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Smyth/Bush/Long-OrangeLark 30, "The MP that Goes Shilly Shally" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Lucy Long" (tune, according to Smyth/Bush/Long-OrangeLark)

NOTES [144 words]: Smyth/Bush/Long-OrangeLark: "An attack on a Parliamentarian who was a Mister Looking-Both-Ways." - BS

This sort of behavior was apparently a significant issue in Ulster. Robert Kee, in The Bold Fenian Men (being volume II of The Green Flag), Penguin, 1972, p. 102, talks of the response of William Johnston [for whom see "William Johnston of Ballykilbeg"] to such people: "At [a meeting in 1868] the resentment felt by rank and file Orangemen for the upper-class conservatives was particularly marked. Such conservatives, said Johnston, liked their votes very much but they disliked the name of Orangemen. They had used the Orangemen for thirty years and it was 'now time to put their members of Parliament through their catechism.'" Johnston in fact did so, running for Parliament himself and taking the seat even though neither major party supported him. - RBW

File: OrLa030
Mr. Low Is a Very Good Man

DESCRIPTION: "Mr. Low is a very good man, Who tries to teach us all he can, Singing, spelling, arithmetic, He never forgets to give us the stick." "...He goes to church on Sunday, He prays to God to make us good, And gives us the cuts on Monday."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1900 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)
KEYWORDS: playparty abuse injury
FOUND IN: New Zealand
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 55, "(Mr. Low is a very good man)," "(Ole Pa Watson's a very good man)" (2 texts)
File: SuSm055

Mr. Pierce's Experience

DESCRIPTION: "On the twenty-fifth of September, I always it shall remember." Mr. Pierce, of Cambridge, is driving cars when his horse goes wild. The cars crush his legs, which have to be amputated. He warns of and moralizes about his fate

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (New Green Mountain Songster)
KEYWORDS: horse technology wreck injury disability
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Flanders/Ballard/Brown/Barry-NewGreenMountainSongster, pp. 161-164, "Mr. Pierce's Experience" (1 text)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, pp. 54-56, "Mr. Pierce's Experience" (1 text)
File: CAFS1054

Mr. Postman Die

DESCRIPTION: Children's game song in three sections about a postman, about a pussy giving directions, and an unrelated conclusion.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (BeenStorm1)
LONG DESCRIPTION: The first section is call and response about the postman. For example, leader "Mister Postman die," response "How he die," "He die like-a this," "He die like-a this." Then the leader says "Where he livin'," and everyone does the remaining lines about where the postman lives and what he wears. All continue in the second section where "pussy" gives directions such as "touch the ground" and "turn around." Finally all speed through "Now I went to college, and now I went to school, and now I went to booglie booglie boo." The game gets faster as it goes.

KEYWORDS: nonballad playparty animal
FOUND IN: US(SE)
RECORDINGS:
Mabel Hillery, Janie Hunter and her grandchildren, "Mr. Postman Died" (on JohnsIsland1)
Janie Hunter's children, "Mr. Postman Die" (on BeenStorm1)
File: RcJHMrPD

Mr. Wright and Mrs. Wrong

DESCRIPTION: Old Mr. Wright married Mrs. Wrong, a gin drinker. One night she came home drunk and "flew into the riverside with suicide intent." He jumped in to save her and they were never heard of again. The chorus says "Wrong married right and Wright married wrong"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA/Leach)
KEYWORDS: age love marriage death drowning river drink humorous wordplay husband wife
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
Roud #18230
RECORDINGS:
Mrs McLeod of Raasay
DESCRIPTION: "Up wi't Meggie Dickie, doun wi't a"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan8)
KEYWORDS: nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan8 1720, "Mrs McLeod of Raasay" (1 fragment)
Roud #13196
NOTES [92 words]: The Greig/Duncan8 text repeats the description line three times.
Greig/Duncan8 does not explain why this text is connected to the title. There is, Greig/Duncan8 notes, a tune named "Mrs McLeod of Raasay" but there is no indication that this text is to be sung to that tune.
Greig/Duncan8: "This is said to refer to the notorious Meg Dick of the White Ship Tavern .... The Black Drummer was murdered in her house.... Margaret Dick's case is discussed at page 168 in the fourth edition of James Bruce, The Black Kalendar of Aberdeen (Aberdeen, 1878)" - BS
Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD81720

Mrs Mulligan, the Pride of the Coombe
DESCRIPTION: "I am a scrap of a widow" from the Coombe in Dublin. She has had a room and stall, selling fruit, sweets and second-hand clothes, for (35) years. "And where would you see a nate widow like me, Mrs Mulligan, the Pride of the Coombe?"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads)
KEYWORDS: commerce humorous Ireland
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (4 citations):
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads, p. 230, "Mrs Mulligan, the Pride of the Coombe" (1 text)
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 94, "Mrs Mulligan the Pride of Coombe" (1 text)
DT, BIDDYMUL*
ADDITIONAL: Frank Harte _Songs of Dublin_, second edition, Ossian, 1993, pp. 10-11, "Biddy Mulligan" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #16250
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Biddy Mulligan
Biddy Mulligan the Pride of the Coombe
NOTES [125 words]: Harte declares this a relatively recent song, made famous by Jimmy O'Dea, who acted the character of Biddy. He does not say that O'Dea wrote the song, but it seems not impossible. - RBW
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin: "The song was was supposedly written and composed by Seamus Kavanagh, but for reservations concerning such attributions, see Tom Munnelly, Mount Callan Garland, 121." Munnelly: "The Bandon Blarney Stone' was published in sheet-music form by Walton's Musical Galleries of Dublin in 1936 and its authorship ascribed to Seamus Kavanagh. That the song had been doing the rounds considerably earlier than that is proved by the fact that a recording of it was made in America by Shaun O'Nolan, 'The Wicklow Piper,' in 1926." - BS
Last updated in version 3.2
File: OLoc230A

Mrs O'Grady
DESCRIPTION: Mrs O'Grady, or Mistress Shady, or Mrs Brady "was a lady, She had a daughter whom I adore." The singer courted her each day -- Monday, Tuesday,... -- "afternoon at half past
Mrs. Bond

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, what (shall we have/have you got) for dinner, (Mrs.) Bond? There's beef in the larder and ducks in the pond." Mrs. Bond offers good meat to her customers, and sends the ostler to kill the ducks. They flee him. She at last goes out herself

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1797 (Juvenile Amusements No. 48, according to Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes)
KEYWORDS: food bird commerce
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 62, "Oh, what have you got for dinner, Mrs Bond?" (1 text)
Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #822, pp. 306-307, "(Oh, what have you got for dinner, Mrs. Bond)"
Roud #4580
NOTES [85 words]: Much of this revolves around the duck cry "Dilly, dilly, come and be killed." The Baring-Goulds note that there are actually traditions of such animal calls, though this is the only one I've ever heard quoted in any other context. - RBW
Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes: "'Mrs Bond' was originally 'introduced and sung by Mr Bannister Junior in the character of Jerry Sneak', in Foote's 'The Mayor of Garret' (1763). The song was popular, and was immediately issued by rival music publishers ...." - BS

File: BGMG822

Mrs. Brown Went to Town

DESCRIPTION: "Mrs Brown went to town, Riding on a pony, When she came back, she took off her hat And gave it to [or they called her] Miss Malonie." Or "...town, To buy a pair of britches, When she came home, she tried them on, And bang! went the stitches."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1850s (Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)
KEYWORDS: derivative humorous nonballad clothes
FOUND IN: Britain(England(North),Scotland(Aber,High)) New Zealand
REFERENCES (6 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #159, p. 2, ("Mrs Brown went to town") (1 text)
Greig/Duncan8 1617, "Mrs Brown Went to Town" (1 text)
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame, p. 441, "(Old Mrs Brown went up to town)" (1 text)
Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 132, "(Mrs. Brown went to town)" (1 text); also probably "(Mrs. B. went to town)" (1 short text)
ADDITIONAL: M.C. Balfour, County Folklore (London, 1904 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol. IV, p. 120, ("My mother said that I should not") (1 text) [see note]
Edward W.B. Nicholson, editor, Golspie: Contributions to its Folklore (London, 1897 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 188, "Missis Brown" (1 text)
Roud #12982
CROSS-REFERENCES:
Mrs. Greig of Sandlaw

DESCRIPTION: "Twas at a certain firm toon... A braw goodwife ca'd Mrs. Greig Her servant girlies kept in order," After Greig foils many attempts to sneak in a man, the girls create a straw man, which Grieg "slays" with a cudgel. They hope she has learned her lesson

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan2)

KEYWORDS: sex nightvisit trick disguise hiding

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
- Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #178, pp. 1-2, "The Straw Man" (1 text)
- Greig/Duncan2 316, "Mrs Greig of Sandlaw" (3 texts, 1 tune)
- Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, pp. 247-248, "Mrs. Greig of S--" (1 text)

Roud #5161

NOTES [76 words]: Greig: "... we have deemed it advisable to suppress names. "The Straw Man" (as we have named the ditty) is said to have been written by a Banffshire rhymer of the name of Shaw, who was long beadle at Alvah. He was the author also of "O Charlie, O Charlie," given in Art. Li." - BS

To this we may compare Ord-BothySongsAndBallads. He did not suppress the family name, but did suppress the name of the town. Only in Greig-Duncan do all the names come out. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.4

File: GrD81617

Mrs. Martin Fell Down Barking

DESCRIPTION: "Mrs. Martin fell down barking, Got up blinking, Ran away thinking."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren)

KEYWORDS: playparty injury

FOUND IN: New Zealand

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Sutton-Smith-NZ-GamesOfNewZealandChildren/FolkgamesOfChildren, p. 132, "(Mrs. Martin fell down barking)" (1 text)

File: SuSm1320

Mrs. McGrath

DESCRIPTION: A sergeant urges Mrs. McGrath to make her boy a soldier. He sails away in fine style. For seven years she waits for him, hoping for word. At last he returns with both legs gone.
(She curses the wars.)

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1916 (OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads)
KEYWORDS: war injury separation soldier
FOUND IN: Ireland Australia US(MW)
REFERENCES (11 citations):
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, p. 126, "Mrs. McGrath"; pp. 197-198, "My Son Ted" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Dean-FlyingCloud, pp. 48-49, "Teddy McGraw" (1 text)
Scott-TheBalladOfAmerica, pp. 121-123, "Mrs. McGrath" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hodgart-FaberBookOfBallads, p. 211, "Mrs McGrath" (1 text)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H131, pp. 84-85, "My Son Ted" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads 71, "Mrs McGrath" (1 text, 1 tune)
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 179, "Mrs. McGrath" (1 text, 1 tune)
Dallas-TheCruelWars-100SoldiersSongs, pp. 37-39, "Mrs McGrath" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 275, "Mrs. McGrath" (1 text)
DT, MRSMCGRT*
ADDITIONAL: Kathleen Hoagland, editor, One Thousand Years of Irish Poetry (New York, 1947), pp. 285-287, "Mrs. McGrath" (1 text)
Roud #678
RECORDINGS:
Seamus Ennis, "Mrs. McGrath" (on Lomax42, LomaxCD1742)
Pete Seeger, "Mrs. McGrath" (on BroonzySeeger2) (on PeteSeeger15) (on PeteSeeger44)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 2806 b.11(76), "Teddy O'Gra" ("Come all you sons of Hibernia," T. Birt (London), 1833-1841; also Harding B 11(3746), Firth c.12(314), "Teddy O'Gra"
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Felix the Soldier" (theme)
cf. "Lovely Jamie" (plot)
cf. "The Wars of America" (plot)
NOTES [352 words]: OLochlainn-IrishStreetBallads: "Known to every true-born citizen of Dublin. In the years 1913-1916 it was the most popular marching song of the Irish Volunteers."
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815: "This song of the Peninsular War dates, according to one source, to 1815. The earliest account of it in Ireland seems to be 1876 when Sam Henry's informant learned it in Belfast."
The final verse of the three Bodleian "Teddy O'Gra" broadsides seems to refer to the Peninsular War or the 1830s First Carlist War (which included Irish volunteers):
Against the King and Queen of Spain,
And I will make them rue the day,
They shot my Teddy's legs away.
Hoagland's text refers to the First Carlist War: "All foreign wars I do proclaim Between Don John and the King of Spain...."
The following note from John Moulden is quoted with permission:
"I note that all the ballad sheets of this song in Bodley or Madden are English printed. To my almost certain knowledge there is not a single one of Irish popular print origin in those libraries, the British Library, Birmingham University Library or any Irish library in either ballad sheet or 8-page song book form. This suggests that the song originated in Britain and diffused to Ireland only early in the 20th century. This is not the only possibility but the one the evidence most strongly suggests. Actually, it appears that the mid nineteenth-century texts which begin approximately 'Come all of you Hibernian sons' have been substantially altered in the more recent ones; several of the verses at the beginning have been omitted and the 'humour' of the later ones 'enhanced'."
John Moulden is researcher at the "Centre for the Study of Human Settlement and Historical Change" at National University of Ireland, Galway whose subject is "the printed ballad in Ireland."
The ballad is recorded on one of the CD's issued around the time of the bicentenial of the 1798 Irish Rebellion. See:
Franke Harte and Donal Lunny, "My Son Tim" (on Franke Harte and Donal Lunny, "My Name is Napoleon Bonaparte," Hummingbird Records HBCD0027 (2001)) - BS
Last updated in version 4.2
Mrs. McLaughlin's Party
DESCRIPTION: Everyone prepares for weeks, buying new clothes and patching the old, for Mrs McLaughlin's party. They dance and drink all night until the fiddler falls drunk and they carry him home, and fight on the way.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland)
KEYWORDS: fight dancing drink music party
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 61, "Mrs. McLaughlin's Party" (1 text)
Roud #18228
RECORDINGS:
Jack Houlihan, "Mother McLaughlin's Party" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
SAME TUNE:
Julia Harding Got Her Hair Bobbed for the Races ("Oh give us the days of our grannies") (by Johnny Burke) (Johnny Burke, _Burke's Christmas Songster 1926_, self-published, 1926 (PDF copy available on the Memorial University of Newfoundland web site), [no page number])
NOTES [30 words]: Also see a text and hear an excerpt of "Mother McLaughlin's Party" among Newfoundland songs as sung by Jack Houlihan on the "MacEdward Leach and the Songs of Atlantic Canada" site. - BS
Last updated in version 4.4
File: 0Con061

Mrs. Mullowney Was Three Weeks in Bed Since She Ate the Fipper Stew
DESCRIPTION: "Mrs. James Mullowney gave A party Tuesday night... They say the table fairly groaned...." Mrs. Mullowney "couldn't eat no more... She swooned off on the floor." After recovering, "just mention fipper stew" if you want to be attacked
AUTHOR: presumably Johnny Burke (1851-1930)
EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Burke's Ballads)
KEYWORDS: food party doctor humorous
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Ryan/Small-HaulinRopeAndGaff, p. 125, "Mrs. Mullowney Was Three Weeks in Bed Since She Ate the Fipper Stew" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: Johnny Burke (John White, Editor), _Burke's Ballads_, no printer listed, n.d. (PDF available on Memorial University of Newfoundland web site), p. 49, "Mrs. Mullowney Was Three Weeks in Bed Since She Ate the Fipper Stew" (1 text)
Johnny Burke (William J. Kirwin, editor), _John White's Collection of Johnny Burke Songs_, Harry Cuff Publications, St. John's, 1981, #33, p. 53, "Mrs. Mullowney Was Three Weeks in Bed Since She Ate the Fipper Stew" (1 text)
Roud #V44588
NOTES [439 words]: Yes, that's "fipper." A common Newfoundland pronunciation of "flipper," since the dish is made of seal. (I find no use of "fipper" [as opposed to "flipper"] in the section on Newfoundland dialect in Young, but England, pp. 134, 315, attests to it, and StoryKirwinWiddowson, pp. 175, 191, list "fipper," "fippar," and "phipper" as variants of "flipper," with "phipper" being attested as early as 1770 and "fipper" by 1822. Their instances of usage also include this song.)
According to Bob Bartlett (who should know; see his biography under "Captain Bob Bartlett"), "The flesh [of the seal] is by no means disagreeable, though it has a general flavor of fish, which constitutes the seal's chief food" (Bartlett-Karluk, p. 54). Sealers normally ate seal while on the ice (indeed, if far from the ship, they might eat it raw), and dishes such as "flipper pie" were known (Young, p. 77).
Flippers were one of the few "perks" sealers were (usually) allowed to take home; they sold very well in Newfoundland; Ryan-Last, pp. 264-266, has ten different discussions by sealers of flippers, making them one of the most popular topics of his oral history project. I do not know if it is significant that the sick woman was "Mrs. Jim Mullowney," and a skipper's wife.
Sealing captains ran to dynasties (the result, says Ryan-ice, p. 218, of the contraction of the sealing fleet that followed the introduction of larger ships, which forced many captains and second hands out of their positions), and there were two men named Mullowney (first names unknown) who commanded sealers in 1853: one skippered the Primrose and one the Alpha (Ryan-Ice, p. 459). Pierre Mullowney was skipper of the the Ranger in 1872-1873 (Feltham, p. 115), and of the Proteus -- at the time, one of the biggest and fanciest sealers -- in 1874 (Feltham, p. 109), but I haven't found a reference to a James Mullowney.

Of the other references in the song, "white-coats" and "harps" are both harp seals; the whitecoats are the infant seals that were the primary target of the seal hunt; harps were the adults. Bedlamers are second year seals, not yet fully mature but able to care for themselves -- sort of the seal equivalent of teenagers. The title is a description of age; a bedlamer may be either a "harp" or a "hood." The origin of the name is uncertain; some connect it with "bedlam," because they create bedlam, others with French "bête de la mer," "beast of the sea" (Young, p. 33; StoryKirwinWiddowson, p. 37, prefer the "bedlam" sense, and first cite the term from 1766). For a brief biography of Johnny Burke, see the notes to "The Kelligrew's Soiree." - RBW

Bibliography

- Bartlett-Karluk: Robert A. Bartlett (as set down by Ralph T. Hale), The Karluk's Last Voyage (originally published 1916 as The Last Voyage of the Karluk; I used the 2001 Cooper Square expedition with a new introduction by Edward E. Leslie)
- England: George Allan England, Vikings of the Ice: Being the Log of a Tenderfoot on the Great Newfoundland Seal Hunt (also published as The Greatest Hunt in the World), Doubleday, 1924
- Feltham: John Feltham, Sealing Steamers, Harry Cuff Publications, 1995
- Young: Ron Young, Dictionary of Newfoundland and Labrador, Downhome Publishing Inc., 2006

Last updated in version 5.0

File: RySm125

Mrs. Murphy's Chowder

DESCRIPTION: "Mem'ries of the golden west and friends I used to know Take me back to that boarding house Where I lived long ago." On Fridays the residents waited for Mrs. Murphy's chowder, which "made you yodel louder," and included things from benzene to ice cream

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (ArkansasWoodchopper)

KEYWORDS: food home humorous

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (1 citation):

ArkansasWoodchopper, pp. 10-13, "Mrs. Murphy's Chowder" (1 text, 1 tune)

ST ArWo010 (Partial)

RECORDINGS:

Arkansas Woodchopper [pseud. for Luther Ossenbrink] , "Mrs. Murphy's Chowder" (Conqueror 7879)

NOTES [37 words]: Although there is some thematic similarity, this is not the same song as the equally silly but slightly better-known "Who Put the Overalls in Mrs. Murphy's Chowder," which is also sometimes called "Mrs. Murphy's Chowder." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2

File: ArWo010
Mucking o' Geordie's Byre, The

DESCRIPTION: The singer describes the filthy habits of Geordie and his family, and the strange and immense task of cleaning out Geordie's byre. The family's ineptitude and the poorly trained animals result in improbable accidents

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1797 (_Scots Musical Museum_, #96)

KEYWORDS: home work animal dancetune

FOUND IN: Britain(England(North),Scotland(Aber)) Australia

REFERENCES (7 citations):
- Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 257, "The Muckin' o' Geordie's Byre" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Greig/Duncan7 1303, "The Muckin' o' Geordie's Byre" (3 fragments, 2 tunes)
- Meredith/Covell/Brown-FolkSongsOfAustraliaVol2, p. 82, "Muckin' of Geordie's Byre" (1 tune)
- DT, MUCKBYRE

ADDITIONAL: Alexander Rodger, _Poems and Songs_ (Glasgow, 1838), pp. 29-33, "The Mucking o’ Geordie’s Byre"
- James Johnson, Editor, _The Scots Musical Museum_ [1853 edition], volume I, #96, p. 97, "The Mucking of Geordie’s Byre" (1 text, 1 tune)
- ST DTMoGB (Full)
- Roud #2137

NOTES [44 words]: This humorous piece has an incredibly complex history, as various poets (including Robert Burns) have taken their hacks at it. The result is so thoroughly mingled that it probably is not possible even to describe the original. - RBW

Rodger: "Written in 1819." - BS

Last updated in version 3.0

File: DTMoGB

---

Muckle Meal-Pock, The

DESCRIPTION: I am a sturdy beggar loon, weel kent the country through." The rambler describes his life and all work. At last he trades in his pack for "a cuddy an' a cart;" he admits a carrier is "a gentleman compared to the owner o' a pock."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (Ford); before 1850 (NLScotland, L.C.1270(006))

KEYWORDS: begging work travel

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, pp. 239-241, "The Muckle Meal-Pock" (1 text)
- Roud #13087

BROADSIDES:
- NLScotland, L.C.1270(006), "The Muckle Meal Pock," James Kay (Glasgow), c. 1845; also L.C.Fol.70(34a) [same as the preceding, but with the accompanying text of "Irish Molly, O" cut away]

File: FVS239

---

Muddley Barracks

DESCRIPTION: The singer accepts the King's shilling to enlist in Muddley Minor regiment. At Muddley Barracks "they cut my hair so close to my head I could hardly wink my eye." Between marching drills, discipline, and meager food he wishes he were back behind the plow.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1975 (recording, Jumbo Brightwell)

KEYWORDS: soldier recruiting food ordeal hardtimes hair

FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond))

Roud #1735

RECORDINGS:
- Jumbo Brightwell, "Muddley Barracks" (on Voice20)

NOTES [33 words]: For the typical British recruiting method of The King's Shilling and getting potential soldiers drunk, as well as the miserable conditions in the army, see the notes to "The Recruited Collier." - RBW
Last updated in version 2.5
File: RcmuddBa

Mudion River

DESCRIPTION: The singer calls on the muses to pay attention as he asks their aid in praising the Mudion River. He admits the virtues of other Irish rivers, but none can compare with the Mudion. Had he money to spare, he would spend it living by the Mudion

AUTHOR: "Master (Mc?)Mullan"

EARLIEST DATE: 1925 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: river home nonballad

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H108b, pp. 169-170, "Mudion River" (1 text, tune referenced)

Roud #13484

File: HHH108b

Muff Lawler, the Squealer [Laws E25]

DESCRIPTION: Muff Lawler, a member of the Molly Maguires, is accused (of murder). Rather than face the consequences, he offers to turn informant if he can be protected from the remaining Mollies. The deal is struck when the lawyers offer to send him to another county

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends)

KEYWORDS: mining reprieve punishment

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1876 - Conviction of Michael "Muff" Lawler on a charge of murder

FOUND IN: US(MA)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Laws E25, "Muff Lawler, the Squealer"
Korson-PennsylvaniaSongsAndLegends, pp. 398-399, "Muff Lawler, the Squealer" (1 text, 1 tune)
Byington/Goldstein-TwoPennyBallads, pp. 5-6, "Muff Lawler, the Squealer" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 710, MUFFLAWL

Roud #2254

NOTES [4495 words]: This story arises from the conditions in the Pennsylvania coal fields in the 1870s. The mine owners treated the miners horribly, resulting in a violent response usually attributed to a shadowy group, the "Molly Maguires." So the owners set out to suppress the Mollies. It should be kept in mind tat "The Molly Maguires themselves left virtually no evidence of their existence, let alone their aims and motivations. Almost everything that is known about them was written by hostile contemporary observers" (Kenny, p. 5). In fact, this song is one of the few pieces from the other side.

To rid themselves of the Mollies, the mining companies hired the Pinkerton detective agency, and Pinkerton decided to employ James McParlan (who later took to spelling his name "McParland") to infiltrate the group. Muff Lawler was one of those he met.

"[Michael] Lawler was in his forties [when he met McParland] and... was 'above medium height, heavily but not clumsily built... with black hair and heavy side whiskers of the same color, the chin being shaven,' all below a bald crown.... [H]e ran a tavern, but he also still worked occasionally as a contractor in the mines" (Riffenburgh, p. 58).

According to Lukas, p. 181, Lawler was the "bodymaster" of the lodge of the Ancient Order of Hibernians who introduced "James McKenna" (the name used by McParland in his undercover work) to the Pennsylvania Hibernians -- and its local chapter with its clandestine terrorist side. Lukas says that Lawler also trained gamecocks (known as "muffs," hence his nickname) and that his nephew Ed was one of the Mollys' triggermen.

The Pennsylvania Molly Maguires were named for an earlier protest group in Ireland (Riffenburgh, p. 28, or see the notes to "The Molly Maguires"). In their defense, it should be noted that the mine bosses' treatment of their employees also verged on terrorism; the Mollies were just seeking decent conditions.
Weir/Hanlan, pp. 618-619: "Nineteen men were eventually hanged for involvement in what was supposedly a clandestine Irish and Irish American terrorist organization responsible for disorder and murders in coal mining regions of northeast Pennsylvania between 1870 and 1876. It has never been definitively proven that such an organization actually existed. Most of the testimony that condemned alleged Mollies came from Pinkerton agent James McParland, who supposedly infiltrated the Molly Maguires. "Critics of the verdict claim that the organization was a fiction invented by coal and railroad barons as an excuse for crushing a legitimate trade-union movement that threatened to loosen the autocratic grip of mine owners, who kept workers toiling in company towns as impoverished chattel. They also point out that McParland was exposed as a pathological liar in a twentieth-century case involving the Western Federation of Miners..." (this is the Frank Steunenberg assassination case, for which see "Harry Orchard." Riffenburgh, pp. 1-16, effectively demonstrates McParland's untruthfulness. A typical one: McParland's tombstone gives a date of birth, yet McParland always denied that he knew when he was born -- and once claimed he had gone to sea in the year of his birth).

Rosenbaum, p. 233, "MOLLY MAGUIRES (1865-75), a secret organization among Irish-American coal miners in the anthracite fields of eastern Pennsylvania. During prolonged labor strife, the Molly Maguires allegedly resorted to intimidation, arson, and murder against strikebreakers and mine owners. A Pinkerton detective infiltrated and exposed the organization. On dubious evidence, 20 of its members were hanged and the organization destroyed."

One of the big reasons for all this conflict was that the Pennsylvania coal fields were special -- they supplied high-quality anthracite coal; few other coal fields had such a quality product (Riffenburgh, pp. 30-31). This meant that they offered the potential for high profits -- if they were managed appropriately. This was especially true of the southern fields, where the coal was hardest to mine because of the angle of the seams (Kenny, p. 47); in the northern fields, around Scranton, the coal was more accessible. Franklin Gowen was able to control enough of the coalfields to accomplish that management (Riffenburgh, pp. 22-27. Gowen had all the morals of a sea slug, but it's hard to deny that he was brilliant; in addition to assembling a successful coal monopoly, he was also the lawyer whose skills convicted the sundry Mollies; Bimba, p. 33. And he was put in charge of the Reading Railroad in 1869 at the age of 32; Kenny, p. 136. Which makes me wonder how he managed to avoid getting drafted into the American Civil War...). But he wasn't satisfied with monopoly control over a valued resource. He wanted to drive down his costs -- meaning that he wanted cheap labor. The miners fought back. Hard to blame them; it was a deadly job -- Bimba, p. 24, says that in 1871, 112 miners were killed and 339 injured in Schuylkill County. That was the worst year, but mining was never safe.

It's also possible that the miners suffered even more prejudice than most Irish in America; Kenny, p. 37, suggests that an unusually high proportion were from the Gaelic-speaking portions of Ireland. (In fact, one family involved with the Mollies, that of the "Widow O'Donnell," were cousins of Patrick O'Donnell, who half a decade after this would kill James Carey, the informant in Ireland's Phoenix Park Murders; Kenny, p. 207. For the Phoenix Park murders, the subject of close to a dozen songs, see the notes to "The Phoenix Park Tragedy.") The whole county was heavily immigrant (1870 population 116,428; 30,856 immigrants; 13,465 from Ireland; Kenny, p. 53). The first death associated with the labor troubles came as early as 1862, when one Frank W. Langdon, who was criticizing a group of Irish miners, was beaten so badly that he died (Riffenburgh, pp. 32-33. But this happened relatively publicly, and spontaneously; could it really be blamed on a secret organization? "[I]t is difficult to see how it could have been attributed to the Molly Maguires other than retrospectively" (Kenny, p. 85). The only real evidence of terrorism in Pennsylvania in this period was that there were a lot of murders -- there were 14 in 1863, 14 in 1864, 12 in 1865, six in 1866. Many of these involved mine officials; in one case, a mine owner was killed in the sight of his family! (Riffenburgh, pp. 34-35). But certainly not all involved mine officials -- Kenny, p. 8, lists a total of only 16 Molly Maguire-type murders from 1862 to 1875, with just one each in 1862, 1865, 1866, and 1867, and none at all in 1864; it wasn't until 1874-1875 that things really got out of hand. (Kenny, p. 188, has a list classified by type. I'm a bit dubious of it, but it implies that organized attacks on mine officials mostly came late.) The Pennsylvania legislature in 1865 responded by letting the mining companies, and the railroads that worked with them, set up their own law enforcement organizations with significant, unregulated powers (Riffenburgh, p. 36).

The crimes rate did fall after that, but not because of the new law; the likely explanation is that the Workingman's Benevolent Association worked to improve the miners' living conditions while negotiating with the bosses (Riffenburgh, pp. 36-40; Kenny, p. 103).

But then Gowen started squeezing. And maneuvering. By the end of 1874, his Reading company... owned more than 100,000 acres of land and more than 100 collieries (Riffenburgh, p. 43). He then used his market dominance to drive out the coal middlemen, and cut a deal with other coal owners to divide the market (Riffenburgh, p. 44; Kenny, pp. 1501-151, lists the shares, with Reading getting the largest -- meaning that he could hope to eventually drive his competitors out of business and have a true monopoly). He had achieved a classic oligopoly, with nothing left to interfere with his dominance except the miners. He cut wages, and also started company stores and made it clear that the miners would shop there or be blacklisted (Bimba, p. 27; Kenny, p. 141, says that the Reading was the only rail line serving the area, so he was able to enforce his control by raising rates for businesses that resisted him).

These demands were so stringent that the miners again started to fight back. So Gowen talked to Allan Pinkerton about ways to destroy the miners' organizations (Riffenburgh, p. 45). And Pinkerton eventually decided to infiltrate an immigrant Irishman, James McParlan(d), into the Ancient Order of Hibernians to try to find out more about the Mollies. (There would be other Pinkertons later -- Riffenburgh, pp. 65-66, 71, etc.; p. 75 tells of them forming an official alliance and "flying squadron" with the company police, which gave the Pinkertons arresting power -- but McParland was the first and most important. The "squadron" was led by Robert J. Lindon, who would also be important in the aftermath. A Scotsman, P. M. Cummings, also infiltrated the Workingmen's Benevolent Organization -- Kenny, p. 156 -- but he found it entirely peaceful, which of course wasn't what Gowen wanted.)

Although McParland went in alone, he needed help and preparation. McParland worked for two weeks with Franklin Pinkerton to develop a new identity. McParland would become James McKenna. And even McKenna would be a sort of double identity. "McParlan's new character was not a nice man. He supposedly had come to the coal region to hide from the police after murdering a man in a grain elevator in Buffalo. But this was not to be 'disclosed' to just anyone -- his initial story was to be that he had worked in the silver mines of Colorado, where jobs were becoming scarce" (Riffenburgh, p. 51). He would only reveal the "true" tale when he managed to reach the violent inner circle of the Mollies. He also was supposed to have a sideline dealing in counterfeit money.

"McKenna" headed for coal county on October 17, 1873 (Riffenburgh, p. 52), and wandered around the area for some days before making a temporary landing in Pottsville (Riffenburgh, p. 53). He gave a fine performance, drinking, singing, fighting -- but not finding a job (not that he actually wanted one -- he was there to investigate -- but he had to go through the motions!). So one of the friends he had made "suggested he go over the mountains to Shenandoah, where Michael Lawler, the bodymaster, would look after him" (Riffenburgh, p. 56).

Lawler got McKenna into the local Hibernians even though McKenna showed clear signs of having lied about his membership in Ireland (Riffenburgh, pp. 55, 57); he was initiated on April 14, 1874 at Lawler's tavern (Kenny, p. 155). Lawler also found him a job loading coal wagons rather than mining (Riffenburgh, p. 59), which was was relatively low on the pay scale and social hierarchy -- a job done mostly by the unskilled Irish (Riffenburgh, p. 62).

"McKenna" apparently won Lawler's trust by helping him with his fighting cocks. He ended up living with Lawler's family, even though it meant he no longer had his own bed and had to scramble very hard to write and deliver his reports (Riffenburgh, pp. 60-61). He also saw first-hand how hard the miners' lives were -- he called it the hardest work he ever had, and that was apart from claustrophobia and nausea from working in the dark, crowded conditions. Any normal person would surely have started to sympathize with the workers -- but McParland doesn't seem to have been normal.

"McKenna" went through two jobs, then stopped trying. He moved out of Lawler's fairly soon, but managed to find a better place where he didn't have to work so secretly -- and he stayed in Lawler's good graces (Riffenburgh, pp. 62-63). Indeed, on April 14, he was allowed to join the Hibernians -- and started to learn about the terrorist activities (Riffenburgh, p. 64).

Violence wasn't just directed at mine bosses. At least once, a man attempted to murder Lawler, and "McKenna" was instrumental in saving his life (Riffenburgh, p. 66). Something about this perhaps helps explain why Lawler lost his role as bodymaster the following summer, being replaced by Frank McAndrew. But McAndrew was almost illiterate, and so "McKenna" was appointed Secretary of the Shenandoah lodge despite his own limited grasp of spelling and an increasing debility that sounds like it was stress-related (Lukas, p. 183; Riffenburgh, p. 67).

Then came the so-called "Long Strike" that started in December 1874. John Siney, who had headed the Workingman's Benevolent Organization, had moved on to a bigger union, and the WBO was in the relatively inexperienced hands of John F. Welsh, who was more willing to go on strike than Siney (Kenny, p. 169). Gowen meanwhile was putting more pressure on the miners' wages. The result was that the workers in the southern coalfields went on strike (Riffenburgh, p.
71). This quickly caused a spike in crime, but at first this was just the sort of brawling you see during any economic downturn, with more theft and violence because people were starving and scared (Riffenburgh, p. 72). But gradually the violence got more organized -- especially since the WBO was breaking down (Riffenburgh, p. 73).

In May 1875, the Long Strike collapsed, with most mine workers being allowed their jobs back under the harsh labor agreement that had caused the strike (Riffenburgh, p. 78). It is estimated that Gowan had forced a 26.5% pay cut on the typical worker (Riffenburgh, p. 80), and as wages continued to fall in the following years, the total decline from 1869 to 1877 was estimated at 54%. The strike had been so hard on workers that at least one superintendent had to supply food to his employees to enable them to work! (Kenny, p. 180).

During the strike, which aroused deep bitterness, violence was again threatened -- and McParland, who was acting head of his lodge while McAndrew was away, headed the mob, but also warned authorities that it was coming (so that police could be there), and managed to frighten the mob so that they did not attack at once (Riffenburgh, p. 79). Later, a murder was planned that he couldn't get out of, but he managed to delay it for a day -- and then got sick, seemingly genuinely but very conveniently (Riffenburgh, pp. 80-81). And on, and on -- the violence continued, with "McKenna" sometimes involved in the planning and sometimes not. The one thing that is clear is that the Pinkertons had not set up a good enough communication system for McParland to quickly report what he had learned.

Eventually the Mollies suspected a traitor. Muff Lawler was one of their first suspects (on October 9, about fifteen bullets were fired into his saloon, according to Riffenburgh, p. 106), but soon "McKenna" came under suspicion (Lukas, p. 185).

I won't go into all the details of the murders, which don't really affect our understanding of the song. Eventually the state started bringing people to trial, and earning convictions. As this was happening, "McKenna" gave up his alias and his infiltration work (both for safety and to help in the prosecution). Even as one of the trials was going on, about a dozen major figures in the mining movement were arrested and put in prison. Lawler was one (Riffenburgh, p. 125). McParland's role was at best ambiguous. "The weight of the evidence in the Sanger, Uren, and Jones cases is that McParlan let these killings go ahead in order to accumulate more evidence" (Riffenburgh, p. 100, quoting Kevin Kenny without entirely agreeing with him). He played his role of agitator so well that there were mining officials wanted him to face vigilante justice (Riffenburgh, pp. 102-103). He courted the daughter of a labor leader as a way to stick around her father and learn what he could (Riffenburgh, p. 90). As a lodge Secretary, he would have been part of the planning of any terrorist acts.... He would then inform other Pinkertons (notably the "flying squadron"), who "tried to be present when a crime was committed so as to gather eyewitness accounts and physical evidence necessary for convictions."

"It was this procedure that later gave rise to suspicions that McKenna was an agent provocateur who encouraged the Mollies to commit crimes, then arranged for Linden [the Pinkerton liaison] to witness them. This is difficult to prove. But it is worth noting that the Mollies' Shenandoah division didn't gain its reputation for homicide until McKenna became its secretary" (Lukas, p. 184). More than that: When a man was on trial for murder, and McParland knew he was innocent, McParland did not come forward lest it break his cover. McParland said he expected the man, Daniel Dougherty, to be acquitted, and he was, but Dougherty had to undergo a dangerous surgery to remove a bullet to secure the acquittal (Bimba, pp. 84-85, who seems to think Dougherty was being deliberately framed; Riffenburgh, pp. 76-77). There is no reason to think McParland would have come forward had Dougherty’s case gone against him.

"Serious questions surround the role of James McParlan in the assassinations of Sanger, Uren, and Jones. He clearly knew of the plot to kill Sanger at least one day in advance. McParlan named the men assigned to kill Sanger in a report dated August 31, 1875, the day before the assassinations took place [although the report was not received until September 2].... Why, then, did McParlan not notify Captain Linden or warn Sanger directly? His failure in the Jones case is even more troubling, as the plans for the assassination were known long in advance [though he got word out on that one in a timely way].... Did McParlan allow Sanger and Uren to be killed so that he could accumulate evidence against the Molly Maguires? Was the detective an agent provocateur?" (Kenny, pp. 199-200). I, at least, find McParland’s actions deeply disturbing.

Even more than that: McParland openly admitted that he was not in public service, and that he would not risk his own life to protect another (which was not part of his job description, we should add): under questioning about why he didn't do more to help potential murder victims, he said he would not risk his own life to save another man; indeed, "I would not run the risk of losing my life for all the men in this Court House"; when prodded, "You would rather see this man Jones sacrificed," he responded, "Than sacrifice myself? Decidedly" (Riffenburgh, p. 102). He obviously isn't unique.
in that, but it's not what we'd expect of someone who supposedly was enforcing the law. But then, the Pinkertons were not law enforcement. They were hired guns who did not consider the law to be binding on them -- Riffenburgh, p. 103, reminds us of their treatment of the James/Younger gang. Among other things, they had illegally half-hung Frank and Jesse James's stepfather; for details, see the notes to "Jesse James (III)."

Certainly, for an outsider just getting to know the Mollies, "McKenna" heard an amazing number of admissions of crimes (Riffenburgh, pp. 132-133).

McParland eventually testified, against his will (Pinkerton rules said their agents were supposed to keep out of courtrooms, and McParland had more reason to fear retribution than most!), in nine cases (Lukas, p. 186). It is noteworthy that, under Pennsylvania law at this time, the accused could not testify in their own defense, because they had an interest in the case (Riffenburgh, p. 142) -- but McParland, who had an interest in conviction, was allowed to testify.

"The trials of the Molly Maguires began in January 1876 and ended in August 1878. They bordered on a travesty of justice. The trials were conducted under conditions of enormously hostile publicity. The defendants were arrested by private policemen and convicted on the evidence of a detective who was accused of being an agent provocateur. The detective's evidence was supplemented by a series of informers who turned state's evidence. Irish Catholics were excluded from the juries as a matter of course [although, as Kenny points out on p. 218, Germans who couldn't even understand the testimony in English were accepted].... As one historian aptly put it: 'The Molly Maguire investigation and trials marked one of the most astounding surrenders of sovereignty in American history. A private corporation initiated the investigation... the state provided only the courtroom and the hangman' (Kenny, p. 213). On pp. 213-214, he says that "Thomas Duffy, James Roarity, and Jack Kehow, for example, surely ought not to have been convicted as charged" while admitting that "even those who were wrongly convicted may well have been involved in other, similar activities" -- in essence, the Mollies were real and were violent; it's just that no one truly knows who did what, and the trials did not really clarify the situation.

So, for instance, Kenny, p. 222, suggests that there was no real case against John Kehoe; it's just that he was a major figure in the Ancient Order of Hibernians, and since the whole Pinkerton case rested on saying that the Hibernians and the Mollies were the same thing, they had to get Kehoe -- not because he was actually guilty but because the logic of their case required him to be guilty; if they couldn't nail him, then their other cases would be weakened at an abstract level, and they couldn't offer actual proof of much of anything. Kehoe had to die for the sake of the others. Which comes awfully close to judicial murder.

In the first trial, McParland testified for four days, and, pathological liar that he was, the defense could not shake him (Riffenburgh, pp. 125-127. Riffenburgh, pp. 154-156, is more generous than most of today's revisionist historians such as Bimba, and defends the general truth of McParland's statements -- but concludes "So McParlan appears to have been mostly honest, but not totally untainted.... [A] close counting of his witness statements makes it clear that he held back the truth in various parts of his testimony and, ultimately did, in fact, commit perjury. Moreover, he did it more than once").

For the most part, his testimony was convincing. Even the national organization of the Ancient Order of Hibernians condemned the Pennsylvania branch (Bimba, p. 11). On June 21, 1877, ten alleged Mollies were hung, and others were executed on other dates. Lawler was not the witness that McParland was, so in some sense his guilt is less, but he'd certainly brought the traitor into the miners' midst.

After the first few convictions, most of which resulted in sentences of death, some of the accused started turning states' evidence. The first to do so was Patrick Butler, Bodymaster for Lost Creek (Riffenburgh, p. 145).

In August 1875, "Muff Lawler was tried as an accessory after the fact in the Sanger murder. McParlan testified that his old chum took several guns to hide for the killers when they came to his saloon after the murder, and added that, 'I know that he knew of crimes before they were committed, because before these men came back he said he wondered how the boys got along....' Lawler quickly admitted his role and turned state's evidence by corroborating information about other crimes, but the jury was unable to arrive at a unanimous verdict, after voting 10-2 for acquittal" (Riffenburgh, p. 146).

"On September 21, the Shenandoah saloonkeeper and AOH bodymaster, Michael 'Muff' Lawler, was arraigned as an accessory before the fact in the killings of Sanger and Uren. Lawler turned state's evidence and, as a result, the jury failed to reach a verdict.... But, in November, Lawler was tried for a second time in the Sanger-Uren case, convicted of second-degree murder [on November 13, 1876], and sent to prison" (Kelly, p. 224).

"McParlan returned briefly to Pottsville [after some months out of sight]... for the second prosecution of Muff Lawler. Having not succeeded with the earlier case, the prosecution used the same information but changed the charge from accessory to the murder of Sanger to that of Uren" (Riffenburgh, pp. 147-148). The defense pointed out defects in "McKenna's" actions, but the jury still found Lawler guilty.
That wasn't the end of Lawler's role in the Molly trials. In 1877, three men were accused of the murder of Alexander Rea in 1868. The main evidence was the testimony of a fellow by the name of "Kelly the Bum" -- a man who had already been convicted of highway robbery and grand larceny for other crimes. He was given a pardon for his testimony, plus money from citizens that let him leave the country (Kenny, p. 230) -- but you wonder why any Molly would have trusted him. Lawler corroborated some of Kéelly's claims, and the three, Hester, McHugh, and Tully, joined the list of alleged Mollies sentenced to death (Kenny, pp. 228-229).
In the end, twenty men were hung for their part in the coalfield violence (so Riffenburgh, p. 150, contradicting the Weir/Hanlan figure given above; to be fair, some of the hangings were only tangentially related to the Mollies).
Lawler, unlike most of the others convicted, did not swing -- he was only an accessory, plus he had turned states' evidence. He not only survived; the Reading company gave him a job at the Indian Ridge shaft (Riffenburgh, p. 163). Little wonder the miners judged him harshly -- particularly since most of the local miners were Irish, and the Irish hated informers above all.
It is ironic to note that Gowen's Reading Company had spent so much to secure its monopoly that it went into bankruptcy in 1880 and forced Gowen out the next year (Kenny, p. 282). The company survived, and Gowen even returned in time, but he eventually killed himself in 1889 (Riffenburgh,
p. 190).
Soon after Lawler's trial -- four years after James McParlan(d) had come to the area, the Pennsylvania coal cases were over. McParland left, never to return. Many of those he had accused had departed in an even more permanent way.
It might perhaps be noted that, in January 1979, Pennsylvania's Board of Pardons recommended, and Governor Joseph Wayne officially granted, a posthumous pardon to John Kehoe, the man McParland called the ringleader (Kenny, p. 284).
It's interesting that only three Mollies seem to have songs about them, and that Lawler is one of them. Maybe it was Lawler's connection with McParland which earned him special attention. His is the only song to have a Laws number, but that may be an accident of publishing history, because the other Molly ballad was published later. Kenny, p. 194, refers to James "Powderkeg" Kerrigan as "the most infamous of the Molly Maguires to turn informer," and I think that description is right.
Kerrigan is mentioned much more often in the histories than is Lawler. After his testimony, he fled to Virginia and took a different name, dying in 1898 (Kenny, p. 230 n. 59). Kenny, p. 230, reports a ballad in Korson, "James Kerrigan's Confession," but I haven't seen it.
There is also a rare item about Thomas Duffy, one of the executed men, called "Thomas Duffy." -
RBW
Bibliography

- Bimba: Anthony Bimba, The Molly Maguires: The true story of labor's martyred pioneers in the coalfields, 1932 (I use the 1989 International Publishers paperback)
- Kenny: Kevin Kenny, Making Sense of the Molly Maguires, Oxford University Press, 1998
- Lukas: J. Anthony Lukas, Big Trouble, 1997 (I use the 1998 Touchstone paperback)
- Riffenburgh: Beau Riffenburgh, Pinkerton's Great Detective, Bloomsbury, 2013 (I use the 2014 Penguin paperback)
- Weir/Hanlan: Robert E. Weir and James P. Hanlan, editors, Historical Encyclopedia of American Labor, 2 volumes, Greenwood Press, 2004

Last updated in version 6.1
File: LE25

Muffin Man, The
DESCRIPTION: "Do you know the muffin man Who lives in Drury Lane?" "Yes I know...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1837 (Hone); c.1820 (Bodleian Douce Adds. 134(8), according to Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)
NOTES [188 words]: "In Bath, before Sally Lunas were so fashionable, ... muffins were cried with a song beginning -- 'Don't you know the muffin man! Don't you know his name! And don't you know the muffin man! That lives in Bridewell-lane! &c'" (source: William Hone, The Every-Day Book and Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame cites a broadside Bodleian, Douce Adds. 134(8) that is not in the Bodleian online catalog. The date is c.1820 and begins "Don't you know the muffin man?" - BS
According to Arnold Kellett, The Yorkshire Dictionary of Dialect, Tradition, and Folklore, revised edition, Smith Settle, 2002, p. 119, "In Yorkshire, muffins were commonly sold in the streets by the muffin man, who advertised his wares by ringing a bell." Kellett adds on p. 206 that the muffin man also sold yeast.
I am amazed to realize that I know (in a substantially different form from that cited here) a song which seems to be so obscure. I remember only a few words, however, and do not know whether I learned it in Michigan or Minnesota. The latter is more likely. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.3
File: OpGa104

Muileann Dubh, Am (The Black Mill)
DESCRIPTION: Gaelic. The black mill is moving around and we expect to go dancing. There are many things you wouldn't expect at the black mill
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage dancing nonballad
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Creighton-MaritimeFolkSongs, p. 179, "Black Mill, The" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [87 words]: The translation, as far as it goes, is from the Celtic Lyrics Corner site. Two verses are untranslated: "An cual thu gun robh snaoisean" (apparently something to do with "your faggot was without snuff") and "Tha gobhair is crodh-laoigh ann" (maybe "the goat and calf are there"). If you can translate this please update the entry.
Is the mill here symbolic, in a mythic sense? For a popular starting point for research on the mill as a non-sexual symbol see Hamlet's Mill by Giorgio de Santillana and Hertha von Dechend. - BS
File: CrMa179

Muir Hen, The
DESCRIPTION: The singer bends his bow to fire at the muir hen, but cannot fire. She complains that the young men "do want the pouder." The young man later arrives with "pouder," and twenty weeks later her back grows sore. He still fears a misfire
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1827 (Kinloch)
KEYWORDS: courting pregnancy bawdy hunting
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Kinloch-TheBalladBook XVII, pp. 65-66, "The Muir Hen" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan7 1426Ab, "The Bonnie Muirhen" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Roud #6859
CROSS-REFERENCES:
Muir of Culloden, The

DESCRIPTION: "I'll sing of my country, its deep glens and fountains... I'll sing of its battles renowned in story." "On the sixteenth of April, I'll ever remember." The Jacobite leaders disagree and attack half-heartedly; "Cauld lies the lads on the Muir of Culloden."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1908 (Greig/Duncan1)
KEYWORDS: Jacobites battle death
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Apr 16, 1746 - Battle of Culloden Muir ends the 1745 Jacobite rebellion
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #124, p. 1, "The Muir of Culloden"; #125, pp. 2-3, "The Muir of Culloden" (1 text plus 1 fragment)
Greig/Duncan1 127, "The Muir of Culloden" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 293, "The Muir of Culloden" (1 text)
Roud #3777
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Culloden Moor" (subject)
cf. "Culloden Field" (subject)
NOTES [11291 words]: Most songs of the end of 1745 Jacobite Rebellion (at least the ones in English) seem to talk about Bonnie Prince Charlie. This is a genuine exception; it is almost entirely about the tragic Battle of Culloden, which not only destroyed the Jacobite army but, ultimately, the Highland culture.

The history of the 1745 rebellion is almost like a wave: The level rises and rises and crests and then collapses. Indeed, the whole history of Jacobitism is rather like that. In the fifteen years after George I had died, the Jacobite cause had seemed to die down -- notably due to the accession of George II in 1727 (Magnusson, p. 584); even the most extreme Jacobite would agree that he was an improvement on his father. It took two major change to bring Jacobitism back to life: The European political situation, and the rise of a new generation of leaders. James III, the "Old Pretender," was a pessimistic, uninspiring leader who outlived five monarchs who sat on the throne he claimed (Cook, p. 409) but managed to drive off even his own wife (Cook, pp. 407-408); he did his own cause more harm than good.

His son, Charles Edward Stuart, the "Young Pretender," was altogether different -- handsome, outgoing, and tremendously attractive. Few would call him a genius and some declare him little more than a drunk -- but he roused wild affection; he must have been one of the most charismatic leaders in history.

The whole thing started, in a way, as an incident in the War of the Austrian Succession, in which Britain (as usual) found itself fighting France. In 1743, the French were preparing to invade the British Isles. The invading force was to have been led by the brilliant Marshal de Saxe (Dorn, p. 161), who was so superior to British generals of the period that success seemed certain. Britain was poorly defended -- so many troops had gone to the continent that there were supposedly only 8000 soldiers in all of Britain (Browning, p. 221). But the expedition, which was intended to take place in 1744, was intercepted and ruined by the British fleet and storms (Magnusson, p. 585; Reid, pp. 7-9; Wilkinson, pp. 56-58).

Prince Charles, who had hoped to lead the expedition, wasn't willing to take that for an answer. The French were not willing to commit much to a second attempt, in part because they didn't trust Charles -- Browning, p. 220, says that the French viewed him as a "blinkered and quixotic
The "blinkered" part probably arises from his manifest incompetence in writing and in scholarship; he hated studying, and McLynn-Charles, p. 35, quotes his tutor's comment on the boy's schoolwork: "[I]t is impossible to get him to apply to any study as he ought to or indeed in any tolerable degree, by which means the Latin goes ill on." Wilkinson, p. 45, tells us that he spoke French, Spanish, and Italian as well as English, and apparently eventually gained some Gaelic as well, but he flatly could not spell. Kybett, p. 31, declares that he was "functionally illiterate," but also claims that he "never fully mastered English, his primary language." This, of course, is nonsense unless he communicated by grunting; at best, it shows how diverse the opinions about Charles were. But it is agreed that he was very, very stubborn. He clearly hated studying -- and being told that things were impossible.

McLynn-Charles, p. 553, gives perhaps the most balanced assessment of his abilities: "The old view of the prince as a man unable to deal with failure because of mental feebleness will not stand up to scrutiny. A close study of Charles Edward reveals him as highly intelligent, even if the intelligence was often of the divergent or 'lateral' type. His poor spelling and punctuation is a red herring, assiduously peddled by those who cannot see that 'intelligent' and 'academic' are very far from matching complements. More pertinently, the prince, unlike his father who wrote letters of impeccable orthography and sentiments, never wrote a boring sentence.... The prince habitually uses a medley of unusual (even eccentric) arguments, wit, irony and imagery that gives even his most self-pitying letters a peculiar richness...." Charles was stubborn to an extreme, and perhaps dyslexic, and there were things he never learned (such as military tactics) -- but he was certainly more than a mere fool and a drunk.

Even though the French wouldn't support Charles, they certainly didn't mind him going on his own as long as it didn't cost them anything. Supported by some Irish exiles in France, and by pawning his mother's jewels (Magnusson, p. 586), he managed to scrape up two ships and headed for the Hebrides with about 3500 muskets (firelocks), 2500 swords, a tiny treasury, and about sixty marines (Reid, p. 10).

The two ships included only one real fighting vessel, the Elizabeth. On their way from France to Scotland, the convoy ran into the British vessel Lion. Having little other choice, the Prince's expedition put as many crew as possibly on the Elizabeth and left her to fight the Lion alone. (The ships ended up battering each other to the point where neither could continue, suffering total casualties in excess of 300; Browning, p. 221.) The prince, with half his supply of arms left behind, continued on (Wilkinson, pp. 60-63).

The prince landed on Eriskay with only a handful of men, and only a handful of that handful (the "seven men of Moidart") crossed to the mainland, landing at, yes, Moidart. Many chiefs were afraid of a rising without at least some foreign troops (Magnusson, p. 586) -- but Charles was charming enough that he quickly built an army. His reply, when some chiefs told him to go home, was the stuff of legend: "I am come home, Sir, and I will entertain no notion at all of returning to the place from whence I came; for I am persuaded that my faithful Highlanders will stand by me" (Magnusson, p. 587).

Not all of them did, to be sure. But most of the MacDonalds joined him (Thomson, p. 99, claims that they made up 40% of his force, but this was true for only a very short time. Still, most of them came in early, making them very important). Add in Lochiel's Camerons, and it was enough men to organize into something that could be called an army. Plus, while the Prince hadn't been able to bring many firearms, he at least had some -- and most of the Highlanders had been disarmed after the 1715 rebellion, so those who opposed the Jacobites had nothing with which to fight (Browning, p. 243).

It would have been interesting to see what would have happened had a significant fraction of the Campbells, the other great clan, joined. But, of course, Campbells and MacDonalds were not going to be on the same side at this time! (Thomson, p. 98).

It wasn't a big army, but it was enough to occupy Edinburgh (it helped that the city's fortifications were decayed, according to Magnusson, p. 591). Sinclair-Stevenson, p. 57, says that there was no real resistance. In an interesting move that might have done some good had anyone paid attention, the Jacobites proclaimed the Union of Scotland and England to be dissolved; Magnusson, p. 592. They then took on and defeated Sir John Cope at Prestonpans (for which see "Hey Johnnie Cope" and "Tranent Muir") in just ten minutes; it was said to be the shortest battle of the entire War of the Austrian Succession (Browning, p. 241).

After some further maneuvering in Scotland, during which more Highlanders joined the army but the Lowlanders for the most part proved disinterested (Fry/Fry, p. 194), Charles and his men headed into England. This was controversial -- many of the Scots wanted to be independent of England, whereas Charles wanted to regain the entire British Kingdom for the Stuarts. Plus many leaders thought that their force simply wasn't sufficient to attack the English. Charles finally persuaded a bare majority of his senior officers that they should take the army south (Browning, p. 243).

An invasion of England could not go down the center of the island due to the Pennine range. It had to go either to the east (via Berwick and Newcastle) or to the west (via Carlisle). The Hanoverian army of Marshall Wade blocked the eastward route. So the Jacobites went west. Some scholars think "The Flower of France and England, O" tells of their occupation of Carlisle -- an event which caused significant friction, because Lord George Murray (the brother of Charles's Marquis of Tullibardine, who had been one of the Seven Men of Moidart), who was widely regarded as the best soldier in the army but was a confirmed pessimist and as touchy as mercury fulminate, felt slighted. Neither for the first nor the last time (Sinclair-Stevenson, p. 58).

I note incidentally that, despite his reputation, Murray before 1745 seems never to have commanded anything larger than an understrength regiment (Young/Adair, p. 256), so that his position in the Jacobite army (he was officially Lieutenant General, giving him charge of half the force, and also a sort of de facto chief of staff) was about two grades above his previous best rank. He had no more strategic experience than anyone else in the army. He was now 51 years old, and set in his opinions; Reid, p. 23, quotes one of his own aides as saying "Lord George was vigilant, active, and diligent; his plans were always judiciously formed, and he carried them promptly and vigorously into execution. However, with an infinity of good qualities, he was not without his defects: proud, haughty, blunt and imperious, he wished to have executive disposal of everything and, feeling his superiority, would listen to no advice." Not a good recipe for a second-in-command! It was even worse because Prince Charles was unused to dealing with such independent men (McLynn-Charlie, p. 142); they were often at loggerheads.

Although there were forces in England capable of fighting the invaders, the Jacobite maneuver did a good job of befuddling them. The main defensive army, led by Marshall Wade, was centered on Newcastle, and it just sat there. A second army, assembled by the Duke of Cumberland, tried to block the Jacobites from reaching Wales and the southwest, and it too tended to sit still. The Jacobite army, instead of continuing south from Carlisle, soon turned to the southeast, almost halfway between Wade and Cumberland (Browning, p. 243). The objective was London -- a go-for-broke gamble to take over the government before they could be stopped.

The invading army eventually reaching Derby. It had been a depressing march. There had been Jacobite rebellions in Scotland before, but no Jacobite army had reached England south of Cumbria. They had hoped to find supporters. Except for a few recruits raised in Manchester, they found nothing. As Dorn says (p. 162), the rebellion's failure "was certain from the moment when Prince Charles on his southward march from Carlisle to Derby encountered only a dispiriting indifference among the inhabitants of the countryside." They managed to raise (extort, really) money in most places -- enough to keep the army fed. "But the Jacobites were invariably greeted by sullen faces or by boots and jeers from the brave" (Kybett, p. 170).

And the Jacobite army remained small -- McLynn-Army, p. 25, lists the formations which began the march south. There were about 5100 infantry, mostly in small formation which were hard to control, and many of them ill-equipped. The cavalry totaled only 520, and their equipment was even worse. Had they raised the expected recruits in England, they could perhaps have defeated the Hanoverian armies in detail. Certainly the rank and file were very confident (McLynn-Army, p. 123). But many of the officers felt that, without reinforcements, there was no hope of real victory -- they might win a battle by stratagem, but if it came to a set battle against a proper Hanoverian army, they would certainly be destroyed.

So, at Derby, there was a council of war -- one that lasted from shortly after sunrise until midnight, then resumed the next day. Apparently many of Charles's officers had agreed to advance on England more as a raid than an actual invasion, and were willing to continue only if foreign troops appeared -- and, so far, none had (Magnusson, p. 603. It's ironic to note that this was at about the time Lord John Drummond's expedition, mentioned below, was being mounted). Charles had not understood this to be their meaning (McLynn-Charlie, p. 188). What was Charles to do? As Adair/Young note on p. 248, in connection with another revolt, "A rebellion on the defensive must fail." Charles could have risked everything on a run for London. He could have disbanded the revolt on the spot and fled. He could have retreated for Scotland and tried again for foreign help. Or he could retreat for Scotland and then dispersed the army.

In practical terms, the first was the most risky. It was also the only thing that could possibly succeed -- and McLynn-Army, p. vi, offers reasons why it might have succeeded, because the English government was in panic and the London mob was fickle. The odds were huge -- but the odds of winning any other way were non-existent. As Wilkinson says (p. 136), "There was still just a chance in London, a gambler's throw. But a retreat could only mean one thing -- the failure of the rebellion.

If the rebels had wanted an example of the results of inaction, they need only to have looked at the failure of the 1715 rebellion. But, somehow, they didn't consider it.

Charles wanted to go for it. But Lord George Murray again showed his severe pessimism, and argued that the army must retreat (Wilkinson, p. 132). He brought most of the other leaders over to his side. Sinclair-Stevenson, pp. 59-60, declares, "It [the arguments of those in favor of retreat] was all special pleading, and almost certainly the wrong decision. It was not well received: The Highlanders, conceiving at first that they were on the march to attack the army of the Duke of Cumberland, displayed the utmost joy and cheerfulness, but as soon as the day allowed them to see the objects around them and they found that we were retracing our steps, nothing was to be heard throughout the whole army but expressions of rage and lamentation."

Magnusson, p. 603: "They called it 'Black Friday': Friday, 6 December 1745, the day the Jacobites began their retreat from Derby." Page 604: "Lord George Murray had won the day, but had he lost the future. For two and a half centuries there has been endless speculation. Derby is one of the great, unanswerable 'ifs' of Scottish history."

Especially since the French had finally been induced to help out, in a small way. A small force of reinforcements, mostly taken from the Irish units in the French army, had been sent out around the end of 1745 under the command of Lord John Drummond (McLynn-Charlie, p. 202).

The Jacobite cause thus gained roughly a thousand experienced troops, plus artillery heavier than the light pieces they had managed to capture so far (Reid, p. 83). It's too bad these forces hadn't arrived earlier; their arrival, and Drummond's strong leadership, might have done much to strengthen the Jacobite grip on Scotland, which weakened appreciably while the army was in England.

Despite the despair of the retreat, and the hostility and appalling weather the army met on its way back to Scotland, there were military successes during the retreat, at Clifton and Falkirk. The former was small; the Duke of Cumberland's army was snapping at the Jacobite rear, and Lord George Murray, who commanded the rear, gave his vanguard a bit of a bloody nose and caused him to halt his pursuit (McLynn-Army, pp. 186-189). Falkirk was big though a very close-run thing (Sinclair-Stevenson, p. 60). But there was little planning behind what was done at this time; as Reid says on p. 94 of the siege of Stirling which preceded Falkirk, "they had decided to besiege Stirling Castle, not through any pressing strategic necessity, but rather it seemed for lack of anything more positive to do."

Falkirk shouldn't have happened. The Hanoverian forces under Hawley (who had replaced Marshall Wade) had a tremendous superiority in cavalry, but they did not scout the field (Reid, p. 98). Hawley's junior officers apparently considered his orders absurd, but he was so harsh that they dared not disobey (McLynn-Charlie, p. 209).

Falkirk is generally described as a big brawl. Neither side was properly deployed, and it ended in darkness and storm (Reid, p. 100) -- not too surprising, since it took place on January 17, 1746. Wilkinson, p. 176, says that "it was Prince Charles in person who by his intervention saved the situation," but most other sources think that he did little good, even causing the pursuit to fail (see, e.g., McLynn-Charlie, p. 210). Casualties were relatively light (Reid, p. 102), but the Jacobites has possession of the field, and picked up some useful equipment as a result.

Then, after Falkirk, the commanders started arguing again. Lord George Murray claimed that soldiers were deserting, that the weather was bad, and that British forces were on their tail; the only option was to head for the Highlands (Wilkinson, p. 184). As Wilkinson comments on p. 185, "Another victory was to be turned into a rearguard action." The retreat continued, but Charles himself wrote, "I know I have an army that I cannot command any further than the chief officers please, and therefore if you are resolved of it I must yield -- but I take God to witness that it is with the greatest reluctance, and that I wash my hands of the fatal consequences which I foresee but cannot help."

Whoever is to blame, these delays and retreats gave the government time to bring home more troops. Note that Falkirk is in Scotland, not near the Forth. At the end of 1745, the Jacobites had retired back into Scotland (Kybett, p. 180) -- though they left a small garrison left at Carlisle which was quickly swallowed. (A bad move by Charles, since he had left all of his artillery with the garrison, hampering his future operations; Magnusson, p. 605. Though if he'd followed Lord George Murray's plan, things might have been just as bad; McLynn-Army, p. 191, says that Murray wanted to trash all the baggage.)

Kybett and Magnusson both think that Charles was by this time an alcoholic (Magnusson, p. 610, and Kybett, almost everywhere; Wilkinson, p. 228, admits that many called him a drunkard as early as the 1740s but says that he was simply trying to act like a British squire. McLynn-Charlie accepts that he ended up a drunkard, and acknowledges that he always had a fondness for drink, but does not think it began to overwhelm him until after the Forty-Five; on p. 243 he argues that it was during the flight, when Charles was under great tension but spent most of his time simply sitting and waiting, that he really started drinking heavily). It cannot be denied that the decision to garrison Carlisle was militarily bad -- yet it made some symbolic sense: Charles did not want to entirely abandon England.

The Jacobites returned to a Scotland which had largely been occupied against them. Glasgow had always been loyal to the Hanoverians, and Edinburgh had been recaptured soon after the invasion of England began (Magnusson, p. 606). The only good news was that Lord John Drummond has his army at Perth, which had even been reinforced by a few French soldiers (Wilkinson, p. 159). This force combined with the invasion army to win the aforementioned battle of Falkirk. But there was no follow-up; "The Jacobites spent most of the month of January in or around Falkirk, and in doing so they threw away whatever initiative they might have gained. They were never to regain it" (Magnusson, p. 608).

A month later, after Charles and Lord George Murray had another fight, they fell back into the Highlands (Magnusson, p. 615; McLynn-Charlie, p. 218, who adds on p. 219 that each of these retreats was disorganized -- the Jacobites, as Murray should have known, were horrible at logistics). Charles was once again sarcastic about the potential effects of the retreat: "Can we imagine, that where we go the enemy will not follow, and at last oblige us to a battle which we now decline?" (Browning, p. 264). In this, Charles again saw more clearly than Murray. If there was any happy note for the Prince, it was that Charles met Clementina Walkinshaw, the closest thing he had to a love of his life, around this time (Magnusson, p. 608). Wilkinson, p. 157, says that it is not quite certain when he met her, but it was definitely in early 1746. McLynn-Charlie, p. 204, says that she helped nurse him through the various illnesses he suffered in early 1746. According to Cook, p. 422, she had actually been named for Charles's mother Clementina Sobieska, so it was pretty clear what her family politics were!

Other than that, it was a particularly hard time for the Prince, who was sick for several months in early 1746 (McLynn-Charlie, pp. 232-233), even as the army was enjoying several minor successes. But the force was still pinned back into a small, desolate area. They were out of money, meaning the soldiers could not be paid (Wilkinson, p. 193; McLynn-Charlie, p. 233. Magnusson, p. 616, says that a ship sent by the French with a large supply of cash was captured). They had managed to bring in a French technical expert on sieges, Monsieur Mirabelle; he proved a complete incompetent (Magnusson, p. 612). Based in the relatively unproductive country around Inverness, they were short of supplies. Their commissary was breaking down even as the death of Charles's efficient administrator Murray of Broughton (McLynn-Charlie, p. 235).

In this situation, a good many clansmen deserted (Wilkinson, p. 194). Somehow, before the army fell apart of starvation and lack of pay and lack of hope, they needed to get out of their trap. They never figured out how to do it.

Into their stronghold came William Augustus, Duke of Cumberland (1721-1765), the third son of George II (and the second son to survive infancy), the man who had lost the skirmish at Clifton. Cumberland's record in wars in Europe shows that he was no general, but he inflicted ferocious discipline and understood butchery very well; massacres don't require brainpower. His army had been following the Jacobites since the March to Derby (his had been the army the chiefs were most afraid of when they argued for a retreat), but apart from the skirmish at Clifton, this was the first time he had closed on them. They had had one chance to stop him as he crossed the Spey (McLynn-Charlie, pp. 237-238; Reid, pp. 121-124). They didn't (most authors seem to think this was sheer stupidity, by junior officers or by Charles himself; Reid, p. 125, blames lack of reconnaissance). After that, the Jacobites were cornered; they had the sea to one side, dead land on another, and Cumberland coming up against them on another.

The faction led by Lord George Murray, that endless fount of suggestions that increased the odds of short-term survival at the expense of any chance of long-term success, wanted to go to the hills and fight as guerrillas (Magnusson, p. 616). But this would mean giving up arms and equipment, and -- as the government's vengeance after Culloden showed -- would open up the clans to piecemeal destruction. Charles insisted he would fight. This was the most hopeless of all the Jacobite battles -- but, once again, it seems to me the most reasonable option in the broad sense. The Jacobites had little chance of victory, but failure to fight meant clear defeat.

In a singularly foolish move, the Jacobite army had been scattered for the winter -- and did not manage to concentrate fully in time for Culloden (McLynn-Charlie, p. 239). The extra few thousand men who were still out foraging might have made a great deal of difference.

The Hanoverian army had the Highlanders outnumbered on the order of two to one -- Wilkinson, p. 195, estimates Cumberland to have had 9000 troops, the Jacobites 5000. Browning, p. 265, gives the numbers as 9000 and 5400. Young/Adair, p. 262, credit the Jacobites with "at most" 5000.
Reid, pp. 145-146, puts 3800 in the Jacobite front line, which would probably mean 5500-6000 for the whole force. Young/Adair estimates the loyalist army at 13000. Kybett, p. 203, makes the exceptional estimate that the Hanoverians had 14000 troops. Brander, p. 215, thinks the Jacobites had only 4500 going into the Night March, compared to 10000 Hanoverians -- though on p. 217, Brander gives the Hanoverian numbers at Culloden as 9000 and Charles's as "certainly under 5,000."

And, no matter what their initial numbers, the Jacobite ranks were depleted by the march, and some of the men who made it back from the march would still have lost their weapons, and others would be too tired and hungry to fight successfully. This is one of the main reasons why estimates vary so much: Although we know which units were present for the Night March, the disaster of Culloden meant that there were no reports about the units' strength before the March or -- even more so -- after.

In addition to their edge in numbers, the Hanoverians of course had a great advantage in equipment. Making this disparity worse is the fact that Charles's handful of French regulars, who presumably would have been the best musketeers he had, were in the second line (Brander, p. 217).

The Battle of Culloden, April 27, 1746, was one of the most mismanaged affairs of military history. Experience showed that Charles's Highlanders had only one successful tactic, the so-called Highland Charge. The idea was to get a bunch of burly clansmen with swords in among the enemy. It worked better than a modern would think -- the standard army of the time was armed with slow-firing smoothbore muskets that weren't very accurate. If the charge were properly executed, the defenders might have time for only one volley, which would not do enough damage to halt the attackers. But the Charge required suitable terrain to pull it off. Why Charles's forces messed up so badly, and who made the decision to fight as they did, is an open question.

Lord George Murray wrote afterward that the Jacobite plan was hopeless -- Kybett, p. 197 -- but of course Murray was trying to defend his own behavior and make Charles look bad.

Reid, p. 129, reports, "Murray's criticism of the field appears to have owed more to his insistence on contradicting everything which [Adjutant General] Sullivan proposed, for on previous experience it fitted the rebel army's requirements in every respect. In order to execute a 'Highland Charge' successfully the rebels needed a clear run at their opponents, as they had on the flat cornfields of Prestonpans, not on the broken grounds of the defensive position proposed by Murray."

Magnusson, p. 617, says of the battlefield, "They used to call it Drumossie Moor -- a bleak stretch of boggy, heather-clad upland moor above Culloden House, south-east of Inverness, overlooking the broad waters of the Moray Firth." McLynn-Charlie, p. 240, agrees with Magnusson at least in part: The ground on the left was too wet to make it easy to attack.

The original Jacobite plan was for a night march, allowing them to attack the Hanoverians at sunrise at Nairn. There is no agreement on whose idea this was. Ben Schwartz looked through the early histories on Google, and found the following quotes:

 Supporting the theory that it was Charles's idea:*

Robert Chambers, History of the Rebellion of 1745-6 (London and Edinburgh, 1869 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 281, "There yet remained, before playing the great stake of a [pitch?]ed battle, one chance of success by the irregular mode [of] warfare to which the army was accustomed, and Charles [res]olved to put it to trial. This was a night-attack upon the [ca]mp of the Duke of Cumberland."

"Concluding from the inactivity of the duke of Cumberland that he had no intention of marching that day, Charles held a council of war in the afternoon, to deliberate upon the course it might be considered most advisable to pursue in consequence of the duke's stay at Nairn. According to Charles's own statement, he had formed the bold and desperate design of surprising the English army in their camp during the night; but, desirous of knowing the views of his officers before divulging his plan, he allowed all the members of the council to speak before him. After hearing the sentiments of the chiefs, and the other commanders who were present, Lord George Murray proposed to attack the duke of Cumberland during the night, provided it was the general opinion that the attack could be made before one or two o'clock in the morning. Charles, overjoyed at the suggestion of his lieutenant-general, immediately embraced him, said that he approved of it, that in fact he had contemplated the measure himself, and that he did not intend to have disclosed it till all the members of the council had delivered their sentiments [vide Memorandum by the Prince, note, p. 134]."

(James Johnstone) The Chevalier de Johnstone, Memoirs of the Rebellion in 1745 and 1746
When mid-day (the 15th) came, and the King's army did not appear, it was concluded that they had not moved from their camp at Nairn, and would not move that day, which was the Duke of Cumberland's birth-day. About two o'clock, the men were ordered to their quarters, and Charles, calling together the generals and chiefs, made them a speech, in which he proposed to march with all his forces in the evening, and make a night-attack upon the Duke of Cumberland's army, in their camp at Nairn.

"At first nobody seemed to relish this proposal; and the Duke of Perth and Lord John Drummond expressed their dislike of it. Lochiel, who was not a man of many words, said that the army would be stronger next day by 1500 men at least; but when Lord George Murray rose and seconded the proposal made by Charles, insisting and enlarging upon the advantage of a night-attack, that rendered cannon and cavalry (in which the superiority of the Duke's army chiefly consisted) of little service, it was agreed to make the attempt, as the best thing that could be done in their present circumstances, for they were almost entirely destitute of both money and provisions."

The notes apparently were added by the uncredited editor, "J.B" in 1821, along with the Introduction that had this to say about Home, whom he was apparently responsible for quoting, avove. "But, of Home, from the introduction, pp. xlvii-xlviii, 'The history of Home, which appeared nearly sixty years after the Rebellion, and from which, previous to its publication, considerable expectations were entertained, added little to our knowledge on any of the above important points.
This was partly owing to the defective information of the author, and partly owing to his fear of giving offence. Having himself borne arms in the Rebellion as a volunteer, in aid of the government, he was not a person to whom the leading Jacobites would willingly confide their secrets; .. Besides, the writer of this introduction can assert, of his own knowledge, that Mr Home submitted his history in manuscript to some members of the royal family.. His book affords materials for the historian, but ought not to be considered a history."

 Supporting the theory that it was Lord George Murray's idea:*
Andrew Lang, "Prince Charles Stuart" in Scribner's Magazine (New York, 1895 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol. XVII January-June p. 416, "At a council Lord George proposed what Charles was longing for, a night surprise."

"Murray, Lord George (1694-1760" in Dictionary of National Biography (London, 1909 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol. XIII p. 1257, "Murray was entirely opposed to making a stand against Cumberland at Culloden.. He therefore advised that meanwhile a retreat should be made to the hills to await reinforcements, and when overruled in this, stipulated for a night attack as affording the only possible chance of victory."

 Unclear as to whose idea it was:*
Robert Chambers, Jacobite Memoirs of the Rebellion of 1745 (Edinburgh, 1834 ("Digitized by Google")), p. 138, "The Prince (being informed that the Duke of Cumberland had halted that day at Nairn, to refresh his men, and that the ships with provisions were coming into the bay of Inverness, that evening) called a council of war; and, after great debates, (although that neither the Earl of Cromarty, who by this time was prisoner, though not known, nor the Macphersons, nor a great many of the Frazers was come up,) it was resolved to march, and endeavor to surprise the Duke in his camp at Nairn, about twelve miles distance."
The Lockhart Papers (London, 1817 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol. II p. 518 in "Account of events at Inverness and Culloden" [likely a source for Chambers], "The P. being inform'd that the Duke of Cumberland had halted that day at Nairn to refresh his men (the ships with his provisions came into the bay of Inverness that evening) the P. call'd a council and after great debates, tho' neither the Earl of Cromarty (who by that time was prisoner tho' not known) nor the Macphersons nor a great many of the Fraizers was come up, it was resolved to march, and endeavour to surprise the Duke in his camp at Nairn about twelve miles distant."

Among modern commentators, Reid, p. 130, says the concept of the night march was Murray's.
Wilkinson, p. 195, says, "Lord George Murray came forward with an ingenious plan for attacking the royal army at a disadvantage, thus offsetting their numerical superiority. Briefly, his proposal was to make an immediate night march upon Nairn, followed by the Highland charge at the first peep of dawn.... From Murray's own account it seems doubtful whether the proposal first came from him, but, at any rate, he adopted it with enthusiasm." Magnusson, p. 618, writes, "When the Hanoverian army did not appear on 15 April, Lord George Murray urged that the Jacobites should turn the tables by taking the offensive, and suggested a surprise night attack on Cumberland's sleeping camp."

Young/Adair, p. 258, says that "This plan, somewhat reminiscent of Monmouth's for Sedgemoor, was devised by the Prince and O'Sullivan. The Duke of Perth disliked it... but Lord George Murray, though 'very sensible of the danger should it miscarry,' came round to it, probably because he preferred it to fighting on the open moor." McLynn-Charlie, p. 241, describes the prince as "cajoling" the chiefs while Murray argued for another battlefield, and McLynn-Charlie, p. 242, implies that Murray was opposed to the very end. Brander, p. 215, credits the whole business to Charles and O'Sullivan, never even mentioning Murray. Kybett, p. 198, says "Charles walked around the field [the day before Culloden] speaking to individual officers, trying to cajole them to agree to an impetuously conceived plan to attack Cumberland's camp at dawn the next day. No doubt he hoped to take the drunken government troops by surprise, but almost without exception everyone believed it a mad scheme." (Of course, Kybett would say red was blue if it would make Charles look bad.)

"[Adjutant General] Sullivan was commanded to give the orders, and explain what he said in them. Lord George answered that there was no need of orders, [that] everybody knew what he had to do" (Reid, p. 132). But in fact they did "not" know what they had to do. "The attack on Nain, put forward more or less on the spur of the moment by Murray, was badly thought out, poorly prepared and incompetently executed, and responsibility for the debacle lies squarely with Murray alone." The real problem was not with the idea, though, but with its execution. The Highlanders had not been fed for two days, and were weakened by a cold rain (Magnusson, p. 618). The ground had not been scouted. The distance was rather long for a night march (Wilkinson, p. 195, says 12 miles; McLynn-Charlie, p. 244, implies a distance of 10 miles; Young/Adair, p. 258, says eight miles but adds that the night was exceptionally dark; Magnusson, p. 618, says 16 kilometers, or 10 miles. The map in Reid, p. 135, shows that Culloden Moor is about five miles from Inverness, with Nairn about 12 miles beyond that, but the army did not start from Culloden and would not have followed the direct path).

It would surely have been wiser to cover at least some of the distance before dark, but the army did not start until about 8:30 (Young/Adair, p. 258) or 9:00 p.m. (Magnusson, p. 618). The troops were slow to make the journey, and the march resulted in much disorganization (Magnusson, p. 619). The plan called for the army to divide into three columns, but they ended up all on the same trail (McLynn-Charlie, p. 244). Eventually the column started to break up. Lord George Murray, at the front of the column, sent word to Charles at the rear that it was too late for the attack, and that it had better be abandoned (McLynn-Charlie, p. 245). Charles, ever aggressive, didn't want to give up. But eventually Murray on his own ordered the column to halt (Young/Adair, p. 259). "Lord George made the only decision he could under the circumstances. He ordered what remained of the bitter army back to Culloden" (Kybett, p. 200).

"Surviving accounts of the night are pretty unanimous in depicting it as a sorry shambles from its confused beginning to its acrimonious end. The rebel army initially set off in what should have been three columns, following one behind the other. The first was let by Lord George Murray, the second by Lord John Drummond and the third by the Duke of Perth.... Instead of proceeding straight down the main road to Nairn, Murray decided to move across country, thus shunning any houses and people who might be tempted to warn Cumberland of his approach..." (Reid, p. 133). "[I]t soon proved quite impossible to prevent substantial gaps opening up between the columns and between the individual units within the columns. Murray afterwards tried to blame the French regulars and his MacIntosh guides... " (Reid, pp. 133-134). "[T]he rebel army simply [was] not up to the task" (Reid, pp. 134-136).

Charles apparently went bananas over this; Kybett, p. 200, describes him as losing control completely -- "Charles continued to shout hysterically that nobody could command his army but himself" -- though Reid, p. 139, declares that he put on a brave face. Wilkinson, p. 196, describes him as angry but resigned. Wilkinson and McLynn-Charlie, p. 246, both describe him as asking, "Where the devil are the men going?" McLynn also describes a man who went from fury at being disobeyed to weary resignation after the Duke of Perth pulled him aside and described the situation. Whatever his behavior, there was nothing to be done at that point. Lord George, not the Prince, had decided where and how the last battle would be fought. And his decision was simply dreadful: The open field of Culloden, where the Hanoverian artillery could sweep the Jacobite army.

(I must admit that I've never understood this. I can at least comprehend that Lord George would call off the attack. But why send everyone back to Culloden? Lord George disliked the ground, and the retreat left the men even more tired and hungry. If it was light enough for the night attack to fail, it was light enough to pick a better defensive position.)

Just how close the Jacobites had come to the enemy camp is not certain. Wilkinson, p. 196, and Reid, p. 137, say that Cumberland's campfires were already in sight, but McLynn-Charlie, p. 244, calculates that the Jacobites still had four miles to go before they could attack. Brander, p. 216, gives the distance as two miles from Cumberland's camp.
The troops straggled back to camp, even more hungry and exhausted than they had been before. They were also even more scrambled, because there was no real plan for the retreat (Reid, p. 138). All the Night March had done was soften them up for Cumberland's attack. Magnusson, p. 619, estimates that only a thousand Jacobite soldiers were still ready to fight, and says only 1500 took part in the initial attack on Cumberland's line. This is probably too low, but the number cannot have been large.

Thomson, p. 101, notes that "by every standard the Jacobite generals made a mess of Culloden when battle came on 16 April 1746. They chose unsuitable terrain, tired out their troops by ill-thought-out manoeuvres and vaccination, and failed totally to make proper use of their greatest asset, the Highland charge."

Kybett, whose method of analysis consists of finding the worst possible interpretation of Charles's behavior and then inventing a way to make it sound worse, claims that everyone in the army believed the battle plan was a "desperate attempt" -- and claims that Charles was drunk as the battle began (Kybett, pp. 198-199).

"There has been much argument about the choice of the battleground -- Lord George Murray claimed that it was a death trap for his troops. Others maintain that it was good ground for the Highland clansman to charge over; but it was also ideal terrain for the Hanoverian cavalry" (Magnusson, pp. 619-620).

The final battle took place a little south of the ocean. The Jacobite army seems to have left both its flanks rather exposed (so both the maps in Reid, p. 147, and Young/Adair, p. 264, and the semi-legible sketch facing p. 198 of Wilkinson; Reid, p. 145, says the flanks rested on walled parks. The parks probably had some defensive strength, but only if properly manned -- and they weren't; Reid, pp. 150-151, describes how the Hanoverians used them to outflank the Jacobites on the right).

Of the three divisions of the Jacobite army that had marched to Nairn, two were placed in the front line, with the third division forming a second line. Reid, p. 145, estimates that there were 3800 men in the Jacobite front line, which stretched over a distance of 1100 yards (and with a bit of a gap in it when Lord George Murray realigned some of his forces and the other half did not conform). The second line, which was more a tactical reserve than an actual line of battle, had no more than half that many (Reid, p. 146; in the map on p. 216 of Brander, it is so thin as to hardly even constitute a line). A few units, probably mostly cavalry (much of it dismounted, according to Young/Adair, p. 261), were behind that, but they were not really a line, just a small reserve. The small handful of guns -- perhaps a dozen cannon, of various calibers and poorly manned -- was all in the front line, according to Young/Adair, p. 262.

The Hanoverian army also was arranged in three lines, though Reid shows all three lines as being about equally heavy, while Young/Adair makes the front line very strong and the third line little more than a token; Brander splits the difference and makes the second line almost as strong as the first and the third line very weak. Still, given the relative sizes of the armies, the number in the Hanoverian front line must have been at least as many as in the Jacobite, and their reserves were greater -- and they covered the attack with artillery. Young/Adair, p. 263, says that the Hanoverian artillery was able to fire twenty rounds for each round fired by the Jacobites.

The weather too was on the Hanoverian side; the weather was cold and rainy, and the wind blew into the faces of the Highlanders (Young/Adair, p. 262).

"At Culloden the advantages in terms of firepower and training lay with Cumberland, and he had the bonus of fumbling Jacobite command. The result was swift, decisive and bloody. The Jacobite artillery was silenced by a precise, long-range bombardment from artillermen who were then free to pound the Highland line with shot. When the charge began, fire was opened with grape[shot] which was supplemented by volleys of musketry. The onrush was poorly co-ordinated and the clusters of clansmen who reached the lines of redcoats were repelled by bayonets. Culloden was uncannily like one of those Victorian colonial battles in which steady, confident troops used discipline and firepower to repel tribal armies" (James, p. 219).

Under this pressure, the Jacobites had little choice but to charge. Even so, Young/Adair, p. 265, thinks they waited too long to go in. Reid, p. 159, agrees, and says that Charles probably ordered it; Lord George Murray, who actually commanded the charge, had been responsible for the delay. Unfortunately, it was a disorganized charge -- the Duke of Perth's command on the left hardly took part at all, and when it did move, it got tied up in the bog and the movement halted (Reid, p. 166). The center and right, under Murray, rapidly lost order; Young/Adair, p. 267. Reid, pp. 159, says that, instead of the usual fairly regular advance until the clans were in musket range, at which time the men would rush the enemy lines, most men dropped their guns, drew their swords, and started running at once. And they bunched up, exposing them to concentrated canister fire, which of course slaughtered the officers leading the charge and caused the men to become even more disorganized; Reid, p. 160. Reid estimates they may have lost as many as 400 men just getting to Cumberland's line -- in other words, at least 20% of those who were charging. What was left simply could not hit with the force of a proper Highland Charge. Within minutes of reaching the Hanoverian line, the right had to retreat, and as it retreated, it broke up even further. The left still held together, but when the Hanoverian army counter-charged, the Jacobite army generally dissolved.

Browning, p. 265, gives Hanoverian casualties as 300, Jacobite as 1560 (though this is surely too precise). Magnusson, p. 620, estimates Jacobite losses as "at least 1,500 dead" and the Loyalist forces as having lost fifty dead and 259 wounded. Young/Adair, p. 271, concurs with gives those same numbers for the Hanoverians, adding that one (yes, just one!) soldier was missing, and adds that only about 3000 Hanoverian troops were seriously engaged. Reid, p. 170, also gives 50 dead and 259 wounded in Cumberland's force, and says there were 750 Jacobite dead on the moor, and estimates total Highlander losses as 1500, plus "154 rebel and 222 'French' prisoners."

"The main battle was over inside an hour. Prince Charles, once he saw the day was lost, rode away to the south-west, into hiding. For a moment there might have been a chance of gathering for another fight, but it was too late, and the prince sent word to the clans to disperse and look to their own safety. And well they might for the vengeance of the English was systematic and terrible" (Fry/ Fry, p. 196). Although the Frys, and Kybett, seem to imply cowardice, Sinclair-Stevenson, p. 61, declares that Charles left the battlefield reluctantly.

"The curtain was about to ring down on the clan system and the last battle fought on British soil. It was only regrettable that it should have been marred by the excesses of the victorious general. 'Butcher' Cumberland earned his nickname and the notoriety which still clings to his memory. Instead of dying courageously on the field the Prince was persuaded to fly for his life in the heather and the legend of his escape wove a magic round his name which was largely undeserved. It was the poverty-stricken Highlanders whose honour and gallantry forbade them to betray him whose memory we must applaud. Ahead of them lay the Clearances and the empty glens, the sorrows and persecutions of the century to come..." (Brander, p. 217). Brander also notes the interesting fact that Culloden inspired few songs. He compares it to Flodden: Time needed to pass before the poets' pens could face the tragedy.

"There was still a chance of taking to the hills and continuing a guerrilla war of attrition against the Hanoverian victors. But Prince Charles had no intention of staying in Scotland, and told his followers it was now every man for himself.... For him, the Rising was over" (Magnusson, p. 624). Magnusson seems to disapprove of this course. But such an attempt would surely have failed; many man would have deserted, and their only bases would be in the Highlands; they would have had no way to trouble the English government, or even the Lowland Scots. All they would have done was inflict further trouble on the Highlands. True, the Hanoverians came with fire and sword -- but if the Jacobites had fought, then it would have been "both" Hanoverians and Jacobites picking the Highlands clean. If Charles made no other right choices, his decision to abandon the rising was certainly the best thing for all involved.

James, p. 220, observes how strongly our modern attitudes are influenced by the romance and legend of Bonnie Prince Charlie. At the time, Cumberland was feted as a great victor -- the "Conquering Hero" of Handel (Magnusson, p. 623). Magnusson also claims that a plant was renamed "Sweet William" after him (which I doubt); I am only slightly more willing to accept that, in Scotland, "the foul-smelling ragwort Senecto jacobaea was nicknamed 'Stinking Willie.'"

"But the '45 did not end with the battle. Everyone knew that, this time, rebellion was serious, and the smallness of the section of Scotland involved meant that real punishment would follow. The fact that many groups of clansmen got away from the battle gave a particular motive for punitive search. It would be made clear to those who had chosen to fight for the prince rather than have their roofs burnt over their heads by Lochiel and his men, that they were not better off in rebellion" (Mitchison, p 342).

"The atrocities and indiscriminate killing went on for several days. Detachments of Hanoverian troops were sent far and wide to scour the Highlands for rebels on the run. The glens were laid waste. Men found bearing weapons were hanged on the spot, and their womenfolk were raped. Whole families were evicted from their blazing hovels and left to starve. Twenty thousand head of livestock -- cattle, sheep and goats -- were driven off to be sold at market in Fort Augustus, the money to be distributed to the victorious army" (Magnusson, p. 623).

"Nowadays it would be called genocide. Cumberland himself advocated his own 'final solution' to the Highland problem: the transportation of whole 'clans such as the Camerons and almost all the tribes of the MacDonalds (excepting some of those in the Isles) and several other lesser clans' -- also excepting, of course, the Campbells, most of whom had fought on the Hanoverian side" (Magnusson, p. 623).

"Of the total of 3,471 Jacobite prisoners, 120 were executed: most by hanging, drawing and quartering, four by beheading because they were peers of the realm -- the privilege of rank. Of the remainder, more than six hundred died in prison; 936 were transported to the West Indies to be sold as slaves [which, at that time, meant that they would almost certainly be dead of yellow fever or the like within two years], 121 were banished 'outside our Dominions'; and 1,287 were released or exchanged" (Magnusson, p. 624).

"When all is said and done Cumberland and 'Hangman Hawley' [who at Culloden commanded the cavalry] marred their victory by the atrocities they permitted, and indeed encouraged, afterwards. Pillage, rape and murder were the order of the day, the innocent suffering with the guilty. An undistinguished military career lay ahead for [Cumberland], culminating in his defeat at Hastenbeck and the inglorious Convention of Klosterseven (1757). It is more charitable to remember him as the founder of the Ascot Race Meeting (1748)" (Young/Adair, p. 271).

There is to this day much dispute over who is to blame for the disaster of Culloden, and for the Forty-Five. There is a strong school which argues that, since Lord George Murray was a sound tactical general, he must have been a strategic genius and anything that went wrong in 1745 was someone else's fault. So Young and Adair write, p. 256, "The Young Pretender... besides being himself no soldier, distrusted his ablest general, Lord George Murray, and chose to lean on his hare-brained Quartermaster-General, John William O'Sullivan."

Similarly, Keegan/Wheatcroft, p. 292, write that the Forty-Five "was doomed from the outset" (though they also say "the chance was there"); "Lord George Murray... the only commander of ability on the Jacobite side, argued in vain for a rapid descent on England before the Hanoverian forces could recover from the shock of a rising in the North. The victories -- Prestonpans and Falkirk -- were the work of Murray. It was Charles himself who insisted on attacking... at Culloden, when saner voices argued for a retreat into the Highlands and a war of attrition" (though how an outnumbered force is supposed to win a war of attrition is beyond me. Keegan/Wheatcroft, p. 227, also paper over the fact that Murray had been the voice of retreat at Derby).

McLynn-Charlie, pp. 249-250, also thinks the ultimate fault is Charles's. After the Night March, when Charles confronted Murray, Murray offered three choices: To retreat to Inverness and face a siege, to scatter and become guerrillas, or to accept battle on a different field south of the Nairn. Charles refused all three possibilities, and hence accepted battle at Culloden. McLynn-Charlie, p. 247, blames this on Charles's character: "The prince was never warned of the very real risk that [the night march] might miscarry. At this stage in his life, Charles was far too credulous and trusting toward his favourites, while being ludicrously suspicious of those not in the circle of initiates. The charm and affability of Charles Edward was the positive side of a mentality that was also distinguished by a marked anxiety to please those he considered his friends.... All these signs of a fragile identity were reinforced by a declining grip on reality."

It seems to me that this over-complexifies things: It's basically true, but the real problem was that Charles had taken a lot of advice from Lord George Murray, and it had resulted in the Jacobites being stuck up in the Highlands, so Charles was understandably -- and properly -- very suspicious of Murray's advice.

Reid, pp. 139-140, however, makes the significant point that, had the Jacobite army tried at that point to head for Murray's preferred battlefield, Cumberland could have pitched into their rear and done even more than he did at Culloden. When the Night March failed, I think, the Jacobite cause was lost. What was needed was a better plan for the March -- specifically, an alternate plan for what to do if the March were detected. But even if Murray thought of such a thing, he probably didn't dare suggest it.

Kybett, of course, blames everything on Charles. Browning too says that Charles was simply not a good enough leader for his cause, and notes correctly that the Prince's Catholicism cost him support (Charles, who clearly had no strong religious feelings, would actually convert to Protestantism after the Forty-Five, but too late to do any good; McLynn-Charlie, p. 399; Wilkinson, p. 227), and blames him for leading the Jacobite army into England.

In a very broad sense, Browning's charge is true: If Charles had been a military genius and smart enough to talk around Lord George Murray when needed and had been able to convince the French to really support him, then the rebellion would have had a much better chance. But if he had been able to call lightning from heaven, it would have had a better chance, too -- and the one was almost as impossible as the other.

Consider the flip side: The 1745 rebellion came much nearer success than the 1715, even though the latter was conducted under conditions much more favorable to revolt: The Hanoverian dynasty was weaker in 1715, and the Jacobites far stronger. Why did the 1745 rebellion come as close as it did? Because of Prince Charles.

Oh, Charles certainly wasn't anyone's notion of a general. But he understood something that Lord George Murray completely failed to understand, which was that a forlorn hope of a rebellion could only succeed by being bold -- even flashy. Charles was good at flashy. Lord George had opposed the idea of going after London; he had been wrong, and as a result, the Jacobite army had been forced to retreat all the way to Culloden in the north of Scotland. In the end, Murray didn't want to fight at Culloden either, even though the Jacobites needed to do something to keep the rebellion alive, and all Murray did was see to it that the battle, which would probably have been lost even if everything had gone well, was guaranteed to be lost.

Ironically, the period after the debacle at Culloden was considered the Prince's finest hour. He of course spent almost half a year on the run before he finally boarded the L'Heureux on September 20, 1746 (old style) to sail for France (McLynn-Charlie, p. 307). The flight was the subject of many songs such as "Skye Boat Song (Over the Sea to Skye)." For the most famous incident of this period, the time he spent with Flora MacDonald, see "Flora MacDonald's Lament." But his escape to Skye did not end his escapades; he spent another three months "in the heather"; "Despite the huge bounty on his head, not a single Highlander betrayed his whereabouts" (Magnusson, p. 627). His escape was the more amazing because the British, according to James, p. 220, had 15,000 troops in the Highlands searching for him. Of course, they were somewhat distracted by the fact that they were also trying to destroy the Highland way of life.

Although Jacobitism is not quite dead, and many hoped for another rebellion, it was the last rising on behalf of the Stuarts. It is likely that Charles visited England again (Magnusson, p. 628), but he never started another rising (Magnusson, p. 627).

When Charles arrived in France, he found himself as popular as a rock star today: "It is difficult now to appreciate the sensation his exploits both on campaign and in the heather had caused. 'He left France an adventurer and came back a hero,' was Bulkeley's comment. Without exaggeration, in October 1746 the prince was the most famous man in Europe" (McLynn-Charlie, p. 308). But fame doesn't last forever. As long as the War of the Austrian Succession continued, Charles was a useful pawn for France. But the war ended in 1748. He was no longer any use to France -- and had gotten himself into a certain amount of trouble with women and with political intrigues. By the time the war ended, he had in fact already left for Spain. He would spend the next twenty years (until his father died in 1766) a wanderer, always scraping for cash, and never saw his father after he set out to lead the Forty-Five (Magnusson, p. 629).

And the Stuart family's famous ill luck was starting to re-emerge. James the Old Pretender's wife had left him only two children before dying of scurvy caused by her extreme asceticism (McLynn-Charlie, p. 45). The two were Charles and his younger brother Henry. And Henry turned out to be homosexual (McLynn-Charlie, p. 327; Kybett, pp. 297-298); he decided to take holy orders to avoid the idea of marriage, and rose to be a cardinal in 1747, while still in his twenties (Wilkinson, p. 227).

Charles was heterosexual but extremely clumsy with women (Wilkinson, p. 233; McLynn-Charlie, pp. 554-555, argues that his parents' marital problems and his mother's early death badly damaged his ability to understand the opposite sex. Magnusson, p. 528, notes his several affairs in his years in France, including several with married women, one of them a first cousin). In 1852 he summoned Clementina Walkinshaw (McLynn-Charlie, p. 422). "Their relationship lasted for nine tempestuous years, during which she bore him a daughter, Charlotte, whom Charles adored. He became insanely possessive over Clementina, and would beat her in his drunken rages. In 1760 she left him, taking Charlotte with her" (Magnusson, p. 629). The quarrels reportedly began a month after Charlotte was born; Wilkinson, p. 233. Charlotte was seven when Clementina took her from her father (Wilkinson, p. 234); she claiming that Charles was threatening her life (Cook, p. 423). She supposedly said that she would rather see Charlotte cut in pieces (as Solomon would have divided the child of the two prostitutes) than returned to Charles.

It made no dynastic difference. Marriage with Clementina never seemed to be part of Charles's plans; he wanted a royal wife (McLynn-Charlie, p. 327), and of course no king would waste his daughter on a pretender, and there were no available ruling queens for him to seduce. The Stuart line was on its way to extinction.

And it was an ugly end. By the time he reached his fifties, not even Kybett has to distort facts to make Charles look bad; he did it all by himself. At first, he tried to get the courts of Europe to give him support for another invasion of Britain (Wilkinson, p. 226), with no success. He tried to convince his father to imprison Lord George Murray on the grounds that he was a traitor. When both these plans failed, Charles went to seed, and got drunk and (eventually) fat. After his father died, Charles finally started worrying about producing an heir. He had almost certainly waited too long. His glittering reputation was gone, and the nations of the world no longer even pretended to hope for a Jacobite restoration. Even the Vatican had given in and (for practical purposes) acknowledged the Hanoverian dynasty (Kybett, p. 313; Cook, p. 424) -- the Vatican at this time, rather than recognize Charles as King Charles III, offered to recognize him as Prince of Wales! (McLynn-Charlie, p. 481). Every other country had long since accepted George III, and George II before him, as King of England. But someone finally turned up a possible spouse in Louise of Stolberg, "young, fair, gay, penniless, it is true, but claiming the blood of Bruce in her veins and eager to become a 'Queen.' She was one of a quartet of fatherless daughters, and her mother, who had been left a widow at twenty-five in straightened circumstances, was willing enough to range one of her brood by presenting her to a titular King. Indeed, if Louise failed to suit, Charles might have a younger child for a bride" (Cook, p. 424).

"[Louise] seems to have made the sacrifice very willingly. The marriage was first performed by proxy at Paris [Charles was there, Louisa wasn't]... and [she] was formally united to him on Good Friday 1772" (Wilkinson, p. 236). Charles called her his "Queen of Hearts" (Magnusson, p. 629), and he may even have cut back on his drinking for a while -- but not for long. Charles was 51 at this time, and "Louise was young, and she took lovers -- first Alfieri, then Gehegan, an Irishman. Charles, his suspicions aroused, broke into her room one day, and there was a disgraceful scene" (Wilkinson, p. 236). She never produced a child, however; I seem to recall reading somewhere that she is suspected of having been sterile.

Having given up on Louise, Charles tried to have Charlotte legitimized (Wilkinson, p. 237), making her Duchess of Albany, but, really, no one cared much. His claim to the English throne, such as it was, would pass to his brother Henry.

Wilkinson, p. 225, sums up the truth and the legend this way. "The great romantic tradition of which this simple-minded young man of action was the unconscious founder still lived and flourished under the trampling boots of the southern invaders, and was to burst into bloom half a century later, with a riot of music and song, idealist tartans, and impossible Floras, and a whole new springtime of romance, which we may sneer at if we like as early nineteenth century sentimentality, but which is really a hard, imperishable growth.... From this point of view -- indeed, from any point of view -- the later period of Prince Charlie's life does not greatly matter. It is a perfectly sound popular instinct which thinks of him always as a young man, ignoring those weary, wasted, insignificant years. There is little to be gained from the contemplation of a man of action who has no longer anything to do."

Compared to the rest of his family, he had a short life -- possibly the result of his alcoholism. By 1786, he was in poor health (McLynn-Charlie, p. 548). He had a stroke early in 1788, and died on January 30 of that year at the age of 67 (McLynn-Charlie, p. 549), with his daughter by his side and his brother Henry administering the last rites of the church that he had earlier scorned and that had cost him his chance for a crown. His father, by contrast, lived to be 78, and Cardinal York, the titular Henry IX, died in 1807 at 82 -- by which time he was actually being given a pension by the English government (Kybett, p. 314)! -- possibly in return for making over some of the Sobieski gems to become part of the English crown jewels. On the other hand, Charlotte outlived her father by only a little more than a year, dying in late 1789 of what McLynn-Charlie, p. 550, describes as liver cancer.

I have read, somewhere, that Charlotte had no children, and even Kybett, p. 304, says that Charles was "not aware" of the existence of any grandchildren. But Kybett, on that same page, says that Charlotte, in the period when her father would have nothing to do with her, became the mistress of a French bishop, and had three illegitimate children -- a daughter Algae, born 1780; a daughter Marie, born 1782, and a son Charles Edward, born 1783. It was shortly after the birth of the latter that Charles and Charlotte were reconciled. Magnusson, p. 629, claims however that Charlotte had married (presumably making the children legitimate), but that she left them behind when Charles summoned her.

The fate of these children seems to have been sad. Their father does not seem to have done anything for them; their grandmother Clementina Walkinshaw, herself quite poor, cared for them until she died in 1802 (Kybett, p. 312). In any case, they were clearly illegitimate in terms of their descent from Charles. James the Old Pretender's claim to the throne lived only in Henry, and it died out when he died. Officially there is still a Catholic heir to the Stuarts out there (I seem to recall that it was the heir of one of the defunct Germany dynasties), but in practice the Jacobite threat, never very great, died with Charles in 1788.

Among the others mentioned in this song:
"Lochiel": Donald Cameron, Lochiel of Cameron (1695-1748, called the "Young Lochiel," even though he was middle-aged, because his father was in exile as a Jacobite); he was the first great chief to come to Charlie's support. He was wounded at Culloden, and, like Charles, would die in exile; the British would execute his brother.

Drummond: Probably the aforementioned Lord John Drummond, though it might be William MacGregor of Drummond (Bahaldy), like Lochiel an early supporter of Charlie, since the others mentioned were among the prince's earliest supporters.
Lewis Gordon was responsible for raising most of the troops from the Aberdeenshire area. For a song about him, see "Lewie Gordon (Lewis Gordon)."

As noted above, the argument these three presented was, in a sense, sound: The Highlanders would have been depressed and would have deserted had the Jacobite army retreated. You wonder, though, if they weren't motivated partly by the fear of British retribution.... - BS, RBW

Bibliography

- Brander: Michael Brander, Scottish and Border Battles and Ballads, Barnes & Noble, 1993
- Cook: E. Thornton Cook, Their Majesties of Scotland, John Murray, 1928
- Dorn: Walter L. Dorn, Competition for Empire, 1740-1763 (part of the series "The Rise of Modern Europe"), 1940 (I use the 1963 Harper Torchbooks edition with revised bibliography)
- Fry/Fry: Peter and Fiona Somerset Fry, The History of Scotland, 1982 (I use the 1995 Barnes & Noble edition)
- Penguin, 1988, 1990
- Kybett: Susan Maclean Kybett, Bonnie Prince Charlie: A Biography of Charles Edward Stuart, Dodd, Mead & Company, 1988. It should probably be noted that this is a highly unusual biography in that Kybett intensely dislikes and disapproves of her subject; where most biographies tend to take the most generous view of their subject, Kybett's work is almost a hatchet job -- the only other people I can think of who are so harshly treated by their biographers are Hitler and Richard III. (To give an example: Shortly before Culloden, the Jacobite leaders were treated to a banquet. Charles, according to some accounts, refused to eat while his men were starving. Kybett manages to put this in a context which makes it sound like an example of the Prince's lack of feeling!)
- McLynn-Charlie: Frank McLynn, Bonnie Prince Charlie: Charles Edward Stuart, 1988 (I use the 1991 Oxford paperback edition). Of the three biographies I used, this is the only one to see both good and bad qualities in Charles.
- Reid: Stuart Reid, 1745: A Military History of the Last Jacobite Rising, Sarpedon, 1966
- Wilkinson: Clennell Wilkinson Bonnie Prince Charlie, Lippincott, no copyright listed but after 1932. Of the three biographies (Kybett, McLynn-Charlie, and Wilkinson), this is by far the one most favorable to the prince. It has clearly been influenced heavily by the romantic view of Charles.

Last updated in version 5.1
File: 0rd293

Muirisheen Went to Bonane

DESCRIPTION: The singer's lover has left him: "she got this young swain from Bonane." He admits he drank too much, even with her father. "'Tis many an evening I rambled" So "she packed up her boxes quite hasty." "I hope this good dame will succeed."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)

KEYWORDS: courting rejection separation drink father lover rake
Muirland Farmer, The

DESCRIPTION: "I am a gweed fairmer has acres o lan'," servants, a "mansion hoose," "A dainty we wifie," and two children. He describes the farm, the lake with wild ducks, the snug house, his church clothes, and his good luck at selling his barley crop.

AUTHOR: Andrew Scott (1757-1839) (source: Whitelaw)
EARLIEST DATE: 1843 (Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong)
KEYWORDS: farming nonballad animal
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #122, p. 1, "The Muirland Farmer" (1 text)
Greig/Duncan3 433, "The Muirland Farmer" (4 texts, 3 tunes)
Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 94, "The Gude Farmer" (1 text)
Roud #5949
cf. "The Rock and the Wee Pickle Tow" (tune, per Whitelaw)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Farmer
The Sma' Farmer
The Aul' Farmer
NOTES [14 words]: The Greig version and two of the Greig/Duncan3 versions add verses not in Whitelaw. - BS
Last updated in version 3.2
File: GrD3433

Mulberry Disaster

DESCRIPTION: A storm-tossed ship is blown near Mulberry. The crew abandon ship. One of the boats overturns, drowning five of its seven passengers. The rest of the piece is devoted to mourning for the lost sailors

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Flanders/Olney-BalladsMigrantInNewEngland)
KEYWORDS: death sea storm wreck
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Dec 12, 1800 - date of the Mulberry Disaster (according to the song)
FOUND IN: US(NE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Flanders/Olney-BalladsMigrantInNewEngland, pp. 114-117, "Mulberry Disaster" (1 text, 1 tune); cf. also the fragment about Calais Pond on page 119
ST FO114 (Partial)
Roud #4678
NOTES [37 words]: For a song so long, and so specific as to place and date, this is surprisingly unspecific about the actual people involved -- a moniker song without the monikers! This makes it hard to determine actual historical details. - RBW
File: F0114

Mulcahy's Gone Away

DESCRIPTION: "The hero of my humble song was once a mighty man, A shining light in his neighborhood, the chief of all his clan." Mulcah'ey, a politician, loses his office and disappears. His family laments as they seek for him

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Dean-FlyingCloud)
Mulcahy's Home Again

DESCRIPTION: "I come with news tonight, me boys, just listen for a while." The singer tells of his amazement that Mulcahy has returned home. The famous Mulcahy has had enough of politics and has decided to return to his roots.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Dean-FlyingCloud)

KEYWORDS: reunion

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dean-FlyingCloud, p. 78, "Mulcahy's Home Again" (1 text)

Roud #9567

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Mulcahy's Sister Kate" (character?)
- cf. "Mulcahy's Gone Away" (character?)

NOTES [65 words]: As it stands in Dean-FlyingCloud, nothing much happens in this song, which seems to be about an old maid. Possibly the singer is courting her to get her money? But Dean's version has only two verses; I suspect a Stage Irish song; either Dean has forgotten some of the lyrics, or they made sense in the context of the drama.

For more on the story, see the notes to "Mulcahy's Gone Away." - RBW

Mulcahy's Sister Kate

DESCRIPTION: "You have heard me sing of a hero bold, Mulcahy was his name, And, faith, he had a sister, too, that was noted for her fame." Kate Mulcahy is tall, red-haired, and apparently unmarried at 28; she cooks at a boarding house.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Dean-FlyingCloud)

KEYWORDS: cook sister

FOUND IN: US(MW)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dean-FlyingCloud, pp. 76-77, "Mulcahy's Sister Kate" (1 text)

Roud #9565

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Mulcahy's Home Again" (character?)
- cf. "Mulcahy's Gone Away" (character?)

NOTES [65 words]: As it stands in Dean-FlyingCloud, nothing much happens in this song, which seems to be about an old maid. Possibly the singer is courting her to get her money? But Dean's version has only two verses; I suspect a Stage Irish song; either Dean has forgotten some of the lyrics, or they made sense in the context of the drama.

For more on the story, see the notes to "Mulcahy's Gone Away." - RBW
Muldoon, the Solid Man

DESCRIPTION: "I am a man of great influence... I came when small from Donegal, in the Daniel Webster I crossed the sea." Hard work has brought the singer success. He promises the listeners he will "use you decent... I'm a solid man." He tells of his social success.

AUTHOR: Words: Edward Harrigan
EARLIEST DATE: 1872 (Harrigan's sketch "Muldoon, the Solid Man")
KEYWORDS: emigration work
FOUND IN: US(MW) Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (5 citations):
Dean-FlyingCloud, pp. 102-103, "Muldoon, the solid Man" (1 text)
Porter/Gower-Jeannie-Robertson-EmergentSingerTransformativeVoice #41, pp. 187-188, "I Will Lay You Down" (1 text, 1 tune)
Behan-IrelandSings, #79, "Sit Yeh Down And I'll Treat Yeh Decent" (1 text, 1 tune, modified)
DT, LAYEDONZ*
ADDITIONAL: Edward Harrigan, _The Mulligans_, G. W. Dillingham, 1901, p. 12, "(no title)" (1 fragment, of the chorus)
Roud #3355
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "I'll Lay Ye Doon, Love" (lyrics)
cf. "Laird of Drum" (tune, as sung by Jeannie Robertson)
NOTES [478 words]: Roud lumps this with "I'll Lay Ye Doon, Love." But that is a song of seduction, while this is a song telling of prosperity.
The key verse of "I'll Lay You Doon, Love," as derived from Jeannie Robertson, is something like this:
O I'll lay ye doon, love, I'll treat ye decent
I'll lay ye doon, love, I'll fill yere can I'll lay ye doon, love, I'll treat ye decent
For surely he is an honest man.
Ned Harrigan's own text of this, as published in _The Mulligans_, runs
Go with me and I'll trate ye decent,
I'll set ye drunk, and I'll fill yere can.
As I walk the street, each frind I meet,
Says, There goes Muldoon, he's a solid man.
Harrigan premiered the song in May 1872 in a sketch also entitled "Muldoon, the Solid Man." Richard Moody's biography of Harrigan describes the sketch as "foreshadowing [Harrigan's] fascination with lunatics and undertakers. An old actor has gone mad on Shakespeare, a common affliction according to Harrigan. Another lunatic imagines himself a kite and shouts 'Fly me! Fly me!' The undertaker is overjoyed at the prospect of the final wholesale slaughter: 'A whole world dead! Lord, what a fat job that would be!'"
There is one curiosity about that 1872 date. The song mentions "General" Grant. This require a date after 1862 (when Grant became a general and fought his first significant battles) but might hint at a date before 1868. But that's a minor point.
Given its early date, it is unlikely that the tune was written by Harrigan's long-time collaborator David Braham (Franceschina, p. 82) -- the two were performing together by then (Franceschina, p. 76), but weren't yet a "team." That make it likely that Harrigan used a traditional or popular tune. But what odds that he would use a Scottish song of seduction unknown in American? Besides, while Ned Harrigan did borrow traditional material and adapt it, he didn't do it like this -- he might borrow a tune, or allude to a text, but not rewrite it.
So how did the song end up in Scotland? All attempts to trace it seem to stop at Jeannie Robertson. Her story was that it came from an Irish Traveler -- and that it was bawdy. Abby Sale mentions a suggestion that it became an Irish Music Hall song. Possible -- after all, although Harrigan was American and made his home in New York, his pieces were like music hall; it's possible that someone moved the piece to the music hall. But there is a lot that we can't trace in that history.
For background on Harrigan, see the notes to "Babies on Our Block." - RBW
Porter and Gower note a provenance from an "Irish-American music hall song with the title, "Muldoon, the solid Man," and that Jeannie Robertson used the tune for several of her songs, e.g.
"Laird o Drum" (Child 236). Some 6 of Roud's 23 Muldoon variants attributed to his number 3355 appear to actually be Robertson and Stewart family versions of "Laird o Drum." - DGE

Bibliography

Last updated in version 5.3
File: Dean102

Mule

DESCRIPTION: "The mule he is the funniest sight; he's made of ears and dynamite." "Some folks don't treat mules with respect; they say he has no intellect." "The mule attends to his own biz; He don't look loaded, but he is."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Henry, from Annie E. Franklin)

KEYWORDS: humorous animal nonballad

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Henry-SongsSungInTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 225, "Mule" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "O Tannenbaum (Oh Christmas Tree)" (tune) and refences there

cf. "The Mule, (Never Take the Hindshoe from a Mule)" (subject)

File: MHAp225

Mule on the Mountain

DESCRIPTION: The singer or captain has a mule on the mountain called Jerry. Who will ride him? I will. Jerry is hiking down the Southern main line; didn't stop for water and made it on time.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (Hurston)

KEYWORDS: floatingverses nonballad shanty worksong animal

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (3 citations):

Frye-TheMenAllSinging, p. 184, ("I got a muley on the mountain") (1 text)

RECORDINGS:

Crew of the Charles J. Colonna, ("Lord I got a muley") (on VaWork)
Menhaden Fishermen, "Mule on the Mountain" (on USMenhaden01)
Northern Neck Chantey Singers, "Mule on the Mountain" (on USMenhaden02)

NOTES [155 words]: As a menhaden work song this is lined out. For example, ("o hiking jerry O LORDY HIKING DOWN THE MAIN LINE SOUTHERN (chatter)" (2x) "o he did on time boys O LORDY LORD LORD HE DID ON TIME (chatter)"), where: lower case is the chanteyman calling the verse line; upper case is the crew's response; "(chatter)" is directions called out by the crew about hauling.

The VaWork song is part of the "Evalina" track.

Hurston p. 269: "The most widely distributed and best known of all Negro work songs. Since folk songs grow by incremental repetition the diversified subject matter that it accumulates as it ages is one of the evidences of its distribution and usage. This has everything in folk life in it. Several stories to say nothing of just lyric matter. It is something like the Odyssey, or the Iliad." Hurston's version includes sections from menhaden chantey besides "Mule on the Mountain": "Evalina" and "I'm Gonna Roll Here." - BS

Last updated in version 4.2
File: Frye184
Mule Skinner Blues

DESCRIPTION: "Good morning, Captain, Good morning, shine... Do you need another mule skinner out on your new road line?" About the hard life on the road work gang, waiting for water, and dealing with a mule

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (recording, Jimmie Rodgers)

KEYWORDS: work loneliness animal floating verses

FOUND IN: US (Ap)

REFERENCES (4 citations):

Roberts-SangBranchSettlers, #84, "Mule Skinner Blues" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 152, "Mule Skinner Blues" (1 text, 1 tune, with one stanza of "T for Texas" thrown in for fun)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 129, "Mule Skinner Blues" (1 text)
Jackson-WakeUpDeadMan, pp. 67-70, "I Can Buckle a Wheeler" (2 texts, 2 tunes, both probably the same as one of the composite parts of Lomax's "Levee Camp Holler"; the "A" text also contains a large part of "Mule Skinner Blues")

Roud #3437

RECORDINGS:

Roy Acuff, "Mule Skinner Blues (Blue Yodel #8)" (OKeh 05638/Conqueror 9528, 1940; Columbia 37012, 1946; Columbia 20038, c. 1947; rec. 1940)
Maddox Bros. & Rose, "New Muleskinner Blues" (4-Star 1240/4-Star 1288, n.d. but post-WWII)
Bill Monroe & His Blue Grass Boys, "Mule Skinner Blues" (Bluebird B-8568, 1940; RCA Victor 20-3163, 1948)

Bill Monroe & his Bluegrass Boys, "New Muleskinner Blues" (Decca 46222, 1950)
Sonny Osborne, "Mule Skinner Blues" (Kentucky 605, n.d.)

Jimmie Rodgers, "Mule Skinner Blues (Blue Yodel #8)" (Victor 23503, 1930; Bluebird B-6275, 1936; RCA Victor 20-6205 [as Jimmie Rodgers w. the Rainbow Ranch Boys], 1955)

Pete Seeger w. Jerry Silverman & Sonny Terry, "Muleskinner Blues" (on HootenannyTonight)

NOTES [144 words]: A "skinner" is a teamster.

To the best of my knowledge, every known version of this goes back to Jimmie Rodgers ("Blue Yodel #8"). I doubt the song can truly be considered traditional. - RBW

To add to the fun, the Lomaxes tacked part of another Rodgers piece, "T for Texas," onto the end of this one. Given that neither song has much of a plot, it can be hard to separate the resulting hybrids. - PJS, RBW

One more bit of mixture: "Chinaman" Johnson's song "I Can Buckle a Wheeler," which seems to be mostly the same as the song the Lomaxes call "Levee Camp Holler," starts with a couple of verses of this. "Chinaman" sang the song more than thirty years after Rodgers recorded it, so the two could have simply been attracted together -- but the flip side is, who was worrying about mule behavior in 1965? I think we just have to call the whole thing a mess. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.2

File: LoF152

Mule Skinner's Song

DESCRIPTION: "Oh, I drove three mules for George McVane, And I drove them three miles on a chain. Nigh one Jude and the middle one Jane, And the one on the stick she didn't have no name."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)

KEYWORDS: animal harvest work

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 400, "Mule Skinner's Song" (1 fragment, 1 tune)

File: San400

Mule Song

DESCRIPTION: "No matter what you teach a mule, He'll always have his bray; He'll always have his floppy ears and his god-damned mulish way." "Hee-haw, hee-haw is the only thing he knows."

"In the middle of a straff he'll land a caisson in a ditch...."
Mule-Skinners, The

DESCRIPTION: "In readin' the story of early days, it's a cause of much personal pain" that writers ignore "us in charge of the wagon train." They work and endure harsh conditions just like cowboys, "So why in the name of all that's fair can't we figger in history?"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1921 (Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys)
KEYWORDS: hardtimes travel
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys, pp. 101-102, "The Mule-Skinners" (1 text)
File: ThLo101

Mule, The (Never Take the Hindshoe from a Mule)

DESCRIPTION: "A story come down from old Mathuslam... You'll make a great mistake... If you bother around the hind parts of a mule. So never tickle a mule when he's reposing; If you disturb his peaceful slumbers, you're a fool...." Thus the practical advice continues

AUTHOR: Sam Devere
EARLIEST DATE: 1882
KEYWORDS: animal humorous parody
FOUND IN: US(MA)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Cazden/Haufrecht/Studer-FolkSongsOfTheCatskills 108, "The Mule" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT, MULESONG*
Roud #4601
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Never Take the Horseshoe from the Door" (of which this is a parody)
cf. "Mule" (subject)
NOTES [34 words]: Written as a parody of the popular song "Never Take the Horseshoe from the Door" (by Edward Harrigan and Dave Braham). As the original was written in 1880, it didn't take long for the parodists to start. - RBW
Last updated in version 2.5
File: FSC108

Mules Ran Off, The

DESCRIPTION: "The mules ran off and I fell down, I really thought I'd croak," but despite troublesome mules, "I love my old canal." All the river critters make their noise as "Old Fear" looks on and grins. It rains hard, but then it clears up and the birds sing

AUTHOR: Pearl R. Nye (source: Salt)
EARLIEST DATE: 1992 (Salt-BuckeyeHeritage-OhiosHistory)
KEYWORDS: river travel hardtimes bird animal canal
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Salt-BuckeyeHeritage-OhiosHistory, pp. 62-63, "The Mules Ran Off" (1 text, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Oh! Susanna" (tune, according to Salt)
File: Salt062
Mules That Walked Our Fo'c'sle Deck, The

DESCRIPTION: "The mules that walked our fo'c'sle deck, They were two mules of fame; They sailed the Lakes for many a year." The singer describes the mules, the tasks they did, how they adapted to sailing, the messes they made, and says one of them should be mate

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: before 1952 (collected from James Dix and others by Walton)
KEYWORDS: animal work sailor ship humorous
FOUND IN: Canada(Ont) US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Walton/Grimm-Windjammers-SongsOfTheGreatLakesSailors, pp. 135-137, "The Mules That Walked Our Fo'c'sle Deck" (1 composite text)
Roud #19880
NOTES [165 words]: Many deep-sea sailing vessels carried animals aboard -- chickens on short voyages, perhaps even pigs and cattle for long. The idea was to have fresh meat. Great Lakes vessels, never far from shore, normally did not do this, so a good chunk of this song is devoted to complaints about the two mules' waste products.

According to Walton, many timber vessels carried mules aboard, to do the heavy lifting of loading and unloading logs. When this work was taken over by steam engines, they were called "donkey engines."

Walton's informant said that work on these "horseshit boats" was extremely wearying, so sailors rarely signed on for more than one trip. Hence it was quite possible (as in this song) that the mules would be more used to the work than the sailors.

Walton indicates no tune for this, but I can't help but suspect that it is the same melody as that used for "On Mules We Find Two Legs (Before/Behind)," which I seem to recall my father singing to the tune of "Auld Lang Syne." - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0
File: WGM135

Mullach Na Re

DESCRIPTION: Gaelic. "A local song, about a rick of turf that went up in flames. A mock match-making is discussed and local personalities gently lampooned."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1956 (OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage marriage humorous fire
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin 96, "Mullach Na Re" (1 text)
NOTES [17 words]: The description follows the "English Summary" provided by OCroinin/Cronin-TheSongsOfElizabethCronin. - BS

Last updated in version 3.2
File: OCC096

Mullaghdoon

DESCRIPTION: The singer recalls how "Hugh Fulton, once my comrade dear, Pursuing fortune, left his home"; Hugh is now in Nova Scotia. The singer is lonely at home now that Hugh is far away. When he left, Hugh asked that they play Auld Lang Syne for Mullaghdoon

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: emigration separation
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H2, pp. 215-216, "" (1 text, 2 tunes -- Sam Henry's different transcriptions of the same original)
DT, MULLGDOO*
NOTES [11 words]: An unusual emigration song, told by one of those left behind. - RBW
File: HHH002
Mulligan Guard, The

DESCRIPTION: "We crave your condescension, We'll tell you what we know, Of marching in the Mulligan Guard...." The members of the target company "shouldered guns, And marched and marched away From Baxter Street we marched to Avenue A." At home, they drink

AUTHOR: Words: Edward Harrigan / Music: David Braham

EARLIEST DATE: 1873 (sheet music published by Wm. A. Pond & Co, New York)

KEYWORDS: soldier humorous drink nonballad

FOUNDED IN:

REFERENCES (7 citations):
- Finson-Edward-Harrigan-David-Braham, vol. I, #1, pp. 2-6, "The Mulligan Guards" (1 text, 1 tune)
- Spaeth-ReadEmAndWeep, pp. 113-114, "The Mulligan Guard" (the chorus only)
- ADDITIONAL: Richard Moody, editor, _Dramas from the American Theatre, 1762-1909_, World Publishing Company, 1966, insert after p. 544, "The Mulligan Guard" (1 text, 1 tune, a copy of the original sheet music); the play "The Mulligan Guard Ball" is on pp. 549-565 (this is the first printed edition, taken from the manuscript filed with the Library of Congress in 1879, and may not have matched the actual performances perfectly; this song is at the end of scene 2, on pp. 554-555, apparently sung by Dan Mulligan
- Stanley Appelbaum, editor, _Show Songs: from The Black Crook to The Red Mill_, Dover Publications, 1974, pp. 13-17, "The Mulligan Guard" (1 text, 1 tune, a copy of the sheet music)
- Richard Moody, _Ned Harrigan: From Corlear's Hook to Herald Square_, Nelson Hall, 1980, p. 49, "The Mulligan Guard"; photo inset following p. 54 has a copy of the sheet music
- John Franceschina, _David Braham: The American Offenbach_, Routledge, 2003, pp. 57-58, "(The Mulligan Guard)" (1 text)
- Edward Harrigan, _The Mulligans_, G. W. Dillingham, 1901, pp. 11, 86, 303, "(no title)" (1 fragment, of the chorus, slightly different from the published sheet music)
- Roud #V7922

RECORDINGS:
- Mick Moloney, "The Mulligan Guard" (on HarriganBrahamMaloney)

NOTES [1115 words]: For background on composers Harrigan and Braham, see the notes to "The Babies on Our Block." Of all their songs, this was the most popular; it was used as a march by the Coldstream Guards and is actually quoted in modified form in Kipling's _Kim_! (Kahn, pp. 3-4). Kahn, p. 4, says there was even a French version, from which which he quotes the chorus.

Appelbaum, p. xx, gives the history of the song as follows:

"The song 'The Mulligan Guard' was not originally part of a musical play. It was first performed by Harrigan and Hart in a sketch at the Academy of Music in Chicago on July 15, 1873. The sketch and song poked fun at the unofficial military organizations then rife among various minority groups in New York City. On certain days these groups would pay their compliments to their local ward politicians and would then partake in a rowdy picnic, combined with target practice.

"Harrigan worked up this sketch into a playlet, _The Mulligan Guard Ball_, which ran at the Theatre Comique from January 13 to May 24, 1879. In the playlet two guards organizations, one Irish and one Negro, hire the same dance hall for the same night, with seismic results. [Literally; in the play; the floor breaks down and the Blacks on the upper floor land among the Irish on the lower.]... In 1883, Harrigan and Hart presented an enlarged, full-evening of _The Mulligan Guard_ at the Theatre Comique."

The Mulligan Guard, as originally presented, was a "target company" -- one of these militia groups that gathered to march, take shots at a target, and then get drunk. Kahn, p. 81, reports that "Target companies came into being in the eighteen-thirties mainly because immigrants were refused admission into the city's existing militia companies by their choosy officers. These companies were pseudo-military outfits, often named in honor of an alderman or other leader in ward politics -- the William A. Tweed Guards, for instance -- which every so often would assemble and march off for what was ostensibly a day's firing practice. Splendidly uniformed, a company would parade through the streets early in the morning, a brass band hired for the day leading the way, and the rear brought up by a colored boy carrying a large target, on which would be prominently lettered the name of the company's patron. The outfit's first stop would always be the home of this individual who was expected, in return for being serenaded there, to provide it with prizes to shoot for." Then the company would go on a party before they had their shooting contest, at which they would get so drunk that they were rarely able to hit the target.

Ned Harrigan reportedly wrote his original skit because he "considered the high-stepping target companies to be a nuisance" (Kahn, p. 84).

Part of the humor of the presentation was that the "company" -- which, to deserve that title, should have consisted of many dozens of men -- in fact consisted of just two soldiers, Captain Hussey, plus a private and the Black boy, Morgan Benson, who carried the target. (There is disagreement in the books I've read about whether Harrigan or Hart played Captain Hussey. Looking at a photo of the two in costume, I think Harrigan was Hussey, but I can't prove it.) 'Harrigan got the 'guard idea' in Boston n the winter of 1872, wrote the sketch and lyrics, and when Braham sent him a tune shaped to his lyrics, he tried to persuade William A. Pond to publish the sheet music, hoping to get the song in circulation before the act got on stage. It was a promotional stunt he was to use successfully in later years. Pond declined, then changed his mind when he heard Harrigan and Hart perform the number. He offered fifty dollars for the rights, and Harrigan accepted. For the rest of his life, Harrigan bemoaned his youthful indiscretion: 'I let him have it! I let him have it' Why couldn't he have learned his lesson just as well on a less popular song.

"The Mulligan act featured a marching troop of two, one modeled on a tailor on the Seventh Ward named Dan Mulligan and the other on Capt. Jack Hussey, a baggage master at Castle Garden who was said to have the 'awfulest gnarlest, dead-looking face Darwin ever saw,' but whose chest was decorated shoulder to shoulder with medals awarded for the rescues from drowning he had performed along the East River. (Hussey's wife Cordelia would later serve as the model for Dan's wife Cordelia in the Mulligan plays)" (Moody-Harrigan, p. 45).

Kahn, p. 86, says that Jack Hussey was "the idol of all the Seventh Ward target companies. Hussey, a longshoreman and for some years a gatekeeper at Castle Garden, was a native of County Cork who emigrated to New York in 1851 and, during an era when the city's citizens were continually falling or being pushed in the waters that bordered it, achieved a massive reputation as a life-saver. When he rescued his twenty-fifth individual from drowning, Congress had a special medal struck for him to commemorate the feat. Before he was shot and killed in a street brawl, Hussey had fished at least one drowning person out of a New York river annually for thirty-five years, not to mention seven horses that, at one time or another, he pulled from the East River."

"By the summer of 1875, indoors and outdoors, rare was the establishment that did not include at least 'The Mulligan Guard' [and often other Harrigan/Braham songs] in its concert programs" (Franceschina, p. 91). Despite this widespread popularity, there is no evidence that the song went into tradition, even though some other Harrigan/Braham songs did. But, according to Kahn, p. 84, the success of this song "laughed [the target companies] right out of existence."

According to Franceschina, p. 58, "Braham's music begins with a side-drum roll and a single beat of the bass trum. This figure is played three times and followed by eight bars of a drum-and-fife duet. The fife tune is then repeated with full orchestra leading into a four-bar military fanfare. The voice follows in an idiomatic Braham melody outlining the harmony with almost no dissonant nonchordal tones. Following the indication 'Forward march' comes the chorus anticipating many of the trios in the marches of John Philip Sousa, with its easily memorable, constantly soaring melody. After the last verse and chorus are sung, the introductory fife tune reappears, followed by the opening side drum and bass drum duet (with the indication "Present arms"). The musical interlude is completed with an eight-bar Irish jig borrowed from the Irish ballad "St. Patrick's Day in the Morning" (with the indication "Target excursion band"), leading into a final reprise of the chorus (with the indication "Forward march"). - RBW

Bibliography

- Stanley Appelbaum, editor, Show Songs: from The Black Crook to The Red Mill, Dover Publications, 1974

Last updated in version 5.2
File: Aplb013

Mullinabrone

DESCRIPTION: The singer sees two lovers saying goodbye. He is going to America; she fears he will forget her. At last she can stand it no longer; she buys passage to America. At first she cannot find him, but meets him eventually; they are married
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love courting separation emigration reunion
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H242, p. 483-484, "Mullinabrone" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2494
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "You Lovers All" [plot]
cf. "My Father's Servant Boy" [Laws M11] [plot]
cf. "Erin's Flowery Vale (The Irish Girl's Lament)" [Laws O29] [lyrics]
NOTES [68 words]: The lyrics of this song often overlap those of "Erin's Flowery Vale," and the first part of the plot is also the same. But this is somewhat less, um, flowery, and it also has a proper ending, which "Erin's Flowery Vale" (as defined by Laws) does not. There probably is kinship, but perhaps the most likely explanation is that both split off from the same roots; they aren't really the same song any longer. - RBW
File: HHH242

Mullnabeeny (Mill of Boyndie)

DESCRIPTION: "When I was young and in my prime, Guid-fegs, like me there wisna mony." The singer recalls his success at a young age: A good fee, fine clothes, and the attention of the ladies.
He wishes he were back in the days when his old hat was new
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: farming age clothes
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
  Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #167, pp. 2-3, "Mullnabeeny" (1 text plus 1 fragment)
  Greig/Duncan3 441, "Mullnabeeny" (4 texts, 1 tune)
  Ord-BothySongsAndBallads, p. 249, "Mill of Boyndie (Mullnabeeny)" (1 text)
Roud #5576
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "When This Old Hat Was New" (the concept of "When this old hat was new")
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Mill o' Beenie
When My Auld Hat Was New
NOTES [65 words]: Ord-BothySongsAndBallads explains that the name "Mullnabeeny" is local dialect for "Milne of Boyndie" -- yet calls his version "Mill of Boyndie." - RBW Greig/Duncan3 has a map on p. xxxv. of "places mentioned in songs in volume 3" showing the song number as well as place name; Mill of Boyndie (441) is at coordinate (h6-7,v6) on that map [near Banff, roughly 41 miles NNW of Aberdeen]. - BS
Last updated in version 2.6
File: Ord249

Mulroy Bay

DESCRIPTION: The singer thinks about the hills of home, where he spent his happy childhood. "I'll soon be coming back to the place, To the sweetheart that I met so many years ago" at Mulroy Bay.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1986 (McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen)
KEYWORDS: love home return reunion nonballad
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
  McBride-FlowerOfDunaffHillAndMoreTradSongsInnishowen 55, "Mulroy Bay" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [5 words]: Mulroy Bay is in Donegal. - BS
File: McB1055
Multiplication Table Song
DESCRIPTION: "Five times five is 25, And five times six is 30, Five times seven is 25, and five times eight is 40. Five times nine is 45, Five times ten is 50. Five times eleven is 55, And five times twelve is 60." With variations for other numbers
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1936 (Stout-FolkloreFromIowa); reportedly learned 1882
KEYWORDS: nonballad
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Stout-FolkloreFromIowa 103, pp. 127-133, "Early Iowa School Songs" (11 texts, of which "H" is this song)
List-SingingAboutIt-FolkSongsInSouthernIndiana, pp. 78-80, "The Multiplication Table Song" (2 short texts, 2 tunes, the first for multiples of 2, the second for multiples of 5)
Roud #16811
CROSS-REFERENCES:
  cf. "Yankee Doodle" (tune)
  cf. "Five to My Five" (subject of multiplication)
NOTES [29 words]: Roud lumps this with "Five to My Five," but the purpose is (just barely) different enough that I've split them; that song is a playparty, and this seemingly a school song. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.3
File: Stou103H

Murder in the Market (Payne Dead)
DESCRIPTION: Betsy asks Miss Clark for shelter. Miss Clark asks for details. Betsy says her husband "call me a liar an I stab 'im" "I ain't killed nobody but me husband Didn't mean to kill him but him stone dead."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1942 (Heskovits)
KEYWORDS: accusation violence crime homicide husband wife
FOUND IN: Panama West Indies(St Croix)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
  ADDITIONAL: Louise Cramer, "Songs of West Indian Negroes in the Canal Zone" in _California Folklore Quarterly_, Vol. 5, No. 3 (Jul 1946 (made available online by JSTOR)), pp. 265-266, "Murder in de Market"
RECORDINGS:
  Ethel McIntosh, "Payne Dead" (on VIZoop01)
NOTES [191 words]: Alan Lomax says this is the basis for Wilmoth Houdini's "He Had It Coming" ("Stone Cold Dead in the Market") [Alan Lomax, "Introduction to 'Stone Cold Dead in the Market'" (on "Calypso at Midnight," Rounder CD 11661-1840-2, 1999) [recorded 1946]]. The verse structure is the same -- aaac -- and some lines are shared: "Didn't kill nobody but me husband" and "... him stone dead." Cramer says this is based on an incident in which a Barbados woman "was told that her husband was being unfaithful to her. One morning a neighbor came by as she was working at home and told her that the miscreant was down in the market. The wife rushed down to the market and confronted her husband with her accusation. He called her a liar. The wife thereupon struck and killed him." Cramer continues the story of how the woman asks for help, and, apparently is tried and released.
The tune of the McIntosh version, from St Croix, is close to Houdini's "He Had It Coming". Apparently there is a short version at the Library of Congress collected in Trinidad by the Herskovitses but I have neither seen nor heard it: "Payne Dead, Payne Dead" recorded in 1942. - BS
Last updated in version 5.2
File: RcPaynDe

Murder in the Shoe-box
DESCRIPTION: "Murder in the shoe-box, fire in the spence [cabinet], I had a little donkey and I haven't seen 'n sense. Give 'n a little oats, give 'n a little straw, Gee up, donkey! ans awa she go."
AUTHOR: unknown
Murder of Alan Beyne, The

DESCRIPTION: A young man is to be hanged for the murder of Alan Beyne. He repeatedly protests his innocence, but judge and jury condemned him. Just before the sentence is carried out, a rider rides up, and proves to be Beyne. The singer is saved

AUTHOR: Will Carleton

EARLIEST DATE: 1935

KEYWORDS: execution punishment reprieve mother homicide

FOUND IN: US(MW,So) Australia

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, pp. 243-245, "The Murder of Alan Beyne" (1 text, 1 tune)
Abrahams/Riddle-ASingerAndHerSongs, pp. 100-103, "Allen Bain" (1 text, 1 tune)
McIntosh-FolkSongsAndSingingGamesOfIllinoisOzarks, pp. 8-12, "Alan Bane" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, pp. 438-439, "Allen Bayne" (1 text)
DT, ALANBANE*

RECORDINGS:
Almeda Riddle, "Alan Bain" (on LomaxCD1707)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Alan Bain

NOTES [159 words]: Said to be based on an actual event of the 1860s. - RBW
According to the notes in Lomax, W. K. McNeil says this originated in Australia. McNeil tends to be right a lot. - PJRS
Maybe not in this case, though. Cohen, p. 440, gives what he believes is the original, in which a man named McMahon went missing. A Mr. Williams was accused of murder, but was found innocent when McMahon turned up in court to say he was alive. McIntosh-FolkSongsAndSingingGamesOfIllinoisOzarks, pp. 8-9, prints the newspaper account of the proceedings.
Will Carleton published this piece, but it is noteworthy that the plot has been changed in several ways -- the victim's name is altered, and the missing man appears not at the trial but at the gallows. So it is difficult to be sure whether Carleton rewrote an existing piece, or picked up a bit of folklore and turned it to his own ends, or perhaps just made up the whole thing. Still, an American origin seems very likely. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.3

File: MA243

Murder of Alfreda Pike, The

DESCRIPTION: Out walking, Alfreda Pike, sixteen, is overtaken and her throat is cut. If the murderer is found he'll be lynched. Alfreda is buried at Harbour Grace.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1959 (Peacock)

KEYWORDS: homicide burial

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Jan 5, 1870 - murder of Alfreda Pike in Harbour Grace by Constable Furey

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, pp. 821-822, "The Murder of Alfreda Pike" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #9810

RECORDINGS:
George Decker, "The Murder of Alfreda Pike" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
Murder of Charles Stacey, The

DESCRIPTION: Charles Stacey goes out on a Sunday morning and meets three drunks -- one of whom had lost his girlfriend to Stacey. The three ruffians wait till Stacey and the girl return from church, then shoot him. Stacey shoots back at one, then dies and is buried.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (Randolph)

KEYWORDS: homicide courting revenge burial

FOUND IN: US(So)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Randolph 173, "The Murder of Charles Stacey" (1 text)

Roud #4119

NOTES [8 words]: This song is item dF47 in Laws's Appendix II. - RBW

File: R173

Murder of F. C. Benwell, The [Laws E26]

DESCRIPTION: J. R. Birchell is condemned to die for murdering F. C. Benwell. He had tried to pretend innocence in the trial; the attempt failed. His wife bids him farewell, and he is hanged.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1918

KEYWORDS: homicide execution

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Feb 17, 1890 - John Reginald Birchall kills Frederick C Benwell "in the Blenheim swamp in southwestern Ontario." (source: Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario and _The Canadian Encyclopedia_)

Nov 14, 1890 - John Reginald Birchall is tried and hanged for the murder. (source: _The Canadian Encyclopedia_, "Birchall, John Reginald")

FOUND IN: US(MW,NE,Ro) Canada(Ont)

REFERENCES (7 citations):
Laws E26, "The Murder of F. C. Benwell"
Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario 50, "John R. Birchall" (1 text, 1 tune)
Pound-AmericanBalladsAndSongs, 65, pp. 148-149, "The Death of Bendall" (1 text, joined with "Charles Guiteau")
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, p. 228-229, "(J. R. Birchell)" (1 text)
Huntington-FolksongsFromMarthasVineyard, pp. 49-51, "The Death of Bendal" (1 text, with tune on p. 88)
Spaeth-WeepSomeMoreMyLady, pp. 135-136, "The Murder of F. C. Benwell" (1 text)
DT 732, MURBENW*

Roud #2255

RECORDINGS:
Lamont Tilden, "The Murder of F. C. Benwell" (on Ontario1)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Charles Guiteau" [Laws E11] (tune & meter) and references there

NOTES [89 words]: According to Spaeth, "J. R. Birchell killed F. C. Benwell in the swamps near Blenheim, Ontario, and then wrote the account of his own execution...." As, however, no date is offered, and the same story is told about every "Charles Guiteau" variant, the reader is advised to take this with a grain of salt.

This is not to deny that the event is historical. Fowke-TraditionalSingersAndSongsFromOntario, p. 189, calls this "the most famous murder case in Ontario's history." She also declares the song "remarkably accurate" (p. 190). - RBW

Last updated in version 5.2
Murder of John Codman, The
DESCRIPTION: "What sad and awful scenes are these Presented to your View." The crimes of Mark and Phillis, slaves who murdered their master, "appear as black as hell." The two are condemned for "poys'ning" their master, and are condemned to die
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Burt-AmericanMurderBallads)
KEYWORDS: slave homicide poison punishment execution
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sep 18, 1755 - Execution of the slaves Mark and Phillis for their role in the poisoning of their owner
John Codman of Charlestown, Massachusetts. A third slave, Phoebe, was acquitted
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 154-155, (no title) (1 excerpted text)
File: Burt154

Murder of John Dugar, The DESCRIPTION: John Dugar and Charles Robisher quarrel. Dugar murders Captain Charles. Dugar reaches Liverpool and tries to take ship, but is overtaken by a detective. He is tried and condemned.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Flanders/Olney-BalladsMigrantInNewEngland)
KEYWORDS: homicide escape trial punishment execution fight
FOUND IN: US(NE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Flanders/Olney-BalladsMigrantInNewEngland, pp. 172-173, "The Murder of John Dugar" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST FO172 (Partial)
Roud #4681
NOTES [37 words]: Helen Flanders's informant, W. B. Morton, believed that this murder took place in Digby, Nova Scotia, although his text (which is complete on the face of it but badly confused) seems to point to County Clare in Ireland - RBW File: FO172

Murder of John Love, The DESCRIPTION: Broadside. "Again the murderer's ruthless hand Has stained with blood our happy land!" "Three brothers bent on crimes and blood... Have murdered Love, their nearest friend." "The gallows now must end our days, And we must walk in unknown ways."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Burt-AmericanMurderBallads)
KEYWORDS: homicide punishment execution friend brother gallows-confession
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
July 17, 1825 - Hanging of brothers Isaac, Israel, and Nelson Thayer for the murder of John Love, to whom they owed money
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, p. 77, (no title) (2 excerpts)
File: Burt077

Murder of Laura Foster, The [Laws F36]
DESCRIPTION: Laura Foster's fiance and his new sweetheart kill her and bury her. Her parents find the body, and it is agreed that she has been murdered. In the Brown texts, at least, the fate of the murderer is not mentioned
AUTHOR: Thomas Land?
EARLIEST DATE: 1947 (Brown)
KEYWORDS: homicide corpse family
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1866 - Murder of Laura Foster by Thomas C. Dula (and his new sweetheart Ann Melton). Dula apparently killed Foster because he had contracted a venereal disease from her.
May 1, 1868 - Dula is hanged for the murder.
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Laws F36, "The Murder of Laura Foster"
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 302, "The Murder of Laura Foster" (1 text plus mention of 3 more)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 302, "The Murder of Laura Foster" (2 excerpts, 2 tunes)
Roud #1935
RECORDINGS:
Sheila Clark, "The Ballad of Laura Foster" (on LegendTomDula)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Tom Dooley" [Laws F36A] (plot)
cf. "Tom Dula's Lament" (subject)
NOTES [276 words]: Laws does not name an author for this ballad, but the attribution to Thomas Land (a Confederate veteran) seems to have been well known to Brown's informants, and the poetry has the stilted feel of a composition which, at the time of collection, was still close to its composed origins.
For background to this song, see the notes to "Tom Dooley." - RBW
John Craig, the source for [Sheila] Clark's version, learned it from his great-grandmother, Zora Church Lee. He describes the ballad as having been "taken from a popular local account" written by Land. So it sounds like Land wrote the story in prose, which was then made into poetry by an unknown author. Clark's song retains the stilted feel Bob mentions. - PJS
In fact Land wrote it; see the text in Gardner cited above. But Fletcher, p. 138, explains that Land wrote the piece as a poem, not a song. So possibly the person who found the "popular local account" was the person who set it to music. This would also explain why the song doesn't describe Dula's fate. Land published "The Murder of Laura Foster" in 1866, and Dula's case bounced around the courts until 1868, when he was hanged. (Again, see the notes to "Tom Dooley").
As for Land's account being local, Land himself was a witness at Dula's trial, although we don't know what he said. (There is no transcript of the trial, just some notes by the judge and clerk.) Land, according to Fletcher, was a former Confederate officer who was also a schoolteacher. According to Fletcher, p. 140, the text of the Sheila Clark version is very close to Land's original, which sometimes forces her to some tricks to deal with his poor metrical sense. - RBW
Bibliography
- Fletcher: John Edward Fletcher, PhD (with a foreword by Edith Marie Ferguson Carter),_The True Story of Tom Dooley: From Western North Carolina Mystery to Folk Legend_, History Press, 2013

Last updated in version 4.0
File: LF36

Murder of Lottie Yates, The
DESCRIPTION: "Come listen, friends, while I relate Of a crime committed in Kentucky state." Lottie, a young mother living with her parents, is stabbed to death. The murderer (her estranged husband) is found and admits to the crime. He is executed; listeners are warned
AUTHOR: Supposedly Elija(h) "Lige" Adams (source: NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal)
EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (collected from Lindsay Adams, according to Dorson)
Murder of Maria Marten, The

DESCRIPTION: William Corder has Maria Marten meet him at the red barn before they go to Ipswich to be married. He murders her and buries the body in the red barn. Her body is discovered by following her mother's dream. Corder is tried and sentenced to be hanged.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1862 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 14(239))

KEYWORDS: courting homicide dream gallows-confession mother

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
May 18, 1827 - Maria Marten meets William Corder at the "red barn" and is murdered
Nov 1827 - Corder marries Mary Moore in London
Apr 18, 1828 - Supposedly informed by a dream experienced by Maria's stepmother, Maria's father finds the body
Aug 8, 1828 - Corder convicted and condemned to death. He admits to the crime in his condemned cell

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (3 citations):
  Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 628, "Maria Martin" (1 text)
  DT, MARMARTH
  Flemming G. Anderson and Thomas Pettitt, "'The Murder of Maria Marten': The Birth of a Ballad?" in Carol L. Edwards and Kathleen E. B. Manley, _Narrative Folksong: New Directions: Essays in Appreciation of W. Edson Richmond_, Westview Press, 1985, pp. 132-178 (8 texts, 1 tune, some of which might be "Maria Marten" rather than this)

Roud assigne the same number to "Maria Marten"; the texts are clearly different and told from a different point of view. This is a gallows confession.

There is a sequel broadside -- Bodleian, Johnson Ballads 2416, "A copy of verses, on the execution of Wm. Corder, for the murder of Maria Marten, in the Red Barn, Polstead," unknown, no date -- in which he is executed August 11. The commentary to Broadside NLScotland L.C.Fol.70(71b) states that a "broadsheet published in London by James Catnach about this crime sold over one million copies."
Yates, Musical Traditions site Voice of the People suite "Notes - Volume 3" - 19.8.02: "[Marten’s] three illegitimate children -- to different fathers -- and her possible criminal activities with Corder became overshadowed by the myth that grew up around her death. Indeed, research now suggests that her mother’s ‘supernatural dreams’ were motivated not so much by psychic phenomena as by her own criminal knowledge and probable association with Corder." A note for The Haunting of William Corder on the Alistair Ferguson site: "The true-life murder of Maria Marten, upon which John Latimer’s famous [Victorian] melodrama 'Maria Marten; or The Murder in the Red Barn' is based, has been adapted several times over the years. This is my version of the story.

There are references at IMDB [Internet Movie DataBase site] to movies from 1902 (Maria Marten: or, The Murder at the Red Barn), and 1935 (Maria Marten, or The Murder in the Red Barn). - BS

To the above compare Alexander, p. 200, article "Murder in the Red Barn": "The story of Maria Marten and her murder achieved the status of a folk tale largely because of the melodrama The Red Barn or the Gypsy’s Curse that was based on the tragedy. The play was first performed in 1828, the year after Maria’s death, and one reason for its outstanding success was its theme of a simple village girl betrayed by a heartless member of the gentry. The story was given further prominence by a book entitled The Awful Adventure of Maria Monk.

Marten, according to Alexander, was a mole-catcher’s daughter, and William Corder, who had gotten her pregnant, preferred a London school-keeper named Mary Moore. In 1827, he told Marten to meet him at a red barn; she "was never seen alive again." Later, he tells Maria's parent that he has married her, but Maria’s mother had nightmares and managed to convince the authorities to find the body.

In a macabre development, after Corder was hanged, his skin was cured and used as a binding for a record of the proceedings. According to Roud/Bishop-NewPenguinBookOfEnglishFolkSongs, when Maria Marten gave birth to William Corder's baby, it was her third child, by three different fathers (one of the fathers being Corder; that baby apparently died and was secretly buried; Pettitt, p. 236). After Marten was murdered, it took eleven months for her body to be found. Her stepmother had had a dream which led Marten's father and a neighbor to excavate the red barn and find the body. Corder -- who had left town shortly after Marten disappeared -- was at once suspected and was taken into custody two days after the body was found. He was tried at the August 4 Assizes, with the trial itself lasting from August 7-8. He was hanged outside the Bury St. Edmunds gaol on August 11. (The above summarized from the timeline on pp. 240-241 of Pettitt).

Although a lot of the accounts say the murder was premeditated, Corder himself said he did it in a fit of rage, and that he had not expected to bury Marten (Pettitt, p. 237; this in contrast to the various reports that he had already dug her grave).

For more on this story, see now Tom Pettitt's essay, cited in the bibliography. On p. 219 it reports that there were at least six broadsides regarding the crime, although most clearly have not survived. Shepard, p. 62, quotes Henry Mayhew to the effect that broadsheets about the Marten case sold 1,650,000 copies!

Pettitt, p. 221, reports that this was clearly the most popular of the Maria Marten songs; there are eleven versions of parts of the text, plus a number of versions of the tune without text. Pettitt, p. 241, breaks down the broadsides versions of this song into sixteen components, and then looks at the traditional versions to see which survived. Every one of the seven substantial versions includes Corder’s self-identification and his statement that he courted Maria, that he promised to arrange their wedding, that he arranged to meet her at the barn, and that Maria's mother dreamed the body at the barn. Six of seven versions include his statement that he was resolved to kill her, his statement that he did murder her when she arrived, that her father dug her up at the barn, and a final request for pity. Six other plot elements occur in two to five versions, but only one mentions that Corder buried Maria in the barn, and all omit mention of the mother's anxiety.

The Digital Tradition lists this has been collected from one Joseph Taylor (initially in 1908), who sang a three-verse fragment to the tune of "The Star of the County Down"/"Dives and Lazarus."

In addition to the song, there appear to be several books about this case. Andersen and Pettitt apparently regard Donald McCormick's The Red Barn Mystery (John Long, 1967) as being the most informative. More recent is Shane McCrorristine, William Corder and the Red Barn Murder: Journeys of the Criminal Body (Palgrave Pivot, 2014), but it's listed as just 112 pages, so it probably isn't very substantial. - RBW

Bibliography
Murder of Mary Tuplin, The

DESCRIPTION: June 1887. Mary leaves home "her lover for to see Down by the river Margaret." Her jealous lover shoots her "through her brain," ties a rope with a stone around her waist and dashed her in the tide." Her body being found, Willy Millman is hanged.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland)

KEYWORDS: execution homicide trial

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- Jun 28, 1887 - Murder of Mary Tuplin by William Millman
- 1888 - Execution of Millman

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 71-72, "The Murder of Mary Tuplin" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #12463

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Prince Edward Island Murder" (subject)
cf. "The Millman Song" (subject)
cf. "The Millman and Tuplin Song" (subject)

NOTES [108 words]: Roud has at least five different numbers for this event:
Roud #1837: Creighton-SongsAndBalladsFromNovaScotia 140, "Prince Edward Island Murder" [Laws dF59]
Roud #4129: Doerflinger-SongsOfTheSailorAndLumberman, pp. 285-286, "The Millman Song" (also Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 180-181, "The Millman Murder Trial") [LawsdF60]
Roud #9179: Ives-DriveDullCareAway-PrinceEdwardIsland, pp. 46-47, "The Millman and Tuplin Song" (also Manny/Wilson-SongsOfMiramichi 50, "Young Millman")
Roud #9552: Shea, pp. 174-179, "The Millman Tragedy"
Roud #12463: Dibblee/Dibblee-FolksongsFromPrinceEdwardIsland pp. 72-73, "The Murder of Mary Tuplin" - BS

File: Dib071

Murder of McBriars, The

DESCRIPTION: McBriars, "master of an Orange Lodge," stops for whisky at a tavern and proclaims his Orange loyalty too loudly. He is killed "by Papish schemes" and "three villains" "He was an old and feeble man not able to resist" Thousands attend the funeral.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: c.1860 (Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)

KEYWORDS: homicide funeral drink political

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 99, "The Murder of McBriars" (1 text, 1 tune)
Smyth/Bush/Long-OrangeLark 14, "The Murder of McBriars" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [16 words]: Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion: "McBriars is said to have been killed in the early 1860's." - BS
Murder of Patsy Beasly, The

DESCRIPTION: Listeners are invited to hear the tale of a "harmless woman." "Patsy Beasly was her name, In Anson County where she was slain, Her little child alone was left, To live with others or starve to death."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1066 (NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal)

KEYWORDS: homicide children abandonment

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Aug 1844 - The body of Patsy Beasley found in Anson County, North Carolina. Some accounts say her young son had been left abandoned with her dead body with no means of taking care of himself

Oct 8, 1847 - Tom Nash, the probable father of Beasley's unborn child, is hung for her murder

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Roud #11569

NOTES [120 words]: According to the notes in NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal, several people remembered the existence of this song, but the single stanza is all anyone recalled. But the history was remembered: Patsy Beasly (who already had one illegitimate child) was pregnant again, and was found murdered. The killer (and presumed father of her child), Tom Nash, was found out and eventually hung. Helms notes some similarities to the story of Tom Dula and Laura Foster, but the differences are also fairly significant. As a story, I find this one more affecting; Laura Foster doesn't seem to have been much more use to the world than was Tom Dula, but Patsy Beasley sounds like a decent person and her child didn't deserve to be orphaned. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.1

File: NCF15251

Murder of Pearl Bryan, The (Pearl Bryan V)

DESCRIPTION: The Setters take on the Peal Bryan story: "A horrible crime was committed Soon was brought to light; For parents to look on their headless girl, What a sad and terrible sight."

Jackson's insanity plea fails; he is to be executed; Walling's trial awaits

AUTHOR: adapted by James W. Day ("Jilson Setters")

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Thomas)

KEYWORDS: homicide trial execution punishment

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Feb 1, 1896 - Discovery of the headless body of Pearl Bryan, killed along with her unborn child by Scott Jackson and Alonzo Walling, near Fort Thomas, Kentucky

Mar 20, 1897 - Execution of Jackson and Walling

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Thomas-BalladMakingInMountainsOfKentucky, pp. 131-135, "The Murder of Pearl Bryan" (1 text, 1 tune)

Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, p. 32, (no title) (1 excerpt)

ST ThBa131 (Partial)

Roud #500

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "The Jealous Lover (I), The (Florella, Floella) (Pearl Bryan II) (Nell Cropsey II) (Laws F1A, B, C)" [Laws F1], particularly the "B" subgroup of Pearl Bryan ballads

cf. "Pearl Bryan I" [Laws F2]

cf. "Pearl Bryan III" [Laws F3]

cf. "Pearl Bryan (IV)"

NOTES [102 words]: Thomas's version is rather a curiosity, since she learned it from Jilson Setters decades after the murder but he never updated the song. There is no evidence that it ever circulated in tradition.

Roud lumps this with Laws F1(B). But while it's just possible that that song inspired Jilson Setters, this is not a version of the Laws ballad. But my guess is that the song was inspired by the piece which Burt-AmericanMurderBallads excerpts, since both songs end with a stanza about Pearl and her head being reunited in heaven. For background on the Pearl Bryan murder see the notes to "Pearl Bryan (I)" [Laws F2]. - RBW

File: ThBa131

Murder of Sarah Vail, The [Laws F9]
DESCRIPTION: John Monroe, a married man with two children, seduces Sarah Vail, who bears him a child. He takes woman and child on a trip, murders them, and hides their bodies. When his crime is discovered, he is hanged
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Flanders/Ballard/Brown/Barry-NewGreenMountainSongster)
KEYWORDS: homicide pregnancy children corpse
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Oct 31, 1868 - Murder of Sarah Vail and her child
Feb 1870 - Hanging of John Monroe
FOUND IN: US(NE) Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Laws F9, "The Murder of Sarah Vail"
Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 89, "Munro's Confession" (1 text, 1 tune)
Flanders/Ballard/Brown/Barry-NewGreenMountainSongster, pp. 221-223, "The Murder of Sarah Vail" (1 text, 1 tune)
DT 760, SARAVAIL
Roud #2258
File: LF09

Murder of Susan Newham, The
DESCRIPTION: "Come friends and relations, I bid you adieu, The grace is now open to welcome me through." The singer admits, "I killed Susan Newham as you have heard tell," bids his friends not to mourn, and looks forward to seeing her in heaven
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1921 (Burt-AmericanMurderBallads)
KEYWORDS: homicide execution reunion gallows-confession
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, p. 178, (no title) (1 text)
NOTES [47 words]: According to Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, J. B. Crane was a schoolteacher in Hangtown, California, who became enamored of his student Susan Newham. She rejected him, and he murdered her in 1854. Crane reportedly surrendered to the police, but was captured by vigilantes and hung. - RBW
File: Burt178

Murder of the Double-Dyed Informer James Carey, The DESCRIPTION: "Kilmarnham's blood is avenged" by the murder of James Carey on board the Melrose. "So traitors all beware I say, And innocent blood don't take away, For vengeful hands shall you repay"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE:
KEYWORDS: betrayal homicide revenge Africa
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
The Phoenix Park murders (source: primarily Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion, pp. 62, 63, 281-286.)
May 6, 1882 - Chief Secretary Lord Frederick Cavendish and the Under Secretary Thomas Henry Burke are murdered by a group calling themselves "The Invincible Society."
January 1883 - twenty seven men are arrested.
James Carey, one of the leaders in the murders, turns Queen's evidence.
Six men are condemned to death, four are executed (Joseph Brady is hanged May 14, 1883; Daniel Curley is hanged on May 18, 1883), others are "sentenced to penal servitude," and Carey is freed and goes to South Africa.

July 29, 1883 - Patrick O'Donnell kills Carey on board the "Melrose Castle" sailing from Cape Town to Durban.

Dec 1883 - Patrick O'Donnell is convicted of the murder of James Carey and executed in London (per Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast)

Murder of Thomas Walsh, The

DESCRIPTION: "It's a sad and cruel tragedy I am going to relate, Happened near Willow City in North Dakota state." Harmless old Thomas Walsh is found dead. Sheriff Billy Pitts arrests William Ross, who is convicted and bids a sad farewell AUTHOR: Thomas Cave?

EARLiest DATE: 1958 (Burt-AmericanMurderBallads)

KEYWORDS: homicide trial execution punishment

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

July 5, 1903 - Discovery of the murdered body of farmer Thomas Walsh

Mar 6, 1903 - William Ross executed (in Ohio) for the murder of Ross

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 82-83, (no title) (1 text)

Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia2, p. 479, "[William Ross and Thomas Walsh]" (1 text)

Murder of William Funston, The

DESCRIPTION: William Funston is murdered near Trillick. The Catholic Maguires are arrested for the crime. "Two purged Orangemen named Smith and Armstrong" are paid to swear against them. McGrory implicates Armstrong. The singer hopes they will be acquitted.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1973 (Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday)

KEYWORDS: homicide trial accusation lie political

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday 52, pp. 147-148, 175, "The Murder of William Funston" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2935
NOTES [88 words]: The song says the murder occurred near Trillick town on March 9, fair-day of Irvinestown, County Fermanagh. Morton/Maguire-ComeDayGoDayGodSendSunday: "... such happenings are likely to take place when inter-religious tension is high in this country, so perhaps we can suggest sometime during the 1910s or 1920s as the possible date of this particular incident. At such times each side of the religious divide will tend to think the worst of those on the other side." Funston himself was, according to the song, an Orangeman. - BS
File: MoMa052

Murder of Young Somers

DESCRIPTION: "When the news it did come in, Sebastopol was taken, (there was rejoicing in the city, and drinking, and young Somers was murdered.)" Somers is knifed to death by accident; "(the man who stabbed Somers ... was after another man)"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland)
KEYWORDS: fight war death drink
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sep 9, 1855 - Fall of Sevastopol following an 11 month siege
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 153, "Murder of Young Somers" (1 fragment)
Peacock, pp. 823-824, "The Murder of Dennis Somers" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #17750
RECORDINGS:
Freeman Bennett, "The Murder of Dennis Somers" (on PeacockCDROM)
NOTES [9 words]: Peacock believes the murder took place in St John's. - BS
Last updated in version 2.6
File: GrMa153

Murder Song

DESCRIPTION: A rich lady asks poor Willie to marry. She gives him 15000 pounds for their passage to a country where he can be a gentleman. He throws her in the deep. A wave reveals the corpse. Good Friday her ghost testifies against him and he is sentenced to die
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick)
KEYWORDS: execution trial homicide river gallows-confession ghost
FOUND IN: Canada(Mar)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick 90, "Murder Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
ST CrSNB090 (Partial)
Roud #2769
NOTES [123 words]: Well, almost a gallows-confession. The last verse is truncated but has his parents standing by for the execution on April 29, but -- while the ballad starts with a hope that the listeners will pray for him -- he doesn't get to repeat that request at the end. Creighton-FolksongsFromSouthernNewBrunswick: "The place name may be Lipper or Lifford; it was difficult to make out." I repeat that here because it may help connect this tale with some other ballad or some specific murder. - BS
My obvious conjecture would be "Liffey." But that doesn't really help -- though obviously a lot of Irish emigrated to America, so it could connect with the emigration theme. Nor does the April 29 date, though of course that could have been garbled. - RBW
File: CrSNB090
Murdered by a Brother [Laws F12]

DESCRIPTION: A brother takes his sister sailing. He denounces her adulterous liaison and announces that he will be avenged. He has already drowned her lover; now he drowns her and sails back alone.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Flanders/Ballard/Brown/Barry-NewGreenMountainSongster)

KEYWORDS: homicide adultery sea

FOUND IN: US(NE)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
- Laws F12, "Murdered by a Brother"
- Flanders/Ballard/Brown/Barry-NewGreenMountainSongster, pp. 92-94, "Murdered by a Brother" (1 text, 1 tune)
- DT 758, MURDBRO

File: LF12

---

Murdered Pedlar, The

DESCRIPTION: "Vouchsafe thine aid, ye wondrous nine... A tragic scene transpired of late, The truth of which I will relate." "A Jewish pedlar was shot down, Ah, by a wretch called Warren Wood." "Hiram Williams was the peddler's name." Wood is sentenced to hang.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1958 (Burt-AmericanMurderBallads)

KEYWORDS: homicide execution punishment Jew

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- Aug 19, 1853 - Warren Wood robs and attempts to murder Hiram Williams (Williams survived long enough to identify a photograph of Wood)
- Jun 20, 1864 - Wood is hanged for murder

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 79-80, "(The Murdered Pedlar)" (1 text)

File: Burt079

---

Murdered Wife or the Case of Henry G. Green, The

DESCRIPTION: "Come young and old attention give and lend a listening ear" as the singer tells of "a gay and sprightly youth who lived in Berlin Town." Henry Green becomes enamored of beautiful singer Mary Ann Wyatt, marries her, then murders her, and confesses

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Bulletin of theFolk Song Society of the Northeast)

KEYWORDS: homicide marriage execution poison

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
- 1845 - Murder of Mary Ann Wyatt Green (February) and execution of Henry Green (September)

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, pp. 8-11, "The Murdered Wife or the Case of Henry G. Green" (1 text)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

NOTES [163 words]: This rather rare broadside on the Mary Wyatt/Henry Green story can be distinguished from the more common ballad "Henry Green (The Murdered Wife)" by the lines quoted in the description and by its length.

According to Burt-AmericanMurderBallads, Mary Ann Wyatt was a performer in a troupe which staged temperance dramas. Her appearance so excited Henry Green that he joined the troupe to court her. They were married in February 1845. The marriage was so sudden that Green felt compelled to publicize it with a sleighing party for his friends, at which a former love told him that she had once wished to marry him. Wyatt felt sick the next day, and Green went to get some medicine. He shoved more and more down her throat, and she died by poison.
Burt-AmericanMurderBallads claims that there are seven different songs written about this story, but cites only this, parts of the Laws ballad, and a single stanza of a third (which might, however, be part of the Laws piece). - RBW

Murderer's Home Blues

DESCRIPTION: The singer is in jail, imagines finding a jailer with a key, and hopes to be a free man some day. "Sent me to the chain gang, back to the murderers' home, I'd a been in better shape if I'd left that reckless woman alone."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1940 (USWMcTell01)

KEYWORDS: captivity courting prison nonballad judge

FOUND IN: US(SE)

Roud #17454

RECORDINGS: Blind Willie McTell, "Murderer's Home Blues" (on USWMcTell01)

File: RcMuHoBl

Murderers Rock

DESCRIPTION: "Murderers Rock stands on the track And watches all that passes" by the Dunstan, where there is a gold rush. Four men murder Mathieu and other miners. Burgess, the leader, and three others will be hanged "on the evidence of an informer"

AUTHOR: Neal Colquhoun

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Colquhoun-NZ-Folksongs-SongOfAYoungCountry)

KEYWORDS: homicide police trial death punishment execution

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

1866 - arrest of the Dunstan murderers. One of them, Joseph Thomas Sullivan, turns Queen's Evidence against the rest of the band

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Colquhoun-NZ-Folksongs-SongOfAYoungCountry, p. 41, "Murderers Rock" (1 text, 1 tune) (p. 41 in the 1972 edition)

Garland-FacesInTheFirelight-NZ, pp. 132, 135, 136-137, "(Murderers Rock" (various excerpts)

RECORDINGS:

Tamburlaine, "Murderers Rock" (on NZSongYngCntry)

NOTES [443 words]: The story of the "Maungatapu murderers," or the "Dunstan murderers," is told on pp. 132-137 of Garland-FacesInTheFirelight-NZ. The trial apparently attracted great attention, but it doesn't seem to have left much mark on history.

A shorter summary occurs on p. 42 of Ell, in the entry on "The Burgess-Kelly Gang":

"The most notorious of the gangs to operate on the goldfields of New Zealand was known as the Burgess-Kelly gang. They were four armed robbers, criminals from Australia, named Burgess, Kelly, Levy, and Sullivan,... [Burgess and Kelly] were involved in incidents about Tuapeka in central Otago where Burgess and Kelly were arrested and sent to jail for three years. Released in 1865, they swore to take a life for every lash laid on them while imprisoned. Levy was said to have a gang in the Kawarau Gorge, near Cromwell, which robbed the passing miners and threw their bodies in the river. These three met up with Sullivan in the 1865 gold rush to Westland.... The gang was caught following the murder of five men on the slopes of Maungatapu. Their victims were storekeepers returning from the Wakamarina gold diggings. When arrested, Sullivan confessed and got life imprisonment. His partners were hanged, their corpses placed on public display, and their death masks taken for posterity. See Confession of Richard Burgess: the Mungatapu murders and other grisly crimes, edited by David Burton...."

NewZealandEncyclopedia, p. 359, says that the "MAUNGATAPU MURDERS were the result of one of the few cases of bush-ranging in NZ during the gold-mining days." It goes on to say that the four murder victims, who left the Wakamarina River on June 12, 1866, were miner James de Pontius, hotelkeeper Felix Mathieu, and storekeepers John Kempthorne and James Dudley. At first, no bodies were found -- only a dead horse and various artifacts. Joseph Thomas Sullivan, Philip Levy, Richard Burgess, and Thomas Kelly, all Londoners with criminal backgrounds, were taken into custody on suspicion. It sounds as if they might have gotten off if they had kept their mouths shut, but "On the promise of a reward and a free pardon, Sullivan confessed that he had been the look-out but the other three had committed the crimes, and the bodies were discovered according to his directions. Two of the victims had been shot, one stabbed and the other strangled."

The other three, duly convicted were hanged at Nelson in October 1866. Sullivan in turn eventually faced a different murder charge, and was sentenced to hang in turn, but this was commuted to life in prison.

I have no idea why the song implies that Levy is any better than Burgess and Kelly. - RBW

Bibliography

Mureau, Mureau the Devil

DESCRIPTION: The singer, Mureau "the devil," is so bad that his mother made his father disown him. Be careful or his fighting stick will come down on your head and that fighting stick will be used to measure your coffin.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (WITrinidadVillage01)
KEYWORDS: bragging warning fight violence nonballad
FOUND IN: West Indies (Trinidad)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
ADDITIONAL: J.D. Elder, "Kalinda: Song of the Battling Troubadours of Trinidad" in _The Journal of the Folklore Institute_, Vol. 3, No. 2 (Aug., 1966 (made available online by JSTOR)) #1 pp. 198-199, 202-203, "Me Mother Bring Me" (1 text, 1 tune)
RECORDINGS:
Henry Williams, Allan Lovelace and George Roberts, "Mureau, Mureau the Devil" (on WITrinidadVillage01)
NOTES [157 words]: This is a Trinidadian Carnival kalinda song. That is, it is a song used by stick fighters advertising how threatening they are. This song is typical of kalinda song in that it is in a minor key.
For a few references on kalinda, see
Donald R. Hill, Maureen Warner-Lewis, John Cowley, Lise Winer, liner notes on WITrinidadVillage01

Murillo's Lesson

DESCRIPTION: "As down the lone valley with cedars o'erspread, From war's dread confusion I pensively strayed." "Perfumes of Eden slowed sweetly along; A voice as of angels enchantingly sung; Columbia, Columbia, to glory arise...."

AUTHOR: Dr. Timothy Dwight (source: Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida)
EARLIEST DATE: 1950 (Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad patriotic
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, #89, "Columbia" (2 short texts, 1 tune)
Roud #17927

NOTES [252 words]: According to Morris-FolksongsOfFlorida, the two texts he has are both shortened versions of Dr. Timothy Dwight's poem "Columbia," which have been turned from a patriotic to a religious theme. It seems to me that both themes are still strongly present. The verse preserved by Morris is the last, with his "chorus" being close to the first verse:

Columbia, Columbia, to glory arise,
The queen of the world and the child of the skies!
Thy genius commands thee; with rapture behold,
While ages on ages thy splendors unfold.
Thy reign is the last and the noblest of time,
Most fruitful thy soil, most inviting thy clime;
Let the crimes of the east ne'er encrimson thy name;
Be freedom and science and virtue thy fame.

According to John Julian, editor, A Dictionary of Hymnology, 1892; second edition 1907 (I use the 1957 Dover edition in two volumes), pp. 316-317, Timothy Dwight "is the most important name in early American hymnology, as it is also one of the most illustrious is American literature and education. He was b[orn] at Northampton, Massachusetts, May 14, 1752, and graduated at Yale College, 1769.... [After 1777 he] became for a short time a chaplain in the United States Army, but passed on in 1783 to Fairfield, Connecticut, where he held a pastorate, and taught in an Academy, till his appointment, in 1795, as President of Yale College....

"Dwight's lyrics are all professedly psalms, but they are by no means literal versions." I recognize none of the items Julian lists as being from his pen. - RBW

Last updated in version 3.7
File: Morr088

Murphy Delaney

DESCRIPTION: "Murphy Delany so funny and frisky Reeled into a shebeen to get his skin full." He falls into a coal barge, thinking it his bed. He is hauled out by people who think him deed, then comes to life. He is forced to fight the doctor and flee the coroner

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1835 (Journal of the Frances Henrietta)
KEYWORDS: drink death humorous escape
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, pp. 334-335, "Murphy Delany" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #25981

NOTES [16 words]: This seems to have been very common in broadsides, but actual traditional versions are few. - RBW

Last updated in version 4.2
File: HGam334

Murphy in the Cupboard

DESCRIPTION: The singer loves Molly McClare. He finds her kitchen door open and hides in a cupboard. She returns kissing Murphy. When Murphy also has to hide in the cupboard he reveals he is Molly's husband. The singer locks Murphy in and leaves with the key.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1980 (Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou)
KEYWORDS: love humorous hiding husband wife
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 81, "Murphy in the Cupboard" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #28970
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Boatsman and the Chest" [Laws Q8] (plot) and references there
File: LeBe081
Murray Holds the Reins

DESCRIPTION: "There's another of this nobby band That I've not mentioned yet; There is Dickson with his pettyfogging hell, Who rules, 'The law is not enough To punish Mormon crime." Mormon persecutors Ireson, Zane, and Dickson, are bound for hell for opposing polygamy

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah)
KEYWORDS: trial punishment Hell
FOUND IN: US(Ro)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #247, "Murray Holds the Reins" (1 short text)
Roud #25782
File: Hubb247

Murrumbigdee Shearer, The

DESCRIPTION: "Come, all you jolly natives, and I'll relate to you Some of my observations -- adventures, too, a few." The singer tells of the stations he has visited to ask for work. Denied employment, he has stolen and even burned the place. He ends up in prison

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1905 (Paterson, _Old Bush Songs_)
KEYWORDS: work hardtimes prison
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Anderson-StoryOfAustralianFolksong, pp. 185-187, "The Murrumbidgee Shearer" (1 text, 1 tune)
Stewart/Keesing-FavoriteAustralianBallads, pp. 54-55, "The Murrumbidgee Shearer" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Maryborough Miner" (tune, theme)
File: PFS192

Murty Hynes

DESCRIPTION: Poor Bermingham is evicted from his farm for failure to pay rent. Murty Hines takes the farm but is persuaded by the Land League to give it up. The people celebrate. "Give three cheers for the Land League and nine for Murty Hines"

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads)
KEYWORDS: poverty Ireland political
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 14, "Murty Hynes" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9757
NOTES [59 words]: Formed in 1879, the Irish tenant farmers' Land League fought evictions and spearheaded land reforms through Parliament. - PJS
For other songs and more information on the League, see "The Moneygran Pig Hunt" and "The Bold Tenant Farmer."
Sullivan is the author of a number of Irish patriotic poems, of which "God Save Ireland" is probably the best-known. - RBW
File: OLoM014

Music Alone Shall Live

DESCRIPTION: German: "Himmel und Erde mussen verghen, Aber die musici (x3) Bleiben bestehn." English: "All things shall perish from under the sky, Music alone shall live (x3), Never to die."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1973
Music and Love

DESCRIPTION: "How great is the pleasure How sweet the delight, When soft love and music together unite. How sweet sweet how sweet the delight When harmony sweet harmony and love do unite."

AUTHOR: Henry Harrington (1727-1816) (source: _Supplement to the Musical Library_)

EARLIEST DATE: 1834 (_Supplement to the Musical Library_) fragment; 1838 (Gardiner)

KEYWORDS: love music nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, p. 306, "Music and Love" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 640)
- ADDITIONAL: William Gardiner, Music and Friends (London, 1838 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol. I, p. 437, ("How great is the pleasure How sweet the light") (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #1348

NOTES [76 words]: The _Supplement to the Musical Library_ (London, 1834 ("Digitized by Google")), (September 1834) No. 6, p. 62, reads "'How great is the pleasure, how sweet the delight, When soft love and music together unite!' Composed, and we believe written by Henry Harrington, M.D., a physician, eminent in Bath ... born in Somersetshire in 1727... and died ... on the 15th of January, 1816." (also Gardiner, p. 284)

The current description is from the Gardiner text. - BS

Last updated in version 2.6

File: WT306A

Music and Wine

DESCRIPTION: The singer wants nothing but to "sing of my pleasure in music and wine." He says nothing can compare with them but then thinks of days past "joined hand in hand with my true love" kissing and listening to birds sing.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames)

KEYWORDS: love music wine nonballad bird

FOUND IN: Britain(England(South))

REFERENCES (1 citation):
- Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 42-43, "Music and Wine" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Gl 38)

Roud #1229

File: WT042

Musieu Bainjo

DESCRIPTION: Creole French. "Yoyez ce mulet la, Musieu Bainjo, Comme il est insolent. Chapeau sur cote, Musieu Bainjo. La canne a la main, Musieu Bainjo. Botte qui fait crin, crin, Musieu Bainjo."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)

KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage clothes

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Musselburgh Field [Child 172]

DESCRIPTION: "Two goodly hosts" meet on Musselburgh Field. The Scots enter the battle confident, but are defeated heavily. The English narrator describes the contingents defeated.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1750 (Percy Folio); "Upon the Scots being beaten at Muscelborough Field" appeared in "Choyce Drollery" in 1656

KEYWORDS: battle, nobility

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:

Sep 10, 1547 - Battle of Pinkie (Pinkie Cleuch, Musselburgh). English armies defeat the Scots

FOUND IN: Britain

REFERENCES (4 citations):

Child 172 "Musselburgh Field" (1 text)

Hales/Furnival-BishopPercysFolioManuscript, volume I, pp. 123-126, "Musleboorrowe ffeild" (1 fragment)

ADDITIONAL: Michael Brander, _Scottish and Border Battles and Ballads_, 1975 (page references to the 1993 Barnes & Noble edition), p. 84, "Musselburgh Field" (1 text)

Roud #4003

NOTES [421 words]: The song claims that the battle of Pinkie was fought in "the fourth yeere of King Edwards raigne" -- but in fact 1547 was the first year of the reign of Edward VI (reigned 1547-1553). Other such errors occur in the song (e.g. the battle is dated to the twelfth of December, not the tenth of September); apparently the piece (which surely originated as a broadside) went through several stages of imperfect tradition. According to Albert B. Friedman, The Ballad Revival, University of Chicago Press, 1961, the Choyce Drollery version of 1656, which he suspects is the original (but which, note, is still two centuries after Pinkie!), is free of some of these errors. (The other possibility is that it perhaps started as a song about some other Anglo-Scottish battle, and was imperfectly adapted, but the data in the song is hardly enough to reconstruct which.)

Pinkie was the final major ballad of the Anglo-Scottish border wars; by the time the Scots were fully recovered, Elizabeth was Queen of England and the Scottish monarchs were her heirs; James VI, in particular, was very careful not to offend Elizabeth.

Pinkie was part of a long campaign between the English and Scots over the fate of the infant Queen Mary, who came to the throne at the age of eight days (1542) and instantly found herself a pawn in the contest between England and France.

In 1543, the English under Henry VIII pressured the Scots into negotiations, and the result was a draft treaty to wed Mary to Prince Edward (the future Edward VI). The Scottish parliament, however, rejected the treaty. There followed the so-called "Rough Wooing"; Henry sent in his armies in 1544 (burning Edinburgh) and 1545, but the latter was heavily defeated at Ancrum Moor. A quiet period followed, with continued skirmishing but no big battles. That changed after Henry VIII died in 1547. Now, with Edward VI King of England, the desire to take over Scotland was even stronger.

The battle of Pinkie itself resulted when the English Lord Protector, the Duke of Somerset, let an English army in the direction of Edinborough. The Earl of Arran gathered a Scots army -- but, as was often the case, the Scottish army was not really a unified force, but a collection of individual armies; the English won an easy victory.

Pinkie scared the Scots, but did not convince them to marry their Queen to Edward; instead, they shipped her off to France the next year, though her marriage to the French Crown Prince was childless and she ended up going back home after his death. - RBW

Musselman

DESCRIPTION: "When the summer winds blow And the buttercups grow... Where the wild curlew flies, Jimmy's favorite lies, An honest and trustworthy horse." Describes the beloved horse
Musselman, how it raced and how people greeted it, and its grave
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1975
KEYWORDS: horse racing burial
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia, pp. 222-223, "Musselman" (1 text, 1 tune)
File: FaE222

Mussels in the Corner
DESCRIPTION: "Indeed I's in love with you, Up all night in the foggy dew, 'Deed I's in love with you, Mussels in the corner." "Ask a bayman for a smoke, He will say his pipe is broke, Ask a bayman for a chew, He will bite it off of you." Other verses are similar
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1997 (Eric West, _Sing Around This One: Songs of Newfoundland & Labrador Vol. 2_)
KEYWORDS: love clothes drugs hardtimes dancing sailor
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
DT, MUSSLCRN*
ADDITIONAL: Ron Young, _Dictionary of Newfoundland and Labrador_, Downhome Publishing Inc., 2006, p. 261, "(Mussels in the Corner)" (1 excerpt)
Roud #26307
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Dirty Newfoundlanders
NOTES [117 words]: "Baymen" were people of Newfoundland who did not come from St. John's -- meaning that they probably lived on the coast of one of Newfoundland's many bays. The word seems to have been in use by 1792 (StoryKirwinWiddowson, pp. 32-33). The relatively sophisticated people of St. John's ("Townies") often had a low opinion of other Newfoundlanders -- and vice versa. Wright, p. 35, for instance, writes that "the common antagonism between 'baymen' (rural people) and 'townies' (St. John's people)... finds great expression on lavatory walls at the [Memorial] university."
This conflict between the people of Newfoundland may well be the subject of "Saint John's Girl," and possibly "Irishmen All" as well. - RBW
Bibliography

- Wright: Guy Wright, Sons & Seals: A Voyage to the Ice, ISER (Institute of Social and Economic Research, Memorial University of Newfoundland), 1984

Last updated in version 5.2
File: YDN261

Must I Go Bound
DESCRIPTION: The singer laments, "Must I go bound and you go free." (S)he hears someone sing "that marriage was a pleasant thing," but "My marriage day soon turned to woe." The singer's spouse has scorned/abused the singer; the singer hopes for revenge
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: marriage abuse betrayal
FOUND IN: Ireland Britain(England(South))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H218a/b, p. 386, "Must I Go Bound" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Brocklebank/Kindersley-DorsetBookOfFolkSongs, p. 8, "Must I Be Bound" (1 text, 1 tune)
Must I Go to Mississippi?

DESCRIPTION: "Must I go to Mississippi? Must I go or must I stay? Must I go all broken hearted? Oh, my heart shall break in two." "Who will shoe your foot...."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1934 (Henry, collected from Mrs. Nathan Hicks)

KEYWORDS: travel floating verses

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry-SongsSungInTheSouthernAppalachians, p. 24, "Must I Go To Mississippi?" (1 text, of three verses, of which the last two are "Who Will Shoe Your Pretty Little Foot?")

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Who Will Shoe Your Pretty Little Foot?" (lyrics)

NOTES [49 words]: Although two-thirds of the Hicks version are from "Who Will Shoe Your Pretty Little Foot," the first verse is separate. I'm splitting the songs on the odd chance that the "Must I Go to Mississippi" verse is part of something else. Though it is unlikely to matter unless we find more text. - RBW

File: MHApp024

Must Jesus Bear the Cross Alone

DESCRIPTION: Chorus: "My heart's been fixed, My mind's made up, In Thou I live for him." Verse: "Must Jesus bear the cross alone And all the world go free, No there's a cross for every one And there's a cross for me"

AUTHOR: (see NOTES)

EARLIEST DATE: 1898 (Date)

KEYWORDS: nonballad religious Jesus

FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Gainer-FolkSongsFromTheWestVirginiaHills, p. 204, "Must Jesus Bear the Cross Alone" (1 text, 1 tune)

ADDITIONAL: Henry Date, Pentecostal Hymns Nos. 1 and 2 Combined (Chicago: Hope Publishing Company, 1898 ("Digitized by Internet Archive")) #292 p. 217, "Must Jesus Bear the Cross Alone" (1 text, 1 tune)
Ira D. Sankey, Sankey's Sacred Songs and Solos (1200 Hymns) (London: Collins, 1921?), #610, ("Must Jesus bear the cross alone") (1 text)

RECORDINGS:
Gullah Kinfolk, "Me Heart Dun Fixt" (on USSeasIsland04)

NOTES [217 words]: The pattern of the Gullah Kinfolk recording is common to "shouts": a verse of what is often a Sankey hymn, and a chorus that may or may not be from Sankey. - BS

According to William Reynolds, Companion to Baptist Hymnal, Broadman Press, 1976, pp. 143-144, the original version of the first stanza of this read
Shall Simon bear the cross alone,
And other saints be free,
Each saint of thine shall find his own,
And there is one for me.
This appeared in Thomas Shepherd's 1693 "Penitential Cries." Reynolds does not state who "Simon" was (Simon of Cyrene, who was made to carry Jesus's cross according to Mark 15:21, etc.? Simon Peter?), nor who substituted "Jesus." The other verses come from other sources, and apparently were assembled by George N. Allen, who published a three-verse version in 1844 in "The Oberlin Social and Sabbath School Hymn Book." Thus Allen, although not exactly entitled to the name "author," is responsible for the hymn as it is known. Allan apparently did compose the tune "Maitland."
Reynolds, p. 425, says that Shepherd (1665-1739) was an Englishman who originally belonged to the Church of England but left it in 1694 to lead an independent congregation in Nottingham. In 1700, he moved to another congregation, in Bocking, Essex, where he worked until his death. - RBW

Mustang Gray (The Maid of Monterey)

DESCRIPTION: "There was a brave old Texan, his name was Mustang Gray." When the Mexicans invaded Texas, he was taken prisoner. "He wore the yoke of bondage through the streets of Monterey. A senorita loved him...." and turned him loose

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1908

KEYWORDS: love battle prisoner rescue

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1835 - Mayberry B. Gray migrates to Texas from South Carolina (source: Tinsley-HeWasSinginThisSong)

FOUND IN: US(MA,So)

REFERENCES (7 citations):
Thorp/Fife-SongsOfTheCowboys IX, pp. 104-111 (23-24), "Mustang Gray" (4 texts, 1 tune); Thorp/Logsdon-SongsOfTheCowboys, pp. 102-104, "Mustang Gray" (1 text)
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 49, "Mustang Gray" (1 text, 1 tune)
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 149, "Mustang Gray" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-AmericanBalladsAndFolkSongs, pp. 395-396, "Mustang Gray" (1 text, 1 tune)
Tinsley-HeWasSinginThisSong, pp. 196-199, "Mustang Gray" (1 text, 1 tune)
Saffel-CowboyPoetry, pp. 190-191, "Mustang Gray" (1 text)

DT, MUSTGRAY*

Roud #4035

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Turkish Lady" [Laws O26] (plot)
cf. "Young Beichan" [Child 53] (plot)

SAME TUNE:
The Dying Soldier Boy ("Upon Manassa's bloody plain a soldier boy lay dying" -- words by A. B. Cunningham) (War Songs and Poems of the Southern Confederacy, pp. 347-348)

NOTES [131 words]: Thorp/Fife-SongsOfTheCowboys notes that this song takes two forms: "In Hewitt's original aria interest is focused on the senorita and her heroic deed. The texts most current in Western American oral tradition... bring the American soldier-cowboy into central focus...." The piece seems to have drawn its title from the 1847 novel The Volunteer, or The Maid of Monterrey, by Ned Bluntine.
The song has been variously credited to John Hill Hewitt, Tom Grey, and James Lytle. Thorp/Fife-SongsOfTheCowboys considers Hewitt (a well-known composer) to be the most likely candidate -- although Thorp himself credited it to Grey.
I would consider it not unlikely that someone (unknown) wrote the words and Hewitt added a tune. As "Mustang Gray," this song is item dB28 in Laws's Appendix II. - RBW

Mustering Song (The Old Poley Cow)

DESCRIPTION: "Master came to the old hut door And said has he had often said before,
"Tomorrow will be mustering day." An old poley cow flees the mob; Master's horse throws him and he dies. The singer sees master's ghost as he goes to gather the body

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1967 (Stewart/Keesing-FavoriteAustralianBallads); reportedly printed in the Brisbane "Queenslander" in 1894
KEYWORDS: cowboy death ghost work
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Stewart/Keesing-FavoriteAustralianBallads, p. 19, "The Old Poley Cow" (1 composite version)
Roud #27771
File: SKeF019

Mustering Song, The

DESCRIPTION: The station owner gathers the crew for mustering day. The workers head out to gather the herd when the old man is thrown into a tree and dies. The next day, the singer sees the man's ghost in his usual place, smoking his usual clay (pipe)

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1894 (The Queenslander)
KEYWORDS: ghost death horse boss Australia
FOUND IN: Australia
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia, pp. 158-159, "The Mustering Song" (1 text, 1 tune)
Manifold-PenguinAustralianSongbook, pp. 80-81, "Mustering Day" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #27771
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Drunken Sailor (Early in the Morning)" (tune & meter)
NOTES [77 words]: The description is based on Fahey-Eureka-SongsThatMadeAustralia. The version in Anderson-StoryOfAustralianFolksong has no mention of the old man with the pipe; it's just a list of problems encountered by herdsmen. The first verses are close enough to show that the two are derived from the same original, so I list them together here. But one is clearly a rewrite of the other. My strong suspicion is that the Fahey text is the rewrite; it has much more plot. - RBW

Mutlah, The

DESCRIPTION: Fragment: "Our good ship she heeled over and sank upon her side, And left her chains and anchors all in the Eddy-tide Outside the sunken Cooneys, where the Mutlah went aground, All with her general cargo, she for Halifax was bound"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1947 (Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast)
KEYWORDS: drowning sea ship wreck sailor
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Apr 16, 1877 - "The ... Mutlah ... went ashore at Glynn Point, Poulshone mear Courtown Captain Faraquar, one passenger and ten of fourteen crew were drowned.... the survivors described the captain as drunk...." (source: Bourke in _Shipwrecks of the Irish Coast_ v1, p. 45)
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Ranson-SongsOfTheWexfordCoast, p. 127, "The Mutlah" (1 text)
Roud #20539
File: Ran127B

Muttonburn Stream, The

DESCRIPTION: "Muttonburn Stream, It's not marked on this world's map... A wee river in Ulster." It has wondrous qualities: "a wee dunt" in it makes washing clean, "it cures all diseases" including fatness or lean, a good place to fall after a drinking party.

AUTHOR: William James Hume
EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (recorded by Richard Hayward)
KEYWORDS: drink humorous nonballad talltale
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster 10, "The Muttonburn Stream" (1 text, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Richard Hayward, Ireland Calling (Glasgow, n.d.), p. 6, "The Mutton Burn Stream" (text, music and reference to Decca F-2602 recorded Oct 4, 1931)
Bell/O Conchubhair, Traditional Songs of the North of Ireland, pp. 81-82, "The Muttonburn Stream" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #2896

NOTES [100 words]: Morton-FolksongsSungInUlster: "The Muttonburn Stream is to be found near Carrickfergus."
"Castle Hyde" takes glorification of a locality to an extreme. "The Groves of Blarney" takes it to the next stage by parody. "The Muttonburn Stream" completes the transformation by making a tall tale. The date and master id (GB-3353-1) for Hayward's record is provided by Bill Dean-Myatt, MPhil. compiler of the Scottish National Discography. - BS
Kathleen O'Sullivan pointed out to me that this song was written by William Hume, who is the grandfather of the twenty-first century storyteller Billy Teare. - RBW

My Ain Aunty Jean

DESCRIPTION: The singer's late Aunty Jean was a big woman who had seen better days and begged for her living. She'd been wed once or twice. She was "brimfu' o' fun," read fortunes and was "a modest blackmailer." "Let us hope 'mang the blest is my ain Aunty Jean"

AUTHOR: John Murray (written c. 1860) (source: Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast)
EARLIEST DATE: 1908 (Greig/Duncan4)
KEYWORDS: marriage death begging hardtimes
FOUND IN: Britain (Scotland (Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #41, p. 2, "My Ain Aunty Jean"; #38, p. 2, "My Ain Aunty Jean" (2 texts)
Greig/Duncan4 741, "My Ain Aunty Jean" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Roud #5642

NOTES [24 words]: Greig quotes the author in #41: "'Auntie Jean's suggested by the publication of Davidson's 'Uncle John.' [specifically, 'Uncle John's Fiddle']" - BS

Last updated in version 2.6

File: GrD4741

My Ain Dear Nell

DESCRIPTION: The singer remembers Nelly Brown and their youthful days together. "Ance mair then Nelly Brown I hae sung o' love and thee Tho' oceans wide between us row you're aye the same to me"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan6)
KEYWORDS: age love separation nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain (Scotland (Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan6 1253, "My Ain Dear Nell" (1 text)
Roud #6789

SAME TUNE:
Dunedin Town Board ("The streets here in Dunedin are now a sea of mud. This place is very much the same as 'twas before the flood") (by Charles R. Thatcher) (Anderson-ColonialMinstrel, p. 119)

File: GrD61253
My Ain Fireside
DESCRIPTION: The singer says it is time to go home to a wife he's afraid to face, but a drink and a song will soothe her and they'll go to bed "and I'll cuddle her in my airms ... and crack aboot the joys o' oor ain fireside." Here's to every man that will do the same.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Greig/Duncan3)
KEYWORDS: sex drink music nonballad wife
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan3 553, "My Ain Fireside" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Roud #6028
BROADSIDES:
NLScotland, L.C.Fol.70(144b), "My Ain Fireside" ("Come, my lads, let us mount and go"), Muir [John Muir (Glasgow)?], no date
NOTES [29 words]: Apparently broadside Bodleian, 2806 c.11(239), "My Ain Fireside" ("Come, my lads, let's mount and go"), unknown, no date is this song but I could not download and verify it. - BS
Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD3553

My Ain Kate
DESCRIPTION: The singer/reciter is a linen draper clerk told by Kate she'll not leave him. He buys her a watch and chain. A policeman "put Her Majesty's braces upon her." He goes to her ninth trial for stealing her mistress's clothes. She is transported for life.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1908 (Greig/Duncan2)
KEYWORDS: courting theft transportation trial clothes recitation servant
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #47, p. 2, ("I'm nae awa' to bide awa"); #49, p. 2, ("I'm not going away to stay away") (2 fragments)
Greig/Duncan2 257, "My Ain Kate" (5 texts, 1 tune)
Roud #5850
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Mormond Braese" (tune, according to Greig/Duncan2)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
I'm Not Going Away
NOTES [56 words]: The form is an introductory verse followed by spoken text interspersed with the chorus "I'm not going away to stay away, I'm not going away to leave you; I'm your own Kate, your darling Kate, That never will deceive you." At the end the singer, in spite of everything, is convinced by her "sly little wink" that she's not going away. - BS
Last updated in version 2.4
File: GrD2257

My Ain Kind Dearie
DESCRIPTION: The singer returns wet and weary from gathering seaweed. She says "my ain kind dearie O, Ye row me up, ye row me doon, ye row me owre fu' cheerie O"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1918 (Greig/Duncan4)
KEYWORDS: love farming nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan4 734, "My Ain Kind Dearie" (1 text)
Roud #8559
NOTES [118 words]: Greig/Duncan4 refers to "a note by Peter Buchan on the gathering of seaweed for manuring the land." - BS
A quick Google search finds many, many hits extolling the virtues of seaweed as a fertilizer. Few of these seemed to be anything more than the usual sort of "if it's natural, it must be good, and we expect you to pay a lot for it" sort of business. But seaweed in fact is a useful soil additive -- not because it's really very special but because cultivated soil generally loses its nitrogen and phosphorus over time, and seaweed is a useful source of organic forms of those two essential elements. Seaweed is also a good source of potassium, which can sometimes be in short supply in soil as well. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.5
File: GrD4734

My Ain Wife

DESCRIPTION: "I wadna gie my ain wife for ony wife I see." She is cheery, never shows anger, is good with the neighbors and loves the baby. "Tho' beauty be a fading flower, ... She ance was ca'd a bonnie lass, she's bonnie aye to me"

AUTHOR: Alexander Laing (source: Whistle-Binkie)
EARLIEST DATE: 1830 (_The Edinburgh Literary Gazette_ v.II, according to Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong)
KEYWORDS: love marriage nonballad baby wife
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (3 citations):
  Greig/Duncan4 747, "My Ain Wife" (1 text)
  Whitelaw-BookOfScottishSong, p. 184, "My Ain Wife" (1 text)
Roud #6127
File: GrD4747

My Alabama Sweetheart Far Away

DESCRIPTION: Singer thinks back to his days "upon the snowy fields of cotton" with his "Alabama sweetheart far away." He could never tell her he loved her before he left. He has received a letter "that some other has been with her"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (MUNFLA-Leach)
KEYWORDS: love home parting separation
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
Roud #28838
RECORDINGS:
  Mrs. Ned Lee, "Alabama Blossom" (on MUNFLA-Leach)
  John Molloy, "Alabama Sweetheart" (on MUNFLA-Leach)
NOTES [50 words]: Annmarie O'Riordan's version on the CD _Ireland: Love of My Heart_ changes the first line to "fields of snowy cotton" but both Avalon peninsula singers agree on "the snowy fields of cotton."
At first glance this looks like a "minstrel" song, but the "sweetheart" is a white "blue eyed maiden." - BS

Last updated in version 4.4
File: ML3MASFA

My ANZAC Home

DESCRIPTION: "Come see my little dugout, upon the hill it stands, Where I can get a lovely view of ANZAC's golden sands" as artillery shells fall. There are fleas and ants and orphaned mice. His back is sore. If he ever gets home, he might miss the place. Or might not

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1916 (according to Cleveland-NZ-GreatNewZealandSongbook)
KEYWORDS: soldier hardtimes New Zealand
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
  Cleveland-NZ-GreatNewZealandSongbook, p. 91, "My Anzac Home" (1 text, 1 tune)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Little Old Log Cabin in the Lane" (tune) and references there
File: Clev091

My Army Cross Over
DESCRIPTION: "'My brother, tik keer (take care?) Satan, my army cross over" (x2). "Satan very busy, my army cross over." "Wash his face in ashes." "Put on the leather apron." "Jordan river rolling." "We'll cross the danger water."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 38, "My Army Cross Over" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Roud #11992
File: AEG038

My Aul' Gudeman
DESCRIPTION: Dialog between a wife and her second husband. He says her first husband left her nothing, whereas now she has things: "tell me nae mair o' yer aul' gudeman." She compares her first husband in bed to her current feeble husband. "Alack, my aul' gudeman"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan7)
KEYWORDS: age marriage sex death dialog husband wife
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan7 1305, "My Aul' Gudeman" (1 text)
Roud #7201
File: GrD71305

My Aunt Jane
DESCRIPTION: "My Aunt Jane she took me in" and gave me tea from her shop. "She's awful smart" and bakes rings in an apple tart. She "has a bell on the door A white stone step and a clean swept floor, Candy apples, hard green pears, Conversation lozenges"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1978 (Hammond-SongsOfBelfast)
KEYWORDS: food nonballad
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hammond-SongsOfBelfast, p. 12, "My Aunt Jane" (1 text, 1 tune)
NOTES [64 words]: Hammond-SongsOfBelfast: "Probably the best-loved of all Belfast songs." - BS
The practice of baking prizes (such as coins or rings) into cakes is well-attested, even if it is today remembered mostly because J. R. R. Tolkien mentioned it in Smith of Wooton Major, but it seems somewhat improbable to find it in the contest of a Belfast tea-shop; how did Aunt Jane afford such thing? - RBW
File: Hamm012

My Bark Canoe
DESCRIPTION: An Ojibway (Chippewa) song. The singer reports, "Through the night I keep awake, Upon the river I keep awake."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1909
KEYWORDS: Indians(Am.) nonballad river
FOUND IN: Canada(Ont)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
My Beautiful Muff

DESCRIPTION: A young lady goes out in her muff, which is "my own, and I'll wear it, So don't you come near it, You'll spoil it, you'll tear it, My beautiful muff." A young man greets her and plies her with wine. She sleeps. Her muff is ruined. Young ladies are warned.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1956
KEYWORDS: bawdy clothes seduction wine
FOUND IN: Australia Britain(England(North))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Meredith/Anderson-FolkSongsOfAustralia, pp. 247-248, "My Beautiful Muff" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gardham-EastRidingSongster 21, p. 27, "My Beautiful Muff" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1402
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 26(51), "My Beautiful Muff" (unknown, n.d.)

My Beauty of Limerick

DESCRIPTION: "I sing of my loved one, an idol to me." Patrick is across the sea but thinks of his "beauty of Limerick" waiting at home. He promises "to go back to old Ireland when money I'd save." He sleeps with her ribbon under his pillow.

AUTHOR: Words: Edward Harrigan / Music: David Braham
EARLIEST DATE: 1880 (sheet music published by William A. Pond & Co.)
KEYWORDS: love separation Ireland nonballad money return
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Finson-Edward-Harrigan-David-Braham, vol. I, #38, pp. 140-141, "The Beauty of Limerick" (1 text, 1 tune)
OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads 38, "My Beauty of Limerick" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #9752
NOTES [79 words]: For background on Harrigan and Braham, see the notes to "The Babies on Our Block."
The original title of this was "The Beauty of Limerick." Finson-Edward-Harrigan-David-Braham, says it has "No known connection to any play," although the timing fits "The Mulligan Guards' Surprise," for which see "Whist! the Bogie Man." Sigmund Spaeth, A History of Popular Music in America, Random House, 1948, p. 188 says that this was sung by "'the American linnet,' Jennie Morgan." - RBW
Last updated in version 5.2
File: OLcM038

My Bible Leads to Glory (The Pilgrim's Song)

DESCRIPTION: "My Bible leads to glory (x3), Ye followers of the Lamb." "Sing on, pray on, ye followers of Immanuel! (x2)." "Religion make me happy (x3)...." "'I'm on my way to glory...." "King Jesus is my captain...." "There we shall live forever...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Richardson/Spaeth-AmericanMountainSongs); Hymnary.org lists several versions from before 1850, including "Hymns: designed for the Use of the Second advent band" dated 1843
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US(Ap)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Richardson/Spaeth-AmericanMountainSongs, p. 68, "My Bible Leads to Glory" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #13916
My Blue-Eyed Boy

DESCRIPTION: Floating verses on the subject of lost love, usually borrowed from "The Butcher Boy" and/or a "Pretty Little Foot" variant. The wide and deep grave carved with a turtle dove may also be present. Identified by the line "Bring me back my blue-eyed boy"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1909 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety); possibly 1879 (Journal of the Andrew Hicks)

KEYWORDS: love beauty separation death suicide

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber)) US(Ap,MW,So) Ireland

REFERENCES (16 citations):
Bronson 76, "The Lass of Roch Royal" (23 versions, of which #11 appears to belong here)
Greig/Duncan6 1085, "My Love He Is a Sailor Bold" (1 text plus a single verse on p. 538, 1 tune)
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 478-480, "The Blue-Eyed Boy" (4 texts, though "D" is a fragment, probably of "Tavern in the Town" or "The Butcher Boy" or some such)
Randolph 759, "My Blue-Eyed Boy" (3 short texts, 1 tune)
High-OldOldFolkSongs, p. 46, "Remember... Well" (1 text)
McNeil-SouthernMountainFolksong, pp. 18-19, "(Bring Back My Blue-eyed Boy)" (1 text)
Arnold-FolkSongsOfAlabama, p. 33, "Blue-Eyed Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore3 257, "The Blue-Eyed Boy" (2 text, though the second is rather distantly related)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-1ed, pp. 151-152, "My Blue-Eyed Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Owens-TexasFolkSongs-2ed, pp. 93-94, "My Blue-Eyed Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
Brewster-BalladsAndSongsOfIndiana 85, "The Blue-Eyed Boy" (1 text)
Pound-AmericanBalladsAndSongs, 102, pp. 212-213, "My Blue-Eyed Boy" (1 text)
Boette-SingaHipsyDoodle, p. 120, "Bring Me Back the One I Love" (1 text, 1 tune)
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H482, pp. 391-392, "Bring Me Back the Boy I Love"; H692, p. 392, "Never Change the Old Love for the New" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Huntington-TheGam-MoreSongsWhalemenSang, p. 224, "Never Change the Old Love for the New" (1 fragment, 1 tune, possibly this although it's too short to be certain)

DT, BLUENEYEBY

Roud #4308 and 18831

RECORDINGS:
Brier Hopper Brothers, "Bring Back My Blue-Eyed Boy" (Champion 16692, 1933)
Carter Family, "Bring Back My Blue-Eyed Boy to Me" (Victor V-40190, 1930; Montgomery Ward M-4741, c. 1935; Bluebird B-6271, 1936)
Gid Tanner & Riley Puckett, "Bring Back My Blue-Eyed Boy" (Columbia 15577-D, 1930; rec. 1929)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Butcher Boy" [Laws P24] and references there
cf. "The Willow Tree" (form and lyrics)
cf. "Must I Go Bound" (lyrics, theme)
cf. "Died for Love (I)"
cf. "Love Has Brought Me to Despair" [Laws P25] (lyrics)
cf. "Remember Well and Bear In Mind" (lyrics)

NOTES [82 words]: This is so close to "The Butcher Boy" that I almost listed them as one song. But where "The Butcher Boy" is relatively coherent, this is little more than a lament composed of floating verses and the complaint "Bring me back my blue-eyed boy." So I've listed them separately -- but there are intermediate versions. Sandburg, for instance, has one (p. 324, "Go Bring Me Back My Blue-Eyed Boy," with the suicide theme intact, so I list it with "The Butcher Boy" -- but it has this chorus). - RBW

Last updated in version 5.0

File: R759
My Body Rock 'Long Fever

DESCRIPTION: "Wai', my brother, true believe, better true be... Oh, my body rock 'long fever, O! with a pain in 'e head, I wish I been to the kingdom, to sit alongside o' my Lord." "By the help of the Lord we rise up again... An' we'll get to heaven at last."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, pp 44-45, "My Body Rock 'Long Fever" (1 text, 1 tune plus a variant)

Roud #11988

File: AWG044B

---

My Bonnie Laddie's a Writer o' Letters

DESCRIPTION: The singer says her bonnie laddie's "a writer o' letters And aye as he writes them he sends them to me"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan7)

KEYWORDS: courting nonballad

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #147, p. 2, ("My bonnie laddie's a writer o' letters") (1 fragment)

Greig/Duncan7 1345, "My Bonnie Laddie's a Writer o' Letters" (1 short text, 1 tune)

Roud #7226

NOTES [12 words]: The current description is based on the single Greig/Duncan7 verse. - BS

Last updated in version 2.6

File: GrD71345

---

My Bonnie Lies over the Ocean

DESCRIPTION: The singer laments that his bonnie is across the waves, and implores that someone "bring back my bonnie to me." He asks the winds specifically to carry her. (He dreams she is dead.) (He rejoices that the winds have blown his bonnie to him.)

AUTHOR: unknown (see NOTES)

EARLIEST DATE: 1881 (Hills's "Student Songs")

KEYWORDS: love separation sea reunion

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (6 citations):

Heart-Songs, p. 179, "Bonnie" (1 text, 1 tune)

Jolly-Miller-Songster-5thEd, #142, "My Bonnie" (1 text)

Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 143, "My Bonnie Lies Over The Ocean" (1 text)

Fuld-BookOfWorldFamousMusic, p. 381, "My Bonnie Lies over the Ocean"

DT, MYBONNIE

ADDITIONAL: Henry Randall Waite, _College Songs: A Collection of New and Popular Songs of the American Colleges_, new and enlarged edition, Oliver Ditson & Co., 1887, p. 6, "Bring Back My Bonnie to Me" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #1422

RECORDINGS:

Cliff Bruner, "My Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean" (Decca 5638, 1939; rec. 1938)

Ella Fitzgerald, "My Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean" (Decca 28375, 1952)

Haydn Quartet, "Bring Back My Bonnie to Me" (Victor A-123, 1900)

Leake County Revelers, "My Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean" (Columbia 15227-D, 1928)

Ella Logan, "My Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean" (Brunswick 8196, 1938; Columbia 36313, 1941)

Mobile Strugglers, "My Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean" (on AmSkBa)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "My God, How the Money Rolls In" (tune)
cf. "The Cowboy's Dream" (tune)
cf. "Tom Twist" (tune)
cf. "The Prisoner's Song (I)" (tune)
cf. "Shine Your Buttons With Brasso" (tune)
cf. "Shaving Cream" (tune)
cf. "My Children Are Seven in Number" (tune)
cf. "Bring Back My Johnny to Me"
cf. "Young Jean Lies Over the Ocean" (presumed tune)

SAME TUNE:
Tom Twist (File: FlBr171)
My Children Are Seven in Number (File: CAFS1282)
We Want None of Thee (File: Wels074)
They Say There Is Gold on the Maggie (File: Garl273)
Swim Back You Bastard to Me (File: Tawn009)
Jenny Wren Bride (File: Tawn056)
Bring Back My Neighbors to Me (Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 119)
Yuck! Cats (Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 67)
Come Up, Dear Dinner, Come Up (Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 121)
My Body Has Tuberculosis (Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 131)
Zekey Looked into the Gas Tank (Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 133)
My Barney Lies Over the Ocean (RECORDINGS, Nora Bayes, Columbia A-2678, 1918; Louis Winsch, Pathe 22061, 1919; Ada Jones, OKeh 1218, 1919; Billy Murray, Victor 18530, 1919)
Saigon Lullaby (RECORDING, Bull Durham, Saul Broudy, Tom Price, Robin Thomas & chorus, on InCountry)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
My Bonnie
Bring Back My Bonnie to Me

NOTES [293 words]: Fuld notes an 1882 printing of this song allegedly written by H. J. Fulmer (Charles E. Pratt). This text, however, disagrees with the 1881 printing, and Fuld suspects that Pratt is responsible only for the adaption. In College Songs (1887) it is listed as copyring 1885 by Oliver Ditson & Co., but with no authorship details.

Larry J. Purcell of Minneapolis has sent me a photograph of sheet music that credits it to H. J. FULLER (not Fulmer), and reports that Howard Jones Fuller was his great-great-grandfather. This would presumably explain the "Fulmer" attribution, but unfortunately the music has no date. The text is very similar to the common version.

Purcell gives this capsule biography of Fuller: Howard Jones Fuller was born 15 April 1853 in Vershire, Orange County, Vermont to Stephen Fuller and Luvia Carpenter, He married first my great great grandmother, Ida Elizabeth Pickett, 08 March 1874 in Albert Lea, Freeborn, Minnesota, then divorced. He married secondly to Bertha Chloe Smith 04 Jan 1904 in Mississippi. He died 05 Aug 1907 in Gloster, Amite, Mississippi. He is buried at Silver Creek Cemetery in Pike County, Mississippi.

The song obviously has spawned a number of parodies and borrowings. It itself, however, seems relatively constant, and the parodies are all recent. It thus seems likely that the song is fairly recent, and that most known versions derive from the 1881 printing.

It has been theorized that this is a derivative of the song we index as "Bring Back My Johnny to Me." The tunes aren't the same, but there are similarities, and a few lyrics also cross, as well as the theme. But there is no evidence of an intermediate form; it seems nearly certain that there was a deliberate rewrite somewhere along the line. - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0
File: DMybonn

My Bonnie Love Johnny

DESCRIPTION: "My love he's bonny ... He's handsome, charming, sweet and young, An' his cheeks are like a cherry. O"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1907 (Greig/Duncan5)
My Bonnie Meg o Noo, o Noo

DESCRIPTION: The singer asks Meg to sit down by him. Meg tells him to drop her hand and tells him he has ruffled her gown. He asks why she's in such a rush to run away "as ye war chased". He says he has told her mother every thing "that passed between us twa"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan7)

REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig/Duncan 1353, "My Bonnie Meg o Noo, o Noo" (1 text)
Roud #7231

File: GrD71353

My Bonnie Wee Hen

DESCRIPTION: The singer had a fine hen; it laid two eggs a day. But it went out to seek food and was killed. The owner will punish the killers; "I wasna half so sorry the night my husband died." She invites others to the funeral

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1828 (Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2)

REFERENCES: (2 citations):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H94, p.17, "My Bonnie Wee Hen" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lyle-Andrew-CrawfurdsCollectionVolume2 142, "The Wee Broun Tappit Hen" (1 text)

File: HHH094

My Bonny Black Bess (I) [Laws L8]

DESCRIPTION: Dick Turpin gives a detailed account of Black Bess's speed and beauty and the good use to which he put them. He once robbed a horseman and sped to town, arriving so quickly that he appeared to have an alibi when the horseman at last arrived in town

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1915

REFERENCES: (6 citations):
Laws L8, "My Bonny Black Bess I"
Randolph 167, "Bonnie Black Bess" (3 texts, 1 tune, but Laws assigns only Randolph's "C" text to this piece; the others belong with Laws L9)
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 7, "Bonny Black Bess" (2 texts, 1 tune; the "B" text is this piece while the "A" text is Laws L9)
Pound-AmericanBalladsAndSongs, 69, pp. 155-157, "My Bonny Black Bess" (1 text)
My Bonny Black Bess (II) (Poor Black Bess; Dick Turpin's Ride) [Laws L9]

DESCRIPTION: Dick Turpin bids farewell to the horse that served his so well, making his exploits possible and finally carrying him from London to York in a single day. Now the hounds are on his trail and he cannot escape; he shoots Bess and waits to die himself

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1928 (Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia); before 1878 (broadside LOCSinging, sb30428b)

KEYWORDS: robbery horse punishment outlaw

HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
1735 - Dick Turpin comes to the attention of the authorities as a robber
April 1739 - Hanging of Dick Turpin (by then retired from highway robbery; he was captured after getting drunk and shooting the landlord's cockerel)

FOUND IN: US(MA,MW,Ro,SE,So) Canada(Mar) Britain(England(West))

REFERENCES (15 citations):
Laws L9, "My Bonnie Black Bess"
Henderson-VictorianStreetBallads, pp. 32-33, "Poor Black Bess" (1 text)
Hamer-GreenGroves, p. 44, "Turpin's Farewell to Black Bess" (1 fragment, 1 tune, so short that it could be either Black Bess song, but the lyrics suggest it is this)
Randolph 167, "Bonnie Black Bess" (3 texts, 1 tune, with the "A" fragment and "B" text belonging here; the "C" text is Laws L8)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 122, "My Bonnie Black Bess" (1 text)
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 65, "Bonnie Black Bess" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 130, "My Bonnie Black Bess" (1 text text plus 1 fragment and an excerpt, 2 tunes)
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, p. 189, "Dick Turpin and Black Bess" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hubbard-BalladsAndSongsFromUtah, #139, "My Bonnie Black Bess" (1 text, 1 tune)
Mackenzie-BalladsAndSeaSongsFromNovaScotia 126, "Dick Turpin's Ride" (1 text)
Fife/Fife-CowboyAndWesternSongs 7, "Bonny Black Bess" (2 texts, 1 tune; the "A" text is this piece while the "B" text is Laws L8)
Ohrlin-HellBoundTrain 12, "Bonny Black Bess" (1 text, 1 tune)
Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, #1899, p. 128, "Poor Black Bess" (3 references)
DT 422, BLCKBESS* BLCKBESS2 BONNBESS*

ADDITIONAL: _Sing Out_ magazine, Volume 25, #4 (1977), p, 9, "Bonnie Black Bess" (1 text, 1 tune, from James and Mary Atwood)
Roud #620
RECORDINGS:
Warde Ford, "My bonny black Bess" (AFS 4212 A1, 1939; in AMMEM/Cowell)
Lawrence Older, "Bonnie Black Bess" (on LOlder01)

BROADSIDES:
LOCSinging, sb30428b, "Poor Black Bess," H. De Marsan (New York), 1864-1878
Murray, Mu23-y1:027, "Poor Black Bess," James Lindsay Jun (Glasgow), 19C

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "My Bonny Black Bess (I)" [Laws L8]
cf. "Dick Turpin and the Lawyer [Laws L10]" (subject)

SAME TUNE:
Poor Dog Tray (per broadsides LOCSinging sb30428b, Murray Mu23-y1:027, and the one listed in Wolf-AmericanSongSheets p. 128)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
Bonnie Black Bess

NOTES [2559 words]: This is much the more popular of the Black Bess songs; to distinguish it from Laws L8, consider the following stanza:
When blindness did guide me, I left my abode;
When friends proved ungrateful, I took to the road.
For to plunder the wealthy and relieve my distress,
I bought you to aid me, my bonny Black Bess.
The problem is, Turpin did not buy Black Bess, and never rode her to York. Although Dick Turpin was real, most of the exploits traditionally attributed to him are false. This is, at least in part, because the hack writers of his time -- the ones on whom our modern knowledge of roadside robbers is based -- rarely mentioned him in their accounts of famous highwaymen (Sharpe, pp. 73-74).
When later writers resurrected him, they had few real facts to operate on. Even our knowledge of his death is relatively slight -- Sharpe, p. 18, points out that much of what we know about his execution comes from a cheap pamphlet, and we know how reliable those are! But here is the biography we can give.
The only real description of Turpin is a single sentence, from a proclamation seeking him: "About thirty years of age, by trade a butcher, about five feet nine inches high, of a brown complexion, very much marked with the small pox, his visage short, pretty upright, and broad about the shoulders" (Sharpe, p. 137; Pringle, p. 216, has a similar but not identical version).
According to Sharpe, p. 109, Turpin was born probably on September 21, 1705, although other sources give the year as 1706. He was baptized on September 23, 1705, however, which would seem to settle the matter. He was son of an Essex innkeeper; James Turpin was still keeping "the Bell at Hempstead" at the time of his son's trial and execution (Sharpe, p. 31).
Apprenticed to a butcher, Turpin apparently married (although there is no known record of the marriage; Sharpe, p. 109, and Brandon, p. 116, gives two possible names for his wife) and went into business around 1726. But several sheep turned up missing near his establishment in Waltham Abbey. Apparently forced out of the Guild of Butchers for his misdeeds (Pringle, p. 202), he took to a life of open crime.
For a time, he was associated with a brutal group of poachers and robbers known as "Gregory's Gang"; according to Sharpe, pp. 106-108, they took the King's Deer from Waltham in Essex. Turpin apparently helped them sell their kills (Sharpe, pp. 108-109). By 1734, the gang had turned to robbery. By 1735, they had moved from Essex to London (Sharpe, p. 115).
They really do seem to have been a brutal bunch; Sharpe, pp. 117-118, describes how they beat and burned an old farmer during a robbery -- while one of them raped a servant. Large rewards were put on their heads in 1735, but Turpin escaped when the others were taken. He turned to highway robbery (Sharpe, pp. 128-129). It is possible that he also went to Holland for a time (Sharpe, pp. 131-132).
Turpin in this period worked with various companions, the most noteworthy being Tom King (died 1737 -- possibly killed by Turpin himself as they struggled with people who were attempting to apprehend them; Sharpe, pp. 133-134; Pringle, p. 214; Brandon, p. 122; Alexander, p. 297). King, according to Alexander, p. 297, was known as the "King of the Highwaymen," but in fact he does not seem to have been very noteworthy on his own. About this time, Turpin killed one Thomas
Morris who was attempting to apprehend him; for the first time, Turpin was clearly guilty of murder (Sharpe, p. 135; Pringle, p. 213; Pringle implies that it happened before the death of King, Sharpe perhaps after).
Turpin had already had a price on his head; the murder caused it to be increased to 200 pounds (Sharpe, p. 136). But Turpin had disappeared (Pringle, p. 216). He had moved to Yorkshire, and was calling himself John Palmer (Sharpe, p. 2). He seems to have lived a relatively honest life in the town of Welton, posing as a horse-dealer (Alexander, p. 299) -- but in October 1738, in a fit of mindless brutality, he shot a gamecock belonging to his neighbour (Sharpe, p. 136; Pringle, p. 216 -- a bad move, because the bird apparently had brought its owner good results, and perhaps income, in cockfights; Brandon, p. 123). This presumably is the origin of the claim in "Dick Turpin and the Lawyer" [Laws L10] that he was taken for "shooting of a dunghill cock").

The charges need not have been fatal had his history stayed hidden, but they led to an inquiry into how he made his living (Sharpe, p. 13). In a comedy of errors which started with the fact that Turpin did not pay the proper postage for a letter (Alexander, p. 297), a sample of his handwriting came to the attention of his old schoolteacher, who supposedly recognized it (Sharpe, p. 20). The man then came to Yorkshire and identified his face (Sharpe, p. 21). The indictment against Turpin was technically invalid, according to Sharpe, p. 27, but he was eventually convicted of horse-stealing and sentenced to hang (Pringle, p. 218).

The date of Turpin's hanging is uncertain; it is generally dated to April 7, 1739 (so, e.g., Pringle, p. 218, and Brandon, as well as Sharpe, p. 1), but the day may have been April 6 or April 10. He apparently went to great lengths to put on a good show, buying new clothes and hiring five mourners to accompany him (Sharpe, p. 1). And he jumped off the ladder himself, considered a mark of courage and style, rather than waiting to be dropped (Pringle, p. 218; Brandon, p. 125). A second man, John Stead, was executed at the same time (Sharpe, p. 2).

Reportedly Turpin was executed by another highwayman, Thomas Hadfield, who was pardoned in return for doing the duty; York did not have a professional executioner (Sharpe, p. 3). What is purported to be Turpin's grave still exists, but Sharpe, p. 35, points out that the headstone is not contemporary.

There is little evidence in the historical record of the sort of nobility of character found in many of the songs about him.

The rest of the legend in the songs is equally suspect. There was, almost certainly, no Black Bess, and the twelve hour race to York was not undertaken by Turpin. Logan reports that the feat was performed by one "Nevison or Nicks, who plundered a traveler at four o'clock in the morning on the slope at Gadshill, and was in the bowling-green at York... at a quarter before eight in the evening." Brandon, p. 127, also mentions "a highwayman named Harris" making the trip to Yorkshire, although he mentions Nevison first. Sharpe, p. 74, notes that Daniel Defoe attributed the trip to Nicks (Nix?), who lived around 1676 and whose actual name was Richard Dudley.

Pringle has more details on this, devoting a whole chapter to "Who Rode to York?" (pp. 135-144). He notes that it was perfectly possible to cover the London-to-York distance (about 190 miles) in a day -- if one could change to fresh horses along the route (Pringle, pp. 141-142). The improbable element of "Turpin's Ride" is the idea of doing it on one horse.

Did such a journey happen? Defoe's version is that it was done by Nix in 1676. It started with a robbery at Gad's Hill (where else?) at 4:00 a.m. (quoted on p. 137 of Pringle), and Nicks arrived at York that afternoon (Pringle, p. 138). Pringle points out that Defoe wrote this tale in 1724, before Turpin took to the road.

There is a 1668 report of a robber named "Swift Nicks," though it isn't known if it is the same guy. The other fellow Logan mentions, Nevisor, is certainly historical, though there is a lot of uncertainty about him. His name was probably William (Pringle, p. 123), but this is not certain; it might have been John (Pringle, p. 124). He did most of his work in Yorkshire, became the subject of broadsides, and later was mentioned by Maccaulay (Pringle, p. 123).

Sharpe, p. 68, reports that Nevisor was born in 1639, began to steal at age 14, and soon ran off to London, then Holland. His birthplace is uncertain; Pringle, p. 124, mentioned four places that claim him. Sharpe, p. 69, reports, "He was charitable to the poor, and Robin Hood-like in giving them some of the spoils he collected from rich people he robbed. And [this being the era of the Civil Wars] he was a convinced royalist...." He was executed at York in 1684 -- although he supposedly had already faked his own death once by then (Pringle, pp. 131-132). On the evidence, much of the Turpin legend could have derived from tales of Nevisor.

The reason for Nevisor's ride, however, is different. Nevisor had robbed an official, and the victim had insufficient cash, so he wrote a bank draft for 500 pounds. Nevisor made his ride from York to London (not London to York!) to cash the draft before the official could stop it; Sharpe, p. 69.

The link between Nevisor and Nicks is tenuous. According to Brandon, p. 82, Nevisor earned the nickname Nicks because he had ridden to York as fast as Old Nick. Right.

Personally, I'd guess it's a confusion of name. There is a place in Yorkshire known as "Nevison's Leap," because, according to Kellett, p. 124, it "refers to the legendary escape of the Yorkshire highway man John Nevison, who is supposed to have avoided capture by making a horseback leap from the top of Giggleswick Scar." And Nevisor's Leap, Kellett says, was also known as Nevison's Nick. From there, it isn't much of a stretch to equate Nevison with Nick(s). According to Pickering, p. 297, "Turpin never made such a ride," and Pringle, p. 135, says, "It is a good story; but, in the unequivocal words of Encyclopedia Britannica, 'pure fiction.'"

So how did this semi-legendary feat come to be associated with Turpin? As far as popular culture is concerned, there is no question but that the responsibility must be pinned on William Harrison Ainsworth (1805-1882), who made it a major element of his first major novel, Rookwood (1834). "There was," Pringle admits on p. 136, "no Turpin controversy. No one got up and defended Ainsworth's version."

It was the forerunner of a great deal of highwayman fiction, usually featuring improbably gentlemanly robbers, much of it found in "penny dreadful" format. These created a great body of nonsense and such absurd characters as "May Turpin, the Queen of the Road" (Sharpe, p. 179).

And yet, it was so popular that it reshaped the legend. Westwood/Simpson, p. 2, quote Ainsworth's biographer S. M. Ellis as writing, "All along the Great North Road the legend is truth; every village through which the highwayman galloped (in the imagination of Ainsworth) during that famous ride has its own peculiar tale and relic of Turpin's feat." This was in 1911. Ainsworth's long account is mostly out of his own head, but it's thought that the seeds of the legend came to him from his family; he said that his father told stories of highwaymen and that, as a boy, he and his friends had acted them out (Sharpe, p. 142). Could they have gotten their ideas from one of the Black Bess songs? Or did these songs get it from Ainsworth? It is unlikely, now, that we will ever be able to answer that question.

There are some hints. Derek Barlow did find an 1808 booklet which apparently transferred Defoe's tale of "Swift Nicks" to Turpin, so seemingly Ainsworth did have a source for that (Sharpe, p. 158). And we find Turpin with a mare named Bess in "Turpin and the Bishop" as published by Horace Smith in 1825 (Sharpe, p. 158; cf. Pringle, p. 143). But Ainsworth seems to have been responsible for turning Bess the black mare into Black Bess (Sharpe, pp. 158-159).

Some of the details of the song may well have originated with Ainsworth and Rookwood, with no prior source at all -- e.g. Ainsworth claimed that Bess leapt the Hornsley tollgate, perhaps inspiring the line "no toll bars could hold you." He also gave us a Turpin/Bess death scene -- though Turpin in Ainsworth's account merely lingered as the horse died; he didn't shoot her.

Sharpe, p. 160, notes the irony that Rookwood was published just about the time highway robbery became ineffective -- an improved banking system meant that few travellers carried much cash.

The book itself seems to have come together in fits and starts; Sharpe, p. 148, observes that, despite its importance to the Turpin legend, Rookwood is not primarily about Turpin. It is a novel with Gothic elements about the Rookwood family, which is gripped by several dark secrets (Sharpe, pp. 149-151, sums it up, but it's really too complicated to repeat).

Turpin is part of a subplot, first appearing as "Jack Palmer," a variation of the name he used at the end of his life. Turpin's Ride is the subject of Book IV of Rookwood, which ends with Black Bess dying in sight of York Minster. Book IV begins with a semi-real incident, Turpin's accidental killing of Tom King (Sharpe, p. 155). This caused Turpin to flee from Kilburn to York.

Ainsworth himself admitted that Bess, not Turpin, was the real heroine of Book IV (Sharpe, p. 156). And the book was popular enough that it could have spawned legends -- five editions were published from 1834 to 1837 (Sharpe, p. 160).

Although Ainsworth had great literary success for a few years after Rookwood, tastes soon changed. He lived for almost another half century, but was almost forgotten by the time he died (Sharpe, pp. 168-170). His revision of the Turpin legend proved far more durable.

The one part of his story that's true is that Turpin, late in his career, transferred from the London area to Yorkshire, though it was not at the very end of his life.

As Brumwell/Spec note on p. 394, "While undoubtedly a prolific and daring highwayman, Turpin was raised above the ranks of his fellows largely because he managed to evade the hangman's noose for longer than most. By the time of his execution in 1739, Dick Turpin was already celebrated in anecdotes and ballads that cast him in a Robin Hood role. He was subsequently credited with other exploits -- notably the famous ride from London to York -- previously linked with other folk heroes. The reality of Turpin's life was less glamorous and more violent."

Based on Sharpe, pp. 197-198, the first Turpin song seems to have been "Dick Turpin and the Lawyer" [Laws L10], published in broadside form around the time of Turpin's death. It is noteworthy that it does not even mention a name for Turpin's horse.

Underwood reports that the hoofbeats of the ghost of Black Bess (presumably with Turpin aboard) have been heard at the "Woodfield" estate at Aspley Guise in Bedfordshire (p. 18 and photo facing p. 225), where Turpin was said to have had a safe house. Alexander, who notes many "Turpin Inns" around England, mentions on p. 299 a spot in Oxfordshire where it is also alleged that Bess's hoofbeats can be heard; it boasts several alleged artifacts. Such a list of traces of the fictional
Turpin could easily be extended. The reign of Queen Anne (1702-1714) was considered the heyday of the English highwayman -- probably because the amount of travel was increasing, so there were more targets, but there was no effective national constabulary. Turpin of course came after that time; he was arguably a victim of the reforms that the previous banditry had inspired. - RBW

Broadside LOC Singing sb30428b: H. De Marsan dating per Studying Nineteenth-Century Popular Song by Paul Charosh in American Music, Winter 1997, Vol 15.4, Table 1, available at FindArticles site. - BS

Bibliography

- Pickering: David Pickering, The Cassell Dictionary of Folklore, Cassell, 1999
- Pringle: Patrick Pringle, Stand and Deliver: Highwaymen from Robin Hood to Dick Turpin, (no copyright date listed but after 1935; I use the 1991 Dorset edition)
- Underwood; Peter Underwood: Gazetteer of British, Scottish & Irish Ghosts, originally published as two volumes, A gazetteer of British Ghosts (1971?) and A gazeteer of Scottish and Irish Ghosts (1973?); although the two volumes still have separate title pages, the 1985 Bell edition I use has continuous pagination and a single index

Last updated in version 5.1
File: LL09

My Bonny Breeden

DESCRIPTION: "She was born 'mong the wild flowers that bloom in our valley, and like those same flowers she grew lovely and fair." The singer praises the beauty and grace of the girl, and prays that the powers may guard her
AUTHOR: Words: Andrew Doey
EARLIEST DATE: 1933 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love beauty nonballad
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H512, p. 225, "My Bonny Breeden" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7973
File: HHH512

My Bonny Brown Jane

DESCRIPTION: The singer recalls courting a girl with a "false flattering tongue." He courts Jane, but another earns her love. He enlists in the army "to fight for my queen in a far country." Lonely at night, he prays "for her welfare; what can I do more?"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love rejection soldier floating verses
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H613, p. 396, "My Bonny Brown
Jane" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #7000
RECORDINGS:
Robert Cinnamond, "The Comely Young Dame" (on IRRCinnamond02)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "William and Nancy (II) (Courting Too Slow) [Laws P5]" (lyrics)
cf. "The False Bride (The Week Before Easter; I Once Loved a Lass)" (theme)
NOTES [28 words]: This has many lyric similarities to "William and Nancy," and also a bit of "The False Bride." But the ending about enlisting as a soldier makes the song distinct. - RBW
File: HHH613

My Bonny Lad
DESCRIPTION: "Ha' you seen owt of my bonny lad?... He's gone along wi' a stick in his hand/He's gone to row the keel-o'" "Yes, I ha' seen your bonny lad; 'twas on the sea I spied him/His grave was green, but not wi' grass/And you'll never lay beside him"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1951 (recording, Isla Cameron)
KEYWORDS: navy separation death sailor
FOUND IN: Britain(England(North))
Roud #204
RECORDINGS:
Anne Briggs, "My Bonny Lad" (on Briggs2, Briggs3)
Isla Cameron, "My Bonny Lad" (on Lomax41, LomaxCD1741)
NOTES [18 words]: This sounds like a fragment, but in fact the story is complete, although squeezed down to bare essentials. - PJS
File: RcMBL

My Bonny Wee Wifie and I
DESCRIPTION: The singer is "a warkman wi' a wife an' twa laddies," six chairs and a pendulum clock. Everything they do turns out so well since he's given up drink. He and his wife are so happy.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1874 (Poet's Box broadside "My Bonny Wee Wifie and I," according to Greig/Duncan7)
KEYWORDS: marriage drink nonballad
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Greig/Duncan7 1272, "My Bonny Wee Wifie and I" (2 fragments, 1 tune)
Roud #7139
File: GrD71272

My Boyfriend Gave Me An Apple
DESCRIPTION: "And five o'clock is striking, Mother may I go out My true love is waiting for me without." He brings apples, pears, and six-pence that she "kiss him on the stairs." She rejects apples and pears and gives back sixpence after he kisses her on the stairs.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1978 (Hammond-SongsOfBelfast)
KEYWORDS: playparty food money
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Hammond-SongsOfBelfast, p. 11, "Five O'Clock is Striking" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #12986
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Bells are Ringing (Eight O'Clock Bells)"
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Six O'Clock Bells Ringing
NOTES [7 words]: Hammond-SongsOfBelfast: "A skipping game." - BS
My Brother Sylveste

DESCRIPTION: "Have you heard about the big strong man Who lives in a caravan?" The singer's "brother" Sylveste has medals on his chest, has fought Indians, has swum the Atlantic Ocean, beaten boxing champions, can overcome anything

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1979 (Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead)

KEYWORDS: talltale travel

FOUND IN: Canada Britain(England)

REFERENCES (2 citations):

Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead, pp. 180-181, "My Brother Sylveste" (1 text, 1 tune)
Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy, pp. 139-140, "My Brother Sylvest" (1 text, with tune on p. 155)

Roud #10682

ALTERNATE TITLES:

Sylveste
Big Strong Man

NOTES [149 words]: Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead for some reason files this among the bawdy songs, perhaps because one verse has Sylveste invading the harems of Arabia or perhaps because it was often sung with the unpleasantly dirty "Salome." But I didn't tag it as bawdy; it may have been sung in all-male contexts, but it's mostly suitable for mixed company. Indeed, two of Tawney-GreyFunnelLines-RoyalNavy's informants appear to have been women. I think it is more bothersome for people like me, who hate stupid exaggeration. Although not every collection is from a veteran, the song does seem to have strong military links, e.g. Ernle Bradford, The Mighty Hood, 1959 (I use the 1977 Coronet paperback), p. 120, describes it as being sung by Royal Navy sailors in Gibraltar in the early 1940s. And it appears he did get it from oral tradition, not print, because he spells the hero's name "Silvest." - RBW

My Brother, I Wish You Well

DESCRIPTION: "My brother, I wish you well (x2), When my Lord calls, I trust I shall Be mentioned in the promised land." "My sister, I wish you well...." "My father, I wish you well...." Similarly mother, neighbors, pastor, young converts, poor sinners

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1842 (Millenial Harp, according to Hymnary.org)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad father

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Richardson/Spaeth-AmericanMountainSongs, p. 69, "My Brother, I Wish You Well" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #13915

My Cabin Home Among the Hills

DESCRIPTION: Singer tells of his cabin in the Virginia hills, where his "mammy" used to sing to him. His mother tells him she's going away "to another home way down in Tennessee." She promises to write, and to someday come home. She never does

AUTHOR: unknown (tune by Will S. Hays)

EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (recording, Asa Martin)

KEYWORDS: grief loneliness promise farewell home parting separation death slavery mother

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

Roud #17214

RECORDINGS:

Recordings: Asa Martin, "My Cabin Home Among the Hills" (Champion 16769, 1934; Champion
My Cabin in the Hills

DESCRIPTION: "Oh! please just one peep At my cabin in the hills Where the pine trees sway And the hound dogs bay To the notes of the whippoorwill." The singer wants to see Ma knitting Pa's socks and Pa tending his gun, and recalls the sounds of home

AUTHOR: Robert Louis Stevens?

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Thomas)

KEYWORDS: home nonballad clothes hunting animal bird

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Thomas-BalladMakingInMountainsOfKentucky, pp. 173, (no title) (1 text)

NOTES [29 words]: This is the sort of thing that you feel you ought to know from somewhere else. But that's just because it's based on so many "home" themes; I can't find its like elsewhere. - RBW

File: ThBa173

My Captain Paid Me Forty-one Dollars and a Quarter

DESCRIPTION: Hammer song. "My cap'n paid ne (hah!) Forty-one dollars and a quarter (hah!), To get a pair of shoes (hah!), Oh, partner (hah!), To get a pair of shoes (hah!"

"I got a woman... She's got legs Big as anybody." "She got a ring... Shine-a like gold."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1981 (Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices)

KEYWORDS: ring work nonballad worksong

FOUND IN: US(SE)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Rosenbaum-FolkVisionsAndVoices, pp. 118-119, "My Captain Paid Me Forty-one Dollars and a Quarter" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #16281

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Take This Hammer" (form, theme, lyrics) and references there

NOTES [44 words]: I am almost certain this is a descendent of "Take This Hammer," and I thought seriously about lumping them. Roud splits them, presumably because the first verse is unusual for "Take This Hammer" versions, and I decided to follow. But this is a very weak split. - RBW

Last updated in version 2.6

File: Rose118

My Charming Coleraine Lass

DESCRIPTION: The singer sees a beautiful girl by the banks of the Bann. He asks her to come away with him. They sit by the river and talk. They set a wedding day and are married

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: love courting river beauty marriage

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H616, p. 464-463, "My Charming Coleraine Lass" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #9460
My Charming Kate O'Neill

DESCRIPTION: "The first place that I saw my love, 'twas on a summer's day, She was going to her father's as I passed Red Bay." The singer, a young sea captain, praises her beauty but must go away, for "there's another young man, she intends his bride to be."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1938 (Sam Henry collection)
KEYWORDS: love rejection marriage sailor travel
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (1 citation):
* Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H767, pp. 370-371, "My Charming Kate O'Neill" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #6886
NOTES [72 words]: The notes to Henry/Huntington/Herrmann list no other versions of this song, and I can't recall any myself. But there are many lines reminiscent of "The Lowlands of Holland," and the meter is also similar. Sam Henry reports that this is about an actual girl "who captivated the hearts of young Glensmen eighty years ago" (i.e. c. 1855-1860). One wonder if the composer didn't take some inspiration from "The Lowland of Holland." - RBW

My Charming Lass from the County Mayo

DESCRIPTION: "The daughters of Erin are famed the world over, For wit and for beauty and charms of their own," but the singer loves one girl from Mayo above all others. He praises her beauty extravagantly

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1922 (Dean-FlyingCloud)
KEYWORDS: beauty love
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
* Dean-FlyingCloud, p. 115, "My Charming Lass from the County Mayo" (1 text)
Roud #9581

My Children Are Seven In Number

DESCRIPTION: "My children are seven in number, We have to sleep four in a bed, I'm striking with my fellow workers, To get them more clothes and more bread." The singer describes his hard life, tells how Barney Graham was shot, and urges support for the union

AUTHOR: Eleanor Kellogg
EARLIEST DATE: 1960 (Greenway)
KEYWORDS: work hardtimes poverty labor-movement strike
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (2 citations):
* Greenway-AmericanFolksongsOfProtest, p. 166, "My Children Are Seven In Number" (1 text)
* Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, p. 282, "My Children Are Seven In Number" (1 text)
Roud #22287
RECORDINGS:
* Pete Seeger, "My Children Are Seven in Number (on PeteSeeger13, AmHist1)

My Clinch Mountain Home

DESCRIPTION: "Far away on a hill to sunny mountain side, Many years ago we parted, my little Ruth and I, From the sunny mountain side." She begs him not to go. He promises to return and marry her. Far away, he wants to go to "old Vifginia" and "my old mountain home"
AUTHOR: copyrighted by A. P. Carter
EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (recording, the Carter Family)
KEYWORDS: love separation promise home
FOUND IN: US(SE)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore5 682, "Away on a Hill" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
ADDITIONAL: Mark Zwonitzer with Charles Hirschberg, _Will You Miss Me When I'm Gone: The Carter Family & Their Legacy in American Music_, Simon & Schuster, 2002, p. 34, "(no title)" (1 text)
Roud #17254
RECORDINGS:
The Carter Family, "My Clinch Mountain Home" (Victor V-40058, 1929; Bluebird B-5301/Montgomery Ward M-4432/Electra-Disc 2172/Sunrise S-3382, 1934) (ARC 7-08-69/Conqueror 8806, 1937; rec. 1935)
NOTES [87 words]: According to Mark Zwonitzer with Charles Hirschberg, _Will You Miss Me When I'm Gone: The Carter Family & Their Legacy in American Music_, Simon & Schuster, 2002, p. 34, this was A. P. Carter's first song. I certainly can't offer counter-evidence, since Brown's field collection, which seems to be the earliest, was not dated. But it looks somewhat different from the Carter version, and Zwonitzer/Hirschberg, p. 120, says that some Carter relatives say that it came from another Carter relative, Amanda "Mandy" Groves. - RBW
Last updated in version 4.2
File: BrS5682

My Creole Belle
DESCRIPTION: The singer loves "my darling baby, my Creole Belle." He loves her "more than anyone can tell." He'll call her his when the stars shine.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1963 (MJHurt05)
KEYWORDS: courting love nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
DT, CREOLBL
Roud #20959
RECORDINGS:
Mississippi John Hurt, "My Creole Belle" (on MJHurt05)
File: RcMyCrBe

My Crime Blues
DESCRIPTION: Singer is on trial for murder, soon to be sentenced, but pleads his innocence. He calls for his lover to come for his trial, so that when he is condemned she can wipe his tears away. The jury finds him guilty; the judge sentences him to the electric chair
AUTHOR: Almost certainly Ed Bell
EARLIEST DATE: 1930 (recording, Ed Bell)
KEYWORDS: grief loneliness accusation crime execution homicide law punishment trial death lover judge
FOUND IN: US(SE)
RECORDINGS:
Barefoot Bill [Ed Bell] "My Crime Blues" (Columbia 14510-D, 1930; [1929]; on RoughWays1)
File: RcMyCrBl

My Dad's Dinner Pail
DESCRIPTION: "Preserve that old kettle so blackened and worn, It belonged to me Father before I was born." The singer recalls carrying the pail, and seeing his father; he is sure Father shared with those in need
AUTHOR: Words: Edward Harrigan / Music: David Braham
EARLIEST DATE: 1883 (from the musical Cordelia's Aspirations)
According to Spaeth, p. 191, "Harrigan, Hart, and Braham [produced] perhaps their best show, Cordelia's Aspirations, [in] November, 1883. In it the Mulligans were almost disrupted by the social climbing of Mrs. Mulligan, and Annie Yeamans, as Cordelia, had one of her greatest comedy scenes when she took a stiff drink under the impression it was poison. [This also occurs in "The Mulligans' Silver Anniversary"; see the notes to "John Reilly (II)".] The best of the songs was My Dad's Dinner Pail...."

For background on Harrigan, Hart, and Braham, as well as the Mulligan Guard, see the notes to "Babies on Our Block."

According to Franceschina, p. 158, the play opens with Cordelia Mulligan and her servant Rebecca Allup (played by Harrigan's long-time partner Tony Hart) returning to New York via Castle Garden; they have been abroad for sixteen months with Cordelia's relatives, including bad guy Planxty McFudd. Cordelia -- who was able to afford the trip because of many years of wise investing -- now wants a higher social standing, and pushes her husband Dan Mulligan to leave his old home: "When Cordelia breaks the news that they're moving uptown and auctions off the furniture, Dan grabs the one precious item that can't be sold, 'that trifle that held his wee bite... that emblem of labor that hung in a corner beyant on a nail.... My Dad's Dinner Pail.' It was one of the best-loved songs and one of Harrigan's biggest production numbers. Grocer, butcher, barber, et al 'focus on Dan upstage as he exits -- then curtain back up -- repeat of chorus'" (Moody, p. 136). Dan finds Madison Avenue hard to understand; eventually the family will go back where it belongs. Cordelia, in the earliest form of the story, took "poison" because she thought some other woman had written Dan a love letter (in one version, Planxty McFudd convinces his sister Diana, played by Tony Hart's wife Gertie Granville, to write a deceptive note; Franceschina, p. 159). Cordelia was wrong twice: the letter wasn't to Dan and the "Rat Poison," as Spaeth says, was an alcoholic beverage.

(According to HarriganMulligans, pp. 296-299. Dan Mulligan is so confused by his new social state that he can't handle it, and needs to know where he can find some fortification. The maid, Rebecca Allup, also wants to keep the extra-strong hooch secret so that she can have at it and no one else will drink it. So she puts the brandy in a cleaned-out bottle labelled "roach poison.")

So Cordelia, believing she is dying, sobs out her last will and testament while getting drunk -- and then wakes up to find herself alive, allowing Dan and Cordelia to reconcile (I read somewhere that Annie Yeamans had done something similar, faking being drunk before going on stage and then revealing herself as sober -- and Ned Harrigan had liked the trick so much that he wrote it into "Cordelia's Aspirations"). Dan, in the upper-class residence, gets in trouble for being "uncouth" and finally puts his foot down and moves back home (Franceschina, pp. 159-160). One of his minor triumphs in the early part of the play was saving the pail of the song title. Harrigan would later return to several of the ideas in this song; "The Old Featherbed" is another song in which a family heirloom is saved and (a closer parallel) "My Little Side Door" has a boy bringing his father his father Dan his beer in a pail (Williams, pp. 166-167)

There is, in a sense, a picture of the pail: when Edward Harrigan in 1901 published The Mulligans, his novelized version of the Mulligan plays (here cited as HarriganMulligans), the cover was printed with a graphic of a man with a pail, presumably Dan with his dad's dinner pail. Dan is dressed in a white shirt with a green kerchief, a brown hat, brown pants held up by suspenders, and a brown suit coat. The pail is shown in white, but it is quite nondescript. And the man on the cover doesn't look much like Harrigan to me, so it presumably wasn't taken from life.

On p. 264 of HarriganMulligans, we see Harrigan's literary version of this incident. Cordelia has acquired the new house, and is moving into it, with the old place being closed down:

"'Are ye going to sell everything in the house?' quietly asked Dan.

"'Everything, Daniel, that has a tag on it! For instance, here's a sample of old tinware' --

"'That's mine!' cried Dan, snatching the pail from O'Guff's hands. The auctioneer was taken by surprise, and, fearing Mulligan's anger, retreated to the parlor door.

Dan looked at the old pail, blacked from the many times it had been heated over the fire to warm his coffee, when he was a laborer years before in Webb's shipyard.

"'Look, see, neighbours! He was going to take away me ould dinner pail. It belonged to me father, an' its (sic.) a relic of his and me own honest labor, an',' angrily turning to the auctioneer, 'I'm damned if ye'll sell it! Ye'll not sell a thing out of this house, Mr. O'Guff...."

It is perhaps interesting to note that, before he found success in the theater, Harrigan had himself worked in a shipyard. - RBW

Bibliography

- HarriganMulligans: Edward Harrigan, The Mulligans, G. W. Dillingham, 1901
- Williams: William H. A. Williams, 'Twas Only an Irishman's Dream, University of Illinois Press, 1996

---

My Dame's Crane

DESCRIPTION: "My dame had a lame tame crane. My dame had a crane that was lame. Pary, Mistress Jane, man my dame's lame tame crane Fly and re-turn again?"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1962 (Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose)

KEYWORDS: animal nonballad

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (4 citations):

Brown-MyGrandmothersSongbook 16, "My Dame Had a Lame Tame Crane" (1 text, 1 tune)
Baring-Gould-AnnotatedMotherGoose #755, p. 284, ",(My dame hath a lame tame crane)"
Pankake/Pankake-PrairieHomeCompanionFolkSongBook, p. 233, "My Dame's Crane" (1 text)
DT, LAMECRN* LAMETAME*

Roud #13622

NOTES [19 words]: Reported to have originated in England in the seventeenth century, but seemingly found only in the United States. - RBW

---

My Dancing Day

DESCRIPTION: "Tomorrow shall be my dancing day, I would my true love did so chance To see the legend of my play To call my true love to my dance." The story of the life of Jesus is repeated, with each stage being a reason why the true love should come to the dance

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1833 (Sandys)

KEYWORDS: religious Jesus dancing

FOUND IN:

REFERENCES (5 citations):

Dearmer/VaughnWilliams/Shaw-OxfordBookOfCarols 71, "My Dancing Day" (1 text, 2 tunes)
Rickert-AncientEnglishChristmasCarols, pp. 146-148, "To-morrow Shall Be My Dancing Day" (1
NOTES [1252 words]: It would appear that this song is known only from Sandys (I've heard of broadside copies, but have yet to see one that predates Sandys). It is thus arguable that it is not a folk song, and should not be included.

There are, however, strong hints that it is much earlier than Sandys; the Oxford Book of Carols argues that it is from the sixteenth century or earlier, and Bradley in the Penguin Book of Carols thinks it medieval. The latter claim rests on pretty slender evidence (Bradley argues that the third line about seeing "the legend of my play" implies an origin in one of the mystery play cycles, and cites a claim from the New Oxford Book of Carols that it is resembles elements of Cornish play cycles of the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries).

That isn't the only, or even the best, evidence of antiquity in the text itself; the language sounds as if it predates Sandys, and the mention of the Harrowing of Hell hints at a date prior to the Anglican reformation. The Oxford Book of Carols suggests that the original was secular (which seems not unlikely -- probably a dance song). This might well explain the mix of popular legend and learned theology ("Then I was born of a virgin pure, Of her I took fleshly substance" reminds me of the Christological controversies of the early church.)

The theme of calling one's love to a dance is probably from the secular source, but there are four New Testament uses of the Greek word , orcheomai, "to dance": Matt. 11:17, 14:16, Mark 6:22, Luke 7:32. Two of these uses (Matt 14:6, Mark 6:22) refer to the daughter of Herodias dancing before Herod Antipas and clearly would not be the source for this imagery. But the other two refer to children or musicians calling out their friends/playmates to dance, making it a very relevant image for evangelism. (The English word "to dance" is also used in translations of Luke 15:25, in the partying at the return of the prodigal son. This is somewhat less relevant, since the Greek word is , choros, the song/dance of the Greek chorus -- but a reader of the English Bible would not know that).

The individual verses of the song are more biblical; they also have strong ties to the creeds. In the references below, "NC" refers to the Nicene Creed (created by the church in stages starting at the Council of Nicaea in 325, though the final version had to await the Council of Chalcedon over a century later; Bettenson, pp. 24-26, with English translation of the creeds; Christie-Murray, pp. 47-50, 71) while "AC" is the "Apostle's Creed" (which is certainly not Apostolic; it seems to come mostly from the Roman church. Boer, p. 73, claims "it is called the Apostles' Creed because it faithfully set s forth the central teachings of the Apostles." But even he admits on pp. 75-76 that the first elements were used only around 200 C.E., and the final form he dates to the fifth century. Bettenson, pp. 23-24, is less an apologist for the name; he says the elements of the Creed were first assembled by even later writers such as Marcellus and Rufinus, and reached its final form in the eighth century (Bettenson, pp. 23-24).

"Then I was born of a virgin pure": AC; Matthew 1:18-25. (Luke also says that Mary was a virgin at her marriage, but does not explicitly state the idea of the virgin birth. Of course, the phrase "virgin pure" is sometimes taken to refer to the Immaculate Conception, and the notion that Mary herself was born of some sort of parthenogenesis, but there is no Biblical hint of this; even the Catholic Church, while venerating Mary from a very early time, did not fully pronounce the doctrine of the Immaculate Conception until 1854; Christie-Murray, p.198).

"Of her I took fleshly substance": John 1:14; NC; cf. Gal. 4:4. Moderns rarely hear about this, but this was truly a key issue in some of the controversies of the early church; most Monophysite heresies made Jesus either entirely human or entirely divine, with an illusory human body. The belief that he was a divine illusion is known as Docetism, from a Greek word meaning "appearance" or perhaps "display" (Clifton, p. 36). (In the more extreme Gnostic forms, Jesus had to have a phantom body because all matter is evil; Nigg, p. 78. Obviously a song which admits a pleasure such as dancing opposes this view on several levels.) The statement that Jesus became flesh explicitly denies Docetism. The use of the word "substance" might also be significant, since much of the controversy related to the Nicene Creed had to do with the use of the word "substance" ( , ousis) for Jesus; the word is non-Biblical (Christie-Murray, pp. 48-49; Qualben, p. 122), and there was dispute over whether Jesus was of "the same" substance or "like" substance with the Father. (A very small difference in Greek, involving only the addition or deletion of a single vowel.)

"In a manger laid and wrapped I was": Luke 2:7, 12, 16. There is no scriptural warrant for saying an ox and ass were present. "Then afterward baptized I was, The Holy Ghost on me did glance": Jesus's baptism is told in Matt. 3:16-17, Mark 1:9-11, Luke 3:22-23, John 1:29-34. "Into the desert I was led... The devil bad me make stones my bread": Matt. 4:1-11, Mark 1:12-13, Luke 4:1-13. "The Jews... loved darkness rather than light": not an explicit quotation, but compare John 12:44-46, Matt 6:23; the treatment of Jesus as light is common in the New Testament. "For thirty pence Judas me sold": According to Matthew 26:15, 27:3-9, Judas sold Jesus for "thirty of silver" (so literally, hence modern renderings "thirty pieces of silver"). That would be a lot more than thirty pence in today's money, but early silver pennies might have a value roughly comparable to the price paid to Judas. This is perhaps more evidence that the song is early. "Mark whom I kiss": Matt 26:48-49, Mark 14:44-45, Luke 22:47-48. "Before Pilate the Jews me brought": AC; NC; Matt. 27:1-2, Mark 15:1, Luke 23:1, John 18:28fff. It was in fact the high priests, not the Jewish population as a whole, who handed Jesus over (so all four Gospels, though John uses the word "Jews" in fairly close proximity to the description of Jesus being handed over to the Romans). "Where Barabbas had deliverance": Matt 27:16-26, Mark 15:7-15, Luke 23:18, John 18:40. "Then on a cross hanged I was": Too many references to list; see e.g. Mark 15:25; AC; NC. "Where a spear to my side did glance": John 19:34. (The word used for the weapon is perhaps best translated "lance-head"; sometimes used as a medical instrument). "There issued forth both water and blood": John 19:34. "Then down to Hell I took my way": The Harrowing of Hell is non-Biblical. There is, in fact, no real Biblical explanation of what Jesus was doing during the roughly 36 hours between his death and resurrection. The Harrowing is, however, mentioned in the Catholic texts of AC (the Methodists and some other denominations suppress this). This is not a definitive argument on whether the song is pre- or post-Reformation (Anglicanism, unlike most of the Reformed denominations, allows prayer for the dead and hence admits the possibility of Purgatory; Bainton, p. 202), but the whole business was de-emphasized; the mention of the Harrowing would be much more likely to come from a Catholic than an Anglican (and more likely from an Anglican than a Presbyterian or Lutheran). "And rose again on the third day": Again too many references to list; cf. e.g. Mark 16:6; AC; NC. "Then up to Heaven I did ascend": Acts 1:9-11; AC; NC. - RBW

Bibliography

- Boer: Harry R. Boer, A Short History of the Early Church, 1976 (I use the 1981 Eerdmans paperback)
- Clifton: Chas S. Clifton, Encyclopedia of Heresies and Heretics, 1992 (I use the 1998 Barnes & Noble edition)
- Qualben: Lars P. Qualben, A History of the Christian Church, revised edition, Nelson, 1936

Last updated in version 5.2

File: OBC071

My Darling Sleeps in England

DESCRIPTION: "My darling sleeps in England across the Irish Sea, While I who love him dearly shall mourn him bitterly." The times were hard, so Danny went to work in Birmingham during the war, and was killed by bombs. His wife and growing children mourn

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1972 (Dallas-TheCruelWars-100SoldiersSongs)

KEYWORDS: war death wife children separation

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
My Dear Highland Laddie

DESCRIPTION: The singer's lover fee'd with her father "when he row'd me in his plaidie And vow'd to be mine." Now he's left with the laird as a soldier. "The blae-berry banks Are now lonesome and dreary." She would leave everything for her Highland laddie.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1805 (Millar's _Paisley Repository no III_, according to Semple _The Poems and Songs and Correspondence of Robert Tannahill_, p. 221)

KEYWORDS: love separation farming nonballad soldier

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Greig/Duncan6 1120, "My Dear Hielan' Laddie" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
- Roud #6841

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Harding B 25(1290), "My Dear Highland Laddaie [sic]" ("Blythe was the day"), unknown, no date

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Mor Nian a Ghibarlan" (tune, per Ramsay)

NOTES [56 words]: Greig/Duncan6 is a fragment; broadside Bodleian Harding B 25(1290) is the basis for the description.

From Peter A Hall, "Farm Life and the Farm Songs," pp. xxi-xxxi in Greig/Duncan3: "The time between hirings was, in the mid nineteenth century North-East, predominantly six months ['terms'] and the hiring was generally called feeing." - BS

My Dear Irish Boy

DESCRIPTION: "My Connor, his cheeks are as ruddy as morning...." The girl describes her love. But "The wars are all over, and lonely I've waited, I fear that some envious plot has been laid." Though hope is almost lost, she wanders to look for her "dear Irish boy"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: before 1863 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 11(157))

KEYWORDS: love separation soldier rambling

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (3 citations):
- Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H142, p. 294, "My [The] Dear Irish Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
- O'Connor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 57, "The Dear Irish Boy" (1 text)
- Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 56, "The Dear Irish Boy" (1 text); compare p. 152, "Connor, the Fisherman" (1 text, starting, "My Connor is a fisher bold, He likes the life so free"; Roud #V25191)
- Roud #1555

BROADSIDES:
- Bodleian, Harding B 11(157), "Dear Irish Boy," H. Such (London), 1849-1862; also Harding B 11(1219), Harding B 11(819), Harding B 11(2269), Firth c.26(168), 2806 b.11(185), Harding B 26(121), "[The] Dear Irish Boy"
- LOCSinging, as101620, "The Dear Irish Boy," H. De Marsan (New York), 1861-1864

SAME TUNE:
The Wife's Lament, A New Temperance Song ("My Connor was loving, gentle and kind," by Archibald Scott) (Wolf-AmericanSongSheets, p. 179)

ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Dear Irish Maid

NOTES [33 words]: Broadside LOCSinging as101620: H. De Marsan dating per Studying Nineteenth-Century Popular Song by Paul Charosh in American Music, Winter 1997, Vol 15.4, Table 1, available at FindArticles site. - BS

File: HHH142

My Dear Old Comrade Soldiers

DESCRIPTION: "My dear old comrade soldier of this our native shore, I'm glad to have the honor of greeting you once more." The singer recalls the difficult careers of soldiers, hopes for pensions, and prays that God inspire current leaders

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1939 (Thomas)

KEYWORDS: Civilwar soldier reunion nonballad

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Thomas-BalladMakingInMountainsOfKentucky, pp. 89-91, "My Dear Old Comrade Soldiers" (1 text, 1 tune)

NOTES [26 words]: Civil War soldiers held reunions through the 1920s and even into the 1930s; this (not very good) piece presumably came out of one of those gatherings. - RBW

File: ThBa089

My Dear, I'm Bound for Canady

DESCRIPTION: "My dear I'm bound for Canady; Love Sally we must part." Sally asks Willie to stay; "you'll find employment here" but he leaves St John's; he will marry her within three years. But the song ends "every honest decent young man Don't leave his girl behind"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1929 (Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland)

KEYWORDS: love parting unemployment hardtimes Canada father mother betrayal

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (4 citations):
Greenleaf/Mansfield-BalladsAndSeaSongsOfNewfoundland 154, "My Dear, I'm Bound for Canady" (1 text)
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 85, "Bound for Canada" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lehr/Best-ComeAndIWillSingYou 82, "My Dear, I'm Bound for Canaday" (1 text, 2 tunes)
Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 187-190, "I'm Bound Away for Canada (My Dear I'm Bound for Canaday)" (3 texts, 2 tunes)
Roud #4411

RECORDINGS:
Jacob Noseworthy, "Canada" (on MUNFLA/Leach)
Charlie Williams, "My Dear I'm Bound for Canada" (on MUNFLA/Leach)

NOTES [154 words]: To understand this song, it is important to recall that Newfoundland did not become part of Canada until after World War II (for background, see especially "Anti-Confederation Song (II)"). And Newfoundland was poor, which meant that many of its people left for other places with more opportunity. Some went to the United States, some to Britain, but probably most went to Canada. Gary McManus and Clifford H. Wood, Atlas of Newfoundland and Labrador, Breakwater Books, 1991, plate 9, shows the shocking figures: Newfoundland in 1986 had somewhat fewer than 600,000 people. And there were 70,000 ex-Newfoundlanders in Ontario alone, and another 25,000 in the Maritimes, and 37,000 in the rest of Canada. That's more than a fifth of the population out-migrating! - RBW

One of Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports's texts is a verse from a version on the "MacEdward Leach and the Songs of Atlantic Canada" site. - BS

Last updated in version 4.4

File: GrMa154
My Dearest Dear

DESCRIPTION: "My dearest dear, the times draws near When I and you must part, And no one knows the inner grief Of my poor aching heart." The (girl) wishes that they could stay together; (s)he promises to love (him) till (s)he dies, and begs that he write to her

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1906 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)

KEYWORDS: love separation lyric nonballad parting floating verses

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber)) US(Ap,SE,So,SW)

REFERENCES (22 citations):
Bronson 76, "The Lass of Roch Royal" (23 versions, of which #18, #20, and #22 perhaps go here)
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 484-486, "Banishment" (1 text)
Randolph 18, "Oh Who Will Shoe My Foot?" (8 texts, 5 tunes; the "B," "D," "F," and "H" versions are of this sort) (F=Bronson's #18); 760, "I Love You Well" (4 texts plus an excerpt, 1 tune)
Arnold-FolksongsOfAlabama, pp. 14-15, "Winter's Night" (1 text, 1 tune, very heavily composite, starting with "As I rode out last winter's night," then two "Pretty little foot" verses, then "Lonesome dove" verses and ending with "I wish to the Lord I'd never been born") (Bronson's #22)
Davis-TraditionalBalladsOfVirginia 21, "The Lass of Roch Royal" (of the various texts in the appendices, at least "G" seems to belong here) (Bronson's #20)
Scarborough-ASongCatcherInSouthernMountains, pp. 314-317, "The Time Has Come, My Dearest Dear" (2 texts; 1 tune on p. 440)
Sulzer-TwentyFiveKentuckyFolkBallads, p. 8, "Unto Me the Time Drew Near" (1 text)
Brewster-BalladsAndSongsOfIndiana 90, "The True Lover's Farewell" (1 text, which despite the title appears closer to this song than that)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 77, "My Dearest Dear" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp/Karpeles-EightyEnglishFolkSongs 40, "My Dearest Dear" (1 text, 1 tune)
Bush-FSOfCentralWestVirginiaVol2, pp. 102-103, "A-Roving On One Winter's Night" (1 text, 1 tune)
Jones-MinstrelOfTheAppalachians-Bascom-Lamar-Lunsford, p. 243,"Little Turtle Dove" (1 text, 1 tune, a composite of floating verses, some of which perhaps belong here)
Greig/Duncan8 1540, "Time's Drawing On, Love" (1 text, 1 tune)
Fuson-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands, p. 112, "When You and I Must Part" (1 text)
Wells-TheBalladTree, pp. 119-120, "The Little Turtle Dove" (1 text, 1 tune)
Abrahams/Foss-AngloAmericanFolksongStyle, pp. 52-53, "Time Draws Near" (1 text, 1 tune)
McNeil-SouthernMountainFolksong, pp. 102-104, "Time Draws Near" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 108, "Winter's Night" (1 text, 1 tune, beginning with lyrics from this song but with final verses more characteristic of "The Storms Are on the Ocean")
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, pp. 126-127, "The Lover's Lament" (1 text plus a fragment, 1 tune)
Browne-AlabamaFolkLyric 40, "The Blackest Crow" (1 fragment of a single stanza, 1 tune, a floating verse that might go here or almost anywhere else); 43, "Woe Unto Me When the Time Draws Near" (1 text plus an excerpt, 2 tunes)
NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal, W. Amos Abrams, "Frank Proffitt: A Legend A-Borning," Vol. XIV, No. 2 (Nov. 1966), p. 17, "The blackest crow I ever seen will surely turn to white" (1 excerpt, from Frank Proffitt, probably this although it's too short to be sure)
DT, (REDREDR2)
Roud #3601

RECORDINGS:
Bascom Lamar Lunsford, "Little Turtle Dove" (1928; on BLLunsford01; a composite of all sorts of floating verses, a few of which may be from here)
Doug Wallin, "The Time Draws Near" (on OldTrad2, FarMtns3)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Who Will Shoe Your Pretty Little Foot" (floating lyrics) and references there
cf. "Fare You Well, My Own True Love (The Storms Are on the Ocean, The False True Lover, The True Lover's Farewell, Red Rosy Bush, Turtle Dove)"

ALTERNATE TITLES:
A-Roving on a Winter's Night

NOTES [152 words]: This is basically a lyric piece assembled from all sorts of floating materials. The first two lines are characteristic; what follows can come from almost anywhere. Doc Watson sings a version which combines parts of this song (notably the verse "A-roving on a winter's night") with portions of "My Love Is Like a Red, Red Rose" (see DT REDREDR2). - RBW

The one verse of Greig/Duncan8, "Time's drawing on love, when you and I must part; There's none knows the sorrows of my poor wounded heart, For already I have suffered much and sighed many a tear, I wish I were to go with you, or you to tarry here" is very close to verses 1 and 2 of Brewster-BalladsAndSongsOfIndiana: "O to me the time draws nigh When you and I must part; But little do you think or know The grief of my poor heart.... Sure I am troubled for your sake Since you I loved too dear; I wish that I could go with you Or that you could stay here." - BS

File: SKE40

My Delaware

DESCRIPTION: "How beautiful along thy shore, Delaware, my Delaware, Shall Freedom's word ring out once more?" "We want the earth, we want it all, We want the whole terrestrial ball." In support of the "single tax" land reform movement.

AUTHOR: Frank Stephens
EARLIEST DATE: 1935 (Stephens, _Some Songs_, according to Cohen)
KEYWORDS: home nonballad
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cohen-AmericanFolkSongsARegionalEncyclopedia1, p. 164, "My Delaware" (1 text)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
"Maryland! My Maryland" (form)

File: CAFS1164

My Dog and I

DESCRIPTION: The singer and his dog are inseparable. He loves no woman who doesn't love his dog. They conspire to seduce maidens and pimp whores. They consult on politics and go to war together. When he dies they will be buried beneath the tap, "cheek by jowl"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: efore 1680 (broadside, Bodleian 4o Rawl. 566(108))
LONG DESCRIPTION: The singer and his dog are inseparable, comparable to Prince Rupert and his virtual(?!) familiar. He loves no woman who doesn't love his dog. They can cure any woman from 5 to 50 of "the green sickness ... [that is to say, troubled] with over-grown virginity"; they don't bother with 60 year old women. Together, they search out feasts and games. They consult on politics and go to war together in 1642. They pimp the whores near Hatten-wall, though they "are fitter for my dog than I" He claims, "My Dog is caterer and cook, for he at every game can fly ... Whilst many thieves are hang'd on high, No Law can touch my Dog and I" When he dies they will be buried beneath the tap, "cheek by jowl"

KEYWORDS: seduction sex Civilwar poaching hunting party bawdy nonballad dog rake whore
FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Greig/Duncan2 254, "My Dog and I" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: S. Baring-Gould, English Minstrelsie (Edinburgh, 1896 ("Digitized by Google")), Vol. VI, pp. 118-120, xiii, "My Dog and I" (2 texts, 1 tune ["Bobbing Joan"])
Roud #5848

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, 4o Rawl. 566(108), "My Dog and I" ("You that are of the merry throng"), F. Coles (London), 1674-1679; also Firth c.23(109a)[some words illegible], Douce Ballads 3(67a), "My Dog and I"
EngBdsdBA 21889, Pepys 4.229, "My Dog and I" ("You that are of the merry Throng, Give good attention to my Song"), F. Coles (London), no date, accessed 08 Dec 2013. [see note]
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bobbing Joan" (tune, per Bodleian and EngBdsdBA broadsides, Baring-Gould and Simpson)
cf. "Lavender Blue" (some verses)
cf. "George Ridler's Oven" (some verses) and references there
NOTES [650 words]: From the spelling of "doged" in the second verse it appears that broadsides EngBdsdBA Pepys 4.229 and Bodleian Firth c.23(109a) are duplicates. Bodleian dates Firth c.23(109a) as 1678-1680.
Two verses refer to the English Civil War (1641-1651): "When Mars commanded we did go, Unto the wars in forty two, We'd never fear in field to die, But out we'g mo, my Dog and l ... There was a time when Rebel rout, Did fear Prince Rupert and his Dog, 'Tis dangerous when two heads comply, Especially my Dog and I." See Wikipedia "Prince Rupert of the Rhine": "... Prince Rupert of the Rhine, (17 December 1619-29 November 1682) ... was a younger son of Frederick V, Elector Palatine and Elizabeth Stuart, and the nephew of King Charles I of England, who created him Duke of Cumberland and Earl of Holderness.... In 1642, aged 23, Rupert was appointed by King Charles to lead the Royalist Cavalry during the English Civil War, and he largely deserves credit for their early successes.... He took a white standard breed poodle dog named 'Boye', into battle with him on several occasions. Throughout the Civil War the soldiers of Parliament feared this dog, claiming that it had supernatural powers .... This poodle was Prince Rupert's constant companion until the dog's death at the Battle of Marston Moor (2 July 1644)."

The broadside versions are seventeen stanzas of four lines, excluding the chorus. The Greig/Duncan2 text is three verses. Greig/Duncan2 has only two lines close to the broadsides. Pepys has "But if the weather prove foul and wet, My Dog he shall not wet his Feet; But if the weather prove fair and dry, Then a whishing [whiffing?] goes my Dog and I"; Greig/Duncan2 has "In winter when the weather's wet, My dog and I we warm our feet, In summer when the weather's dry, To the hunting goes my dog and I." Greig/Duncan2 is about a poacher and his hunting dog.

Poaching and petty thievery does not seem beyond the pair in the broadsides (see also the next paragraph).

The entry for "George Ridler's Oven" discusses stanzas shared by that song and "My Dog and I." One verse shares only two lines but may give a clue to a petty thievery connection. "George Ridler's Oven" (Dixon) has -- apparently imitating Gloucestershire dialect -- "My dog is good to catch a hen; A dug or goose is vood for men; And where good company I spy, O thether gwoes my dog and I." Pepys has "We night and day can take no rest, If we can hear of any feast, And where good fellows I espy, There go in my dog and I ... My living lies in every nook, My dog is caterer and cook, For at every game can flie, No fellow to my dog and I." Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames "George Ridler's Oven" adds another verse that fits "My Dog and I": "Of furren tongues let travellers brag, Wi ther fifteen neams vor a puddin-bag; Two tongues I knows neer towld a lie, And ther wearers be my doag and I."

At least a few verses of the broadside versions overlap "Lavender Blue": for example, "Lavender Blue" "My hostess's maid, her name was Nell, She was a lass that I loved well; But if she die, by some mishap, Then she shall lie under the tap" compares to Pepys "I lov'd a maid, her name was Nell, A bonny lass, I lov'd her well, And if you'd needs know the reason why, Because she lov'd my dog and I .... If death do come, as it may hap, My grave shall be under the tap. With folded arms there we will lie, Cheek by jowl, my dog and I."

Simpson, among others, notes that "Bobbing Joe" or "Bobbing Joan" has a bawdy background of its own, making it an appropriate tune for "My Dog and I"; specifically, "... 'bobbin jo' is equivalent to the 'green gown,' a euphemism for the sexual act. (source: Claude M. Simpson, The British Broadside and Its Music (New Brunswick, 1966), p. 47) - BS

I wonder if the "dog" of this song is a canine -- or a "dog robber," a term for a menial and sometimes used for an officer's body servant. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: GrD2254

My Doggie and I

DESCRIPTION: The singer mourns that, when he and his dog went to the well, his dog fell in and drowned. What will become of him? He can still spin a spangle thread "but bowf bow-ow my doggie's deid"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan8)

KEYWORDS: grief death lament dog

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Greig/Duncan8 1660, "My Doggie and I" (1 text)

Roud #13045

File: GrD81660

My Emmet's No More

DESCRIPTION: "Despair in her wild eye, a daughter of Erin" played the harp and "sang Erin's woes and her Emmet no more." She accuses "tyrants and traitors" and the "proud titled villains" who cowered before him before they murdered him.

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1901 (O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland); beginning 19C
(Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion)
KEYWORDS: rebellion execution patriotic Ireland separation love
HISTORICAL REFERENCES:
Sep 20, 1803 - Robert Emmet (1778-1803) is hanged
FOUND IN: Ireland
REFERENCES (4 citations):
O'Conor-OldTimeSongsAndBalladOfIreland, p. 143, "My Emmet's No More" (1 text)
Zimmerman-SongsOfIrishRebellion 25, "My Emmet's No More" (1 text, 1 tune)
Moylan-TheAgeOfRevolution-1776-1815 156, "My Emmet's No More" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 41, "My Emmet's No More" (1 text)
Roud #V1056

BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 17(204b), "My Emmet's No More", unknown, n.d.; also 2806 b.10(16), "My Emmet's No More"
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Bold Robert Emmet" (subject) and references there
NOTES [16 words]: For the sad background of this typically Irish story, see the notes to "Bold Robert Emmet." - RBW

My Eyes Are Dim

DESCRIPTION: Humorous song about lining out hymns. The preacher speaks a line (i.e. "My eyes are dim; I cannot see; I left my specs at home") and singers repeat it. He says "I did not mean for you to sing." They sing the line back. Finally he says, "Doxology...."

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1964 (NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal)
KEYWORDS: humorous clergy nonballad
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (3 citations):
Grimes-StoriesFromTheAnneGrimesCollection, p. 23, "My Eyes Are Dim" (1 text); p. 139, "My Eyes Are Dim" (1 text)
NorthCarolinaFolkloreJournal, (no author listed), "My Eyes Are Dim -- I Cannot See," Vol. XII, No. 2 (Dec. 1964), p. 29, "My Eyes Are Dim" (1 text)
ADDITIONAL: _Sing Out_ magazine, Volume 26, #45 (1978), p. 3, in the article "No Fiddle in My Home" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #10508?
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Quartermaster Corps (The Quartermaster Store)" ("My eyes are dim" lyric, although the context is completely different)
NOTES [45 words]: Hedy West, who wrote the Sing Out! article cited above, said that Don Yoder printed this in Pennsylvania Spirituals from sources in 1849 to 1854. I can't verify this, but it would appear to be the earliest date if correct.
Thanks to Carter C. for this information. - RBW

My Faith Looks Up to Thee

DESCRIPTION: "My faith looks up to thee, Thou lamb of Calvary." "Oh let me from this day Be wholly thine." The singer asks for strength and guidance, and asks, "O bear me safe above."

AUTHOR: Words: Ray Palmer (1808-1887) / Music: Lowell Mason (1792-18720
EARLIEST DATE: 1831 (Hastings and Mason's Spiritual Songs for Soical Worship, according to Marilyn Kay Stulken, _Hymnal Companion to the Lutheran Book of Worship_, Fortress Press, 1981, p. 500); words reportedly written 1830
My Far Down Cailin Ban

DESCRIPTION: Sean meets a lass who invites him "'longside the Cailin Ban" in her cart. She invites him in to meet her father and have tea. Her father falls asleep. He slips his arm around her waist. He has travelled over Erin's Isle and has never seen such a beauty

AUTHOR: Shaun O'Neill (1871-1945) (source: Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan)

EARLIEST DATE: 1975 (Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan)

KEYWORDS: courting Ireland father beauty

FOUND IN: Ireland

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan 36, "My Far Down Cailin Ban" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #5231

NOTES [84 words]: Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-Lenihan: The author was 'described in his publicity as 'Shaun O'Neill, The Wicklow Piper.' The protagonist is a piper named Sean going from Donegal to Tandagree. Munnelly/Deasy-TheMountCallanGarland-Tom-
Lenihan: "Irish geography does not seem to have been a strong point with him, for when he wrote that couple in the ass and cart jog along from Donegal to Tandragee in County Armagh he can hardly have been aware that the distance involved is over ninety miles!" - BS

My Father Died a Month Ago

DESCRIPTION: "My father died a month ago And left me all his riches." The "riches" are listed: feather bed, wooden leg, leather breeches, teapot without a spout, cup with no handle, tobacco pipe with no lid.

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1894 (Notes and Queries)

KEYWORDS: death humorous nonballad lastwill

FOUND IN: Britain(England(North,West),Wales)

REFERENCES (3 citations):
- Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 155, "My father died a month ago" (2 texts)
- ADDITIONAL: Notes and Queries (London, February 17, 1894) ("Digitized by Google"), Vol. V, No. 112, p. 126, ("My father died when I was young") (1 text)
- Notes and Queries (London, March 17, 1894) ("Digitized by Google"), Vol. V, No. 116, p. 217, ("My father died when I was young") (4 texts)

CROSS-REFERENCES:
- cf. "Grandfather Bryan" (theme)
- cf. "The Swapping Boy" (theme)

NOTES [192 words]: Notes and Queries, February 17, 1894 is reported from Bradford, Yorkshire: "[when] I was quite a youngster ... it was common enough with us in our district."

Notes and Queries, March 17, 1894: "My father died when I was young, And left me all his riches: His gun and volunteering-cap, Long sword and leather breeches.... I have been told that the 'volunteering-cap' form of the ditty is supposed to relate to the American War of Independence" [quoted in Mrs Gutch and Mabel Peacock, County Folk-Lore (London, 1908), Vol. V, p. 393].

Notes and Queries, March 17, 1894 versions include one from Glamorganshire, Wales, and one "current in Leicestershire" which has a "bacco-box" - rather than a "tobacco-pipe" - "without a lid." See DT, CNTRYFSH, "Country Fashions," for a song that begins like "My Father Died a Month Ago": the first verse ends "... a horse both lame and blind sir; You'd swear he'd in a trap been catch'd, he wur cropped so close behind sir." The following verses are neither like "My Father Died a Month Ago" nor "Grandfather Bryan." The singer mounts the horse and the song recounts his misadventures until his unhappy marriage. - BS

Last updated in version 2.6

My Father Gaed Me Milk and Bread

DESCRIPTION: "Ma faither gies me milk an breid [or meat], Ma mither gies me claes, Tae sit aboot the fireside [or be someplace else] An knap fowk's taes"

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1914 (Greig/Duncan8)

KEYWORDS: clothes food humorous nonballad father mother

FOUND IN: Britain(Scotland(Aber))

REFERENCES (2 citations):
- Greig/Duncan8 1620, "My Father Gaed Me Milk and Bread" (1 text)
- ADDITIONAL: Robert Chambers (Edited by Norah and William Montgomerie), Traditional Scottish Nursery Rhymes (1990 selected from Popular Rhymes) #225, p. 123, ("Ma faither gies me milk an breid")
- Roud #12984

NOTES [4 words]: A joke on collectors? - RBW

Last updated in version 2.5
My Father Gave Me

DESCRIPTION: "My father gave me when he was able A bowl, a bottle, a dish and a ladle, A bowl sir my father gave me" up to "... Twelve bowls, twelve bottles, twelve dishes, twelve ladies, eleven bowls ...."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1961 (Peacock)
KEYWORDS: cumulative nonballad gift
FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Peacock, p. 20, "My Father Gave Me" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #1505
RECORDINGS:
Mrs. Mary Ann Galpin, "My Father Gave Me" (on PeacockCDROM) [one verse only]
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Counting Song
A Bowl, a Bottle, a Dish and a Ladle
File: Pea020

My Father Gave Me a Lump of Gold (Seven Long Years)

DESCRIPTION: "My father dear, so far from here, has given me good advice, He told me to quit my rambling ways And settle down for life." The rest of the family gives equally good advice. Father gives a lump of gold, but it cannot save the son from hell. Etc.
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety)
KEYWORDS: family father mother rambling loneliness poverty separation bequest lastwill
FOUND IN: US(Ap,SE,So)
REFERENCES (4 citations):
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 307-308, "My Father Gave Me a Lump of Gold" (1 text, 1 tune)
Belden-BalladsSongsCollectedByMissourFolkloreSociety, pp. 259-260, "Prentice's Drinking Song" (1 text)
*Randolph 834, "My Father Gave Me a Lump of Gold" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 102, "Seven Long Years" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #3605
File: R834

My Father Had an Acre of Land

DESCRIPTION: "My father had an acre of land, Hey ho, sing ivy, My father had an acre of land, With a bunch of green holly and ivy." He farmed it in impossible ways: "plowed it with a team of rats," "rolled it with a rolling pin," "thrashed it with a hazel twig"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1842
KEYWORDS: farming nonsense paradox
FOUND IN: Britain(England(All))
REFERENCES (13 citations):
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 221-222, "Holly and Ivy" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 479)
Palmer-FolkSongsCollectedBy-Ralph-VaughanWilliams, #116, An Acre of Land (1 text, 1 tune)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 300, "My Father Had an Acre of Land" (1 text, 1 tune)
Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Mi 703, "Sing Holly, Sing Ivy"; Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Ox 273, "Sing Holly, Sing Ivy" (2 texts)
Hamer-GreenGroves, p. 27, "Evie and Ivy (Acre of Land)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Cologne/Morrison-WiltshireFolkSongs, pp. 22-23, "An Acre of Land" (1 text, 1 tune)
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 120, "Sing Ovy, Sing Ivy" (1 text)
Copper-ASongForEverySeason, pp. 206-207, "Heigh-ho, Sing Ivy" (1 text, 1 tune)
OShaughnessy-MoreFolkSongsFromLincolnshire 1, "An Acre o’ Land" (1 text, 1 tune)
Gardham-EastRidingSongster 7, 8, pp. 11-12, 44-45, "An Acre of Land" (5 texts, 2 tunes; the first four texts are "My Father Hand an Acre of Land" but the fifth text, on p. 45, is "The Elfin Knight" (Child 2)
Flanders-AncientBalladsTraditionallySungInTheNewEngland1, pp. 51-78, "The Elfin Knight" (12 texts plus 3 fragments, not all from New England; 8 tunes; mostly of Child #2, but the "N" text, which has no tune, appears to be this song)
Opie/Opie-OxfordDictionaryOfNurseryRhymes 158, "My father left me three acres of land" (1 text)
Jack-PopGoesTheWeasel, p. 210, "Three Acres of Land" (1 text)
Roud #21093
RECORDINGS:
Bob & Ron Copper, "My Father Had an Acre of Land" (on FSB4)
Charlie Potter, "Sing Ivy" (on Voice14)
Tony Wales, "Sing Ivy" (on TWales1)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Elfin Knight" [Child 2] (theme)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Team of Rats
Sing Ivy
Sing Ovy, Sing Ivy
NOTES [62 words]: This song is sometimes listed as a variant of "The Elfin Knight" [Child 2], and in fact they share many ideas and some lyrics. However, the crucial element of "The Elfin Knight" is the dialog, whereas this is a song of impossible deeds. The should be kept separate.
For the juxtaposition, and possible rivalry, of holly and ivy, see the notes to "The Holly and the Ivy."
- RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: K300

My Father Sent Me Here with a Staff (Laughter Game)
DESCRIPTION: "My father sent me here with a staff, To speak to you, and not to lay. Methinks you smile. Methinks I don't. I smooth my face with ease and grace, And set my staff in its proper place."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1903 (Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren)
KEYWORDS: playparty
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Newell-GamesAndSongsOfAmericanChildren, #77, "Laughter Games" (1 text plus discussion of others)
File: Newe077

My Father Was a Dutchman
DESCRIPTION: "My father was a Dutchman, Das sprechen verstehst du? My father was a Dutchman, Verstehst du? Yah! Yah!" Ich spoke ein funny lingo." The singer was a sailor who got in trouble. Or he climbed steeples, or otherwise made mischief
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1946 (Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin)
KEYWORDS: foreignlanguage nonballad emigration shanty
FOUND IN: US(MW)
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Peters-FolkSongsOutOfWisconsin, p. 46, "My Father Was a Dutchman" (1 fragment, 1 tune)
Hugill-SongsOfTheSea, p. 188, "Mein Vader Vos Ein Dutchman" (1 dialect text, 1 tune)
Roud #9085
NOTES [82 words]: If it appears that the non-English part of this text is in German, but the singer calls himself a "Dutchman," recall that in the nineteenth century, "Dutch" was a common name for Germans ("Deutsch"). It is rather a surprise to see a German use it, since it was definitely derogatory. Hugill calls his version a "pidgin," but it is not in a pidgin, which is a technical term for a minimally grammatical pseudo-language used by two groups with no common language. It's just a fake-German song. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: Pet046A
My Father Was Born in Germany
DESCRIPTION: Father born in Germany, mother in Italy, sister in USA "and my baby followed me." Father likes to smoke a pipe, mother to read her book, sister to show her legs "and my baby follows me." Father died in Germany, ..., baby followed me"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1975 (Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)
KEYWORDS: playparty baby father mother sister
FOUND IN: Britain(England(Lond))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame, p. 479, ("My father was born in Germany") (1 text)
File: 0p6a479A

My Father Went to War
DESCRIPTION: Father went to war in 1974, brought back a gun "and shot me in the tum, tum, tum"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1977 (Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame)
KEYWORDS: war playparty father
FOUND IN: Britain(England(West))
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Opie/Opie-TheSingingGame, p. 479, ("My father went to war, war, war") (1 text)
File: 0p6a479E

My Father, How Long?
DESCRIPTION: "My father, how long\ (x3) Poor sinner suffer here?" "And it won't be long (x3) Poor sinner suffer here." "We'll soon be free (x3), The Lord will call us home." "We'll walk the miry road." "We'll walk the golden streets." "We'll fight for liberty."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1867 (Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates)
KEYWORDS: religious nonballad
FOUND IN: US
REFERENCES (2 citations):
Allen/Ware/Garrison-SlaveSongsUnitedStates, p. 93, "My Father, How Long?" (1 text, 1 tune)
Silber-SongsOfTheCivilWar, pp. 287-288, "My Father, How Long?" (1 text, 1 tune)
Roud #12048
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "We'll Soon Be Free" (lyrics)
cf. "Mourner, You Shall Be Free (Moanish Lady)" (lyrics)
File: AWG093

My Father's a Hedger and Ditcher (Nobody Coming to Marry Me)
DESCRIPTION: "My father's a hedger and ditcher, my mother does nothing but spin, They say I'm a pretty young girl But the money comes slowly in." The girl laments, with variations on a theme, that "there's nobody coming to marry me, Nobody coming to woo."
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1806 (broadside, Bodleian Harding B 10(39))
KEYWORDS: love courting oldmaid
FOUND IN: US(MW,SE) Britain(England(South),Scotland(Aber)) Ireland
REFERENCES (7 citations):
Ford-VagabondSongsAndBalladsOfScotland, p. 189, "Naebody Comin' to Marry Me" (1 text)
Greig-FolkSongInBuchan-FolkSongOfTheNorthEast #18, p. 1, ("My daddy's a delver o' dykes") (1 text)
Greig/Duncan7 1385, "Naebody Comin' to Marry Me," Greig/Duncan7 1386, "My Daddy's a Delver o' Dykes" (2 texts, 1 tune)
Williams-FolkSongsOfTheUpperThames, pp. 226-227, "There's Nobody Comes to Marry Me" (1 text) (also Williams-Wiltshire-WSRO Wt 470) Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 185, "Nobody Coming to Marry Me" (1 text)
Brown/Schinhan-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore4 185, "Nobody Coming to Marry Me" (1 excerpt, 1 tune)
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 181, "Me Father Is a Lawyer in England" (2 short texts, 2 tunes, both very mixed; "A" has the first verse of "Me Father Is a Lawyer in England,"); the second is "Me father is a hedger and ditcher, and the third and the chorus are from "The Cobbler"; the "B" text is also clearly mixed though the elements are less clear)
Roud #846
RECORDINGS:
Mary Ann Carolan, "My Father's a Hedger and Ditcher" (on Voice20)
BROADSIDES:
Bodleian, Harding B 10(39), "Nobody Coming to Marry Me" ("Last night the dogs did bark"), Laurie and Whittle (London), 1806; also Harding B 25(1371)[many illegible words], "Nobody Coming to Marry Me"
NOTES [569 words]: At first glance, the "Hedger and Ditcher" stanza (which is the first in Brown though not in Ford) seems unrelated to the rest, but it seems likely to be a reference to the girl's inadequate dowry. There is every likelihood that this is a stage song; most of the (rather unhelpful) references in Brown are to printed and popular versions.
Roud lists many more versions, but many are of what I would consider separate songs (e.g. "My Father's a Lawyer in England," which often goes with "My God How the Money Rolls In").
It's just possible that there is a link to British politics in here somewhere. In the years around 1910, the Liberal government of H. H. Asquith was trying to pass a variety of reforms, and had them veted by the House of Lords. This was understandable; Britain at the time was trying for social reforms "and" conducting a naval arms race against Germany, and it cost a great deal. The Liberals were proposing extreme tax increases (Smith, p. 481)
The Liberals, having been stymied again and again by the Lords, eventually tried to pass a law restricting the veto power of the Lords. Which, naturally, the Lords vetoed.
Asquith tried various tricks. He called a general election on the issue, and won it -- barely. He tried to persuade the King (originally Edward VII, then George V after Edward's death) to appoint, or at least threaten to appoint, enough liberal peers to override the overwhelming conservative majority (probably at least 75%; some put it at 90%) in the Lords (Longford, p. 148).
The Lords opposed to the reform measure were known as the "Ditchers," because they would die in the last ditch. Those willing to go along with the change were, for whatever reason, known as "Hedgers."
The acrimony was intense; Longford, p. 149, records that all pretense of genuine debate was halted: "The mood... was plain honest anger. The point was not to convince the opponent but to run him through."
In the end, the reform law was passed by the Lords, very grudgingly -- so grudgingly that the Lords took the almost unknown step of recording the Division of the House (Longford, p. 152). The large majority of the Lords did not attend (nothing unusual about that -- a quorum in the Lords was three peers, though the body had over 500 members). Over 100 Ditchers voted against. Fewer than 100 peers voluntarily voted for. 37 lords led by Lord Curzon, who opposed the bill, finally voted in favor
-- better to lose the veto than dilute the Lords. The final vote was 131 to 114.
It had taken two years, and it brought down Unionist (conservative) leader Arthur Balfour, who had been strangely quiet the whole time -- a critic of the period might well have said he "does nothing but spin."
I don't really think the two are connected, but it is an interesting parallel. For more on the whole incident, see "Home Rule for Ireland" and "A Loyal Song Against Home Rule"; also Massie, pp.
640-662 -- the chapter entitled "The Budget and the House of Lords." - RBW
The broadside Bodleian Harding B 10(39) notes: "(Intended as a Companion to the second appearance of Miss Bailey's Ghost, Just Published) Sung by Mrs Jordan, with Unbounded Applause at the Theatre Royal Drury Lane." That "No rest in the grave: or The second appearance of Miss Bailey's ghost" is a parody of "Nobody Coming to Marry Me" : "Nobody coming to bury me, etc. [the latter found in Bodleian Harding B 17(219a) - RBW] - BS
Bibliography
• Smith: Goldwin Smith,A Constitutional and Legal History of England (no copyright date listed
My Father's Gone to View That Land

DESCRIPTION: "My father's gone to view that land, To view that land, to view that land, My father's gone to view that land, To sing that cheering song." "It takes a saint to view that land." "My (mother/brother/sister/children/neighbor)'s gone to view that land."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1931 (Fuson-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands)

KEYWORDS: religious nonballad

FOUND IN: US(Ap)

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Fuson-BalladsOfTheKentuckyHighlands, p. 209, "Our Father's Gone to View That Land" (1 text)

ST Fus209 (Partial)

Roud #13937

File: Fus209

My Father's Old Sou'wester

DESCRIPTION: "My father's old sou'wester He wore in days gone by ... Those happy days of old." "When I was but a lad" my father wore his old hat wherever he went. When he died he said "Go take that old sou'wester hat And wear it for my sake"

AUTHOR: words: William Hollett; music: Jimmy Ring (source: Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports)

EARLIEST DATE: 1952 (Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports)

KEYWORDS: death lastwill fishing sea hunting work nonballad father clothes

FOUND IN: Canada(Newf)

REFERENCES (5 citations):
Leach-FolkBalladsSongsOfLowerLabradorCoast 118, "Old Southwester" (1 text, 1 tune)
Guigné-ForgottenSongsOfTheNewfoundlandOutports, pp. 280-281, "My Father's Old Sou'wester" (1 text, 1 tune)
Blondahl-NewfoundlandersSing, p. 57, "My Father's Old Sou' Wester" (1 text, 1 tune)

DT, SOUWESTR*

Roud #4422

NOTES [23 words]: This was originally sung on the Newfoundland radio program "The Irene B. Mellon," for which see the notes to "The Cliffs of Baccalieu." - RBW

Last updated in version 6.0

File: Doy13042

My Father's Servant Boy [Laws M11]

DESCRIPTION: The girl's father plans to have her marry a gentleman. She chooses instead to flee with her sweetheart. They find a captain who will bring them to America, and are supported by an Irishman till the boy can find a job. Despite poverty, the girl is happy

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: marriage emigration poverty

FOUND IN: Canada(Mar) Ireland

REFERENCES (6 citations):
Laws M11, "My Father's Servant Boy"

Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H198, pp. 481-482, "My Father's Servant Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)

Graham-Joe-Holmes-SongsMusicTraditionsOfAnUlsterman 52, "My Father's Servant Boy" (1 text, 1 tune)
My Foot Is in the Stirrup

DESCRIPTION: The singer tells Molly he is going to find a new girlfriend (in rather more coarse language), promising he will do his "plowing in some cleaner, greener land."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Coolidge, "Texas Cowboys")

KEYWORDS: bawdy parting

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Randolph/Legman-RollMeInYourArms I, p. 275, "My Foot Is in the Stirrup" (1 text, 1 tune)

CROSS-REFERENCES:

cf. "Oh Lily, Dear Lily"

cf. "Old Paint"

cf. "Sweet Willie"

cf. "The False Lover Won Back" [Child 218]

NOTES [36 words]: There was a nineteenth century song titled "One Foot in the Stirrup" and beginning "One foot in the stirrup, one hand in (sic.) the rein"; see Wolf, p. 118. I do not know if it has any relationship to this song. - RBW

_Last updated in version 3.5_

File: RL275

---

My Friends and Relations

DESCRIPTION: "My friends and relations they live in the nations, They know not where their cowboy has gone." The poor cowboy "might have lived long in this world... If my cruel friends could have left me alone." But now he wanders the world

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1937 (Coolidge, "Texas Cowboys")

KEYWORDS: cowboy rambling exile separation family

FOUND IN: US

REFERENCES (1 citation):

Ohrlin-HellBoundTrain 2, "My Friends and Relations" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #16240?
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "The Streets of Laredo" [Laws B1] (tune & meter, floating lyrics) and references there
File: 0hr002

My Friends the Germans
DESCRIPTION: "The Germans are a noble race, and of that race I'll sing, They love their pas, they love their mas, they idolize their king." The singer knows many languages, but "the tongue of the Fatherland Almost dislocates my jaw." He insults German wine and music
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Finger-FrontierBallads)
KEYWORDS: nonballad humorous food drink
FOUND IN:
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Finger-FrontierBallads, pp. 173-174, "My Friends the Germans" (1 text)
Roud #8835
File: Fing173

My Generous Lover
DESCRIPTION: False Jimmy deceives an innocent young woman into yielding to him; she says,
"My generous lover, you're welcome to me", but the generosity is all hers. She leaves her home; he leaves the country, telling her not to allow any other to love her; she regrets
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: c. 1960 (recording, A. L. Lloyd)
KEYWORDS: hardheartedness seduction sex abandonment lover
FOUND IN: Britain(England)
REFERENCES (1 citation):
Huntington-SongsTheWhalemenSang, pp. 225-227, "The First Time I Saw My Love" (1 text)
ST RcMGL (Full)
Roud #1996
RECORDINGS:
A. L. Lloyd, "My Generous Lover" (on Lloyd01)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
Pretty Peggy
NOTES [188 words]: The alternate title "Pretty Peggy" should not be confused with "Pretty Peggy-O", a version of "Bonnie Lass of Fyvie". The young woman's name does not appear in this song. -
PJS
Huntington's version of this (Roud #1996, for which he currently lists only this song) has a rather simplified plot, in which the man's faithlessness is not clear and the sexual element is very muted (I didn't see it until Paul's description brought it out). I tie the two versions together based on the key line "My generous lover, you're welcome to me."
Huntington says he has not seen any other versions in print, and I must admit that I haven't seen any either. Huntington is reminded of "Logie o Buchan," and I get the same feeling. But they are definitely separate songs.
A point of interpretation: I believe the key line "you're welcome to me" does not mean "let's do something dirty" but "you will always be welcome home to me, whatever my family thinks of you." -
RBW
I don't agree; the context makes the offer explicitly sexual. Not something dirty; she's offering her heart and body in sexual love, and he proves unworthy of the offer. - PJS File: RcMGL

My Gentle Colleen Bawn
DESCRIPTION: The singer courts Colleen Bawn for 16 months. He is rich and "her friends all kindly welcomed me" He loses his money and is told "They'd forced my own colleen to wed An old man for his gold" He asks why "in our own dear land ... They wed for money"
AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1965 (OLochlainn-MoreIrishStreetBallads)
My Gentle Harp

DESCRIPTION: "My gentle harp, once more I waken The sweetness of thy slumb'ring strain. In tears our last farewell was taken, And now in tears we meet again." The wreathes in which he dresses her are "half flowers, half chains."

AUTHOR: Words: Thomas Moore (1779-1852)

EARLIEST DATE: 1846 (Moore-IrishMelodies-1846)

KEYWORDS: music nonballad reunion

REFERENCES (3 citations):
Moore-IrishMelodies-1846, pp. 135-136, "My Gentle Harp" (1 text)
Fireside-Book-of-Folk-Songs, p. 88, "My Gentle Harp (A Londonderry Air)" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hylands-Mammoth-Hibernian-Songster, p. 176, "My Gentle Harp" (1 text)

Roud #V19511

CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Danny Boy (The Londonderry Air)" (tune) and references there

File: Fire088

My Girl from Donegal

DESCRIPTION: The singer is setting out for America. He tells those around him of his parting from beautiful Aileen Oge, with whom none can compare. He wishes he could stay, but no money is to be had. When he becomes rich, he will marry Aileen

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1923 (Sam Henry collection)

KEYWORDS: emigration love separation beauty

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Henry/Huntingdon/Herrmann-SamHenrysSongsOfThePeople H4, pp. 190-191, "My Girl from Donegal" (1 text, 1 tune)

Roud #13547

File: HHH004

My Girl's from USC

DESCRIPTION: Various stanzas about how the singer's girl, whose college or fraternity is usually identified, satisfies the singer. Example: "My girl's from USC, She fights for chastity, Fights ev'ryone but me, I love her so."

AUTHOR: unknown

EARLIEST DATE: 1960

KEYWORDS: courting sex bawdy

REFERENCES (1 citation):
Cray-EroticMuse, pp. 357-359, "My Girl's from USC" (2 texts, 1 tune)

Roud #10402
My God, How the Money Rolls In

DESCRIPTION: A quatrain ballad, "My God" describes the various illegal or dubious occupations of family members, e.g. "My sister she works in a (cathouse/laundry), My father makes synthetic gin, My mother she takes in washing, My God, how the money rolls in"

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1927 (Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag)
KEYWORDS: bawdy humorous family
FOUND IN: Australia Canada Britain(England,Scotland) Ireland US(Ap,MA,MW,NE,Ro,SE,So,SW) New Zealand
REFERENCES (7 citations):
Cray-EroticMuse, pp. 107-109 (related songs to p. 114), "My God, How the Money Rolls In" (1 text, 1 tune)
Hopkins-SongsFromTheFrontAndRead, p. 161, "How the Money Rolls In" (1 text, 1 tune)
Sandburg-TheAmericanSongbag, p. 381, "My Sister She Works in a Laundry" (1 short text, 1 tune)
Lomax-FolkSongsOfNorthAmerica 68, "Me Father's a Lawyer in England" (1 text, 1 tune -- seemingly a composite text with a different chorus and some floating verses, e.g. from "The Cobbler")
Gardner/Chickering-BalladsAndSongsOfSouthernMichigan 181, "Me Father Is a Lawyer in England" (2 short texts, 2 tunes, both very mixed; "A" has the first verse of "Me Father Is a Lawyer in England,"; the second is "Me father is a hedger and ditcher, and the third and the chorus are from "The Cobbler"; the "B" text is also clearly mixed though the elements are less clear)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 31, "My God, How the Money Rolls In" (1 text)
DT, MYGODHOW MYGOD* (MONTSARG*)
Roud #10143
CROSS-REFERENCES:
 cf. "My Bonnie Lies Over the Ocean" (tune) and references there
 cf. "Please, Don't Burn Our Shithouse Down"
 cf. "The Cobbler (!)"
 cf. "Roll In My Sweet Baby's Arms" (words)
ALTERNATE TITLES:
The Poor Tailor's High Relations
NOTES [72 words]: This is one of the most commonly found of bawdy songs, virtually ubiquitous in the English-speaking world. - EC
On the off chance you didn't know, the tune is "My Bonnie." And I've even heard clean versions. It's possible that "Me Father's a Lawyer in England" is a separate song, or at least a separate subtext -- but the versions I've seen are mixed enough that splitting them based on a single key line seemed rather extreme. - RBW
Last updated in version 5.0
File: EM107

My Good Old Man

DESCRIPTION: Wife asks husband where he is going. He says, grumpily,"Out" (or the like). She asks about supper. He: Eggs. She: How many? He: A bushel. She: They'll kill you. He: Then I'll haunt you. She: You can't haunt a haunt

AUTHOR: unknown
EARLIEST DATE: 1885 (Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle)
KEYWORDS: dialog wife husband shrewishness hardtimes ghost
FOUND IN: Britain(England(South)) US(Ap,MW,So)
REFERENCES (14 citations):
Randolph 426, "The Best Old Feller in the World" (2 texts plus a fragment, 3 tunes)
Randolph/Cohen-OzarkFolksongs-Abridged, pp. 325-327, "The Best Old Feller in the World" (1 text, 1 tune -- Randolph's 426A)
Brown/Belden/Hudson-FrankCBrownCollectionNCFolklore2 191, "The Good Old Man" (2 texts)
Moore/Moore-BalladsAndFolkSongsOfTheSouthwest 104A, "The Best Old Feller in the World"
104B, "My Good Old Man" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Reeves/Sharp-TheIdiomOfThePeople 36, "Good Old Man" (1 text)
Reeves-TheEverlastingCircle 52, "Good Old Man" (1 text)
Sharp-EnglishFolkSongsFromSouthernAppalachians 230, "The Good Old Man" (2 texts, 2 tunes)
Ritchie-SingingFamilyOfTheCumberlands, pp. 12-14, "[My Good Old Man]" (1 text, 1 tune)
McIntosh-FolkSongsAndSingingGamesofIllinoisOzarks, pp. 33-35, "Kind Old Husband" (1 text, 1 tune)
Lomax/Lomax-OurSingingCountry, pp. 128-129, "Where Have You Been, My Good Old Man" (1 text, 1 tune)
Dunson/Raim/Asch-AnthologyOfAmericanFolkMusic, p. 88 "Le Vieux Soulard Et Sa Femme (The Old Drunkard and His Wife)" (1 text, in French with English translation, 1 tune)
Silber/Silber-FolksingersWordbook, p. 344, "Where Are You Going, My Good Old Man" (1 text)
Kennedy-FolksongsOfBritainAndIreland 64, "Yr Hen wr Mwyn [The Gentle Old Man]" (1 text in Welsh + translation, 1 tune)
DT, GDOLDMAN
Roud #240
RECORDINGS:
Cleoma Breaux & Joseph Falcon, "Le Vieux Soulard et sa Femme" [in Cajun French] (Columbia 14301D, 1928; on AAFM3)
Texas Gladden, "My Lovin' Old Husband" (AFS 5233 A2; on USTGladden01)
CROSS-REFERENCES:
cf. "Tam Buie (Tam Bo, Magherafelt Hiring Fair)" (form)
